III. There is much of Pride and Arrogance (complicated with other Vices) in the Philoſophic Pagans Rampant and Luciferian affectation of Divinity; (c) We ſee, that the Philoſophers are not of the Humble, nor of the Meek, but Arrogant and Self-conceited, and therefore diſpleaſing to God. They are famous for their (d) ὀφρὺς ἑλληνικὴ, Greganic Arrogance and faſtuous Temper, and are rightly ſtiled, (e) οἱ σοβαροὶ ϗ κατωφρυωμένοι, the Inſolent and Supercilious, as highly conceited of their own Merits as Diogenes was, who ſuppos'd that he merited his Alms. (f) In Ariſtotle's Compoſition of Magnanimity there is a large doſe of Pride; (g) and Celſus's Generoſity is of the ſame Character, who objecteth to the Chriſt of God, τὸ Ἀγεννὲς, Ungenerouſneſs. Much of the Stoicks Philoſophy is a rant and huff of Pride (Typhus humani generis, as S. Auſtin ſpeaketh) the greatneſs and height of Mind to which they pretend, is bloted and unſound, and their Conſtantia Sapientis (Philoſophic Conſtancy) is a Syſtem of ſuch Maxims, which are the very Smoak of the Bottomleſs Pit of Pride. (h) The Wiſe Man is not obnoxious to any Injury. The Wiſe Man can ſuffer no Evil. An Injury detracteth and diminiſheth, whereas nothing can be taken from the Wiſe Man (who hath all in himſelf.) Wickedneſs is not ſo ſtrong as Virtue; therefore the Wiſe Man is not hurt by Malice. None can benefit the Wiſe Man (who wanteth nothing) therefore none can hurt him. An Injury is from Hope or Fear, the Wiſe Man is touch'd with neither. None receiveth an Injury unmov'd, the Wiſe Man is not mov'd. A Contumely is a Contempt and thence hath its Name; which the Wiſe Man doth not look upon as belonging to him, who knows his own Greatneſs. He thinketh alſo, that all others are ſo much inferiour, that they have not boldneſs to deſpiſe things ſo high above them. If he once debaſeth himſelf, ſo as to be mov'd with Injury or Contumely, he can never be ſecure; whereas Security is the proper good of the Wiſe Man. If Pride and Stomachfulneſs had not been one of the Stoicks Cardinal Virtues, they could not have applauded Cato's barbarous Self-murder, (i) who ſcorn'd to be a Petitioner to any either for his Death or his Life, and was a (Stomachful) contemner of all Power. (k) They call themſelves great Men, and accordingly found their Beatitude (not upon the Favour of God and true Piety, but) upon their Animi magnitudo, Bigneſs or Elation of Spirit, (Animi excelſi atque invicti magnitudo & robur, the greatneſs and ſtoutneſs of an high invincible Mind;) whence their Virtue becometh a ſort of Self-magnifying and Self-deifying, (the Life and Soul of it is an illegitimate kind of Bravery of Spirit,) incongruous to their Condition as Creatures, much more incongruous to frail miſerable Men, (l) and moſt of all incongruous to improbous miſerable Sinners. Nor is there any thing more diſtaſtful to a truly pious Mind than the haughty Phariſaical Humour of theſe Philoſophic-Pagan Magnifico's ſwaggering with their Virtue, their Magnitude, their Celſitude, their Altitude, their Fortitude, their Beatitude, their Philoſophy magnanima & altiloqua, their Honeſtum, generoſum, ſublime, altum, ſplendidum, illuſtre, magnificum. Pride ſuggeſted that Stoical Maxim of Heraclitus, (m) The Wiſe need not any Friends: Whence all the wonderful proviſion which Divine Grace hath made for a World of improbous Sinners was loſt upon theſe Philoſophers; for they that need no Friend, need no Saviour-King, nor the Salvation which is in his Religion and Kingdom. They were able to live of themſelves, and had an imaginary Beatitude of their own making, (wherein they took Satisfaction and Content;) they look'd upon their Philoſophy as the Perfection of Wiſdom and Virtue (in it ſelf and to them) and thought both themſelves and their Inſtitution far paramount to popular Mankind, and therefore it was but agreeable to their Philoſophic Grandeur and Magnificence, to contemn Chriſtianity, which is a popular Inſtitution deſign'd for and adapted to the Salvation of miſerable Sinners; whereas they were rais'd to a Superiority above Sin and Miſery, and ſuppos'd themſelves nothing leſs than Divine Men and Kings, Jupiter's Sons and Peers and petty Deities. (n) It muſt be ſomething Super-Humane, Celeſtial and Magnificent, that conſtituteth the Wiſe Man. If thou ask what that is? as God and his Beatitude is conſtituted, ſo is the Wiſe Man; for Chryſippus affirmeth, (o) That the Beatitude of Jove is in no reſpect more eligible, nor more fair, nor more venerable than that of the Wiſe Men. (p) Virtues are thought to be true and genuine, when they are lov'd and deſir'd for their own ſake; but it appeareth from the Stoicks Elation of Mind, that when Vertues are deſir'd for their own ſake in a way of Separation from God and without a Religious Relation to him, they are proud and tumid, and are rather Vice than Virtue. Plato is much more modeſt in his Accounts of Virtue than the Ruffian-like Stoicks, yet ſome of the Stoicks principal Maxims which nothing but Pride inſpir'd (particularly that eminent one, τὸ σοφὸν αὐτάρκη εἶ), the Wiſe Man is ſelf-ſufficient) are deriv'd from Socrates and Plato. Pride made Plato (q) an envious Man, Socrates an ireful Man, the Cynick a boaſter of his brave Atchievements in the Conqueſts of Vice. The beſt of theſe Maſters (r) alloweth us, μεγαλοφρονεῖν, to be proud of the Conqueſt of any Vice. In virtute rectè gloriamur, we rightly glory in our Virtue, ſaith Cicero (a great Wit, but a very Vain-glorious Pagan) who alſo complaineth to his Wife, (s) neque Dii quos tu caſtiſſimè coluiſti, neque homines quos ego ſervavi ſemper, nobis gratiam retulerunt: Neither the Gods whom thou haſt moſt chaſtly ſerv'd, nor Men whom I have conſtantly ſav'd, have requited us.

IV. From the Grandeur of their Character it appeareth, that theſe Philoſophers (the Stoicks) are a Mundane ſort of Bravo's, but ſuch as muſt be diſtinguiſh'd from the Virtuous Hero's amongſt the Popular Pagans, Epaminondas, Miltiades, Themiſtocles (and ſuch more) whom the Orator calleth (t) φιλοτίμους ϗ μεγαλοψύχους, the lovers of Honour and the Magnanimous, that affected the Popular-Pagan Bravery and Glory, to ſave the Grecians, to be crown'd and renown'd for their Wiſdom

---

(c) Philoſophos nec humiles eſſe nec mites, ſed ſibi multum placentes, & hoc ipſo quod ſibi placeant Deo diſplicentes. S. Cypr. de bono Patient.

(d) S. Cyr. c. Jul. p. 4.

(e) Ibid. l. 1. p. 28.

(f) Eth. Nicom. l. 4. c. 7, 8. Eudem. l. 3. c. 5.

(g) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 1. p. 47.

(h) In ſapientem non cadit Injuria. Sapiens nullius mali patiens; injuria detrahit & diminuit, ſapienti nihil eripitur. Fortis ab infirmo non læditur, non ergo à malitia virtus. Sapienti nemo prodeſt, ergo nec lædit. Injuria à ſpe aut metu eſt, ſapiens neutro eorum tangitur. Injuriam nemo immotus accipit, non movetur ſapiens. Sapiens magnitudinem ſuam novit, non ergo contumelia ad eum pertinet, quæ nomen & rem habet à contemptu. ſimul illud cogitat, omnes inferiores eſſe, quàm ut illis audacia ſit tanto excelſiora deſpicere. ſi ſemel demiſerit eo, ut aut Injuria moveatur aut contumelia, non poterit unquam eſſe ſecurus; ſecuritas autem proprium bonum ſapientis. Sen. de Conſt. ſap.

(i) Id. de provid. c. 2. & Ep. 24

(k) Idem Ep. 92. & Vid. Cic. Tuſc. 5.

(l) Squalor & hæ ſordes conveniunt miſeris. V. Ba-on. ad nn. 325. .50.

(m) Οἱ σοφοὶ μὴ δεῖσθαι φίλων.

(n) Quæris, quæ res ſapientem facit? quæ Deum. des oportet & illi aliquid divinum, aliquid cæleſte, magnificum. Sen. Ep. 97.

(o) Κατὰ μηδὲν αἱρετωτέραν εἶ), μήτε καλλίω, μήτε σεμνοτέραν τὴν τῆ Διὸς εὐδαιμονίαν τῆ τῶν σοφῶν ἀνδρῶν. Stob. Ecl. Eth. l. 2. p. 178.

(p) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 19. c. 25.

(q) P. Crinit. de hon. diſc. l. 3. c. 1. Grot. de V. R. C. l. 2. Annot. ad S. 18. Gat. in Ant. p. 94.

(r) Epict. diſſ. l. 2. c. 18.

(s) Ep. 4. ad Terent.

(t) Iſocrat. Evag. initio.

Wiſdom and great Exploits, to die glorioſly and leave behind them a great Name. To theſe Popular Bravo's S. Hierom's Character of a Philoſopher (u) eminently belongeth; for theſe were eminently the Animals of Glory. To theſe Tertullian might more properly have apply'd his Title of (w) Famæ negotiatores (the Factours of Fame) than to the Philoſophers; for although theſe haughty Philoſophers were very culpably Animals of Glory and Factors of Fame, yet this is not their true Character without this Addition and Limitation; They were ſo the Factors of Fame and Animals of Glory, as yet to be great Adverſaries to the Appetite of Vain-glory, as appeareth from the tenour of their Philoſophy. (x) They deſpis'd the Popular Pagans, their Judgment, Fame, Pomp, Acclamations and Applauſe at a great rate; (y) they obſerve and diſcourſe the Inanity of Fame, as alſo how narrow, inconſtant and evanid it is, and devoid of Judgment, and the Folly and Iniquity of thoſe that affect it; (z) that we ought to conſider the quality of Perſons that praiſe and diſpraiſe, that Fame is one of the aliena (others give it and take it away at pleaſure) and therefore they are Fools that affect it, that deſire to be eſteem'd beneficent for doing good, quibus famæ major ſitis eſt quàm virtutis (who are more thirſty after Fame than Virtue;) who ſuppoſe, that the applauſe of ſuch is of great moment, that know not themſelves, that deſire to pleaſe them, who are not pleas'd with themſelves, and would be had in admiration by thoſe, whom themſelves call Mad; (a) that Fame and Honour is not worth the while (it is but κρότος γλωσσῶν, a noiſe and clatter of Tongues, τίς τινι ταῦτα λέγει, ſome body telleth theſe things to ſome body; they that praiſe another will ſoon diſpraiſe him, and both will quickly be buried in oblivion,) Good is not the better for being praiſed; we ſhould be indifferent, whether we do our duty in Cold or Heat, diſpraiſed or praiſed; the Lovers of good practiſe it as Lovers enjoy one another, ſecretly without deſiring any Hearers or Spectatours to praiſe them; (b) that we ought not to accept the praiſe and approbation of ill Men, nor guide our Life by the Opinion of the Injudicious, nor place our Happineſs in the Minds and Thoughts of others, nor regard their Opinion touching our ſelves ſo much as our own, nor ſo much as take into our thoughts what others ſay or think of us. (c) The Stoicks reckon Honour and Diſhonour things indifferent, pretend to diſmiſs τὸ δοξάριον, (gloriolam) to ſtudy τὸ ἀκενόδοξον, to be devoid of affecting Vain-glory, to exerciſe themſelves to an indifferency as to praiſe and diſpraiſe, (ſome that are not of their Sect, count themſelves mean Proficients unleſs their Apathy be ſuch, (d) that a Reproach is as welcome to them as μέγα χαῖρε,) and notwithſtanding their Phariſaical Humour in other reſpects, in all things to avoid τὸ ἐπιδεικτικὸν, Oſtentation, and to do nothing for Opinion. (e) They are urgent with Men to chuſe that which is good, becauſe it is good, and not for popular Opinion; (f) and ſome of them will not ſtretch out a Finger for a good Fame. (g) They deride the Ambitious and Vain-glorious, ridicule their Folly that are puffed up with Honour, neither admire nor deſire Greatneſs (ſome think Riches and Principalities inconſiſtent with virtuous living, Simplic. iu Epict. p. 69.) hugely diſparage a great Name and Fame after Death, forewarn all that will be Philoſophers to expect Deriſion and Reproaches at their entrance upon the Philoſophic Life, teach them to bear Reproaches well (a great Perfection) with great Equanimity and Benevolence, to do well though it expoſe them to diſgrace, and not to deſiſt from good Practice, nor to fear Contempt, but to contemn Infamy; Antiſthenes ſaid, Infamy is good as Labour; of their Inſtitution of Philoſophy they ſay, (h) It is not a popular Artifice, nor adapted to Oſtentation. In their Principles they ſeem more ſevere than thoſe that allow the Vain-glory of the Popular-Pagan Hero's, (i) τοῦ πρακτικοῦ τὸ φιλότιμον, the practick Principles love of Mundane Honour, (as Xenophon commendeth Cyrus for being φιλοτιμότατος, extremely deſirous of Honour;) and more ſevere than thoſe who ſuppoſe, (k) Ambition to be of uſe for correcting the other vicious Affections, but muſt it ſelf be put off in the laſt place, as Plato hath called it the laſt Coat. They are not to be thought like the Emperour Julian, whoſe height of Empire and Mundane Glory was not higher than his Popular Vain-glory; the main of their Pride was an Unpopular Pride and Faſtuouſneſs (of a moſt malign Aſpect, becauſe againſt God;) and with this their Unpopular Pride and Arrogance was complicated a vicious Affectation of Popular Vain-glory; (l) for the Greek Philoſophers uſually reproach'd one another with their Vain-glory; thus Antiſthenes, Crates, Diogenes, Plato, Pyrrho were reproach'd by their fellow Philoſophers; Socrates eſpy'd it through the Holes in Antiſthenes's Cloak; and of Socrates himſelf perhaps Cardan hath made a right Judgment, (m) that he was extremeey deſirous of Glory, although he moſt of all diſſembled this. They glory'd in their contempt of Popular Mundane Glory, (n) but ſuppos'd (as ſome of themſelves ſaid) that a neglect and contempt of that Mundane Glory (the vain Faſhions of the World) was the beſt way of obtaining a Mundane Glory. Let them therefore be accounted Animals of Popular Glory, yet it muſt be acknowledg'd, that their Philoſophy is a great adverſary to the Appetite of it (as the Popular-Pagan Hero's were not) and they reproach'd one another with it as a vicious Affection.

V. This implieth, that the Philoſophic Pagans were not wholly unacquainted with the Virtue of Humility, although it is commonly ſaid, (o) that there is no footſtep nor ſhadow of it to be found in the Pagans Writings; but the Vice contrary to it is accounted a laudable Virtue. (p) This is a great Virtue unknown almoſt to all the Philoſophers. (q) The Wiſe Men and Philoſophers of the World were altogether ignorant of the Virtue of Humility, ſo that they have not left us any Name in Latin or Greek, whereby they might ſignifie it. But the Name of this Virtue (though not the Abſtract) plainly enough occurreth in Plato's fourth of Laws, where he telleth us, That Juſtice followeth God, (r) which Juſtice, he that ever becometh happy adhereth to, and followeth humble

(u) Mundi philoſophus eſt gloriæ animal & popularis auræ venale mancipium.

(w) Apol. c. 46, 47.

(x) Gat. in Ant. p. 76, 97, 125, 332.

(y) Ibid p. 125, 159, 229, 292, 113, 126, 230.

(z) M. Ant. l. 3. S. 4. l. 7. S. 34. Gat. Not. p. 292, 317. Epict. diſſ. l. 1. c. 21.

(a) M. Ant. l. 9. S. 30. l. 8. S. 44. l. 6. S. 2. Gat. Not. p. 138, 139, 340.

(b) Ibid. p. 126, 97, 214, 254, 422, 363, 359.

(c) Ibid. p. 19, 135, 138. M Ant. l. 6. S. 16. l. 8. S. 1. Epict. diſſ. l. 2. c. 16. Ench. c. 68, 69, 70.

(d) Plut. de profect. virtut. p. 82.

(e) Simpl. in Epict. p. 260.

(f) Gat. ſupr. p. 138.

(g) Epict. diſſ. l. 1. c. 19. Ench. c. 26, 29, 30, 31. M. Ant. l. 3. S. 10. l. 4. S. 3, 16, 33, l. 5. S. 33. l. 11. S. 9. Gat. Not. p. 398. Epict. diſſ. l. 1. c. 24, 25. l. 3. c. 2. Laert. in Antiſthen.

(h) Non eſt philoſophia populare artificium nec oſtentationi paratum. Sen. Ep. 16.

(i) Plut. Non poſſe ſuavit. viv. &c. p. 1107.

(k) Simpl. ſupr. p. 55.

(l) Gat. ſupr. p. 434, 435.

(m) Fuit Socrates gloriæ cupidiſſimus, tametſi maximè hoc diſſimulaverit. De rer. var. l. 16. c. 93.

(n) Gat. ſupr. Dr. Jackſon of Juſtif. Faith c. 13.

(o) Amyrald. Treat. of Relig. par. 2. c.

(p) Magna hæc virtus eſt, philoſophis ferme omnibus incognita. Grot. Not. in Eph. 4. 2.

(q) Mundi ſapientes ac philoſophi [Humilitatem] penitus ignorarunt, ut ne nomen quidem ullum, quo eam ſignificarent, Latino vel Græco nobis ſermone reliquerint. Petav. T. 4. par. 1. l. 2. c. 11.

(r) Ἧς ὁ μὲν εὐδαιμονήσ μέλλων, ἐχόμενος, ξυνέπε

and

ταπεινὸς ϗ κεκοσμένος, εἰ δέ τις ἐξαρθεὶς ὑπὸ μεγαλαυχίας, ἢ χρήμασιν ἐπαιρόμενος, ἢ τιμαῖς, ἢ ϗ σώματος εὐμορφίᾳ, ὡς μήτε οὔτε ἄρχοντος οὔτε ἀν- ἡγεμόνος δεόμενος, — καταλείπεται ἔρημος θεοῦ.

and well compos'd, but if any one be elated by Pride, or puffed up by his Riches or Honours, or Beauty of Body, as if he needed no Ruler or Leader, he is left forſaken of God. The Philoſophers therefore were not altogether unacquainted with the Name of this Virtue, and that they were not without conſiderable Notices of the Virtue it ſelf, appeareth (s) from their known Virtue of Modeſty, from their uſual declaiming againſt Pride, Inflation, Tumor, Inſolence, Boaſting, Arrogance, Elation, Faſtuouſneſs, Ambition, Oſtentation, Vain-glory, (t) and Celſus thinketh, that the Chriſtian Humility was taken from the Doctrive of Plato; therefore he acknowledgeth ſuch a Virtue by Name. The Philoſophers generally inſiſt upon a Virtue, which they call Ἀτυφία, Unfaſtuouſneſs (which is an Humility,) which the Cynicks accounted (u) their chief Excellency (Antiſthenes placed the chief good in it;) Socrates is celebrated for his (w) ἀτυφία ϗ ἀφέλεια, Unfaſtuouſneſs and Simplicity. Xenocrates in Laertius is commended as being ἀτυφότατος, hugely remote from Faſtuouſneſs; τῦφος Faſtuouſneſs is of all things moſt unbecoming (x) ſaid Zeno; whence Plato (as it is reported in his Life) alighted down from an Horſe which he had got upon, μὴ ἱπποτυφίᾳ ληφθῇ, leſt he ſhould become faſtuous as Horſes are. Socrates accounted it the great Crime, to think our ſelves wiſe, when we are not; and of ſome value, when we are nothing ſo. Accordingly the Maſters of Philoſophic Inſtitution begin their Philoſophy from a certain Self-humbling; (y) for the entrance into the Wiſdom of it and the Life of it (without which none will begin to learn or change their Life) is ἀποβαλεῖν οἴησιν ϗ τὸν τῦφον, to abandon Self-opination and Faſtuouſneſs, συναίσθησις τῆς αὐτοῦ ἀσθενείας ϗ ἀδυναμίας περὶ τὰ ἀναγκαῖα, a conſciouſneſs of our imbecillity and inability (of underſtanding) about the neceſſaries to Felicity; if thou wilt be good, firſt believe, that thou art bad, ſaith the great Stoick. They were not altogether unacquainted with the Philoſophy of Pride, (z) they well obſerve the grand Impoſture that is in it (it corrupteth the Judgment and befooleth the Mind,) the folly and madneſs of the Popular Pagans Pride and Arrogance upon the account of Externals (Birth, Riches, high Places and ſuch more,) and that as Philoſophers grew upwards in Virtue, they grew downwards in unfaſtuouſneſs, according to that Jeſt of the Cynick Menedemus; (a) thoſe that came to ſtudy at Athens, at firſt ſeem'd to themſelves Sophi, next Philoſophi, afterwards Rhetoricians, and in Proceſs of time Plebeians; for the more inſight they had into Learning, the more they depoſited Self-opination and Faſtuouſneſs. The Pythagoreans and Platoniſts were the devouteſt Sect of Philoſophers, and amongſt the motives to Devotion (their Enthuſiaſtic Devotion) which they make uſe of, a principal one is the vility of Man's Nature. (b) The Conſciouſneſs of our own nothingneſs maketh us ſpontaneouſly turn to Supplications. We cannot ſpeak a word touching the Gods without the Gods; for Man's Nature is infirm and ſmall, and hath nullity connate. Theſe ſound like ſuperlative humbling Expreſſions, and ſeeing they are Heathen Philoſophers, that vilifie and nullifie Man at ſuch a rate, it muſt not be ſaid, that they were altogether Ignorant of the Virtue of Humility, and that no footſtep or ſhadow of it is to be found in their Writings. Some Branches of it appear in the Writings of the Stoicks (beſides the oppugning the appetite of vain-glory) who had as little of acquaintance with Humility as any Sect of Philoſophers. For with them the Name always ſignifieth a Vice; and when they initiate a Philoſopher, their way is, to teach him, to abandon one Branch of Pride, and one Branch of Humility both together, (c) τὴν οἴησιν ϗ ἀπιστίαν Self-opination and Self-diffidence. The Stoicks and Cynicks (in ſeveral reſpects) renounc'd both Pride and Humility; for they abandon'd the Popular-pagan Faſtuouſneſs, and thereby introduc'd an Ἀτυφία, Unfaſtuouſneſs: But with deſign, to aſſume their Philoſophic τῦφος, (Faſtuouſneſs,) which was really worſe than that which they renounc'd. It muſt be acknowledged therefore (not that no footſtep or ſhadow of it is to be found in their Writings, but) that in the whole compute of things their Humility amounteth to little or nothing or worſe than nothing, and that the Service which they did unto that Vertue was not ſo great as the dis-ſervice. Socrates's Humility (or Unfaſtuouſneſs) amounteth to little; for it was rather an Academical and humourſom ſort of wit than Humilis Pietas: But the Platoniſts diſparagements of Human Nature were an Heathen ſort of Piety and an Humility towards their Gods. (d) They that live under Government, muſt exerciſe an Humility towards it; and Plutarch ſaith of the Romans tribunus Plebis, (e) by how much more humble he is in his Deportment, ſo much more he increaſeth in Power. There is no living in Civil or Religious Society without an Humility; which therefore muſt be ſaid (as well as Charity, Purity, Sanctity, Temperance, Patience) to have been one of the Philoſophic Pagans Virtues (although they have not inſerted the Name of it into their Catalogue of Virtues,) nor were the Popular Pagans (notwithſtanding the vain-glory of their Hero's) leſs acquainted with it and with the other Virtues than the Philoſophic Pagans. Ille in imperio fuit humillimus. Spartian. de Ddio Julian.

VI. For the Philoſophic Pagans were as great Strangers to truly divine moral Virtue as the Popular Pagans, nor was their Virtue of any better Kind and Quality than that of the Popular Pagans, who ſeem to have been better Practitioners of Humility than they. For the Pride, Inflation, Tumor, Inſolence, Boaſting, Arrogance, τῦφος, Faſtuouſneſs, which is againſt common Prudence, Decency and good Behaviour, is odious and intolerable in the Eyes of all Men, (f) the Comedians, Poets, Orators (Popular-pagans) declaim againſt it at the ſame rate with the Philoſophic Pagans. The Emperor Tiberius at the beginning of his Reign (becauſe of the inſtability of Human Affairs) either really exercis'd, or at leaſt pretended as great an Humility, as any of the Philoſophic Pagans ever practis'd. Nor is there any thing in Paganiſm, which looketh ſo like an act of truly virtuous Humility, as that of Titus Veſpaſian, (g) who having ruin'd Jeruſalem, refus'd to accept of a Crown, ſaying, he was unworthy of it, for the thing was not his doing, he had only lent his hand to

(s) Stob. Ecl. Eth. p. 184.

(t) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 6. p. 285. & v. l. 3. p. 149.

(u) Plutarch. de profect. virt. p. 82.

(w) Idem de Socrat. Gen. p. 582.

(x) Laert. in Zenon.

(y) Gat. ſupr. p. 7, 416. Epict. Diſſ. l. 2. c. 14.

(z) M. Ant. l. 6. S. 13. l. 3. S. 6. l. 12. S. 24, 27. Gat. Not. p. 209, 281.

(a) Plutarch. de profect. virt. p. 81.

(b) Ἡ μὲν συναίσθησις περὶ ἑαυτοὺς οὐδενείας ποιεῖ τρέπεσθαι πρὸς τὰς λιτὰς αὐτοφυῶς. Οὐδὲ λόγον περὶ θεῶν ἄνευ θεῶν λαλεῖν δυνατόν. Τὸ γὰρ ἀνθρώπινον φῦλον ἀσθενές ἐστι, καὶ σμικρὸν συμφυτὸν τε οὐδὲν κέκτηται. Jambl. de Myſt. p. 26, 27, 84.

(c) Epict. Diſſ. l. 3. c. 14. πολλὴ γὰρ ἐν ἀνθρώποις ἡ ἀναίδεια. Multa eſt in hominibus arrogantia. Plotin. En. 2. l. 9. c. 9.

(d) Ταπεινοὺς μὲν εἶναι χρὴ πρὸς τὴν ἀρχὴν τὴν ἐμήν. Iſocrat. Nicocl.

(e) Ὅσῳ δὲ μᾶλλον ἐκταπεινοῦται τῷ σώματι, τοσούτῳ μᾶλλον αὔξεται τῇ δυνάμει. Quæſt. Rom. p. 283.

(f) Gat. ſupr. p. 328, 343, 357, 209. Macrob. Saturn. l. 1. c. 22.

(g) Phot. cod. 241. col. 1026.

to the Execution of Gods Anger. The Stoicks were too ſtout and magnanimous, to humble themſelves under the afflictive hand of Providence; (h) the Platoniſts will not always allow this Suppoſition, that Human Calamities are from a Divine Hand, or that God is the Diſpenſer both of Goods and Evils to us: But the Popular Pagans were not too high to be humbled, they look'd upon their Calamities as (i) Effects of the Anger of their Gods, acknowledg'd their Dependence upon them, and in any great diſtreſs of their Affairs (to atone their Diſpleaſure and gain their Favour) betook themſelves to the moſt humble Supplications, (k) and with their kiſſings of the Ground ſwept the Entry of the Temples of their Deities.

One of the braveſt Exploits which the Philoſophic Pagans conſtantly Renown and Celebrate, is the killing of Tyrants and delivering Cities and Nations from them. The Practice of this applauded Virtue occaſion'd the Torture of Zeno Eleates, who is ſaid, to have kept the Doctrine of Parmenides inviolate as Gold in the fire, (l) and by his Deeds he ſhew'd, that a great Man feareth nothing but to be baſe; that it is Children and Women and Men who have the Souls of Women, that are afraid of Pain. From which Idea of a great Man it appeareth, that the Philoſophic-pagan Fortitude is of no better kind than the common Military Fortitude, (m) or the Fortitude of thoſe celebrated Popular Pagans, Mutius and Regulus, of Cleopatra and Aſdrubal's Wife (who threw her ſelf and Children into the fire,) or of that famous Harlot at Athens, who knowing of a Conſpiracy againſt the Life of the Tyrant there, with great bravery ſuffer'd her ſelf to be tortur'd to death, rather than ſhe would diſcover the Conſpirators, and biting off a piece of her Tongue ſpit it out into the Tyrants Face. Such was the Fortitude of Zeno Eleates, Empedocles, Anaxarchus.

Philoſophy cannot boaſt of many great Examples of Patience; the Grandees of the Stoical Family Cato and Brutus falling into troubles fell into Tranſports of Rage and Impatience. So Hierocles (according to Suidas) being whipp'd at Byzantium till the Blood came, he took the Blood in the hollow of his Hand and threw it upon the Judge, Saying, Κύκλωψ, τῆ, πῖ οἶνον, ἐπεὶ φάγες ἀνδρόμεα κρέα.

Cyclops, there is Wine for you, ſeeing you have eaten Man's Fleſh. Some indeed of the Philoſophic Pagans have expreſs'd an admirable Apathy and Conſtancy of Mind in ſhaking Circumſtances. (n) As Cleanthes, who ſtood unmov'd without changing Countenance, when he was publickly reproach'd in the Theater by the Poet Soſitheus. And Polemo did not ſo much as wax Pale, when his Leg was torn by a mad Dog (or as ſome accounts of his Life ſay, his Privy-members;) yet becauſe this Philoſophic Apathy was but of the ſame kind with (o) Epicurus's in his Strangury, or the Sceptick Pyrrho's; (who endur'd Sections and Uſtions with great conſtancy of Mind,) or that of well diſciplin'd Gladiators, and the Spartan Boys (who were whipp'd at the Altar, till the Blood guſh'd out of their Bowels without whimpering,) therefore the Fathers have rightly pronounc'd touching the Patience which Philoſophy profeſſeth, that it is (p) a proud ſullenneſs or ſenſeleſneſs; the Patience as well as the Wiſdom there is ſpurious, and as Beatitude is there fram'd by a Virtue ſo much the more falſe as it is more proud. Lipſius therefore (otherwiſe an extravagant admirer of Stoiciſm) lying upon his Sick-bed and conflicting with grievous Pain, diſcarded the Stoical Patience, and having our Saviour's Picture hanging near his Bed, he pointed to it, and gave his Patience its due Character, iſta eſt vera patientia, that is the true Patience.

Several of the Philoſophers have diſcours'd againſt retaliating Injuries (Revenge,) for the bearing them with Manſuetude, (q) and for univerſal Benevolence; (r) and there are ſeveral inſtances of theſe Virtues amongſt the Greek Philoſophers (that were Pagan Saintiſts:) But their Practice of them looketh more like unpopular Humour than ſerious Goodneſs; in laying the Foundation of them they intermix much of Pride and Paradoxical Stoical Conceit (that the wiſe Man can ſuffer no injury;) and the moſt conſiderable inſtances of theſe mighty Virtues are Ariſtides and Phocion, who may juſtly be reckon'd amongſt the Popular Pagans. Ariſtides after great Services being baniſh'd by his Citizens unjuſtly, at his departure pray'd the Gods, that the Athenians might never by any trouble or diſtreſs be forc'd to recall him. And Phocion being unjuſtly condemn'd charged his Son Phocas, that he ſhould never Revenge his Death. But theſe Reſemblances of Chriſtian Virtue in Heathen good Men did not iſſue from a Divine kind of Charity, but were Branches of their Human-Societive Virtue, and iſſu'd from a mighty Love to their Country which is moſt eminent in Heathen People. The Virtue of theſe Popular Pagans pretendeth not to be Divine, nor do they deſerve to be celebrated as Divine Men upon account of it: But the Philoſophic Pagans by far leſſer Matters than theſe got the Reputation of Divine Men. One of their principal Virtues was their λιτότης, abandoning the ſuperfluities of Life. Whence Diogenes ſeeing one take Water out of a River with his Hand, and drinking it out of his Hand, threw away his diſh, which he us'd to carry about him, to drink Water in, reſolving thenceforth to drink it out of the hollow of his Hand; (s) and for this freak (with others of like Nature) this unpopular Humoriſt is celebrated by his Fellow-Philoſophers as a θεῖος ἀνὴρ, Divine kind of Man.

The Philoſophic Pagans were like the Popular in not diſcerning what is truly Divine and Holy from what is atheous and unholy. Although they lived in groſs Criminalities (beſides their Paganical Religion,) yet they had not the diſcernment of Sin and Sanctity, being invelop'd (t) with dirt deeply and with the unirradiated caliginouſneſs of Error and Ignorance. They were Self-juſtitiaries at the rate of the Phariſaical Saintiſts, and therefore infinitely indiſpos'd for ſuch a Religion, that is a Religion for Sinners; and they were too high for Repentance, which the Popular Pagans were not, who had a ſenſe of Sin and of their need of Pardon, which they often expreſs'd at Death: But Apuleius pretendeth (u) that he always accounted all Sin a thing deteſtable; Xenophon ſaith; no one ever ſaw Socrates do, or heard him ſpeak any thing that was impious and irreligious; Socrates himſelf had no ſenſe of Sin at his Death, (h) Porph. de Abſt. l. 2. S. 38, 41.

(i) Tiraquell. de Nobil. p. 326.

(k) Herald in Arnob. p. 49.

(l) Καὶ ἀπέδειξεν ἔργοις, ὅτι τὸ αἰσχρὸν ἀνδρὶ μεγάλῳ φοβερόν ἐστιν. Ἀλγηδόνα δὲ παῖδες ϗ γύναια ϗ γυναίων ψυχὰς ἔχοντες ἄνδρες δεδίασι. Plutarch. adv. Colot. p. 1126.

(m) Tertull. ad mart. & Apol. c. 49. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 5. c. 18.

(n) Ap. Laert.

(o) Cic. Tuſc. 2.

(p) Superbiæ ſtupor —— tam illic patientia falſa eſt, quam & falſa ſapientia eſt. —— quanto ſuperbiore, tanto mendaciore virtute. S Aug. de C. D. l. 19. c. 4. S. Cypr. de bon. patien. Tertull. de patien. c. 2.

(q) Simpl. in Epict. p. 140. Grot. Not. in Matth. 5. 44, 45.

(r) See Mr. Cl. Not. on Dr. Jackſon B. 10.

(s) Simpl. ſupr. p. 243, 244.

(t) Βαθεῖ βορβόρῳ ϗ ἀφεγγεῖ ζόφῳ πλάνης ϗ ἀγνοίας. Gr. Naz. or. 3. p. 67.

(u) Apol. p. 450.

Death, nor expreſs'd any Repentance; (w) nor is there any appearance of either in Epictetus's Preparatives for Death, ſuch inept Teachers of Virtue were theſe mundane Sages, that they thought themſelves made Gods by ſuch a Virtue, that could not make them the people of God (which was a very blind miſtake, and) which ſpeaketh their Philoſophy, to be no better than (x) σοφία κοσμική, a mundane kind of Wiſdom, and their Virtue could be of no better a Character than their Philoſophy, which therefore was (y) non illa cœleſtis, ſed tota terrena, not at all the celeſtial, but wholly the mundane. By their introducing their Philoſophy true Religion was much more prejudic'd, than it was before by their Pagan Religion, they made an additional prejudice to it, they rais'd up a new Enemy, they furniſh'd the Kingdom of Darkneſs with two Legs (like thoſe which Galen ſaith, the Body of Phyſick ſtandeth upon, Experience and Reaſon,) they introduc'd a Mountebank, who pretendeth to do all Cures that a Divine Phyſician might be thought needleſs and uſeleſs. So Plato ſaith; that no greater good ever did or ſhall come from the Gods to Men than Philoſophy.

VII. But that Philoſophy and its Divine Virtue may not be injur'd; it muſt be conſider'd, that not only the ſuper-Ethical Virtue is called the Divine Virtue, but alſo the ſublime Ethical Virtue (which may be practis'd in higher or lower degree;) which ſublime Ethical Virtue is either the ſpurious ſublime Ethical (as the Stoical Apathy,) or the true ſublime Ethical, (z) as the Heroical, which is called the Divine. The true ſublime Ethical Virtue (of which there are many Documents in Stoiciſm, Pythagoriſm and Platoniſm) may be conſider'd either as Philoſophic-paganiz'd (conſtitutive of the Philoſophic-pagan Saintiſts and Divine Men,) or as unphiloſophic-paganiz'd; and ſo conſider'd the parts of it and the Documents of it are ſo many Branches of the truly Divine Moral Virtue, and therefore ſo conſider'd they are of value ineſtimable. But conſider'd as Philoſophic-paganized they are of Kind and Quality ſpurious and illegitimate, and are ſo commix'd and complicated with what is bad, that in the whole compute of things they ſignifie little or nothing to the conſtituting a Divine good Man. Thus far this ſort of the Philoſophic-pagans Divine Virtue ought to be diſparag'd and no further: But the reſt of their Divine Virtue is a complication of phantaſtry and groſs vicioſity, which is the Character (not only of the Stoicks, but) of the Platoniſts Divine Virtue in all theſe parts of it.

Such is their Divine Virtue as it is their intellectual Form of Life, Theoretic of the Platonic intelligibles and Viſionary of their T'Agathon, which cannot be diſcern'd but by (a) φῶς ἀγαθοειδὲς μεῖζον ἢ κατὰ νοῦν, a Boniform light, which is beyond all that is intellectual.

Such is their Divine Virtue as it is Theurgic; for they pretend (b) by a converſe with the Gods in Theurgy, to have liberation from Paſſion and what is cognate to Generation, to partake of their Perfections and to have a Deific Union; which one party of them pretendeth to in the Myſtic-Metaphyſical way. And theſe ſay, (c) the end and ſcope is, not to be without Sin, but to be a God.

Such is their Divine Virtue, as it is the Platonic Faith and Love; for this Love is (d) ἐρωτικὴ μανία, amatorious madneſs. (e) When the Mind becometh unmental (or mad) being drunk with Nectar, this is the Mind that is in Love. Much of this ſort of Divine Virtue there is in Platoniſm, a Neſcience that is better than knowledge, a madneſs that is better than ſobriety of Mind, (f) θεία μανία, a Divine Madneſs.

Such is their Divine Virtue, as it is the Virtue of the Myſticks and Quietiſts, (g) who being ſeated in the Bay of ſuper-eſſential Goodneſs enjoy a ſuper-natural Quietiſm, to which Iſidore the Platoniſt pretendeth. (h) He ſaid, that his Soul it ſelf in ſacred Prayers became wholly a Divine Sea (or Ocean of Divinity,) having in the firſt place collected her ſelf from the Body into her ſelf; having in the next place (extatically) parted with her own Morals and betaken her ſelf from Rational Notions to thoſe that are congenial to Intellect; and in the third place being poſſeſs'd with Divine Afflation and chang'd into an extraordinary ſerenity deiform not human.

Such is their Divine Virtue as it is Entheal and Bacchical. For as the Fathers ſpeak (i) it muſt be ſaid of them, that they were inſpir'd by Demons, by whom their Soul had a Bacchical Afflation.

Such is their Divine Virtue, as it is the Paradigmatical (beyond the Soul-intellectual,) as it is the Cathartic (which is initially their Divine Vertue) and as it is the Teleſtic. (k) As Proclus purify'd himſelf with the Inſtitutes of Orpheus and the Chaldeans and the Sacra of the Mother of the Gods.

Such is their Divine Virtue, as it is a Platonic Averſation and Separation from terrene material and mortal Nature, and an Affectation of Incorporeouſneſs and Immaterialiſm (as ſuppoſing, that the Soul muſt be freed from her adventitious Corporeouſneſs, (l) that the Intellectual and Immaterial Soul as ſuch and in its own Nature is of ſufficient purity and pulchritude, only it contracteth turpitude and deformity by mixing and blending with the Body and the matter;) for this their Affectation of immaterial intellectual Nature and to be meer intellectual Souls, is an unholy Philoſophic vanity and an extravagance; and it is complicated with a Magical vanity. For in order to the purity of the Soul Pythagoras preſcrib'd ſtrict Abſtinence from ſeveral ſorts of Meats, allowing greater liberty to ſuch, (m) whoſe Life was not to be altogether purg'd, and ſacred and Philoſophic.

The Platoniſts agree, (n) that according to Plato in his Theætetus Virtue is a Similitude to God or the Gods; (o) which Aſſimilation conſiſteth (ſaith Plato) in becoming Holy and Juſt with Prudence. But to what God or Gods this Divine Similitude relateth, in this they do not agree; nor wherein (w) Diſſ. l. 3. c. 5.

---

(x) Baron. ad an. 361. n. 19.

(y) Lactant. l. 6. c. 6.

(z) Ariſtot. Eth. Nicom. l. 7. c. 1. Epict. Ench. c. 21.

(a) Plotin. En. 6. l. 8. c. 15.

(b) Jambl. de myſt. p. 13, 27, 56.

(c) Ἀλλ' ἡ σπουδὴ οὐκ ἔξω ἁμαρτίας εἶναι, ἀλλὰ θεὸν εἶναι. Plotin. En. 1. l. 2. c. 6.

(d) Procl. Plat. Th. l. 1. c. 25.

(e) Ὅταν ἄφρων γένηται νοῦς μεθυσθεὶς τοῦ νέκταρος τότε ἐρῶν γίνεται. Plotin. En. 6. l. 7. c. 35.

(f) Niceph. in Syneſ. p. 383.

(g) Procl. ſupr. p. 62.

(h) Αὐτὴν δὲ τὴν ψυχὴν ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς εὐχαῖς πρὸς ὅλον τὸ θεῖον πέλαγος ἔλεγε· τὰ μὲν πρῶτα, συναγειρομένην ἀπὸ τοῦ σώματος εἰς ἑαυτήν· αὖθις δὲ ἐξισταμένην τῶν ἰδίων ἠθῶν, καὶ ἀναχωροῦσαν ἀπὸ τῶν λογικῶν ἐννοιῶν ἐπὶ τὰς τῷ νῷ συγγενεῖς· ἐκ δ' αὖ τρίτων, ἐνθουσιῶσαν καὶ παραλλάττουσαν εἰς ἀήθη τινὰ γαλήνην θεοπρεπῆ καὶ οὐκ ἀνθρωπίνην. Phot. cod. 242. col. 1068.

(i) Ὑπὸ δαιμόνων ἐμπνευσθέντες. Theophil. ad Autol. l. 2. p. 87. Ἡ ψυχὴ ὑπὸ δαιμόνων ἐκβακχευθεῖσα. S. Chryſoſt. T. 6. p. 637.

(k) Marin in vit. ejus.

(l) Plotin. En. 1. l. 6. c. 5, 6. Hierocl. ſupr. p. 297.

(m) Ὅσοις ὁ βίος μὴ πάνυ ἦν ἐκκεκαθαρμένος καὶ ἱερὸς καὶ φιλόσοφος Jambl. de vit. pyth. c. 24.

(n) Procl. ſupr. l. 6. c. 11.

(o) Ὁμοίωσις δὲ δίκαιον καὶ ὅσιον μετὰ φρονήσεως γενέσθαι.

this Similitude conſiſteth. (o) For ſome ſay, that this Divine Similitude relateth to the Pagan Deities in general; others ſay, that it relateth to the Platoniſts Divine Intellect; and others are of Opinion, that it relateth to their T'Agathon. (p) Some place this Divine Similitude in their Theoretic Virtue and intellectual Form of Life: Others place it in the Practic Virtue (the Ethical and Political) which ſeemeth to be the ſenſe of Plato; for Prudence, Holineſs and Juſtice is the Practic Virtue; and (as he ſaith in his Euthyphro) Holineſs is that part of Juſtice, which is converſant about the Gods, the other part of it is converſant about Men. In his Fourth of Laws he placeth the Divine Similitude in Temperance (taken in a large Senſe,) and in his Phædo (as Alcinous ſaith) he placeth it in Temperance and Juſtice; thus ſaying, Are not they moſt happy and bleſſed, and ſuch as go to the beſt place, οἱ τὴν δημοτικήν τε ϗ πολιτικὴν ἀρετὴν ἐπιτετηδευκότες, that have exercis'd the Popular and Political Virtue, which we call Temperance and Juſtice? Plato therefore ſeemeth to place the Divine Similitude in the Popular-pagans Holineſs and Juſtice: But this the generality of his Followers will not endure to hear of; they are far from counting the Civil Virtue of the Popular Pagans the Divine Similitude and the Divine Virtue: They ſay (q) it is but the way to get the Divine Similitude, and that this is the ſenſe of Plato. But whatever may be thought of his Senſe, his account of Virtue and of the Divine Similitude is an inſtance, that the Philoſophic Pagans may in Words agree with our Religion, when in ſenſe there is an extreme diſagreement. For Plato's Divine Similitude (howſoever it is interpreted in his School,) is extremely alien from, and oppoſite to, that truly Divine Similitude which is Wiſdom, Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, wherewith he had no acquaintance. For had he been acquainted with that truly Divine kind of Juſtice of Righteouſneſs, he could not have been a Pagan Religioniſt; nor could he have inſtituted a Community of Women and of Goods in his Republick; nor would he have taken care, (r) to regulate the drinking in the Feaſts of Bacchus without endeavouring to aboliſh them; nor could he ſo groſly have miſtaken himſelf, as in a Book of Juſtice (his Fifth de Republicâ,) to Diſcourſe in this manner touching the Greeks and Barbarians. (s) All Greeks are near of Kin, but extraneous and different from Barbarians. When the Grecians and Barbarians fight with one another, μαχομένους τε φήσομεν, ϗ πολεμίους φύσει εἶναι, ϗ πόλεμον τὴν ἔχθραν ταύτην κλητέον, this is properly called fighting, for they are Enemies by Nature, and ſuch a feud muſt be called a War: But if Grecians that are Friends by Nature, quarrel with Grecians, this is an unnatural Diſtemper, and Greece muſt be ſaid στασιάζειν, to be troubled with Sedition, and ſuch a feud muſt not be called a War, but a Sedition. The Greeks had their Philoſophy from the Barbarians (as they called them,) and yet they commonly reproach'd them (although ſometimes to ſerve a turn, they diſcourſe otherwiſe, as Themiſtius doth in an Oration to Valens,) uſually they were ſo uncivil and unjuſt towards them, that they look'd upon them, (t) as Enemies by Nature and as θηρία, wild Beaſts. Plato follow'd his Popular Pagans in their injuſtice, as well as in their irreligious Religion. So Plutarch (in the Life of Lycurgus) can find no injuſtice in the Lacedæmonians Commonwealth, which was inſtituted for War and fighting, not for Peace, (u) as Ariſtotle obſerveth and blameth; the Spartans Virtue was the love of Glory; they were train'd up and exercis'd, to be expert Thieves; expos'd and murder'd their weak and deform'd Infants, and even this horrible Injuſtice Plutarch approveth. Ariſtotle alſo is known to teach (w) μηδὲν πεπηρωμένον τρέφειν, to expoſe (not to educate) Children that are maimed, and Women to abort, that they may not exceed their number; and he ſymbolizeth with his Maſter Plato in ſuppoſing, (x) that War is a natural thing between the Greeks and Barbarians. Plato is juſtly chargeable with a bad diſcernment in matters of Juſtice, becauſe he patronizeth lying (notwithſtanding that ſome Chriſtian Caſuiſts pretend to juſtifie ſeveral ſorts of lying,) wherein he followeth the general ſenſe of the Heathen, which was, that a Lye is not bad, if it be expedient, and not pernicious in the Affairs of Men, ubi expedit mendacium dicere, dicatur. So in his Third and Fifth de Republicâ Plato would have Governors, (y) to make uſe of frequent lying and deceit for the benefit of the Subjects; this muſt be granted to publick Governors, but not be touched by private Men. If the Platoniſts Human Juſtice is ſo bad, it is reaſonable, to ſuppoſe, that in their Divine (or ſuper-human) Virtue they were not very good.

VIII. Ariſtotle pretendeth not to an Inſtitution of Divine Virtue, or to inſtitute a Divine good Man. For although he acknowledgeth a Divine Virtue, yet it is in ſo ſlender a degree, that he denieth, that there can be any friendſhip between God and Man; the Beatitude that he inſiſteth on is but the Civil, (z) as the Virtue that he inſiſteth on is but the Civil and Military; his Ethicks are but a Branch of the mundane Politicks, his active Virtue conſiſteth in that mean, which the worldly Man's Prudence determineth, and what can living well (bene vivere) ſignifie in a Civil worldly Mans Inſtitution of Virtue, but to live without Vice or Crime in the Notion of the Civil World? It is not marvellous therefore, (a) that Ariſtotle diſſonantly from the ſenſe of other Philoſophers patronizeth Revenge, or that Cicero ſymbolizeth with him (for this muſt be acknowledg'd, notwithſtanding (b) what a learned Biſhop hath ſaid to the contrary;) for the former of theſe did not pretend, to be a Philoſophic-pagan Saintiſt, and the latter of them (although a Philoſopher, yet) was not of any Philoſophic Inſtitution, and was ſo uncertain an admirer of Philoſophy, (c) that ſometimes he preferreth that one little Book of the Twelve Tables before the Libraries of all the Philoſophers both for weight of Authority and plenty of Utility. So Tribonian upon the Pandects ſaith, (d) Juſtice and the notice of what is good and equal is our Profeſſion, ſeparating and diſcerning equal from unequal, lawful from unlawful, deſiring to make Men good, not only by fear of Puniſhments, but by the exhortation of Rewards, following the true, not counterfeit Philoſophy. The Lawyers (not without Reaſon) prefer their Inſtitution to their Civil Virtue before the Philoſophers Inſtitutions to their Divine Virtue; which yet

muſt

(o) Procl. ibid. Plotin. En. 1. l. 2. Alcin. c. 27. Simpl. in Epict. p. 140.

(p) Plotin. En. 1. l. 2. c. 3. Hierocl. ſupr. p. 222. 257. Simplic. ſupr. p. 4, 140. Alcin. ſupr.

(q) Ficin. in Plotin. p. 9.

(r) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 12. c. 24.

(s) V. Grot. Not. in Matth. 5. 43.

(t) Iſocrat. Panathen. p. m. 572.

(u) Grot. de V. R. C. l. 2. S. 12, 14.

(w) Polit. l. 7. c. 16.

(x) Grot. ſupr.

(y) Συχνῷ τῷ ψεύδει καὶ ἀπάτῃ χρῆσθαι ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ τῶν ἀρχομένων, ἰδιώταις δὲ οὐχ ἁπτέον.

(z) Eth. Nicom. l. 10. c. 7.

(a) Grot. ſupr.

(b) Bp. Wilkins Ser. on Rom. 12. 19.

(c) Lactant. l. 3. c. 16.

(d) Juſtitiam colimus, & boni & æqui notitiam profitemur, æquum ab iniquo ſeparantes, licitum ab illicito diſcernentes, bonos non ſolum metu pœnarum verum etiam præmiorum quoque exhortatione efficere cupientes, veram niſi fallor Philoſophiam, non ſimulatam affectantes.

muſt be acknowledg'd, to have a meaſurable and limited ſuitableneſs and agreeableneſs to the truly divine moral Virtue: But ſo that in the whole compute of things the Diſagreement is far greater than the Agreement. Whence we may make a Judgment (e) of this Saying of a learned Biſhop (and ſuch like;) all the Agenda of Chriſtianity are ſo far from being oppoſite, that they are moſt agreeable to human Reaſon, as 'tis cultivated and heightned to its utmoſt improvement by Philoſophy. If this Saying be converted thus; all the Philoſophers improv'd Reaſon (which is their Divine Virtue) is ſo far from being oppoſite, that it is moſt agreeable to the Agenda of Chriſtianity, it will be a monſtrous Propoſition. For nothing can be more oppoſite to the Agenda of Chriſtianity than a great part of the Philoſophers Divine Virtue, therefore the Agenda of Chriſtianity are not ſo ſuitable to the Philoſophers Reaſon, as is pretended. That this Saying (which will hereafter recur to conſideration) may have any appearance of Truth, it muſt be limited to the particular Agenda of Chriſtianity; for theſe general Agenda of Chriſtianity (which are alſo in part the general Agenda of Judaiſm) are directly aud expreſly oppoſite to the Philoſophers improved Reaſon: To have no other Gods but me; to Worſhip the Lord thy God and to ſerve him alone; to ſeek the Kingdom of God and his Righteouſneſs; to take the Kingdom, enter into it and buy it at any rate; to put off the Heathen old Man, and to put on the new Man in the (Chriſtian) new Birth and the new Covenant; to come out of the mundane Society, and the State of Sin and of Death, to paſs into the State of Life, to incorporate with the Divine Family, and become a Citizen of the holy Empire; not to adhere to, but to abandon the Kingdom of Darkneſs, and to manage an holy War againſt its Powers, Intereſts and Adherents; to live to him that died for us and that roſe again; to live for God and his Service, and to make it our daily Care and Prayer, that his Name may be hallow'd and his Kingdom may come. All which fundamental Agenda of the Chriſtian Inſtitution (and ſuch more) are altogether alien from and oppoſite to the Philoſophic Pagans Sentiments (as they are Pagans:) Nor is that plain Principle aud Summary of Piety the Fear of God ſuitable to their Reaſon; for they deſtroy'd it (which the Popular Pagans did not) by their Maxim (f) Ira Deorum nulla eſt. Yet a learned Man ſaith, (g) He knows not any Evangelical Precept or Duty belonging to a Chriſtians Practice, which natural Men of beſt account (the Philoſophers) by the meer ſtrength of Human Reaſon have not taught and taken upon them to maintain as juſt and reaſonable. But it would be far better to ſay; there is not any of the particular Agenda of Chriſtianity, the reaſonableneſs whereof may not be illuſtrated by what they have ſuppos'd to be juſt and reaſonable. So the Chriſtian Martyrs contempt of Death may be ſhew'd, to be reaſonable, which yet was ſo unſuitable to their improv'd Reaſon, that it is called by one of them (h) ψιλὴ παράταξις, meer Obſtinacy, and another of them imputeth it to Madneſs and Cuſtom. The Agreement therefore between Chriſtianity and Philoſophy touching this Virtue, the Contempt of Death, is complicated with ſuch Diſagreement, that the Chriſtians Virtue of that Name Philoſophy diſcardeth as Vice and Folly, and the Philoſophers Virtue of that Name Chriſtians diſcard as Self-murder or profane bravery.

(c) Bp. Wilkins ſupr.

(f) Cic. de off. l. 3.

(g) Dr. Meric. Caſaub. pref. to M. Antonin. in Engliſh.

(h) M. Ant. l. 11. S. 3. Epict. diſſ. l. 4. c. 7.

IX. The Philoſophers therefore being Gentiles that knew not God and aliens from the truly divine moral Virtue (the Life of God) are juſtly cenſur'd by the Chriſtian Apologiſts (yet not without ſome Self-inconſiſtence) as thoſe that wanted their Eye-ſight the Science of Good and Evil. (i) It is paſt doubt, that all thoſe were ignorant of what is Good and Evil, that neither had the knowledge of God, nor of the Adverſary of God. (k) They reproach them, that pretending to form Inſtitutions of Virtue, they foully miſtook Vice for Virtue and by their foul miſtakes overturn'd Religion. They obſerve, that if the Philoſophers had found out God, (l) they could not have been Heathen Polytheiſts; (m) that their Theories and Diſcourſes were oppoſite and uncertain and their Differences endleſs about the end or chief Good; (n) that they were Men of abſurd Paradoxes (which they delighted to maintain) introduc'd Scepticiſm, and that the vulgar were often wiſer than they; that their Precepts wanted Authority and Sanctions of Rewards and Puniſhments, that their Motives to a virtuous Life were inſufficient, that their Philoſophy was devoid of Divine Grace and Aſſiſtance for the Acquiſition of Virtue; that the ſupports which it affordeth under affliction and its conſolations againſt Death are mean and abſurd; that it did no (great) good in the World, nor was it a Law of Life to themſelves (as Lacydes the Philoſopher told his Servants, (o) we diſcourſe one way in the Schools and live another;) that the Popular Pagans who knew it not, excell'd them in Goodneſs, and of all Men they had moſt need, to be taught a virtuous Life, that were the profeſs'd Teachers of Virtue. (p) They are charg'd with henious Crimes, the Popular Pagans repreſent them as Hyprocrites and Creatures of wind and emptineſs (the Stoicks are ſaid to be as painted as their Pœcile (ποικίλη,) Porticus wherein they philoſophiz'd:) But we will content our ſelves with this modeſt Character of their Morals; the univerſality of them were but Counterfeit Saintiſts and Divine kind of Men. But although all of them of ſeveral Inſtitutions (not alike, nor alike bad) are of this bad Character; yet worth and uſefulneſs there is both in their Perſons and in their Diſcipline ſo great and valuable, that ſeveral of them ought to be had in great Eſteem. Several of the Philoſophic and many of the Popular Pagans alſo were of great Abilities, of great Humanſocietive and Paganical Virtue (ſuch Virtue as is competible to Heathen Mankind,) of conſiderable uſefulneſs to the World, and therefore were deſervedly had in Honour in their Generations, as ſeveral of them were ſince the times of Chriſtianity. There is therefore an Exceſs and Extravagance on both hands in characterizing the Philoſophers Morals. For one ſaith, (q) we ſee the great Attainments of Socrates and other Heathens, and what height of Goodneſs they roſe to by the aſſiſtance of the Divine Spirit. Another ſaith of them without excepting any (r) nihil contaminatius ac depravatius genere iſto bipedum fuiſſe, nothing was more contaminate and deprav'd than that ſort of Men the Philoſophers.

(i) Non igitur dubium eſt, quin illi omnes quid eſſet bonum & malum ignoraverint, qui nec Deum nec adverſarium Dei ſcierint. Lactant. l. 6. c. 6.

(k) Ibid. l. 5. c. 10. l. 3. c. 28.

(l) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 360.

(m) Theodoret. Θεραπ. Ser. 1. Lactant. l. 3. c. 7.

(n) Ibid. l. 3. c. 5. 28, 27, 20, 19, 15, 16, 30.

(o) Euſeb. pr. ev. l. 14. c. 7.

(p) Min. Fel. p. 350. Tertull. Apol. c. 46. Caſaub. in Perſ. p. 166. Gat. in Ant. p. 37, 366. Grot. not. in 1 Cor. 1. 20. Phot. cod. 258. col. 1311. Holyday on Juv. p. 29.

(q) Dr. Hezek. Burton 2 Vol of Diſc. p. 17.

(r) Petav. T. 4. Par. 2. l. 13. c. 18. S. 13.

X. In ſuch a way as to avoid both theſe Extravagances, we muſt reſolve this Branch of the Pelagian Controverſie; whether the ſeeming Virtues and good Works of the Gentiles are true or falſe, Sins and Vices, or Virtues and Well-doings, in what ſenſe and how far they are ſo? If we ſay, that all their ſeeming Virtues and good Works are in no ſenſe true, we contradict the Apoſtle, Rom. 2. 14. The Gentiles do by nature the things contained in the Law; (s) which muſt be underſtood of the Gentiles antecedently to their Converſion to Chriſtianity. But if we ſay, That the true Virtues and good Works are found in the Gentile World, we deſtroy the neceſſity of Chriſtianity, we contradict the Senſe of all true Chriſtians, we confound Nature and Grace, Law and Grace, Gentiliſm and Chriſtianiſm, the State and Life of the Gentiles with that of the Saints of God, the Atheous World with the City of God and the Divine Family; we contradict the Nature of things (by ſuppoſing, that Men do what is truly Holy and Pious antecedently to an Inchoation of their true Piety and Sanctity;) we contradict the Scriptural Account of the Heathen-popular State and Life, and the whole Stream of the Scriptures; which affirm, that without Faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb. 11. 6. which muſt not be underſtood of ſuch a Faith that is common to Infidels (as ſome pretenders to Theology (t) underſtand it:) but of the Faith which conſtituteth Divine Believers (who alone belong to the Apoſtle's Catalogue) and God's Religioniſts that come unto God. The Gentiles have their Hearts purify'd by Faith. The Mind and Practice of Unbelievers is defiled, impure and unholy. The Carnal Mind is no keeper of the Law of God; they that are in the Fleſh cannot pleaſe God. Te are marry'd to another (ſaith the Apoſtle) to have your Fruit unto Holineſs, and to bring forth Fruit unto God. We are created in Chriſt unto good Works. The genuine kind of Virtues are, the Fruits of the Holy Spirit. A corrupt Tree cannot bring forth good Fruit, of Thorns Men do not gather Figs, nor of a Bramble-buſh gather they Grapes. When ye were the Servants of Sin, ye were free from Righteouſneſs, the practice whereof is a walking, not after the Fleſh, but after the Spirit. Every one that doth Righteouſneſs, is born of God. The true and genuine kind of Virtue, Goodneſs and Righteouſneſs is that which is of the Kingdom of God, of the Divine Image and the new Man that is renewed in knowledge (which is inconſiſtent with the ſtate of Atheous Ignorance) which is of a new Creature, a new and divine birth unto Righteouſneſs, of the new Covenant and diſpenſation of things, of the true Vine, and of a Divine Charity, which is the Eſſence and Summary of the truly Divine Moral Virtue and the genuine kind of good Works. Though I beſtow all my Goods to feed the Poor, and give my Body to be burned, and have not Charity, it profiteth me nothing. The natural Man's kind of Virtue, Goodneſs and Righteouſneſs therefore is (according to theſe Notices of Scripture) on this ſide that which is the true and genuine kind of Virtue, Goodneſs and Righteouſneſs (the Saint of God-kind of Virtue, Goodneſs and Righteouſneſs;) nor can the true Virtue, Goodneſs and Juſtice exiſt without being truly virtuous, juſt and good as to God (which is true Piety and Sanctity,) nor can that be the true kind of Virtue, Goodneſs and Juſtice, which cannot conſtitute Men of the truly good and virtuous kind, God's kind of virtuous, good and juſt Men, whoſe Judgment is according to truth. But as there is a Secular and Mundane kind of Wiſdom and Prudence in it ſelf laudable, ornamental and uſeful (ſuch is the common Juris Prudentia) yet originally it is baſe and vile being but Mundane-born (not of the Divine and Heaven-born things in the diviſive or contradiſtinctive Senſe) objectively it is baſe and vile (not being converſant about the Saint of God-kind of things,) of kind and quality alſo it is baſe and vile (being of kind common, graceleſs and unholy) and effectively it is not Wiſdom (for it cannot conſtitute any Man truly wiſe, not wiſe as to the main, but it continueth him where it found him, in the ſtate of Ignorance, Errour and Fooliſhneſs) upon which accounts it is fitly call'd by Gr. Naz. (u) ἄσοφος σοφία, unwiſe Wiſdom; ſo there is a Secular and Mundane-kind of Virtue and Goodneſs, which in its own nature is laudable, ornamental and uſeful at a great rate, yet originally, objectively, and alſo of kind and quality it is but baſe and vile, and effectively it is not Virtue, Juſtice and Goodneſs; for it cannot conſtitute any Man Virtuous, Juſt and Good, not Virtuous, Juſt and Good as to the main, but it continueth him where it found him, in the ſtate of (reigning) Sin and Unrighteouſneſs. His Works are not wrought in God, which is a Phraſe us'd by our Saviour, and is ſeveral times us'd by Philo, (w) whoſe Senſe is of no great concern, but (doubtleſs) our Saviour meaneth by it Theiſm of Religion and Condition. Thoſe therefore are the true and genuine kind of good Works, that are the holy and godly kind of good Works (for theſe are wrought in Theiſm) and that is the true and genuine kind of Virtue, which is the holy and godly kind of Virtue, which is of a different kind from ſuch Virtue and Well-doing, which is meerly Humane, Secular and Mundane, Atheous and Unholy; which is the only kind of Virtue, that is competible to the Atheous and Unholy (continuing ſuch) and to altogether Unregenerate Mankind. Their Goodneſs, Charity, Benignity, Liberality, Almſgiving, Clemency, Juſtice, Temperance, Patience, Probity, Fortitude, contempt of the World, Piety and Devotion, are not the truly Divine kind of Moral Virtue, but theſe their Virtues are of an alien Kind and Family from thoſe that are true Holineſs and Godlineſs as to the kind of them. They are not truly Holy and Religious towards God in any thing (nor can they be ſo till they begin to be ſo;) but are Atheous, Graceleſs and Unholy, not only in their indifferent Actions and their evil Doings (that are ſuch in the Matter of them) but in their Religious Actions in their Virtue and Duty, their Goodneſs and Well-doings (that are materially ſuch;) theſe are not of kind and for the main the truly good and holy kind of Virtues, Duties and good Works. Their kind of doing what is materially good (commonly call'd the manner of doing it) ſymbolizeth not with the truly good and holy in the main Principle, Motive, End and formal Object. They are not right in thoſe grand Ingredients, which are eſſential to every one of the truly good Actions; but their Virtue, Juſtice, Goodneſs and Good-works are devoid of the neceſſary Ingredients, and are impoyſon'd with the contrary Ingredients. Nor can their virtuous living be the Life of Piety and Sanctity (they live not to God as his Servants in the exerciſe of all Divine Virtues,) they ſin in practiſing their Virtue, and they do not only ſin, but ſin at ſuch a rate as is inconſiſtent

(s) Mr. Thorndike Epil. par. 2. ch. 23.

(t) Voſſ. Hiſt. Pelag. l. 3. par. 3. Theſ. 11.

Act. 15. 9. Tit. 1. 15. Rom. 8. 7, 8. and 6. 22. and 7. 4. Eph 2. 10. Gal. 5. 22. Matt. 7. 8. Luk. 6. 44. Rom. 6. 20. and 8. 1. 1 Joh. 2. 29. Rom. 14. 17. Eph. 4. 24. Col. 3. 10. Gal. 6. 15. Joh. 1. 13. 2 Cor. 3. 3. Heb. 8. 10. Rom. 13. 10. 1 Cor. 13. 3.

Vita bona noſtra nihil aliud eſt quàm Dei Gratia. S. Aug. de Grat. &. lib. Arbit. c. 8.

(u) Or. 3. p. 50.

Joh. 3. 21.

(w) Ζῇ δὲ τὴν ἐν Θεῷ ζωὴν εὐδαίμονα. Quod deter. inſid. potior. p. 111. Ed. Gr. Pariſ. Πρός γε τὴν ἐν Θεῷ ζωὴν ἄψυχος καὶ νεκρός. Περὶ φυγάδ. p. 312.

Bonum eſt ex omnibus cauſis eſſentialibus.

ſiſtent with Sanctity; and therefore they are wicked and ungodly in all their virtuous practice and well-doing.

With this Account of the Virtues and good Works of the Gentiles the general Senſe of Chriſtians thus far agreeth; (x) It is a plain and granted truth among all that are truly pious, that without true Piety, that is, the true Worſhip of the true God, no Man can have the true (kind of) Virtue. The Pagan Theologers themſelves ſay, (y) that Piety is μήτηρ τῶν ἀρετῶν, the Mother of the Virtues; their Virtues therefore could not be of the Holy and Godly Kind, if their Religion and Piety was of a contrary kind and Family. The Schoolmen therefore (agreeably to the general Senſe of Chriſtians) univerſally determine, that no Theological Virtues nor any good Works theologically ſo called (wherein Piety and Religion conſiſteth, and which are ſaving) are competible to Infidels; but whether all the Actions of Infidels be Sins or not, whether ſeveral of them be not morally good and honeſt, ſo as not to be Sins, this is matter of diſpute amongſt them, and they agree not with one another. The Fathers concern'd in the Pelagian Controverſie agree with one another, but do not well agree with themſelves; (z) for ſometimes they diſcourſe, That the Gentiles have their good Works, which are praiſe-worthy, that they do ſome things, vel ſapienter vel ſanctè, even wiſely or holily, that for their good Works they are rewarded (with ſecular Bleſſings in this Life and with abatement of Puniſhment in the Life to come:) And ſometimes they diſpute, That all the Gentiles Works are Sins (although ſome are ſplendid and glittering,) that all their Virtues are Vices and Sins, not true but falſe Virtues, non veræ ſed veriſimiles, ſuch as carry an appearance only of true Virtues. (a) S. Auſtin's account of the Gentiles Virtues and good Works is founded upon the Apoſtle's Text, Rom. 14. 23. Whatſoever is not of Faith, is Sin; which muſt be underſtood of Sin ſimply ſo called (without addition or limitation of Senſe;) yet the ſame Father ſaith, habent quædam opera bona in vita impia, they have ſome good Works in their impious Life. The Divines of the Reformation reſemble theſe ancient Fathers in their Accounts of the Gentiles Virtues and good Works; the ſame Men do not well agree with themſelves. For ſome affirm, (b) that whatſoever the Wicked do is altogether ſinful; yet they alſo affirm, that in ſeveral of their Works there is Goodneſs Ethical and Moral in relation unto Manners and in order to Men; (c) that in their ſtate of Sin many things may be done civiliter bona & honeſta, that are civilly good and honeſt. In ſome reſpect alſo Reformed Divines are like the Schoolmen, they are of ſeveral Parties and Perſwaſions, and in their Accounts of the Gentiles Virtues and good Works they do not agree with one another: For the far greater number of them are of Opinion, That all the Works of the Unregenerate have the nature of Sins (as the Church of England determineth) and are not good Works (wanting ſome Eſſentials thereto) but Sins in the ſight of God, although they be materially good. Some of them Pelagianize at a ſuperlative rate; they ſuppoſe, (d) That ſome perfect Heathens were good, the lovers of Piety and honeſty of Manners, that they eſchew'd Sins and gave themſelves to good Works, and did good Works acceptable to God; had true Virtue, follow'd Sanctity, perſever'd in the ſtudy of it, wrought that which is good, and by patient continuance in well-doing ſought Glory, Honour and Immortality. Others who ſuppoſe, (e) that ſo far as any good Work is agreeable with Reaſon, ſo far it muſt needs be pleaſing to the God of Reaſon; ſo far as it anſwereth the Rule, ſo far it is accepted of him that made it; who will not call the Temperance, and Patience, and Chaſtity of the Heathen Sins, but rather the ſame Virtues with thoſe that commend Chriſtians; yet acknowledge, that they were as the Rainbow before the Flood, of no uſe (unprofitable to Salvation) becauſe they were not ſeaſon'd with Faith. Amongſt the Fathers that liv'd before the Pelagian Controverſie there is a like diverſity of Conceit touching the Virtues and good Works of the Gentiles: For J. Mart. ſuppoſeth, (f) that Socrates, Heraclitus, and ſuch more were virtuous at the rate of Chriſtians; (g) but Tertullian and Cyprian call the Patience, Chaſtity, and other Virtues of the Gentiles falſe (not meaning that they were imperfect, as Voſſius miſtaketh, but that they were ſpurious and illegitimate;) Theophylact accounteth none of the Gentiles good, (h) S. Chryſoſtom compareth the ſpecious Works of them that know not God, to the Reliques of dead Men (ſpeciouſly adorn'd;) S. Baſil thinketh the doing Righteouſneſs a thing incompetible to the Servants of Sin; (i) Lactantius reproacheth and explodeth the Pagans Virtue and Juſtice as not true; (k) S. Hilary accounteth the Philoſophers Aſceticiſm nothing better than Inanity; (l) Clemens himſelf intituleth the Philoſophers Continence ἡ ἀνθρωπίνη ἐγκράτεια, the Humane Continence, and ἡ κατ' ἀλήθειαν ἐγκράτεια, the Continence according to truth is by him oppos'd to that which is taught by the Philoſophers. But this great Author meaneth not (as the other Fathers) to reject the Philoſophers Continence as ſpurious and adulterate, but only as imperfect, agreeably to that grand Dogma of his, (m) that the Greeks were made juſt by Philoſophy in a degree of Inchoation.

XI. It is not reaſonable to attempt a reconcilement of all theſe diſſonant Accounts of the Pagans Virtues and Good Works (for none can reconcile Contradictions;) but the moſt of them may commodiouſly be reconciled and brought to a good conſiſtence with one another, by conſidering their Ethical and Political Virtue (which may be called the Humane-Moral or Humane-Societive Virtue) and repreſenting the true Character thereof. This ſort of Virtue (which ſeparate from the truly Divine Moral Virtue is manifeſtly competible to Heathen Mankind) is a wild, a vile and exotick, an atheous and unholy kind of Virtue, and therefore is of Character a virtue-leſs kind of Virtue, a bad kind of Goodneſs. The nature of it may be illuſtrated from the wild Olives, not conſider'd as meerly an illegitimate vicious Fruit, but as an illegitimate virtuous Fruit. For as wild Olives muſt be called Olives, and are a degenerate kind of Olives; ſo the Goodneſs Juſtice, Benignity, Clemency, Integrity and Chaſtity of Heathens, and altogether unregenerate Mankind muſt be call'd Virtue, Duty and Well-doing, and is a degenerate kind of Virtue. The wild Olives are ſo far and in ſuch a ſenſe true Olives, they are truly and really a (degenerate) kind of Olives; ſo this Exotick Virtue is truly and really a (degenerate) kind of Virtue. But the Wild Olives are ſo far and in ſuch ſenſe falſe Olives, they are not the true and genuine kind of Olives, in ſuo genere (in their kind) they are Olives, but ſo as to be of kind Olives no Olives: In like manner this Exotick Virtue is a ſpurious and illegitimate, (x) Conſtat inter omnes veraciter pios, neminem ſine verâ pietate, id eſt, veri Dei vero cultu, veram poſſe habere virtutem. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 5. c. 19.

(y) Hierocl. in aur. Car. p. 126.

(z) Voſſ. Hiſt. Pelag. l. 3. par. 3. Theſ. 10. & 12.

(a) Petav. Dogm. Th. T. 4. par. 2. l. 13. c. 12. S. 12.

(b) Dr. Reynold's ſinfulneſs of Sin, p. 249, 237, 243.

(c) Le Blanc. Theſ. p. 491.

(d) Curcell. diſſ. de Neceſſit. cognit. Chriſt. S. 6, 16, 24, 35.

(e) Farind. Ser. 1. Vol. p. 375. and 3. Vol. p. 346.

(f) Apol. 2. p. 83.

(g) Voſſ. ſupr.

(h) Caſſan. conſul. Art. 6. de oper. impior.

(i) L. 6. c. 6, 9.

(k) In Pſ. 64.

( ) Str. l. 3. p. m. 328.

(m) Voſſ. ſupr. Theſ. 11.

Rom. 11. 24.

legitimate, not the true and genuine kind of Virtue; yet Virtue it is ſui generis of a certain kind, but ſo as to be a virtue-leſs kind of Virtue. As the wild Olives are worthleſs, refuſe and ſordid ſtuff, devoid of the choiceneſs and precioſity which is in the genuine kind of Olives, and a certain Plant thought by ſome a Baſtard-Vine hath the Name of Dulcamara (or Amaradulcis) Bitter-ſweet: So the Heathen Man's kind of Virtue is comparatively but riff-raff ſtuff, devoid of the choiceneſs and precioſity which is in true Holineſs; the whole of it is a graceleſs and unholy kind of doing though well-doing; it is an evil kind of well-doing, a vicious kind of practiſing Virtue, a ſinful kind of doing Duty. But amongſt the ſinful kinds of doing Duty (the evil kinds of doing what is materially good) there is this remarkable difference; in ſome of them that which is materially good, is done in ſo criminal a manner, and out of Ends and Principles ſo vitious, that the Nature of Virtue is loſt out of the Action, and it becometh not Virtuous, but Sin and Vice ſimply ſo called (the Sacrifice of the Wicked is an Abomination, and Phariſaical Holineſs is not Goodneſs but Wickedneſs;) it is otherwiſe in this Exotick Virtue and Well-doing, which is a different evil kind of doing what is materially good; for the nature of Virtue and Well-doing is really preſerv'd and retain'd in it, as the nature of an Olive is in the wild Olives. Conſider it as contradiſtinct to the former evil kind of doing what is materially good, and ſo it appeareth, to be for the main and of kind a ſpurious and illegitimate ſort of Virtue and Well-doing. The Virtues and Well-doings of the Gentiles therefore are Sin in one Senſe but not in another. He that ſaith, They are Sin, Vice and Crime, not Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, but an oppoſite thereto, ſaith true; but he that ſaith, They are Sin, Vice and Crime, not any ſort of Virtue, Duty and Well-doing, ſaith falſe; for they are a degenerate kind of Virtue, Duty and Well-doing; of kind and for the main they are not the holy kind of Virtue and Well-doing, but an oppoſite thereto, and therefore are Sin and Vice; but they are not of kind and for the main ſo Sin and Vice, as not to be of kind and for the main unholy Virtue and Well-doing. They are not of definitive Notion and Denomination either Vice or Virtue, Sin or Duty, good or evil Works ſimply without addition and limitation of Senſe; but they are to be conſider'd ſub duplici genere boni moralis; for they are not the true and genuine but a ſpurious and illegitimate kind of Good Works.

In like manner, if we conſider them with reſpect to the Law or Rule of Virtue and Duty, we muſt affirm, that they are ſo far a conformity to it, as to be a ſort of Virtue and Well-doing; but they are ſo far a receſſion and degeneracy from it, as to be nothing better than a ſpurious and degenerate kind of Virtue and Well-doing, which cannot be ſaid to be Sin, ſo as not to be any ſort of Virtue and Duty; which muſt be ſaid, to be Sin, not Holineſs. For as the holy kind of Duties, Virtues and good Works are of kind and for the main according to the Law of our Piety and Holineſs towards God (who is the formal Object of our Obedience, whom we ought to obey out of dutiful Affection to him, and to make the pleaſing him, his Honour and Service the chief End of our doings and buſineſs of our Lives:) So the atheous, unholy kind of Duties, Virtues and Good-works are of kind and for the main againſt the Law of our Piety and Holineſs towards God, and therefore have the nature of Sins; they are againſt the Law of our Piety and Holineſs privatively and oppoſitively; for the not living unto God is an undeifying him, a being inimical to him, and a living to our ſelves; the not regarding God dutifully and the not dutifully affecting him, is a diſregarding and diſaffecting him, and a regarding and affecting ſomewhat elſe above him and againſt him; and therefore the Natural Man by his unholy kind of Virtue is no otherwiſe virtuous, than ſo as to be a villainous graceleſs Miſcreant and a grand Impietiſt towards God. But although this unholy kind of Virtue and Well-doing is of ſo bad a Character, yet Vice and Virtue muſt by no means be confounded, the Fathers count it praiſe-worthy and ſtile it Good Works; the Apoſtle ſtileth it a doing the things contained in the Law; God himſelf hath ſo much reſpect to it, that he rewardeth it ſeveral ways: No Man upon his Converſion ſo repenteth of it, as he doth of his Sins ſimply ſo called; which Conſiderations plainly ſhew, that it is ſo Vice and Sin, as yet to be an unholy and degenerate kind of Virtue and Well-doing. It is not only a doing what is materially good (which is of good example to others, and may be of good effect, hugely beneficial to the World:) but in its principle, impulſive Cauſe and End there is ſo much good, as ſerveth to conſtitute it a ſpurious and degenerate kind of Virtue and Well-doing, as will appear from the Heathen Man's Principles of laudable Practice, which may be reduc'd to theſe four. 1. Good Nature and natural Inſtinct. 2. Humane and Mundane Societiveneſs. 3. An unholy kind of reſpect for Worth and Virtue, Honeſty and Duty, Juſtice and Equity, Reaſon and Ingenuity, Civility, Decency and Order, and a like reſpect for himſelf, his own Perfection and Felicity. 4. Religion on this ſide Religion.

XII. In the firſt place, Animal Temper and the kindly Inſtincts which are in Animal Nature may be called Good Nature (which is a Principle of laudable Practices;) for Mankind ſymbolize with the Brute Animals, of whom ſome are tame and tractable and of a placid Humour, others are fierce and ſavage, and have the Name of Evil Beaſts; which Name implyeth, that there are good-natur'd Beaſts. Cato was of a good nature, if (as Cicero ſaith of him) Nature had fram'd him to Gravity and Temperance; or if (as Velleius Paterculus ſaith) He was therefore virtuous, quia aliter eſſe non potuit, becauſe he could not be otherwiſe. Some are by Natural Temper and Conſtitution averſe from certain Vices (Sordidneſs, Cruelty, Impudence) and diſpos'd to the contrary Virtues (Generoſity, Clemency, Modeſty:) So amongſt the Romans ſome Virtues are obſerv'd to have been hereditary in certain Families in a continu'd ſucceſſion, and great Vices (Fury, Luxury, Libidinouſneſs) in others. (n) Ego mores naſci puto, & propriam cujuſque naturæ virtutem: I am of opinion, (ſaith Quintilian) that the Morals of all are born with them and the proper Virtues of every Nature. Plato in his Tenth of Laws ſpeaketh of a ſort of good-natur'd Atheiſts; (o) who think, that there are no Gods at all, yet are by nature of a juſt diſpoſition, hating bad Men and Injuſtice, they will do no ſuch practices themſelves, and thoſe Men that are not juſt they ſhun, and love them that are juſt. Although Inſtances of Ferity

and

Inter vepres roſæ naſcuntur, & inter feras nonnullæ miteſcunt. Am. Marcell. l. 16.

(n) Quintil. Declam. 268.

(o) Οἷς μὴ νομίζουσι θεοὺς εἶναι τὸ παράπαν, ἦθος φύσει προσγίνεται δίκαιον, μισοῦντές τε γίγνονται τοὺς κακοὺς, καὶ τῷ δυσχεραίνειν τὴν ἀδικίαν, οὔτε τὰς τοιαύτας πράξεις προσίενται πράττειν, τούς τε μὴ δικαίους τῶν ἀνθρώπων φεύγουσι, καὶ τοὺς δικαίους στέργουσι.

and Barbarity are no Rarities amongſt Men, yet a certain Goodneſs, Kindneſs, Benignity and Tenderneſs is part of our natural Conſtitution, and an effect of our bodily Temper (according to that of Ariſtotle, οἱ μαλακόσαρκοι εὐφυεῖς, the ſoft-skinn'd are good-natur'd,) which ſo far prevaileth in the World of Mankind, that it commonly beareth the Name of Humanity, Cruelty is called Immanity, and the Rod of Manſuetude, the Rod of Men, 2 Sam. 7. 14. As Bodily Temper, ſo the kindly Inſtincts which are in Animal Nature, are Principles of laudable Practices: Such as natural Affection towards Children and near Kindred, Commiſeration for the Afflicted, a natural Sympathy, Gratitude or Kindneſs for our Friends and Benefactors (remarkable in Dogs and Lions) common Sociableneſs and Friendlineſs, particular Friendſhip, a propenſion to pleaſe and oblige others, a natural Ingenuity and Generoſity, deſire of our own Welfare and Happineſs, care of our Reputation, averſation from Infamy, Miſery and Death.

A Second Principle of laudable Practices is an Humane and Mundane Societiveneſs, (which is a Goodneſs of Nature and in great degree an innate Inſtinct in Man;) for all the Humane-Societive and Humane-Moral Virtue and Duty commonly call'd the Ethical and Political, is compris'd in and may be inferr'd from this one Principle, Humane and Mundane Societiveneſs. For all Political Virtue and Duty towards Mankind in general, towards our Country, (p) all Civil-ſocietive Charity and Juſtice, the common Offices of Humanity and civil Neighbourhood, the œconomical Duties, Duties of near Relations and of Friendſhip belong to Man as Societive, as Humane-Societive, (q) and he is not Man without the Humane-Morals. In this great Law, great Virtue and Duty of Man's being Humane-Societive, Civil-Societive, Mundane-Societive (not Anti-Societive) is manifeſtly compris'd a Civil-Societive kind of (r) univerſal Benevolence to our ſelves and all Mankind, which affecteth and endeavoureth the good of the Publick (what is beneficial unto all) and is oppoſite to what is hurtful, (without which we are not of the Societive, but Anti-ſocietive Diſpoſition and Practice,) from which Benevolence univerſal (caritas humani gentris, (s) as Cicero ſpeaketh) all Mundane Political Virtue is deducible. As it is alſo from another great Principle manifeſtly compris'd in the Pagan Mundane Societiveneſs, namely, (t) The ſubordination and relation of all Men and leſſer Cluſters of Men to the great Body of Mankind as of parts to the whole, and of Citizens to the Mundane City. From theſe Principles both the Popular and Philoſophic Pagans practis'd civil Virtue, as the Bees do in ſome ſort, that have Political Order and Government amongſt them (Plutarch ſaith of Lycurgus, that he accuſtomed his Citizens, not to live ſeparately, but as the Bees, always to adhere to the Community, to move in conjunction about their Chieftain, and in a tranſport of Ambition and Glory to be almoſt unmindful of themſelves and to be wholly their Countrey's:) And this their practice of Political Virtue conſtituted and denominated a good and juſt Man of their Idea. (u) One Antenor that wrote the Cretian Hiſtories was nam'd Δέλτα, (amongſt the Cretians δέλτος ſignify'd good) διὰ τὸ ἀγαθὸς εἶναι καὶ φιλόπολις, becauſe he was good and a lover of his City. (w) To live well is to live ſocietively, and friendly, and temperately, and juſtly. The generality of the Pagans ſuppos'd, that the obſervance of their Political Laws conſtituted them juſt Men. (x) Hi ſe juſtos putant, ſi contra leges ſuas nihil faciant: Theſe think themſelves juſt, if they do nothing againſt their Laws.

A Third Principle of laudable Practices (ſecundum quid or in ſome reſpects ſuch) is an unholy kind of reſpect for Worth and Virtue, Honeſty and Duty, Juſtice and Equity, Reaſon and Ingenuity, Civility, Decency and Order; and a like reſpect for our ſelves, our own Perfection and Felicity. For as there is an Humane-Societive Virtue, which is on this ſide the Holy-Societive; ſo there is a regard for Worth and Virtue, Honeſty, Reaſon and Juſtice, which is on this ſide true Holineſs and Godlineſs. The Pagans practis'd the Virtue which they teach, (y) fugiendæ turpitudinis cauſâ, to eſchew that which is baſe and ſhameful, (z) τοῦ καλοῦ ἕνεκα, becauſe it was juſt and good, virtuous or honeſt, (Anti-baſe, Anti-criminal;) their maxim was Honeſtum per ſe expetendum, that which is virtuous, honeſt (or Anti-baſe) is ſelf-deſirable; and ſome of them have ſaid, (a) ἑορτὴ οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἐστὶν, ἢ τὸ τὰ δέοντα πράττειν, a Feaſt is nothing elſe, but the doing one's duty. Out of regard to common Decency and Order they practis'd the ſmall Morals (that may well be defin'd, as the Stoicks define Modeſty, (b) the Science of decent Motion) which are the oppoſites to Rudeneſs, Ruſticity, agreſtickneſs and impoliteneſs of Behaviour. And for their great Morals (although their practice of them and regard for them was but a common unholy kind of thing) their regard was ſo high and generous, that they profeſs'd a contempt of Life, (c) and to throw the Body into the Fire, when Reaſon, when Dignity, when Fidelity requireth it. (d) A virtuous Man will die for his Friends and Country, he will throw away his Money and Honours, and all the Goods that Men conteſt about, περιποιούμενος ἑαυτῷ τὸ καλὸν, acquiring or conſerving to himſelf that which is of claritude and pulchritude in matter of Life and Practice. (e) Miltiades taught the Athenians, to acknowledge no Lord but the Laws, and to be afraid of nothing more than that which is evil and unjuſt; and of Themiſtocles the Orator ſaith, (f) That willingly he would not ſet any thing (Riches, Safety or Children) πρότερον τοῦ καλοῦ καὶ τοῦ προσήκοντος, before Virtue and his Duty. (g) To be Virtuous is a great Accompliſhment, and every Virtue is an Accompliſhment. The Philoſophic Pagans therefore (at leaſt the better ſort of them) betook themſelves to the ſtudy and exerciſe of Virtue out of regard to their Perfection and Felicity, which they ſuppoſed to conſiſt in their Virtue, which in many Inſtances was (in ſome reſpect) very laudable and imitable practice. Such was the Platoniſts diſaffecting τὰ τῇδε, the things that are here (as Plotinus ſpeaketh) the not deſiring or uſing them any further than ὅσον ἀνάγκη, ſo far as there is need (as the ſame Philoſopher ſpeaketh,) and the Stoicks, (h) γαστὴρ κεκολασμένη, reſtrict and caſtigated Belly and narrow bounded Appetite. The Pagans (both Popular and Philoſophic) had alſo a regard to Self-approbation and the Tranquility of their own Mind, (i) There is no greater Theatre for Virtue than our own Mind approving and applauding. They had alſo a Self-reverence or regard to their own dignity of Perſon. ——Πάντων δὲ μάλιστ' αἰσχύνεο σαυτόν· Above all others revere thy ſelf.

A Fourth Principle of laudable Practices is Religion on this ſide Religion (on this ſide the State and Life of true Religion;) for it was from a Principle of Religion and out of regard to a Deity (k) that Heathen Men thought themſelves

---

Rom. 1. 31.

(p) Stob. Ecl. Eth p. 185, 186. Epict. diſſ. l. 2. c. 10, 17.

(q) Ibid. l. 4. c. 5. l. 1. c. 13.

(r) Simplic. in Epict. p. 141.

(s) De Fin. 5.

(t) Epict. Diſſ. l. 2. c. 5. M. Tyr. diſſ. 5.

(u) Phot. cod. 190. col. 485.

(w) Τὸ δὲ εὖ ζῆν, ἐστι κοινωνικῶς ζῆν, καὶ φιλικῶς καὶ σωφρόνως καὶ δικαίως. Plutarch. adv. Colot. p. 1108.

(x) Lact. l. 6. c. 9.

(y) Cic. Tuſc. 2.

(z) Ariſtot. Eth. Nicom. paſſim.

(o) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 8. p. 392.

(b) Stob. ſupr. p. 184.

(c) Sen. Ep. 14.

(d) Ariſtot. Eth. Nicom. l. 9. c. 8.

(c) Ariſtid. ap. Phot. cod. 246. col. 1282.

(f) Ibid. col. 1292.

(g) Stob. ſupr. p. 185, 187.

(h) Gat. in Ant. p. 110.

(i) Nullum theatrum virtuti conſcientiâ majus eſt. Cic. Tuſc. 2.

(k) M. Ant. l. 2. s. 17

themſelves oblig'd, to do nothing againſt their Conſciences, but to keep them intemerate; (l) that they look'd upon the Dictates of their practical Reaſon as Laws, (m) that they had Hopes and Fears, Peace and Perplexity, Joys and Anxieties from their Conſciences. (n) That they look'd upon themſelves as bound to Innocence (Un-injurioufneſs,) to Gratitude, to keep Faith, to take care of their Children and Parents, to have a ſpecial kindneſs for their near Kindred, to do the Offices of Humanity towards Mankind in general, and acts of Heroical Virtue for the good of Mankind, (o) that they thought Men criminal and puniſhable, not only for Facts of Wickedneſs (ſuch as Adultery, Theft, Homicide,) but for the Will of Evil-doing; (p) that they eſchew'd the Perpetration of Wickedneſs in ſecret, dreaded Perjury, rever'd an Oath; (q) that they accounted injuſtice towards Men and all vicious Errors in Life and Practice (which they called ἁμαρτήματα, Sins) nothing leſs than Impieties; (r) that the Philoſophic-pagan Saintiſts thought themſelves oblig'd, to practiſe all the Virtues which were in their Inſtitution, and to eſchew all the Vices; (s) that they propos'd to themſelves an imitation of the Deity, and ſuppos'd, that nothing could be well done ἄνευ τῆς ἐπὶ τὰ θεῖα συναναφορᾶς, without having reſpect to the things Divine, (t) and therefore (as ſome of themſelves ſay) they had an Eye to the Deity ἐν πάντι μικρῷ ϗ μεγάλῳ, in every thing great and little; (u) and laſtly, that they look'd upon themſelves as bound to an intire Subjection to the Coſmical Regent, and to all the Branches of active and paſſive Obedience to him real or imaginary. The Natural Man therefore in a conſiderable degree hath Notices of what is good and bad, virtuous and vicious, right and wrong, juſt and unjuſt (towards the Deity as well as towards Men,) of what is worthy and unworthy, that ſome things are very vile and diſhonourable, others are becoming, excellent and honourable; and although he is a nefarious Impietiſt, yet he hath his Virtues and Well-doings, (w) that are from Conſcience, not Vain-glory. The Heathen Man conjoineth Religion and Juſtice towards Men; as Nicias (of whom Thucydides ſaith, (x) he was the Man of all the Grecians of my time that leaſt deſerv'd to be brought to ſo great a degree of Miſery,) who falling into a great Calamity in Syracuſe, told his afflicted Army, I have worſhipp'd the Gods frequently according to the Law, and liv'd juſtly and unblameably towards Men. The Heathen Man will be juſt, becauſe (in his way) he is Religious. (y) Ὁ ἀδικῶν ἀσεβεῖ· He that is unjuſt, is impious. For the Nature of the Univerſe having made all Rationals ἕνεκεν ἀλλήλων, for one another, ſo as to benefit one another, as they are worthy, but in no wiſe to hurt; he that tranſgreſſeth the Will hereof, is manifeſtly impious towards the moſt ancient of the Gods.

XIII. It is one thing, to ſay, that a Man is an ungodly Heathen, and another thing to ſay, he is an ungodly virtuous Heathen: And it is one thing, to ſay of an Action of his, it is an ungodly Action, and another thing to ſay, it is an ungodly virtuous Action. When the Natural Man doth what is materially good, it may be done (for the main) from ſuch good Principles and for ſuch good ends, as are competible to the meer natural Man. An Heathen Man may venture into the fire, to pull his Child out, partly from a Principle of good Nature and natural inſtinct, partly for the Conſervation of Human Society, partly out of an unholy reſpect to Fortitude, and partly from Religion on this ſide Religion; and this Action of his in venturing into the fire for his Child, is of an oppoſite Nature both to the Sin of expoſing his Child, and alſo to the Sin of venturing into the fire (like the Indians) for Vain-glory. Both the Actions of this latter ſort are Sin ſimply ſo called: But to declaim againſt the former as ſuch, is the voice of a Barbarian, not of a Chriſtian. A Maxim of the Schools therefore needeth a limitation; (z) that the ſame Action cannot be both morally Good and Evil. For although the ſame Action cannot be a true and genuin kind of morally good Action, and a morally evil Action, yet one of the Heathen Man's kind of good Works is therefore Sin, becauſe it is oppoſite unto Holineſs, and it is ſo far Sin (and therefore morally Evil,) as to be oppoſite unto Holineſs (it is not a true and genuin kind of morally good Action, but oppoſite thereto, and is ſo far morally evil, as to be oppoſite thereto;) yet this hindreth it not from being a ſpurious and degenerate kind of morally good Action.

On the other hand; although it is of kind and for the main a ſort of Virtue and Well-doing, yet no carnal, wicked, unholy kind of Man (remaining ſuch) doth any thing, that is of kind and for the main Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, no holy kind of Duty or good Work (no Saint of God-kind of good Work:) But when he doth what is materially good out of his kind of virtuous Principles and for his kind of virtuous Ends, yet he is carnal, wicked and unholy-virtuous in thoſe his doings; and they are like himſelf of kind and for the main wicked, carnal and unholy kind of virtuous doings; or they are the carnal, wicked and unholy Man's kind of doings, not ſimply ſo; but they are the carnal, wicked, unholy Man's kind of virtuous doings. His kind of living is an atheous kind of living, his virtuous kind of living is the atheous-virtuous kind of living; the ſeveral parts of his virtuous kind of living are ſo many branches of his atheous virtuous kind of living, which is not that kind of Life the living unto God as his Servant, but is a kind of Life oppoſite thereto, an ungodly kind of virtuous living, of which his ſeveral virtuous doings are ſo many Parts and Branches. Let us ſuppoſe, that Hercules undertaketh immenſe Labours, to ſave Mankind from Monſters and Tyrants, out of no better Principle than good Nature, natural inſtinct of kindneſs for his Relations, regard to the conſervation of Human Society, an unholy regard to an unholy kind of Fortitude, and from ſomething of Religion on this ſide Religion (ſuppoſe an imitation of Jove called his Father,) this the Pagans accounted (a) Heroical Virtue. But Hercules's virtuous living was an atheous kind of virtuous living, every one of his Labours or virtuous Doings was an atheous kind of virtuous living (for it muſt be conſider'd as a part of the whole and of the ſame Nature with it,) it was devoid of true Piety and Holineſs, repugnant to the life of true Piety and Holineſs; privatively and oppoſitively of kind and for the main graceleſs, unholy, ungodly doing, yet ſo that it was of kind and for the main graceleſs, unholy, ungodly virtuous doing. The Character therefore of the ungodly Man's virtuous

tuous

(l) Sharrock. de Offic. p. 12.
(m) Ibid. p. 22.
(n) Ibid. c. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.
(o) Ibid. p. 92.
(p) Epict. diſſ. l. 1. c. 14.
(q) Stob. ſupr. p. 181
(r) Ibid.
(s) M. Ant. l. 3. S. 13. Gat. not. p. 360.
(t) Epict. diſſ. l. 12. c. 1. 9.
(u) Ibid. l. 1. c. 14.
(w) Virtutis fructum ſapiens in conſcientia ponit, minus perfectus in gloria: Unde Scipio perfectionem cupiens infundere nepoti auctor eſt, ut contentus conſcientiæ præmio gloriam non requirat. Macrob. in Som. Scip. l. 2. c. 10.
(x) L. 7.
(y) M. Ant. l. 9. S. 1.
(z) Durand. l. 2. diſtinct. 40. Qu. 3.
(a) Cic. Off. 3. de Fin. 3.

tuous or well-doings conſiſteth of two Parts: For every one of them being conſider'd as a part of his whole living appeareth to be privatively and oppoſitively unholy and ungodly, and ſo is complicated with Sin; and is ſo complicated with Sin, that it is a vitiated kind of Virtue, and is ſo vitiated, that it muſt be denominated a ſpurious illegitimate kind of Virtue and Well-doing. Such Virtue may in a certain ſenſe be called rather Vice than Virtue (as S. Auſtin calleth the Philoſophers Virtues,) which is not ſo to be underſtood, as if it was not Virtue (of any ſort:) But becauſe in reference to God it is not Virtue, but Sin and Vice, in ſuch ſenſe it may be called rather Vice than Virtue. And if thoſe virtuous doings of the Pagans are ſo vicious, which iſſu'd from Principles, that ought to be conjoin'd with and ſubordinated to true Piety and Holineſs (good Nature, natural inſtinct and Human ſocietiveneſs,) what foul Vicioſities are the greater part of their virtuous doings, which manifeſtly iſſued from, and were ſubordinated to, one of the fouleſt of Vices, the inordinate appetite of Vain-glory? For ſo the Orator Iſocrates (whom Dionyſ. Halicarnaſſ. preferreth before the Philoſophers as a Teacher of Morality,) who calleth himſelf a Philoſopher, and a great acquaintance and admirer of Socrates, profeſſedly maketh Vain-glory the Principle, End and Rule of all his Actions and of other Mens.

As for the Fact of the Egyptian Midwives (which is alledg'd, (b) to prove, that meer Heathens do good Deeds, that are not for the main and of kind ſinful) it is not difficult, to anſwer ſuch Allegations. For either the Egyptian Midwives were God's Religioniſts, or they were not. If they were God's Religioniſts (imperfectly or more perfectly) their Caſe is no Parallel for meer Heathens. If they were not, then their Fact was for the main and of kind ſinful, yet being of kind and for the main ſpurious and degenerate Virtue and Well-doing, it was rewarded with temporal Bleſſings. It is commonly ſaid, that God doth not ſo much regard what we do, as why we do it: But we ought rather to ſay, the thing that God regardeth is, of what kind our doings are. For unleſs we our ſelves be holy and godly Perſons (of kind and for the main ſuch,) unleſs our doings be of kind and for the main holy and godly doings, neither we nor they (otherwiſe than in a limited improper ſenſe) can be pleaſing and acceptable in God's Eyes. The Philoſophers were not holy and godly kind of Perſons, their Divine Virtue was not the holy and godly kind of Virtue, it was not a faithful ſerving and pleaſing God: (a) But) agreeably to Janſenius's Character of it) in reſpect of its chief end and buſineſs, it was a Self-ſerving, Self-pleaſing, Self-adorning, Self-excellence, Self-beatitude, ſeparate from and contrary to the life of true Piety and Holineſs. Yet it is not reaſonable, to ſuppoſe with ſome, (d) that the Source and Principle of all the Actions and good Works of unregenerate Mankind is the evil Principle of inordinate carnal Self-love (the Eſſence and Summary of all vital Wickedneſs;) for Human Nature is not ſo inordinately ſelfiſh; as to be devoid of good Nature, natural Inſtinct, Human Societiveneſs, an unholy reſpect for an unholy kind of Worth and Virtue, Religion on this ſide Religion. All which are Principles of Human Actions; and therefore a ſpurious and degenerate kind of Virtue and Well-doing is competible to unregenerate Mankind. But no other Virtue is competible to Men of that Character, than ſuch as is conſiſtent with the Reign of the inordinate carnal Self-love (which reigneth in all that are devoid of the Divine kind of Love, the Eſſence and Summary of all divine vital Virtue;) the atheouſneſs of their virtuous and well-doings is imputable to the inordinate carnal Self-love (which cauſeth the want of the love of God;) and becauſe they are devoid of the Love of God and are none of his Servants, therefore their virtuous and well-doings (from whatever Principles they iſſue,) are a certain Self-ſerving and Self-pleaſing, not a ſerving and pleaſing God. Their ſpecious Well-doings therefore ſymbolize with the reſt of the ſpecious things of this World, they are not what at firſt ſight they ſeem to be. (e) The Jews tell us, that R. Jehuda and R. Simeon (ben Jochai) ſitting together, the firſt of theſe Doctors fell to admiring and commending the Works of the Roman people. How fine are the works of theſe people (ſaid he,) they have made Market-places, they have made Bridges alſo and built Baths. But the other (R. Simeon) anſwer'd; whatever they have made, it is but for their own Commodity. They have made the Market-places for Trades-men to reſide in, the Baths for their own Voluptuouſneſs, the Bridges to receive Tribute from them.

b) Gr. de alent. T. Diſp. 1. .10. unct. 2.

(c) Le Blanc Theſ. p. 487.

(d) Ibid. p. 493.

(e) Buxtorf. de Abbreviat. p. 164, 165.

CHAP. VII.

Of the deadlineſs of our Heathen-popular State, and the principal parts of it. 1. The Firſt part of it is, we are deadly Criminals upon a firſt account. 2. We are deadly Criminals upon a ſecond account. 3. The Second Part of it is, we are look'd upon in Scripture, not as alive and living, but as thoſe that are dead. 4. The ſeveral Reaſons why we are look'd upon as Dead. 5. Proofs that our Heathen-popular State is the State of Death. 6. Of the Diſpute touching the Salvation of the Heathen as it is Matter of Fact. 7. Of the Diſpute touching their Salvation as it is Matter of Law and of Right. 8. Of a Third and Principal Part of the Deadlineſs of our Heathen-popular State, we are the Subjects of Satan's Kingdom, and are three ways ſubjected to his Domination. 9. We are ſubjected by way of Penal Subjection. 10. We are ſubjected by way of Criminal Subjection. 11. We are ſubjected by way of Criminal-religious Subjection.

OUR Fifth Conſectary is touching the Deadlineſs of our Heathen-popular State (which is not only the State of the Popular, but of the Philoſophic Pagans alſo, the Philoſophers being in a large ſenſe Heathen People;) for the Scripture looketh upon us in the Heathen-popular State (antecedently to the State and Life of true and ſaving Religion) as deadly Criminals, as thoſe that are not alive and living but dead, and as the Subjects of Satan's Kingdom; of which three principal parts the Deadlineſs of our Heathen-popular State conſiſteth. As deadly Criminals our Character conſiſteth of two Branches, which imply and infer one another. For (in our Heathen-popular State) we are aliens from the life of Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, deadly criminal Sinners in Life and Practice. And we are not the faithful Friends to God and Holineſs, nor faithful Enemies to Sin and Wickedneſs, which is deadly Criminality. If we were not the aliens from Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, and deadly criminal Sinners in Life and Practice, we ſhould be the faithful Friends to God and Holineſs, and faithful Enemies to Sin and Wickedneſs. And if we were the faithful Friends to God and Holineſs, and the faithful Enemies to Sin and Wickedneſs, we could not be the aliens from the life of Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, and deadly criminal Sinners in Life and Practice. So that one Branch of our Character manifeſtly implieth and inferreth the other. And indeed they are the ſame thing in different Expreſſions. For to be a faithful lover of Righteouſneſs and a faithful doer of Righteouſneſs is the ſame thing: And to be a faithful hater of Sin and Iniquity, and a faithful eſchewer of it is the ſame thing.

I. Mankind are divided into two oppoſite Parties and Families (that are contrary kind of Pſal. 1. 1. People, of a contrary Genius and Temper, con-and 7. 11. trarily affected and addicted, that walk in con-and 32. trary ways, are contrary kind of Livers, be-
6. and long to contrary Cities and Societies and are 116, 15. of a contrary Alliance and Kindred,) which Pro. 14. are known by the Names of the Righteous and
19. and the Wicked, the Juſt and the Unjuſt, the Godly
29. 27. and the Ungodly, the Pious and the Impious, the Marc. 6. Holy and the Unholy, the Good and the Evil, the
20. Luc. Saints of God and Sinners that are not Saints,
6. 45. Act. the Children of Light and the Children of this
24. 15. Rom. World, (the mundane kind and the holy kind)
8. 5. Luc. the Children of God and the Children of the Devil,
16. 18. (the Divine kind and the Satanical brood and
1 Tim. 1. race,) the Carnal and the Spiritual kind, thoſe
9. 2 Tim. that are of God and thoſe that are of the World
3. 12. and the wicked one, the Amical and the alien Ini-
Jude 15. mical kind; all which diſtinctive Names and 1 Joh. 3. deſcriptive Notices of two oppoſite Parties and 10, 12. and Families of Men denote their diſſonant Life
ch. 4. 4, 5. and Practice (internal and external,) for he that
Joh. 15. doeth Righteouſneſs, is Righteous, 1 Joh. 3. 7. The
14. Col. 1. one of theſe contradivided Parties are the Doers
21. of Righteouſneſs, not the Committers of Sin: The other are the Committers of Sin, not the doers of Righteouſneſs. 1 Joh. 3. 7, 8. The one are the Servants of Sin, not the Servants of God and of Righteouſneſs; The other are the Servants of God and of Righteouſneſs not the Servants of Sin. Rom. 6. 18, 20, 22. The one are the Workers of Iniquity, not the Practiſers of Righteouſneſs: The other are the Practiſers of Righteouſneſs, not the Workers of Iniquity. Pſal. 14. 4. and 15. 2. Of this Kind, Quality and Character are all that are in the State and Life of true and ſaving Religion; notwithſtanding that they are guilty of weakneſſes of Piety, Sins of Ignorance, Surprize and Precipitation, although they have intermixtures of blemiſh in their Soul and (perhaps) of blame in their Lives, yet as Righteouſneſs is Anti-wickedneſs, and ſtandeth oppos'd to it (as rectitude to obliquity,) ſo their Life is not the wicked, ſinning unrighteous kind of Life, but the contrary, the holy, ſinleſs and the righteous; their tenour, courſe and way of living is the way of Righteouſneſs. Not only in ſome particular Acts, but of kind and for the main of their Life and Living they are the Doers of Righteouſneſs, the religious Doers of 3 Joh. 11.
Good, not the irreligious Doers of Evil, living ac- 1 Pet. 4.
cording to God, and not according to the courſe Pſal. 119.
of this World, after the Fleſh and the old Man, 1, 3.
the wicked, carnal and worldly kind of Life. Gen. 6. 9.
They perpetrate no heinous Iniquity, no dead- Job 1. 8.
ly atrocious Sin, ſo far they are faultleſs, un- Pſal. 5.
criminal, perfect and undefiled. They keep no 10. Iſai.
Favourite-ſin, allow of no Sin, nor allow them- 1. Heb.
ſelves in any, nor can they diſpenſe with ſin- 11. 4. Tit.
ning againſt God; and therefore they are not 3. 12.
in any reſpect Children of Diſobedience, nefari- Matth. 5.
ous Rebel-kind of Sinners. They are alſo the 20.
Doers of Righteouſneſs both towards God and Man; and the Righteouſneſs which they Practiſe, is not the counterfeit and illegitimate; but the true and ſaving kind of Righteouſneſs, contradiſtinct to the Righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees. From which Account and Character of the Righteous is appeareth, that the Life and Practice of all Mankind antecedently to the State and Life of true and ſaving Religion is of a deadly black and criminal Character. For they are not of that kind of People, the Righteous, the Juſt, the Holy, the Godly: But 1 Pet. 3. of the oppoſite Kind, Party and Family, the 18.
wicked, unrighteous and unjuſt, the unholy and ungodly (not the Godly affected and addicted, but the Ungodly affected and addicted;) not the ſinleſs Livers (of kind and for the main ſuch,) but atrocious, flagitious and nefarious Sinners (though not all alike ſuch,) not the truly Religious and Dutiful towards God, that eſchew the Evil which true Religion forbiddeth, and do the Good which it commandeth, but the horribly undutiful and irreligious. In ſeveral degrees they are ſuch as the Old Teſtament characterizeth and complaineth of; that are eſtranged and are far from God, that forſake him and live in forgetfulneſs and contempt of God, and have not the fear of God before their Eyes, that are altogether become filthy and do abominable Works, that are far from Righteouſneſs and deſire not the knowledge of God's ways, preſumptuous Sinners that ſin with an high hand and make a mock of Sin, Sons of Belial that know not the Lord, lewd Debauchees, Ruffians, revelling voluptuous Senſualiſts, nefarious transbounders in matters of Uncleanneſs, venenate evil Speakers, Lyars, Slanderers, falſifiers of Truſt, Oaths and Contracts, unjuſt Dealers, the Children of Pride, Sons of Violence and of Blood, diſobedient to Parents, perpetrating the horrid Sins againſt God (Atheiſm Idolatry, Blaſphemy, Magick) the horrid Sins againſt Nature (Sodomy, Beaſtiality, Inceſt, unnatural Pollution) the horrid Sins againſt Human Society (Robbery, Rapine, Murder,) the heinous violaters of the Duties of both Tables, the Duties of Piety, Charity, Juſtice, Sobriety. They are not thoſe that walk with God in the Duties of Religious Society, but thoſe that walk contrary to him; not thoſe that have clean Hands and a pure Heart, but thoſe that are corrupt with deadly Vicioſities, and polluted with deadly Criminalities; they are not of the Family of the holy Well-doers, but are a Generation of Evil-doers towards God and Man.

In the New Teſtament all Mankind antece-dently to the State and Life of true and ſaving Rom. 5. 8, Religion are repreſented as Sinners (deadly Sin- 6. 1 Joh. ners,) the Ungodly (a wicked Brood and Race,) 1. 10.
both Jews and Gentiles all under Sin (as dead- Rom. 3. 9, ly criminal Livers are under it,) a guilty World 19, 23.
(ſubjected to Condemnation) before God; for all Gal. 3. 22.
have

have (deadly) ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God (of the Glory that he is, as to the having with him Glory,) all are concern'd to remove their Quarters and to enter into that State of Righteouſneſs, which God hath provided; for the carnal Jews are no better than Heathen Sinners, (f) and none doubt but the Heathen are overwhelmed with Sins and Impieties, that all the Greeks are guilty of Death; whereby the whole World is laid as guilty before God. So far both Jews and Greeks are from having any Reaſon, to glory before God, that they are Filii Mortis, Filii Iræ, Filii Vindictæ, Filii Pœnæ, Filii Gehennæ, juſtly the Heirs of Death, the Children of Wrath, the Sons of Perdition (as the Fathers ſpeak agreeably to the Scriptures) by their deadly Criminalities. (g) Before we came to the knowledge of God, we were unrighteous, evil and noxious, aliens from the Knowledge and Works of Righteouſneſs. (h) We were Carnal (of that kind,) we were Terrene. As we were Carnal, thoſe that are after the Fleſh, ſo we liv'd after
Eph. 2. 3. it, and brought forth the Fruits of it, fulfilling the deſires of the Fleſh and of the Mind. As we were thoſe that are of the World (of the mundane kind,) ſo we liv'd after the courſe of it, not living a Life of doing God Service, but of
Tit. 3. 3. ſerving Sin (the Fleſh) and divers Luſts, the Luſt of the Fleſh, the Luſt of the Eyes and the Pride of Life. Which live and reign in unregenerate Mankind, are Predominant and Regent (the Law of their Life,) and their Life is a ſerving, pleaſing and gratifying them. They are not of the Child of God-kind of Nature, but of an alien Nature and the inimical kind (and ini-
1 Joh. 3. 10, 12. 1 Joh. 2. 15. 1 Joh. 3. 13.--17. mical to God by doing Evil Works, Col. 1. 21.) not the Lovers of God, but the World's Lover's; not the Family of Divine Lovers of God and of their Brother, but graceleſs Miſcreants that have not the love of God in them, Man-haters, Man-ſlayers, that are in the deadly venenate, malign, malevolent and hurtful Nature (devoid of the Salutary) and have not eternal Life abiding in them. Their Morals con-Apoc. 22. 15. Matth. 7. 6. and 3. 7. and 23. 33. ſtitute many of them Dogs, Swine, Serpents, Vipers, (an inimical, peſtilent and poiſonous Generation,) and becauſe they are of the Evil kind, they are neceſſarily the Children of the evil One, and his reſembling Off-ſpring. As they have not the holy ſpiritual Life in them, ſo they live not that kind of Life in the Exerciſe of Divine Affections and the Practice of the Duties of Piety, ſubduing ſenſitive Nature and dying unto Sin: But Sin liveth in them, and they live in Sin, ſo as not to live the holy Life, but a ſenſual Fleſh-pleaſing kind of Life, in the exerciſe of vile Affections, in the Practice of that which is carnality and wickedneſs of Nature, Mind and Life, ſowing to the Fleſh (its Intereſts) and not to the Spirit (the ſpiritual Intereſt,) making a worldly happy Eſtate, or a carnal ſelfiſh intereſt of Credit, Proſperity, or ſenſual Delight, their chief Good, their chief End and Buſineſs, and preferring it before the Favour of God, the Intereſt of his Service and Kingdom and their everlaſting Happineſs. Themſelves, their Virtue and Religion (for all Men pretend to Virtue, and almoſt all to Religion) have their Propriety and Character from the three grand Enemies of Chriſtianity and Godlineſs (the Devil, the Fleſh and the World;) for they are the wicked, carnal and worldly kind of Men (the wicked, carnal and worldly kind of Livers,) the wicked, carnal and worldly kind of virtuous Men, the wicked, carnal and worldly kind of Religioniſts. Their Righteouſneſs is of kind illegitimate, and continueth them in their Wickedneſs, Carnality and mundane Alliance.

II. Mankind antecedently to the State and Life of true and ſaving Religion are deadly Criminals alſo upon account of a ſecond Branch of their Character; for (whether they be open Aliens and Enemies or Pretenders to God and Holineſs) they are not the faithful Friends of God and Holineſs, nor the faithful Enemies of Sin and Wickedneſs. In all Relations of Friendſhip Unfaithfulneſs is the ſummary of all Vice and Crime, and Faithfulneſs is the ſummary of all Virtue and Duty; for Unfaithfulneſs is faileur of Duty in Mind, Will and Meaning, and therefore it is ſuch faileur of Duty, wherein there is Iniquity, vile Improbity and Criminality of Mind, Will and Meaning: Faithfulneſs is Non-faileur of Duty in Mind, Will and Meaning; it conſiſteth in being right and without iniquity, faultleſs and unblameable without Vice or Crime (without any vile Improbity or Criminality) as to Mind, Will and Meaning. If a Subject or a Souldier be not ſo good and virtuous, and every way accompliſh'd as he ought to be, yet if he be without Iniquity as to Mind, Will and Meaning, he is upright in Heart, loyal, faithful, and therefore not condemnably Criminal, but highly laudable. So if a Wife or Servant be not every way ſo well qualified as they ought to be, if they come not up to the ridge of their Rule and Meaſure of Duty, ſo as to be peccant and deficient in nothing, yet if they be not guilty of groſs faileur of Duty in Mind, Will and Meaning, they are ſo far from being villainous, wicked, nefarious and condemnably Criminal, that they are highly commendable for their unſtain'd Integrity and Faithfulneſs.
So in Religion, they may well be called the Upright, that is, the Right and without Iniquity (without Vice and Crime,) the blameleſs, the perfect and unexceptionable (for the Upright and Perfect are known to be ſynonymous Expreſſions in Scripture, as a perfect Weight and Meaſure and an upright Weight and Meaſure are both one,) Gen. 6. 6. Job 1. 8. Luc. 1. 6. Dan. 6. 4. Deut. 25. 15.
who are ſo far from being condemnably Criminal in God's account, that they are highly laudable upon the account of their Faithfulneſs. They are without Guile and therefore the Righteous, the Uncriminal and Uncondemnable (in the Judgment of Equity;) God's People having no Guile, have no Guilt, (no ſuch Guilt as maketh a condemnable Criminal,) if no Guile be imputable to them, no Guilt is imputable, they are either abſolutely ſinleſs or innocuous (as in the future State,) or at leaſt unchargeable with Apoc. 14. 5. Rom. 4. 8. Pſal. 32. 2. Nehem. 9. 8.
Wickedneſs and Villainy. Bleſſed is the Man, unto whom the Lord imputeth no Iniquity, and in whoſe Spirit there is no Guile. Of this truly noble Character is every faithful Adherent to God and Righteouſneſs, ſuch as Abraham was, whoſe Heart was faithful before God. He forſaketh Iniquity in Will and Affection univerſally and unreſervedly, ſo that he is not dead in Sin, nor in the State of reigning Sin, nor of the wicked ſinning kind and party, nor a Doer of Iniquity, but of Righteouſneſs, and his courſe of Life is

(f) Nulli enim dubium eſt, quia pagani obruti ſunt delictis & impietatibus, ac per hoc totus mundus Deo proſtratus eſt.--- ——— dubium non eſt omnes Græcos reos eſſe mortis. S. Ambroſ. com. in Rom. 3. 19.

(g) Ante cognitionem Dei injuſti, mali & nocentes eramus, à juſticiæ notione atque operibus alieni. Lactant. l. 4. c. 26.

(h) Eramus carnales, eramus terreni. S. Ambroſ. in Luc. c. 17.

is the holy and ſinleſs. Wittingly and willingly he doth no Iniquity (therefore is no Villain, no Traitor,) practiſeth no heinous downright ſinning, no nefarious deadly ſinning. His Mind and Will (the bent of the Man) is not partially, mutilately and dividedly (which is a traiterous withholding our Love and Affection,) but fully and intirely for God and Righteouſneſs and againſt Sin and Wickedneſs. God and Holineſs have (in Truth and Honeſty) his utmoſt Eſteem and Affection, they are no underling Goods with him, Sin and Wickedneſs is no underling Evil; nothing is ſo dear to him, but he will part with it for God and Holineſs; he ſerveth him with his Beſt and his All (and will live the holy Life notwithſtanding all its difficulties and incumbrances,) he is for God and Holineſs and againſt Sin and Wickedneſs at any rate, elſe he could not be dutifully, loyally and uprightly affected towards them, but his Heart would be alien'd from God and Piety. And as a Maſter or a Sovereign cannot repute ſuch Men that ought to be his Subjects and Servants, Upright, Honeſt, Sincere and Faithful, that are not dutifully affected and diſpoſed towards him and his Service: So God cannot repute any Man Upright in Heart, Honeſt, Sincere and Faithful, that is not dutifully, uprightly, ſincerely and faithfully affected and diſpoſed towards him and his Service. We ought to conſider therefore, who they are, that may be denominated ſimply and without addition the faithful Friends of God and Holineſs, and the faithful Enemies of Sin and Wickedneſs; for theſe can be no deadly Criminals: But all others are ſuch, that are devoid of this intire Integrity and Faithfulneſs (which alone is conſtitutive of the truly Righteous) notwithſtanding a partial, limited or diminutive Integrity and Faithfulneſs which they have. They are ſo far from being dutifully and rightly affected, that they are the diſaffected; ſo far from being faithful Friends to God and Righteouſneſs, that they are Enemies (uſually deadly Enemies, and ſuch as may be called faithful Enemies,) their Mind, Will and Meaning is inexcuſably amiſs, and there is vile improbity and iniquity, vicioſity and criminality in it, becauſe they are not (ſimply and without addition) the faithful Friends of God and Righteouſneſs, and the faithful Enemies of Sin and Wickedneſs.

Many are loyal and faithful to a ſecular Maſter or Sovereign, that are not God's Fideles. Robbers and Drunkards (ſome of them) will be faithful to thoſe of their own Gang. Many Men of Civil-Societive Virtue only, will be faithful in Matters of ordinary Juſtice, and in ſome particular Affair or Imploy, faithful Meſſengers, Servants, Soldiers. If we ſuppoſe Abimelech an evil Man (as ſome will have him,) yet as to the buſineſs of Abraham's Wife, there was no iniquity, no pravity in his Mind, Will or Meaning, he meant no wrong, nor wrong to Abraham, whoſe Wife ſhe was (to him altogether unknown,) and therefore in that particular Affair he was upright, right and without Iniquity. (i) We Modern Chriſtians may hate Chriſt as much as we do the Memory of ſuch Jews as crucified him; albeit we be ready, if we were called to formal Trial, rather to die, than openly deny him or his Goſpel.

There is a Faithfulneſs in Judaiſm as well as in Chriſtianity; for when any one will change his Religion, and become a Proſelyte of Juſtice, the Jews require, (k) that he do it not for the Vanity of the World (any ſecular Emolument,) but out of Love ומלב שלם and from the whole Heart. Such a Faithfulneſs and Integrity in adhering to their God in oppoſition to Idols and falſe Gods was requir'd of the Jews in the ancient times of their Commonwealth as the condition of their temporal Bleſſings. A Faithfulneſs to their Inſtitution as it was carnal Judaiſm, thoſe Jews had, who thought, they did God good Service in killing Chriſtians, Joh. 16. 2. And thus the Apoſtle when he outragiouſly perſecuted the Chriſtians, was faithful to his Inſtitution, he never wilfully violated the Rules of Well-doing according to carnal Judaiſm, and therefore had the carnal Judaical Man's good Conſcience, as he profeſſeth, Act. 26. 9. I have liv'd in all good Conſcience before God until this day.

There is a Faithfulneſs in Paganiſm as well as in Judaiſm. For Numa conſecrated a Temple to Faithfulneſs. Regulus is a known Inſtance of Faithfulneſs. (l) Pyrrhus ſaid of Fabritius, that it was harder to turn him out of the way of Juſtice, than the Sun out of his courſe. (m) Papinianus the Lawyer was ſo far faithful to Righteouſneſs; being commanded to defend the wicked fact of the Emperor Caracalla, who had barbarouſly kill'd his Brother Geta, he choſe rather to die than to do it. (n) In China there is a Temple of Chaſtity, erected in Commemoration of five Virgins, who being taken by Thieves, laid violent hands upon themſelves, and took away their own lives, rather than they would ſuffer themſelves to be defiled. Several of the Heathen were ſo far faithful and uprightly diſpoſed, that in ſeveral particular Actions nothing could prevail with them (not Shame, Torment, Exile, Death) to violate the Dictates of their Minds; and ſeveral of them were (o) falſorum deorum non fallaces cultores, true Worſhippers of falſe Gods; they were faithful to their Inſtitution of Heatheniſm, and theſe may be ſaid, to have the Heathen Man's good Conſcience.

Yet in the unſound Profeſſion of Chriſtianity in carnal Judaiſm and in Heatheniſm there are no ſuch Perſons as the Upright, the Sincere and Faithful; and conſequently there is no ſuch thing as the Uprightneſs of the Upright, the Sincerity of the Sincere, the Faithfulneſs of the Faithful. For in theſe Regions all are the wicked and ungodly; whereas if any of them were the Upright and the Faithful, theſe muſt neceſſarily be the Righteous (the Doers of Righteouſneſs and not the Doers of Sin and Iniquity) and in the State of juſtify'd Perſons. Wherefore the Natural and Heathen Man's Uprightneſs, Sincerity and Faithfulneſs is of the ſame Nature and Character with the reſt of his Virtue, it is of a ſpurious and degenerate kind (as being on this ſide Holineſs and Godlineſs,) not the intire Integrity, not the right kind of Uprightneſs, not the holy and godly kind of Sincerity (2 Cor. 1. 12.) but a faithleſs kind of Faithfulneſs. And this is that which Divines mean, when they call it (p) a natural and moral Integrity. Which ſort of Integrity is competible to Rebel-Sinners, to ſuch as are revolted from God and his Kingdom, and from true Righteouſneſs and Holineſs; in whom it is neceſſarily complicated with the moſt heinous diſloyalty and diſhoneſty, villainy and unfaithfulneſs; for none can be excuſ'd from theſe Criminalities that are not (as his Liege-Subjects and Servants) loyally affected unto God and unſinning Righteouſneſs towards him. The ignorance of the Jews and Gentiles did not excuſe

---

Gen. 20.6.

(i) Dr. Jackſon of Juſtif. Faith. c. 14.

(k) Cartwright Mellif. Hebr. c. 8.

(l) Gat. in Ant. p. 410.

(m) Spartian. in Caracalla.

(n) Hoffman. Umbr. in luc. p. 134.

(o) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 1. c. 24.

(p) Bp. Sanderſon Ser. on Gen. 20.6.

cuſe them from being deadly Criminals in thoſe their horrendous Sins which they accounted Well-doings. They might have known better, and would have known better, if they had been ſo far as they might have been the faithful Friends of God and Righteouſneſs, and the faithful Enemies of Sin and Wickedneſs. With this limitation the Philoſopher's Rule ought to be propos'd, which otherwiſe is not univerſally a ſafe Rule of Practiſe. (q) That which appeareth to thee (as a faithful adherent to God and Righteouſneſs and a faithful Enemy to Sin and Wickedneſs) to be the beſt, let that be to thee a Law inviolable.

This diſcourſe touching the Upright and the Faithful we may not diſmiſs without obſerving, that ſome who are not properly and formally ſuch, are aptitudinally and in an initial degree ſuch; and that the Faithful and Upright properly ſuch are Religioniſts of ſeveral degrees. Thoſe who are but aptitudinally (and in ſuch an initial Degree) the Faithful and the Upright, are thoſe that mean well towards God and Righteouſneſs, with reſpect to whom our Propoſition muſt be underſtood with ſome abatement of Senſe, for although they muſt be look'd upon as out of the State and Life of true and ſaving Religion and as deadly Criminals, yet not without an abatement of Senſe. Theſe are they that are denominated Chriſts Sheep, Joh. 10. 4, 10. thoſe that are of the Truth, Joh. 18. 37. and Luk. 8. 15. thoſe that have an honeſt and good Heart; which is a degree of that Integrity, which conſtituteth the faithful and upright in Heart ſimply ſo called. The Phraſe denoteth an honeſt and good Heart in reſpect of the word of true and ſaving Religion and the receiving thereof (an honeſt and good Heart ſo far) by receiving which honeſtly, ſincerely and faithfully (that is, without Vice or Crime as to Mind, Will and Meaning) the Receiver becometh one of the faithful and upright in Heart in a plenary Senſe, whereas at the firſt he is only ſo initially, aptitudinally and by way of Preparatory Diſpoſition. The Faithful and Upright in a plenary Senſe are Religioniſts of ſeveral degrees. For many holy and good Men under the Moſaical Oeconomy were the faithful Lovers of God and of Righteouſneſs, yet were very imperfect Religioniſts agreeably to that Oeconomy. Our Saviours Diſciples while he was on Earth, that betray a great deal of ignorance, weakneſs and many imperfections at every turn, were the faithful and ſincere Lovers of God and of Righteouſneſs, but ſo as to be Religioniſts of a very mean Rank. And this ſeemeth to have been the Caſe of Nathaniel alſo, who was of the true Religion, and was ſuch a true and faithful Religioniſt, that he is celebrated as an Iſraelite indeed, that was without guile, Joh. 1. 47. And as the faithful Lovers of God and of Righteouſneſs are Religioniſts in ſeveral degrees: So they that are in the State and Life of true and ſaving Religion, are ſo in ſeveral degrees. For they ought not to be look'd upon as totally out of it, that are paſſing into it, or that are imperfectly in it. And it ſeemeth reaſonable, to ſuppoſe touching Cornelius a Gentile and a Proſelyte (and ſuch more,) that God from the beginning of the World having made Proviſion in Chriſt, that his Religioniſts and Chriſts Religioniſts ſhould be in the State of Remiſſion of Sins, the State of Righteouſneſs and Salvation, Cornelius was imperfectly in this Divine Condition before his Converſion to Chriſtianity: But after the Goſpel-ſettlement was made, his Converſion to Chriſtianity was neceſſary, both for the continuance of what he had, and the completion of what he wanted.

III. The Scripture looketh upon Mankind (antecedently to the State and Life of true and ſaving Religion) not as alive and living, but as dead or in the State of the Dead, Matth. 8. 22. Luc. 2. 34. Rom. 6. 17. Eph. 2. 1, 5. and 5. 14. Col. 2. 13. 1 Tim. 5. 6. 1 Pet. 4. 6. Joh. 5. 24. 1 Joh. 3. 14. Jude 12. Apoc. 3. 1. So Clemens hath obſerv'd, that in the Barbaric (Oriental) Philoſophy they call thoſe Men dead, (r) that are fallen from the Dogmata (are become aliens from the diſcipline of Truth and Virtue, whence the Soul hath her Life) and have ſubjected their Mind to the Animal Paſſions. As when any one was ejected out of the Pythagoreans Society, they ſet up a κενοτάφιον, empty Coffin in his place, to ſignifie, that he ought to be look'd upon as dead. The Platoniſts ſometimes ſay (agreeably to their Theoretic Virtue,) that the death of a rational Subſtance is (s) to be devoid of God and of Mind. And ſometimes they ſay, that the Death of the Soul, ſo far as ſhe can die, is (t) to be immers'd in the matter and replete with it. Philo giveth a better account of the Death of the Soul, that it is (u) the loſs or deſtruction of Virtue and the Aſſumption of Vice. The Death of the Soul is to live with vicioſity. Only the pious are accounted the living, the reſt are dead. The bad Man living the life in vicioſity, is dead to the happy life. But this exceſſive Allegoriſt proceedeth further to ſay, (w) the true Hell is the life of one that is improbous and miſerable, pernicious, peſtilent and ſubject to all Execrations. The Perſians and Arabians of the Muhammedan Religion (amongſt many other good Sayings) have ſome touching the dead Eſtate of the improbous. (x) The impious is dead, although he liveth, but the pious liveth, although he be in the Manſions of the Dead. The Hebrews uſe this Symbolic way of expreſſing the Condition of the improbous. (y) The improbous are dead, whilſt they live. Of the Gentiles they ſay, (z) עמי דארצות אינן חיים the People of the Earth are not to be reckon'd with the living. Our Saviour ſpeaketh according to their Notion of things, and imitateth their mode of Expreſſion, when he ſaith Matth. 8. 22. Let the dead bury their dead. For his meaning is; leave it to them, to buſie themſelves about the dead bodily Carcaſe or cadaverous kind of things (res mortales,) who are dead in the Body. (Such are they that live in it in ſuch a Senſe as Celſus chargeth the Chriſtians, that they have lame and maimed Souls, (a) living in the Body which is the cadaverous part.) And as the Jews will not allow the Gentiles, to be reckon'd amongſt the living: So the Apoſtle looketh upon the World of Heathen Sinners as in the State of the Dead. 1 Pet. 4. 6. The Goſpel was preach'd to them that are

(q) Τὸ βέλτιστον φαινόμενον νόμος ἔστω ἀπαράβατος. Epict. Ench. c. 75.

(r) Τοὺς ἐκπεσόντας τῶν δογμάτων καὶ καθυποτάξαντας τὸν νοῦν τοῖς πάθεσι τοῖς ψυχικοῖς. Grot. Not. in Matth 8. 22.

(s) Ἀθεΐα καὶ ἄνοια. Hierocl. in aur. Car. p. 14.

(t) Ἐν ὕλῃ καταδῦναι καὶ πλησθῆναι αὐτῆς. Plotin. En. 1. l. 8. c. 13.

(u) Ἀρετῆς μὲν φθορά ἐστι, κακίας δὲ ἀνάληψις. Ὁ μετὰ κακίας ἐστὶ βίος. Ὁ δὲ φαῦλος ζῶν τὸν ἐν κακίᾳ βίον τέθνηκε τὸν εὐδαίμονα. Νομ. ἀλληγ. 1. p. 40. Περὶ φυγάδ. p. 311. 317. τὸ χεῖρ. τῷ κρεῖτ. ἐπιτίθ. p. 111. Ed Gr. Pariſ.

(w) Ὁ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ᾅδης, ὁ τοῦ μοχθηροῦ βίος ἐστὶν, ὁ ἀλάστωρ καὶ παλαμναῖος καὶ πάσαις ἀραῖς ἔνοχος. Περὶ τῆς εἰς τὰ προπαιδ. συνοδ. p. 293.

(x) Hotting. Hiſt. or. l. 2. c. 5. p. 315. ed. 1.

(y) Grot. ſupr.

(z) Lightfoot Hor. in Luc. 8. 60.

(a) Τῷ σώματι ζῶντες, τουτέστι τῷ νεκρῷ. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 363, 367.

are dead, that they might be judged according to Men in the Fleſh (ſuffer Death, the death of Mortification, to which they are ſentenc'd by the Goſpel, that they who are dead in their Carnality, by the death of it might live Spiritually.) And this plain Notion of the Dead ſufficiently explaineth a very obſcure Phraſe, which this Apoſtle uſeth ſpeaking of Chriſt. 1 Pet. 3. 18, 19, 20. Being put to death in the Fleſh, but quicken'd by the Spirit. By which alſo he went and preach'd to the Spirits in Priſon. Which ſometime were diſobedient, when once the Long-ſuffering of God waited in the days of Noah.

The Apoſtle ſaith that Chriſt being rais'd, from the dead went and preach'd to the dead; this is the elegancy of his Expreſſion and this is the Senſe of his Phraſe; for he uſeth this Phraſe the Spirits in Priſon, as it ſignifieth thoſe that are in the State of the Dead. All Religious Mankind look upon them that are dead, if they be dead in a bad condition (the wicked when they are dead) as the Spirits in Priſon, Matth. 18. 30. And the Phraſe ſo manifeſtly ſignifieth thoſe that are in the State of the Dead, (b) that many of the Ancients, thoſe of the Church of Rome and ſome reformed Divines are of Opinion, that this is the Apoſtle's meaning, that Chriſt after his Death went in his Soul and preach'd to them, that were literally in the State of the Dead in the other World. Now, if inſtead of this Phraſe the Spirits in Priſon, the Apoſtle had made uſe of this Expreſſion, thoſe that are in the State of the Dead, there had been no difficulty in his Words, every Interpreter would have ſaid, thoſe who are in the State of the Dead, is a Phraſe expreſſive of the ſadly degenerate condition of Mankind, who are dead in a myſtical and moral Senſe (ψυχῆς ἐντυμβευομένης κακίαις ἁπάσαις, the Soul being Dead and buried in all Vicioſities, as Philo ſpeaketh,) that this Generation, thoſe that are in the State of the Dead, was ſometime diſobedient to the preaching of Noah (ſadly degenerate Mankind were then incredulous and now are ſo,) and that Chriſt by the Spirit after his Reſurrection going preach'd to them, not in his own Perſon, but by his Apoſtles, in which Senſe S. Paul ſaith, he came and preach'd, Eph. 2. 17. If there had been no difficulty in the Apoſtle's words, ſuppoſing that he had made uſe of this Phraſe, thoſe that are in the State of the Dead, the difficulty in them muſt not be thought great, although the Apoſtle uſeth this Phraſe the Spirits in Priſon (which is of more Affinity with the Spirit that he was ſpeaking of than the other,) becauſe the Spirits in Priſon and thoſe that are in the State of the Dead (meaning the badly dead or thoſe that are dead in a bad condition) are plainly ſynonymous Expreſſions. And becauſe they are ſynonymous Expreſſions, therefore the one may be put for the other (as the Writers of the New Teſtament in citing places of the Old often ſubſtitute one equipollent Expreſſion for another;) becauſe they are Synonymous Expreſſions, therefore they may be us'd in the ſame latitude and extent of ſignification, even though the one of them of it ſelf be not of ſo large and various a ſignification as the other (for ſo the Hebrew Grammarians obſerve, (c) that when a Greek word is ſynonymous to an Hebrew, the Writers of the New Teſtament uſe it in the ſame latitude and variety of ſignification with the Hebrew word, although of it ſelf it was not of ſo large and various a ſignification;) becauſe they are ſynonymous Expreſſions, therefore (as in a Metalepſis) the Spirits in Priſon may be put for thoſe that are in the State of the Dead; and thoſe that are in the State of the Dead may ſignifie thoſe that are myſtically and morally ſo; becauſe they are ſynonymous Expreſſions, therefore as any would interpret the one, ſo they ought to interpret the other. Now, if the Apoſtle had ſaid, that by the Spirit Chriſt preach'd to thoſe that are in the State of the Dead, every one would have ſaid, the Apoſtle is his own Interpreter, he meaneth nothing but what himſelf ſaith in the compaſs of a few Verſes (1 Pet. 4. 6.) that the Goſpel was preach'd to the dead; therefore when the Apoſtle ſaith, that by the Spirit Chriſt preached to the Spirits in Priſon, every one ought to interpret his meaning, by what himſelf ſaith a few Verſes after, that the Goſpel was preach'd τοῖς νεκροῖς, to them that are in the State of the Dead. Thoſe that are in the State of the Dead (badly dead) are the Spirits in Priſon; therefore the Spirits in Priſon are thoſe that are in the State of the Dead. The Spirits in Priſon in a literal meaning are the Dead in a literal meaning, the Spirits in Priſon in a Myſtical meaning are the Dead in a Myſtical meaning. The Phraſe ſignifieth thoſe that are in the State of the Dead, or we may ſay the Souls of the dead (which is a ſynonymous Expreſſion.) Dead Sinners in reſpect of their Souls are the Souls of the Dead (οἱ ἄθλιοι τὰς ψυχὰς τεθνήκασιν, (d) the wicked are dead in their Souls, ſaith Philo,) therefore dead Sinners in reſpect of their Souls are the Spirits in Priſon, as that Phraſe ſignifieth the Souls of the Dead. What Ratiocination can be more certain? What Expoſition of Scripture more plain and intelligible?

IV. Antecedently to the State and Life of true and ſaving Religion Mankind muſt be look'd upon, not as alive and living, but as dead; for in ſeveral reſpects they are dead, they ſymbolize with and reſemble the dead, and they are in death, the comprehenſion of thoſe Evils that are death to the Soul, which is the State of death.

(1.) In ſeveral reſpects they are alive and living; for they live φυσικῶς, phyſically (as other Animals are alive,) they are alive in reſpect of the Human and Human-ſocietive Life, they are alive unto Sin, and to their worldly and fleſhly Intereſts and concerns, they are not without their happy Life, as Chriſtians are (upon which account the Apoſtle ſaith, they are dead, Col. 3. 3.) and in reſpect of their own Conceit they are alive: But in reſpect of God and the Life of living to him they are dead; as the Prodigal Son that was quite gone away from his Father (as the dead are gone into another Region,) he had none of his Society, or Service, no Duty from him, or Comfort in him, but as to his Father he was dead. So Chriſtians are dead to Sin, becauſe they are wholly parted from it (never more to have any thing to do with it,) and in like Senſe they are dead from the rudiments of the World. So the Pythagorean ſaid to his Fellow, if thou do'ſt not repent, mihi mortuus es, thou art dead to me. The Prodigal Son was alſo dead to his Father, becauſe in all appearance he was irrecoverably gone, and therefore was given over for loſt: So the Primitive Chriſtians put on the Habit of Mourners, wail'd over thoſe whom they caſt out of the Church (e) as loſt and dead unto God. As ungodly Sinners are departed from God, and therefore are dead to him;

(b) Petav. T. 4. Par. 2. l. 13. c. 18. Bp. Uſher Anſwer to the Jeſ Chall. of Limb. Patr. Dr. Prideaux Lect. 8. p. 278.

(c) Sixt. Amama par.en. Gram. Ebr. præmiſſ. in fine.

(d) V. Jo. Pric. Annot. in Luc. 15. 24. 1 Tim. 5. 6. Joh. Druſi Adag. cl. l. 3. S. 42.

Luk. 15. 24.

Rom. 6. 2. Col. 2. 20.

2 Cor. 12. 21.

(e) Ὡς ἀπολωλότας κα τεθνηκότας τῷ Θεῷ. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 3. 142.

him; ſo God is departed from them, upon which account alſo they are dead, as the Body is dead when the Soul is departed; (f) animæ mortuæ, hoc eſt à Deo deſertæ, Souls forſaken and devoid of God are dead. The Impious are dead in reſpect of the proper Life of the Soul, (which is ſuperiour to that Life or Vitality wherewith ſhe animateth the Body) they live the Life of the Body, but are dead in their diviner part. (g) The Life of the Impious in their Bodies is not that of Souls, but the Life of their Bodies, which even dead Souls can confer upon them. They are therefore dead in reſpect of the true and only valuable Life, which is the Souls proper Excellency and Felicity (and the Life of living unto God) as a Father ſaith of the Pagan Hero's, (h) qui nec cùm viverent, verè vixerunt; and another thus deſcribeth the Impious, (i) οἱ τ̃ ὄντως ȣ̓́σης ἀμέτοχοι ζωῆς, thoſe that partake not of Life truly ſuch. So the Platoniſts ſay touching Humane Souls, (k) They die ſometimes to the divine felicitative Life by fleeing from God. In reſpect of the main (Spirituals and Eternals) the Impious are not alive but dead: She that liveth in Pleaſure, is dead while ſhe liveth; for ſuch kind of living is to be dead in the main.

(2.) Ungodly Sinners ſymbolize with and (in many reſpects) reſemble the Dead; (l) as the People of the Town Caunus (an unhealthful place in Caria) look'd pallid and reſembled the Dead, and therefore Stratonicus ſaid, that in that place οἱ νεκροὶ περιπατȣ̃σι, dead Men walk. As the Dead are thoſe that have loſt the Light and are in the State and Region of Darkneſs; ſo the Ungodly are without the Light, which true and ſaving Wiſdom is, and are in the Heathen Atheous kind of Darkneſs, (m) in tenebris ac morte verſantur, they are in Darkneſs the Region of Death. Ecclus. 22. 11. Weep for the Dead, for he hath loſt the Light; and weep for the Fool, for he wanteth Underſtanding. They have a quick and lively Senſe of their Reputation and Secular Intereſts, but have not that vital Nature in them, which would make them perceptive (affectively and vitally perceptive) of the true Goods and Evils, the matters of the Kingdom of God and their Soul-Intereſts, and therefore are as thoſe that are dead, ſtupidly Senceleſs and Imperceptive, (n) ἀναισθήτως διάκεινται, they are in a ſtate of Inſenſibleneſs (which is an heavier thing than if a Graveſtone lay upon them) as the Body is when the Soul is departed. (o) A Man drowned in Ignorance is more ſenſeleſs than the Stones. As the Dead are wholly bereft of their Sences, of Seeing, Hearing, Smelling, Taſting, Feeling, and they that are nigh unto death, are in great degree depriv'd of them (as old Barzillai was, 2 Sam. 19. 35.) ſo unholy Mankind are devoid of that holy vital Senſation and Perception, which anſwereth to the Bodily Sences (that are called (p) by Simplicius, ζωαὶ, Lives) they ſee not, nor hear, nor feel, nor ſmell, as holy Souls do, they ſavour not the things that are of God, they are dry and ſapleſs and diſpirited like a Caput mortuum, a meer piece of dull Earth, that hath loſt its Oyl and Salt and all its rich Principles. All holy vital Warmth and Fervour, Livelineſs and Vigour is extinct in them, they are cold as the Dead, (Key-cold, dead as a Door-nail;) and if they are reputed dead, that are torpid, remiſs and negligent in matters of Piety, and have frigidum in religione pectus (Apoc. 3. 1.) how much more muſt they be reputed dead, that are wholly without any holy vital Motion or Operation, and are totally inactive in the Buſineſs of Piety? (q) to be wholly inactive, to do nothing, to whom doth it agree, but to the Dead? Mortui nihil agunt, (r) the Dead will not praiſe God, as it is ſaid in the Pſalms, ζώντων γὰρ τὸ ἔργον, for this is the work of the Living. The Dead neither eat, nor drink, nor ſpeak, nor breath Spiritually, nor do any holy ſpiritual good Action; for Wickedneſs is, (s) inanimate and dead to the Life which is in God, and (as one ſaith) more rejectaneous than Dung; therefore the Dead (ſaith Philo) may not come into the ſight of God. (t) He is Lifeleſs and Soul-leſs, that doth not pray unto God, and deſire continually to enjoy the Divine Converſe; for I ſuppoſe, as the Soul being gone our Body is dead and ſtinking, ſo if the Soul doth not move her ſelf to prayer, ſhe is dead and miſerable and noyſom. But if the Souls of the Dead do move themſelves to prayer, or other Religious Practice, yet if their Religious Practice be on this ſide true Piety and Sanctity, if it is not at all animated with holy Affections and holy Mindedneſs, ſuch Religious Practice is but the Carcaſs of good Works, of the ſame Character with the dead, ſoul-leſs, lifeleſs, ſapleſs and unſavoury, taſtleſs like the white of an Egg, as a dry Tree, or as (u) ξύλον ξηρὸν, dry Wood; (x) as the Body without the Soul is dead, and can do nothing; ſo the Soul as to the Kingdom of God is dead and can do none of the things of God, ἄνευ τῆς ἐπȣρανίȣ ψυχῆς, χωρὶς τȣ̃ θείȣ πνεύματος, without the Celeſtial Soul, the Divine Spirit.

Democritus ſuppos'd, that (y) a dead Carcaſs hath a ſort of Soul (that the Heat and Spirit remaining after Death is the proper Soul of the Carcaſs;) the Pythagoreans held, (z) that every thing that groweth hath a Soul; and a Philoſopher argueth, (a) that there is ſomething vital in dead Bodies, becauſe the Hair and Nails grow. Such are the productions of unholy Mankind, uſually and in reſpect of God they are nothing better than the excrementitious productions of Hair and Nails; and therefore as the Dead, they are vile, worthleſs and unuſeful; for a living Dog is better than a dead Lion, (b) ἄχρηστος ὁ νεκρὸς, one that is dead is of no uſe. The Gentiles therefore becauſe they are dead, are ſaid to be (c) the other People (contradiſtinct to regenerate Chriſtians) that is, of no uſe. The Jews ſay, (d) A poor Man, a Leper and a Childleſs-man are reputed for dead, becauſe their Condition is look'd upon as a lifeleſs Condition; ſuch is the forlorn and deſolate ſtate of the Wicked, who are debarr'd from all true Peace and Comfort. (e) Their Souls are corrupt and putrid, what they breath out through their whole life is of a noyſom Scent or Savour, and their filthy Words are νεκρȣ̃ δυσωδέστερα, of a worſe ſmell than a dead Body; but they perceive not this noyſom Scent, ſo long as they remain accuſtomed to it, they carry about a dead Soul in the Body as in a Sepulchre (and they are τάφος ἀκάθαρτον, a Sepulchre

of

(f) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 13. c. 2.

(g) Impiorum in corporibus vita, non animarum ſed corporum vita eſt, quam poſſunt eis animæ etiam mortuæ, hoc eſt à Deo deſertæ, conferre. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 13. c. 2.

(h) Ibid. l. 18. c. 18.

(i) Clem. προτρ. p. 3.

(k) Ἀποθνήσκουσί ποτε τὴν θείαν εὐζωΐαν τῇ ἀπὸ Θεȣ̃ φυγῇ. Hierocl. in aur. Car. p. 13, 14.

1 Tim. 5. 6.

(l) Gat. in Ant. p. 379.

(m) Lactant. l. 6. c. 1.

(n) S. Chryſoſt. in Matth. p. 193. in 2 Cor. p. 582.

(o) Πρὸς δὲ καὶ λίθων ἀναισθητότερος ἄνθρωπος ἀγνοίᾳ βεβαπτισμένος. Clem. προτρεπ. p. 2.

(p) Com. in Epiſt. p. 162, 163.

(q) Ἀπραγμοσύνη τίνος ἂν ἄλλȣ εἴη πλὴν νεκρȣ̃; M. Tyr. diſſ. 5.

(r) Philo περὶ φυγάδ. p. 312.

(s) Πρὸς τὴν ἐν Θεῷ ζωὴν ἄψυχον καὶ νεκρὸν, καὶ κοπρείων, ὡς ἔφη τις, ἐκβλητότερον. Philo ibid.

(t) Ὅστις ȣ̓ προσεύχεται τῷ Θεῷ, ȣ̓δὲ θείας ὁμιλίας ἀπολαύειν ἐπιθυμεῖ συνεχῶς, νεκρός ἐστι καὶ ἄψυχος· ὥσπερ γὰρ, οἶμαι, τὸ σῶμα τȣ̃το τὸ ἡμέτερον ψυχῆς μὴ παρȣ́σης νεκρόν ἐστι καὶ δυσῶδες· ὕτω ψυχῆς μὴ κινȣ́σης ἑαυτὴν εἰς προσευχὴν νεκρά ἐστι, καὶ ἀθλία, καὶ δυσώδης. S. Chryſoſt. T. 6. p. 155.

Job 6. 6.

Iſa. 56. 3.

(u) S. Chryſoſt. in Matth. p. 193.

(x) Macar. Hom. 30.

(y) Plut. de placit. l. 4. c. 4.

(z) Elmenhorſt. in Arnob. p. 7.

(a) Plotin. En. 4. l. 4. c. 29.

(b) Ariſt. Eth. Eudem. l. 7. c. 1.

(c) Λαὸς ἄλλος ἐθνικὸς, ἀχρεῖος. Clem. pædag. l. 3. c. 8.

(d) Buxt. Lex. Talm. col. 744.

(c) S. Chryſoſt. in Matth. p. 193, 459. in Rom. p. 109, 110. in 2 Cor. p. 582, 583.

of Uncleanneſs ſmelling of Abomination;) although Worms devour them not, yet the vicious Paſſions of the Soul lacerate them more fiercely than wild Animals; they are bound in the Chains of their Sins, and as thoſe that lie in the Grave are bound Head, and Hands, and Feet, the Devil being their ἐνταφιαςὴς (he that burieth them) who bindeth them exactly. The Soul is incapable of a diſſolution into ſerous matter, Duſt and Aſhes, as the Body; but it is diſſolv'd into things more noyſom, into Drunkenneſs, and Wrath, and Covetouſneſs, into abſurd Loves and immoderate Appetites. In the Soul of the Cruel and Unmerciful all the kindly warmth of love to their Brother is extinguiſh'd, and it is more dead than an Inanimate Body. * The Life of the Wicked is alſo worſe than Death (worſe than being meerly dead, Ecclus. 22. 11.) they are in a far more wretched plight than a dead Body, the Life of the Drunkard is worſe than thouſands of Deaths; (f) of whom this Father ſaith (becauſe his Sences are ſhut up and bound) νεκρός ἐςιν ἔμψυχ☉ ὁ μεθύων, the Drunkard is an animate or living dead Man: So the meer Animal Man νεκρός ἐςιν ἔμψυχος, is a living dead Man. (g) As when the Soul departeth, Stench, Corruption, Putrefaction, the Worm, Aſhes, Horrour and all things deteſtable to the Sight ſucceed in the Body; ſo God's departure from the Soul is ſucceeded preſently by the Stench of Sins, the Corruption of Crimes, the Rottenneſs of Vices, the Worm of Conſcience, the Aſhes of Vanities, the Horrour of Infidelity, and the Soul is bury'd in the live Sepulchre of the Body. The Son of the Stranger is uncircumcis'd in Heart, and uncircumcis'd in Fleſh; that is, ſaith Clemens, (h) He is unclean both in Body and Spirit: Degenerate Mankind therefore in this reſpect reſemble the Dead, they are impure, unclean, abominable, and defiling. For as in Judaiſm ſo in Paganiſm, τὸ νεκρὸν ἀκάθαρτον, a dead Body was unclean, Numb. 19. 11. Eccluſ. 34. 25. If any touch'd a dead Body he was defil'd; they that were preſent at a Funeral, made a Luſtration of themſelves by paſſing through the Fire; the Houſe where a dead Body lay had Water ſtanding at the Door, wherein the People that came out, waſh'd themſelves, and Plutarch (in his Qu. Rom.) reporteth of the Greeks, That they accounted thoſe profane, and did not aſſociate themſelves with them, nor ſuffer'd them to approach to their Sacrifices, who were once carry'd out and interr'd as dead: So degenerate Mankind and dead Sinners are καθαρσίων δεόμενοι, ſuch as need Luſtration.

3. They are in Death, the comprehenſion of thoſe Evils that are death to the Soul, which is the ſtate of Death; according to that of our Saviour, Joh. 5. 24. He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that ſent me,—— is paſſed from Death unto Life: So 1 Joh. 3. 14. We know that we have paſs'd from Death unto Life, becauſe we love the Brethren; he that loveth not his Brother, abideth in Death. Two oppoſite Eſtates are here repreſented, which all Mankind are in (according to Chriſtianity:) The one is Life (the ſtate of Life;) the other is Death (the ſtate of Death;) the one is the comprehenſion of all thoſe Goods that are Life to the Soul, the other is the comprehenſion of all thoſe Evils that are Death to the Soul. In which horrendous ſtate of Death (according to the Laws of true and ſaving Religion) are all unholy Mankind, that do (the deadly Sins) the things worthy of Death, Rom. 1. 32. that are the Servants of Sin unto Death, Rom. 6. 6. that live after the Fleſh and ſhall die, Rom. 8. 13. that are the carnally-minded, which is Death, Rom. 8. 6. that bring forth Fruit unto Death, Rom. 7. 5. All that are not the faithful lovers of God and the lovers of their Brother, 1 Joh. 3. 14. All that deadly err from the Truth, that are not converted from their ſinning trade, Jam. 5. 19, 20. And all the World of ungodly Sinners till they practiſe a ſaving Repentance from Dead (Mortiferous) Works, Heb. 6. 1. (i) Death cauſal is that conjunction of the Soul in the Body, which is her being given to Sin: Life is her Separation from Sin. In the ſtate of Life there is nothing of Death, (Joh. 8. 51.) and in the ſtate of Death there is nothing of Life, nothing but Death and what is deadly, the deadly kind of things, deadly Enemies, deadly Sins, the deadly Sentence and deadly Puniſhment. They that are in it have no Life in them, nor (without removing their Quarters) is there any Life for them; but as they are dead in Sins, ſo if they die in them, they muſt die for them; ſo the Scripture noticeth the ſtate of death, Joh. 8. 21. Rom. 6. 23. Jam. 1. 15. 1 Joh. 5. 12. The deadly Evils of this Eſtate are multifarious and variouſly diſtinguiſhable (into Criminal and Penal, Inherent and Adherent, Privative and Poſitive,) but the Summary of them is the deadly criminal Life, the deadly penal State, the reign of the deadly Ghoſtly Enemies.

The deadly criminal Life (the Region of deadly Evils to the Soul) importeth a privation of the Holy Life, and of all the ineſtimable Goods which Spiritual Life is, and a poſition of all the contrary criminal Evil; for it is a privation of the true Light and Life, the ſaving Truth and Wiſdom, the true Health, the Beauty and Brightneſs, the Order and Rectitude, the Liberty and Freedom, the Nobleneſs and Unvileneſs, the Vigour and Puiſſance, the Eaſe and Reſt, Peace and Serenity, Delight and Pleaſure, the Goodneſs, Worth, Uſefulneſs, the Innocence and Purity, the Divinity and Beatitude of the Soul (which is Death;) and it is a Poſition of the deadly Life and Diſpoſition; the deadly criminal Darkneſs, Error, Fooliſhneſs, Mortal Diſeaſes, Deformity, Crookedneſs and Diſorder, Sordidneſs and Servitude, Vileneſs and Villany, Weakneſs and Wickedneſs, Inquietude and Diſſatisfaction, Cloudineſs and Tumultuouſneſs, Diſturbance and Perplexity (commix'd with the pleaſures of Pride and Senſuality, which are mortiferæ ſuavitates, deadly Sweets, as Lactantius calleth them) the deadly criminal Foulneſs, Noxiouſneſs, Pravity, and Venenate Malignity, the Atheouſneſs, Selfiſhneſs, Carnality, Worldlineſs and Diaboliſm of the Soul. Such are the deadly criminal Evils.

They that are in the deadly criminal Life, are neceſſarily in the deadly Penal State (which belongeth to the deadly Criminals;) they are penally depriv'd of all the true ſaving Goods Spiritual and Eternal, and are ſubjected to all the contrary deadly penal Evils. This Eſtate therefore importeth a Penal Privation of the Eſtate of Remiſſion of Sins and of Righteouſneſs, of Peace and Reconcilement, of Grace and Favour, of Divine Alliance and Acceptance, of the Election and Adoption, of the Inheritance, of Freedom and Citizenſhip in the Kingdom of God (with all the Honour and Nobilitation, Riches, Rights,

---

* V. Gat. in Ant. p. 323. 359.

(f) Ανδριαντ. α. p. 452.

(g) Recedente anima mox corpori fœtor, corruptio, putredo, vermis, cinis, horror & omnia viſu deteſtanda ſuccedunt; diſcedente Deo confeſtim venit in animam peccatorum fœtor, corruptio criminum, vitiorum putredo, conſcientiæ vermis, vanitatum cinis, infidelitatis horror, & fit in corporis ſepulchro vivo funus animæ jam ſepultæ. P. Chryſolog. Ser. 19.

(h) Strom. l. 4. p. m. 391.

(i) Θάνατ☉ μὲν ὅτι ἡ ἐν σώματι κοινωνία τῆς ψυχῆς ἁμαρτητικῆς ὄσης· ζωὴ δὲ, ὁ χωρισμὸς τῆς ἁμαρτίας. Clem. Strom. l. 4. p. 349.

Priviledges and Immunities, Safety and Impunity which that Eſtate is:) And as it is the ſtate of Non-remiſſion of Sins, Non-reconcilement, of Diſtance and Eſtrangement, ſo it is poſitively the Penal State of ungodly Sinners (their Reputation, Relation and Penal Dues are ſettled upon the Criminals,) the ſtate of being under deadly Debts and damnable Criminalities, deadly Infamy and Villainy, Condemnation and Divine Wrath, of Deſertion, Baniſhment, Beggary, Slavery, Hoſtility, of Execration, Reprobation and Perdition; of not having the Favour of God and of being under his Diſpleaſure; of not being in the Kingdom of God, and of being in the Kingdom of Satan; of not being the Heirs of Life, and of being the Heirs of Death; for they that are finally in it, muſt never ſee Life, but muſt be put to death, Joh. 3. 36.

The ſtate of Death is the Reign of the deadly ghoſtly Enemies; for in this eſtate Sin reigneth, Satan reigneth, the Law reigneth, (the Law of Sin and of Death, Rom. 8. 2.) and becauſe Sin reigneth unto Death, therefore Death reigneth, Rom. 5. 21. The World of unholy Mankind therefore muſt be look'd upon as a World of deadly Sinners, and of dead Sinners alſo, as the Apoſtle argueth (for this Senſe of his Words is unexceptionable, and is plainly imply'd in his Argument) 2 Cor. 5. 14, 15. If one died for all, then were all dead. He died for all, that they which live—— therefore they were dead. We Gentiles were eminently ſo; for we were dead (k) in ſuch a ſenſe as a Man, whoſe ſafety or recovery is look'd upon as deſperate and hopeleſs, is ſaid to be a dead Man, Eph. 2. 1, 5. You hath he quicken'd, who were dead in Treſpaſſes and Sins. Col. 2. 13. You being dead in your Sins, and the Uncircumciſion of your Fleſh; that is, in your Gentiliſm, the State and Life thereof.

V. So the Church-Writers repreſent our Heathen-popular ſtate as the ſtate of Death. (l) He hath adopted us Gentiles into the Society of the Patriarchs and the Portion of his elect Flock, who were periſhing under the profound Night of the old Ignorance. (m) Not to know the Father, is Death, as to know him, is Life Eternal; to recede from the knowledge of God bringeth Deſtruction. (n) None but an irreligious Perſon doubteth, that they are ſuch as deſerve to be punitively tormented, as impious and unjuſt, who know not God, ſeeing it is as great Wickedneſs, not to know, as to hurt him that is the Parent and Lord of all. (o) The Nations in the whole World alien from God were ſubjected to Death; for you may rightly account them dead, who not knowing the Donor of Life, and depreſſing their Souls from Heaven to the Earth, run into the Snares of Eternal Death. If we had been God's Believers and Religioniſts (imperfectly or more perfectly) as we might have been, our State had been (in ſome degree) Holy Popular, we ought to have been reckon'd God's People; and ſome of the Ancients, as alſo many of the Moderns might have pleaded, (p) That Faith in Chriſt was not neceſſary in our Circumſtances, it was ſufficient to relinquiſh Idolatry, and to be the Religioniſts of the one true God. But in Philo's mode of ſpeaking, (q) ἔκθεσμος, a nefarious Man, and ἔκφυλος, an Alien from the People of God, are terms ſynonymous; (r) ſuch are ἀπόλιδες ϗ σποράδες, without holy Citizenſhip and Society. And as the word Hoſtis which now ſignifieth an Enemy, in ancient times ſignify'd a Stranger; ſo in our Heathen-popular State we were related to God as Aliens and Enemies, no People (no People of God) and therefore we could have no rights in the Holy City, nor to the Holy Deity thereof. Nor was it poſſible, that God ſhould look upon us, as his Allies, Subjects, Servants or Liege-people; but our ſtate was that of total Apoſtates from, Traitors and open Rebels againſt our Sovereign Leige-Lord, which is the ſtate of Death. (s) The Devils withdraw Men from the knowledge of the true God, by which alone Death Eternal is avoidable. If any of the Heathen (remaining ſuch) might be ſav'd, it muſt be by a Deity; but there is no Deity, whereby they can be ſav'd, who are not the People of the true God. The true God being the Deity of true Religion and Godlineſs, cannot fail to be condemning and punitive to the Atheous and Ungodly. And if it is by a Deity that Mankind muſt be ſav'd, then they muſt be ſav'd by being ſavingly Religious; therefore both the Popular and Philoſophic Pagans that acknowledg'd a future Happineſs foully miſtook the way thither; for they rely'd upon their Myſtic Metaphyſical Sanctity, their Teletæ and the Hieratic way, their Theurgic Methods of the Soul's Purgation, Liberation, Reduction; they promis'd themſelves a future Happineſs from an initiation into their Myſtic-religious Inſtitutions, their Heathen Piety (t) and Civil-ſocietive Virtue (of which their bene merita in patriam were a principal Branch) and it was ſuppos'd, that by theſe Paganical Methods Julian the Apoſtate triumphantly aſcended to the Supernal Regions (u).

Et patriam æthereæ lucis remeabat ad aulam.

But the Virtue of the Heathen is far from being ſaving; ſomething of it is found in all Men (all are in ſome ſort Virtuous, Honeſt, Sincere;) if therefore it was ſaving to any, all Men would be ſav'd. It continueth Men in their Ungodlineſs, and is competible to them that are in their Sins, the ſtate of Sin and of Death. (w) No doubt, he is impious that doth not acknowledge God, and all the Virtues which he thinketh he hath, are found in that mortiferous Life, which is nothing but Darkneſs. The Religion of the Heathen which ſhould have been ſaving to them, was of a contrary nature, deſtructive to Life and Salvation, (x) πάσης ἀθεότητος οὖσα μεστὴ, being full of all Atheouſneſs, it conſtituted them Athe-iſts and Antithe-iſts, and the main Branches of it are ſo many mortal Sins. (y) ποία δὲ τούτοις ἐλπίς; what hope is there for theſe?

(z) The Devil leading them by the Hand as a blind Man εἰς ἕν τι θανάτου ϗ ἀπωλείας βάραθρον κατεκρήμνιζε, precipitated them into one certain Gulf of Death and Perdition. (a) They firſt deſtroy themſelves by doing ſervice to damned Demons, whom God hath doom'd to Eternal Puniſhments. And then they ſuffer

(k) Grot. Not. in Eph. 2. 1.

(l) Nos ſub veteris quondam ignorantiæ profunda nocte pereuntes, in patriarcharum ſocietatem & ſortem electi gregis adoptavit. Leo M. Ser. 4. de paſſ. Dom.

(m) Τὸ δ' ἀγνοεῖν τὸν πατέρα, θάνατός ἐστιν, ὡς τὸ γνῶναι ζωὴ αἰώνιος.—— Φθορὰν δὲ ἡ ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ γνώσεως ἀπόστασις παρέχει. Clem. Strom. l. 5. p. m. 421.

(n) Eos meritò torqueri, qui Deum neſciunt, ut impios, ut injuſtos, niſi profanus nemo deliberat, cùm parentem omnium & omnium Dominum, non minoris ſceleris ſit ignorare, quàm lædere. Min. Fel. p. 332, 333.

(o) Gentes in orbe toto alienæ à Deo ſubjectæ morti fuerunt;—— Eos enim rectè mortuos exiſtimaveris, qui datorem vitæ neſcientes, atque animas ſuas à cælo in terram deprimentes, in laqueos æternæ mortis incurrunt. Lactant. l. 4. c. 26.

(p) Montacut. Apparat. 1. p. 30, &c.

(q) Quod deter. inſid. potior. p. 112. Ed. Gr. Pariſ.

(r) Idem de congreſſ. Quær. Erud. gr. p. 293.

(s) Avocant dæmones à veri Dei notione, per quam ſolam poteſt mors æterna vitari. Lactant. l. 4. c. 27.

(t) Macrob. in ſom. Scip. l. 1. c. 1, 4, 9.

(u) Baron. ad ann. 363. n. 59.

(w) Non eſt dubium, quin impius ſit, quiſquis Deum non agnoverit, omneſque virtutes ejus quas habere aut tenere ſe putat, in illa mortifera vita reperiuntur, quæ eſt tota tenebrarum. Lactant. l. 6. c. 9.

(x) S. Athanaſ. c. Gent. or. p. 25. com.

(y) Ibid. p. 13.

(z) Gr. Naz. or. 34. p. 47.

(a) Seipſos primum jugulant perditis dæmonibus ſerviendo, quos Deus in æterna ſupplicia damnavit, deinde nec ab aliis Deum coli patiuntur, ſed averte- re homines ad mortifera ſacra contendunt. Lactant. l. 5. 20.

not God to be worſhipp'd by others, but ſtrive to turn them away to their mortiferous Sacra.

(b) As he that in a dark Night attempteth to travel in a ſtrange Way, or to ſail at Sea, will not only miſs of his Journey's end, but will preſently be loſt: So theſe attempting to go the way to Heaven, and bereaving themſelves of Light, and inſtead thereof committing themſelves to the Darkneſs of their Minds,—— ſuffer'd a moſt grievous Shipwrack. (c) If we had not known the Word and been illuminated by it, we had not differ'd from Birds, fatned in Darkneſs, and nouriſh'd for Death. The benighted ſtate of the Heathen therefore is ſuppos'd, to be univerſally and without exception the ſtate of Death; and not without great reaſon, for their Eſtate is no other than the ſtate of Unregeneracy, which is the firſt Eſtate of the Univerſality of Mankind, and is (doubtleſs) the ſtate of Death. All of them needed a Repentance unto Life (which ſpeaketh them dead) and a ſaving Converſion to God, that they might obtain Remiſſion of Sins, and an Inheritance among them that are ſanctify'd. All of them were devoid of true Piety and Sanctity (Grace and Holineſs) without which the Soul is dead; (d) for as the Soul being departed from the Body it becometh a dead Body, noyſom and unclean; ſo if the fear of God be departed from the Soul, ſhe becometh a dead Soul, noyſom and unclean. All of them were deadly Criminals in Religion, liv'd the deadly criminal Life (the Heathen Life is the Reign of Sin) and in ſuch Sins which are inconſiſtent with Sanctity, and are under a damnatory Sentence, which ſpeaketh their ſtate to be the ſtate of Death; (e) for Sin is Death Eternal; (f) for he that is devoid of (the Holy Life of) Virtue, he that is overcome by evil Luſts, and Cupidities, is not ſubjected to Cupid (as the Poet hath feign'd) but to Eternal Death. There is not any Settlement of Religion, whereby Heathen Mankind (remaining ſuch) can be ſav'd; but on the contrary, the Penal Dues of nefarious Sinners are manifeſtly ſettled upon them; and they are under the Domination of all their deadly ghoſtly Enemies. If any by the Keys of the Church are continued in or caſt into the Heathen-ſtate, their Sins are not remitted but retained; therefore the Heathen ſtate is the ſtate of Non-remiſſion of Sins; and if Sin be not pardon'd, by the force of a Contradiction it muſt be puniſh'd according to its demerits. If any Chriſtian maketh a total defection to Heatheniſm, his defection is a total Apoſtaſie from the true God, and the ſtate of ſuch an Apoſtate is the ſtate of Condemnation irreverſibly, the ſtate of Death irrecoverably; which ſpeaketh the Heathen ſtate, to be the ſtate of Death. But from this Hypotheſis (without which the neceſſity of Chriſtianity is not maintainable, nor can the Grace of God towards us Chriſtianiz'd Gentiles be duely illuſtrated without it) a terrible Concluſion will be inferr'd, that all who die in the Heathen ſtate are finally loſt; which ſeemeth to be a grand difficulty in Providence, and they that think it ſo (if they be Wiſe and Religious) ought to be allow'd great liberty of thought, to ſalve the Phænomenon. We will content our ſelves to obſerve, that the Diſpute in the Church touching the Heathens Salvation, is partly concerning matter of Fact, and partly concerning matter of Right and of Law.

(b) S. Chryſoſt. in Rom. p. 20.

(c) Clem. προτρεπτ. p. m. 52.

Act. 11. 18. and 26. 18.

(d) Ὥσπερ γὰρ χωρισθείσης τῆς ψυχῆς, νεκρὸν τὸ σῶμα, καὶ δυσῶδες καὶ ἀκάθαρτον· οὕτως χωρισθέντος τοῦ φόβου τοῦ Θεοῦ τῆς ψυχῆς, νεκρὰ ὑπάρχει ἡ ψυχὴ, καὶ δυσώδης καὶ ἀκάθαρτος. J. Mart. Qu. & Reſp. ad Orthod. p. 429.

(e) Θάνατος γὰρ ἀΐδιος ἁμαρτία. Clem. προτρ. p. m. 53.

(f) Qui enim virtutis eſt expers, qui cupiditatibus ac libidinibus malis vincitur, non cupidini (ut ille finxit) ſed morti ſubjectus eſt ſempiternæ. Lactant. l. 1. c. 11.

Heb. 6. 6. 1 Joh. 5. 16.

VI. If the Salvation of any be call'd in queſtion as Heathens, the matter of Fact ought to be debated in the firſt place; whether they were Heathens in this definitive Notion, The Mundane Theiſts that do not acknowledge the true God? Uſually they that plead for the Salvation of Heathens Unheathenize them in Religion and Morality, (making them God's Religioniſts and as good as Chriſtians) and yet ſuppoſe, that they plead for the Salvation of Heathens, whereas they alter the Subject of the Queſtion, and contradict themſelves as well as apparent matter of fact. Thus in the Church of Rome the Patrons of their Salvation ſuppoſe, (g) That the Philoſophers were abhorrent from Polytheiſm, worſhipp'd one only God, whom with all their might they inquir'd after and inveſtigated, always ſtudying to pleaſe him, and therefore they were not deſtitute of that Faith and Knowledge of God, whereby the Impious are juſtify'd and the Juſt liveth: (h) That many Philoſophers were ſav'd, becauſe they did not worſhip Idols, believ'd one only God, the Puniſher and Rewarder, and eſchew'd the deadly Sins, which natural Reaſon dictateth to be Sins: That many Heathens had the true knowledge of God, and a Faith touching his Providence, in which Faith of theirs touching Divine Providence (which taketh care of Man's welfare) a Faith touching Man's Redemption by Chriſt is implicitly contain'd. Amongſt the Reform'd Zuinglius patronizeth the Salvation of groſs Heathens, Hercules, Theſeus, Numa, Camillus; but he reckoneth them among the Faithful (quotquot in Fide hinc migraverunt,) he calleth Seneca a moſt holy Man, and therefore he maketh them no Heathens; as in the Stile of his Apologiſt Numa's Studies are ſaid to be Pious and Holy, which is a making him no Heathen. (i) A late Remonſtrant to patronize the Salvation of the Heathen, repreſenteth ſeveral of them as truly Pious and Holy at the rate of Regenerate Chriſtians; which is a groſs contradiction; for (in the main at leaſt) ſuch could be no Heathens. (k) Not a few of the Hebrew Doctors allot a Portion in the World to come to the חסידי אמות Pious of the Gentiles, whereby they mean thoſe that receive and obſerve their ſeven Precepts of the Sons of Noah. (l) A late Rabbi proceedeth further, and alloweth a Portion in the World to come to Socrates, Plato, and ſuch more; for he ſuppoſeth, that they were right in their Opinion concerning God, and liv'd piouſly and honeſtly, and therefore were no worſe than thoſe, who obſerv'd the ſeven Precepts of the Sons of Noah, that were God's Religioniſts. J. Mart. ſaith, That thoſe who liv'd according to Reaſon were Chriſtians, although they were accounted Atheiſts; meaning by Chriſtians God's Religioniſts, and by Reaſon the Reaſon of true Piety, whereupon he affirmeth, That Socrates, Heraclitus, and ſuch more were Chriſtians. (m) They that have liv'd with Reaſon are Chriſtians, although they were accounted Atheiſts; as among the Greeks Socrates, Heraclitus, and the like to them, among the Barbarians Abraham and Ananias. This holy Man's Opinion of Socrates, Heraclitus (and ſuch like) is founded upon a miſtake touching a matter of fact; for he following the Vulgar Error, that Socrates * (who was charg'd with Atheouſneſs) died a Martyr for one God, entertain'd a Conceit,

(m) Καὶ οἱ μετὰ λόγου βιώσαντες Χριστιανοί εἰσι, κἂν ἄθεοι ἐνομίσθησαν· οἷον ἐν Ἕλλησι μὲν Σωκράτης καὶ Ἡράκλειτος, καὶ οἱ ὅμοιοι αὐτοῖς· ἐν βαρβάροις δὲ Ἀβραὰμ καὶ Ἀνανίας. Apol. 2. p. 83.

(g) Andrad. ap. Chemnit. Exam. Conc. Trid. Seſſ. 6.

(h) V. Montacut. Apparat. 1. S. 84, 86. Collii. l. 1. c. 11, 12. de anim. Pagan.

(i) Curcel. de Neceſſ. cognit. Chriſt. S. 6, 15, 24, 36.

(k) Grot. de J. B. ac P. l. 1. c. 1. 16. Hotting. Theſ. Phil. p. 344. Mena. ben Iſr. Qu. in Deut. p. 221.

(l) Idem de Reſur. mort. l. 2. c. 9.

* Spencer. Not. in Orig. c. Celſ. p. 9.

ceit, that ſeveral of the Philoſophers whom the worſer Heathen reputed Atheiſts, were God's Religioniſts (or Chriſtians;) therefore he maketh them no Heathens. The Eccleſiaſtic Legendaries have very much concern'd themſelves about the Salvation of the Heathen; and one of their methods of ſaving them is by attributing to them a more than Implicit, an Explicit Faith touching Man's Redemption: For Aquinas ſaith, (n) It is recorded in the Roman Hiſtories, that in the time of Conſtantine and Irene his Mother, a certain Sepulchre was found, wherein a Man lay (an Heathen Man) having a Plate of Gold on his Breaſt with this Inſcription, Chriſtus naſcetur ex Virgine, & ego credo in eum, O Sol, ſub Irenæ & Conſtantini temporibus iterum me videbis; Chriſt ſhall be born of a Virgin, and I believe on him. O Sun thou ſhalt ſee me again in the times of Irene and Conſtantine. This fabulous Sepulchre is ſuppos'd to be Plato's; but the Legend hath been ſo little believ'd, that ſome have thought of other methods of Plato's Salvation. A Divine of our own thus expreſſeth the Senſe of Johannes Euchaitenſis together with his own concerning it. (o) I muſt profeſs my ſelf ſo much raviſh'd with the Morality of that Divine Man's Diſcourſes, that would my Religion permit it, as it will not, I could yet joyn my Devotion to the Petitions of Johannes Euchaitenſis, for the Salvation of Plato and Plutarch; but I am apt to think, that there is no need to pray for that, which for ought I know to the contrary, may be already accompliſh'd. Some who were unſatisfy'd, that Plato had accompliſh'd his Salvation by his own Faith, deſign'd to help him out by their Prayers; but others, becauſe they could not find him a Chriſtian Believer on Earth, they have made him one in Hell; for Nicetas, out of the Hiſtories of the Fathers, (as Petavius ſaith) reporteth of Plato, (p) that being reviled by a certain Chriſtian as improbous and impious, he came in the Night-time to his Reviler, and accus'd the Man as reviling him unjuſtly; for I will not at all deny, that I am a Sinner (ſaid he) but when Chriſt deſcended into Hell, none came to the Faith before me. The like Legendary Accounts we have (q) of the Emperour Trajan. But ſome of great Learning and Piety, no Friends to Legends, nor guilty of the Vice and Folly of Chriſtianizing groſs Heathens, yet have thought the Condition of ſome of the better ſort of Pagans not deſperate, but that their future Happineſs is hopeful upon account of their Paganical Virtue; and ſome doubt not of the Happineſs of all of them that were ſincere. Touching which Opinion (that carrieth a ſhew of Charity and Goodneſs) I will only ſay; That our Heathen-ſtate is certainly the ſtate of Death, that all the better ſort of Pagans are ſaveable, if any be ſo; that the meer Paganical Virtue is not available to Salvation; that the Pagans Sincerity is of no better quality than the reſt of their Virtue; that we are apt to have an extravagant eſteem for their Virtue, and every one hopeth well touching his particular Favourite (ſo ſome of the Learned have expreſſed their hopes (r) of Cicero's ſafety, who was far from being ſeriouſly Virtuous, as appeareth from his vile Flattery and Time-ſerving, (s) his putting off a groſs Lye with a Jeſt, (t) his Office of Ædile who exhibited the Romans Ludos ſanctiſſimos, his Office of Augur inconſiſtent with common Honeſty, his infinite fondneſs of Vain-glory and other Blemiſhes;) but we are incapable of pronouncing any thing touching their future Happineſs, ſave only, that in reſpect of us and our Notices their Condition is not at all hopeful; yet not knowing what Tranſactions there may be between God and their Souls, who in external appearance die groſs Heathens; not knowing whether Death rendreth every one's Condition, and particularly theirs who were never try'd with the Goſpel, as remedileſs and deſperate, as it doth theirs, who have been try'd with it and have fruſtrated the Remedy (for it is not Hereſie to doubt of this;) not knowing but that all Ages of the World as well as that Age wherein the Apoſtles preach'd (Act. 18. 10.) have afforded many Souls prepar'd for Chriſtianity, touching whom one may doubt, whether they will finally periſh or not; not knowing what their Condemnation will amount to, who have been in all Ages invincibly ignorant of Chriſtianity, and are unconcern'd in the Condemnation which it denounceth againſt Hypocrites and Unbelievers; ſuch Myſteries of Providence being to us unknown, there is an appearance of grand Indiſcretion in a Chriſtian Biſhop's treatment of an Heathen King of Frieſland, Rabod by name, (u) who being inſtructed in the Faith of Chriſt by Biſhop Ulfran, promis'd to be baptiz'd, and appointed the time and place; where being come and ſtanding in the Water, he ask'd the Biſhop where all his Fore-fathers were, that in former Ages were deceas'd? the Biſhop anſwer'd; that dying without the knowledge of the true God, &c. they were in Hell; then quoth Rabod, I hold it better and more praiſe-worthy, to go with the greater Multitude to Hell, than with your few Chriſtians to Heaven, and therewith he went out of the Water unchriſten'd, and return'd both to his wonted Idolatry and to his Evil Life.

(n) 2a. 2æ. Qu. 2. Art. 2. Prideaux Lect. 8.

(o) Remar. relat. to the ſtate of the Ch. of the firſt Cent. p. 141.

(p) Petav. T. 4. par. 2. l. 13. c. 18. S. 9.

(q) Ibid. S. 10. M. Weſtm. an. 605.

(r) Montacut. ſupr. S. 79. Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 3. par. 3. Theſ. 11.

(s) Beroald. in Apul. Aſ. p. 717.

(t) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 2. c. 27. Gat. in Ant. p. 19.

(u) Verſtegan's Antiqu. p. 336.

VII. The Diſpute in the Church about the Heathens Salvation is touching Matter of Right or of Law complicated with Matter of Fact. For (to ſay nothing of the Pelagians in this place) Clemens is ſaid to affirm, (w) That the Greeks were juſtify'd to Salvation by Philoſophy. S. Chryſoſtom (with whom Epiphanius ſymbolizeth) aſſerteth, That the acknowledgment and ſervice of Chriſt was not requir'd before his coming, it was ſufficient to relinquiſh the Worſhip of Idols, and to acknowledge one only God the Creator. The common Opinion (which hath prevail'd in the Church) is, That none ever were or could be juſtify'd and ſav'd without the knowledge of Chriſt and Faith in him; but ſeveral Pontificians ſay, That ſuch an Implicit Faith touching Chriſt as is before-mention'd (abſurdly call'd by that Name) was ſufficient for the Gentiles. To reconcile theſe Diſputes (ſo far as they are reconcileable) the words of J. Mart. are worth the conſidering, who calleth all the true and genuine kind of Theiſts Chriſtians (in a large ſenſe) as being the Chriſtian-kind of Theiſts and Religioniſts. So Tertullian citeth the Phraſes that were ordinary in the Heathens Mouths, and which were expreſſive of the one true God, (x) as Teſtimonium Animæ naturaliter Chriſtianæ, a teſtimony that the Soul is in ſome degree naturally a Chriſtian Theiſt. So S. Hierom ſaith, (y) There is in all by nature a notice of God, nor is any born without Chriſt. In this large Senſe it muſt be acknowledg'd, that the Earth and Heavens, the Sun, Moon and Stars, the Works of Nature and of Providence have always preach'd Chriſtianiſm to the World of Heathens; that from the beginning of the World Chriſtianiſm hath been the (w) Montacut. ſupr. S. 44, 45, 62, 64, 65, 79, 80, 86, 97. v. Curcell. de Neceſſ. cognit. Chriſt. S. 36.

(x) Apol. c. 17.

(y) Naturâ omnibus ineſſe Dei notitiam, nec quenquam ſine Chriſto naſci. Com. in Gal. 1.

only way to Righteouſneſs and Salvation; for Mankind could never attain them otherwiſe than by being God's Believers and Religioniſts (the Men of Faith and faithful Religioniſts,) which is to be in great degree Chriſt's Believers and Religioniſts, as this way to Righteouſneſs and Salvation is in great degree Chriſt's Religion, and thus it may be expreſs'd. The way to Righteouſneſs and Salvation from the beginning of the World was, to be Chriſt's Believers and Religioniſts, ſo far as the being God's Believers and Religioniſts importeth. If therefore the World of Mankind which was Heathen, had been God's Believers and Religioniſts (ſuch as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of Heb. 11. 6.) they could not have fail'd of a State of Alliance and Favour, of Righteouſneſs and Salvation (more or leſs perfect;) for God in providing Chriſt had made Proviſion, that his Divine Believers ſhould be in that Divine Condition. And as that Divine Condition which Divine Believers in the ancient times enjoy'd, was founded upon Chriſt: So the coming of Chriſt was reveal'd to thoſe Divine Believers, and they had Prophetic Notices of it. But thoſe Prophetic Notices cannot be call'd the way to Remiſſion of Sins and Salvation, they were not propos'd as the Condition of a Treaty and Covenant, nor was the Knowledge of them requir'd of thoſe, to whom they were not at all reveal'd; but different Obligations ariſe from different Revelations. The generality of Mankind in thoſe elder times of the World (antecedently to any Revelation of the Meſſias to them) were no farther oblig'd, to be God's Believers and Religioniſts than according to natural Revelation. And becauſe they were not ſo far his Believers and Religioniſts, the Apoſtle looketh upon them as inexcuſable. Rom. 1. 20. for nothing hindred them from being ſuch but their own Wickedneſs (wicked Unwillingneſs or averſeneſs from Godlineſs,) nor could they pretend any other impotency but the Moral Impotency, which is not an Excuſe but an Aggravation. Elſe how ſhall God judge the World? Rom. 3. 6. If the Exiſtence of God be fairly notic'd to all Mankind (not without, but with ſpecific and individual Determination,) if they do, or may eaſily know, that his being God conſiſteth in having the Rights and Dues of his Godhead (as the being King conſiſteth in having his Rights and Dues, which to bereave him of, is a making him no King;) if they are oblig'd to be virtuous, good, juſt and grateful, and cannot but know, that of Right and by Obligation they are his Liege-People, Subjects and Servants; Mankind muſt neceſſarily be inexcuſable, if they do not ſerve and glorifie him as God, and if they become not his Believers and Religioniſts, which is a relinquiſhing their Heatheniſm. The Heathen could not plead, that they were ſo deſtitute of Means, that it was naturally impoſſible, for them to be God's Believers and Religioniſts, or that their becoming ſuch would be in vain; for his Parental Providence towards them demonſtrated, that he had not abandon'd all care and concern for their Welfare. Act. 14. 16, 17. In times paſt he ſuffer'd all nations to walk in their own ways. Nevertheleſs he left not himſelf without witneſs (a Teſtimony of his care for their Welfare, and that he had not abandon'd all concern for it, although he ſuffer'd all Nations, to walk in their own ways,) in that he did good, and gave us Rain from Heaven, and fruitful Seaſons, filling our Hearts with Food and Gladneſs. 1. Tim. 9. 10. He is the Saviour of all Men (taketh care of their Welfare) eſpecially of thoſe that believe. His Goodneſs and Patience towards the World of Mankind hath a mighty tendency to their Repentance, and is deſign'd to induce them to it, which is an aſſurance that their Repentance, if not illegitimate, ſhall not be ineffectual; and if God commandeth them the Practice of the Duties of Religion in order to this end, that ſo they may obtain a future Happineſs, they are bound to Believe, that ſuch Practice will not be in vain. Act. 17. 26, 27. They are planted on the face of the Earth, that they ſhould ſeek the Lord, if happily they might feel after him and find him. Which demonſtrateth God's will and intention to be found of them, if they did faithfully ſeek him, and his willingneſs to be a God to them: Nor is it poſſible, that God ſhould diſown and damn any, that is a faithful Religioniſt towards him; but in every Nation he that feareth him and worketh Righteouſneſs, is accepted with him. Glory, Honour and Peace to every Man that worketh good, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Gentile. (z) The Gentiles that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of in this place, are not the Idol-worſhippers, but Gods Worſhippers, that obey the natural Law, that beſides the Judaical Inſtitutes obſerve all things conducive to Piety, ſuch as Melchiſedek, Job, the Ninevites, Cornelius. From which Expoſition of the Apoſtles words by one of the Fathers a true and juſt account may be given of the unanimous Senſe of all the Fathers touching the Heathen Salvation.

Rom. 2. 4.

Act. 10. 35.

Rom. 2. 10.

For S. Chryſoſtom is commonly alledg'd (a) as a Patron of the Salvation of Heathens, which (as appeareth from his own words) is a very foul and groſs miſtake. Epiphanius's ſenſe is the ſame with Chryſoſtom's, and Theodoret's Expoſition of the Apoſtle's words is exactly the ſame with his. Origen's Expoſition of the place (diſtorting the ſenſe of it) diſtributeth Mankind into three ſorts: To Chriſtians only he allotteth eternal Life; to them that obey not the Truth, but obey Unrighteouſneſs he allotteth Indignation and Wrath; to Jews and Gentiles that do not as yet believe (nondum credentibus) yet Work that which is good, he allotteth, Glory, Honour and Peace, that is, a Remuneration. But the Gentiles whom he thinketh worthy of a Remuneration, are only thoſe that know God and glorifie him as God, and he inſtanceth particularly in Cornelius a Gentile, but a Proſelyte. The Senſe of Clemens Alexandrinus hath been much miſtaken; (b) for it was not his Opinion, that Philoſophy of it ſelf juſtified the Greeks to Salvation (he is ſo far from this Opinion, that he ſuppoſeth, the Gentiles could not be ſaved without Chriſtianity, and therefore Chriſt or his Diſciples went down to Hell, and preach'd the Goſpel to them, and converted ſo many as were fit for Converſion:) But only that the Greek Philoſophy was a foundation laid for the Chriſtian Philoſophy, and the Juſtice which it afforded a ſtep to the Juſtice which is according to Chriſt. Not one of the Fathers therefore is of Opinion, that any of the ἕλληνες εἰδωλολατρεῦντες, Heathen Idolatrous Religioniſts were qualified for Salvation; they allow Salvation to no other Gentiles but the ἕλληνες θεοσεβοῦντες, Gentiles that were God's Believers and Religioniſts (which is their unanimous Senſe,) thoſe that

(z) Ἕλληνας δὲ ἐνταῦθά φησιν, οὐ τοὺς εἰδωλολατρεῦντας, ἀλλὰ τοὺς θεοσεβοῦντας, τοὺς τῷ φυσικῷ πειθομένους νόμῳ, τοὺς πλὴν τῶν Ἰουδαϊκῶν παρατηρήσεων πάντα τὰ πρὸς εὐσέβειαν συντελοῦντα διατηροῦντας· οἷοι ἦσαν οἱ περὶ τὸν Μελχισεδὲκ, οἷος ἦν ὁ Ἰὼβ, οἷοι ἦσαν οἱ Νινευῖται, οἷος ἦν ὁ Κορνήλιος. S. Chryſoſt. in Rom. Λογ. 1.

(a) Montacut. ſupr. S. 71. Prideaux Lect. 8. Curcell. ſupr. S. 36.

(b) Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 3. Par. 3. Theſ. 11. Petav. T. 4. Par. 2. l. 13. c. 13. Montacut. ſupr. S. 63.

were either really ſuch, or whom they ſuppos'd to be ſuch; for if any of them allow Salvation to any that were ἕλληνες εἰδωλολατρεῦντες, (idolatrous Heathen Religioniſts,) it is through miſtake in Matter of Fact, becauſe they ſuppos'd thoſe Gentiles not to be ſuch Heathens. Touching whoſe Salvation and the method of obtaining it we will only add a wiſe and good Saying of a Divine of our own. (c) If any amongſt Heathens had done what he could, in ſeeking and ſerving God, he ſhould either for Chriſts ſake have been accepted with that little Knowledge he could attain; or elſe as Calvin ſaith, Comment, Act. 8. 13. Rather than he ſhould have periſhed, God would have ſent an Angel to reveal further things to him.

(c) Mr. Truman of Nat. and Mor. Impotency. p. 113. ed. 2.

VIII. A principal Branch of the deadlineſs of our Heathen State is our being the Subjects of Satan's Kingdom; which implieth, that the Heathen World of Mankind were under the Imperial Rule and Domination of Satan (ſeveral ways the Subjects of the Kingdom of Darkneſs) conſtituting his mundane Empire. So the Jews ſay of the Angel of Death (d) the whole World is in his Power except the Nation of Iſrael. His uſual Names denote him an Imperial Potentate; for he is ſtiled the God (Imperial Potentate) of this World, the Prince (that hath the Principality) of this World. Himſelf and his Angels are called ἀρχαὶ ϗ ἐξουσίαι, which Names ſpeak them Principalities and Powers of a mundane Empire, κοσμοκράτορες, mundi Potentes, the Rulers, or ruling Powers of this World. They are therefore mundane Principalities and ruling Powers, but ſuch as are Aerial-mundane; for being fallen from the Heavenly Manſions their Reſidence now (e) is in the Region of the Air, where they conſtitute amongſt themſelves a Kingdom or Empire conſiſting of lower and higher Orders, ſome being of inferiour and others of ſuperiour Rank and Condition, Principalities and Powers, but all of them ſubjected to, and united in one imperial Head, their great Lord and Maſter, the Prince of Devils, the Prince of the Power, (or Powers,) of the Air. The Wiſdom and Juſtice of Providence by baniſhing them out of Heaven hath plac'd them in the Air, in a Region of vicinity to, and a Station of ſuperiority above Mankind; and accordingly maketh uſe of them, to do the work of publick Officers in the Polity of our Syſtem. (f) As there are Executioners in Cities, and ſuch as are ſet over ſad but neceſſary buſineſſes in Commonwealths: So evil Demons are ſet over certain Affairs by him that adminiſtreth all things. But this Power which the evil Demons exerciſe over Mankind (by divine Conceſſion, by a probational or penal Tradition of Men into their hands and ſometimes by divine mandate and appointment) is rather Miniſterial than Imperial. 2 Chron. 18. 20, 21. Job 1. 12. and 2. 6. Pſal. 78. 49. Matth. 5. 25. and 18. 34. Luc. 22. 31. 1 Cor. 5. 5. and 10. 10. 1 Tim. 1. 20. Apoc. 12. 10. Beſides this Power of meer Officers and Executioners they have acquir'd a Power of Empire and Sovereignty over Mankind; which Power is (morally ſpeaking) in great degree unavoidable ſuppoſing their evil Neighbourhood to degenerate Mankind. For as theſe Aerial Powers are in place and ſtation ſuperiour to Mankind: So their Spiritual Nature, Angelical Order, Policy and Strength is ſuperiour to the Human (Spiritual unbody'd Wickedneſs is paramount to ſorry weak Fleſh and Blood;) they are alſo vaſtly numerous and cloſely united amongſt themſelves (which addeth to their Power,) and therefore if not confin'd by an higher Power they can Domineer and Lord it over Mankind, and doubtleſs they want not will to do it, ſeeing Empire and Dominion is their great Intereſt, Deſign and Buſineſs, Strength with them is the Law of Juſtice, and therefore as amongſt the Brute-animals the ſtronger beareth Rule over the weaker, ſo the ſtronger wicked Angels will have the Maſtery and bear Rule over the weaker wicked Mankind, menſuraque juris vis erit. They are alſo the moſt accompliſh'd Tempters imaginable, and have the greateſt advantages to make Mankind wicked (of themſelves prevalently prone to be wicked;) for they are not wanting in depth of Malice, in great intellectual Abilities, in knowledge of us and our Affairs, in large experience, cunning and dexterity, activity and aſſiduous Diligence, Hypocriſie, Impoſture, Cloſeneſs and Secrecy, in variety of Methods and Artifices; they are furniſh'd with all ſorts of Agents and Inſtruments, aſſiſted with the World's tempting Objects, and with the many and great weakneſſes and vicioſities of Man's Nature; in their Temptations they are mighty in Operation, (working efficaciouſly, with ſtrong deluſions, carrying captive,) ſometimes acting the Fox, and ſometimes the roaring Lion, ſometimes the old Serpent, and ſometimes the bloody red Dragon; upon all which accounts what can be reaſonably imagin'd, but that they will inveigle and vanquiſh the World of Mankind, and ſubject them to live under their Domination? As the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, Apoc. 12. 9. The old Serpent, called the Devil and Satan, deceiveth the whole World. The Heathen World therefore muſt be contemplated as Satan's mundane Empire, which he reigned over as an Imperial Potentate, and which was ſubject to his Rule and Domination; whence it is plain, that his magnificent pretenſion to our Saviour was not altogether groundleſs or devoid of Truth, that the Kingdoms of the World the Power and Glory of them was his and at his diſpoſal. (And hence (g) S. Hilary taketh the boldneſs to ſay of mundane Kings à Diabolo in regnum ſunt deputati.) Apoc. 13. 2. The bloody red Dragon (the Pagano-Roman Beaſt) maketh the Panther-like Beaſt (the Pagano-Chriſtian Roman Beaſt) his Succeſſor, and is ſaid to give him his Power and Seat and great Authority. So the Devil and his Angels are ſtiled, Eph. 6. 12. the Rulers of the Darkneſs of this World, to ſignifie, that they are the Rulers of that Darkneſs which Heatheniſm is, and conſequently of the dark benighted Heathen World. Agreeably whereunto the Doctor of the Gentiles is ſent to them upon this Errand, to open their Eyes, and to turn them from Darkneſs to Light, and from the Power of Satan unto God, Act. 26. 18. So the Converts to Chriſtianity (that were tranſlated into the Kingdom of God's dear Son) are ſaid to be deliver'd from the Power of Darkneſs, to which they were ſubject, Col. 1. 13. But this Subjection to the Power of Darkneſs is not to be confin'd to Heathens commonly ſo called, it is the common Condition of Mankind in general antecedently to the State and Life of true and ſaving Religion, as will appear from an enumeration of the ſeveral ways, whereby Mankind are ſubjected to Satan's Kingdom and Domination, (d) Lightfoot Hor. in Joh. 12. 31.

2 Cor. 4. 4. Joh. 12. 31. and 14. 30. and 16. 11. Rom. 8. 38. 1 Cor. 15. 24. Eph. 6. 12. Col. 2. 15.

(e) Ἀερίων ϗ ἐπιγείων πνευμάτων. Ignat. Ep. ad Epheſ.

Matth. 9. 34. Eph. 2. 2.

(f) Ὡς οἱ δήμιοι ἐν ταῖς πόλεσι ϗ οἱ τεταγμένοι ἐπὶ τῶν σκυθρωπῶν μὲν, ἀναγκαίων δὲ, ἐν ταῖς πολιτείαις πραγμάτων, οὕτως εἰσὶ τεταγμένοι μοχθηροὶ δαίμονες ἐπί τινων ὑπὸ τοῦ διοικοῦντος τὰ ὅλα. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 338. v. p. 398.

Eph. 6. 12.

Eph. 2. 2. 2 Theſſ. 2. 11. 2 Tim. 3. 26.

Luc. 4. 5, 6.

(g) Enarr. in Pſal. 2. p. m. 451.

which are theſe three : By way of penal Subjection, by may of criminal Subjection, By way of criminal-religious Subjection.

IX. All Mankind (antecedently to their being true and ſaving Religioniſts) belong to Satan's Kingdom and are under his Domination by way of penal Subjection. For the Apoſtle, Heb. 2. 14. expreſly attributeth to the Devil the Power or Empire of Death (τὸ κράτος) as his Empire. Which is an Empire agreeable to his Name Apollyon, and to thoſe Names which the Jews give him, אשמודי the Deſtroyer, Angelus Mortis, the Angel of Death. This Empire of Death, which the Apoſtle attributeth to the Devil, Chriſt died to deſtroy; therefore it muſt not be underſtood of temporal Calamities and bodily Death only: But principally of the penal Death of the Soul, which is Death everlaſting. Antecedently to Chriſts deſtroying his Empire, he had over Mankind dying in their Sins and in the State of Death and Condemnation this deadly Imperial Power, a Power to detain them under his Power, which is Death everlaſting. And becauſe he had this Branch of his Imperial Power by the Law-ſettlement, therefore a principal Branch of his Empire was not by meer Uſurpation, but ſo by Uſurpation, as to be withal by Law-authority. It was by a Power accruing to him from the Law-ſettlement, which is the Settlement of the Penal State of Death upon ungodly Sinners and deadly Criminals (all whoſe Sins are upon them,) that the Devil had Power to detain them under his Power after Death, and from the ſame Law-ſettlement he had Power, to detain them under his Power in their Life-time (ſo long as they continu'd ungodly Sinners, and if God in Chriſt had not made Proviſion for their Liberation;) this being the State of Death, to belong to his Kingdom, and ſo to be under his Domination and Power. Therefore they that are in the State of Death do belong to his Kingdom and are under his Domination and Power by Law. They that muſt be detain'd in the State of Death, muſt continue to belong to his Kingdom, and muſt be detain'd under his Domination and Power by Law. If without a Redemption-liberation by Chriſt Mankind would have remain'd in the State of Death, then without this Redemption-liberation they would have remain'd under Satan's Domination and Power by Law. So far as Chriſt hath redeem'd them from being in the State of Death, ſo far he hath redeem'd them from being under Satan's Domination and Power by Law either in this Life or after their Death. From which plain and intelligible explication of a principal Branch of the State of Death the Collect for Eaſter-day in our Engliſh Liturgy becometh plain and intelligible: Almighty God, who through thine only begotten Son Jeſus Chriſt, haſt overcome Death, and opened unto us the Gate of everlaſting Life. —— The Apoſtle's triumphant account of Chriſt's Victory upon the Croſs becometh eaſie and intelligible (which otherwiſe is unintelligible) Col. 2. 15. Having ſpoiled Principalities and Powers, he made a ſhew of them openly, triumphing over them in it. (h) All we were under Sin and Puniſhment, he being puniſh'd diſſolv'd both the Sin and Puniſhment.

Vid. Macar Hom. 22.

Not only the Souls of Men, but their Bodies alſo are penally ſubjected to Satan's Domination and Power, as appeareth from unqueſtionable Inſtances of diabolical Poſſeſſions and Infeſtations of the Body, which have great Analogy and Agreement with Temptations of the Soul. For as all Temptations (according to S. Chryſoſtom) are not from the Devil: So bodily Diſeaſes ordinarily are from Natural Cauſes. The evil Demons are of various kinds, adapted to various Imployments, and as their Temptations are various, ſo are the Impreſſions which they make, and the Diſeaſes which they produce in an Human Body. As ſome by their Wickedneſs of Nature tempt the Tempter, invite and draw wicked Spirits to aſſociate with them: So ſome are of ſuch a diſpoſition of Mind and Body, that evil Demons as naturally enter into and inhabit them, as the Form entreth the prepared Matter, or as in Peſtilential times People that are prediſpos'd catch the Contagion. Sometimes it is not diſcernable, whether a Temptation be meerly from depraved Nature, or in part Diabolical (who knoweth quid cordi, quid hoſti tribuat, what to charge upon his own Heart, and what upon the Tempter?) So in ſome Caſes it is not by us diſcernable, whether a Diſeaſe of Mind and Body be meerly Natural, or in part Diabolical; and therefore Diabolical Poſſeſſion and Infeſtation is a matter liable both to wilful Impoſture and innocent Miſtake. But as ſome Temptations are manifeſtly Satan's Suggeſtions, and have the Marks and Characters of a Diabolical Original: So in ſome that are diſtemper'd in Mind and Body there are evident Marks and Characters of a Diabolical Poſſeſſion and Infeſtation; as when they ſpeak Latin, Greek or Hebrew, which they never learn'd, tell People their Secrets, diſcover ſuch things done at a diſtance, and things to come, which are beyond Human Cogniſance, or when they are oppreſs'd, afflicted, abuſed in meaſure and manner beyond the reach of Natural Cauſes, or when from the Nature, Symptoms, Cauſes and Circumſtances of a Diſtemper it plainly appeareth to be nothing better than a Diabolical Poſſeſſion and Infeſtation. By theſe Indications Demoniacks and Energumeni (Men acted by an evil Spirit) are diſcernable by us, who have no extraordinary Faculty of diſcerning them: But as the Jews in the latter times of their Commonwealth were much addicted to Magick, (i) ſo in thoſe times they had their Magical Exorciſts (ſome of their Exorciſts were of a better Character,) who had an extraordinary Faculty of diſcerning Demons and Demoniacks. And theſe Magical Exorciſts ſet up a Trade of diſcovering and curing Demoniacks; which is an Argument, that they very much abounded in thoſe Magical times. As Ignorance, Atheiſm, Fanaticiſm and Witchcraft, (with other Vices and Diſeaſes) abound much more in ſome times than in others, ſo do Diabolical Poſſeſſions and Infeſtations; which Providence might permit to abound about our Saviour's time, to give occaſion for his glorious Miracles. If they had not abounded in thoſe times, it is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the Jews would generally have entertain'd this Opinion, (k) that their more grievous Diſeaſes were from the operation of evil Demons or complicated with them. Which Judaical Notion is ſo far entertain'd by the Phyſicians of our own Nation, that of the common Opinion, which is, that the Devil doth immiſcere ſe in ſeveral Diſeaſes (l) Sir Theodore Mayern gave a notable Inſtance, concerning a Maid in his Houſe, that had been bitten by a mad Dog, who alſo died of it: to whom when he came in a Morning with

S. Bernard.

a

(h) Πάντες ἦμεν ὑφ᾽ ἁμαρτίαν ϗ κόλασιν, αὐτὸς κολασθεὶς ἔλυσε ϗ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν ϗ τὴν κόλασιν. S.Chryſoſt. in loc.

(i) V. Dr. Hammond on Matth. 12. 27. Spencer in Orig. c. Celſ. p. 17, 18.

(k) Lightfoot Hor. in Matth. 17. 15. & in Luc. 13. 11.

(l) Dr. Mer. Caſaubon of Credul. and Incredul. p. 3

a Looking-glaſs (to make trial of what he had read, but not yet experienc'd himſelf) under his Gown, before he was in the Room, ſhe began to cry out, and told him what it was he had about him. Another ſaith of the Epilepſie; (m) Indeed in this Diſtemper there appear ſo obſcure footſteps or rather none at all of a morbific Matter, that we may deſervedly ſuſpect here the Afflation of a maleficent Spirit. The much greater part and more eminent ſort of Demoniacks which our Saviour had to do with (though not the only) were Epileptical, Melancholical, Lunatic and Maniacal Perſons (as appeareth from the Goſpel,) whoſe horrible Diſtempers were either originally caus'd by or complicated with evil Demons. He gave a demonſtration both of his Divine Goodneſs and Power in giving them relief from their hideous Calamities, reſcuing them from under the Domination and Power of the infernal Goblings, beating Satan out of his Quarters, vanquiſhing him in his own Territories, and therefore the Apoſtle's celebrate him for this Godlike Atchievement. Act. 10. 38. He went about doing good and healing all that were oppreſs'd of the Devil. His Diſciples experimented the Divinity of his Power, and that his Empire was ſuperior to the Diabolical; and therefore after he had ſent them abroad, they returned to him with Exultation and Triumph, Luk. 10. 17. Lord, even the Devils are ſubject unto us through thy Name.

X. All Mankind (antecedently to their being true and ſaving Religioniſts) belong to Satan's Kingdom, and are under his Domination and Rule by way of criminal Subjection. For in this Senſe the Fathers ſay, (n) The evil and apoſtate Demons got for their ſhare the Inhabitants of the Earth. Atheous Mankind muſt not think, to live alone out of the State of Society with the inviſible World. The Devil's uſual Name, the wicked and evil One, denoteth him the Prince or Chieftain of all wicked and evil Ones. They are his Partiſans and Societiſts, he is the Head of their Party, the Leader and they are the Followers (that are turned aſide after Satan,) the Ring-leader that began the wild Riſque of ſinning againſt God, and they dance after his Pipe. He ſounded the Trump of Rebellion, and all Rebel-ſinners conſort with him and are his Fellow-Rebels. (o) He ruleth the Men and Nations that do his Will. He ruleth them in making them atheous and wicked, and when they become ſuch, their Life is an obeying, pleaſing him, doing him Service, and his Servants they are, to whom they obey. His Rule and Empire therefore is commenſurate with the Reign of Sin, and is no leſs invincible. He reigneth and is in Empire and Domination over all Mankind, over whom Sin reigneth; and his Kingdom (the comprehenſion of all that are his as his Portion and peculiar Poſſeſſion,) is (p) the City, that is the Society, of the impious. He is the imperant Party (that hath the Rule,) wicked Men and Angels are the ſubject Party; he is the General, theſe are his Army; occaſionally they are his Agents imploy'd in his Affairs, and they are the Adherents to his Cauſe and Intereſt, which is Sin and Impiety; for where Wickedneſs prevaileth and reigneth, there he prevaileth and reigneth, and there his Throne is, Apoc. 2. 13. The World therefore that lieth in Wickedneſs, lieth ἐν τῷ πονηρῷ, in the wicked One, as many would have the words rendred. 1 Joh. 5. 19. For as they that are in Chriſtianiſm of Life, are in Chriſt, becauſe they are in that ſpecific Comprehenſion of things, which Chriſt is of as the imperial Eſtate thereof; they that are Theiſm of Life, are in God (their Works are wrought in God:) So they that are in Diaboliſm of Life and Practice, are in the wicked One, becauſe they are in that ſpecific Comprehenſion of Darkneſs and Wickedneſs, which the Devil is of as the imperial Eſtate thereof. His Empire is the Kingdom of Wickedneſs and of the wicked (which ſheweth the Extent and Boundary of it;) therefore the whole wicked World belongeth to his Empire. So far they are under his Rule and Domination, he governeth their Life and Praſtice (and therefore governeth them,) he maketh them to do what he would have them to do, to be what he would have them to be, and what himſelf eminently is, atheouſly dark, vitally black, ugly and horrid, (q) poiſonouſly malevolent, deadly inimical to Goodneſs, enormouſly ſelfiſh, proud, ambitious, imperious, ſcornful, hurtful, ferine, murtherous, lying, treacherous, unclean, brutiſh, worldly in Diſpoſition and Practice. They walk according to the Prince of the Power of the Air (walking according to the courſe of this World,) which Prince and Power taken collectively are a Spirit mightily operative in the Sons of Diſobedience by way of Inſpiration, Afflation, internal Motion, Perſwaſion and Suggeſtion. Eph. 2. 2, 3. They are animated by the Agency of that great One that is in the World (and Origen thinketh, (r) that the Chriſtians Perſecutors had Souls full of evil Demons;) they are therefore a ſort of Energumeni, that are acted by a Diabolical Spirit; for ſo Satan governeth their Life and Practice; not only by tempting Objects, external Agents and Means, but by internal Operation, blinding the Mind, putting into the Heart, filling the Heart, prevalently inſtigating them to atheous Conceits and Opinions (which are of his Motion and Inſpiration) to vile and nefarious Affections, Paſſions and Practices, (s) and a μαινόμενον ϛόμα, mad raging Mouth; averting them from Holineſs and their true Happineſs, prompting, perſwading and deceiving them to Sin and Wickedneſs (to their ruin,) ſometimes impelling them into the fire of Luſt, and ſometimes into the water of Drunkenneſs (Matth. 17. 15.) for they are not only in Servitude under Sin, but alſo in Servitude, Bondage and Vaſſalage under the wicked One. 2 Pet. 2. 19. Of whom a Man is overcome, of the ſame is he brought in Bondage. He hath overcome them, when he hath drawn them into any courſe of Wickedneſs, they are then in a Snare of the Devil, and are as Captives to a Conqueror (ἐζωγρημένοι, 2 Tim. 2. 26.) as Slaves to a Maſter, he hath them in Poſſeſſion and hath them for an Habition, Matth. 12. 43. Like a mighty Pharaoh he commandeth them, and commandeth over them with reigning prevalent Power and Puiſſance, whereby they are enthrall'd and enſlav'd; he putteth upon them the vileſt Practices, the baſeſt and moſt painful Drudgeries, and they ſerve and obey (not conſidering what a Maſter they ſerve, uſually deſigning only to ſerve their own Luſts, in the fury whereof he hurrieth them like the Swine to Perdition;) they are ſubjected to his ruling

Matth. 13. 19. 1 Joh. 2. 13. 1 Tim. 5. 15.

1 Joh 4. 4.

2 Cor. 4. 4. Joh. 13. 2. Act. 5. 3.

(m) Revera in hoc affectu materiæ morbificæ adeo obſcura aut prorſus nulla veſtigia apparent, ut meritò hic Spiritus malefici afflatum ſuſpicemur. Dr Willis Pathol. Cerebr. cap. 2.

(n) Διεμοιρήσαντο μὲν τὺς ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς οἱ πονηροί τε καὶ ἀποϛάται δαίμονες. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 4. p. 150.

(o) Imperat Nationibus voluntatem ejus facientibus. S. Ambr. Hexaem. l. 1. c. 4.

(p) Civitas, hoc eſt, Societas impiorum. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 13. c. 9.

(q) Euſeb. pr. ev. l. 7. c. 16.

(r) C. Celſ. l. 8. p. 406.

(s) Jambl. de myſt. S. 3. c. 31. Gale not. p. 224.

ruling Policy and Power, and are in the Condition of Bondſlaves in his Kingdom. (t) Men are the work of God in as much as they are Men; but in as much as they are Sinners, they are under the Devil.

They are alſo in various degrees and meaſures the Children of the wicked one, originally and of kind and quality they are of the wicked one, of the Devil as the Father of their Family, a Serpentine Brood and Race, diabolici generis (of the Diabolical Kind and Kindred) as Martial Men are the Sons of Mars, and Phyſicians are the Sons of Æſculapius, of the ſame Alliance and Cognation are all Evil Ones to the Evil One. They muſt refer their Original (as the ancient Gauls (u) did) ad Ditem, unto Pluto, the oldeſt in Wickedneſs and wicked to the height of being ſo, who is the Head of their Anceſtry and Alliance, the top of their Kin, and Father of their Diſpoſition and Practice, the maker of a World of Sinners (as ſuch) the Founder of their Race, the Inventor of their ſinning Trade; they ſymbolize with him and are of his Genius and Humour, of his Footmark and Phyſiognomy; as Children are of a Father, ſo are they his living Images, and reſemble him in rebellious ſinning againſt God, which is his Diabolism, 1 Joh. 3. 8. He that committeth Sin (is a committer of Sin) is of the Devil; for the Devil ſinneth from the beginning; the meaning whereof is, that he is the Father of the ſinning Family, and that ſinning is peculiarly his kind of thing. The deadly ſinning Family muſt not think themſelves injur'd, if they are denominated the Mankind of Ophites and the Juniour Satanians, of the ſame Kingdom, Kind and Family with the Seniour Diaboliſts and Satanians (w) Every one that chuſeth Wickedneſs and followeth the Life which is according to it, he doing the contraries to Virtue, is a Satan, that is, an Adverſary to the Son of God. (x) In ſinning he chuſeth the ſame things with the Demons, and thereby becometh a Demonic Man. In thy Execrations, ſaith Tertullian to an Heathen, (y) a Man of Uncleanneſs, Malicionſneſs, Inſolence, or other Blemiſh which we attribute to Devils, is called Devil. The ſting of this Reproach is the truth of it; for our Saviour ſaith of a nefarious Miſcreant amongſt his Diſciples, Have not I choſen you twelve, and one of you is a Devil? Joh. 6. 70. Such is a Son of Belial (for Belial is one of Satan's Names, 2 Cor. 6. 15.) and ſuch are the Children of the wicked one (in various degrees) and all that belong to the Synagogue of Satan, who are neceſſarily under his Domination by way of Criminal Subjection. (z) Man in the time of his Infidelity, and of his Sins ariſing from Infidelity is under the Angels of Satan, the malignant Spirits and unclean Devils.

XI. Almoſt the whole World of Mankind was ſometime under Satan's Domination and Power by way of Criminal-Religious Subjection, as being the Religioniſts of his Inſtitution and his Religious Worſhipers. One ſort of theſe Diabolical Religioniſts are Witches and Magicians, (that do Religious Worſhip to the Devil or to ſome principal Officers of his Kingdom;) for theſe are ſo uſual in all Countries, their Exiſtence is ſo well atteſted by common Experience, and by Perſons of unqueſtionable Learning and Veracity, ſo acknowledg'd by Heathens, by all wiſe Laws and Governments, and by the Holy Scriptures, is of Theory ſo unexceptionably rational, and the Objections againſt it are ſo trifling and inconſiderable, that it can be nothing but diſaffection to Religion, which cauſeth any to deny their Exiſtence, the confident Exploders of Witches muſt be (worſe than Heathens) either Seniour or Youngling Atheiſts, which will be no Believers (in a virtuous ſenſe,) yet are the moſt ſuperlative Believers; for they believe the groſſeſt Abſurdities, and may juſtly be denominated the Non-ſenſe Believers. Another inſtance of Diabolical Religioniſts are the Heretical-Pagan Gnoſticks, that infeſted the Primitive Church, who not only (like other Magicians) aſſociated themſelves and confederated with the Devil, but they alſo excogitated a Recondite-Theology and Religion, which was Magick and Demonolatry, a doing Religious Worſhip to certain Principalities which they allotted to their fictitious Heavens (a) Ialdabaoth, Thauthabaoth, Thartharaoth, and ſuch more. Some Branches of them upon the account of their Religious Worſhip were called Ophitæ, Serpent-worſhippers; Sataniani, Satan's Religioniſts; which is the heavy Character of the whole World of Heathen Religioniſts, as appeareth from the Hiſtorical Accounts of Heathen Countries, from their Theology and Religion, from the nature of Chriſtianity and the ſenſe of all Chriſtians, and from this Teſtimony of Holy Scripture, which is the acknowledgment of ſeveral Learned Pagans and the Heretical Pagans alſo, That what the Gentiles and the Gentilizing Iſraelites ſacrific'd, they ſacrific'd to Devils, not to God; Levit. 17. 7. Deut. 32. 17. Pſal. 106. 37. 1 Cor. 10. 20. (b) We have determin'd to eſchew as Perdition the worſhip of Demons (or Devils,) and we affirm, that all the ſuppos'd God-worſhip of the Greeks, which is converſant about Altars, Statues and Temples, is the worſhip of Devils. (c) The worſhip of thoſe whom the Gentiles call Gods, is the worſhip of Evil Demons. The Chriſtians uſually call their Doctrines, (d) Doctrines of Devils, their Altars (e) the Devil's Altars, the Crown wherewith their Altars, Sacrifices, Prieſts (and Doors alſo) were adorn'd, (f) the Devil's Crown, their Prieſts (g) the Devil's Prieſts, their Religion (h) the Devil's Inſtitution, their Inſpirations, Afflations and Methods of Divination (i) Diabolical, their Sacrifices (k) the Food and Delight of Devils, their Gods (l) abominable and unclean Demons, improbous Spirits that are God's Adverſaries; their Oracles (m) the Oracles of deceiving impoſtorous Demons, their Feſtivals, Prayers, Hymns, Praiſes, Oblations, Thank-offerings (n) not Services to God at all, but to improbous deteſtable Demons, to whom alſo their Temples were erected; the lighting of Candles and all things that were done in honour of their Idols, their Amulets and Inſcriptions on Leaves

---

(t) Homines opus ſunt Dei in quantum homines ſunt; ſed ſub Diabolo ſunt, in quantum peccatores ſunt. S. Aug. contr. 2. Ep. Pelag. l. 1. c. 18.

Matt. 3. 7. and 13. 38. and 23. 33. Joh. 8. 44. 1 Joh. 3. 8, 10.

(u) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 2. c. 62.

Gen. 4. 31.

(w) Πᾶς γὰρ ὁ τὴν κακίαν ἑλόμενος, καὶ τὸν κατ' αὐτὴν βίον, ὡς τὰ ἐναντία πράττων τῇ ἀρετῇ, Σατανᾶς ἐστι, τουτέστιν ἀντικείμενος τῷ υἱῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 6. p. 306.

(x) Τὰ δὲ αὐτὰ τοῖς δαιμονίοις κατὰ τὸ ἁμαρτάνειν αἱρούμενος —— Γίνεται ἄνθρωπος δαιμονικός. Clem. Strom. l. 6. p. m. 438.

(y) Dæmonium vocas hominem aut immunditia, aut malitia, aut inſolentia, aut quacunque macula (affectum) quam nos Dæmoniis deputamus. Tertull. de Teſt. An. c. 3.

(z) Eſt homo quidem in tempore infidelitatis ſuæ & peccatorum ſuorum ex infidelitate naſcentium ſub Angelis Satanæ & ſpiritibus malignis & immundis dæmoniis. Origen. ap. Spencer. Not. in Orig. c. Celſ. p. 82.

(a) Spence ſupr. p. &c.

(b) Διὸ δέδοκται ἡμῖν φεύγειν ὡς ὄλεθρον τὴν τῶν δαιμόνων θεραπείαν· δαιμόνων δὲ θεραπείαν εἶναί φαμεν πᾶσαν τὴν νομιζομένην παρ' Ἕλλησι περὶ βωμοὺς καὶ ἀγάλματα καὶ ναοὺς θεῶν θρησκείαν. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 378, 373.

(c) Θεραπεία δαιμόνων ἐστὶν ἡ θεραπεία τῶν ὀνομαζομένων θεῶν. Ibid.

(d) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 14. c. 9.

(e) S. Cyp. Ep. 52.

(f) Idem de Lapſis.

(g) Tertull. de exhort. caſt. c. 13. S. Aug. enar. in Pſ. 94.

(h) Euſeb. Pr. Ev. l. c. 16. Gr. Naz. or. 3. p. 547.

(i) S. Cypr. de Idol. van.

(k) P. Pantin. not. de vit. Thecl. p. 381. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 4. p. 125.

(l) Ibid. & Euſeb. ſupr. l. 4. c. 4. Lactant. l. 2. c. 15. Jul. Firmic. de err. prof. rel. p. 42, 44.

(m) Euſeb. ſupr. l. 3. c. 17. & l. 4. & l. 5. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p.

(n) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 4. p. 121, 124.

(o) λατρεία τȣ̃ διαβόλȣ, the worſhip of the Devil; their Games, Spectacles, ſplendid Shews, and the like Vanity (p) πομπὴ τȣ̃ διαβόλȣ, the Devil's Pomp. Agreeable whereunto is that Deſcription of Heatheniſm compris'd in our abrenunciation of it at our Chriſtian Baptiſm (which was anciently in moſt places larger than it is now,) I renounce Satan and his Angels, and all his Works and his Pomps (the Expreſſion anciently was not the Pomps of the World, but the Devil's Pomps) and all his Worſhip. So the Apoſtle confronteth and oppoſeth the Cup and Table of the Lord to the Cup and Table of Devils in the Heathen Idol-Feaſts, 1 Cor. 10. 21. So the Pagano-Roman Empire is ſaid to be (q) Satanæ principi ejuſque Angelis Dæmonibus, religionis nomine ſubditum, ſubjected to Satan the Chieftain, and to his Angels the Demons by way of Criminal-Religious Subjection; by the Holy Ghoſt it is repreſented as a Demonarchy (Satan and his Angels were in reigning Condition, whilſt Paganiſm flouriſh'd, but Chriſtianity threw them down, Apoc. 12. 8.) and all that Empire's Idol-worſhip is ſtiled the Worſhip of Devils, Apoc. 9. 20. Chriſtianity therefore ſuppoſeth, that the World of Heathens through their own Weakneſs and Wickedneſs, and the Artifices of Satan (Viſions, Prodigies, (r) Oracles, Vaticinations, Healings and moving the Images,) were ſeduc'd into an Opinion, that the improbous Demons were Gods, (s) that they proſtituted their Souls, to be corrupted by them, (t) were enſlav'd to them and ſubjected to their Domination and Power as the Religioniſts of Satan, who had at Rome and in other places as it were his Imperial Seat and Throne, Apoc. 2. 13. and 13. 2. The Infants of the Heathen are call'd by Tertullian, (u) genimina dæmoniorum candidata, becauſe the Heathen from their birth by multifarious idolatrous Rites were dedicated to Evil Demons. Theſe they invited, to be the Inmates and Inhabitants of their Souls; theſe they deputed to be the Guardians of their Life: To theſe they attributed a Mundane Preſidency, pay'd the Divine Honours and a Religious Subjection, managing both their Civil and Religious Affairs by their Conduct. And ſo abſolute and univerſal was the Reign and Domination of Satan in this World, that in ſome ancient forms of Abrenunciation at Baptiſm, it is called his World. (w) Renuncio Satanæ & Mundo ejus. Some Abrenunciations were of this form; (x) Renuncio tibi & pompæ tuæ, & vitiis tuis, & mundo qui in maligno poſitus eſt, I renounce thee (the Prince of this World) and thy Pomps, and thy Vices, and the World which lieth in the Wicked One.

Not only the Chriſtian Church, but the Gnoſtick Hereſie in ſome ſort ſuppoſeth the Domination of Satan over this World (of which near two third Parts are ſaid to be at this Day groſs Heathen Idolaters;) for in their Scheme of Powers (y) Diabolus hath a place, and they called him κοσμοκράτορα, Ruler of the World. And in the Dialogue againſt the Marcionites (by ſome attributed to Origen) Marcion is repreſented as holding three Principles; (z) One is ἡ ἀγαθὴ ἀρχὴ, the good Principle, the Father of Chriſt, which preſideth over the Chriſtians: Another is ἡ δημιουργικὴ, the Demiurgic Principle which made the World and preſided over the Jews: A third is ἡ πονηρὰ, the Evil Principle which preſideth over the Gentile. The Learned Writers of the Gentiles do not only inform us, (a) that they worſhipp'd Arimanius, Cacodæmones, Vejoves, whom they knew to be Evil Spirits; but ſome of their Learned Theologers were of Opinion, that a conſiderable part of their Religion was the Religion of Evil Demons, whom the generality of the Pagans ignorantly worſhipp'd. (b) Porphyry diſcourſeth at large of Evil Demons, of their Religious Worſhip amongſt the Pagans, and of their delight in Cruentous Sacrifices. Plutarch diſcourſeth, that the Order of Demons is obnoxious to Paſſion, and of Brutal Affections, which are Properties (c) of which there are footſteps and marks in their Sacrifices and Myſteries. And having enumerated ſeveral Rites of their Religion, the tearing and devouring raw Fleſh, and other Diſcerptions, Howlings, Obſcene Speeches in their Sacra, Madneſſes excited with noiſe and jactation of the Neck, he ſaith of them, (d) They are not the Worſhip of any of the Gods, but are inſtituted, to ſweeten and placate Evil Demons. Theſe Acknowledgments of Learned Pagans are great approaches to the Chriſtian Hypotheſis (that the Heathen World were Satan's Religioniſts, the Religioniſts of his Mundane Empire) of the truth whereof there are many plain Appearances in the Religion of Paganiſm, we will content our ſelves to remark ſome of the moſt conſiderable of them.

(o) Cyril. Catechiſm. p. 229.

(p) Ibid.

(q) Mr. Mede Clav. Apoc. ad c. 6, 11.

(r) Euſeb. ſupr. l. 5. c. 2. l. 7. c. 16.

(s) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 19. c. 25.

(t) Idem c. Jul. l. 4. c. 3. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 5. p. 172.

(u) De Anim. c. 39.

(w) Mr. Mede Clav. Apoc. ad c. 14. 1.

(x) Dr. Hammond paræn. c. 2. S. 15.

(y) Spencer. not. in Orig. p. 77.

(z) P. 4.

(a) Grot. de V. R. C. l. 4. S. 3. Windet. de vit. funct. S. 3.

(b) De Abſt. l. 2. S. 42, 43.

(c) Ὧν ἴχνη καὶ σύμβολα πολλαχȣ̃ θυσίαι καὶ τελεταὶ σώζȣσι. De orac. def. p. 417.

(d) Θεῶν μὲν οὐδενὶ, δαιμόνων δὲ φαύλων ἀποτροπῆς ἕνεκα φήσαιμ' ἂν τελεῖν μειλίχια καὶ παραμύθια. Ibid.

CHAP. VIII.

1. In Paganiſm there is a plain appearance of Satan's Pagano-Mundane Empire in the Character and Quality of its Supreme Deity. 2. In the Character and Quality of its Supreme Deity conſider'd as conjunct with the Subordinate Deities. 3. In the Pagans mighty Veneration of Serpents. 4. In their ἀνθρωποθυσίαι, Humane Sacrifices. 5. In their Sorcery and Wizzardiſm reported by the Scriptures and by the Pagans themſelves, who ſo far miſtook it, that they counted much of Diabolical Magick innocent and laudable Practice. 6. Of the Univerſal Empire and Domination of Magick in Paganiſm. 7. Of the Pagans Inchantments. 8. Of their Inchantments, Spells and Charms procuring Good and averting Evil. 9. Of their Medical Inchantments, Spells and Charms. 10. Of their univerſal addictedneſs to Divination. 11. Of their Modes of Divination that were Magick. 12. Other Modes of Divination of the ſame nature. 13. Of the Divinatory Enthuſiaſm and Magical Statues. 14. That the Pagan Religion was Magick in many reſpects. 15. Of the Jews, Muhammedans and pretended Chriſtians Magick. 16. A Sixth plain appearance of Satan's Pagano-Mundane Empire in the Magick of the Philoſophic Pagans, that were Magical Saintiſts. 17. Of Socrates and the Platoniſts, that they were Magical Saintiſts.

I. THE Learned Origen (although his Antipathy againſt the Popular-Pagan Theiſm is laudable Piety, yet) is culpably deficient in his reaſonings againſt the Pagan Jove, whoſe Character and Quality is one plain appearance of Satan's Pagano-Mundane Empire. (e) Celſus ſuppoſeth it a matter of Indifferency, whether we call the Supreme God Dia or Zena as the Greeks, Adonai or Sabaoth as the Hebrews, Ammoun as the Egyptians, or as the Scythians Pappæus. Origen replieth (not like a Philoſopher) that Names do not ſignifie by inſtitution, as Ariſtotle ſuppoſeth; that certain Names Adonai or Sabaoth, which are of great force in Magical Inchantments, loſe their Virtue, if turn'd into another Language (which is an Anſwer altogether impertinent to the Buſineſs of Religion;) that becauſe of the many impure Fables touching Jupiter Chriſtians would not call the Supreme Deity by ſuch a Name, approving the Saying of Plato in his Philebus, to be Religious about the Names of the Gods; as if the Conteſt between the Chriſtian and Pagan Theiſts was a Diſpute about the uſe of a Word or Name. Theſe are ſome defects of Reaſon in the Reaſonings of ſo great a Man, who notwithſtanding his antipathy againſt the Popular-Pagan Jove, yet hath ſo great a kindneſs for the Platoniſts Jove, (f) that he alloweth him to be the true God; which goeth a great way towards making the Conteſt between the Chriſtian and Pagan Theiſts a Diſpute about a Word or Name only. (g) But as the Schools ſay of the Angels, that (by a diſcontinuous motion) they can paſs from one extreme to another without paſſing the middle: So Origen from granting too much immediately proceedeth to grant too little; (h) we do not ſuppoſe Jove and Sabaoth the ſame, nor do we ſuppoſe Jove to be at all any God, but a certain Devil, that delighteth in that Name, no Friend to Men, nor to the true God. As if the Pagans Jove was of no more Notions than one, or as if Paganiſm was intirely nothing elſe but Diaboliſm. The Humane Naturaliſm that is in Paganiſm, muſt not be confounded with the Diaboliſm that is in it; nor muſt their real Jove (the real Imperial Eſtate of their Theopolity) be confounded with their but Ideal and but Imaginary Joves. The Name underſtood in a general indeterminate Notion (abſtracting from Specific and individual determination) is the very ſame with this Name, the Supreme God underſtood in the ſame manner; and this but Ideal Jove is Humane Naturaliſm (agreeable to true Religion) without any thing of Diaboliſm. But with this Name, Notion and Idea the Pagans inveſted the Mundane Soul, a Platonic Principle, Jupiter of Crete and the Sun; and theſe Joves that were but Imaginary Joves, muſt not be called Evil Demons. But their only real Jove, the real Imperial Eſtate of their Religious Imperial Polity, the Kingdom of Darkneſs, becauſe he is the Imperial Eſtate of the Kingdom of Darkneſs, could be no other than the grand Evil Demon, who made himſelf an Imperial Eſtate of Religion and God-head to the World of Heathen Mankind. So Clemens (i) calleth Serapis (the Jupiter or Supreme Deity of the Egyptians) τὸν μεγαλοδαίμονα, the great Evil Demon. (k) King Jupiter himſelf ſweareth religiouſly by the Stygian Waters; for with horrour he preſageth the puniſhment that is deſtinated to him and his Worſhippers. (l) The unjuſt ſhall riſe to Torments eternal. Theſe are the Idol-worſhippers, that have not known, or have deny'd the Lord and Parent of the World. Their Lord alſo will be taken with his Officers, and condemn'd to Puniſhment. (m) Shall Jupiter be called a God, that (in his Oracles Dodonean or Ammonian) affixeth the crime of Impiety upon ſuch as ſerve the Supreme King, or wreſteth his Majeſty to himſelf? (n) None but the Stygian Jupiter can be a Jupiter Elicius (modum eliciendi Jovem Numa edoctus,) no other had his Imperial Seat at Rome in the Capitol. (o) Titus Latinus or Atinius (mention'd by many Roman Authors) a Roman Plebeian, was in a Dream commanded by Jupiter, to go and charge the Senate, to reſtore the Scenical Plays, telling them, that if they neglected it, ſome great Calamity would befall the City. But the Man through fearfulneſs neglected Jupiter's command; whereupon his Son was preſently ſnatch'd away by death. And in another Dream the God expoſtulated with him, whether he had not been ſufficiently puniſh'd for neglecting his Command? The Man ſtill continuing his fearfulneſs and neglect, was ſeiz'd with (e) L. 5. p. 259. l. 4. p. 196.

(f) L. 6. p. 276.

(g) Liv. Galant. l. 5. p. 159.

(h) Ἀλλ' οὐδ' ὅλως θεόν τι τὸν Δία, Δαίμονα δέ τινα.

(i) Πρ p. m. 23.

(k) Ipſe Rex Jupiter per torrentes ripas & atram voraginem jurat religioſè; deſtinatam enim ſibi cum ſuis cultoribus pœnam præſcius perhorreſcit. Min. Fel. p. 330.

(l) Excitabuntur injuſti ad cruciatus ſempiternos. Hi ſunt qui manu facta coluerunt, qui Dominum mundi ac Parentem vel neſcierunt vel abnegaverunt. Sed & Dominus illorum cum Miniſtris ſuis comprehendetur, ad pœnamque damnabitur. Lactant. l. 7. c. 26.

(m) Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 1. p. 14.

(n) Ibid. l. 5. p. 155.

(o) Val. Max. l. 1. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 4. c. 26.

with an horrible Diſeaſe in his Body; whereupon, by the Advice of his Friends, he was carry'd to the Senate in a Litter, and having told his Dream to them and deliver'd his Meſſage, immediately he recover'd his Health. The Senate aſtoniſh'd with ſuch a Miracle, were of Opinion, that the Plays ought to be reſtor'd with quadruple Money. (p) Quis non videat, qui ſanum ſapit, ſubditos homines malignis dæmonibus? What Man of ſenſe may not ſee, that Mankind are ſubjected to malign Demons?

II. A ſecond plain appearance in Paganiſm of Satan's Pagano-mundane Empire is the Quality and Character of the Supreme Deity and the Subordinate Deities in conjunction; for the Subordinate Deities are call'd by Celſus (q) ἐναέριοι ϗ ἐπίγειοι σατράπαι, the Aerial and Terreſtrial great Rulers, which are the ſame that Chriſtianity calleth the Principalities and Powers of the dark Kingdom. Theſe ſeduc'd Mankind from true Religion and Piety, and from the worſhip of one only God, were Adverſaries to his Religion and Religioniſts, and no Wickedneſs of Practice or of Principle was intolerable to theſe reputed Deities, nor any thing but God's Religion. Theſe Gods were celebrated amongſt the Heathen for all manner of lewd Pranks: Theſe fill'd the Earth and Air with atrocious Wickedneſs; (r) theſe undertook to gratifie Mens Amours in drawing others that were averſe to be in love with them; (s) Theſe inhabited and animated Statues, (t) Theſe were wicked and impoſtorous oracular Deities; (u) Theſe were Magical Deities, that taught Magick, were ſubject to Magick Inchantments and Necromantic θεαγωγίαι (Evocations of the Gods;) and ſo manifeſtly were many of theſe Subordinate Deities Evil Demons, that the beſt learned of the Pagan Theologers account them ſuch. Of theſe Paganical Deities Jove is the Societive King, one of them as their Head and Chieftain, as he is repreſented by a late Deiſt in his Maxims of Theology, (w) Eſſe ſupremum aliquod Numen, ſupremum aliquod in Deorum claſſe, That there is a Supreme Deity, a Supreme in the Claſſis of the Gods. In the Claſſis of the Gods all the other Deities are manifeſtly Evil Demons, and ſhall the Supreme of them be counted the true God? (x) Deus deorum non poteſt intelligi Deus dæmoniorum, & rex magnus ſuper omnes deos abſit ut dicatur rex magnus ſuper omnia dæmonia: The God of Gods cannot be deem'd the God of Devils, and the great King above all Gods may not be called the great King above all Devils. The true God is not of that Alliance, nor of their Society; but the Pagans Supreme God (y) diſtributeth particular Offices, Nations and Cities to Mars, Mercury, Minerva (and ſuch more) is their Societive Head, and muſt be reckon'd one of them, (z) οἱ Δαίμονες μετὰ τοῦ ἡγουμένου αὐτῶν Διός, the Demons with their Captain Jove. (a) What is the reaſon that the Evil Demons are afraid of Chriſt, not afraid of Jove, but becauſe thoſe are Evil Demons, who are commonly ſuppos'd to be Gods? adjur'd by the Name of the true God preſently they fly away. If they ſuppoſe, that we are not to be believ'd, let them believe Homer, who reckoneth that Supreme Jove with the Demons. This is the Senſe of all the Ancient Writers of the Church (without exception of any,) all of them cite the Pſalmiſts words, Pſal. 96. 5. according to the Verſion of the LXX. and thus underſtand them, πάντες οἱ θεοὶ τῶν ἐθνῶν δαιμόνια, all the Gods of the Heathen are Devils. The Heathens Jove therefore (whom they inveſted with this Idea, The Supreme God) is ſuppos'd to be the King of Devils; which Hypotheſis involveth this other; That the true God was not the Deity of a Religion amongſt the Pagans, or one of their Deities of Religious Worſhip. The Evil Demons that conducted their Affairs, aim'd at nothing leſs, (b) than to extinguiſh the knowledge of God in the World, to rob him of his Honour and Service amongſt Men, and that he might have no People upon Earth, but that all might be like themſelves, Satanians and Enemies to God. Their deſign was, (c) to have themſelves worſhipped, God's worſhip being wholly excluded.

III. A third plain appearance in Paganiſm of Satan's Pagano-mundane Empire is the mighty Veneration of Serpents amongſt the Pagans. For although in Mankind there is an innate enmity againſt Serpents (the whole kind of them) (d) although their noxious Nature and Qualities were not unknown to the Heathen, (among the Egyptians that worſhipp'd Serpents the Bird Ibis was alſo worſhipped for deſtroying them, as both the Sheep and the Wolf were worſhipp'd amongſt them;) yet ſo univerſally did the Worſhip of Serpents prevail in Paganiſm againſt the common Inſtincts of Nature, that there was no Heathen Nation, Greek or Barbarian, wherein the Serpent was not Sacred, uſually he was more Sacred than other Animals. (e) The Egyptians, Indians, Phœnicians, Arabians, Babylonians, Carthaginians, Bœotians, Epirots, Sicyonians, Epidaurians, Romans and the Inhabitants of America were Serpent-worſhippers, and that great ancient Nation of the Chineſe (f) worſhippeth the Dragon, proveth and recommendeth their Worſhip by Prodigies; and the moſt ancient Ethiopians (g) worſhipp'd a Serpent Arwé (which in their Language ſignifieth a Serpent) either as the Supreme Deity or as a Symbol thereof; which ſheweth, that Paganiſm is Ophitiſm both literal and myſtical. The Roman Emperour Adrian (h) in the Temple of Jupiter Olympius which he had moſt ſumptuouſly erected at Athens, put for the Numen a Dragon brought out of India, a Symbol hugely agreeable to the Jove of the Pagan Religion. (i) A Dragon was alſo the Symbol of Serapis, and Plutarch in the Life of Alexander reporteth, that an Oracle charg'd King Philip chiefly to apply himſelf to the worſhip of Jupiter Ammon, informing him, that this God had to do with his Wife Olympias in the form of a Dragon; which ſheweth (how-much-ſoever of Impoſture there may be in the Story) that the Heathen themſelves ſuppos'd a cognation between their Supreme Deity and the Dragon. A like account we have of the generation of Scipio Africanus and of Auguſtus (in Suetonius;) but with this difference, Apollo was ſuppos'd, to have to do with Auguſtus's Mother in the form of a Dragon. (k) The fabulous Theology copulateth Jupiter and Rhea both in the form of Dragons, and Jupiter in the ſame form with Proſerpina; and Orpheus fableth, that his God Phanes generated a Birth, which was for the main a Viper. And what Man of underſtanding can believe a God to generate a Viper? But with theſe Atheo-Theiſts

Serpents

(p) S. Aug. ibid.

(q) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 8. p. 400.

(r) Ibid. l. 7. p. 378. Grot. de V. R. C. l. 4. S. 8.

(s) Orig. ibid.

(t) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 4. & 5.

(u) Ibid. l. 5. c. 8, 12, 14.

(w) De veritate, p. 210, 211.

(x) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 9. c. 23.

(y) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 4. p. 115.

(z) Tatian. or. c. Græc. p. 147.

(a) Quæ ratio eſt, ut Chriſtum timeant dæmones, Jovem autem non timeant, niſi quòd iidem ſunt dæmones, quos vulgus deos eſſe opinatur? adjurati per nomen Dei veri protinus fugiunt.—— ſi nobis credendum eſſe non putant, credant Homero, qui ſummum illum Jovem dæmonibus aggregavit. Lactant. l. 4. c. 27.

(b) Nè quis poſſet ad divini nominis pervenire notitiam. Lactant. l. 3. c. 29. l. 4. c. 27.

(c) Ut ipſi colantur, & Deus non colatur. Ibid. l. 2. c. 15. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 4. p. 124.

(d) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 9. c. 14, 40. & l. 4. c. 63.

(e) Pignor. Menſa Iſ. p. 23.

(f) Mart. Sinenſ. Hiſt. l. 1. p. 102. Hotting. diſſ. p. 286.

(g) Ludol. Hiſt. of Ethiop. B. 3. c. 3.

(h) Baron. ad an. 145. n. 15.

(i) Cun. de Rep. Hebr. l. 3. c. 4.

(k) Athenag. Apol. p. 20.

Serpents were in ſo great veneration, (l) that they were ſacred to many of their Deities, to Jupiter Sabazius, the Sun, Ceres and Proſerpina, Hecate, Æſculapius and the Heroes. They that were initiated into the Sabazian Sacra, had a golden Serpent put into their Boſom, which was drawn out by the lower Parts. The Bacchæ in their Origia were crown'd with wreathed Serpents. (m) Herodotus mentioneth ſacred Serpents about the Egyptian Thebes, who when they dy'd, were buried in the Temple of Jupiter. A live-Serpent was the Symbol of Æſculapius, and ſuch a Serpent was brought to Rome, when the Romans (to remove the Peſtilence from their City) ſent a ſolemn Embaſſy to fetch Æſculapius's Symbol from Epidaurus; the Embaſſadors brought back with them a live-Snake, in quo ipſum Numen eſſe conſtabat, in whom that Deity himſelf manifeſtly was (ſaith the Hiſtorian;) the Tranſlation therefore of Æſculapius's Symbol is juſtly thought (n) a Tranſlation of the Devil from Epidaurus to Rome in his own Form without diſſembling the Matter. A Serpent was alſo the Symbol of the Genius of a Place or Country, (o) of Minerva alſo (and was added to her Image;) a live Serpent was kept in her Temple, and if that Serpent was gone, the Athenians (as appeareth from Plutarch's Life of Themiſtocles) thought, that their Goddeſs was gone. A Dragon was alſo the Keeper of their Fortreſs, to whom they offer'd a Cake of Honey.

The grand Symbol of Sanctity, Divinity and Godhead in Paganiſm was a Serpent; whence they affix'd the Pictures of Serpents (p) Diaboli inſignia, to places conſecrated to the Gods or Heroes, as a proper Note of their Sacredneſs, according to that of the Poet. (q)

Pinge duos angues: Pueri, ſacer eſt locus.

With all your ſuppos'd Gods (ſaith J. Mart. to the Heathen) you always paint a Serpent, which was done, to denote their Divinity. The Scholiaſt upon Ariſtophanes ſaith the ſame of their Heroes; and amongſt the Egyptians the form of a golden Baſilisk was put about their Gods. (r) The Diadems of their Kings were alſo inwrapp'd with Aſps (doubtleſs) to denote their Divinity. (s) So the Head of Iſis's Image was girt about and crown'd with that ſacred Aſp called by the Egyptians Thermutis, a Silver Serpent was plac'd near her Image, a Serpent was carry'd about in her Pomp (t) and the Handle of her Urn had an Aſp upon it. This direful venenate ſort of Animals the Egyptians worſhipp'd with great Veneration, and (u) their Images alſo; they made them ſo familiar, that they educated them with their Children, entertain'd them at their Tables, and thoſe that were bitten by them, they eſteem'd Happy and Divine. Their God Oſiris is not to be ſeen in any Table without a Serpent; Hecate in Euſebius preſcribeth the winding of Serpents about her Statues: (w) So the monſtrous Idols in America were adorn'd with Serpents, or the Parts of Serpents, and great golden Snakes were adjoin'd to ſome of their Idols. But Serpents amongſt the Pagans were not only the grand Symbols of Divinity, their Phantaſtry proceeded further; for they attributed to them a Divinity of Nature, ſuppoſed them of mighty uſe in Divination, and in ſome places they attributed to Serpents a proper Deity and Godhead. Serpents were called (x) ἀγαθοὶ δαίμονες, good Demons, which ſpeaketh them of a more excellent Nature than the Human. (y) Taautus himſelf (whom the Egyptians and Phœnicians follow'd) attributed a Divinity to the Nature of the Dragon and of Serpents. (z) The Body of Cleomenes therefore being hang'd upon a Croſs by order of the King of Egypt, both himſelf and his People were poſſeſſed with a mighty Fear, that a divine Man and one dear to the Gods was kill'd, when it was obſerv'd, that a Dragon had wrapp'd himſelf about Cleomenes's Head and cover'd his Face. To the Body of a winged Serpent the Egyptians affix'd the Head of an Hawk, and this was a Symbol of that ingenit and immortal God of theirs called Cneph (whom the Phœnicians called Agathodemon good God, whence Epies an eximious Hierophanta of Egypt affirm'd, that the moſt Divine of all Serpents was that which had the Head of an Hawk. Accordingly Zoroaſter thus deſcribeth God. Ὁ δὲ θεός ἐστιν κεφαλὴν ἔχων ἱέρακος, God hath the Head of an Hawk. Orpheus in like manner made one of his Principles to be (a) a Dragon having the heads both of a Bull and a Lion, and in the midſt the Face of a God with Wings upon his Shoulders. Agreeably to which Portentous Zoroaſtrian and Orphic Theology Kircher interpreteth an Egyptian Hieroglyphick in the Pamphilian Obelisk; for he ſuppoſeth (b) that a Serpent in that Hieroglyphick repreſenteth and ſignifieth the ſecond Perſon of the Chriſtian Trinity (the Son of God,) which all wiſe Men ſuppoſe, to be the Devil's Symbol. But the Pagan Theologers (who were Draconicolæ) are conſiſtent with themſelves in their portentous Imaginations of Ophiomorphite and Dragon-like Deities, and in attributing Divinity of Nature to Serpents and Dragons, which they did at ſuch an extravagant rate, that Porphyry ſaith, (c) Perhaps we and all Men ſhould underſtand the Language of all Animals, if a Dragon purg'd our Ears. (d) If a Serpent lick'd any Man's Ear, he was thought to hear the Counſels of the Gods, and to be endow'd with the Faculty of Divination. The Serpent in ancient times was ſo eminently of uſe in Matters of Divination, that נחש to Divine, is deriv'd from נחש a Serpent, and οἰωνίζεσθαι, to Divine, is from οἰωνὸς, a Serpent; ὄφις, a Serpent, ὀυβαῖος, the Baſilisk, are both deriv'd from אוב ob (which ſignifieth a Spirit of Divination, or one that is poſſeſs'd with it,) the moſt ancient Diviner is called Ophion, and in all probability the Delphic Apollo (the God of Divination) was worſhipp'd by the ancient Greeks under the Form or Symbol of a Serpent, whence he was called Pythius and Python from פתן Pethen a Serpent. (e) The Ruſſians at this day retain this Branch of Heatheniſm Divination by Serpents; for not long ſince when a couple of Serpents glided by the Anchor into the Ship, wherein the Duke of Holſtein's Embaſſadors were carry'd, the Watermen rejoiced and cry'd, let in the Serpents, keep and feed them, they are good Meſſengers, S. Nicholas will ſend favourable Winds, which will eaſe us of the labour of plying the Oars, and accordingly it came to paſs. Among theſe Northern Nations (there are the like Inſtances among the Southern) the Boruſſi, Samogitians and Lithuanians are known (f) to have worſhipp'd Serpents as Deities, every Family kept a Serpent as their Houſhold God, to whom they offer'd Sacrifice, and paid their Religious Adorations; to violate ſuch a Sacro-ſanct Serpent-Deity,

---

(l) Marſh. can. chr. p. 255. Huet. Dem. Ev. prop. 4. c. 4. s. 3.

(m) Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 267.

(n) Vives in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 10. c. 16.

(o) Voſſ. ſupr. l. 9. c. 24.

(p) Jul. Firmic. de err. prof. rel. p. 11.

(q) Dion. Voſſ. in Mann. de Idol. c. 6. S. 2. Heinſ. Ariſt. p. 18.

(r) Cauſin. ad Hor. Apol. Hierogl. p. 80.

(s) Voſſ. ſupr. l. 9. c. 12. Pignor. ſupr. p. 26, 27.

(t) Beroald. in Apul. p. 968.

(u) Voſſ. ſupr. l. 9. c. 38.

(w) Hoffman. umbr. p. 103, 160. Gage Survey. p. 117.

(x) Grot. ad Hiſt. Bel. & Drac.

(y) Euſeb. pr. ev. l. 1. c. ult.

(z) Phot. cod. 245. col. 1210.

(a) Δράκοντα κεφαλὰς ἔχοντα προσπεφυκυίας ταύρου καὶ λέοντος, ἐν μέσῳ δὲ θεοῦ πρόσωπον, καὶ ἐπὶ ὤμων πτερά. Dr. Cudw. Intell. Syſt. p. 298.

(b) Witſii Ægypt. l. 1. c. 3.

(c) De Abſt. l. 3. s. 4.

(d) Bochart. de Anim. par. 1. l. 1. c. 3.

(e) Hoffman. umbr. p. 123.

(f) Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 267.

Deity, or to neglect the keeping ſuch a Deity, was ruinous to a Family; the Houſholders loſt their Goods, or were cruelly lacerated to death. Wiſd. 11. 15. They worſhipp'd Serpents.

IV. A Fourth plain appearance in Paganiſm of Satan's Pagano-mundane Empire is the ἀνθρωποθυσίαι, Human Sacrifices with ſome other cruel and bloody Inſtitutes of that Religion. (g) It was the manner of the Ancients (ſaith Philo Byblius from Sanchoniathon) in great Calamities, for the Governours of a City or Nation to give a moſt beloved Child, to be ſlaughter'd, as a Ranſom of the publick ruin, unto punitive Demons. Paganiſm was a Religion of Human Sacrifices, and it was ſuch in the ancient rude and barbarous times (as the World became civiliz'd, this barbarous Rite (h) declin'd by degrees;) whence Euſebius juſtly inferreth, that the firſt and moſt ancient Inſtitution of Heathen Idolatry was from evil Demons. So Plutarch argueth. (i) It is probable, that the Gods neither require, nor accept the Human Sacrifices, that were in uſe in ancient times, yet 'tis not for nothing that Kings and great Captains give their Children to be ſacrificed, themſelves beginning and obſerving the Sacrifice: But they do it, to avert and ſatisfie the Anger of malign and direful Demons. And to ſatisfie the mad and tyrannical Loves of ſome, that neither can nor will commix Body with Body. But as Hercules oppugn'd Oechalia for a Virgin: So ſtrong and violent Demons deſiring an Human Soul incloſ'd in a Body, and being incapable of bodily Congreſs therewith, they bring Peſtilences and Sterilities upon Cities, aud raiſe Wars and Seditions, till they obtain the Soul which they Love. (k) The Carthaginians ſacrific'd their own Children, and they that had no Children bought them of the Poor, and ſlaughtered Children as Lambs or Chickens. The Mother ſtood by without a Sigh or a Tear, or if ſhe ſigh'd and cry'd, ſhe loſt the Price, and the Child was nevertheleſs ſacrific'd. All was fill'd with noiſe of piping and drumming before the Image, that the lamentable cries (of the Infants) might not be audible. If certain Typhons or Giants having ejected the Gods had the rule over us, what other Sacrifices or Sacra would they deſire? As the Phænomena of Nature are a manifeſt demonſtration of the Exiſtence of God: So the Phænomena of Paganiſm are a manifeſt demonſtration of the Exiſtence and Domination of evil Demons; for a Religion of the Human Sacrifices and τεκνοφόνοι τελεταὶ, Child-killing Rites (Parents killing their Children with their own Hands Wiſd. 12. 5, 6. and 14. 23.) can be nothing better than originally, of Kind and Quality and objectively Diaboliſm. They ſacrific'd their Sons and Daughters unto Devils, and ſhed innocent Blood, even the Blood of their Sons and of their Daughters, whom they ſacrific'd unto the Idols of Canaan. Pſal. 106. 37, 38. The vaſt and ample diſpread of theſe Man-killing Sacrifices over the Heathen World demonſtrateth the Devil's mundane Domination; for theſe Barbarities were in uſe (l) amongſt the Indians, Perſians, Arabians, Syrians, Phenicians, Albanians, Scythians, Egyptians, Carthaginians, Cretians, Cypriots, Ionians, Thracians, thoſe of Rhodes, Chios, Salamis, Tenedos, the Lacedæmonians, and the old Grecians generally, the Romans themſelves and the Aborigines in Italy, the Normans, Danes, Germans, Sclavonians, the ancient Gauls, Britains and elſewhere. Amongſt the Japoneſe and Eaſtern Indians (m) they uſually Sacrifice themſelves to their Idols, and gain the Reputation of Saintſhip by it. In the Weſt-Indies the Rite of Human Sacrifices prevail'd at a ſuperlative rate (in Florida, Peru, New-Spain, Necaragua and many other parts;) at a certain Solemnity in Peru their way was, to Sacrifice two hundred young Children at a time. The Mexicans are ſaid to have ſacrific'd more than twenty thouſand of Mankind in a Year to their Idols. (n) They had dark Houſes full of Idols wrought of ſundry Metals. Theſe were all bathed and waſh'd with Blood, the Blood of Men, and the Walls of the Houſes were an Inch thick with Blood, and the Floor a Foot; the Prieſts went daily into theſe Oratories (or Slaughter-houſes of the Devil, as Purchas calleth them,) and ſuffer'd none other but great Perſonages to enter with them. And when any of ſuch Condition went in, they were bound to offer ſome Man as a Sacrifice, that the Prieſts might waſh their Hands, and ſprinkle the Houſe with the Blood of the Victim. The Normans and Danes every Year in the Month of January ſacrificed ninety nine Men to their Gods. (o) Our ancient Britains uſually ſacrificed Men, to make Divination, and to conſult the Gods by their Entrals; and what can be more apparent, than that ſuch Religioniſts are the Devil's Religioniſts? (p) If any of the Gauls were in imminent danger by Sickneſs or in the Wars, Men were offer'd in Sacrifice for their Safety and Welfare (ſuch Sacrifices were ſuppos'd to be of mighty Value and Efficacy) by the miniſtery of the Druids, who are infamous for the prodigious ferity and barbarity of their Human Sacrifices. Some of thoſe Sacrifices they ſtruck with the Sacrificing Sword, others were ſtruck through with Darts, and faſten'd to a Croſs or Stake; others were incloſ'd in huge Colloſſus-like Images, whoſe Members were of ſuch a contexture as Hurdles are, which being ſet on fire they were burned. They not only did all grievous things to Captive-men, but naked noble honeſt Women they hang'd up, and cutting off their Paps hang'd them at their Mouths, that they might ſeem to eat them (ſaith Dio;) they transfixed ſharp Stakes through the length of their whole Body, and all this they did in Divine Service, feaſting and carrying themſelves ſuperciliouſly both in other ſacred places and eſpecially in the Grove of Andata.

As the monſtrous Barbarity of theſe Rites of Druidiſm and Zabiiſm is enough to ſatisfie Infidels and Scepticks touching the Exiſtence and Domination of evil Demons: So it plainly demonſtrateth, that the ſupreme Deity in Paganiſm (in reality ſuch) is no other than the Devil; for his Religion is a bloody diabolical Superſtition. (q) By the Rite of Human Sacrifice the Gauls worſhipp'd Taranis the ſame with Jupiter, the ſupreme Deity in Paganiſm. (r) The Lycians in Crete ſacrificed a Man to Jove; Ariſtomenes Meſſenius offer'd at once three hundred Men to Jupiter Ithometes. At Rome a Man was ſacrific'd in the Feſtival of Jupiter Latialis, and (as Dionyſ. Halicarnaſſ. relateth) both Jove and Apollo requir'd and exacted Human Sacrifices. (s) ἀξιάγαστοι ἐντεῦθεν ὁ τῶν θεῶν ὕπατός τε ϗ ὑπέρτατος, hence it appeareth, that the ſupreme of the Pagan Deities

(g) Ἔθος ἦν τοῖς παλαιοῖς, ἐν ταῖς μεγάλαις συμφοραῖς τῶν κινδύνων, ἀντὶ τῆς πάντων φθορᾶς, τὸ ἠγαπημένον τῶν τέκνων τοὺς κρατοῦντας ἢ πόλεως ἢ ἔθνους εἰς σφαγὴν ἐπιδιδόναι λύτρον τοῖς τιμωροῖς δαίμοσιν. Euſeb. pr. ev. l. 4. c. 16.

(h) Porph. de Abſt. l. 2. S. 54. Lactant. l. 1. c. 21.

(i) Τὰς πάλαι ποιουμένας ἀνθρωποθυσίας οὔτε θεοὺς ἀπαιτεῖν ἢ προσδέχεσθαι πιθανόν ἐστιν, οὔτε μάτην ἀνέχονται βασιλεῖς ϗ στρατηγοὶ παῖδας αὐτῶν ἐπιδιδόντες ϗ ἀρχόμενοι ϗ φυλάττοντες, ἀλλὰ χαλεπῶν ϗ δυστρόπων ὀργὰς ϗ βαρυθυμίας ἀποσειόμενοι ϗ ἀποπιμπλάντες ἀλαστόρων. De Def. or. p. 417.

Hæc ſacra ſacrilegiis omnibus tetriora. Min. Fel. p. 88.

(k) Plutarch. de ſuperſtit. p. 171. Fiunt miſeris & religioſa delicta. S. Cypr. Ep. 2.

(l) Euſeb. ſup & de laud. Conſtant. c. 13. Grot. de ſatisfact. p. 200 &c. de V. R. C. l. 2. c. 11. Lipſ. in Tacit. p. 439.

(m) Purchas.

(n) Purchas and Gage Survey of the W. Ind. p. 115.

(o) Cambden Britan. p 22.

(p) Sharrock de Offic. S. 16. n. 4. Strabo l. 4. Diodor. l. 5. Dio. l. 62.

(q) Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 295. 296. Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 35.

(r) Clem. προτρ. p. m. 20. Porphyr. & Euſeb. ſupr.

(s) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 4. p 128.

Deities is an admirable Deity. This their ſupreme Deity (Jupiter Pater) was anciently (t) called Saturnus, and under that Name he was worſhipp'd with the Rite of Human Sacrifice (u) by the European Pagans. To this ſupreme Deity the Rhodians ſacrific'd a Man, the Sardi their Captives, and the Cretians their Children. The Carthaginians were a Colony of the Phenicians, and imitated them in ſacrificing their Children to Saturn; and the Phenicians muſt be ſuppos'd to Symbolize with the Canaanites and other Neighbour Nations; who ſacrificed their Children as Burnt-offerings to Moloch or Baal (the ſame Deity) Lev. 18. 21. and 20. 2. Deut. 18. 10. 2 King. 23. 10. Pſal. 106. 37, 38. Jer. 19. 5. and 7. 31. and 32. 35. Ezek. 16. 20, 21. and 23. 37, 39. Moloch or Baal therefore muſt be thought the ſame Deity with Saturn, which is agreeable to the Senſe of Antiquity and the general Senſe of the Learned (although a learned Man of our own diſſenteth, (w) but without any valuable Reaſon;) for the Phenicians being part of the Canaanites, it is but reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the other Canaanites and Neighbour Nations ſacrificed their Children to the ſame Deity with the Phenicians, and that the immolation of Children was eminently (if not peculiarly) Saturn's Rite of Worſhip in the Eaſtern Parts. And amongſt the Romans he muſt be thought eminently a Deity of bloody Rites, if as S. Cyril ſaith, (x) when the gladiatory Sports were celebrated, a Saturn was hid under ground, to receive the Blood of the Slain. The Saturn to whom the Carthaginians ſacrificed their Children, was by them called (y) Amilcar, which is ſo near to Moloch or Milcom, that they may well be counted the ſame Name. The Carthaginians alſo in ſacrificing to Saturn uſed Pipes and Drums, to drown the cries of the ſacrificed Children, as the Canaanites and Idolatrous Iſraelites did in ſacrificing their Children to Moloch (the Valley of Hinnom was called Tophet from the beating of Drums;) therefore we have great aſſurances, that the Oriental Baal or Moloch to whom Children were burned, is Saturn. Which confirmeth our Conjecture touching Adrammelech and Anammelech, to whom the Sepharvites burned their Children, that the one was a ſupernal, the other an infernal Saturn. 2 King. 17. 31.

Of Kin to theſe Barbarities the Human Sacrifices and burning Children alive (which carry horrour in their Aſpect,) are many other barbarous and bloody Rites of God-ſervice uſual amongſt the Pagans; ſuch as their frantic and barbarous wounding and caſtrating themſelves, their Rite of ſacrificing with their own Blood, their rude and bloody Pennances and Pilgrimages, the antick and barbarous Auſterities of their Aſceticks, (z) their initiations into the Myſteries of Mithras) by no leſs than fourſcore Torments) as alſo the bloody Spectacles of their Gladiators, which could make Sport for none but the Devil and his Children. (a) Is it not better for Mankind, to live as Brutes (without Religious Worſhip) than to Worſhip ſo impious, ſo profane, ſo ſanguinary Deities? Whoſe Chieftain or Sovereign could be no other than Abaddon the Deſtroyer.

V. A Fifth plain appearance in Paganiſm of Satan's Pagano-mundane Empire is the Sorcery and Wizardiſm of the Heathen both that of their common Practice and that of their Sacra or Religion; for the Pagan Religioniſts were (more or leſs) dealers in Sorcery and foul Diabolical Magick, as the Scripture uſually repreſenteth them. Exod. 7. 11. Lev. 19. 26, 31. and 20. 6. Deut. 18. 10--14. 1 Sam. 6. 2. 2 King. 1. 2. and 17. 17. and 21. 6. and 23. 24. Iſa. 2. 6. and 19. 3. and 47. 9, 12. Ezek. 21. 21. Dan. 2. 2. Hoſ. 4. 12. Zech. 10. 2. Apoc. 9. 21. and 18. 23. and 21. 8. and 22. 15. In great degree they were blind and undiſcerning in matters of Magick, and their Ignorance of it inſnar'd them in it. For the Popular Pagans were not without Notices of an evil Correſpondence with the inviſible Powers, they puniſh'd with great Severity the maleficent Witchcraft, and ſuch private clandeſtine Magick which was noxious to civil Society; Magick in the Roman Empire uſually ſignified in an evil Senſe and in our Senſe (what is of more than natural Operation in the foul Senſe,) the Name of a Magician was amongſt them a Name of Crime and Infamy, whence Philoſtratus is ſolicitous, to vindicate Apollonius and Apuleius to vindicate himſelf from the Charge of being a Magician, (b) ſome of the greateſt Magicians in Paganiſm declaim againſt a Magick of jugling Tricks, ſo far they agree with true Religion: But much of that which the Scripture counteth Magick (in the foul Senſe) was with them of another Notion; what is really execrable Magick, was with them Myſtery and Sacra; publick Magick was with them of great veneration, and true Theiſm was with them Magick and Atheiſm. (c) Chriſt is reproach'd by Celſus as a Magician, (d) Moſes as a Magician, (e) Oſius is called a Magician by Zoſimus, (f) Chriſtians ſuffer'd as Magicians, (g) all the Apoſtles are reproach'd as Magicians, and Paul as a tranſcendent Magician by the Apoſtate Julian, who was himſelf a ſuperlative Magician. But from the Apology which his Hiſtorian and admirer maketh for his Magick, it appeareth, that the moſt damnable Rites and Correſpondences in Magick paſs'd for very innocent and laudable Practices in Paganiſm. Becauſe ſome malevolent Perſons (ſaith Ammianus l. 21.) attribute to this learned Prince ſtudious of all Knowledges evil Arts of fore-knowing things to come, we muſt briefly advertiſe, whence this no light kind of Learning may happen to a wiſe Man. (h) The Spirit of all the Elements being always and every where in livelineſs by the preſent Motion of the ever moving Bodies, amongſt thoſe things that we affect by ſeveral Diſciplines, participateth with us the gifts of divining; and the ſubſtantial Powers being placated by divers Rites Vaticination is conveyed from them to Mankind as from the perpetual Veins of Fountains. It is not the Chriſtians that raiſe and relate Stories of the Heathens Magick: But themſelves or their own Authors relate their own Magick and Glory in it. Eunapius relateth the magical Arts, the magical Company (or Demon-ſociety) and the Magical-miraculous Pranks of his Philoſophers for their Honour. Marinus wrote Proclus's ϑεουργικὰ, Theurgicks. (i) Damaſcius reporteth the Hydromancy of a Magical Woman called by him Γυνὴ ἱερὰ ϑεόμοιρον ἔχουσα φύσιν, a ſacred Woman whoſe Nature was a Portion of the Divinity; having powred pure Water into a Glaſs-cup, ſhe ſaw in it the ſpecies

(t) Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 209.

(u) Seld. de D. Syr. Synt. 1. c. 6. Porphyr. ſupr. Grot. in Deut. 18. 10. Purchas Par. 1. B. 6. c. 8.

(w) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 2. c. 10.

(x) C. Jul. l. 4. p. 128.

(y) Seld. ſupr.

1 King. 18. 28.

(z) Spencer. not. in Orig. p. 11.

(a) Nonne ſatius eſt pecudum more vivere, quàm Deos tàm impios, tàm profanos, tàm Sanguinarios colere? Lactant. l. 1. c. 21. vid. Min. Fel. p. 226, 227.

(b) Jambl. de Myſt. p. 94.

(c) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 1. p. 30.

(d) Ib. l. 5. p. 23

(e) Baron. ad an. 324. n. 27.

(f) Idem ad an. 363. n. 4.

(g) Spencer in Orig. p. 7.

(h) Elementorum omnium ſpiritus, utpote perennium corporum præſenti motu ſemper & ubique Vigens, ex his quæ per diſciplinas varias affectamus, participat nobiſcum munera divinandi; & ſubſtantiales poteſtates ritu diverſo placatæ velut ex perpe[illegible] fontium venis vaticina mortalitati ſuppeditant verba.

(i) Phot. cod. 242. col. 105

ſpecies of things to come, and thence foretold them. Of this we our ſelves alſo made experiment. Human Nature is not without Propenſions to Magical Correſpondence; there is nothing in Paganiſm, to reſtrain Men from the main of it; there is much in Paganiſm to induce Men to it, for the Pagans ſuppoſe it God-ſociety; (k) their Gods taught them to play the Magicians for they taught them, that their Gods being bound by Fate, muſt be looſ'd by Art-Magick; (or as ſome underſtand the Oracle, that Men muſt deliver themſelves by it from their Fate and Deſtiny;) Mankind are ſo eargerly addicted to Divination, to converſe with the Gods, and to have Gods, which they may converſe with, that it is not ſtrange, that the Heathen World ſhould be a World of Sorcery and Magick. And if the foul diabolical Magick was every where in Empire and Domination amongſt the Pagans, if both in their common and Religious Affairs they were dealers in Magick, if Magick was the Skill and Trade of Princes, Prieſts and People, if their Religion in reſpect of its Original and Ingredients was Magick, what greater aſſurance can we deſire of the Exiſtence and Domination of evil Demons, of Satan's mundane Empire, and that the World of Heathen were his Religioniſts?

VI. Magick (ſaith Pliny) many Ages mightily prevail'd through the whole World, was of greateſt Authority, and grew to ſuch an height, that in the Eaſtern Parts it govern'd the King of Kings. And he obſerveth (l) that anciently and almoſt always the higheſt Renown and Glory for learning was gain'd by the Science of Magick. So others obſerve, (m) In ancient times Magick was accounted the Summity of Learning. (n) Nothing ſeem'd more excellent and illuſtrious than thoſe Arts. (o) We muſt take a curſory view of Aſtrology, Mathematick, Magick, Goety; for all the Greeks do boaſt of theſe as of the greateſt Sciences, ſaith Clemens. (p) What ſhall we ſay of their admir'd Magick? Before the coming of Chriſt (ſaith Athanaſius) it prevail'd amongſt the Egyptians, Chaldeans and Indians, and amaz'd the Beholders. Theſe learned Nations the ſame Father calleth (q) τὺς φρονῦντας μὲν μαγικὰ, the Magical-minded, that minded the things of Magick as their Wiſdom; (r) for they did not account any thing Wiſdom, that was not of more than vulgar Quality; nor did they ſuppoſe themſelves wiſer than others, unleſs they could do more than others, (ſome prodigious Magical Feats;) therefore Theſpeſion the Gymnoſophiſt caus'd a Tree to ſalute the wiſe Apollonius, to demonſtrate, that himſelf and his Fellows were Maſters of Wiſdom. Such was the Wiſdom and ſuch was the Magick of the Oriental Magi, Indian, Perſian and Chaldean, who were of Affinity with our Britannick and Gallick Wizards (the Druids,) that had (s) Zoroaſter for the grand Maſter of their Learning and Religion, and whoſe Rites were thoſe of the Zabii, which were not only Idolatrous, but Magical. Learned Men that follow Ariſtotle's account of the Magi in Laertius, ſuppoſe, that their Magick was at firſt only lawful and laudable Science, and that afterwards, it degenerated into diabolical Magick. But ſeeing the Magi were originally not only the Philoſophers, but the Prieſts, Theologers, Saintiſts and eminent Religioniſts of the Oriental Pagans, hence we may certainly infer, that their Magick was natively and originally Diabolical; for ſuch was the Wiſdom and Learning of the Pagan Prieſthood, (t) The Greeks ſuppoſe, that Magick is a Faculty of very great Power, and that it is the laſt Portion of the Prieſthood. The Relation of Ruffinus therefore deſerveth the Credit of Hiſtorical Truth, (u) that at Canopus in Egypt there was a publick School of Art-Magick, which was taught under the Name of Sacerdotal Learning. Nor can we reaſonably diſcredit what others affirm touching the Indian Brachmans, (w) that they taught Magick and Inchantments in their Schools. (x) The Indian Brachmans and Gymnoſophiſts had their efficacious Magical Names in common with the Egyptians and Perſians, (y) they were Diviners, Inchanters, Necromancers, and ſuch conſummate Magicians, that the Perſians were improved by their converſe (as Ammianus relateth,) and Apollonius acknowledgeth, that they were his Maſters. Such great and real Effects of Magick are ſaid to be found amongſt them, as may ſeem, but are not beyond its Power ſometimes to Effect. For in Damaſcius's Life of Iſidore (z) it is reported, that the Brachmans by their Prayers could procure Rain, and alſo avert Rain and Famine and Peſtilence and other incurable Evils.

The Chaldeans Magick is viſible in their Names Chartummim, Aſhaphim, Mecaſhephim, Chaſdim, Goſrin. Dan. 2. 2. and 4. 7. The firſt of theſe Names חרטמים is not improbably deriv'd from the Perſic חרד (the Daleth being chang'd into Teth,) which ſignifieth to know, and therefore the Name denoteth the magically knowing or cunniug Men, and in the Singular Number it is the ſame with the Hebrew ידעוני γνώςης, a knowing Man. (a) So ἐλύμας, Magus is from עלים ſciens, knowing. The ſecond of thoſe Names אשפים is doubtleſs the ſame with the Greek σοφοὶ, and denoteth the Wiſe-men or Wizards, an higher degree of the knowing Men. Gen. 41. 8. Exod. 7. 11. The third of thoſe Names מכשפים is deriv'd from the Arabic כשף and ſignifieth the Revealers or Diviners. But touching the firſt of theſe Names חרטמים I am prone to think, that the true Etymology of it is from חרט a Pen, or Writing Inſtrument, that in its primary ſignification it denoteth γραμματεῖς, Scribes, a Name that in Scripture uſually ſignifieth Literati, the Men of Learning; and that theſe three ſorts of Chaldean Magicians in reſpect of their Names anſwer to the Scribes, Wiſe-men and Prophets. Matth. 23. 34. For Scribes are the Literati, Wiſe-men are an higher degree of thoſe Literati, and Prophets are the Revealers. But becauſe the Chaldean Literati were the skilful in Magick, thoſe Scribes were of the ſame Character with Jannes and Jambres (choſen to conteſt with Moſes,) who were amongſt the Egyptians ἱερογραμματεῖς, Scribes of their Sacra (as Numenius the Philoſopher (b) in Euſebius ſaith;) therefore the Name Chartummim may be fitly rendred the knowing Men, Aſhaphim the wiſe Men or Wizards, Mecaſhephim the (k) Euſeb. pr. ev. l. 5. c. 14. l. 6. c. 4. Gale in Jambl. p. 309. Ficin. in Plotin. p. 126.

Diviners

(l) Summam literarum claritatem gloriamque ex ea ſcientia antiquitus & penè ſemper petitam. Nat. Hiſt. l. 30. c. 1.

(m) Priſcis ſeculis Magia doctrinæ culmen habebatur. Marſham. Can. Chr. p. m. 142.

(n) Nihil his artibus clarius aut excellentibus videbatur. Sheringham de Angl. Gent. Orig.

(o) Περὶ τε ἀστρολογικῆς καὶ μαθηματικῆς καὶ μαγικῆς, γοητείας τε ἐπιδραμητέον. Αὐχῦσι γὰρ δὴ καὶ ἐπὶ ταῖς δὲ οἱ πανέλληνες, ὡς μεγίσταις ἐπιστήμαις. Clem. Str. l. 2. initio.

(p) Τί δὲ περὶ τῆς θαυμαζομένης παρ' αὐτοῖς μαγείας ἄν τις εἴποι; πρὶν μὲν ἐπιδημῆσαι τὸν λόγον, ἴσχυε καὶ ἐνήργει παρ' Αἰγυπτίοις καὶ χαλδαίοις καὶ Ἰνδοῖς αὕτη καὶ ἐξέπληττε τὺς ὁρῶντας. S. Athanaſ. de Incarn. Verb. p. 74. Comm.

(q) Ibid. p. 77.

(r) Reuchlin. de verb. mir. p. 115.

(s) V. Mr. Stanley Hiſt. of Or. Philoſ. B. 1. S. 1 c. 2, 3.

(t) Magia verò facultas quædam Græcis viſa eſt poteſtatis plurimæ compos, tradunt enim hanc eſſe extremam Sacerdotii portionem. Pſellus de Dæmon. ſub fin.

(u) Baron. ad an 389. n. 96.

(w) Heurn. Barb. Phil. p. 147.

(x) Gale in Jambl. p. 291.

(y) Montacut. or. Eccl. T. 1. Par. 1. p. 172, 169, 193.

(z) Phot. cod. 242. col. 1041.

(a) Druſ. in Act. 13. 8.

(b) Pr. ev. 8. c. 8

Diviners. The two laſt of the Chaldeans Names are of eaſy interpretation; for גזרין ſignifieth Aruſpices, Soothſayers by the Sacrifices, and כשרים Chaldeans, ſignifieth the Aſtrologers, as a Canaanite ſignifieth a Merchant, and an Arabian a Thief. (c) The Chaldeans were addicted to Aſtrology and Augury at a ſuperlative rate. Amongſt other methods of Divination (d) Diodorus relateth their Divination by Birds, and by the Sacrifices, and their interpretations of Dreams and Prodigies. Arnobius (e) calleth the Arts of Magick the recondite Diſciplines of the Chaldeans. Some that are admirers of their Theology celebrate alſo their Magick, which they ſuppoſe (f) to have been mighty potent in ancient times amongſt the Orientals, and that they underſtood the nature of Demons, the methods of calling them forth, and of making them to do portentous things in their ſight. (g) They are more eſpecially famous for their Aſtrological-magical contrivances of Teleſms and Teraphim, and for their Theurgick Magick, or Teleſiurgick Rites (whereby they had converſe with Spirits, and by virtue whereof Julian the Chaldean Philoſopher compos'd a Phylactery for every Member,) amongſt which the Hecatine Sphere or Circle is of principal note, whence the Rhombus Magicus mention'd both by Greek and Latine Poets (of great uſe amongſt the Witches of ancient times) deriv'd its original. (h) Demons are drawn out of the Air and Earth by certain Stones, or Herbs, or Voices, or Figures which they call Characters, every one of which is every Demons proper cogniſance. Theſe I ſuppoſe, were originally found out by the Chaldeans and Egyptians.

The Chaldeans are not more famous for Arts of Magick than their Neighbours the Perſians, (i) from whoſe Magi (before ſpoken of) Sorcery and Witchcraft hath the Name of Magick. Theſe were in common with the Chaldeans the followers of Zoroaſter, (k) and are deſcrib'd by Cicero, Strabo, Lucian, Ælian, Ammianus and the ancient Writers of the Church as a γένος μαντικὸν, Generation of Diviners addicted to Necyomancy, Lecanomancy, Hydromancy and Inchantments; as R. Benjamin in his Itinerary relateth of the Prieſt of the Dugbjim (Fire-worſhippers as the ancient Perſians were) that they are great כשפנים Inchanters, and that there is none like them in the whole Earth. Pauſanias (an Eye-witneſs of what he relateth) in his Deſcription of the Perſian Pyratheia ſaith; (l) that in Lydia the Magus having laid Wood on the Altar firſt, putteth a Mitre on his Head, then (m) he maketh an Invocation of ſome God in a barbarous form not underſtood by the Greeks (which Invocation is an Incantation) he readeth his Charm out of a Book, and without making uſe of Fire all the Wood is ſet on fire (this Pauſanias ſaw) and ſendeth forth a manifeſt Flame. For many other great and real effects of Magick, for many ſtrange and true Divinations the Perſians and Chaldeans are celebrated. (n) Theſe forewarn'd Alexander not to enter Babylon, becauſe it would be fatal to him; and when Darius would have the Sheath of his Perſian Acinace chang'd into the Greek form, they foretold the tranſlation of Empire from the Perſians to the Greeks. The Perſian Magi (as Cicero relateth) foretold from Cyrus's Dream, that he ſhould reign thirty Years; and touching Ochus they predicted, that in his time there ſhould be plenty of Victuals and of his Slaughters. When Xerxes open'd the Sepulchre of Belus, he found in an Urn of Glaſs a dead Body lying in Oyl (the Urn not being full) and withall a little Pillar adjoyning, whereon was written this Prediction; that it ſhould fare ill with him, who open'd the Sepulchre and did not fill up the Urn; whereupon unhappy Xerxes did all that he could to fill up the Urn, but was unable to do it. In Ammianus (o) it is reported, that the Roman Souldiers having burnt the City of Seleucia, upon ranſacking a Temple they found a narrow Hole (which they opened, hoping to find Treaſure) from a ſecret place whereof which was ſhut up by the Chaldeans Arcana, ſuch a Contagion iſſu'd forth, as fill'd all with Diſeaſes and Deaths in the times of Verus and M. Antoninus, and ſpread it ſelf from the Borders of Perſia to the Rhine and France. (p) Porphyry tells of a good Man in Chaldea, who complain'd, that his great attempts to purge his Soul were all fruſtrate, becauſe another Man of the ſame Faculty out of Envy had adjur'd the Powers, and bound them not to grant his Requeſts; which was no inconſiderable effect of Magick.

The Egyptians were ſo eminent for Magick, that the Name (q) of an Egyptian ſignifieth a Magician, as the Name of a Chaldean ſignifieth an Aſtrologer. Hence Arnobius bringeth in the Heathen thus objecting againſt our Bl. Saviour; (r) He was a Magician, he did all thoſe things (his Miracles) by clandeſtine Arts, from the Secrets of the Egyptians he ſtole the Names of potent Angels and remote Diſciplines. At the ſame rate Celſus blaſphemeth, (s) That Chriſt in Egypt became expert in certain (wonder-working) Powers. And the Talmudiſts tell us, that the Egyptian Magicians ſaid to Moſes, (t) Fœnum tu importas in Aphrajim? doſt thou bring Straw into Aphrajim a City full of Straw? doſt thou bring Inchantments into Egypt, which aboundeth therewith? The Egyptians exceeded all Men in Magical Skill, (u) ſaith the Book Zohar. (w) Ammianus celebrateth Egypt as the origin of Religion and of Divinations, (x) almoſt all the Wiſe Men in Egypt were call'd by the Name of Prophets, and Origen obſerveth, that the Law of Moſes counteth all thoſe Animals unclean, from which the Egyptians and others took their Preſages. Syneſius ſaith, An Egyptian Man hath an Art as to the Gods, and certain ἴυγγας, Allectives, ſo that when he pleaſeth, (y) mumbling a little ſome barbarous words it hath been found, that he hath drawn down the whole Divinity that is apt to follow certain Attractions. Good Authors report, (z) That the Egyptians bring down Birds from Heaven μαγείᾳ τινι ἐπιχωρίᾳ, by a certain Magick peculiar to their Country, and that they eaſily draw Serpents out of their Holes ἐπαοιδαῖς τισι καταγοητεύσαντες, having firſt bewitch'd them by certain Inchantments. (a) The Statue of Memnon at Thebes in Egypt yielded a Sound (as moſt Authors ſay) at the riſing of the Sun, as ſoon as the Beams of it ſtruck upon the Mouth of the Statue; ſome ſay, that with an Humane Voice it uſually ſaluted the Sun and the King, till Cambyſes coming thither and deſtroying the City caus'd it to be opened, that he might diſcover the cauſe of it; after which, though it continu'd to ſalute the Sun, it ſuddenly left off to ſalute the King. Strabo an inquiſitive Man was with Ælius Gallus at this Statue, and heard the ſound, but acknowledgeth, that he could not underſtand the cauſe, conjecture attributed it to Magick. (b) Benjamin the Jew in his Itinerary reporteth, That there are ſuch magical ſounding Statues in the Eaſtern Indies, (c) and that one of the Egyptian Pyramids was built by Magick; but that is of greater regard which many good Authors relate touching the ſtrange conveyance of an Epiſtle from Alexandria in Egypt to Byblus in Phœnicia at the Feſtival of Adonis; (d) namely, that on the Day when the People of Byblus yearly lamented Adonis, the Alexandrians ſent them an Epiſtle incloſ'd in a Junceous or Papyraceous Veſſel (to give them notice, that Adonis was found,) having perform'd over it certain Teletæ or Myſterious Rites they committed this their Papyraceous Veſſel to the Sea, and of it ſelf meerly by the Sea and Wind it was carry'd to Byblus.

(c) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 1. p. 17.

(d) Stanley ſupr. B. 1. S. 2. c. 23.

(e) Adv. Gent. p. 5.

(f) Eugub. de Per. Phil. l. 1. c. 3. l. 8. c. 28.

(g) Stanley B. 1. S. 2. c. 26, &c. Selden. de D. Syr. Synt. 1. c. 2.

(h) Δαίμονες ἐξ ἀέρος ϗ γῆς θέλγονται τοῖς ἢ τοῖς λίθοις, ἢ ταῖς βοτάναις, ἢ ταῖς ἢ ταῖς φωναῖς, ἢ τοῖς ἢ τοῖς σχήμασιν, ἃ ϗ χαρακτῆρας καλοῦσιν· οἶμαι δὲ ταῦτα παρὰ χαλδαίων ϗ Αἰγυπτίων ἀρχῆθεν εὑρῆσθαι ἕκαστον ἑκάστῳ δαίμονι γνωριστικὸν σημεῖον. Niceph. Schol. in Syneſ. p. 360. v. Gale in Jambl. p. 277.

(i) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 6. p. 330.

(k) Cic. de Divin. l. 1. Stanley ſupr. B. 2. c. 7. Montacut. ſupr. p. 169, 191, 193, &c. Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 245.

(l) Dr. Ham. on Matth. 12. 27. Montacut. ſupr. p. 194.

(m) Ἐπίκλησιν ὅτου δὴ θεοῦ ἐπᾴδει βάρβαρα, ἐπᾴδει δὲ ἐπιλεγόμενος ἐκ βιβλίου, ἄνευ δὲ πυρὸς ἀνάγκη πᾶσα ἀφθῆναι τὰ ξύλα.

(n) Stanley ſupr. B. 2. c. 7. B. 1. S. 1. c. 4. Heurn. Barb. Phil. p. 171.

(o) L. 23.

(p) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 10. c. 9.

(q) Baron. ad an. 324. n. 27.

(r) Magus fuit, clandeſtinis artibus omnia illa perfecit. Ægyptiorum ex adytis angelorum potentium nomina & remotas furatus eſt diſciplinas. Adv. Gent. l. 1. p. 25.

(s) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 1. p. 30.

(t) Buxt. Lex. Talm. col. 946.

(u) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 2. c. 11. S. 1.

(w) L. 22.

(x) Gale in Jambl. p. 184, 245.

(y) Μικρὸν ὑποβαρβαρίσας ἅπαν εἵλκυσεν ὅσον ἔστι τὸ θεῖον τὸ πεφυκὸς ὁλκαῖς τισιν ἕπεσθαι. Calv. Encom. p. 73.

(z) Marſh. ſupr. p. 142.

(a) Holiday on Juv. p. 272.

Such Magical Phænomena (of which there are many Inſtances in Paganiſm) plainly demonſtrate, that Magick is no πρᾶγμα ἀσύστατον, nor meer Inanity, that there is too much of reality in it, and that it was in Empire and Domination in the great, and learned, and ancient Heathen Nations; from whence a Judgment may be made of the reſt of the Heathen World. But the Domination of Magick may further appear from the great Eſteem and Honour which Magicians had in the Heathen Nations, as Strabo obſerveth; (e) for the Heathen Kings and Princes were generally attended by their Magi, Aſtrologers, Augurs, Diviners, theſe were their Companions, Counſellors and Guides: Not a few of the Heathen Kings and Emperours are known to have ſtudy'd and practis'd the Magick Arts, the Perſian Kings were all initiated into the Diſcipline of their Magi, Conſtantine himſelf retain'd for ſome time ſomewhat of the Magical Genius and Humour of the Pagan Princes; (f) uſually he inſerted ſome Oracle in what he wrote, Sopater (a Magician) for a time was his Favourite: In one of his Reſcripts he tolerateth ſuch Magick, which is not maleficent and injurious, but uſeful and profitable for Mens Health and worldly Affairs; and another of his Reſcripts is in favour of Aruſpicina, Soothſaying. (g) Clemens hath recounted a large Catalogue of famous and renowned Diviners among the Greeks and other Heathen Nations, which ſheweth, that the Heathen World was not thin ſtock'd with ſuch Cattel, that Mankind govern'd their Affairs by Magick, that many Men gain'd a great Fame and Reputation by it, and not a few obtain'd the Reputation of Gods by it, (h) as Euſebius obſerveth. (i) Saxo Grammaticus maketh the ſame obſervation touching the deify'd Hero's of the Northern Nations; and in the time of Auguſtus Cæſar the Getæ had like to have done Divine Honours to Ceneus a Magical Impoſtor. Magick therefore was in Empire and Domination in the World of Heathen Religioniſts, which muſt be look'd upon as a World of Sorcery and Wizardiſm upon account of the ſeveral Branches of their Magick.

VII. Their Inchantments of Things and Perſons are an eminent Branch of their Magick (for which Theſſaly of old was much celebrated) and the matters of Homer's Odyſſes, the Transfigurations of Proteus, the Siren's Songs, Circe's Cups, and the Evocations of the Dead, are matters of Magical Incantation, (k) as the Criticks ſuppoſe. (l) Execeſtus Tyrant of the Phocenſes δύο δακτυλίους φορῶν γεγοητευμένους, wearing two enchanted Rings, by the ſounding of one againſt the other diſcern'd the time of doing any Action; but he was killed by treachery, although the Sound fore-ſignify'd it, as Ariſtotle ſaith in his Account of the Polity of the Phocenſes. (m) Theoſebius the Philoſopher having an averſation from Generation, gave his Wife τὸν τῆς σωφροσύνης δακτύλιον, a Ring of Continence (as before he had given her a Wedding Ring) which ſhe willingly receiv'd, and liv'd the reſt of her time with him without bodily conjunction. (n) Amongſt the Species of Magicians Jamblicus reckoneth μάγον ἀκρίδων καὶ μάγον λεόντων, &c. the Magician of Locuſts, the Magician of Lions, the Magician of Mice, the Magician of Hail, and the Magician of Serpents; to which he might have added the Magician of Gods; (o) for by magical Figures and Characters they could inchant, bind and detain their Gods; (p) ἐκκλήσεις εἰσὶ καὶ γοητεῖαι θεῶν, there are Evocations and Inchantments of the Gods, by virtue whereof the Romans are ſuppos'd to have brought over their Enemies Gods to themſelves (and that they might not be ſo ſerv'd, they conceal'd the Name of their own Tutelar God:) They ſay, (q) that their Gods were adjur'd, terrify'd and bound by Sacred Prayers, that Cybele's Temple was not opened by the Hand, but by Prayers (as Servius ſaith;) by Sacred Prayers they brought down their Deities, as alſo by Sacrifice; but Tullus Hoſtilius attempting to bring down Jove by the ſame Sacrifice which Numa made uſe of, and failing in ſome Rite was Thunder-ſtruck. Their Gods that came down, or were preſent at their Sacrifices, ſay, (r) that they were neceſſitated and conſtrain'd ſo to do (which is not to be underſtood of a Neceſſitation ſimply ſuch, but of a πειθανάγκη, perſuaſive Neceſſitation,) and that this Neceſſitation was cauſed by their Inchantments. They that could inchant their Deities, may well be allow'd to inchant a Sieve. (s) The Prayer of Tuccia the Veſtal Virgin reputed unchaſt is extant, which having us'd ſhe carry'd Water in a Sieve, ſaith Pliny; who although he diſputeth, that Magick is a meer Inanity, yet is forc'd to contradict himſelf, and to acknowledge a real efficacy in Charms and Inchantments. (t) Are not the Words in the Law of the twelve Tables touching thoſe that make maleficent Inchantments, to hurt, deſtroy or remove other Mens Corn? for in thoſe ancient times it was believ'd, that Witches and Magicians (u) had power to remove a Crop of Corn from one Man's Field to another.

Atque ſatas alio vidi traducere meſſes.

But as Tuccia by an Inchantment approv'd her Chaſtity; ſo Claudia another Veſtal Virgin accus'd of Unchaſtity did the like, (w) for when the Symbol of the Mother of the Gods was brought to Rome in a Ship, which ſtuck faſt in Tiber, and could not be mov'd by the ſtrength of Men or Oxen, ſhe by her Girdle only drew it which way ſhe pleas'd. (x) To amatorious purpoſes alſo Inchantments were commonly made uſe of amongſt the Heathen (ſuch as Virgil deſcribeth in his Pharmaceutria) whence Porphyry

(b) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 2. *c.*17. Hoffman.umbr. p. 100.
(c) *P.*119.
(d) Selden. de D. Syr. Synt. 2. c. 11.
(e) Montacut. ſupr. p. 174, 193, 195, 198. Stanley, B. 2. c. 4, 7. Jacchiad. in Dan. p. 222.
(f) *Baron. ad an.*319. n. 15. ad an. 321. n. 16, 19.
(g) Str. l. 1. p. m. 244.
(h) Pr. Ev. l. 2. c. 5.
(i) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 38, 39. Sheringham ſupr. p. 302.
(k) Beroald. in Apul. Aſ. in præfat.
(l) Clem. Str. l. 1. p. m. 245.
(m) Phot. cod. 242. col. 1073.
(n) Ibid. cod 94. col. 241.
(o) Gale in Jambl. p. 234, 260.
(p) Plut. Qu. Rom. p. 278.
(q) Gale ibid. p. 287, 281, 199. *S. Aug. de C. D. l.*10. c. 26.
(r) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 5. c. 8.
(s) Extat Tucciæ Veſtalis inceſtæ precatio, quâ uſa aquam in cribro tulit. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 28. c. 2.
(t) Non & legum ipſarum in duodecim tabulis verba ſunt, Qui fruges excantaſſet, & alibi, Qui malum carmen incantaſſet? Ibid.
(u) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 8. c. 10.
(w) Lact. l. 2. c. 8. *S. Aug. ſupr. l.*10. *c.*16.
(x) Gale ſupr. p 248, 260, 261.

phyry ſaith, (y) making uſe of Stones and Herbs they bind ſome (in the way of effaſcination) and open Doors that are ſhut, or do ſome ſuch wonderful thing by Inchantments. (z) Many Heathen Nations are famous for a magical faculty of inchanting Serpents; not only the Marſi and Pſylli, but the Egyptians, Indians, Melindenſes, Nigritæ, Peruans, as alſo the Colchi and Theſſalians. Philoſtratus reporteth that the Indians, who buſie themſelves in catching Serpents, account the Apple of their Eyes their chief prize, it being a fiery Stone, florid and ſparkling out all manner of Colours, and of recondite virtue, ſuch as Gyges's Ring is ſaid to be (mention'd by Plato and Cicero) whereby he render'd himſelf inviſible, and which was doubtleſs an inſtance of the efficacy of Magical Incantation. But this Hiſtorical Truth, The Inchantment of Serpents, is not founded upon Philoſtratus's Teſtimony, the Scriptures ſuppoſe the truth of it, Pſal. 58. 5, 6. Eccl. 10. 11. Jer. 8. 17. And beſides it is beyond all contradiction atteſted (a) by ſeveral learned and unqueſtionable Eye-witneſſes: Nor can we reaſonably diſcredit what Damaſcius reporteth touching the Philoſopher Theoſebius (whoſe exorciſm illuſtrateth thoſe Ejections of Demons recorded in Scripture) that ſeeing his Wife's Demon would not go out by the more gentle words, Theoſebius adjur'd him, (b) alledging the Sunbeams and the God of the Hebrews. The Tartars and Cathayans are ſaid to be (c) Witches, Sorcerers, invokers of the Devil. When the Sky is cloudy and threateneth Rain, their Aſtrologers or Necromancers will aſcend the Roof of the Palace of the grand Can, and cauſe the Rain and Tempeſts to fall round about without touching the ſaid Palace.

VIII. The Heathen World made uſe of Inchantments, Spells and Charms for the ſucceſsful management of their Affairs Civil and Military, for averting Evil and procuring Good, for defending themſelves and oppugning their Enemies. (d) The Aſſyrians and Bactrians, Ninus and Zoroaſter being the Leaders, did not only fight with Swords and plain Strength, but alſo by Magick Arts, and out of the recondite Diſciplines of the Chaldeans. (e) In the Sea about the Iſle Zeilan they fiſh for Pearl; but certain great Fiſhes would devour the Fiſhers, if they had not Magicians to charm them. (f) The Greeks relate, that when thoſe Winds the Eteſiæ failed, and the Calamity was great, the Heat burning all up, the Winds not blowing that us'd to refrigerate the Fruits, Ariſteus in Ceos ſacrificing to Jupiter Iſthmius, eaſily recalled them. When Xerxes warred againſt Greece, and Pythia bade the Delphi ſupplicate to the Winds, they built an Altar and did Sacrifice to the Winds and had them their Helpers; for blowing ſtrongly about the Promontory Sepias they brake all the Preparation of the Perſian Naval Expedition. Empedocles the Agrigentine was ſirnam'd κωλυσανέμας, the Wind-ſtiller; for a Wind blowing from the Hill Agragas, which was grievous and morbific to the People of the Country, and alſo the cauſe of Barrenneſs to their Wives, he made that Wind to ceaſe. They ſay, that the Magi at Cleonæ watch the Clouds and obſerve, when they are about to dart out Hail, and by their Cants and Sacrifices that minaciouſneſs ceaſeth. And if an Animal for Sacrifice be wanting, they make their Fingers bleed, which ſufficeth for a Sacrifice. (g) Seneca relateth this Story of the χαλαζοφύλακες, Hail-obſervers at Cleonæ (a Town in Peloponneſus) and ſeemeth in a raſh and ignorant Philoſophic Huff to explode the thing as incredible, that Cants and Sacrifices have power to avert Hail. But if this be his meaning, it is not the only ignorant Bravado that Seneca is guilty of, who was neither good Naturaliſt, Religioniſt, nor Theurgiſt, and therefore no competent Judge in the caſe. However, he acknowledgeth, that this Phænomenon was under diſpute, that Men were inquiſitive about the cauſe of it, that the Judges at Cleonæ puniſh'd the Hail-obſervers, if through their negligence their Vineyards or Corn were endamag'd by the Hail. And (doubtleſs) the atteſtation of Laws and Government is of far greater value than the Opinion of a very injudicious Philoſopher, who is not to be compar'd with Clemens, nor with Jamblichus (who ſpeaketh of the Hail-magicians;) nor with Plutarch, (h) who ſpeaketh of the Hail-magick as a thing acknowledg'd, but whoſe cauſe was not known. Nor is his Opinion to be confronted with the Teſtimony of Pauſanias, who ſaith, (i) That he hath ſeen Men, who by certain Sacra and Inchantments could avert Hail: Nor is he to be compar'd with Simplicius the Philoſopher, who touching external things offer'd and dedicated to the Gods by a pure Life and in due manner ſaith; (k) They partake of the Divine Goodneſs, ſo that the Divine Energy is conſpicuouſly ſeen. One confeſſeth himſelf thereby freed from the Epilepſy, and by partaking of ſuch things hath ſtill'd Hail-ſtorms and the Waves of the Sea. But a further Credibility will yet accrue to the Hail-magick, and to the uſe and efficacy of Charms and Inchantments in Paganiſm, from what a Learned Man hath diſcours'd of theſe matters, not from Credulity (as ſome vain Men ſuppoſe) but from ſound Reaſon and good Authority. (l) "There be Spells againſt " Hail, and Diſeaſes, and Burnings (ſaith Pli- " ny) ſome of which have been try'd, or by " experience prov'd true. Extraordinary Storms
" of Hail very prejudicial to the Fruits of the " Earth, which ſeem'd ſupernatural, Seneca ſpeaks
" of as happening very frequently. Country " People ſought for remedy to ſuch as did deal in
" thoſe things by whom they were taught Rites
" and Sacrifices, as alſo Spells and Charms, which
" prov'd very helpful, and therefore were us'd
" very frequently, inſomuch as they that did
" write of Agriculture or de Re ruſtica in thoſe
" days, did not think, they did acquit themſelves
" of what they promis'd ſufficiently, if ſilent in " theſe things, as particularly may appear by " Columella, and the Receipts that he hath in his
" 10*th Book*. Certain it is, that Spells and Charms
" were in ſuch credit in thoſe days for ſuch uſes,
" that even Conſtantine the Great, a Chriſtian Em-
" perour, when he made Laws againſt Inchant-
" ments, he doth except thoſe that were for the " preſervation of the Fruits of the Earth, and
" thoſe that were made againſt Hail particu" larly. (m) The Opinion of miſchief done
" by Witches and Magicians by Storms of Hail
" particularly, did continue long after Conſtan-
" tine's Law was repeal'd, as appears by Laws
" made

(y) Lapidibus & herbis adhibitis & alligant quoſdam & aperiunt clauſa oſtia, vel aliquid ejuſmodi mirabiliter operantur.

(z) Bochart. de An. par. 2. l. 3. c. 6. Marſham. ſupr. p. 148, 149.

(a) Bochart. ſupr. Caſaubon of Credul. and Incredul. p. 99, &c.

(b) Τὰς τοῦ ἡλίου προτείνων ἀκτῖνας, καὶ τὸν Ἑβραίων θεόν. Phot. cod. 242. col. 1037.

(c) Purchas Pilgr. Par. 1. B. 4. c. 13.

(d) Inter Aſſyrios & Bactrianos Nino quondam Zoroaſtreque ductoribus non tantum ferro dimicatum & viribus, verùm etiam magicis & Chaldæorum ex reconditis diſciplinis. Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 1. p. 5. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 21. c. 14.

(e) Le Blanc's Travels. par. 1. c. 20.

(f) Clem. Strom. l. 6. p. m. 654, 655.

(g) Nat. Qu. l. 4. c. 6.

(h) Sympos. l. 7. c. 2.

(i) L. 2.

(k) Μεταλαμβάνει καὶ αὐτὰ τῆς θείας ἀγαθότητος, ὡς καὶ θείας ἐνεργείας ἐπιδείκνυσθαι. καὶ γὰρ ἐπιληψίας τις ὡμολόγησεν ἀπηλλάχθαι. καὶ διὰ τῆς τῶν τοιούτων μεταλήψεως καὶ χαλάζας καὶ θαλάσσης κλύδωνας ἔπαυσε. Simplic. in Epict. p. 197. Ed. Lond. an. 1670.

(l) Caſaub. of Credul. and Incredul. p. 55, 62, 63.

(m) Ibid. p. 64.

“ made againſt them in after-ages, particularly by Ludovicus King of France and Emperour of Germany, his Additions to the Capitula made by him and his Father Charles the Great. (n) Dion Caſſius a very ſerious Hiſtorian hath a relation of plenty of Rain in time of greateſt neceſſity, by which a Roman Army was as it were miraculouſly preſerved, procured by Magick. (o) If we ſearch the Records of Antiquity, we ſhall find, that as it was very ordinary for them, who did ſtrive for Victories publickly, either in the Circus by racing or any way elſe, by any kind of Game or Exerciſe, to apply themſelves to Witches and Magicians, that by their help they might be ſure of the Game; ſo not unuſual alſo for Men to prevail by theſe Arts, which gave occaſion to Conſtantius's Law de Maleficis comprimendis, where Learned Gothofred's Note is; Moſt Horſe-racers of thoſe times by Magical Arts, at times did hinder their Adverſaries Horſes, and made their own ſwifter. Ammianus Marcellinus in his 26 Hiſtory doth record, that one Hilarion a Horſe-racer was put to death by Apronianus then Governour of Rome, for being convicted, to have ſent his Son to a Magician, to be taught by him certain ſecret Spells and Charms, by which, without any Man's knowledge, he might be aſſiſted and enabled to compaſs his deſires in the way of his Profeſſion. S. Auſtin writeth of himſelf, that at a time when he prepar'd to make a Party in a ſinging Prize or Match upon the Theatre, an Aruſpex or Magician offer'd him for a good Reward, to make him Victor. (p) We read beſides, that at the Olympick Games, the greateſt and moſt ſolemn conflux of Mankind that hath been known either before or ſince, the Records whereof were accounted moſt authentick, a certain Mileſian of known Valour or Ability being to wreſtle with an Epheſian, he could do nothing. becauſe the Epheſian had about him Ἐφέσια γράμματα, that is, certain Spells or Charms ſo called, The Epheſian Letters, which being ſuſpected and taken from him, he was thrown by his Adverſary no leſs than thirty times. So Euſtathius upon the 10 Odyſſie. To this Account of the Uſe and Efficacy of Charms and Inchantments amongſt the more civiliz'd Pagan Nations it is needleſs to ſubjoyn an Account of their Uſe and Efficacy amongſt the Savage and Barbarous Heathen Nations; for in all our Geographical and Hiſtorical Deſcriptions of thoſe Nations what do we read of but Rites of Soothſaying, Witchcraft and Inchantments? (q) Amongſt the Virginians the Prieſts are Witches, of whom the People ſtand in great awe. If they would have Rain, or have loſt any thing, the Prieſt at their requeſt conjureth and often prevaileth. We are told from good Authors of greater things than theſe (r).

(r) Tartarorum Confinia tenent Muſcovitæ idololatræ, percelebre eſt illis Idolum Aurea Vetula dictum. Si qua gravior calamitas gentem premit, veluti fames, bellum vel peſtis, idolum ſuum ſtatim conſulunt, quod hoc modo faciunt. Coram ſimulachro proſtrati preces fundunt, mox tympanum in medio ſtatuunt, Hoc ſorte læti circumſtant argentium bufonem tympano imponunt, dein bacillo concutitur tympanum. Ac cui circumjacentium circumſtat bufo, protinus interficitur. Statim neſcio quibus idoli præſtigiis vitæ reſtitutus malorum cauſas exponit. Itáque placato Idoli numine, non ita multo poſt publica calamitate liberantur. Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 39.

IX. Inchantments, Spells and Charms were one part of the Pagans Pharmacy, and were found to be of efficacy, as were ſeveral others alſo of their Magical Remedies for private and publick Calamities. Their Magical Remedies muſt be underſtood in a large Senſe; for many of their Medicines in themſelves no more than natural, were to them magical, becauſe their way of having them was magical. (s) The Devil in the Oracles of Amphiaraus, Amphilochus, Trophonius and the like, taught Men in Dreams what Herbs and Druggs were proper for ſuch and ſuch Diſeaſes. The like was done (t) in Æſculapius's Temple, and it is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that there was nothing of a Phyſick-ſhop in his Temple. Nor can any thing be rationally objected againſt that eminent Magical or Diabolical Miracle, (u) the expulſion of the Peſtilence from Rome by bringing Æſculapius's Symbol thither, for the matter of fact is reported by very good Authors, the cauſe was manifeſtly Diabolical, and by the ſame cauſe the ſame fact hath been done in Rome Papal, which was then done in Rome Pagan. For Quercetanus out of Paulus Jovius relateth, (w) The Plague raging at Rome, was made to ceaſe by the Inchantments of one Demetrius, a noted Grecian Magician in the Year 1522.

(w) Peſtem Romæ graſſantem ſedatam fuiſſe incantationibus cujuſdam Demetrii. Caſaubon. ſupr. p. 112.

It is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that all the ſtrange things reported of the Pagans Teleſms, are nothing more than meer Legend and Romance. (x) The Arcadians ſacrific'd and pray'd to Myiagrus (as Pauſanias relateth) and by that means were freed from danger by Flies. Pliny reporteth, that at the Olympic Games they ſacrific'd a Bull to Myiodes, which done, Clouds of Flies departed out of that Territory. And he ſheweth, that the Cyrenians ſacrific'd to the God Achor, when the multitude of Flies caus'd a Peſtilence, all which Flies thereupon preſently dy'd. (y) Pythagoras, Empedocles, Apollonius Tyanæus cur'd Diſeaſes by Charms. The Ancients knew (ſaith Apuleius) that Charms are a Remedy for Wounds; for ſo in Homer the Blood flowing out of Ulyſſes's Wound was ſtopp'd by an Inchantment. So Serenus Sammonicus, Marcellus Burdegalenſis and Vindicianus (three Phyſicians) writing to a Chriſtian Emperour, preſcribe a Charm as a certain remedy for the ſtopping of Blood. Cato the Cenſor preſcribeth a Charm in caſe of Luxation, Varro for the Gout, Theophraſtus for a Sciatica. Pliny mentioneth Charms as a Remedy for Diſeaſes, and a Magical Remedy againſt the Spleen. The Emperour Adrian (a Magician) by an Inchantment drew out the Water in an Anaſarca, and by the ſame Artifice Synalus Hannibal's Phyſician, drew Iron out of the Body and out of the Wounds. Plato affirmeth, that Diſeaſes are cur'd by Incantations, and Pindar writeth, that Æſculapius cur'd many μαλακαῖς ἐπαοιδαῖς, by ſoft Inchantments. (z) Amongſt the Eaſtern Indians and elſewhere, they that were bitten by Serpents, were cur'd by Charms.

—— Peſtis nigris inſerta medullis
Excantata perit. Lucan.

By this method Orpheus cur'd Eurydice ſtung by a Serpent, and therefore he is fabled to have reduc'd her from the Dead to Life again. (a) So the Ἐφέσια ἀλεξιφάρμακα, Epheſian medicinal Inchantments are famous to a Proverb, (b) the Samothracians are famous for their Amulet-Rings, (c) the Egyptians Amulets were a Branch of their Magick, and Sorcerers have the Name of φαρμακευταὶ from φαρμακείαι, Medicines, the Magicians being of Old the Phyſicians in Paganiſm; as at this day in the barbarous Heathen Nations the Prieſts and Magicians are their Phyſicians, which ſpeaketh the addictedneſs of the Heathen World to the Magical Pharmacy.

(d) Ammianus

(n) Ibid. p. 67.

(o) Ibid. p. 69, 70.

(p) Ibid. p. 71.

(q) Purchas par. 1. B. 8. c. 6.

(s) Sir W. Raleigh Hiſt. par. 1. B. 1. c. 11. S. 2.

(t) Gale in Jambl. p. 218, 219.

(u) Elmenh. in Arnob. p. 191.

(x) Purchas ſupr. B. 1. c. 17.

(y) Tiraquell. de Nob. p. 323, &c. Ficin. Arg. in Cratyl. Sinnert. oper. T. 4. l. 6. par. 9. c. 8. Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 8. Grot. in Lev. 19, 31.

(z) Bochart. de An. par. 2. l. 3. c. 5. Marſham. ſupr. p. 148, 149.

(a) Grot. in Act. 19. 19.

(b) Scalig. in 5. Manil.

(c) Hoffm. umbr. p. 173, 174.

(d) Ammianus relateth, that a ſimple old Woman was wont to cure intervallatas Febres leni Carmine (intermitting Fevers with a gentle Charm,) which is an inſtance of the Uſe and Efficacy of Charms. But he complaineth, that this Magical old Woman was put to Death (as a Witch,) and that a young Man (e) being ſeen in the Bath, to put the Fingers of both his Hands ſometimes to a Marble-ſtone, and ſometimes to his Breaſt, rehearſing withal the ſeven Vowels, imagining this to be a good Remedy againſt the pain of the Stomach, was tortur'd and put to Death; (f) and that in Conſtantius's time if any one did wear any thing about his Neck, as a Remedy for a Quartan Ague or other Malady, he was puniſh'd capitally as practiſing Witchcraft. The ſeverity of which Proceedings aroſe in part from the fears and jealouſies of the Government, that was attempted upon and in Danger by Arts of Magick, which prevail'd notwithſtanding the extreme Severities againſt them; inſomuch that in the Reign of Conſtantius, Valentinian and Valens the Roman Empire was filled with Magical Artifices, to which the Pagans were irreclaimably addicted, and which they counted ſinleſs Practices, according to that of Apuleius, Nihil quod ſalutis cauſa fit, criminoſum eſt, Nothing is criminal, that is done for the weal of Men.

Hence Charms and Inchantments are in the Four and Twentieth Canon of the Ancyran Council called συνήθειαι ἐθνικαὶ, Heathen Cuſtoms; and that we may know, who are Inchanters, they are thus defin'd by Balſamon upon the Six and Thirtieth Canon of the Council of Laodicea. (g) Inchanters are Magicians, that ſay Inchantments, and thereby attract Demons, to do their Wills. So the Egyptians ſuppos'd, (h) that having diſtributed the Body of Man into Six and Thirty parts, and allotted the Preſidency of them to Six and Thirty Demons, theſe being invok'd, would heal the Diſeaſes of every part. Tatianus is of Opinion, (i) that the Roots and Herbs which Magicians make uſe of, are not of themſelves operative, but they are a στοιχείωσις τῆς τῶν δαιμόνων μοχθηρίας, an Elementary Inſtitution of the improbous Art of Demons, who appoint, to what purpoſe every one of them ſhall be available and efficacious. Whether ſo or otherwiſe, the Greeks found ſo much Efficacy in Magick and Magical Medicines, and ſo much admir'd it, (k) that at their Banquets they had certain Singing-men, who ſet forth the Power of Art-magick, and the wonderful things that were done by it, as alſo the Virtues and Powers of the Magicians Herbs and Medicaments, whoſe Songs they called Μαγῳδίαι. So Alex. Trallianus (l) recommendeth the Virtue of his Charms from much Experience, and Cardan experimented the Virtue of a Charm for the ſtopping of Bleeding. In the Country where I live, ſome irreligious Perſons have ſeveral times made uſe of an horrible Charm for the cure of their Swine endanger'd by Diſtempers, and it did not fail of curing them. The Virtue and Efficacy of the barbarous and inſignificant Words made uſe of in Charms, and by Magicians in their Conjurations, (m) hath as numerous and great Atteſtations as almoſt any matter of Fact in the World. A Phyſician of good Note Antonius Benivenius relateth what he ſaw, (n) that a Soldier had an Arrow ſhot into his Breaſt, ſo that the Iron of it ſtuck in the Bone of his Shoulder, and that no Phyſicians or Chyrurgeons could give him relief. Whereupon he applied himſelf to a Conjurer, by whoſe Charms the Iron came out, and the Soldier was cur'd. The like Cures are related by others. But inſtead of purſuing that Argument I will ſubjoin to this account of the Pagans Inchantments a Branch of the Law of Moſes Lev. 19. 19. Thou ſhalt not let thy Cattel gender with a diverſe kind, or (as the words may beſt be rendred,) Thou ſhalt not make thy Beaſt gender with a diverſe kind. He that hath read what prodigiouſly abſonous Rites and Materials Magicians make uſe of, will be prone to believe, that this Law is deſign'd againſt a Rite of the Zabii, namely, the Copulation of an Aſs and a Cow together, by which unnatural gendring a Fœtus was produced, that was for their purpoſe in making Compoſitions for their Feats of Witchcraft and Inchantment. (o) Such a Reaſon of this Law Guil. Pariſienſis hath aſſign'd.

X. Divination muſt be thought a principal Branch of the Heathens Magick, not only becauſe of the Ample diſpread of it (being commenſurate with the Heathen Religion,) the great authority and eminency of the Perſons imploy'd in it, its great eſteem and uſe among the Pagans, and the multifarious (or rather innumerable) kinds of it, but chiefly becauſe it was a grand Fundamental of the Heathens Religion, from whence alone it appeareth, that the Heathen World was a World of Sorcery and Wizardiſm. (p) For although ſome of the Philoſophic Pagans, that were either no Religioniſts at all, or no genuin Heathen Religioniſts, totally exploded Divination, (q) although ſome of the diſcreeter Pagan Religioniſts rejected and ridicul'd ſome Branches of their Divination, yet theſe Heterodoxies in Paganiſm are ſuch little Singularities, that they ſcarce deſerve to come into conſideration in repreſenting a Character of the World of Heathen Religioniſts. For Origen (r) often noteth it as a peculiarity of the Jewiſh Nation (which diſcriminated them from the Heathen and made them God's peculiar) they deſpis'd all Divinations as proceeding from evil Demons. And becauſe they were the only people without Divination (the Gentiles Arts of Divination being to them prohibited,) therefore he thinketh it neceſſary, that they ſhould have Prophets of their own, otherwiſe they would not have adher'd to their Law, but would have deſpis'd their own Religion and Condition (as having nothing Divine,) and out of a longing deſire of knowing Futurities would have made a Defection to the Heathen Gods. Ælian argueth, that the barbarous Nations are not impious, becauſe they affirm, (s) that there are Gods, that they are Provident of us, and that they foreſignifie things to come; which is to ſay, they are ſound in the Fundamentals. And indeed they are ſo ſound in believing Divination, (t) that they are addicted to it at the rate of madneſs. (u) Zoſimus relateth it as the beginning of Conſtantine's Wickedneſs (Defection) τὴν μαντικὴν ἔχειν ἐν ὑποψίᾳ, he ſuſpected Divination. (w) Xenophon proveth, that Socrates was an Orthodox Religioniſt, becauſe he uſed Divination; and Socrates look'd upon Ariſtodemus as an Atheiſt, becauſe he underſtood him to be one, that neither ſacrific'd to the Gods, ὔτε μαντικῇ χρώμενος, nor uſed Divination. (x) All Cities and all Nations (ſaith Xenophon) Conſult the Gods by Divination, touching what they ſhould do, and what they ſhould not do. So Cicero obſerveth, (y) that no (Heathen) City or Nation was without the methods of Divination. The Romans that they might neglect no kind of Divination, made uſe of the Diſcipline of the Etrurian Soothſayers. This Diſcipline is ſaid (z) to have had its origin amongſt the Etrurians from one Tages a Youth, that ſeemed to riſe out of the Earth, as the Husbandmen were Plowing (which may be Hiſtory, not Fable,) who taught them the Rules of Soothſaying, and compris'd them in certain Books, which they rightly called Libri Acherontici, and his Sacra they called Sacra Acherontia. From theſe Etrurian Soothſayers the Romans deriv'd many of their Ceremonies and Superſtitions, to theſe they had recourſe for the interpretation of publick Prodigies, (a) to theſe they ſent the Sons of their principal Men, to be inſtructed in their Diſcipline. The Founder of their City was himſelf an Augur and the Founder of a College of Augurs of greateſt Eſtimation and Authority, who were to interpret the Signs of the Gods. They were eſtabliſh'd by a Law of the Twelve Tables and ſtil'd Interpretes Jovis Opt. Max. and together with the matters of their Prieſthood and Soothſaying they had a Tranſcendency of Power in the Affairs of the Commonwealth. (b) Amphilochus and Mopſus Kings of the Argives (c) were both Augurs, and before them Amphiaraus and Tireſias were ſuch, who were eminent and illuſtrious Perſons, of whom the former was not only honoured, but deify'd by the Greeks. Helenus and Caſſandra were the Children of a King, and one of them was an Augur, the other a Sibyl. (d) Diviners were had in great Honour and Eſtimation, ſuch was Trophonius and Orpheus, and Muſæus and Zamolxis the Pythagorean anciently (a God among the Getæ) and in our times Decænius at Byrebiſta, and Achaicarus among the Boſphorani, the Indian Gymnoſophiſts, the Perſian Magi and Necromancers, the Chaldeans among the Aſſyrians (the Druids and Bardi among the Gauls, the Galleotæ among the Sicilians) and ſuch were the Etrurian Soothſayers among the Romans. (e) And ſuch was their Tanaquil (ſo much commended by them for her Honeſty and Huſwifery) a Woman of great remark for Aſtrological-magical Divination. Divination was of ſo great eſteem and uſe with the Pagans, (f) that they derive their God-Society and Inſtitutes of Religion from it, (g) they ſuppoſe, that without it we had not had Phyſick, (h) and their Rule was, to do nothing of moment, ſine auſpiciis without conſulting the divinatory Signs. Thence the Athenians had certain Prieſts who were Diviners in all their publick Councils, the Lacedæmonian Kings muſt have an Augur for their Aſſeſſor, the Eaſtern Magi were Counſellors and Aſſeſſors to their Kings, all publick Affairs were adminiſtred by their Conduct and Councel, and among the Romans we find a Soothſayer at every Wedding, if any Man was to Marry a Wife, to Travel, to Plant a Vineyard, or to diſpatch any Buſineſs, the Fortune-tellers and Southſayers muſt be conſulted, and if a City was to be built, the Magi muſt determine the time. The Heathen World was full ſtock'd with Oracles, Sortes, Augurs, Soothſayers, Prophets, Propheteſſes, the wiſe Women, Necromancers, Fortune-tellers (and ſuch like,) that plainly ſpeak it, to have been a World of Sorcery and Wizardiſm; which alſo appeareth from the World of its modes of Divination (i) by the Sacrifices, Flames and Entrails, by preſaging Prodigies, by Lots, by Dreams, by Oracles and by the Stars, Necromancy, Enthuſiaſm, Hydromancy, Lecanomancy, Geomancy, Aeromancy, Capnomancy, Libanomancy, Coskinomancy, Axinomancy, Aleuromancy, Arithmomancy, Stoikeiomancy, Lithomancy, Dactylomancy, Crithomancy, Lychnomancy, Chiromancy, Phyſiognomy, Sternomancy, Tephromancy, Rabdomancy, Catoptromancy, Gaſtromancy, Alectruomancy, by Omens, Sneezings, Palpitations, caſual Occurſations, Ooſcopy, by Bones, Reeds, the Nail of a Boy (Onychomancy,) by ſeveral ſorts of Animals (as Birds and Serpents,) by Viſions, Apparitions, θεαγωγία, evocation of Gods. This vaſt collective is one of the principal conſtitutive Ingredients of Heatheniſm; whence Clemens exhorteth (k) relinquiſh Thebes and Divination.

(d) L. 29.

(e) Ibid.

(f) L. 19.

(g) Ἐπαοιδοί οἱ γοήτευται, οἱ τὰς ἐπῳδὰς λέγοντες, καὶ διὰ τούτων ἐφέλκοντες τοὺς δαίμονας εἰς τὰ οἰκεῖα θελήματα.

(h) Orig c. Celſ. l. 8. p. 416.

(i) Or. c. Græc. p. 156.

(k) Sheringham ſupr. p. 300.

(l) Spencer. not. in Orig. 18.

(m) *Gale in Jambl. p.*290.293.

(n) Tiraquell. ſupr. p. 325.

(o) Spencer de Leg. Hebr. l. 2. c. 20.

(p) *Spencer. not. in Orig. p.*28, 29.

(q) Cic. de Divin. l. 1, & 2.

(r) C. Celſ. l. 1 p. 2[illegible]. l. 3. p. 113. l. [illegible] p. 2[illegible].

(s) Καὶ εἶναι θεοὺς, καὶ προνοεῖν ἡμῶν, καὶ προσημαίνειν τὰ μέλλοντα. Var. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 31.

(t) Auguria & ſortes quibus ad amentiam omnis ferè barbaries dedita eſt. Maffei Indic. p. 22.

(u) Hiſt. p. 104.

(w) Apom. 2.

XI. But it would be an extravagance, to ſuppoſe, that all the Heathen modes of Divination are downright Magick; ſome of them are nothing more than Magical kind of Vanities: But a very great number of them are in leſſer or greater degree Magick. (l) The Fathers and Councils of the Chriſtian Church ſuppoſe, that the Heathen Vates had to do with Demons, and they reckon Aſtrology amongſt the Species of Magick and δαιμονιώδη ἔργα, Demoniacal Works. The Chriſtian Emperors in their Edicts (m) make the Heathen Divination in general no leſs than Capital; and therefore they ſuppos'd it no better than Magick. So the holy Scripture repreſenteth it as an eminent Branch of the Heathens Magick. Deut. 18. 10, 11, 12. There ſhall not be found amongſt you any one ——— that uſeth Divination, or an obſerver of times (rather (n) an Obſerver of Signs for Divination,) or an Inchanter (rather a Soothſayer,) or a Witch, or a Charmer, or a Conſulter with familiar Spirits, or a Wizard, or a Necromancer; for all that do theſe things are an abomination unto the Lord. 2 King. 17. 17. They cauſed their Sons and their Daughters to paſs through the fire, and uſed Divination. That Law of Moſes Lev. 19. 26. which in our Tranſlation prohibiteth Inchantments, is a Law againſt Divination, and the words are beſt rendred in this manner; ye ſhall not practiſe Soothſaying, nor obſerve Signs (the Signs of the Gods, as the Heathen call'd them,) which practice of Soothſaying is join'd with downright Magick, and therefore cannot be remote from it. Mich. 5. 12. I will cut off witchcrafts out of thine hand, and thou ſhalt have no more Soothſayers. Jer. 27. 9. Hearken not to— your Diviners, nor to your Dreamers, nor to your Enchanters, nor to your Sorcerers. The Sorcery and Magick which was in the Heathen methods of Divination, will beſt appear, by diſtinguiſhing it into Magick of the interiour dealing or the more intimate Magical Correſpondence. And Ma-

(x) Πάσαι αἱ πόλεις καὶ πάντα τὰ ἔθνη διὰ μαντικῆς ἐπερωτῶσι τὺς θεὺς, τί τε χρὴ, καὶ τί ὐ χρὴ ποιεῖν. Ibid.

(y) De Divinat. l. 1.

(z) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 18. [illegible] Arnob. l. 2. p. 87. Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 55.

(a) Heurn. Phil. Barb. c. 31.

(b) Quid enim majus eſt, quàm poſſe à ſummis imperiis & ſummis poteſtatibus comitia tollere, & concilia vel inſtituta dimittere, vel habita reſcindere? Quid gravius quàm rem ſuſceptam dirimi, ſi unus Augur aliter dixerit? Quid magnificentius, quàm poſſe decernere, ut magiſtratu ſe abdicent Conſules? Quid religioſius, quàm cum populo, cum plebe, agendi jus aut dare aut non dare? Quid Legem, ſi non jure rogata eſt, tollere. Cic. de Leg. 2.

(c) Idem de Divin. l. 1.

(d) Strabo l. 16.

(e) Elmenh. in Arnob. p. 155.

(f) Jambl. de vit. Pyth. p. 1[illegible]9.

(g) Phot. Cod. 241. col. 1022.

(h) Cic. de Divin. l. 1.

(i) Viv. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 7. c. 35.

(k) Προτρεπτ. p. m. 55.

(l) M. Blaſtar. Syntagm. p. 173. Balſam. in Can. 24. Concil. An. Cyr. Montacut. ſupr. p. 190, 199.

(m) Baron. ad an. 356. n. 1.

(n) Dionyſ. Voſſ. in Maim. de Idol. c. 11. S 4. Ἡ διὰ τινων σημείων μαντεία. Divinatio quæ fit per ſigna. Balſam. in Can. 65. Concil. 6. in Trullo.

gick of the more remote and ſuperficial dealing or correſpondence. Both theſe ſorts of Magick are viſible in King Menaſſeh's methods of Divination, which he deriv'd from the Heathen 2 Chron. 23. 6. He obſerved times (Signs) and uſed Inchantments (rather practic'd Soothſaying,) and uſed Witchcraft, and dealt with a familiar Spirit, and with Wizards. A familiar Spirit is call'd in the Hebrew אוב ob (which properly ſignifieth a Bottle,) which Name is ſuppos'd to be given to ſuch Spirits, becauſe in ſome Human Bodies they are Ventriloquous, and ſome whom they inhabit are ἐγγαστρίμυθοι and ἐγγαστριμάντεις, Ventriloquous Diviners: But I do not ſuppoſe, that this is the only or the chief Reaſon of their Name. Thoſe familiar Spirits were ſo called for another Reaſon; becauſe themſelves being conſulted by Magicians (out of an Human Body) are in their Reſponſes uſually Ventriloquous, and ſpeak as thoſe that ſpeak out of the Belly (as it were) with a deep, low and hollow Tone. For ſo the words of the Prophet muſt be tranſlated and underſtood. Iſa. 29. 4. Thou ſhalt be brought down, and ſhalt ſpeak out of the ground, and thy ſpeech ſhall be low out of the Duſt, and thy voice ſhall be כאוב as of a familiar Spirit out of the ground, and thy ſpeech ſhall whiſper (or mutter) out of the duſt. It is not thoſe that deal with familiar Spirits, which ſpeak out of the duſt, and out of the ground, but it is the familiar Spirits themſelves, that ſo ſpeak (o) as Maimonides rightly deſcribeth them; therefore כאוב muſt be rendred, not as of one that hath a familiar Spirit, but as of a familiar Spirit. So the word may be render'd Iſa. 8. 19. They ſhall ſay unto you, ſeek unto האבות Haoboth familiar Spirits, and unto Wizards that peep (whiſper) and that mutter. Both the Familiar Spirits and the Magicians are mutterers in their Speech, the familiar Spirits, not only in, but out of an Human Body, are Ventriloquous, and therefore the words of Saul 1 Sam. 28. 8. Divine unto me by the familiar Spirit, are thus rendred by the Septuagint, μάντευσαι δή μοι ἐν τῷ ἐγγαστριμύθῳ, Divine unto me by that which is Ventriloquous.

Some that Divine by their familiar Spirits, have their Divination from them by way of Afflation, which was the Caſe of the Pythian Girl, the Sibyls and the Bacchicks; (p) others have it by a Nidulation of the familiar Spirit in ſome part of their Body uttering Divination (as Act. 16. 16.) of which ſort of Spirit there are ſeveral Inſtances in ancient and modern Authors of unqueſtionable Learning and Virtue. Cælius Rhodiginus atteſteth, that he knew a Woman, from the lower part of whoſe Belly there came forth a Demon's voice, that this voice himſelf and innumerable others heard (the Demon's name which he own'd and anſwer'd to, was Cincinatulus,) and for this mode of Divination Eurycles is famous amongſt the Greeks. Some have their Divination from familiar Spirits by an unconfin'd Poſſeſſion; (q) as one Albicerius, touching whom S. Auſtin relateth ſtrange Inſtances of his telling of ſtoln Goods, and of things unknown by any Human methods of Knowledge, and even of the very thoughts and imaginations of one Man. For being challeng'd by one of S. Auſtin's Condiſciples, to tell him what it was he had in his Thoughts, this Diviner told him, he did think of Virgil, and (although ſcarce able to read) boldly and ſecurely pronounc'd the very Verſe of the Poet he had in his Mind. Who can doubt, but that ſo prodigious a Diviner (being a prodigious Villain in his Life) was really poſſeſs'd by a Devil? To this mode of Divination (becauſe Melancholic, Maniacal and Epileptic Perſons are prepar'd for a Diabolical Poſſeſſion and are often real Demoniacks) we may reduce the Divinations of diſtracted Melancholiſts, whom Ariſtotle ſuppoſeth to have in their Minds (r) aliquid præſagiens atque divinum, ſomething Preſagient and more than Human. But moſt uſually the Magicians have their Divinations by way of Conference with their familiar Spirits, in a way of Speech or by Signs equivalent to Speech. (s) The Prieſts and Witches in Peru, (who tell of things loſt, and of what is done in the fartheſt Parts before News can come) make themſelves drunk, that they may be fit for the Devils conference. Purchas in London ſpake with one Tomocomo (a great Man in Virginia, who came from thence to ſee England,) who inform'd him, that upon calling or conjuring their Okeeus came out of the Air, and often appear'd to them in his Houſe or Temple, and that he propheſied of the coming of the Engliſh to Virginia. They that conſulted Teraphim (as Nebuchadnezzar did Ezek. 21. 21.) were anſwer'd by Speech. (t) So were they that conſulted the inchanted head of a dead man, and ſo was the Necromancer דרש אל המתים that conſulteth the dead (ſo the Hebrew words ſignifie) Deut. 18. 11. (u) but the voice of the Souls of the dead, as alſo of the Demons that are conſulted, is ſaid to be, not plain and articulate, but rather an hiſſing, or gnaſhing, as Homer and Horace deſcribe it, and as Hermolaus Barbarus deſcrib'd the voice of that Demon whom he conſulted. (w) Several modes of conſulting the dead were uſually practis'd by the Pagans (Necromancy is called by Tertullian publica literatura,) and there were ſeveral places amongſt them of great fame for oracular Reſponſes of the Dead. (x) Apollo taught them a particular Magical Rite of ſacrificing for the purpoſe of Necromancy (mention'd by moſt of the Latin Poets, which ſheweth it to have been of ordinary Practice,) agreeably whereunto Ulyſſes in Homer and Scipio alſo made their Magical Sacrifices in a Ditch ad evocandos Manes, to call forth the Souls of the Dead. The horrible Inchantments of the European Pagans by the uſe of Blood to raiſe up a dead Body to give Reſponſes, is of Affinity to that Magical Rite of the Oriental Zabii, that poured the Blood of the Sacrifices offer'd to their Demon-Gods into a Ditch uſually, eating and feaſting about it, thereby convoking the Demons into preſence, and calling forth the Souls of the Dead, to conſult them for Divination. And as the Zabii had their Swords drawn, when they made their Magical Sacrifices and Feaſts for Divination: So Ulyſſes in Homer had his Sword drawn, when he called forth Tireſias's Soul by his Rite of Blood. The Necromantick conſulting the Dead is probably meant by the Prophet Iſa. 8. 19. For the Living to the Dead? One mode of conſulting the Dead was by ſleeping among their Sepulchres for Dreams of Divination, as the paganizing Jews did, Iſa. 65. 4. Which remain among the Graves and lodge in the Monuments. (y) The Sepulchres of the Pagan Heroes were in Mountains and in Groves, in both which places the Pagans celebrated their Sacra and conſulted the Dead for Divination. The Pſalmiſts words therefore Pſal. 106. 28. Of eating the Sacrifices of the Dead, may commodiouſly be underſtood, not only of Sacrifices offer'd to the (o) De Idol. c. 6. S. 2.

(p) Leon. Allat. de engaſtr. ſynt. c. 2. Byer. addit. ad Seld. p. 226.

(q) Caſaub. of Credul. and Incred. p. 148, 149.

(r) Cic. de Div. l. 1.

(s) Purchas pil. 1. B. c. 11. S. 2. B. 8. c. 5. S. 3.

(t) Maimon. ep.

(u) Leo Allat. ſupr. c. 5.

(w) Dion. Voſſ. ſup. c. 11. S. 4. Peter. adv. fal. lac. Art. l. 1. c. 11.

(x) Niceph. in Syneſ. p. 411. Bernald. in Apul. Apol. p. 55. Pantin. in [illegible] S. Theol. p. 335. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 7. c. 35. Amm. in Min. Fel. p. [illegible] the Dii Manes: But as Bodinus interpreteth them (z) of the Necromantic Sacrifices for convoking the Gods and Demons into preſence, and calling forth the Souls of the Dead. —— animas imis excire ſepulchris.

(y) Spencer. de Leg. Heb. l. 2. c. 11. S. 2. l. 1. c. 15. S. 3. Tertul. de An. c. 57.

XII. Although many of the Pagans modes of Divination in themſelves ſeem but ſlight things, yet uſually they were complicated with Magick of interiour Dealing and Correſpondence. Such was their Rabdomancy or Belomancy (Divination by Rods or Arrows) which was one of their moſt (a) ancient modes of Divination and of very large diſpread in Paganiſm, being us'd by many Nations (but with a great diverſity) from whom the Jews are ſuppos'd, to have learned it. Hoſ. 4. 12. My people ask counſel at their ſtocks and their ſtaff declareth unto them. In his War againſt the Jews Nebuchadnezzar made uſe of this mode of Divination, Ezek. 21. 21. He made his arrows bright, or as S. Jerom expoundeth the place, he commix'd his arrows. His Divination was Chaldean, and therefore muſt be ſuppos'd, to have been of the ſame Nature with that of the Alani, (b) whoſe mode of Divination was by Rods cum incantamentis quibuſdam ſecretis, with certain ſecret Inchantments. (c) An Engliſh Gentleman travell'd with certain Tartars, which divined by the Blade-bones of Sheep ſodden and then burnt to Powder, which being mingled with the Blood of the Sheep they writ therewith certain Characters, with divers Words and Ceremonies, and thence divined of their Succeſs, which they found true to their coſt. Cingis Can marching againſt Uncham enquir'd of his Aſtrologers and Diviners touching his Succeſs. They taking a green Reed cleft it aſunder, placing the parts thereof a good diſtance one from another, and writ upon the one the name of Uncam, and Cingis on the other, telling the King, that whilſt they were reading their conjuring Charms, theſe Reeds would fight together, and the Victory ſhould remain with him, whoſe Reed got the better, which accordingly came to paſs. Spartianus (d) relateth a Catoptromancy of Didius Julianus's, that a Boy in a Glaſs ſaw the departure of Julianus and the coming of Severus, but it was by virtue of an Inchantment. (e) Amongſt the Germans there were ſacred Women, who from the Circumvolutions and Noiſes of the Rivers foretold things to come. Theſe ſuffer'd them not to begin their fight with Cæſar, till the New Moon began to ſhine. (f) Varro reporteth, that Numa made uſe of Hydromancy, and that the Images of the Gods appear'd to him in the Water, and inſtructed him, what Sacra to obſerve and appoint. Actius Navius's Augury was doubtleſs complicated with Magick of interiour Dealing and Correſpondence. For many good Authors report of him, (g) that Tarquinius Priſcus having a mind to know what there was in his Augury, told him that he thought of ſomething, and would know of him, whether it could be done or not? Navius having perform'd his Augury, anſwer'd, that it might be done. Whereupon Tarquinius told him, that this was the thing which he had in his Thoughts, that a Whetſtone might be cut in two with a Razor. Navius bad them make trial. A Whetſtone therefore was immediately brought into the place of Aſſembly, and in the ſight of the King and People was cut in two with a Razor. S. Auſtin acknowlegeth, (h) that Aſtrologers mirabiliter multa vera reſpondent, (anſwer many true things wonderfully:) But he ſuppoſeth, that it is done by the ſecret inſtinct of evil Spirits. (i) In ancient times they were careful to lay the Foundation of their Cities under a fortunate Configuration of the Heavens, they Aſtrologically inveſtigated and predicted the Life and Fortune of their Cities, as they did of Men: But theſe Aſtrological trifles were complicated with real Magick; for they propitiated the Genius of the place, they offer'd a pure Virgin in Sacrifice, erected a Statue with a new and ſecret Name inſcrib'd unto which they ſacrific'd, and wherein they inclos'd the Fortune and Genius of the City. So Cities and Nations were dedicated to their Tutelar Gods peculiari & arcano ritu, which may ſignifie ſomething of Magick of interiour Dealing and Coreſpondence. (k) Such was the Divination of Antoninus the Philoſopher the Son of Ædeſius, who foretold, that after his Death the Temple of Serapis and other Pagan Temples in Egypt ſhould be demoliſh'd, and that Temples ſhould be turn'd into Sepulchres; which Prediction gained him the Reputation of a Prophet, and the Heathen Deities the Reputation of Divine Preſcience, which occaſion'd the writing of S. Auſtin's Diſcourſe de Divinatione Dæmonum of the Divination of Demons.

But the Pagan modes of Divination eſtabliſhed by the Laws muſt be called Magick of a more remote and ſuperficial Dealing and Correſpondence. In this abatement of Senſe it was Magick; for the Pagan Theologers and the Chriſtian Apologiſts agree, (l) that the Pagan methods of Divination were the Invention and Inſtitution of Demons, that all (Heathen) Divination cometh by them, that the circumterraneous Demons predict Events that befall Men and Cities (as Celſus ſaith,) and that Demons govern the ſeveral methods of Divination. Afflatu ſuo vatum pectora inſpirant, extorum fibras animant, avium volatus gubernant, ſortes regunt, (m) Divinationes cunctas & magorum miracula gubernant. They inſpire the Prophets, animate and mark the Entrails, govern the Birds in Augury, and the Lots and all Divinations, and the Miracles of the Magi. If therefore the Chriſtians underſtood Heatheniſm, if the wiſeſt of the Heathen underſtood their own Affairs, or if the Nature of the thing be conſidered, it appeareth, that there was a Magical Dealing and Correſpondence (more remote and ſuperficial) in the publick Divination eſtabliſhed by the Laws; for who can doubt, but that they conſulted the Gods, who conſulted the Signs of the Gods? Which Signs of the Gods (although there was much of uncertainty, fallacy and fraud in the Heathen Divination, nor could any thing better be reaſonably expected in an Inſtitution of Human Vanity and of Diabolical Wickedneſs and Impoſture) were oftentimes a ground of true Divination. (n) For Chalchas rightly foretold the number of Years, that the Trojan War ſhould laſt from the number of Sparrows, which a Serpent deſtroyed in the Neſt. When Scylla ſacrific'd, a Snake came out from the bottom of the Altar, which the Soothſayer rightly interpreted to be a fortunate Preſage, and prayed him to lead forth his Army. So when Cæſar a little before his Death ſacrific'd an Ox, and among the Entrails the Heart was wanting, he was told by Spurinas the Aruſpex, that the prodigy concerned his Life, which was a true Divination. There are ſeveral conſiderable Inſtances in Pagan Hiſtory (o) of true Divinations from Birds, Beaſts, Inſects, Prodigies, which may be illuſtrated from a remarkable prognoſtick in modern Hiſtory, wherein there was nothing of Magick, and which doth not demonſtrate the Domination of Evil Demons, but of Divine Providence. (p) The ſtrangeſt thing that I have read of in this kind, being certainly true, was, that the Night before the Battel at Novara, all the Dogs which follow'd the French Army, ran from them to the Switzers, leaping and fawning upon them, as if they had been bred and fed by them all their lives, and in the Morning following, Trivulzi and Tremoüille Generals for Lewis the Twelfth were by the Imperial Switzers utterly broken and put to ruine. If this divinatory Sign and divining by it had been a Rite of Demonolatry, it muſt have been of the Magical Character, as the Heathens Divinations were of which a principal one eſtabliſh'd by their Laws was their Aruſpicina or Extiſpicina, the Magical Nature whereof may be illuſtrated from an uſual Practice of the Roman Emperours and their curſed Magicians; (q) they ſacrific'd and diſſected tender Infants, Women and Women with child, and ſearch'd their Entrails for Divination, which are manifeſtly the Rites of Magick and of Magicians, becauſe they conſulted Demons in their Sacrifices. For the ſame reaſon the Sacrificing Children to Moloch, to make Divination (for that was (r) one deſign of it,) as alſo the Rites of the Cimbrians, Gauls, Luſitanians, and many other of the Heathen Nations, (s) who ſacrific'd Men and ſearched their Entrails to make Divination, were the Rites of Magick and of Magicians. And the ſame reaſon inferreth, that the Heathens ſacrificing Animals, their diſſecting them and ſearching their Entrails, to make Divination, were the Rites of Magick and of Magicians. And if their Aruſpicina was no better than a Rite of Magick, ſhall not their Augury (ſtrictly ſo called) be of the ſame Character? therefore as Ammianus relateth, (t) Athanaſius Biſhop of Alexandria was juſtly remov'd from the Sacrament by a Synod, becauſe throughly underſtanding Augury, and what the Augural Birds portended, he had more than once foretold future Events, which was no leſs a Crime than a playing the Magician.

(z) Demoman. l. 2. c. 3.

(a) Grot. in Ezek. 21. 21. Pocock on Hoſ. 4. 12. Gale in Jambl. p. 230, 238.

(b) Ammian. l. 31.

(c) Purchas ſupr. B. 4. c. 13. and c. 11. S. 1.

(d) In Did. Jul.

(e) Clem. Strom l. 1. p. m. 224.

(f) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 7. c. 35.

(g) Cic. de Div. l. 1.

(h) De C. D. l 5. c. 7.

(i) J. Gregor. Not. & obſerv. c. 7. v. Appian. in Syriacis de Seleucia.

(k) Baron. ad an. 389. n. 75, 77, 81.

(l) Lactant. l. 2. c. 17. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 8. p. 417. Eugubin. de Per. phil. l. 8. c. 22. Min. Fel. p. 248. S. Cypr. de Idol. van. Tertull. Apol. c. 22, 23.

(m) Apul. Apol. p. 491. ed. Berould.

(n) Cic. de Div. l. 1. Val. Max. l. 1. c. 6.

(o) Alex. ab Alex. Gen. dier. l 5. c. 13.

XIII. As the being a Prophet in the Jewiſh or Chriſtian Church did not only or chiefly conſiſt in predicting things to come (which was but one part of a Prophet's work) but in being a Teacher by Inſpiration (thus knowing and ſhewing the Mind of God;) ſo to be a like Interpreter of the Gods in Paganiſm (having acquaintance with their Mind,) this was to be a Diviner, and this (u) was their Mantice or Divination, of which the Prediction of Futurities was a Branch. And becauſe a ſupernatural Afflation was uſually and eminently the way, whereby the Interpreters of the Gods became ſuch, therefore Plato in his Phædrus will have Mantice anciently called μανικὴ, as being a Divine Fury and Madneſs, or maniacal kind of Enthuſiaſm; for ſuch was their ſupernatural Afflation; (w) they that are in an Enthuſiaſm, are not ſui compotes. The Poets are Prophets (called Vates, Tit. 1. 12.) were the Pagans ſacred Writ as it were, from them they deriv'd their Divinity, them they ſuppos'd divinely inſpir'd; Plato in his Io looketh upon them as the Organs and Interpreters of the Gods, agreeably to his Etymology of the Name Mantice he uſually calleth their Enthuſiaſm μανίαν, Madneſs, and he diſputeth in his Phædrus, that the Divine Madneſs is better than Humane Sobriety. So the Divination by this Afflation which Cicero (x) attributeth to the Sibylls and Pagan Prophets is called Fury and Madneſs, becauſe their Extaſies (y) were a violent diſtraction and alienation of Mind, an ὀλιγοχρόνιος μανία, or a fit of Madneſs. Such maniacal kind of Extaticks, Enthuſiaſts and Prophets (z) were uſual in the Pagans Temples, whence they had the Name of Fanatici (which is the ſame with ἱερόδουλοι, Temple-Servants) at their Orgia they were uſually inſpir'd with a Corybantick and Bacchical Enthuſiaſm, (a) their Prieſts uſually had it, even thoſe of that filthy Goddeſs Cotytto amongſt the Athenians were wont to be inſpir'd with furious Raptures. The Prieſt of Iſis is deſcrib'd by Apuleius, (b) fatigatos anhelitus trahens, panting for Breath, not becauſe he was tir'd with any bodily labour, but becauſe he was full of a Divinatory Fury and Afflation; for ſo the Sibylls are deſcrib'd by the Poets, becauſe full of God. If theſe Reports of the Pagan Theologers touching their own Affairs may be credited, they had amongſt them a ſupernatural Afflation and Enthuſiaſm (to which they were hugely addicted) in great plenty; and from the Account which themſelves have given of it, it is not hard to diſcern the true origin, kind and quality of their Divinatory Enthuſiaſms. For they deſcribe them (c) as Operations of their Theurgy, to which ἐπῳδαὶ, Charms or Inchantments are preparatory. (d) Some have Vaticination and become extatical by the ſound of Muſical Organs, Cymbals, Drums and Pipes (as the Corybantes, Bacchicks, and thoſe that celebrate Cybele's Sacra) ſome by drinking Water (as the Prieſt of Apollo Clarius at Colophon) ſome by ſitting on the Mouth of a Den (as the Delphic Vates) ſome by the Steams of Water (as the Propheteſſes at Branchidæ,) ſome ſtand upon Characters (Magical Characters) others to raiſe the Phantaſie (whereby they become Entheous) make uſe of Darkneſs, others uſe certain Potions, others Charms and a Compoſition of ſeveral Species. The order of Demons (e) buſie themſelves and take care of, either the conformation of Dreams, or the opening and ſearching of the Entrails, or the Erudition of the Birds, or the Inſpiration of the Prophets, or the Jaculation of Thunders, and the other things whereby we have Divination. The Chriſtian Theologers agree with the Pagan, that their Vates were inſpir'd (f) inſtinctu Dæmonis, (g) and by the incorporation of Demons, (h) that Julian was made partaker of Demons, ὃν ἐνθουσιασμὸν ἐκεῖνοι καλοῦσι, which they call Enthuſiaſm; but the Chriſtian Theologers thus difference the Inſpiration of the Pagan Diviners from that of true Prophets. (i) If any had a Correption and Occupation by an unclean Spirit, and utter'd Divination, as one that ſuffereth a rapture, ſo he was drawn and bound by the Spirit, not knowing any thing of what he ſaith; for this is one property of a Diviner, to be extatical (maniacally extatical) to ſuffer Violence, to be hurry'd, drawn, pull'd as a mad Man. But with all true Prophets it is not ſo, with ſober underſtanding and conſiſtence of Mind, and knowing what he ſaith, he ſpeaketh all things. That theſe ancient Theologers (Chriſtian and Pagan) have made a right Judgment touching the Origin of the Pagans Divinatory Enthuſiaſm, may appear from the magical nature of their Statues; for it is not reaſonable, to ſuppoſe an Incorporation of Demons

(p) Sir W. Raleigh. Hiſt. par. 1. B. 4. c. 2. S. 7. v. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 3. c. 23.

(q) Euſeb. Hiſt. l. 7. c. 10. Gr. Naz. or. 3. p. 91. Baron. ad ann. 309. n. 9. & ad ann. 363. n. 37. Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 8. Lampr. in Heliog.

(r) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 2. c. 10. S. 4.

(s) Alex. ab Alex. ſupr. l. 6. c. 26. Porphyr. de Abſt. l. 2. S. 51.

(t) Baron. ad ann. 355. n. 39.

(u) Jambl. de vit. Pyth. p. 129.

(w) Ἀπαρακολουθοῦσιν ἑαυτοῖς οἱ ἐνθουσιῶντες. Jambl. de myſt. p. 24. Gale not. p. 246.

(x) De Div. l. 2.

(y) Caſaub. of Enthuſ. p. 62.

(z) Herald. in Arnob. p. 21, 23.

(a) Lactan. l. 1. c. 21.

(b) P. 580. Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 252.

(c) Jambl. de myſt. p. 85, 88, 8

(d) Porph. Ep. ad Aneb.

(e) Curant ſingula, vel ſomniis conformandis, vel extis fiſſiculandis, vel oſcinibus erudiendis, vel vatibus inſpirandis, vel fulminibus jaculandis, cæteriſque adeo per quæ futura dignoſcimus. Apul. de Deo Socrat.

(f) Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 452.

(g) Orig. περὶ ἀρχ. l. 3. c. 3

(h) Gr. Naz. or. 3. p.

(i) S. Chryſoſt. in 1 Cor. Hom. 2 Euſeb. H. l. 5. c. 1 S. Hieron. in Iſa. Præfat. Cont. Rep. Hiſt. l. 3. c. Gale in Jambl. p. 219.

mons in Statues of Divination, and to deny it in the inſpir'd Men of Divination. (k) Thoſe Idols which the ancient Arabians believ'd to be inſpir'd with Life from God, or to be the (Sacella) Sacred Habitacles of Angels, and to be animated by them, they call'd Dei Filias, the Daughters of God. Such were the animated Statues (before-mention'd) ſpoken of by Triſmegiſt, which had a Demon inclos'd in them, whereby they became as it were Theomantic, furniſh'd with ſuch a Virtue as the Pagans Divinatory Enthuſiaſm.

To this Divinatory Enthuſiaſm of Men awake we will ſubjoyn their Divinations by Dreams, which were of the Magical Character. For as the ſleeping amongſt Sepulchres for Dreams of Divination was a Rite of Magick and of Magicians (whence the Chriſtians were counted Magi (l) becauſe of their watchings at the Sepulchres of the Martyrs ;) ſo their Rites of preparing themſelves by Faſting and certain Abſtinences, the ſleeping in the Temples of their Gods with Laurel or the like fatidical ſtuff about their Heads, their ſacrificing a Ram to Amphiaraus (or other Deity) and ſleeping upon the Fleece for a Revelation or Dream of Divination, can be thought nothing better than the Rites of Magick and of Magicians. Not that all their Divinatory Dreams were ſuch ; (m) for Heathen Men ſometimes and in extraordinary caſes had their Divinatory Dreams (as alſo their Preſaging Prodigies) from Divine Providence which interpos'd in their Affairs (in Sleep they were in Retirement, and in ſome degree in another World, and therefore prepar'd to receive Divination ;) but their ſeeking Divination by Dreams was magical, and ordinarily their divinatory Dreams were the Suggeſtions of thoſe Demons, of whom ſome have the Name of (n) ὀνειροπομποὶ, Suggeſters of Dreams. Theſe may ſometimes ſuggeſt Medicines in Dreams (M. Antoninus ſpeaketh of ſome ſuggeſted to him, and Ariſtides the Orator wrote a Book of his Dreams,) and either theſe or no better than theſe ſuggeſted thoſe Dreams, which to countenance Divination, are alledg'd by one, who deriveth the Art of Phyſick from Medicines ſuggeſted in Divine Dreams ; namely, (o) that the City Aphutis being ſtraitly beſieg'd by King Lyſander, was deliver'd by Dreams ſent them by Jupiter Ammon ; and that Alexander's whole Army had been loſt, if Bacchus had not appear'd in Sleep, and by Dream ſhew'd them a cure for grievous Calamities. Such Cures were in the Pagans Religion, which will appear to be Magick in many reſpects.

XIV. (p) All the ſuppoſed Religion of the Greeks about Altars, Images and Temples of the Gods is Demonolatry ; which ſpeaketh it magical dealing and correſpondence. (q) And this is manifeſt from hence. In thoſe Temples which are thought of greateſt efficacy there are magical Reſidences and Repoſes (pulvinaria deorum) which are contemporary with the founding the Images and Temples ; which Reſidences are made by thoſe that attend to the worſhip of Demons by fallacious Arts or Inchantments. In this reſpect the Religion of Paganiſm was Magick, the Demons by magical methods were made to reſide in their Temples. Its Idolatry was connex'd with Magick (according to the Phraſe of Scripture ; They ſhall ſeek to the Idols and to the Charmers, and to them that have familiar Spirits, and the Wizards, Iſa. 19. 3.) and it was not only connex'd with Magick, but ſo far as it was a worſhipping Evil Demons directly, it was Magick at leaſt of the more remote and ſuperficial dealing and correſpondence ; whence the Prieſts Prayers are called by Prudentius, (r) Zoroaſtræi ſuſurri, Zoroaſtrian Whiſpers or Mumblings ; the portentous Terms which the Romans us'd in their Sacra, are call'd by Arnobius, (s) Magorum cohærentia diſciplinis, conjuring kind of words ; and when a Law was made prohibiting nefarious Prayers and Magic Apparatus, that none ſhould celebrate them in the Night-time, (t) the Pagans interceded with Valentinian the Emperour for the reverſing that Law, becauſe it prohibited τὰ συνέχοντα τὸ ἀνθρώπινον γένος ἁγιώτατα μυστήρια, the moſt holy Grecian Myſteries that conſerve Mankind. The Religion of the Romans is diſtributed by Cicero, (u) in Sacra, in Auſpicia & in Monita ; and accordingly there were three chief Colledges of Prieſts ; the Pontifices who look'd after the Rites of Sacrificing, the Augures and Aruſpices who were the Judges in Divination, which was a principal part of their Religion, as Ammianus's ſaying of Julian implieth. (w) He pretended to continue in the Chriſtian Worſhip, from which he had clancularly made a defection (few being acquainted with his Secrets) giving himſelf to Soothſaying and Auguries and the other things which the Worſhippers of the Gods always practis'd. So Cæcilius ſaith of our (Heathen) Anceſtors ; (x) they employ'd themſelves either in obſerving Auguries or conſulting the Entrails. So the Jews when they forſook the true God, and did Sacrifice and Service to Julian's Gods, (y) then ſleeping amongſt Sepulchres they practis'd the Viſion of Dreams, and Divinations and Goety. The Sacrifices of the Heathen Religion cannot be thought to be without Magick, whether we conſider the Object of them, or the Effect of them, or ſome ſtrange Phænomena that are reported of them. For in reſpect of the Object of them they were (z) Dæmoniaci Ritus, the Rites of Evil Demons. (a) We pray God always by Jeſus Chriſt, to be kept from thoſe Demons, οἷς πάλαι προσεκυνοῦμεν, which anciently we worſhipp'd. The Demons which we pray againſt, are the Aerial, of whom Plato in his Epinomis ſaith ; (b) The Aerial kind having the third and middle Seat amongſt Animals the cauſe of interpretation, we ought to honour with Prayers, becauſe of their laudable mediation. (c) Τὸ δραστήριον τῶν θυσιῶν, the efficacy of the Sacrifices for removing Peſtilences, Famine, Drought, Hail, is nothing more than what may be done by Goety (as Diogenes Laertius ſaith) and thereto we ought to impute theſe following matters of fact, that are competently well atteſted, to have been ſuch. (d) To Goety we muſt impute the fact of Mantinica Diotima, who procur'd for the Athenians that ſacrific'd before the Peſtilence a ten years reſpit from that Diſeaſe ; and the efficacy of Epimenides's Sacrifices, who procur'd by them for the Athenians ten years reſpit from the Perſian War ; and the efficacy of Æacus's Prayers, who in a time of great Drought and Scarcity procur'd by them a plenteous Rain for the Grecians, who had conſulted Pythia, and were bid by her, to make uſe of Æacus's Prayers. (e) To Goety we muſt impute the efficacy of the Pagans devotiones & devotiones Sepulchrales (which they us'd at the Sepulchres of the Dead,) they devoted Men and Cities with direful Inchantments and Magick Cants, invoking certain formidable Gods by way of Imprecation (Valerius Cato's diræ are ſtill extant, who was bereav'd of his Patrimony in Sylla's time,) ſuppoſing, that the Party ſo devoted and damned muſt neceſſarily be afflicted with abundance of misfortune; Annon putas Devotionibus meis poſſe Diras invocari (ſaith an Egyptian Prophet in Apuleius) doſt thou not think, that the Diræ may be invok'd by my devoting Devotions? that is, by my Inchantments, as Beroaldus expoundeth it. The Heathen had alſo amongſt them (f) certain commendatory Prayers and magical Rites (ſecretarum artium ritus,) whereby their Magi pretended to beſpeak and ſweeten certain Powers, and to make them placid, ſo as to afford an eaſie way to thoſe that are flying up to Heaven, and not to oppoſe their return into their own Country. And the Etrurian Acherontic Books pretended, that by the Blood of certain Animals given to certain Deities Souls are made Divine and exempt from the Laws of Mortality. But this was the extremity of Madneſs, to promiſe themſelves ſafe conduct for their Souls from the efficacy of Magick; which yet was of ſuch efficacy, that theſe ſtrange Phænomena are reported touching their Sacrifices. Some of them were conſum'd by Fire of Magical Operation; for ſo were thoſe of the Perſian Magi before-mention'd from Pauſanias; ſo was a known Sacrifice offer'd up to Jupiter by the Rhodians; and Solinus reporteth of the Vulcanian Hill in Sicily, that when the Sacrifice is prepar'd there, ab ipſo numine fit accendium, Fire is kindled by the Deity it ſelf. Agreeably to their Sacrifices the Luſtrations and Purgations of the Heathens Religion were not without Magick. (g) In Heſychius we have περίεργα καθάρσια, the word denoteth their Heathen Rites of Purgation. Of their Luſtrations and Purgations the Heathen Books are full, Porphyry, Jamblichus, Hierocles, Marinus de vita Procli and others, all which are nothing but γοητείαι and θεουργείαι, Magick and Sorcery.

(k) Pocock. Spec. p. 89.

(l) Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 288.

(m) Tertul. de An. c. 45. Phot. cod. 242. col. 1030. Gale in Jambl. p. 216.

(n) J. Mar. Apl. 2. p. 65.

(o) Jambl. de Myſt. p. 63. Gale not. p. 218.

(p) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 378.

(q) Δῆλον δὲ τοῦτο ἐκ τοῦ εἰς τὰ δοκοῦντα ἐνεργέστερα τῶν νενομισμένων ἱερῶν κατακλίσεις πολλὰς γεγονέναι, αἱ κατὰ τὰς ἀρχὰς τῆς ἱδρύσεως τῶν τοιῶνδε ξοάνων καὶ νεῶν· ἅς τινας κατασκευάσαντες οἱ τῇ τῶν δαιμόνων διὰ μαγγανειῶν θεραπείᾳ σχολάζοντες πεποίηνται. Ibid.

(r) Baron. ad an. 362. n. 21.

(s) Adv. Gent. l. 7. p. 229.

(t) Baron. ad an. 364. n. 19. Zoſim. Hiſt. p. 202.

(u) De N. D. l. 3.

(w) Inhærere cultui Chriſtiano fingebat, à quo jampridem occultè deſciverat, arcanorum participibus paucis, aruſpicinæ auguriiſque intentus, & cæteris quæ deorum ſemper fecere cultores. Baron. ad an. 361. n. 1.

(x) Min. Fel. p. 54.

(y) Τότε καὶ μνήμασιν ἐννυχίζοντες τὰς ὀνείρων θέας, μαντείας τε καὶ γοητείας ἐπιτετήδευον. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 10. p. 341.

(z) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 10. c. 16.

(a) J. Mart. Dial. p. 247.

(b) Ἀέριον δὲ γένος, ἕδραν ἔχον τρίτην καὶ μέσην τῆς ἑρμηνείας αἴτιον, εὐχαῖς τιμᾶν μάλα χρεὼν χάριν τῆς εὐφήμου διαπορείας.

(c) Gale in Jambl. p. 253.

(d) Clem. Str. l. 6. p. m. 254, 255.

The Religion of Paganiſm was originally Magical, being inſtituted by magical kind of Men (that dealt in Divination) and by Demons; as in Hecate's Oracle (h).

Ἤλυθον εἰσαΐουσα τεῆς πολυφράδμονος εὐχῆς
Ἣν θνητῶν φύσις εὗρε θεῶν ὑποθημοσύνῃσι.

I'm come at call of thy full wiſe Precation,
Which Men found out but by the Gods monition.

Of the Oblations of external things to the Gods, Simplicius ſaith; So many of theſe as are legitimate and according to Law (i) God hath without exception ſhew'd unto Men, as Hiſtories declare. Every God (according to the Maxim of Socrates) ought to be worſhipp'd, as himſelf doth appoint: (k) Thoſe things are to be done which God is pleas'd with; but thoſe things it is not eaſie to know, unleſs one hear the Gods, or acquire the knowledge of them by the Divine Art. Of the Gods it is obſerv'd, (l) ὅτι τὰ ἀγάλματα μαγικῶς αὐτοὶ κατασκευάζειν ἐδίδαξαν, that themſelves have taught the magical making of their Statues, preſcribing various materials and ſpecies of things with ſuch a mode of compounding them and making them into a Statue, which is plainly magical: From Numenius the Pythagorean Origen giveth this account of the Statue of Serapis in Egypt. (m) It partaketh of the ſubſtance of all things adminiſtred by Nature, both Animals and Plants; ſo that the God ſeemeth to be made, not by Statuaries alone with profane Sacra and Inchantments, that call Demons, but by the Magicians, the Sorcerers, and the Men of that Character, that by Inchantments call Demons. Theſe were their Deities, and therefore their Deities were the Magical as well as their Statues. Theſe taught them Magick and the Inſtitutes of their Religion; for their betaking themſelves to Divination, to interpret the Mind of the Gods, was a betaking themſelves to conſult the Demons, from whom all Divination cometh to Men, and the Sacerdotal Art about Sacrifices and Religious Myſteries and Inchantments, as Plato ſaith in his Sympoſium. Upon an extraordinary occaſion ſome of their Religious Rites had an extraordinary Inſtitutor, that was no better than a Demon; as Zoſimus giveth this account of an Altar built to Pluto and Proſerpina: (n) The Romans being about to fight with the Albans, a Spectrum appear'd with a prodigious Countenance, clothed with a black Skin, and crying, that Dis Pater and Proſerpina commanded them, to offer Sacrifice to them under Ground, before they joyned Battel, and ſo vaniſh'd away. As Magick pervadeth the Pagans Religion, ſo it is viſible in their Civil Affairs; for they joyn'd it with their Agriculture; ſo the Zabii ſeeth'd a Kid in the Mother's Milk, to ſprinkle therewith and fertilize their Fields and Trees, Exod. 21. 19. And for the like purpoſes the Etrurians (o) would have the Skull of an Aſs plac'd in Gardens.

XV. But the Crime of Sorcery and Magick is of much greater extent than the denomination of Idolatrous Heathen; for there are ſad complaints in Scripture of the Jews addictedneſs both to the Heathen Idolatry and Sorcery; and not only they, but the Muhammedan Religioniſts and the Chriſtian Church it ſelf have been, and are, ſadly over-run with Magick. In the elder times of their Commonwealth the Jews in conſort with the Ten Tribes us'd divination and inchantments, 2 King. 9. 17. 17. Not a few of them were workers with Familiar Spirits and with Wizards, and Teraphim and Idols, 2 King. 23. 24. (p) they are obſerv'd, to have been addicted to Capnomancy and to Necromancy, Iſa. 65. 4. They defiled themſelves with the Mouſe, a magical Animal, Iſa. 66. 17. (q) ἑτοιμάζοντες τῷ δαιμονίῳ τράπεζαν, preparing a Table for the Demon, as the LXX. render Iſa. 65. 11. They are tax'd with Witchcraft and Soothſayers, Mich. 5. 12. Soothſayers in abundance, Iſa. 2. 6. with Diviners, Inchanters, Sorcerers, Jer. 27. 9. Zech. 10. 2. Hoſ. 4. 12. In the later times of their Commonwealth under the Second Temple Idols were out of requeſt with them, but in thoſe times and the after-times of their diſperſion they were extremely addicted to the Arts of Magick; as appeareth from ſeveral paſſages in Scripture, Act. 13. 6, 8. and 19. 14. And from Joſephus alſo (whoſe relations are exploded by Cunæus (r) with a very vain and fooliſh confidence;) from their

Bath

(e) Beroald. in Apul. metam. p. 54. Sheringh. de Angl. Gent Orig. p. 301.

(f) Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 2. p. 52, 87.

(g) Dr. Ham. not. on Act. 19. 19.

(h) Gale in Jambl. p. 199.

(i) Ὁ θεὸς πάντως τοῖς ἀνθρώποις ἐξέφηνεν, ὡς ἱστορίαι δηλοῦσιν. Com. in Epict. p. 196.

(k) Jambl. de vit. Pyth. p. 129.

(l) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 5. c. 12.

(m) Ὡς ἄρα πάντων τῶν ὑπὸ φύσεως διοικουμένων μετέχει οὐσίας, ζώων καὶ φυτῶν· ἵνα δόξῃ μετὰ τῶν ἀτελέστων τελετῶν, καὶ τῶν καλούντων δαίμονας μαγγανειῶν, οὐχ ὑπὸ ἀγαλματοποιῶν μόνων κατασκευάζεσθαι θεὸς, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὑπὸ μάγων, καὶ φαρμακῶν, καὶ τῶν ἐπῳδαῖς αὐτῶν καλουμένων δαίμονας. C. Cell. l. 5. p. 250.

(n) Hiſt. l. 2. initio.

(o) Holiday on Juv. p. 221.

(p) Gale in Jambl. p. 248.

(q) V. Seld. de D. Syr. Synt. 1. c. 1.

(r) De Rep. Hebr. l. 1. c. 12.

Bath Col (s) partly magical and partly fictitious, their frequent Viſions of the Prophet Elias (as ordinarily ſeen amongſt the Rabbins as the Bl. Virgin is in the Church of Rome,) their addictedneſs to Divination by Dreams, Lots and Omens; their Rabbins divining by their Shadow in the Moonſhine on the Night of the ſeventh day of the month Tiſri, their magical Amulets, Ligatures, Seals, Charms, forms of Inchantment and Exorciſms (to all which they are hugely addicted;) their magical conceits of an occult virtue in the figures of their Letters, and of the wonder-working Power of Names, eſpecially the Name Tetragrammaton (which they ſuppoſe to be θαυμαςȣ̃ργον;) their confident Opinion, that God hath given Power to his Name, Attributes, and parts of their Law, when apyly'd in their Magical manner, to cure Diſeaſes and to work Signs and Wonders (which are not ſo great Rarities with them as ſound Reaſon;) the Rabbins boaſt of their Miracles, the Stories which their Talmud telleth of their Wonder-working Faculty, and the marvellous Feats that have been done by them, which are plainly of a Magical Nature (ſome of them have beaten Magicians at their own Weapons;) their wild Conceits of Solomon's Wiſdom (from whom they derive the Iſraelites Skill in Magick, Inchantments, Adjuration of Demons, Teleſms and Images endow'd with Spiritual Virtue;) a principal Endowment requiſite in every Member of their Sanhedrin, which was Skill in the Arts of Magick, to qualifie him, to be a Judge in ſuch matters (accordingly R. Benjamin when he maketh Elogies of Men, he ſaith of them, they are Men-wiſe Philoſophers, skill'd in all Science, knowing in all Magick and Witchcraft;) their Magical Pharmacy (t) which they call a Cabala, and their Book Schimmuch Tehillim officium Pſalmorum (wherein out of every Pſalm almoſt they have collected Cabaliſtic Symbols or Characters for the cure of certain Diſeaſes;) the Magical Humour and addictedneſs of their Phyſicians (upon account whereof S. Chryſoſtom diſſwadeth Chriſtians from making uſe of the Jewiſh Phyſicians;) the Magical Phantaſtry of their Cabaliſts, (u) who ſuppoſe, that each of the Patriarchs had an Angel for his Preceptor, and who invoke the Angels by a Name complicated with the Name of God, ſuppoſing, that by Angels they may be join'd unto God, and that by theſe Invocations they may do wondrous things (they have alſo an Aſtrological method of finding out the Name of an Angel, to ſet over any Work, to accompliſh it and bring it to paſs;) their Practic Cabala (by which one Jew cur'd a Fever, and another extinguiſh'd a Scale-fire, as Myllerus affirmeth,) which compriſeth thoſe Magical Contrivances Baculum Moſis, Al Mandel Salomonis, and is compriſed in thoſe Cabaliſtic Books Pirke Ehalot, Raziel and ſuch more.

To the Jews Magick and Magical Books we muſt annex their Aſtrology founded upon certain Hypotheſes of their Rabbins, (w) that we are ſubjected to certain Angels acting by the influences of the ſuperiour Bodies, (x) that the Stars indicate at every one's Nativity what ſhall befall him, and on the firſt day of the Month Tiſri when they begin their courſe, they indicate what ſhall befall the World, whence the Jews call that day יום הדין the Day of Judgment, becauſe then by the Celeſtial Conſtellations all things are judg'd and determined. (y) The Jews (as is viſible in the Poet Juvenal) were marvellouſly addicted to Aſtrology and the other kinds of Divination, which is an Indication of their Magical Genius, and that Magical Genius is one principal cauſe of their infidelity. For one of their Rabbins ſaith; (z) The Iſraelites did not believe Moſes upon the account of Miracles; for they that believe on that account, do it not without retaining a ſuſpicion of Magick. A like Magical Genius amongſt the Muhammedan Religioniſts is viſible (a) in their Amulets, their Magical Coins and Gemms, the Apparitions of their Saints departed and the miraculous things that are done by them for the relief of their Suppliants Neceſſities, (b) their uſe of Hydromancy and other methods of Divination (one of which chiefly practic'd in Fez in Africa is of great Fame, and is ſaid to require great Learning,) and the Arabians notorious Addictedneſs to Magick. But it were happy, if ſo foul a practice was confin'd to Muhammedans, Jews and Heathens, if Magick was no where to be found ſave only in partibus Infidelium amongſt open Infidels; for a little acquaintance with Church-Hiſtory will acquaint us with a more ample diſpread of it, and that the Chriſtian Church hath been and is at this day ſadly blackned with the Black-art. To ſay nothing of the Heretical-Pagan Gnoſticks, nor of the great abundance of Witches and Magicians, that have been convicted and executed in ſeveral Chriſtian Countries (wherein at ſometimes they abound, at other times they are ſcarce heard of;) in the elder times of the Church many that were called Chriſtians, yet retain'd ſeveral of the Pagan Rites of Magick (c) Augury, Divination by paſſing through the fire (or rather by leaping over it) and by Lots. (d) Some conſulted the Pagan Inchanters and Diviners, ſome practis'd their impure Arts, and inſtead of the Pagan Sortes Homericæ & Virgilianæ, Sortes Biblicæ, were ſubſtituted to make Divination. Many Profeſſors of Chriſtianity were as Magical as thoſe of the holy League, (e) whoſe fury againſt Henry 3. of France grew to that degree, that ſome of them by an abominable mixture of Sacriledge, Parricide and Magical Inchantments made Images of Wax reſembling the King, which they placed upon the Altars, and prick'd them in divers parts, pronouncing certain Diabolical words at every one of the forty Maſſes, which they cauſed to be ſaid in many Churches, to make their Charms more powerful, and at the fortieth they pierc'd the Image to the heart, intending thereby to give their King the ſtroke of Death. It may ſeem ſtrange or ſurprizing, that any of the reputed Saints of the Chriſtian Church ſhould be foul and abominable Magicians, yet it is much to be ſuſpected, that ſuch Saints the Eccleſiaſtic Legendaries have Canoniz'd, and renown'd with many Stories of Miracles. For thus we read. (f) Palladius telleth, how S. Macarius learned all things by conſulting the Skull of a dead Man, which Rite was in uſe amongſt the Hebrews, as appeareth from the Talmud. The Miracles of the (s) Lightfoot Hor. in Matth. 3. 17. & c. 17. 10. & c. 24. 24. & in Marc. 8. 12. Coch. in 2. Tit. Talm. p. 18. Voyſin. obſ. in Raym. p. 557, 558. Dion. Voſſ. in Maim. de Idol. c. 11. S. 5, 13. Buxt. Syn. Jud. c. 16. p. 363. Reuchl. de Art. Cab. l. 3. fol. 78. Hotting. diſſ. p. 281, 285. Coſri p. 29, 304, 314. Lib. Jezirah p. 148. R. Benjam. Itin. p. 75, 91.

---

(t) Hotting. Theſ. phil. p. 439. Buxt. Biblioth. Rab. p. 329. S. Chryſ. or. 6. c. Jud. Baron. ad an. 363. n. 7.

(u) Reuchl. ſupr. l. 1. fol. l. 3. fol. 58. lib. Jezir. p. 14. Hotting. Theſ. phil. p. 447. Hornbeek. c. Jud. p. 304.

(w) L'Emper. in Abarb. com. in Iſa. 30. p. 61.

(x) Men. ben. Iſr. Qu. in Deut. p. 220.

(y) Sanè Judæi Matheſi ſive Aſtrologiæ divinatrici & cæteris divinandi generibus mirè erant addicti, unde Juvenal. Sat. 6. Cophino fœnoque relicto, &c. Voſſ. com. in Plin. ep. p. 111.

(z) Iſraelitas non credidiſſe Moſi propter miracula, quia illi qui eam ob cauſam credunt, ſemper aliquam ſuſpicionem Necromantiæ & præſtigiarum retineant. Menaſſ. ben Iſr. ſupr. p. 232.

(a) Hoffman. umbr. p. 171, &c. Hotting. Cip. Hebr. p. 150. &c. Hiſt. or. l. 2. c. 5. S. 6. ed. 1.

(b) Dion. Voſſ. ſupr. S. 7. Caſaub. of Credul. and Incredul. p. 139. Purchas Par. 1. B. 6. c. 9. S. 2.

(c) Balſ. in Can. 65. Syn. 6. in Trullo. Gale ſupr. p. 249. Grot. in Deut. 18. 10.

(d) Van Dale de Orac. p. 369. ad p. 378. M. Blaſtar. Syntagm. p. 173. 175.

(e) Maimbourg. Hiſt. p. 451.

(f) Palladius Epiſcopus libro ad Lauſum præpoſitum memorat, quo modo S. Macarius πρὸς τὸ ξηρὸν κρανίον πυθόμενος. Winder. de vit. funct. p. 56. ed. 3.

Legendaries Lives of the Saints and thoſe of the Hebrew Rabbins (as alſo thoſe that introduc'd Church-demonolatry and thoſe that occur in the Church of Rome) ſeem to be of the ſame Character, neither of them are wholly fictitious, both ſeem to be in part realities; but ſuch realities, that are no better than the Feats of Magick. (g) Of the Catalogue of Popes no leſs than four and twenty are ſaid to have been addicted to the Magic Arts. Sylveſter 2. (ſurnamed Necromanticus) is famous (h) for making under a certain Configuration of the Stars the Head of a Statue, which gave him oracular Reſponſes, and this ambiguous one amongſt others, that he ſhould not die, till he had ſung Maſs in Jeruſalem. Robert Sirnamed Groſſteſt in the Reign of Hen. 3. Biſhop of Lincoln ſpent ſeven Years labour in framing a Brazen-head —— which ſhould tell of ſuch things as befell: But he is ſaid, to have loſt all his labour, becauſe he fail'd of half a Minute of time. Faſciculus temporum reporteth, that in the Tenth Century Magick and the Art of making Charms and bewitching People was almoſt the only Learning of the Prieſts. Sennertus thus beginneth the 24*th Ch.* of his Book De Vulneribus. Whereas there is nothing more ordinary now adays among Soldiers, than by certain Pentacula and Seals and Characters to Fence themſelves and to make themſelves inviolable againſt all kind of Arms. In Countries that are call'd Chriſtian the vulgar uſually deal in Charms for the cure of Diſeaſes. In Spain (i) they call them Enſalmas, and in that Country the learning of Magick was ſometime publickly allow'd and profeſs'd; (k) for in the Academy of Salamanca they taught both Theurgy and Goety in the publick Schools. Aſtrology is in Chriſtendom an uſual Profeſſion, in great credit at Rome and in Italy, and was made uſe of in Paul the Third's Inſtauration of Rome. (l) Gauricus erected a Figure of the Heavens, Vincentius Campanatius obſerv'd the time with his Aſtrolable (crying the preciſe Hour is come,) and then Ennius Verulanus the Cardinal laid the firſt Stone, which was a Rite of the Pagans Aſtrological Magick. (m) A Biſhop very dear to Pope Nicolaus 5. was bewitched into an incurable Diſeaſe; whereupon application was made unto that Pope, to grant a diſpenſation to a Witch, who undertook (if it might be allow'd,) to bewitch her to Death, that had bewitch'd the Biſhop; the Pope granted the diſpenſation, and the buſineſs was done, the firſt Witch died and the Biſhop recover'd.

Magick is no ſtranger at Rome; much of her Religion conſiſteth in Magical Rites and Superſtitions, which if without Divine Inſtitution they produce Effects beyond natural Agency (or if ſuch Effects be produc'd by Reliques, or at Shrines and Images,) they are of Magical Operation. (n) Much of Magick there is in the Buſineſs of her Images, the uſual Apparitions of the Bl. Virgin in that Church ſeem to be a Magical Phænomenon, ſhe retaineth the Rites of Paganiſm, which were Magical in that Religion; ſhe aboundeth in Conſecrations, Exorciſms, Inchantments of Images, Crucifixes, Water, Salt, Oyl, Candles, Bells, Agnus Dei's, Roſes, Grains, (and among the reſt (o) of Cramp-rings,) pretending to repleniſh them with Virtue for driving away Devils, for being a ſecurity both to Soul and Body, and a Remedy againſt all ſecular and ſpiritual Evils. Every one of which Conſecrations is a Magical kind of Buſineſs, and is as to the form of Words and the reality (if not as to the real Magical Virtue) a perfect Conjuration and Inchantment. Her Flagellum Dæmonum and the Treaſure of the dreadful Conjurings are of the ſame Character; (p) and a Cardinal of her own hath well expreſs'd the Buſineſs of her Figures and Croſſings, it is to make a Charm a Bleſſing. (q) In a Voyage of the Portugueze to the Eaſt-Indies a great Whale applied his Body to one of their Ships, his Fins to the Sides of it, his Tail to the Rudder, arreſting the motion of the Ship to the great affrightment of the Mariners (who durſt not irritate the Beaſt:) But they got rid of this terrible Animal by this Expedient; (r) A Prieſt came forth with his Surplice, Stole and Crucifix (or the Sign of the Croſs,) and he by ſacred Charms and Exorciſms made the Beaſt tame and placid. (s) The Jeſuit Gaſpar was ſent for to a Woman nigh unto Death by Spectres, inſtead of viſiting her perſonally (which his Buſineſs would not allow) he ſent her a Schedule Inſcripto Divi Johannis Evangelio to be hang'd about her Neck, which immediately recovered her. How ſlight ſoever theſe matters may ſeem, yet they are certainly Magical kind of Rites (according to that Rabbinical Maxim, in quocunque eſt aliquid de Medicina, in eo nihil eſt de via Amoræorum;) but theſe are of a low Form in compariſon of ſome other inſtances of Magick, wherewith the Chriſtian Church is defiled. (t) In the Greek Church when the Foundation of an Houſe is laid, the Work-men kill a Cock or Sheep, the Blood of which they bury under the firſt Stone they lay (it is not always, but very frequently practis'd,) in which they imagine, that there is ſome lucky Magick, or a Spell, to attract good Fortune to the Threſhold. They call it θυσίας, or Sacrifice, and therefore I believe (ſaith mine Author,) that this is a piece of ancient Heatheniſm. Thoſe who have malice or quarrel to any particular Perſon, do oftentimes bring the breadth and length in Thread or Wood of him, againſt whom they entertain malice, to a Carpenter or Maſon, who is ready to lay the Foundation of an Houſe, the which for a little Money is bury'd under one of the firſt Stones, after which they ſay, the Perſon dieth, or at leaſt macerateth away, as the Thread or Wood decayeth, which is a moſt certain piece of Magick of the ancient Gentiliſm. (u) Amongſt the Greeks of the Iſlands of the Archipelago there is a piece of Witchcraft, which they call δῆμα, which is the tying up a Man from accompanying with any Woman, unleſs it be with her, to whom he hath faulter'd in his Faith. The Greek Church is not more ſadly over-run with Ignorance and Slavery, than with Sorcery and Magick, which hath not only prevail'd upon that Heel of the Woman, the lower and more ignorant part of the Greek and Latin Churches, but ſeveral of the learned Men that have flouriſh'd in them, are known to have been defil'd with Magick of interiour Dealing and Correſpondence. (w) Such as Hermolaus Barbarus, the Jeſuit Petrus Cottonus (whoſe Magick Thuanus giveth an account of,) Cornelius Agrippa, Hieronymus Cardanus and his Father, and the Advocate at Bourdeaux who kept a Demon in a Glaſs. (x) Eutychius Patriarch of Conſtantinople is ſaid to have been a great Diviner, and to have foretold to Juſtinus, that he ſhould ſucceed Juſtinian in his Empire; to Tiberius that he ſhould

ſucceed

(g) Arrowſmith Tactic. p. 26.

(h) Seld. de. D. Syr. Synt. 1. c. 2. & vid. Notas ejus præmiſſ. Arth. Hopton. libello de Annor. concordant.

(i) Gale ſupr. p. 293.

(k) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 8.

(l) Joh. Gregor. Not. & obſerv. c. 7.

(m) Caſaub. ſupr. p. 88.

(n) *Saul and Sam. at Endor p.*366, &c.

(o) Burnet Hiſt. of the Reform. Par. 2.

(p) Saul and Sam. at End. p. 328.

(q) Maſſeius Indic. l. 7. p. 366.

(r) Sacerdos cum linteo & ſtola & ſigno Crucis in medium prodiit, ab eo ſacris carminibus & exorciſmis delinita bellua.

(s) Maſſeius ibid. l. 14. p. 613.

(t) D. Rycaut. pref. State of the Greek Church p. 371, 372, 373, &c.

(u) Ibid. p. 313.

(w) Arrowſmith Tactic. p. 27. Beyer. addit. ad Seld. p. 212.

(x) Crakanthorp. vigil. dormit. p. 343.

ſucceed Juſtinus; and to Mauritius, that he ſhould be Tiberius's Succeſſor. Strange things have been done by Hereticks and Impoſtors ſince the times of the Heretical Pagan Gnoſticks, which are generally imputed to Magick. (y) For a Biſhop is ſaid to have worſhipp'd a Young Man in Spain as Chriſt, being ſeduc'd thereunto by his Magical Signs. Magick therefore appeareth, to have been of great diſpread even in the Chriſtian Church, which may illuſtrate our Idea of the Heathen World, that it was a World of Magick, Sorcery and Wizardiſm. Which Idea muſt not be thought a mean and contemptible Theory (but of infinite value and importance,) for it implieth Satan's Pagano-mundane Empire; and therefore is ſo according to the Scriptures, as nothing can be more; and it is ſo according to Chriſtianity, that it is one half of it. And becauſe we have ſhew'd that the Heathen World doth implicitly notice and atteſt the Truth of this Theory, therefore it muſt be called the Heathen World's Atteſtation to the Truth of the Scriptures, and to one half of the Chriſtian Religion. The many well atteſted Hiſtories that we have, of great numbers of particular perſons guilty of maleficent Magick and Witchcraft in theſe latter ages, are not (by far) ſo great an Atteſtation of the Exiſtence and Domination of evil Demons, as the Heathen World's addictedneſs to Sorcery and Magick for many ages, therefore we will further purſue this Argument, which upon this and other accounts is hugely advantageous to Chriſtianity.

XVI. A Sixth plain appearance in Paganiſm of Satan's Pagano-mundane Empire is the Sorcery and Wizardiſm of ſuch Philoſophic Pagan Saintiſts, who were Magical in a degree of eminency and ſingularity (above the ordinary rate of popular Pagans,) and therefore are fitly called the Magical kind of Saintiſts. Some of the Philoſophers that were Pagan Religioniſts, yet were in ſuch a degree Irreligioniſts, that they ought not to be called Pagan Saintiſts; ſuch were Ariſtotle, Cicero and Seneca. (z) The Firſt of whom acknowledg'd no Demons and for the main exploded Divination. (a) The Second was of a Sceptical Humour in matters of Religion and Divination. (b) The Third was an extravagant Exploder of the Rites of Religion and of his own Religion, an applauder of the Epicureans, (c) and although a Stoick, yet not without ſome Propenſion, to be a Coſmo-plaſtic Atheiſt. But the Sect of the Stoicks for the moſt part were genuin and legitimate Pagan Religioniſts, and therefore Magical kind of Religioniſts at the rate of the generality of the popular Pagans, (d) vel duces populorum vel ſectatores, being either the Leaders or Followers of the People. And ſome of them ſeem to have been magical to a degree of eminency and ſingularity, and ſuch as muſt be called the Magical kind of Saintiſts. For there are ſeveral Paſſages in the Life of M. Antoninus (the Philoſophic Emperour,) which make me prone to believe, (notwithſtanding his excellent Book and the immoderate Elogies which are given of him,) that he was one of this Character. (e) For otherwiſe he could not perfectly reſemble Numa, which was the thing that he affected: Nor be an agreeable Pattern for the Emperour Julian, who propos'd him as his Exemplar. In his War with the Quadi he was accompanied with Arnuphis an Egyptian Magician (as Dio relateth,) and (as Suidas ſaith) with Julian the Theurgiſt. (f) He was educated in Adriani gremio, in the Lap of the Emperor Adrian, who was a Magician, and who made him one of the College of the Salii in his younger Years, wherein he was & Sacerdos & Vates & Præſul & Magiſter, a Pagan Prieſt and Prophet and Præſul and Maſter. The whole carriage of his Life (and his initiation into the Eleuſinian Myſteries towards the end of it) demonſtrateth, that he was addicted to his Heathen Religion and Heathen Gods at an extraordinary rate, and therefore it is ſtrange, if he did not proceed to more than ordinary Magical Correſpondences, of which there are ſome intimations in his Book. (g) For he ſpeaketh of being familiar with the Gods δι ἔργων ὁσίων ϗ ἱερουργιῶν, by holy Works and ſacred Services, (h) he telleth of Medicines which they had indicated to him in Dreams, and that he had from them Suggeſtions, Helps, Inſpirations, Submonitions, and almoſt plain and expreſs Inſtructions. His Philoſophic Goodneſs and Virtue is foully blemiſhed by the Conſecration or ἀποθέωσις, (with all the Honourary Rites thereto appertaining) which he gave to his naughty Collegue Verus and his naughty Wife Fauſtina; for what goodneſs is that, which doth not hate known and acknowledged Vice and Wickedneſs? What Philoſophic Virtue is that, which ſetteth up ſuch Deities as Socrates and Plato would have pull'd down? It could not be therefore any ſingular abhorrence of Vice and Wickedneſs, which he had above other Heathens, that reſtrain'd him from being addicted to the Magicians and their Goety (as Xiphilin, Scaliger and Voſſius (i) ſuppoſe,) but only a principle of Philoſophic Prudence. (k) He learned from Diognetus, to diſtruſt wonder-working Magicians and their Inchantments, there being much of illuſion and impoſture in Magick. And if he abſtain'd from dealing with Magick and Magicians ordinarily out of Philoſophic Prudence only, might not Political Prudence put him upon dealing with them and experimenting the Power of their Inchantments in a great and extraordinary caſe, when himſelf and his Army was ready to periſh by drought? And is it not likely, that in ſo great a caſe Marcus conjoin'd his own Prayers with thoſe of the Magicians, who invok'd the aerial Mercury and other Demons with certain incantations, as Dio relateth? therefore the prodigious Rain which reliev'd the Roman Army, (l) and which both Dio and Lampridius (in Heliogabalo) wholly attribute to the Magicians, is by Julius Capitolinus attributed to the Emperour's Prayers, and the Poet Claudian attributeth it both to the Emperour's Piety and the Magicans Charms. There is great Reaſon, to believe (m) the Heathen Writers account of this prodigious Rain; for had it been procur'd by the Prayers of Chriſtians, it could not have fail'd to produce ſome great Effect to the advantage of Chriſtianity; (n) M. Antoninus's Pillar erected at Rome in Memory of it, attributeth it Jovi Pluvio; (o) it hath the Complexion and Phyſiognomy of a Magical Miracle, as Dio relateth it. And if it was Magical, what can be thought of M. Antoninus, but that he was (not a Magician of the higher Form and Degree, yet) a Man of magical Dealing and Correſpondence at a more than ordinary Heathen rate, and therefore muſt be denominated a magical kind of Saintiſt? Agreeably whereto Jul. Capitolinus maketh him, to Symbolize with the old Magicians; for being dead and deify'd it was reported of him (ſaith he,) that he truly foretold many things by Dreams. (p) So Trophonius, Empedotimus, Ariſtæus (and Amphiaraus alſo) being dead, an Oracle is ſaid to have

(y) Baron. ad an. 382. n. 22.

(z) Gale in Jambl. p. 215.

(a) Cic. de Divin. l. 2.

(b) Sen. ep. 95. de vit. beat. c. 13.

(c) Nat. Qu. l. 3. S. 29.

(d) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 14. c. 28.

(e) Baron. ad an. 64. n. 7.

(f) Jul. Capitolin.

(g) L. 12. c. 5.

(h) L. 1. S. 17.

(i) Com. in Plin. ep. p. 122, 123.

(k) L. 1. S. 6.

(l) See them cited Witſii Ægypt. p. 437, 440, &c.

(m) Valeſ. Annot. in Sozomen. l. 1. c. 18.

(n) Witſ. ſupr. p. 436.

(o) Baron. ad an. 175. n. 5.

(p) El. Cret. Com. in Gr. Naz. or. 3. n. 56.

riſen in the place where they dy'd. The Pagan Magick in general and the magical Practice of M. Antoninus may be further illuſtrated from a Note of Salmaſius upon the Emperour Aurelianus. (q) Under the Roman Emperours it was commonly thought, that by Sacrifices made, or Charms ſpoken, or Statues ſet in certain places, the Barbarians might be hindred from making incurſion into the Roman Empire. This Remedy they often made uſe of, calling it Conſecration, which Conſecration Marcus made uſe of againſt the Marcomanni. Heliogabalus was told by ſome, ſaith Ælius Lampridius, (r) that Marcus Antoninus by the Chaldeans and Magicians took a courſe, that the Marcomanni ſhould be always devoted and friends to the Romans; this he did by Charms and a Conſecration. Conſecration (ſaith Caſaubon upon the place,) is the Form which they make uſe of in defixionibus magicis, in Inchantments of Things or Perſons. From whence it followeth, that M. Antoninus is not excuſable from magical Practice at a more than ordinary Heathen rate.

M. Antoninus's Family deriv'd it ſelf from Numa, who was undoubtedly a Saintiſt of the magical kind; for his Story is full of magical Practice, (s) Hydromancy, Commerce with Demons, (t) the frequenting a Den for that purpoſe, and the conjuring down Jupiter. (u) His Ancilia and Palladium (which were ſecreta quædam imperii pignora, ſecret Pledges of the Proſperity of the Empire, ſo long as the Romans kept them) were plainly magical Artifices. (w) Having call'd his Gueſts, he cauſed the Tables to be preſently furniſh'd with all ſorts of Diſhes by Art Magick. Plutarch mentioneth one Caſtor, who wrote a Volume τὰ ῥωμαϊκὰ τοῖς πυθαγορικοῖς συνοικειῶν, reſembling the Roman Inſtitutes to the Pythagoric, which argueth, that both of them were originally magical, if the one of them was ſo.

Orpheus the Founder of the Religion of the Thracians and conſequently of the Greeks (for it is not reaſonable, to ſuppoſe with Ariſtotle, that there never was ſuch a Man) is of the ſame Character with Numa. (x) He incited Men ἐν τέχνῃ τινὶ γοητείᾳ, by a certain artificial Goety, yet muſt be reputed a Saintiſt; (for Celſus ſaith of him (y) that without doubt he had the holy Spirit. Philochorus relateth, (z) that he was a Diviner; and Tzetzes ſheweth, (a) that he had the Art of inchanting Serpents. He is famous for the Theurgic Luſtrations and Expiations which he introduc'd, as being believ'd (ſaith Pauſanias) to have found out ἔργων ἀνοσίων καθαρμὺς, νόσων τὰ ἰάματα, καὶ τροπὰς μηνιμάτων θείων, Expiations for wicked Actions, Remedies for Diſeaſes, and Appeaſements of the Divine Diſpleaſure. Reuchlin affirmeth, (b) that in ancient times there were thoſe, who are ſaid to have done the wonderful things of Magicians, not only by Egyptian and Aſſyrian, but by Greek words. Orpheus the follower of Hermes the Egyptian being one of the Argonauts, averted a mighty Tempeſt, into which they were fallen, by his Sacra, yet in his Invocations he made uſe of none but Greek words.

In the Story of Zoroaſter there is little of certainty, ſave only that there were ſeveral of that Name, and one an eminent Magician, of great Antiquity, who is generally reputed the Prince of Magicians. Pliny ſaith of Magick, (c) Without doubt it had its riſe from Zoroaſter, as Authors agree. Juſtin ſaith of Zoroaſter (d) primus dicitur artes magicas inveniſſe, he is ſaid to be the firſt Inventor of Arts magical. But doubtleſs the Arts magical are of greater antiquity than he (how ancient ſoever he be;) the report aroſe from the eminency of Zoroaſter's fame for Magick, (e) and becauſe the Magicians father'd their Books upon him, and becauſe he was a Father to the Oriental Magi (who were the Saintiſts of the magical kind,) that deriv'd their Diſcipline from him, as the Egyptians did theirs from their Hermes. The commonly receiv'd Opinion which the Perſians and Arabians had of him, was, (f) that he was a Magus or Prophet, and he is ſaid to have eſtabliſh'd his Law by Miracles. But becauſe the Miracles which are reported of him ſeem to be meer Fabuloſities, we will only take Notice of the Theurgic καθαρμοὶ, Luſtrations and Expiations which were uſual amongſt the Diſciples of Zoroaſter. Theſe καθαρμοὶ, Purgations were not only private, but publick, by which whole Cities were purg'd, to drive away the Plague, War, noxious Animals out of the Region, and other impending Evils. That Pythagoras uſually made ſuch Purgations, Jamblichus writeth in his Life. Cap. 19. (g) It is ſaid, that when he came to any place, he made Purgations, and drove away Peſtilences and noxious Winds from thoſe Cities that deſir'd his help for that purpoſe. So we have heard, that after he had made a Purgation of Lacedæmon, that City was no more troubled with the Peſtilence, whereas before it was frequently ſubject to that Calamity.

Pythagoras (who deriv'd his Diſcipline and Inſtitutes from Zoroaſter and the Oriental Magi, from Orpheus alſo and the Egyptians) muſt be thought a Prince amongſt the Saintiſts of the Magical kind. (h) He is reckon'd by Pliny amongſt thoſe that were eminently addicted to Magick; (i) Tzetzes alſo reckoneth him among the Magicians; and S. Chryſoſtom ſaith of him, (k) he ſhew'd innumerable ſorts of Goety. Ammianus ſpeaking of the Egyptian Wiſdom giveth this account of him. (l) Pythagoras inſtituted in this Wiſdom worſhipping the Gods in a clandeſtine way, made every thing that he ſaid to be Authoritative, often ſhew'd his golden Thigh at Olympia, and was often ſeen talking with an Eagle. Apuleius ſaith of him, (m) that he learned from the Egyptian Prieſts ceremoniarum incredendas potentias, the incredible Powers of Ceremonies; and Varro informeth us, (n) that Hydromancy was deriv'd from the Perſians, and that Pythagoras made uſe of it, as Numa had done before him. Conformably to Numa and Zoroaſter he had his Den at Samos, wherein he ſtay'd for the moſt part Night and Day according to Porphyry; who alſo relateth, that he was not only purged amongſt the Chaldeans (from the Sordes of his former Life,) but in Crete he was purged alſo by the Idæi Dactyli (who are called by the Poets γόητες, Magicians;) theſe purged him by the Lapis Ceraunius, he lying along by the Sea in the Morning, and by a River at Night crown'd with the Wooll of a black Lamb; and having his black Wooll he deſcended into the Idæan Den (ſo called,) and tarry'd there thrice nine Days according to the Inſtitution. Amongſt the Chaldeans, Egyptians, Arabians and the Hebrews he learn'd the exact skill of interpreting Dreams (ſaith Porphyry,) and he was the firſt that made uſe of Libanomancy, (o) which ſome think, he learn'd among the Hebrews. But hence S. Cyril telleth Julian, (p) that his Anceſtors did not neglect τὸ μαγγανεύειν, the buſineſs of inchanting, but ſtudy'd it and admired it, and undertook long Peregrinations ταύτης τῆς γοητείας ἕνεκα, to learn this Goety; for Pythagoras was converſant with the Egyptian Prieſts and learned their Wiſdom and Language. (q) He cur'd Diſeaſes both of Soul and Body by Cants, μαγείαις, Magical Methods and Inchantments; by ſome of them he remov'd Sorrow, by others he mitigated Anger, and by others he took away abſurd Luſts and Appetites. He is ſaid to have predicted many things, and all of them came to paſs (as the anonymous Writer of his Life in Photius reporteth,) his Predictions of Earthquakes are celebrated, as alſo his preſentaneous Depulſions of Peſtilences, Suppreſſions of violent Winds, and Hail-ſtorms, and his ſtilling of tempeſtuous Waves both in Rivers and the Sea for the ſafe Paſſage of his Friends; which skill Empedocles, Epimenides and Abaris being Partakers of, they alſo did the like things. Cicero in his Book of Divination ſaith of him, that he was an Augur; the Writers of his Life ſay, that he attended to Omens and Vaticinations, was addicted to Divination (himſelf and his followers were great Eſteemers and Teachers of Divination,) he conſulted all Oracles and was a great Friend of Apollo's, and in Laertius he is ſaid, to have had his Name Pythagoras, becauſe he did ὡς πύθιος ἀγορεύων, ſpeak as the Pythian Oracle and his Sayings were as unqueſtionable (his Readings alſo were behind the Curtain in imitation of Apollo,) which becauſe he pretended to, he became ſuſpected of Magick. A certain Author in Clemens (r) will have Pythagoras, to have been an Hearer of the Gauls and Brachmans; whether ſo or otherwiſe, Druidiſm is for the main the ſame with Pythagoriſm; the Druids are by Ammianus and others reckon'd a Branch of the Pythagoreans; therefore (although the Primitive Chriſtians had a more than ordinary kindneſs for them, becauſe of the nobleneſs of ſome of their Tenents, their ſeverity of Life, and abhorrence from bloody Sacrifices, all which deſerv'd a great reſpect, yet) they could be no better than Saintiſts of the magical kind. (s) Nemo unquam verè Pythagoricus fuit, qui non Deos ſenſerit. Never was there a true Pythagorean, who had not commerce with Spirits. Pythagoras ſymboliz'd with the Magicians in his Garment (for they in their Conjurations wore a Linnen Garment;) his Inſtitutes of Sanctity are of the ſame Nature with that of the Zoroaſtrian Magi, (t) that had the Terreſtrial Urchin in great Veneration; and what is that Pythagoric Inſtitute of ſacrificing ſomewhat to Venus on the ſixth Day, but Aſtrological-magical? If his Character ſpeaketh him a grand Magician, (u) the wondrous things that befell him, and the prodigious things that are ſaid to have been done by him, cannot be thought meer Impoſtures, but magical Impoſtures. He indoctrinated and perſwaded a ravenous Bear, to abſtain from the fleſh of Animals as himſelf and his followers did; and whiſpering in the Ear of an Ox, prevail'd with him ever after, to abſtain from Beans. In the Olympick Games he called down an Eagle, that was flying aloft, and ſtroak'd it and let it go. Paſſing over the River Caucaſus (or Neſſus as ſome ſay) with many of his Aſſociates, the River ſaluted him with a clear voice (all of them hearing it) Salve Pythagora. Before a Ship came to Shore, he told what Fraight it was charg'd with, and of another Ship ſailing with a fair Wind he foretold, it would be drown'd. He told ſome Fiſher-men, as they were dragging their Net, before it came to the Shore, what number of Fiſhes they ſhould draw; and a Serpent that killed People, he took in his Hand and ſent it away. He convers'd with his Friends at Metapontium and Tauromenium (the one a Town in Italy, the other in Sicily) in one and the ſame Day; and ſhew'd his golden Thigh to Abaris the Prieſt, who thereupon pronounc'd him, to be Apollo Hyperboreus, (w) and the Crotonians called him ſo. The great Eſteem (x) which he had in Italy, argueth, that there was ſome reality in theſe pretended Miracles; for he was reckoned with the Gods, ſome thought him one of the Celeſtial Gods, others one of the Demons that inhabit the Moon.

(q) Hiſt. Auguſt. p. 849.

(r) Per Chaldæos & Magos Antoninum Marcum id egiſſe, ut Marcomanni P. R. ſemper devoti eſſent, atque amici, idque factis carminibus & conſecratione.

(s) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 7. c. 34, 35. Lactant. l. 1. c. 22. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 6. p. 193

(t) L. Holſten. de vit. & Scr. Porph. p. 73.

(u) Flor. l. 1. c. 2.

(w) Vocatis convivis vi magicâ effecit, ut repentè fercula omnifaria præſto eſſent, & menſæ omni apparatu convivali inſtructiſſimæ ſpectarentur. Beroald. in Apul. met. p. 385.

(x) Clem. προτρεπτ. p. 2.

(y) Orig. c Celſ. l. 7. p. 367.

(z) Clem. Str. l. 1. p. m. 245.

(a) Marſham. Can. Chr. p. m. 149.

(b) De verb. mirif. p. 139.

(c) L. 30. c. 1.

(d) Stanley Hiſt. B 1. S. 1. c. 2. & l. 2. c. 1.

(e) Huet. Dem. ev. pr. 4. c. 5.

(f) Ibid. & Stanley ſupr.

(g) Καὶ προσβαλὼν, ὡς ἱ- γος, καθαρμὺς τε ἐπιτελ, λοιμὺς ἀπεδίωκε, καὶ ἀνέμους, ἀπὸ τῶν εἰς τοῦτο ἀξιούντων βοηθεῖν αὐτὴν γιν, Λακεδαίμονα γῦν παρειλήφαμεν μετὰ τὸν ὑπ' ἐκείνου γενόμενον καθαρμὸν μηκέτι λοιμῶξαι, πολλάκις πρότερον τῷ παθήματι περιπεσοῦσαν.

(h) L. 30. c. 1.

(i) Montacut. or. Ec. T. 1. p. 189.

(k) Πυθαγόρας γοητείας ἐπιδείξας εἴδη μυρία. In Joan. Hom. 2. *p.*561.

(l) Hac inſtitutus prudentia Pythagoras colens ſecretius Deos, quicquid dixit aut voluit, auctoritatem eſſe inſtituit ratam, & femur ſuum aureum apud Olympiam ſæpè monſtrabat, & cum Aquila colloquens ſubinde viſebatur. L. 22.

(m) Florid. l. 2.

(n) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 7. c. 35.

The Character of Pythagoras may be further underſtood from the Magick of his Aſſociates and Followers, Empedocles, Epimenides, Abaris, Zamolxis, who were notorious and eminent Magicians. (y) For Empedocles was ſirnam'd ἀλεξάνεμος, the driver away of noxious Winds, Epimenides was called καθαρτής, the purger of Men and Cities, and Abaris was entitled αἰθροβάτης, Air-walker. (z) Gorgias Leontinus ſaid, that he was preſent, when Empedocles practis'd Goety (γοητεύοντι,) and in his Poems Empedocles pretendeth, to teach certain Pharmaca, whereby you may raiſe or calm tempeſtuous Winds at Pleaſure, cauſe Rain or fair Weather, and raiſe a dead Man's Ghoſt.

Ἄξεις δ' ἐξ Ἀΐδαο καταφθιμένου μένος ἀνδρός.

Empedocles is reckon'd by (a) Tzetzes amongſt the Magicians, and of Epimenides the Diſciple of Pythagoras Jamblichus writeth, (b) that by invoking the Erinnyes he made his Inſidiators kill themſelves. The Writers of the Life of Pythagoras reckon amongſt his Diſciples a Cretian Epimenides: But one of that Name was ſomewhat Senior to Pythagoras; and this Epimenides is intituled by the Heathen Writers (c) a Divine Man, a Prophet, a Deſtiny-teller, expert as to Divine Matters, a Divine, one dear to the Gods, and wiſe in Divine things, having the Enthuaſiaſtic and Teleſtic Wiſdom, that came to Athens by the Monition of God, and made certain Sacrifices according to the anſwer of the Oracle (his Book was alſo intituled χρησμοὶ Oracles) a moſt knowing Man, one that made luſtrations by Cants or Charms. He is celebrated for his ſtrange Predictions of Events, that ſhould befall (d) the Athenians and Lacedæmonians (e) and the Perſians in their War againſt Greece, (f) for a voice alſo that he heard from Heaven, when he was building a Temple to the Nymphs, commanding him to dedicate it to Jupiter; for his Luſtrations alſo of Houſes and of Fields, and for driving away the Peſtilence from Athens by expiating the City; all which magical Exploits of his ſpeak him an eminent Inſtance of the

(c) Ἀνὴρ θεῖος, προφήτης, Fatidicus, δεινὸς τὰ θεῖα, θεολόγος, θεοφιλὴς καὶ σοφὸς περὶ τὰ θεῖα, τὴν ἐνθουσιαστικὴν καὶ τελεστικὴν σοφίαν, ἐλθὼν —— κατὰ τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ μαντείαν, θυσίας τε ἐθύσατό τινας, ὡς ὁ θεὸς ἀνεῖλε, γνωστικώτατος, καθαρμοὺς διὰ τῶν ἐπῶν ποιῶν. Grot. Not. in Tit. 1. 12.

(o) Gale in Jambl. p. 249.

(p) L. 10. p. 341.

(q) Porph. & Jambl. de vit. Pythag. Herald. in Arnob. p. 53.

(r) Strom. l. 1. p. m. 223.

(s) Reuchlin. de verb. mirif. p. 89.

(t) Plutarch. Sympl. l. 4. Qu. 5.

(u) Porph. & Jambl. ſupr. Plutarch. in Numa.

(w) Ælian. var. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 26.

(x) Jambl. ſupr. c. 26.

(y) Porph. ſupr. Jambl. ſupr. p. 128.

(z) Laert. in Empedocl.

(a) Montacut. or. Eccl. T. 1. p. 189.

(b) Supr. p. 188.

(d) Laert. in Epimen. Plutarch. in Solon

(e) Plato de Leg. 1.

(f) Laert. ſupr. M. Tyr. diſſ. 22

Sorcery and Wizardiſm that prevail'd in Paganiſm. (g) Abaris was intituled αἰθεροβάτης, Air-walker, becauſe riding upon an Arrow of the Hyperborean Apollo's (whoſe Prieſt he was) he paſs'd through the Air over Rivers and Seas and impaſſible places, as Jamblicus affirmeth, and as Celſus believeth. (h) His abode was in Temples and ſacred places, his conſtant imployment was about his ἱερουργήματα, Sacred Operations, and he is ſaid to have been ſo grand an Aſcetick, that he was never ſeen to eat or drink, and therefore muſt be thought a Saintiſt of the magical kind. The Incantations of this Hyperborean Abaris and of Zamolxis are mention'd by Plato in his Charmides; (i) and Zamolxis is ſaid to have been a Servant and Diſciple of Pythagoras, afterwards a Lawgiver to the Getæ, and by them accounted the greateſt of the Gods. (k) He is reckon'd by Strabo amongſt the eminent and celebrated Diviners, and therefore may be thought (what many of the Pagan Gods were, and what Empedocles affected to be) a deify'd Magician. Amongſt the Inſtances of Pythagoric Magick we will not over-look what Aſignotus a Pythagorean related of himſelf; (l) namely, that coming to Corinth he heard, that the Houſe of Eubulidas was made uninhabitable by a Spectre; but he entred the Houſe alone, and having plac'd his Candle in a great Court, ſate upon the Ground and ſilently read, whereupon a frightful Demon came upon him, that chang'd himſelf into ſeveral Shapes; but this Pythagorean carmine horrendo voceque Ægyptiâ, by an horrendous Charm and an Egyptian Voice, forced him into a dark corner, where he hid himſelf, and the place being digg'd the next day a dead Body was found there. To theſe Magical Pythagoreans we may reaſonably ſubjoyn (m) the Jewiſh Eſſens, who Pythagoriz'd in their white Garments, Silence, abſtinence from Animals, and ſeveral other of their Inſtitutes (which they might derive either from Egypt, as L. Holſtenius thinketh, or from the oriental Magi,) and were in common with the Pythagoreans very much addicted to Divination and Saintiſts of the magical kind. They are ſaid, to have foretold things to come, and to have been Prophets by their Abſtinence, ſaith Beroaldus.

XVII. Socrates is not like the wonder-working Pythagoras juſtly chargeable with any Magical Miracles, nor doth it appear, that he practis'd the Magic Arts, yet becauſe of his extraordinary Magical Correſpondence in all reaſon he ought to be reputed a Saintiſt of the Magical kind. Some of the Pagans proceeded further, and reputed him a Magician upon the account of his Demon, as appeareth from (n) Apuleius (o) and M. Tyrius. The moſt of the Chriſtian Apologiſts ſuppoſe, that he had really ſuch a δαίμων πάρεδρος, Demon-Aſſeſſor, or Familiar Spirit, as himſelf pretended to. (p) Socrates publickly profeſs'd, that he was inſtructed and govern'd by a Demon. Clemens in his Catalogue of eminent and celebrated Diviners reckoneth Pythagoras, the Hyperborean Abaris, the Cretian Epimenides, Zoroaſter, Empedocles, ἐπί τε τούτοις Σωκράτης ὁ Ἀθηναῖος μάλιστα, and beſides theſe chiefly the Athenian Socrates; for in Plato's Theages Socrates ſaith; I have from my Childhood (which befell me by Divine Fate) a Demonial Sign, which is a Voice, that when it cometh, reſtraineth me from what I am about to do (becauſe it would not ſucceed well) but never putteth me upon any thing. Some without pretending to any Reaſon (q) explode Socrates's Demon as a meer Figment, judging of the truth of things arbitrariouſly, as they are agreeable to their Wills, not their Underſtandings. But Socrates's Demon muſt not be thus exploded; which would be a foul reflection upon the Underſtanding or Integrity of that great Philoſopher. Nor can there be any reaſon, to explode his Demon-Regent, his pretenſion thereto being hugely agreeable both to the Chriſtian and Pagan Hypotheſis; for Chriſtianity ſuppoſeth, that unregenerate Mankind are under the Domination and Government of Evil Demons (who are of various Humours and Tempers) and that the Pagans dedicated their Children to impure Demons, (r) Sic igitur & Socratem puerum adhuc Spiritus Dæmonicus invenit, ſo a Demonical Spirit found Socrates when but a Child. The Pagan Theologers ſay of Demons, (s) They have ſeveral Bodies for their Habitation, one hath Socrates, another Plato, another Pythagoras, another Zeno, and another Diogenes. But Socrates peculiarly was of ſuch a Temperament, as might invite and attract an Aſſociate Demon; for he was a ſuperlatively Enthuſiaſtical and Extatical kind of Man; whence he was ſaid to be εἰς ἀρετὴν θεόληπτος, one that had a Divine Correption and Afflation to Virtue. (t) Saluting and adoring the riſing Sun he divers times fell into an Extaſie. (u) As Pythagoras is ſaid to have continu'd in the ſame poſture two Nights and three Days, not eating, drinking or ſleeping; (w) ſo it was uſual with Socrates, to ſtand immote without any alteration in any part of his Body (as in a Trance or Extaſie) from the Sun-riſing of one Day till Sun-riſing the next Day. Plato in his Sympoſium relateth, that Socrates was once obſerv'd, to continue in this extatick poſture from Morning till Night, and then ſome Ionian Souldiers lay down by him, and they found, that he continu'd without any motion till next Morning. He ſeemeth ſtrangely Extatical in his Platonic Love-paſſions, which is imputed to his Demon-Regent; (x) for Socrates had never led ſo right an amatorious Life, unleſs by the Afflation of his Demon he had choſen it, and kept to his choice. So Plato in his Apology ſaith, that Socrates inſtituted his Life according to the Oracle of Apollo and the Vaticination of his Demon. Theſe he combin'd in his Pretenſions, theſe he conjoyn'd in the Government of his Life; and if he may be ſuppos'd, to have counterfeited touching the Regency of his Demon, he may as well be ſuppos'd, to have counterfeited touching the Regency of his God, which is not imaginable; for in Plato's Apology he profeſſeth, that God (the Delphic God) injoyn'd him his Buſineſs of Philoſophizing by Vaticinations, Dreams, and by every other method whereby any Buſineſs can be divinely injoyn'd a Man; and that if the Athenians would diſmiſs him upon condition of deſiſting from his philoſophizing, he would not accept the condition, but would rather die than deſiſt, becauſe he muſt obey God. His God (y) and his Demon were of one kind, and both of the bad kind, with both he had extraordinary correſpondence, upon the account

of

(g) Or. c. Celſ. l. 3. p. 129.

(h) Jambl. ſupr. p. 131, 136.

(i) Ibid. p. 155.

(k) L. 16. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 2. p. 93, 94.

(l) Gaſſend. T. 2. p. 657.

(m) Luc. Holſten. de vit. & ſcr. Porphyr. p. 72.

(n) Apol. p. 453, 454

(o) Diſſ. 8.

(p) Socrates inſtrui ſe & regi ad arbitrium Dæmonis prædicabat. V. S. Cyr. de Idol. van. Tertull. Apol. c. 22. Min. Fel. p. 243. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 8. c. 14. Lactant. l. 2. c. 15. Clem. Strom. l. 1 p. m. 245.

(q) Outzel. in Min. Fel. p. 244. Van Dale de Orac. p. 154.

(r) Tertull. de Anim. c. 40.

(s) Εἴληχε δὲ ἄλλος ἄλλην ἑστίαν σώματος· ὁ μὲν Σωκράτην, ὁ δὲ Πλάτωνα, ὁ δὲ Πυθαγόραν, ὁ δὲ Ζήνωνα, ὁ δὲ Διογένην. M. Tyr. diſſ. 26.

(t) Ficin. in Plotin. p. 423.

(u) Jambl. ſupra p. 34.

(w) Gat. in Antonin. p. 287, 288.

(x) Socrates nunquam amatoriam vitam uſque adeo rectam peregiſſet, niſi afflatu quodam Dæmonis elegiſſet eam & tenuiſſet electam. M. Tyr. diſſ. 8. Procl. de An. & Dæm. p. 154.

(y) V. Cardan. de rer. varietat. l. 16. c. 93. p. 1137.

of both which Correſpondences he muſt be denominated a Magical kind of Saintiſt. And he ought to be ſo denominated for a third Reaſon, becauſe of his extraordinary addictedneſs to the Heathen Divination, which appeareth throughout Xenophon's Memoirs. (z) He made uſe of Divination himſelf, and ſuppos'd it neceſſary for Mankind, to manage their Affairs well, becauſe of themſelves they could not diſcover, how things would fall out, well or ill, and that to found and govern Houſes and Cities well (and in all ſuch caſes) Divination is needful, and to act contrary to what the Gods ſignifie, is as if one ſhould chuſe a blind Guide and one that knoweth not the Way, inſtead of a ſeeing one and one that knoweth it. He prov'd to Ariſtodemus, that the Gods regard Men and their Affairs, becauſe they declare things to the Athenians by Divination, when they inquire, and foreſignifie to the Greeks and to all Men by Prodigies. He accus'd them of folly that act contrary to what the Gods ſignifie, fearing diſgrace amongſt Men, αὐτὸς δὲ πάντ' ἀνθρώπινα ὑπερεώρα πρὸς τὴν παρὰ τῶν θεῶν ξυμβουλίαν, but as for himſelf he contemn'd all Humane things in compariſon of the Counſel of the Gods. (a) He look'd upon Divination as one of the Benefits, which the Gods beſtow upon Mankind, whereby they aſſiſt and cooperate with Men, and advis'd thoſe that would have help beyond the reach of Humane Wiſdom, to apply themſelves to Divinination; for he that underſtandeth the Signs that the Gods make, will never be deſtitute of the Counſel of the Gods. Himſelf was pious indeed, ὥστε μηδὲν ἄνευ τῆς τῶν θεῶν γνώμης ποιεῖν, ſo as to do nothing without conſulting the Mind of the Gods. Socrates was not only moſt religiouſly addicted to the Heathen Divination, but himſelf was an Heathen Prophet or Diviner; (b) he attributed to himſelf nothing leſs than propheſying (præſagitionem divinam,) Antipater made a Collection of the many things wonderfully foretold by Socrates. Cicero mentioneth ſome of his Divinations, and Plato in his Theages relateth ſeveral Inſtances of Men, that ſadly miſcarry'd, becauſe they would not take Socrates's advice, who (by his Demon's Voice) foretold them, that their Undertakings would have bad Events. (c) He precaution'd many of thoſe whom he convers'd with, touching ſome things that they ſhould do, and ſome things that they ſhould not do, as from his Demon foreſignifying; and they that obey'd, found it was for their advantage; but they that obey'd not, repented of it. To this Account of Socrates's Magical Character, we will ſubjoyn an Inſtance of Magick, which occurreth in his Life. (d) Ariſtotle reporteth, that a Magus came from Syria to Athens, who reprehended Socrates for ſeveral things, and predicted, that he ſhould die a violent death.

Plato ſeemeth not to have been Saintiſt enough, to be juſtly accounted a magical Saintiſt; nor is there in his Life any appearance of magical Miracles, or of extraordinary magical Correſpondences; yet he was ſuſpected of Magick, becauſe of his T'Agathon, (e) as Apuleius informeth us; and Pliny reckoneth him amongſt thoſe that were eminently addicted to magick. (f) Pythagoras, Empedocles, Democritus, Plato, ſail'd into foreign Countries, to learn Magick, undertaking Exiles rather than Peregrinations: This they extoll'd at their return and kept as a choice Secret. Not without ſome reaſon Plato might be ſuſpected of Magick, as being both a Pythagoriſt and a Socratiſt, a great admirer of the Oracles (that taught Magick) and of Inchantments and Divination. He deſign'd, to have convers'd with the Oriental Magi (if the Wars had not hinder'd,) and did actually converſe with, and learn of the Egyptian Prieſts and Prophets, to whom he travelled in company with Euripides, whom they cur'd of a Diſtemper by a Catharm with Marine Water, (g) which occaſion'd that Verſe of his,

Θάλασσα κλύζει πάντα τ' ἀνθρώπων κακά.

So Plato (h) in his fourth de Republica hath his curative ἐπῳδὰς, Charms or Incantations, and in his Charmides ἐπῳδὰς τὰς ὑγιεῖς παρὰ Θρᾳκῶν, ſanative Charms from the Thracians (as Clemens (i) calleth them, and Ficinus ſaith of him; (k) Plato in his Alcibiades calleth Zoroaſter's Wiſdom Divine, and in his Charmides curative of the Diſeaſes of Mind and Body. (l) Plato in his Charmides ſignifieth, that the Sickneſs of Mind and Body may be cur'd; and laſtly, that Immortality may be gain'd by Magick. Nothing rationally could reſtrain him from extraordinary magical Correſpondences, who believ'd no Evil Demons, who deriveth Religion from the Inſtitution of Demons (and in his Phædrus (m) he aſcribeth the Invention of Learning to the Demon Theuth:) nor is it eaſily conceivable, how any of thoſe, that aſpir'd after the higheſt and moſt familiar Converſation with their Heathen Gods, could avoid extraordinary magical Correſpondences. (n) It is moſt certain, that thoſe Philoſophers in the impious mundane City, who ſuppos'd themſelves to have friendſhip and ſociety with the Gods, fell upon the Evil Demons, to whom that whole City is ſubjected. The Magi that were at Athens when Plato died, and did Sacrifice to him, ſuppoſing him to be more than a Man, (o) as Seneca reporteth, (doubtleſs) did ſuppoſe him to be a magical Saintiſt. But whether Plato was ſo, or otherwiſe, there is great reaſon to think, that Plotinus was one of this Character; for his extraordinary magical Correſpondence appeareth, (p) in his ſeeing Demons and their Pulchritude, of whom he ſaith, (q) καὶ θέλγεσθαι φυσικῶς ἀγομένους, καὶ κατακούειν καλούντων, that they are naturally attracted and hear thoſe that call them. (r) He is celebrated for reſembling Socrates in a ſingular goodneſs of Nature, which was a proneneſs to become extatical preſently; and according to Ammianus (s) Pythagoras, Numa, Socrates, Hermes Triſmegiſt, Apollonius Tyanæus and Plotinus were alike in this reſpect, each of them had a (Genius familiaris, or) Familiar Spirit. But Plotinus's Genius or Demon was one of the ſuperiour Order; (t) as appeareth from the Demon which the Egyptian Prieſt ſhew'd him, and from his Superiority over the Magician Olympius in Magical Feats. He might be conjoyn'd therefore with Jamblichus in doing Magical Exploits, as he is conjoyn'd with him by Ficinus in Magical

(z) Ἀπομν. α.

(a) Ἀπομν. δ.

(b) Cic. de Divin. l. 1. ſub fin.

(c) Καὶ πολλοῖς τῶν ξυνόντων προηγόρευε τὰ μὲν ποιεῖν, τὰ δὲ μὴ ποιεῖν, ὡς τοῦ δαιμονίου προσημαίνοντος. καὶ τοῖς μὲν πειθομένοις αὐτῷ συνέφερε, τοῖς δὲ μὴ πειθομένοις μετέμελε. Xenoph. Ἀπομν. α.

(d) Laert. in Socrat.

(e) Apol. p. 474.

(f) Certè Pythagoras, Empedocles, Democritus, Plato ad hanc (Magiam) diſcendam navigavere, exiliis veriùs quàm peregrinationibus ſuſceptis, Hanc reverſi prædicavere, Hanc in arcanis habuere. L. 30. c. 1.

(g) Tiraquell. de Nobil. p. 486.

(h) Ibid. p. 324.

(i) Προτρεπτ. p. m. 34.

(k) Zoroaſtris ſapientiam Plato in Alcibiade divinam appellat, & in Charmide morborum animi & corporis curatricem. Arg. in Cratyl.

(l) Poſſe verò per magiam valetudinem animi corporiſque curari, & immortalitatem denique comparari, in Charmide Plato ſignificat. Idem com. in Plotin. p. 126.

(m) Viv. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 14. c. 9.

(n) Illos quidem philoſophos in impia civitate qui deos ſibi amicos eſſe dixerunt, in dæmones malignos incidiſſe certiſſimum eſt, quibus tota civitas ſubditur. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 19. c. 9.

(o) Ep. 58.

(p) En. 2. l. 9. c. 17. En. 1. l. 6. c. 7.

(q) En. 4. l. 4. c. 43.

(r) Gale in Jambl. p. 233.

(s) L. 21.

(t) Gale ſupr. p 310.

gical Sentiment. (u) In certain Statues compos'd in a certain order and method Demons are in a ſort included, as Mercury Triſmegiſt taught at firſt, and long after him Plotinus and Jamblichus. The cloſe of his Life is a manifeſt Indication of extraordinary magical Correſpondence; for he is not only celebrated by an Hymn of Apollo after his deceaſe (who calleth him his Friend,) but when he lay upon his Death-bed a Serpent appear'd under it, which paſſing into an Hole in the Wall, and there hiding it ſelf and diſappearing, Plotinus breath'd out his Soul. If this Philoſopher was of the Magical Faculty, is it not reaſonable, to attribute thereto his ſtrange predictions and diſcernments of Perſons that ſtole Goods, for which Porphyry celebrateth him in his Life?

Plotinus's Scholars were Magical Saintiſts, which is an argument that their Maſter was ſuch. (w) In that Age almoſt all the Platoniſts and Pythagoreans practis'd, or at leaſt affected Magick or Goety, and chiefly the Diſciples of Plotinus. Some of which are ſaid by S. Auſtin, to have been deprav'd by Magick Arts. The Lives of moſt of them written by Eunapius declare it. Marinus relateth the ſame of Proclus in his Life, the latter part whereof, which largely treateth of the Theurgicks, hath not yet been publiſh'd. And to ſay nothing of Apuleius and Apollonius Tyanæus, Porphyry relateth, that Pythagoras himſelf learn'd theſe vain Arts of the Egyptians, (x) All Men of Learning obſerve, that the later Platoniſts were addicted to the Magick Rites and Correſpondences (at a more than ordinary Heathen rate,) and S. Auſtin obſerveth, that their magical dealing with Demons was the principal thing that hindred them from becoming Chriſtians; but it did not hinder them from being eximious Pagan Saintiſts (for they are deſcrib'd and repreſented as ſuch;) which ſheweth, who it is, that is in Empire and Domination in the Religion of Paganiſm, and that theſe Philoſophers are of Character the Magical Saintiſts. Such was Proclus, whoſe Life written by Marinus and lately publiſh'd, ſaith; (y) that this Philoſopher being purg'd by Chaldaic Luſtrations was an αὐτόπτης, of the lucid appearances of Hecate, as himſelf reporteth in a Commentary of his; that by moving an Iynx or Hecatic Sphere he drew down Rain, and deliver'd Attica from calamitous Droughts; and that he ſet φυλακτήρια σεισμῶν, Amulets, as it were (Teleſms) againſt Earthquakes, which reſtrained them. (z) Julianus the Chaldean (the Father of Julian the Theurgiſt) is a parallel for Actius Navius; for by virtue of a Charm he is ſaid, to have been able to divide a Stone with his Hand; which is not ſo great a thing as is reported of Jamblichus (in his Life;) that in his Devotions he ſeem'd to be lifted up and rais'd above Ground more than ten Cubits, his Body and his Garments being chang'd into a golden colour; which ſpeaketh him of ſuperlative magical Sanctity. Such as we may contemplate in Iſidore the Philoſopher, (a) whoſe Language is a ſtrain of Seraphic Enthuſiaſtic Magical Sanctity, ἡ ἱερὰ τῆς ψυχῆς αὐγὴ, the divine ſplendor of the Soul; τῆς θείας ἀστραπὴ, the Coruſcation of the Divinity; θεία ἀπόῤῥοια, Divine Influence; τὸ θεῖον φῶς, the Divine Light. The Philoſophic-Pagan Magical (or Theurgical) Sanctity is thought by Learned Men a Divine Cabala, becauſe it is a reſemblance of true and genuine Sanctity. Of Heraiſcus the Philoſopher Damaſcius ſaith; (b) There was ſomething in his Nature τοὺς μολυσμοὺς τῆς γενέσεως ἀναιρούμενον, expulſive and abolitive of the pollutions of Generation; for upon hearing a Woman utter any unclean talk, preſently his Head ach'd. Of Antoninus the Son of Edeſius, Eunapius ſaith, (c) He wholly apply'd himſelf to the Gods and to Myſtick and Arcane Sacra, and was ſpeedily receiv'd into the Society of the Immortal Gods. By Methods of Theurgy and a Magical Sanctity the Platoniſts ſought for Immortality and Bleſſedneſs; and this Platonic way was preferr'd before the Chriſtian Religion by the Apoſtate Julian. In whom we may contemplate the Vanity of all Humane Accompliſhments on this ſide true and ſaving Religion; for Zoſimus ſaith of him, (d) He excell'd all the Men of his Age. In him we may alſo contemplate the Vanity of Humane Honour; for he dy'd highly lamented by many, and with this honourary Epithet;

> Ἀμφότερον βασιλεύς τ' ἀγαθὸς κρατερός τ' αἰχμητής.
> Both a good Emperour and a valiant Warriour.

To this Tribe of Magical Saintiſts Syneſius and Ficinus may reaſonably be ſubjoyned, as of the ſame Family and Foot-mark; for if Syneſius did not practiſe Theurgy, (e) it was only the fear of the Laws that reſtrain'd him. (f) Ficinus ſeemeth both to have underſtood and practis'd the Arts of Magick.

CHAP.

(u) Statuis quibuſdam ordine certo compoſitis dæmones quodammodo includuntur, quemadmodum ab initio docuit Mercurius Triſmegiſtus, ac diu poſtea Plotinus & Jamblichus. Ficin. Arg. in Cratyl.

(w) Τὴν κακότεχνον γοητείαν eo ſeculo Platonici & Pythagorici ferme omnes exercuerunt vel affectarunt, & inprimis Plotini diſcipuli. Quorum aliquos magicarum artium curioſitate depravatos fuiſſe D. Auguſtinus affirmat Ep. 56. ad Dioſcurum. Et teſtantur plerorumque vitæ ab Eunapio ſcriptæ. Idemque de Proclo Marinus refert in ejus vita, cujus pars poſterior, quæ prolixè περὶ θεουργικῶν agit, hactenus non fuit edita. Et ne quid de Apuleio & Apollonio Tyanæo dicam, ipſum Pythagoram ab Ægyptiis vanas haſce artes didiciſſe Porphyrius teſtatur. L. Holſten. de vit. & ſcript. Porphyr. p. 55.

(x) Baron. ad an. 362. n. 17. Montacut. Orig. Eccl. T. 1. p. 189. Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 8. &c. Sennert. de Conſ. & Diſſenſ. c. 18. S. Aug. de ver. rel. c. 4.

(y) P. 56, 57.

(z) Sozom. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 18.

(a) Phot. cod. 242.

(b) Ibid. col. 1050.

(c) In Ædes.

(d) Hiſt. p. 145.

(e) Syneſ. de Inſom. p. 135.

(f) Ficin. de Vita. l. 3. & vid. Com. in Plotin. p. 436 437.

CHAP. IX.

1. A Seventh plain appearance in Paganiſm of Satan's Pagano-Mundane Empire is the Pagan Oracles and Miracles: Of Van Dale's Epicurean Hypotheſis touching the Oracles, and the badneſs of his Cauſe and Arguments. 2. The firſt Argument againſt his Hypotheſis. 3. A ſecond Argument againſt his Hypotheſis. 4. A third Argument againſt his Hypotheſis. 5. A fourth Argument againſt his Hypotheſis. 6. A fifth Argument againſt his Hypotheſis. 7. A ſixth Argument againſt his Hypotheſis. 8. More Argumentations againſt his Hypotheſis, and a Conſideration of the Difficulties that incumber the common Hypotheſis. 9. An eighth plain appearance in Paganiſm of Satan's Pagano-Mundane Empire is the Sibylline Oracles, which plainly confute Van Dale's Epicurean Hypotheſis. 10. The Sibylline Oracles did not predict the coming of Chriſt and the Times of Chriſtianity. 11. A ninth plain appearance in Paganiſm of Satan's Pagano-Mundane Empire is the Pagans Anomalous Sanctity. 12. A tenth plain appearance in Paganiſm of Satan's Pagano-Mundane Empire is the Quality and Character of an Empire of the Heathen Religion, which hath the Marks and Characters of a Satanical Empire. 13. The Sufferings of the Primitive Chriſtians were in part an effect of the Philoſophic Pagans Wiſdom and Virtue.

I. THE many Oracles and Miracles that are in Paganiſm, are a ſeventh plain appearance in Paganiſm of Satan's Pagano-mundane Empire; for theſe being (in part) plainly Magical, ſuch as cannot be the effect of meer Humane Artifice and Impoſture, plainly demonſtrate the Exiſtence of Evil Demons and their Domination over the Heathen World. They that ſuppoſe the Heathen Oracles, to be meerly from Humane Artifice and Impoſture, muſt not be thought, to befriend the Chriſtian Religion, they bereave it of its Supports, they take part with the Epicureans, joyn with the Atheiſts (who triumph in their Books as unanſwerable,) and they contradict Religious Antiquity (both Pagan and Chriſtian) which ought not to be done but upon firm and ſolid grounds; whereas their Hypotheſis is groundleſs and founded upon weak ſurmiſes; for they do not proceed upon firm and ſolid grounds, that have nothing to object againſt the commonly receiv'd Hypotheſis, that the Heathen Oracles were in part magically Divine, (g) but only the Frauds of the Pagan Prieſthood, and the Folly and Credulity of the Vulgar; that becauſe ſome Oracles have been convicted, (h) to have nothing more in them than Humane Artifice and Impoſture, thence infer, that this was the common condition of them all; as if they ſhould infer, that there is no true Money, becauſe ſome is counterfeit; (i) that becauſe ſome Oracles aſcrib'd to Demons are ineptly jocular, and others ſo fooliſhly fraudulent, that they are incompetible to Demons, thence argue, that there were no Demons or Demonial Inſpirations in the Oracles; as if they ſhould argue, that there was no Divine Bath Kol amongſt the Jews, becauſe ſeveral things inept and fooliſhly fraudulent are aſcrib'd thereto; that becauſe the Pagans (k) ſometimes refus'd to obey their Oracles, when they were extremely againſt their Humour, and when they apprehended them, to be extremely againſt their Intereſt, thence infer, that they did not believe their own Oracles to be Divine; as if there were not the like Inſtances of the Jews behaviour towards their own acknowledg'd Prophets: (l) That reckon Alexander amongſt the leſs ſuperſtitious Princes, and becauſe an Oracle was attributed to his Hephæſtion, to Adrian's Antinous, and to many others after their Conſecration, thence argue, that all the Heathen Oracles were meerly the Inſtitutes of Humane fraud; and might they not as well argue, that all the Heathen Deities and their Religion were meerly Inſtitutes of Humane Fraud, becauſe theſe new Deities were ſuch? that have read Cicero de Divinatione, yet have the confidence to alledge on behalf of their Hypotheſis, not only the Epicureans and Academicks, (m) but all the Cynicks and Peripateticks, becauſe Euſebius hath committed ſuch a miſtake; that alledge Cicero's ſecond Book de Divinatione (n) as ſerious Argument, which is but an exerciſe of Wit and Humour in an Academical way; that applaud all his Reaſonings, ſome of which are groſly unreaſonable and irreligious, particularly his Diſcourſe againſt Divination by Dreams: (o) That applaud the idle Atheiſtic Drollery and Buffoonry of Lucian (a known Atheiſt and ſcoffer at all Religion and ſupernatural Operations) and vilifie the Sage Theories of the Great and Learned, and (in their way) Religious Schools of Philoſophers, the Platoniſts and Pythagoreans; (p) that alledge Clemens as one of their Partiſans (and Origen alſo) who often citeth the Sibylls and Sibylline Oracles as Pagan-divine, who reciteth a large Catalogue of χρησμολόγοι, Oracle-ſpeakers (Diviners) whom he accounteth Magicians, and who looketh upon the Oracles as a Magical Juggle; (q) that conclude, there was nothing of Sorcery in the Oracles, becauſe politick Men made uſe of them as Tools and Engines, to ſerve their Deſigns, and becauſe they were liable to be corrupted by Money or otherwiſe; as if this was not the caſe of Balaam an undoubted Sorcerer; that exclude Demons from preſiding in the Oracles, (r) becauſe Crœſus conſulted ſeveral diſtant Oracles, and found a diverſity in their Anſwers, ſome more, ſome leſs intelligent, and becauſe they did not anſwer the truth of the thing, as if ſome of thoſe Oracular Reſponſes might not proceed from meer Humane Artifice, and others from correſpondence with Demons; as if there was not a diverſity amongſt Demons in Knowledge and Temper as amongſt Men; as if they might not take ſeveral methods to hide their Ignorance of future Events; or as if Truth was always to be expected from the Father of Lyes and his Agents: Such craſs Miſtakes and irreligious Paralogiſms are foul Reflections upon the Learning and Underſtanding, the Integrity, Modeſty and Ingenuity of the Patrons of this Epicurean Hypotheſis, That there was no Demon in the Heathen Oracles, nothing more than meer Humane Artifice and Impoſture.

II. This

(g) Van Dale de Orac. p. 303, & 326, &c.

(h) Ibid. p. 216. & præfat. ad Lect.

(i) Ibid. p. 415, 444.

(k) Ibid. p. 418, 419.

(l) Ibid. p. 430, &c.

(m) Ibid. p. 207, 217.

(n) Ibid. p. 194, 261, &c.

(o) Ibid. p. 190, & 185.

(p) Ibid. præfat. ad Lect. & p. 200.

(q) Ibid. p. 404, &c. & p. 412.

(b) Ibid. p. 382, 383.

II. This Epicurean Hypotheſis is Anti-Scriptural and againſt the Faith of Gods Church and Kingdom. For have they a due veneration for the Scriptures, (s) that impute the whole Transaction of the Witch of Endor meerly to the Artifice and Impoſture of a Woman? (t) that with Pliny explode Magick as a meer Imagination of no Power or Operation? Are the Scriptures ſilent touching Witches, Witchcraft, Inchantments, Divination, familiar Spirits, and the Sorcery of the Pagan Religioniſts and the idolatrous Jews? Nor are they ſilent touching the Pagans Teraphim (which Name occurreth in Scripture no leſs than fifteen times,) which plainly anſwer (u) to the holy-popular Urim and Thummim, and were of the ſame general Nature and Uſe. For as the holy-popular Urim was an Oracle, whereby God gave anſwers to thoſe that enquir'd of him, whence the High Prieſt's Breaſt-plate is called by (w) the Septuagint, Joſephus and Philo, λόγιον and λογεῖον, Oracle: So the Pagans Teraphim were their Oracular Statues, as appeareth manifeſtly, (x) not only from the Opinion of the Hebrew Doctors, (y) but from the expreſs Teſtimony of Scripture. Ezek. 21. 21. Zech. 10. 2. 2 King. 23. 24. 1 Sam. 15. 23. In which places Nebuchadnezzar is ſaid to have conſulted Teraphim, they are ſaid to have ſpoken by way of Divination, they are join'd with the familiar Spirits and Wizards, and in the laſt of thoſe places Teraphim is beſt tranſlated Wizardiſm. Rebellion is the Sin of Divination, ואון ותרפים הפצר and Diſobedience is Idolatry and Wizardiſm. In this rendring of the words the latter part of the Verſe anſwereth to the former (which is the Scripture-way of ſpeaking,) and becauſe the Teraphim were (paganically) oracular and divinatory, hence all oracular and divinatory Statues in general are in a large ſignification called Teraphim in Scripture. Hoſ. 3. 4. Judg. 17. 5. The Scripture alſo relateth, that the Pagans conſulted their Idols and counterfeit Deities. 1 Sam. 6. 2. 2 King. 1. 2. Iſa. 19. 3. Hoſ. 4. 12. and that one of their Idols was called Nebo, whoſe Name denoteth him to have been Prophetick, Iſa. 48. 1. therefore ſome of their Idols at leaſt were divinatory and oracular. One of theſe places may be underſtood, not of Rhabdomancy, but of the Jews conſulting their wooden Idols. For the Staff may ſignifie not properly and literally, but figuratively and ſynecdochically a wooden Tool or Utenſil; ſo that the ſenſe of the place runneth thus; Hoſ. 4. 12. My people ask counſel of their ſtock (block or wood,) and their wooden tool (their Idol) declareth unto them. The Jews imitating the manners of the Heathen (from whom they deriv'd their Idolatry) conſulted their Idols; therefore the Heathen had their divinatory Statues, which is yet more plain from the expreſs Teſtimony of Scripture, that the Pagans were Magicians, Sorcerers, Charmers, Inchanters, Soothſayers, Wizards, Diviners, Necromancers, dealers with familiar Spirits; for theſe following places of Scripture are oppos'd to the manners of the Heathen. Exod. 7. 11. Lev. 19. 31. Deut. 18. 10, 11. 1 Sam. 6. 2. 2 King. 17. 17. and 21. 6. and 23. 24. Iſa. 2. 6. and 19. 3. and 47. 9, 12. and 65. 4. Dan. 2. 2. Apoc. 9. 21. and 18. 23. and 21. 8. and 22. 15. If the Heathen were of this Character, they muſt have magical dealing and correſpondence with their Gods for Divination, and their Gods muſt be to them oracular and divinatory; from whence it followeth, that their Oracles were at leaſt in part magically Divine or Divination by Magick. The Scripture alſo plainly affirmeth, both that there are magical Oracles or Anſwers by Divination, and that the way of ſpeaking in them is magical (z) murmur magicum, ſuſurrus magicus, ſtridor magicus, Iſa. 8. 19. and 29. 4. 1 Sam. 28. 8. therefore they might do well, to be Readers of the Scripture, before they become Writers of Oracles, that thus argue againſt the common Hypotheſis touching the Pagan Oracles, (a) Sacram Scripturam nihil tale quid nos de Ethnicorum oraculis docere, the holy Scripture teacheth us no ſuch thing touching the Heathen Oracles. But the Epicurean Hypotheſis of this modern Writer of Oracles involveth in it yet further degrees of Anti-Scripturiſm. For ſeeing the Pagans Affairs were chiefly govern'd by their Oracles, if there was no evil Demon in thoſe Oracles, the evil Demons were not the Rulers in chief of the darkneſs of this World, as the Apoſtle affirmeth. Eph. 6. 12. The Scripture alſo expreſly affirmeth, that the Heathen idolatrous Worſhip was the Devil's Inſtitution. Apoc. 12. 9. and 13. 2, 4. From whence it followeth, that they were inſtituted by the Devil in ſome of his Oracles; and it followeth alſo, that thoſe Oracles which inſtituted ſeveral main Parts and Branches of the Heathen idolatrous Worſhip, were the Devil's Oracles. And ſuch are the Oracles of which Euſebius (b) hath made a Collection. The Inſtitutes of the Pagan Idolatry (like the Pagano-Chriſtian, Apoc. 13. 11. and 16. 13. and 19. 20.) were originally Pſeudo-Prophetic; and in this ſenſe they were Pſeudo-Prophetic, they were eminently the Doctrine of ſeducing Spirits and of Devils. 1 Tim. 4. 1. It is the Intereſt of evil Demons, to ſet up the Inſtitutes of Demonolatry (the Religion of Paganiſm;) and accordingly the Inſtitutes of Paganiſm are derived from Demons and Divination (and conſequently from ſome ſort of Pagan Oracles) by the wiſeſt of the Pagan Theologers. And Plato in his Fourth de Republ. will not take upon him, to Inſtitute the Sacra in his Commonwealth, but referreth the ordering of them to Apollo, namely, the founding of Temples, the Sacrifices and other Services of the Gods, Demons and Heroes, the Sepulchres of the deceas'd, and the Miniſteries that are requiſite, to have them propitious. (c) For ſuch things we know not our ſelves, and in ordering a City if we be wiſe, we ſhall give credit to no other, nor uſe any other Interpreter but our Country-Interpreter. For as to ſuch things this God is to all Mankind a Country-Interpreter. It muſt be ſaid of ſeveral Branches of Paganiſm, they were the Inſtitutes of the Devil and of the Delphic Apollo; therefore the Delphic Oracle was his Oracle, and who ſeeth not, that this Oracular Apollo is the ſame with Apollyon, and that the Devil is called Apollyon with reſpect to the Delphic Apollo? As Expoſitors agree. Apoc. 9. 11. Accordingly Origen ſaith of this Oracular Apollo (d) ὁ καθ' ἡμᾶς δαίμων, with us he is a Demon; and he thus defineth the Pagan Divines or Diviners. (e) They call thoſe Divine, by whom through the Incorporation of thoſe Demons that preſide over them Reſponſes are made in Verſes modulated by Art. Thoſe alſo whom they call Magi and Malefici having

(s) Ibid. p. 202.

(t) Ibid. p. 507.

(u) See Mr. Mede on Deut. 33. 8. Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 3. Diſſ. 7. c. 3. S. 2, 3, &c.

(w) Spencer. Ibid. c. 1. S. 1. & c. 3. S. 1.

(x) Ibid. S. 6.

(y) Ibid. S. 9.

(z) Herald. in Arnob. p. 53. L. Allat. de Engaſtr. c. 5.

(a) Van Dale præf. ad Lect.

(b) Præp. l. 4. & 5.

(d) C. Celſ. l. 3. p. 127.

(c) Τὰ γὰρ δὴ τοιαῦτα οὔτ' ἐπιστάμεθα ἡμεῖς, οἰκίζοντές τε πόλιν οὐδενὶ ἄλλῳ πεισόμεθα ἐὰν νοῦν ἔχωμεν, οὐδὲ χρησόμεθα ἐξηγητῇ ἀλλ' ἢ τῷ πατρίῳ. Οὗτος γὰρ δήπου ὁ θεὸς περὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις πάτριος ἐξηγητής.

(e) Divinos appellant, à quibus per incorporationem Dæmonum eorum qui eis præſunt, verſibus arte modulatis reſponſa proferuntur. Sed & hi quos Magos vel Maleficos dicunt, aliquoties dæmonibus invocatis ſupra pueros adhuc parvæ ætatis

made

verſu eos dicere poemata admiranda omnibus & ſtupenda fecerunt. Περὶ ἀρχ. l. 3. c. 3. made ſeveral times an Invocation of Demons over young Boys, have made them ſpeak Poems wonderful to all and ſtupendious.

III. This Epicurean Hypotheſis touching Oracles is Anti-Analogical, being oppoſite to the deſign'd Analogy and Correſpondence between the Rites of Paganiſm and Judaiſm. For a deſign'd Correſpondence there is between the Sacra of theſe two Religions; "the Jews in Correſpondence to the Pagan Religioniſts having a Tabernacle or portatile Dwelling-place for their Deity, afterwards a fixt magnificent Temple built in a City upon a Mount with its Front to the Eaſt, and its Sacrarium to the Weſt; a ſacred Ark or Cheſt and Symbols (Hieroglyphical and of Egyptian Cognation,) in the inmoſt part of the Temple Altars and thoſe with Horns, Linnen (not Woollen) Veſtments for their Prieſts made and girt after the Egyptian faſhion, the Nazarites Conſecration of their Hair unto God, Feſtival Solemnities celebrated with Feſtival Mirth and Entertaiment, New Moons (Monthly and Annual) ſolemniz'd with Trumpets, feſtivity and Jubilation, oblation of the firſt Fruits (which the Jews obſerv'd in over-much Conformity to the Pagans,) the paying of Tithes and dedicating part of their Spoils in War, Sacrifices in great abundance of various Things and Kinds and feaſting upon the Sacrifices for God-Society, multifarious Luſtrations and Purifications of Things and Perſons, a mighty Pomp and Splendour in their Religion, an Oracle of Urim anſwering to the Pagans Teraphim, a Tabernacle and Temple-Oracle anſwering to the Pagans Temple-Oracles, oracular and divinatory Prieſts and Prophets anſwering to ſuch amongſt the Pagans, the water of jealouſie like the Pagans waters of Probation, Divorces alſo and a King with abſolute Power agreeably to the Nations round about them, and a ſenſible preſence and nearneſs of their Deity, which is hugely taking and deſirable." So great a Conſonance and Correſpondence of theſe two Inſtitutions of Judaiſm and Paganiſm could not be meerly fortuitous and undeſign'd, nor could it be the Effect of meer Human Artifice, for the Jews Religion was not of their own deviſing, nor did the Gentiles deviſe their Religion according to the Pattern of Judaiſm; for the Jews were not ſo well known, nor ſo well lik'd amongſt the Heathen, that they can be ſuppos'd of their own accord, to have affected ſo great a Conformity to the Jewiſh Rites (if they were ſo well affected towards them and their Sacra, why did they not affect a Conformity to them in all their Sacra? At leaſt in all their principal Rites? And why not in thoſe Rites that were oppoſite to Gentiliſm? And why did they not reliquiſh Gentiliſm for Judaiſm? And how is it, that the correſpondence between Gentiliſm and Judaiſm is ſo bounded, that yet a requiſite Diſſonance and Diſagreement is kept between theſe two Religions;) therefore one of theſe two Suppoſitions muſt neceſſarily be entertain'd, either the Devil inſtituted Paganiſm in great part an Imitamen of Judaiſm, or God inſtituted Judaiſm in great part correſpondent to Paganiſm. Some ſuppoſe, that Paganiſm is Judaiſm degenerate, that the Devil inſtituting Gentiliſm was God's Ape, that in many particulars he emulated the Judaical Rites, and tranſcrib'd them into his Inſtitution, ſo that Paganiſm was in great part a deſign'd imitamen of Judaiſm. But againſt this account of the Correſpondence between Judaiſm and Paganiſm one principal Objection is the great Antiquity of Paganiſm, which gave occaſion to the Opinion of ſome (f) qui deorum cultus ab exordio rerum fuiſſe contendunt, & priorem eſſe gentilitatem, quàm Dei religionem; who diſpute, that the worſhip of the Gods hath been from the beginning of things, and that Gentiliſm was before God's Religion. Others therefore ſuppoſe, (g) that Judaiſm is in great part a deſign'd Correſpondence to Paganiſm, that God tranſcrib'd many Rites in uſe amongſt the Pagans into the Moſaic Inſtitution (or inſtituted ſuch as were anſwerable thereto,) ſuch as the Jews affected, were addicted and accuſtomed to, and which were requiſite Ingredients in the frame of their Religion, that it might be attemper'd and accommodate to their Genius. Theſe accounts of the deſign'd correſpondence between Judaiſm and Paganiſm ſeem and really are diſſonant and contrary, yet they may be ſo underſtood, as to be perfectly conſonant and harmonious, and ſo underſtood both of them are true. For if by Judaiſm we mean the initial Judaiſm, this was from the beginning of the World, old Gentiliſm was this Judaiſm degenerate, and a deſign'd Imitamen of it. But if by Judaiſm we mean the conſummate Judaiſm (the Judaiſm of the Commonwealth of Iſrael,) in this Judaiſm God tranſcrib'd many Pagan Rites, and it was in great part a deſign'd correſpondence to Paganiſm. To this Judaiſm we muſt confine our conſideration, that we may thus make a Judgment touching the Pagan Oracles.

One of the forementiōn'd Suppoſitions muſt be entertain'd: If we entertain the former of them (that the Devil inſtituted Paganiſm in great part an Imitamen of Judaiſm,) this implieth, that the Heathens Oracles were the Devils Oracles erected in imitation of the Jews Oracles. If we entertain the latter Suppoſition (that God inſtituted Judaiſm in great part a correſpondence to Paganiſm,) this implieth, that the Heathens Oracles were really a ſort of Oracles and Divinatory, elſe God would not have furniſh'd the Jews with various Oracles anſwering to, and inſtead of the Heathen Oracles, and that the Jews in ſo great a priviledge as Divination might not come behind the Heathen Nations. Some obſerve, (h) that after the Law againſt Wizards, Lev. 20. 27. a Law touching the Prieſts immediately followeth. Lev. 21. 1. That ſo the Iſraelites might have no temptation, to tolerate or conſult Witches and Magicians, ſeeing God had given them Prieſts, who might have recourſe to him, and in doubtful caſes conſult him by Urim. The like obſervation may be made touching the Jewiſh Prophets; for the Moſaic Text plainly ſheweth, that they were inſtituted in correſpondence to the Heathen Wizards and Magicians. A Law is made Deut. 18. 9 — 12. prohibiting Diviners, Obſervers of times (Signs,) Inchanters, Witches, Charmers, Conſulters with familiar Spirits, Wizards, Necromancers; for all that do thoſe things are an abomination unto the Lord, and becauſe of theſe abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee. It was a Generation of Heathen Nations, that was driven out before Iſrael: But the Law ſaith, it was a Generation of Sorcerers and Wizards that was driven out from before them; therefore the Lawgiver looketh upon the Heathen Nations as a Gene-

(f) Lactant. l. 2. c. 14.

(g) Dr. Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 3; diſſ. 1 c. 1, 2, &c.

(h) Dr. Spencer. ſupr. c. 2; S. 3.

Generation of Sorcerers and Wizards. Having thus characteriz'd the Heathen Nations, the Lawgiver immediately confronteth and oppoſeth the Iſraelites to thoſe Heathen Nations in this manner. v. 13, 14. 15. Thou ſhalt be perfect with the Lord thy God. For theſe Nations which thou ſhalt poſſeſs, hearkened unto obſervers of times (Signs) and unto diviners: But as for thee the Lord thy God hath not ſuffer'd thee ſo to do. The Lord thy God will raiſe up unto thee a Prophet from the midſt of thee. Upon which words P. Fagius thus commenteth. (i) He ſaith, that ſuperſtitious Diviners are to be avoided, becauſe God will give true Prophets (a Prophet in Succeſſion,) of whom you may ſafely learn all things. But Jonathan the Paraphraſt applieth this Text to the Jewiſh Prieſts and their Oracle of Urim; for thus he paraphraſeth it. (k) Becauſe the people which you are to poſſeſs, are addicted to Inchantments and Divinations: But ye ſhall not be like to them, but the Prieſts ſhall ask Counſel by Urim and Thummim. There is the ſame reaſon for the Jewiſh Prieſts (conſider'd as Conſulters of Urim,) as for the Jewiſh Prophets, which were inſtituted in correſpondence to the Heathen χρησμολόγοι, Oracle-ſpeakers or Diviners, as Philo ſaith. (l) Becauſe there is innate in all Men a deſire of knowing things future, whence they betake themſelves to Soothſaying by Sacrifices and other ſorts of Divination —— He vehemently forbiddeth them, to follow theſe, but ſaith, that if they be truly pious, they ſhall not be deſtitute of the knowledge of things future, but a Prophet divinely inſpired ſuddenly appearing θεσπιεῖ καὶ προφητεύσει, ſhall ſpeak Oracles and Propheſie. So Maimonides ſaith, God by ſending Prophets, hath made us not to need Aſtrologers, Diviners, Soothſayers; for we may conſult them (Prophets) touching our Affairs.—— This is that which the Scripture ſaith; the Nations which thou driveſt out hearkened to Jugglers and Diviners: But it ſhall not be ſo with thee; the Lord thy God hath given thee a Prophet from the midſt of thee. Prophets were neceſſary for the Jews, as Origen argueth. They that object fooliſhneſs to the Jews and Chriſtians, let them ſhew how the Jewiſh Nation could conſiſt, having no promiſes of (προγνώσεων,) preſciences amongſt them. And when every one of the Nations round about them, was believ'd to receive Oracles and Vaticinations according to the cuſtom of their Country from their reputed Gods, if theſe only that were taught to deſpiſe all the Gentiles reputed Gods, as no Gods but Demons, —— had none promis'd to be a Prophet, that might be able to withdraw them, who by a deſire of fore-knowing were ready to go to the Demons of other People. If they had had no knowledge of things future, they would have betaken themſelves (ſaith this Father) ἐπὶ τὰ τῶν ἐθνῶν μαντεῖα ϗ χρηστήρια, to the Gentiles Oracles.

IV. This Epicurean Hypotheſis touching Oracles is criminally Anti-pagan, as Epicurus and his Philoſophy was, (m) who (as appeareth from the Patrons of this Hypotheſis) wanteth not his applauders in the Chriſtian Church. It is a ſlender recommendation of their Hypotheſis, that ſome few irreligious Pagans maintain'd it againſt the Senſe of all the Learned and Religious both Popular and Philoſophic Pagans, the Poets, Hiſtorians, Orators, the Stoicks, the Religious Peripateticks, the Followers of Socrates, the Platoniſts and Pythagoreans. Cicero reporteth (n) that none of the Philoſophers, who ſuppos'd, that there were Gods, wholly took away Divination except Xenophanes the Colophonian, all the reſt prov'd it and approv'd of it (although in different Notions) and who ſhall be thought the moſt competent Judges of the Divinity of the Oracles, the Religious or the Irreligious Pagans? (o) Is Diogenianus (a Diſputer againſt Divination) for Religion and Learning to be compar'd with Socrates an aſſerter and admirer of Divination, and who thought them no better than mad, that exploded the Oracles as meerly from human Artifice and Impoſture? (p) Thoſe that ſuppos'd all theſe things to be meerly of Human contrivance and that nothing of them was Demonial, he called Demoniacks. (q) Is Oenomaus, who irreligiouſly ridiculeth Apollo and his Oracles, comparable to the learned and judicious Plutarch, who hath a great Veneration for them, who ſaith of the Delphic Oracle, ποικίλων ἀγαθῶν τουτί τὸ μαντεῖον αἴτιον γέγονε τοῖς Ἕλλησιν, this Oracle hath been the cauſe of various Goods to the Grecians, (chiefly by helping them in difficulties?) Or is he of like regard with ſo eminent a Philoſopher as Plato, who always expreſſeth an high eſteem of the Oracles? A learned Man of our own indeed hath given a very diſſonant account of the Senſe of Plato, the Platoniſts and Stoicks alſo; for ſpeaking of the Pagans Divinatory Enthuſiaſm (which was maniacally Ecſtatical) he telleth us, (r) that Plato and other wiſe Men had a very low Opinion of this Spirit, and of the gift of Divination, and of conſulting the Oracles. (s) The Platoniſts generally ſeem'd to reject or very much to ſlight all this kind of Revelation, and to acknowledge nothing tranſcendent to the naked Reaſon and Underſtanding of Man. And this Story which is as remote from Truth, as the Japaneſe imagin Paradiſe to be (who ſay it is remote from them (t) decies millies millenis milliaribus) is countenanc'd by ſome few impertinent Allegations from M. Tyrius, Porphyry, Epictetus, Simplicius, and Plato's Timæus. But they that converſe with the Platoniſts, cannot but know, that they ordinarily acknowledge ſome things and ſome Revelation alſo tranſcendent to the naked Reaſon and Underſtanding of Man (even Ariſtotle ſo far ſymbolizeth with them, (u) that he acknowledgeth λόγυ τι κρεῖττον, ſomething better than Reaſon,) that they deriv'd their Philoſophy from the Enthuſiaſts of the elder times, and themſelves Philoſophiz'd both from a ſedate intellectual Enthuſiaſm, and alſo from a Bacchical ſort of Enthuſiaſm, which is the ſame with that of the Oracles. If M. Tyrius ſaith, (w) that the Vaticination of God and the Mind of Man are a thing congenial, this is no diſparagement to the Pagans Divinatory Enthuſiaſm, which was ſuppos'd to communicate the Mind of God to the intelligent Minds of Men that conſulted it. And Porphyry is ſo far from rejecting or ſlighting the Pagans Divinatory Enthuſiaſm, (x) that he wrote a Book περὶ τῆς ἐκ λογίων φιλοσοφίας, touching Philoſophy from the Oracles, to promote Theoſophy, and to ſettle Doubts, ſuppoſing them the Oracles of Gods and good Demons; he did not therefore ſuppoſe, that all Oracles were from evil Demons,

(y) as

(i) Vitandi, inquit, ſunt Divini ſuperſtitioſi, quia Dominus veros daturus eſt prophetas, à quibus tutò omnia didiceris.

(k) Quoniam populi iſti quos poſſeſſuri eſtis præſtigiis & divinationibus auſcultant: Vos autem non ſimiles illis eritis, ſed ſacerdotes interrogabunt per Urim & Thummim.

(l) Ap. Spencer. ſupr. c. 2. S. 3.

(m) Van Dale p. 207. & præf. ad Lect.

(n) De Divin. l. 1.

(o) Euſ. pr. ev. l. 4. c. 3.

(p) Τὺς δὲ μηδὲν τῶν τοιύτων οἰομένυς εἶναι δαιμόνιον, ἀλλὰ πάντα τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης γνώμης, δαιμονᾶν ἔφη. Xenoph. Απομν. α.

(q) Euſeb. ſupr. l. 5.

(r) Mr. Smith of Prophecy c. 4. Contents of the ch.

(s) Ibid. p. 195.

(t) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 25.

(u) Eth. Eudem. l. 7. c. 14.

(r) Θεῦ δὲ μαντεία καὶ ἀνθρώπων νῦς χρῆμα συγγ Diſſ 3.

(x) Euſ. ſupra l. c. 5, 7.

(y) as a late writer of Oracles miſtaketh. Euſebius obſerveth, (z) That in his Book of Abſtinence from Animals he is repugnant to himſelf, to his Philoſophy from the Oracles, and indeed to his own Religion, yet in this Heterodox Book (a) he acknowledgeth a Divination from good Demons, that a Philoſopher both needeth it and hath it, (b) and he retaineth his great eſteem for Apollo and for Pythia, and conſequently for the Pagans Divinatory Enthuſiaſm. But he ſuppoſeth a Philoſopher, to be an abſtract Mentaliſt, Intellectualiſt and Immaterialiſt, (c) ἀφιστάμενον τῶν ἐκτὸς, ſegregate from the things External, and therefore one that needeth not the vulgar Diviners, becauſe he ſlighteth and diſcardeth thoſe external things which vulgar Diviners and their Conſulters are buſied about (Marriage, Servants, Merchandice) deſiring to be Διὸς μεγάλου ὀαριστὴς, one that converſeth with great Jove inſtead of being ſuch a Diviner. (d) Epictetus and Simplicius follow Socrates, having a great eſteem for Apollo and for Pythia (and conſequently for the Pagans divinatory Enthuſiaſm;) but theſe Philoſophers were abſtract Mentaliſts, and agreeably to their Character they ſuppoſe, that the things external are things indifferent, that the Vates or Diviners ought to be conſulted with a Travellers indifferency (who when he inquireth the way hath no greater propenſion to the right than to the left,) and that in certain caſes it is imprudent to conſult them. (e) Plato is ſaid, to look upon the Pagans Divinatory Enthuſiaſm as inferiour to Wiſdom, becauſe in his Timæus he citeth a Law, that Prophets ſhould be ſet as it were Judges over theſe Enthuſiaſtic Divinations, which Prophets were none elſe but wiſe and prudent Men. But the Prophets which Plato ſpeaketh of, are only Vaticiniorum Interpretes (as Ficinus rightly rendreth his Words) and is it reaſonable to ſuppoſe the Oracle inferiour to its Interpreter? or could Plato believe the Oracles to be Divine, and yet magnifie Humane Prudence above them? But becauſe the Pagan Divinatory Enthuſiaſts were under an alienation of Mind, underſtood not their own Viſa, nor knew what they ſaid, therefore (not ſimply, but) in ſome reſpect, namely in reſpect of the Seat of it, their Divinatory Enthuſiaſm was inferiour to Humane Wiſdom; for it was ſeated only in the Imagination and the Faculties inferiour to Reaſon; but theſe Inferiour Faculties were not only or chiefly their Divining Spirit; for they ſuppos'd their χρησμῳδοὺς καὶ μάντεις ἐπίπνους καὶ κατεχομένους ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ, Oracle-ſpeakers and Diviners, to have an Afflation and Correption from God, as Plato ſaith in his Meno: Of theſe inſpir'd Diviners ſome were really ſuch, but becauſe others were counterfeit, therefore there was a further uſe of Humane Wiſdom and of the Prophets appointed by Law to diſcern τοὺς ἀλαζόνας, vain Oſtentators, τοὺς δὲ ὡς ἀληθῶς μάντεις καθιστάναι προφήτας τῶν μελλόντων, and to conſtitute Diviners truly ſuch the Prophets of things to come, as the ſame Philoſopher ſpeaketh in his Charmides.

From which Account of Plato's Senſe it is manifeſt, that there is nothing in theſe Paſſages of his Charmides and Timæus, which looketh like a diſparagement of the Pagans Oracles or their Divinatory Enthuſiaſm: On the contrary in his Sympoſium he calleth Mantice (Divination) φιλίας θεῶν καὶ ἀνθρώπων δημιουργὸς, the maker of Friendſhip between the Gods and Men, and according to him it is converſant about τὴν περὶ θεοὺς τε καὶ ἀνθρώπους πρὸς ἀλλήλους κοινωνίαν, the Society between the Gods and Men. In his Meno he calleth the Pagans Maniacal Diviners Θεομάντεις, and ſuppoſeth them to be Divine Men. And in his firſt of Laws he ſaith of Epimenides (who deliver'd the Athenians from great Evils) that he came to Athens κατὰ τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ μαντείαν, by the Oracle. In his Phædrus he ſaith; (f) We have the greateſt Goods by that Madneſs, which is of Divine Gift; for the Propheteſs at Delphos and the Prieſteſſes in Dodona in their Madneſſes have done many and great utilities to the Greeks privately and publickly; but in a ſober mood they have done little or nothing. Many Paſſages of this nature occur in Plato, ſeveral of which are before cited; but we will here content our ſelves with Ficinus's Account of Platoniſm. (g) Plato and all the Platoniſts following the ancient Theologers acknowledge the truth of the Oracles and prove it by Reaſons. Plato accounteth Humane Wiſdom as nothing in compariſon of that which is had from Oracles and Divine Madneſs; and he would have a Philoſopher cautelous of affirming any thing about Divine Matters, but ſo far as it is confirm'd by Divine Oracles. There are abundance of things in Plato of this nature. Celſus's Account of Oracles ſpeaketh him a genuine Platoniſt. (h) It is needleſs to enumerate how many things Prophets, Propheteſſes and other Men and Women having a Divine Afflation, have foretold by an inſpir'd voice out of the Oracles, how many wonderful things have been heard out of the inmoſt places of the Temples, how many things have been ſhew'd by the Sacrifices to them that conſulted them, how many things by other wonderful or prodigious Signs, and to ſome there have been manifeſt appearances of the Gods: Humane Life is full of theſe things; how many Cities have been erected by Oracles, and got rid of Diſeaſes and Famines? how many neglecting or forgetting them have been loſt? how many Colonies have been ſent by them, who obſerving what was commanded them have flouriſh'd? how many Princes and private Men have far'd well or ill according to theſe meaſures? how many troubled for want of Children, have got what they wanted? how many eſcap'd the Anger of Demons? how many have been heal'd of Lameneſs of Body? how many behaving themſelves contumeliouſly, have been preſently ſeiz'd in the Temples, ſome loſing their Wits there, ſome telling what they had done, ſome diſpatching themſelves, and ſome being taken with incurable Diſeaſes? to which we may add, that an horrendous Voice out of the inmoſt parts of the Temples hath ſtruck ſome dead. No Chriſtian Apologiſt could have made a more effectual Plea for the Truth and Intereſt of Chriſtianity than this Philoſopher's Plea for Paganiſm is; becauſe it aſcertaineth the exiſtence of Evil Demons and their Domination over the Heathen World. But to ſuppoſe, that the Heathen Religion and the Heathen Oracles were nothing more than the Cheat and Artifice of Prieſts and Politicians, is groſs Irreligion both Anti-Chriſtian and Anti-Pagan (worſe than Paganiſm) oppoſite both to the Senſe of the Church of God and of the Heathen World. (i) The Diviners full of God (ſaith Cæcilius) predict Futurities, give caution to Dangers, Medicine to Diſeaſes, Hope to the afflicted, Solace to Calamities, and Eaſe to Labours.

(y) Van Dale p. 188.

(z) Supr. c. 10.

(a) L. 2. S. 53.

(b) Ibid. S. 15, 16, 29, 59, &c.

(c) Ibid. S. 52.

(d) Enchir. c. 39. diſſ. l. 2. c. 7.

(e) Mr. Smith ſupr. p. 195.

(f) Νῦν δὲ τὰ μέγιστα τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἡμῖν γίγνεται διὰ μανίας θείᾳ μέντοι δόσει διδομένης. ἥτε γὰρ δὴ ἐν Δελφοῖς προφῆτις, αἵτ' ἐν Δωδώνῃ ἱερεῖαι, μανεῖσαι μὲν πολλὰ δὴ καὶ καλὰ ἰδίᾳ καὶ δημοσίᾳ, τὴν Ἑλλάδα εἰργάσαντο· σωφρονοῦσαι δὲ βραχέα, ἢ οὐδέν.

(g) Profectò & ipſe Plato antiquiores Theologos imitatus, & Platonici omnes, oraculorum hiſtoriam ubique tanquam veram accipiunt, rationibuſque confirmant. Mitto quantam his in Phædro adhibeat fidem, quantam & in Timæo, in Phædro quidem humanam ſapientiam præ illa quæ ab oraculis furoribuſque divinis habetur, nihili pendens: in Timæo autem dicens eatenus à philoſopho de rebus divinis affirmandum eſſe, quatenus divinis oraculis confirmetur. Mitto quam plurima apud Platonem ſimilia. Arg. in Apol.

(h) Τί δεῖ καταλέγειν ὅσα ἐκ χρηστηρίων, τοῦτο μὲν προφῆται καὶ προφήτιδες, τοῦτο δὲ ἄλλοι κάτοχοι καὶ ἄνδρες καὶ γυναῖκες ἐνθέῳ φωνῇ προεῖπον· ὅσα δὲ ἐξ ἀδύτων αὐτῶν ἠκούσθησαν θαυμάσια· ὅσα δὲ ἐξ ἱερείων καὶ θυμάτων τοῖς χρωμένοις ἐδηλώθη· ὅσα δ' ἐξ ἄλλων τεραστίων συμβόλων· τοῖς δ' ἐναργῆ παρέστη φάσματα. μεστὸς τούτων ὁ πᾶς ἐστι βίος, πόσαι μὲν πόλεις ἐκ χρηστηρίων ὠρθώθησαν καὶ νόσους ἀπέθεντο καὶ λιμούς; πόσαι δ' ἀμελήσασαι τούτων, ἢ ἐκλαθόμεναι, κακῶς ἐφθάρησαν; πόσαι δ' εἰς ἀποικίαν ἐστάλησαν, καὶ μελεληθέσαι τὰ προσταχθέντα εὐδαιμόνησαν; πόσοι δυνάσται, πόσοι δ' ἰδιῶται, διὰ τοῦτο ἄμεινον ἢ χεῖρον ἀπήλλαξαν; πόσοι μὲν ἀπαιδίας δυσφορήσαντες, ὧν ἐδεήθησαν τυχόντες; πόσοι δαιμόνων μῆνιν διέφυγον; πόσοι σωμάτων πηρώσεις ἰάθησαν; πόσοις δ' αὖ πρὸς τοῖς ἱεροῖς ὑβρίσαντες αὐτίκα ἑάλωσαν, οἱ μὲν ἔκφρονες αὐτοῦ ταύτῃ κατασχεθέντες, οἱ δὲ ἐξαγγείλαντες ἃ ἔδρασαν, οἱ δὲ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς διεργασάμενοι, οἱ δὲ νόσοις ἀνηκέστοις ἐνδεθέντες; ἤδη δὲ ἐξ αὐτῶν ἀδύτων φωνὴ βαρεῖα κατεῖλεν αὐτούς. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 8. p. 407.

V. This Epicurean Hypotheſis touching Oracles is Oracle Anti-Oracle, implying a repugnant Account of them; for ſeveral of the Pagan Oracles on this ſide the eminent and famous Oracles muſt be thought magically Divine, namely, The Perſonal Oracles, the Theurgic Oracles, and ſeveral of the Pagan Methods of Divination; therefore unleſs Oracle be ſelf-inconſiſtently ſet againſt Oracle, the eminent and famous Oracles muſt be of the ſame Character. (k) The Patron of this Epicurean Hypotheſis acknowledgeth Diabolical Poſſeſſions, and that the Damſel poſſeſs'd with a Spirit of Divination, Act. 16. 16. was one of the Devil's Oracle-ſpeakers; therefore ſhe muſt be called a Perſonal Oracle (contradiſtinct to thoſe Oracles which were Local-perſonal, as being fix'd to a certain place,) and if ſuch Perſonal Oracles be ſuppos'd Magically Divine, it is a groſs ſelf-inconſiſtence, to ſuppoſe, that the Local-perſonal Oracles were nothing more than Humane Artifice and Impoſture; for the Local-perſonal Oracles were nothing elſe but ſuch Perſonal Oracles train'd up to be ſuch and reſiding in ſacred places, as at Delphos, Dodona, Colophon, Lebadia. And as the Jewiſh Prophets would have the ſame Inſpiration, if we ſuppoſe, that ſome of them were train'd up to be ſuch, and reſided in certain Colledges, and others of them liv'd at large: So the Pagans Perſonal and Local-perſonal Oracles had both the ſame Spirit of Divination, and were both alike Fatidical Men and Women.

If the famous Heathen Oracles were nothing more than Humane Artifice and Impoſture, then the Learned and Civiliz'd Heathen Nations came behind the Barbarous Heathen Nations in the Gift and Priviledge of Divination; for amongſt the Barbarous Heathen Nations generally the Prieſts are Magicians and Perſonal Oracles to the People; they conſult the Devil and receive Oracular Reſponſes from him, which the People depend upon in all their proceedings, and whereby they are directed in all their Affairs. Thus it is in (l) Cumana, and thus the Barbarous Samoyeds are directed what they ſhall do, and whither they ſhall go. The Savage Nation of the Tapuiæ (m) do nothing of any moment without conſulting the Devil, whereby they acquire a Faculty of Divination beyond all humane foreſight, of which there are ſeveral Inſtances in Voſſius. (n) Amongſt the Braſilians Witches are their Oracles: (o) Such an Oracle was Velleda and ſeveral other Fatidical Women to the ancient Germans, as is related by Statius, Dio, Tacitus, whoſe words import, that the Germans conſulted thoſe ſuppoſed Divine Women pro Apollinari & ſimilibus oraculis, inſtead of the Oracle of Apollo and the like Oracles: (p) So the Gallican Dryades were conſulted as the Delphic Oracle (one of them foretold to Alex. Severus his final misfortune, whoſe Prediction he contemn'd to his prejudice,) and at Carthage there was a Fatidical Woman intituled by Julius Capitolinus (q) Vates cæleſtis, quæ Deo repleta ſolebat vera canere, a Celeſtial Propheteſs, who being fill'd with God was wont to make true Vaticinations. Such a Fatidical Woman Alexander had with him in his Expedition into the Eaſt (as Arrianus relateth) ſuch an one Marius carry'd along with him in his Expedition againſt the Cimbri, whoſe Sayings he call'd Oracles (as Plutarch relateth,) and ſuch a Perſonal Oracle was the Sorcerer Barjeſus, a falſe Prophet, Act. 13. 6. who is called in the Syriac Verſion (by a Name agreeable to the Name Elymas) בר שומא, which may beſt be render'd (r) the Son of a ſecret or hidden thing. All Hiſtories, all Nations afford Inſtances of ſuch oracular and divinatory Perſons. (s) In our own Nation there are notorious ones (ſo well atteſted, that no rational doubt can be made of them) one Inſtance of many we will recite. (t) One Adrianus ſent into Scotland by Pope Innocent the Eighth (by his ſingular Wiſdom in the World) came to be in favour with Hen. 7. King of England, whereby he was promoted to the Biſhoprick of Bath and Wells: Return'd to Rome and in great imployment under Alexander the Sixth he was made a Cardinal, and flouriſh'd in the Times of Pope Leo the Tenth. This Man became acquainted with a Woman, in whom was a Spirit of Divination, and who amongſt many things which ſhe foretold both publick and private (which in all reſpects fell out accordingly) ſhe alſo foretold, That one Adrian by name, born of mean Parentage, preferr'd merely for his Worth, ſhould be Pope after Leo. This exactly agreeing with his caſe, and having had, as he thought, ſufficient proof of the truth of her Predictions, he confidently apply'd her Prediction to himſelf, and made no queſtion, but he was the Man, that ſhould ſucceed Pope Leo. In this confidence he began to think the time long before the Pope died, and to haſten it, with ſome others, conſpir'd againſt his Life, but was prevented and pardon'd alſo, and afterwards liv'd and dy'd obſcurely. But Adrianus the Sixth, a Man of mean Parentage and of great Worth, was choſen being abſent to ſucceed Pope Leo, and ſo the Woman's Prediction was againſt all likelyhood (for no ſuch thing was intended, and when it was done it was ſcarce believ'd) verify'd and fulfill'd. In concurrence therefore with the Teſtimony of Scripture the Teſtimony of the World of Mankind, the Barbarous Heathen Nations, their Religion and the Conduct of their Affairs, notorious Inſtances in all Nations of Divinations manifeſtly more than Humane, do all aſcertain us, that the perſonal Oracles (which we diſcourſe of) are Magically Divine; from whence it followeth, that the local-perſonal Oracles were (in part at leaſt) of the ſame Character, the perſonal Oracles being in ſome Heathen Nations the very ſame that the local-perſonal were in others. The original alſo of the local-perſonal Oracles ſpeaketh them in ſubſtance the very ſame with the perſonal. For the Dodonean Oracle (the moſt ancient of the Grecian) and the Ammonian in Libya were founded by certain Pagan Prieſteſſes, and Propheteſſes, as appeareth from the beſt accounts that are given of the Dodonean πελειάδες, Doves, (u) from the Relation of the Egyptian Prieſts in Herodotus and Herodotus's own Opinion, wherewith Hermias agreeth. And the moſt probable Account

of

(i) Pleni & mixti Deo vates futura præcerpunt, dant cautelam periculis, morbis medelam, ſpem afflictis, ſolatium calamitatibus, laboribus levamentum. Min. Fel. p. 66.

(k) Van Dale p. 201.

(l) Purchas par. 1. B. 9. c. 2. S. 2. B. 4. c. 17.

(m) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 8.

(n) Purch. B. 9. c. 5. S. 2.

(o) Voſſ. ſupr. l. 3. c. 8.

(p) Hiſt. Aug p. 588, 584.

(q) In Opil. Macrin.

(r) Schindler. Lex. in voce [illegible]

(s) V. Beyer. Addit. ad Selden. p. 226.

(t) Caſaub. of Credul. and Incredul. p. 145, &c.

(u) V. J. Opſop. Teſtim. de oracul. Plutarch. de Def. orac. p. 435.

of the origin of the Delphic Oracle is that in Pauſanias, That certain Diviners or magically Divine Men that came from the Hyperboreans were the Founders of it.

Παῖδες Ὑπερβορέων πηγασὸς ϗ δῖος Ἀγυιεύς.

which Account of the Origin of Oracles inferreth, that they were magically Divine, as the Chalday or Magick Oracles undoubtedly were. For there are no Strictures of Chriſtianity in them (as there are in the Counterfeit Triſmegiſtick Books,) it doth not appear, that the Learned Fathers of the Primitive Church before Syneſius knew any thing of them (although they were publiſh'd in Verſe by Julian the Theurgiſt in the Times of M. Antoninus,) they never mention or acknowledge them, but they are the Adverſaries of Chriſtianity that acknowledge them (ſuch as Hierocles and Porphyry,) the Fathers never make uſe of them in Argumentation (as they do of the Sibylline Oracles,) and the groſs Magick that pervadeth thoſe Oracles, maketh it altogether unlikely, that they ſhould be the Forgeries of Chriſtians. (w) The barbarous exotick Phraſes that are in them, the genuine remains that are in them of the Theology and Aſtrological-magical Philoſophy of the oriental Magi, ſhew, that they are not originally Greek. They are plainly the Philoſophic-pagan Theurgiſts Oracles, and the Oracles of their Theurgy, none but they in the elder times were acquainted with them, (x) they were the admirers of them, and believ'd them to be Divine (the Platoniſts generally were of that Opinion) and the Dogmata of thoſe Oracles, their Teleſtick Rites of purging and perfecting the Soul (by Woods, Stones, Herbs; Inchantments,) their Rites of convoking Gods and Demons into preſence, and of driving away the Material Demons, the lucid and fiery Apparitions and other Spectres which they ſpeak of; their Hecatine Circle, their eſteem of barbarick conjuring Words, and their mode of diſtinguiſhing true from falſe Divination, are manifeſtly groſs Theurgick Magick, which Magick was practis'd by the Philoſophic-Pagans, who were a ſort of Men extremely alien and remote from the Popular-Pagans, and conſequently from the vulgar Witches and Magicians, and their Goety, and therefore it is not reaſonable, to ſuppoſe, that they laid their Heads together, to forge the Phænomena, that are ſaid to be in Magick; yet we find the like Phænomena in the Theurgy of the one as in the Goety of the other; (y) for as Medea in Seneca boaſteth of her Art, ſo the Chalday Oracles deſcribe the Phænomena in Theurgy. Theſe Oracles therefore cannot be ſuppos'd, to be a meer Humane Forgery, unleſs we will ſuppoſe Theurgy it ſelf, to be a meer Humane Forgery. And if ſo, how is it that ſo many Learned Philoſophic Pagans (who were grand Theurgiſts and well acquainted with the Myſteries of it) for many Ages thought it to be truly Divine? did they never make any Experiments of its Power? did they never make uſe of their Eyes and Ears, to diſcern whether there were any Apparitions of Gods and Demons, any wonderful appearances of Light and Fire, of Thundrings and Lightnings in Theurgy? or were all theſe wonderful Phænomena nothing more than the Gulleries of Pagan Prieſts, who impos'd upon the Philoſophers for many Ages, as the Patrons of the Epicurean Hypotheſis (touching Oracles) ſuppoſe them, to have abus'd and impos'd upon the Popular Pagans? This Abſurdity implieth, that unleſs we will be groſly ſelf-inconſiſtent, we muſt acknowledge, that the Popular-pagan Oracles were not meer Humane Artifice and Impoſture, ſeeing the Philoſophic Pagans had their Oracles magically Divine.

Of one of the Philoſophic Pagans Oracles touching the Emperour Valens's Succeſſour we will give an Account from Ammianus, becauſe of its affinity with the Popular Pagans Oracles. Hilarius as the truth was, made this Confeſſion before the Judges; (z) We made this unhappy Table which you ſee, a Similitude of the Delphic Tripos, with dire Solemnities of Inchoation, of Laurel-rods, and by imprecation of ſecret Prayers or Inchantments, and having ritually conſecrated it by a multifarious and continu'd Apparatus, at length we mov'd it for uſe, (which was to be ſo often, as things arcane were conſulted about) in this manner. It was plac'd in the midſt of an Houſe every where emaculated by Arabic Odours, cleanly or purely placing upon it a Diſh or Baſon made of divers Metallic Materials, in the outmoſt Circumference whereof were the four and twenty Letters skilfully cut, disjoyn'd by Spaces accurately meaſur'd. Theſe one, having done divine ſervice to Apollo by formal Prayers or Charms, with exact ceremonial Skill ſtandeth over, being cloath'd with Linnen Veſtments, and having Linnen Socks for Shooes, and a Woman's Torulus about his Head, and carrying in his Hand Leaves or Branches of the happy Tree, poyſing a Penſil Ring ty'd by a very ſlender Carpathian Thread, initiated (or conſecrated) by myſtick Diſciplines: which hitting on the Letters in a leaping way, every one of which by diſtinct intervals maketh a Renitency, thereby it maketh Heroic Verſes agreeable to the Queſtions that are ask'd, without defect in Number and Meaſure, ſuch as thoſe of Pythia, or thoſe of the Oracles of the Branchidæ. There we that were then preſent inquiring, who would ſucceed the preſent Emperour, becauſe it was ſaid, He would be e~~very way~~ accompliſh'd, and the Ring hitting upon the Letters had touch'd upon two Syllables of his Name with the ſuper-addition of a Letter (Θεοδ,) one that was preſent cry'd out, That Theodorus was portended by Fate. What Religious, what Honeſt Man can deny, that this whole proceſs of Dactylomancy is a direful form of Conjuration, or as Socrates the Hiſtorian ſtileth it, (a) μαγική τις μαγγανεία, a certain Magical Inchantment of the Philoſophers? who by Divination underſtood

---

(w) Stanley's Hiſt. of Phil. or. l. 4. in Proœm.

(x) Gale in Jambl. p. 203.

(y) —Nemoris antiqui domus
Amiſit umbram vocis imperio meæ
Die relicto Phœbus in medio ſtetit,
Hyadeſque noſtris cantibus motæ labant.
Valerius Flaccus ſaith of Medea.
Illius ad fremitus ſparſoſque per avia ſuccos
Sydera fixa pavent, & avi ſtupet orbita ſolis,
Mutat agros fluviûmque vias.—
The Chalday Oracles ſay.
Οὔτε γὰρ οὐράνιος κυρτὸς τότε φαίνεται ὄγκος
Ἀστέρες οὐ λάμπουσι, τὸ Μήνης φῶς κεκάλυπται
Χθὼν οὐχ ἕστηκε, βλέπεται δὲ τὰ πάντα κεραυνοῖς.
Neque enim cœli rotunda moles tunc apparet,
Aſtra non ſplendent, Lunæ lumen occultatum eſt
Terra non ſtat, videntur omnia fulminibus plena.

(z) Conſtruximus ad Cortinæ ſimilitudinem Delphicæ, diris auſpiciis, de laureis virgulis, infauſtam hanc menſulam quam videtis: & imprecationibus carminum ſecretorum, choragiiſque multis ac diuturnis ritualiter conſecratum movimus tandem. Movendi autem, quoties ſuper rebus arcanis conſulebatur, erat inſtitutio talis, conlocabatur in medio domus emaculatæ odoribus Arabicis, undique lance rotunda, pure ſuperpoſita, ex diverſis metallicis materiis fabrefacta: cujus in ambitu rotunditatis extremo elementorum viginti quatuor ſcriptiles formæ inciſæ peritè, disjungebantur, ſpatiis examinatè dimenſis. Has linteis quidam indumentis amictus, calceatuſque itidem linteis ſoccis, torulo capite circumflexo, verbenas felicis arboris geſtans, litato conceptis carminibus numine præſcitionum auctore, cæremoniali ſcientia ſuperſiſtit cortinulas, penſilem annulum librans arctum ex Carpathio filo perquàm levi, myſticis diſciplinis initiatum: qui per intervalla diſtincta retinentibus [renitentibus] ſingulis literis incidens ſaltuatim Heroos efficit verſus interrogationibus conſonos, ad numeros & modos plenè concluſos: quales leguntur pythici, vel ex oraculis editi Branchidarum. Ibi tum quærentibus nobis, qui præſenti ſuccedet imperio, quoniam omni parte expolitus fore memorabatur, & adſiliens annulus duas perſtrinxerat ſyllabas cum adjectione literæ poſtrema, exclamavit præſentium quidam Theodorum præſcribente fatali neceſſitate portendi. Am. Marcell. l. 29.

(a) Hiſt. Eccl. l. 4. c. 19.

derſtood both their own and the Emperour Valens's Tragical Fate, and half of his Succeſſour's Name; and ſhall a Similitude of the Delphic Oracle be thought Magical, and muſt the grand Exemplar, the Delphic Oracle it ſelf, be thought to have nothing of Magick in it? or, were thoſe Philoſophers and Learned Men, concern'd in this Imitamen of the Delphic Oracle, and put to death for it (Maximus, Hilarius, Patricius Lydus, Simonides, Andronicus of Caria) meerly gull'd and impos'd upon by the Artifices and Forgeries of the Pagan Prieſts, that attended the Oracles, as the Patrons of the Epicurean Hypotheſis ſuppoſe, that the Popular Pagans were? What have they to ſay to ſuch a notorious Inſtance of Philoſophic-Pagan and Oracular Sorcery and Wizardiſm? (b) Truly one of them reciteth it more than once, and glibly paſſeth it over with a nihil dicit; but ſeemeth to ſymbolize with Zoſimus, who ſlubbereth over the matter, and ſlightingly putteth this Magical Tranſaction upon certain Agyrtæ, as being ſenſible, that a juſt account of it would be a foul blemiſh to his Religion.

But Zoſimus hath a great Veneration for the Methods of Divination uſual in his Religion (which the Patrons of the Epicurean Hypotheſis explode as meer Humane Impoſtures,) and Jamblichus thus proveth, that they were Divine. (b) The Entrails are variouſly chang'd, as it pleaſeth the Gods. They are often found without an Heart, or ſome other of the principal parts, without which the Animals could not live. The Birds often cruſh and kill themſelves, which is againſt Nature, Supernatural, and the Work of ſome other that doth theſe things by the Birds; therefore the Birds are mov'd as it pleaſeth the Gods. Sometimes God maketh a fooliſh Man to ſpeak the words of Wiſdom, whereby it is manifeſt to all, that this is not an Humane, but a Divine Work. (c) Porphyry moveth a Queſtion, whether in thoſe that make Divinations and do certain wonderful things, their Souls be more than ordinarily powerful, or they have the extrinſecal aſſiſtance of ſome Spirits, whereby they are able to do theſe things? And he rather ſuppoſeth, that they have the extrinſecal aſſiſtance of Spirits, becauſe making uſe of Stones and Herbs, they bind ſome, and open Doors that are ſhut, or do ſome wonderful things of like Nature. Theſe Theologers were grand Adverſaries of the Chriſtian Religion, but they ſymbolize with the Principles of it at anotherkins rate than the Epicurean Exploders of Magick. And not only the Pagan Theologers do ſo, but that worſt of Pagans, and belluine Monſter rather than a Man, Heliogabalus himſelf. (d) All ſorts of Magicians were with him and at work daily, he exhorting them and giving thanks to the Gods, that he had found their Friends. Never any Man gave a truer Character of the Heathen Gods.

VI. This Epicurean Hypotheſis touching Oracles is Anti-hiſtorical, as contradicting well atteſted Hiſtory touching their magical and miraculous doings. For the Chriſtian Apologiſts in their Diſputes againſt Paganiſm are far from denying, that miraculous things were done in it; (e) that in divers Places, and Cities, and Nations ſome [wonderful] Operations are done in the Name of Idols, we do not deny. Lactantius hath enumerated a large Catalogue of miraculous things done in Paganiſm, ſuch as theſe; (f) that Caſtor and Pollux appear'd, and told the Romans of their Victory in the Macedonic War, on the Day that they obtain'd it, which Tertullian alſo admitteth for true Hiſtory; that Appius Claudius loſt his Eyes, the Cenſor Fulvius loſt his Wits, the Family of the Potitii were extinguiſh'd for violating the Sacra of the Gods, and Turullius was ſlain in the ſame place where he committed Sacriledge. Pyrrhus having robb'd Proſerpina of her Treaſure, was Shipwrack'd on the Shores nigh unto this Goddeſs, and nothing was found ſafe but her Money. The Mileſian Ceres gain'd to her ſelf a great Veneration amongſt Men; for when the City was taken by Alexander, and the Souldiers brake in to ſpoil (her Temple) ſuddenly there was a Light of Fire before their Eyes, which put them out. In the Civil War with Brutus Auguſtus having a great Diſtemper determin'd not to go into the Battel; but the Species of Minerva appearing to his Phyſician Artorius admoniſh'd him, that Cæſar ſhould not becauſe of his Diſtemper keep himſelf in his Tent; whereupon he was carried in a Litter into the Battel, and the ſame Day his Tents were taken by Brutus. Theſe (and ſuch more) may ſeem little Stories, but they were great things in Paganiſm, and conciliated a great Veneration to the inviſible Powers, to whoſe Operation the Pagans imputed them, and whoſe Doings we may reaſonably ſuppoſe them to have been, but (with this difference) accounting ſome of them undoubtedly ſuch, others only probably ſo. Of which nature are the miraculous things, that are ſaid to have been done at thoſe Lakes or Fountains the Sicilian Palici, at which whoſoever perjur'd himſelf (g) is reported, to have ſuffer'd immediately ſome grand Puniſhment. (h) And the Indians of old are ſaid, to have had τὴν λίμνην δοκιμαστικήν, a Lake of Probation, where Perſons accus'd were try'd by the Brachmans; if they were innocent, they paſs'd through the Lake unhurt, and the Water reach'd no further than their Knees; if they were guilty, after they had gone a little way in it, they were immers'd in Water to the Head. (i) Some tell of another Water of Probation, which they had, that was ſweet and pleaſant ſave only to thoſe that perjur'd themſelves; but if drunk by them, it would get into their Eyes, Hands and Feet, and fill their Body with Puſtulæ and Apoſtems. And Pauſanias reporteth, that the ancient Greeks try'd their Prieſteſſes accus'd of Harlotry by a Draught of Bulls Blood, which was preſent death to them, if they had violated the Law of Chaſtity. Theſe miraculous methods of Probation (or Trial) in Paganiſm are ſo well atteſted, that although it would be raſhneſs and folly, to ſuppoſe them certainly true, yet it would be no leſs unreaſonable, to pronounce them certainly falſe, to explode them as Fables and Stories of credulous Antiquity, which are far more eaſily rejected with contempt, than rationally convicted of falſhood. So certain great and ſtrange things touching the Divinatory Enthuſiaſts being matters of fact reported to us by Learned Pagan Philoſophers, ought to be entertain'd with ſome degree of Reſpect and Aſſent; as when they diſpute, that their Divinatory Enthuſiaſm is not meerly from Humane Artifice, Impoſture and Diſtemper, but the Afflation is Supernatural, as appeareth from theſe Supernatural Effects. (k) Many of them (the Enthuſiaſts) if Fire be put to them, are not burn'd, the Fire

(b) Van Dale, p. 127, 357.

(b) De myſt. p. 79, 80, 82, 97.

(c) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 10. c. 11.

(d) Omne magorum genus aderat illi, operabaturque quotidie, hortante illo, & gratias Diis agente, quòd amicos eorum inveniſſet. Hiſt. Aug. p. 468, 469.

(e) Τὸ μὲν δὴ κατὰ τόπους καὶ πόλεις καὶ ἔθνη γίγνεσθαί τινας ἐπ' ὀνόματι εἰδώλων ἐνεργείας, οὐδ' ἡμεῖς ἀντιλέγομεν. Athenag. Apol. p. 25.

(f) L. 2. c. 8. Tertull. Apol. c. 22.

(g) Bochart. Geogr. ſacr. par. 2. l. 1. c. 28.

(h) Porph. de Styge, p. 282.

(i) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 3. diſſ. 1 c. 2. s. 3.

(k) Jambl. de myſt. p. 64. Gale not. p. 220.

Fire not being able to touch them becauſe of the Divine Afflation. Many being burn'd feel it not, becauſe at that time they do not live the life of an Animal. Some having Spits transfix'd through their Bodies, ſome ſtruck on the Back with an Hatchet, ſome lancinating their Arms with Knives, yet feel not at all: their Operations are not at all Humane; for being θεοφορούμενοι, carry'd by a Divine Afflation, impaſſable places are to them paſſable, they are carry'd into the Fire and paſs through it, and miraculouſly paſs over Rivers [and tread on Fire] as the Prieſteſs of Caſtabala. But of ſome oracular miraculous Phænomena reported by Hiſtorians, it is not eaſie at this diſtance to make a Judgment, whether the matters of Fact are true; for of this Nature are the ſtrange Phænomena of a Lake near the Temple of Venus Aphacitis, (l) in which Lake (as Zoſimus reporteth) Gifts and Oblations were made in honour of the Goddeſs, which if they were accepted, ſunk in the Lake (of whatever Materials they were;) but would not ſink, but ſwim upon the Surface of the Lake, if they were rejected, which portended ſome bad event. Of the ſame nature are the Phænomena of the Oracle at Apollonia, which was conſulted in this manner, as Dio relateth: (m) The Conſultor took Incenſe, and making a Prayer for the things he deſir'd, caſt it out of his Hand, that it might carry his Prayer to the Fire. If he was to ſucceed in what he deſir'd, the Fire preſently receiv'd the Incenſe, or if it fell beſides the Fire, the Fire ran preſently to it, ſnatch'd it up and conſum'd it; but if he was to fail of what he deſir'd, the Fire would not make any approach to the Incenſe, and if the Incenſe was caſt into it, the Fire would recede from it and avoid it. It is reaſonable, to doubt of theſe Matters of Fact, and in ſome of the Phænomena of Oracles, if the Matter of Fact is acknowledg'd, it is reaſonable, to doubt of the cauſe of it. For amongſt the Pagans as well as amongſt the Pagano-Chriſtians Statues were mov'd by Humane Artifice and Impoſture as well as by the Agency of Demons; and therefore one may reaſonably doubt touching the cauſe of this reputed Miracle of the Heathen Gods; (n) That the Images of the Houſhold-Gods which Æneas flying from Troy brought with him to Italy, are ſaid, to have remov'd themſelves from one place to another. Of the ſame nature is the Impulſe and Motion of thoſe Images which Macrobius ſpeaketh of in his Account of the Proceſſionary Pomp of the Aſſyrian Heliopolitan Jove. The chief Men of the Province (with a ſhaven Head and pure by a long Caſtimony) are ſaid to bear up the Image. (o) And they are carry'd by a Divine Spirit, not of their own mind, carrying the Image whither the God impelleth, as we ſee the Images of the Fortunes at Antium are carry'd to give Reſponſes. But although there are dubious and infirm parts in the Hiſtory of Oracles, yet it is not without great Firmitude and Certitude; for there are in it ſuch magical and miraculous Doings, of which there is no ſufficient reaſon to doubt, and which therefore may be called, The undoubted magical and miraculous Doings of Oracles. Such are

(1.) The Incorporation of Demons in Statues and their Agency in them. Demons were certainly introduc'd into the Pagans Temples and Statues and made to reſide there, (p) ὑπό τινων μαγγανειῶν, by certain Artifices of Inchantment. Accordingly Zoſimus ſaith, (q) that their Gods were τελεταῖς ἁγίαις καθιδρυθέντες, ſet up with holy myſtical Rites. The Gods themſelves ſay, (r) that Magical Figures and Characters detain them in certain places of the Earth. As the Theurgiſts made Statues of proper and accommodate Matter (by compounding ſeveral Species of things) πρὸς θεῶν ὑποδοχήν, for the reception of the Gods, ſo the Sacrifice of ſuch Matter (s) exciteth the Gods to appear, induceth them preſently to be comprehended, and it receiveth them when they are come. Olympius the Philoſopher therefore perſwading the People to die, rather than to relinquiſh their Country-rites, told them, (t) that certain Divine Powers dwelt in their Statues. Hence the Jews ſuppos'd, (u) that not plane or depreſs, but only protuberant Images are forbidden in the Second Commandment, becauſe theſe only are capable of being inhabited by Spirits, and of giving oracular Reſponſes. (w) The Serapes of the Egyptians were as the Teraphim and the Aſſyrian Nebo, Statues of oracular Reſponſes, they worſhipp'd them and conſulted them for Divination, as Abeneſius reporteth, agreeably to what the Scripture ſaith of them, that they conſulted their Idols, Iſa. 19. 3. (x) Maimonides ſaith, he read two Volumes of ſpeaking Images and their Fabrication. The words of Virgil —— agitataque numina Trojæ are thus expounded by Servius; Simulachra brevia, quæ portabantur in lecticis, & ab ipſis mota infundebant vaticinationem, ſhort Images carry'd in Litters (or little Chariots,) which being moved or agitated did infuſe Vaticination. From good Authors we have the relation (y) of a talkative Image at Veii (the Image of Juno Moneta,) and of another at Rome (the Image of Fortuna Muliebris.) Pſellus ſaith, (z) In Theurgy there often appeareth a skipping of the Celeſtial Fire, and then the Statues ſeem to ſmile, and the Lamps are lighted of themſelves. (a) The Zemes in Hiſpaniola were Images animated by Demons; every little King had one of them, and one of theſe Kings had a Zemes, that (upon taking a diſtaſt) often us'd, to deſcend from the top of the Houſe, where he was kept cloſe bound, and to lie hid for certain Days. Another of theſe Zemes often went from the place, where he was worſhipp'd, into the Woods; when they perceiv'd that he was gone, a great multitude gather'd together, to ſeek him with devout Prayer, and when they had found him, they brought him home religiouſly on their Shoulders to the Chappel dedicated unto him. Theſe Zemes were Statues of Divination; for the King conſulted them in their Chappels touching the Events of War and other Affairs of Life: They foretold the coming of the Spaniards into Hiſpaniola, that they ſhould deſtroy the Images of their Gods, and ſlay the Children, which was a true Divination. (b) The barbarous Americans were upbraided by Friar Gage for worſhipping an Idol of black Wood, which they plac'd in a Cave of the Earth; but inſtead of putting them to ſilence, he had this Anſwer from them; That themſelves believ'd the Image to be but Wood of it ſelf; but they knew alſo by their own Ears, that it had ſpoken to them, from whence they concluded, that a God was in it. The Stories of the ancient Bætuli are thought fabulous; but (perhaps) without ſufficient reaſon. Damaſcius in the Life

of

(l) Van Dale de orac. p. 107.

(m) Ibid. p. 105.

(n) Quòd effigies Deorum Penatium quos de Troja Æneas fugiens advexit, de loco in locum migraſſe referuntur. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 10. c. 16.

(o) Feruntúrque divino ſpiritu, non ſuo arbitrio, ſed quo Deus propellit, vehentes, ut videmus apud Antium promoveri ſimulachra Fortunæ, ad danda reſponſa. Saturn. l. 1. c. 23.

(p) Orig. c. Cel. l. 7. p. 374.

(q) Hiſt. p. 351.

(r) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 5. c. 15.

(s) Ἀνεγείρει τοὺς θεοὺς ἐπὶ τὴν ἔμφασιν, καὶ προσκαλεῖται εὐθέως πρὸς κατάληψιν, χωρεῖ τε αὐτοὺς παραγινομένους. Jamblich. de myſt. p. 138, 139.

(t) Sozomen. Hiſt. l. 7. c. 15.

(u) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 3. diſſ. 5. c. 7. S. 1.

(w) Ibid. diſſ. 7. c. 3. S. 10.

(x) Ibid. & S. 9. & Seld. de D. Syr. Synt. 1. c. 6.

(y) Valer. Max. l. 1. c. 8. Lactant. l. 2. c. 8.

(z) De Dæmon. ſub fin.

(a) Purch. par. 1. B. 9. c. 14. S. 2. Hoffman. umbr. p. 86.

(b) Gage Survey, c. 20. p. 391, &c.

of Iſidore ſaith, (c) that one Euſebius had an oracular ſpeaking Bætulus, which ſome ſuppoſed to be a Divine Oracle, but Iſidore rather ſuppoſed it to be Demonial, for it was ſome Demon that mov'd it, not of the noxious, nor very material order.

(2.) Many Hiſtorical Paſſages touching the magical and miraculous doings of Oracles which are of ſuch a Nature and ſo well atteſted, that they ſeem unexceptionable. Of this ſort a competent number is before recited from Celſus; and Plutarch in the Perſon of Demetrius relateth, (d) "That the Prefect of Cilicia, a bad "Man, that had certain Epicureans about him, "who becauſe of their excellent Phyſiology ri"dicul'd ſuch things as Oracles, had a mind, "to make an experiment of the Oracle of Mop"ſus. He ſent therefore one that had been his "Servant (as a Spy into the Enemies Quar"ters) with a Queſtion in writing, and the "writing was ſealed, none knowing what the "Queſtion was. This Man (as the cuſtom was) "having tarry'd all Night in the Temple and "ſlept, when it was day related, that he had "this Dream. An handſom young Man ſeem"ed to ſtand by him, and to ſay to him this "one word Μέλανα, Black, and ſo was gone "preſently. This ſeem'd to us an abſurd An"ſwer (ſaith Demetrius:) But the Prefect was "aſtoniſh'd and ador'd, and opening the wri"ting ſhew'd, that the Queſtion written there"in was, ποτερόν σοι λευκὸν ἢ μέλανα θύσω ταῦρον, "Whether ſhall I ſacrifice to you a white or black "Bull? So that the Epicureans were ſtruck "with ſhame, the Preſident did his Sacrifice, "and continu'd always a worſhipper of Mop"ſus. This Oracular Phænomenon may reaſonably be called undoubtedly Magical, and it ſeemeth the Epicureans of thoſe elder times had a greater ſhare of Ingenuity and Modeſty than thoſe of their Foot-mark and Fraternity in theſe later ages. Of the ſame Character (undoubtedly Magical) was the Anſwer of the Oracle at Delphos to King Cræſus, which Tertullian looketh upon as an inſtance of the Celerity and great intelligence of evil Demons. (e) Teſtudinem decoqui cum carnibus Pythius renunciavit. Cræſus contriv'd a thing, which he thought none could imagine or declare (to make trial of the Oracle,) clancularly in his own Houſe he chopt and boil'd together a Snail and a Lamb in a Braſs-kettle with a Braſs-cover upon it, and this Pythia at Delphos declared. Suetonius relateth of Tiberius, (f) that he ſought to throw down all the Oracles that were near the City, but deſiſted from that attempt, being affrighted by the Majeſty of the Sortes Prœneſtinæ, which were ſeal'd up and carry'd to Rome, but could not be found in the Ark (wherein they were uſually kept,) unleſs it was carry'd back to the Temple to which it belonged. Tacitus giveth this account of the Oracle of Apollo Clarius. (g) There is no Woman in this Oracle as at Delphos, but a Prieſt (choſen out of ſome certain Families) heareth the Name and number of thoſe that conſult the Oracle, then going into a Den, and having drunk the Water of an arcane Fountain, giveth them anſwer touching thoſe things, which every one hath conceiv'd in his mind, and being ignorant of Letters and of Verſes for the moſt part, yet giveth Reſponſes in compoſ'd Verſes. Celſus affirmeth, (h) that at the Oracles of Trophonius, Amphiaraus, and Mopſus, the Gods were ſeen in Human form (which ſort of Relations the Epicureans derided,) and there are many Memoirs in Paganiſm (i) of the ἐπιφάνειαι Apparitions of the Gods. Which appearances whoſoever believeth, will not diſbelieve their coming to their Temples ſometimes in an extraordinary manner, (k) attended with an unuſual ſplendor and refulgency, thundrings, bellowings and frightful Noiſes, which therefore ought not to be imputed meerly to Human Artifice and Impoſture. Cæcilius affirms, (l) that they had the ſight of the Gods in ſleep. So when a great golden Bowl was ſtoln out of Hercules's Temple, the God himſelf appeared to Sophocles in ſleep, and told him, who had ſtoln it. When Veſpaſian conſulted the God Serapis in Egypt, Baſilides a principal Man amongſt the Egyptians (m) was ſeen by him in the Temple, whom upon inquiry made (by ſending certain Horſemen) he found to have been fourſcore Miles diſtant at that moment of time, and this Apparition he took for an oracular Reſponſe. By a Monition or Oracle of the God Serapis a blind Man and a lame Man made their application to him, ſtatim converſa ad uſum manus eſt, & cæco reluxit dies, the lame Man had preſently the uſe of his hand, and the blind Man regain'd his ſight. Apollonius Tyanæus, who was one of Veſpaſian's acquaintance and was with him in Egypt, is celebrated for his Magical-miraculous doings; and Philoſtratus ſaith, (n) that many asking health of the Oracle, the God bad them betake themſelves to Apollonius; as the Delphi were bid by the Oracle, to Sacrifice to the Winds, the Greeks to make uſe of Æacus's Prayers, and Epimenides came to Athens by the Monition of the Oracle with miraculous Succeſs. (o) In a Table of Greek Inſcriptions that was hung up in the Temple of Æſculapius at Rome, it is recorded of one Lucius a Pleuritic Man, and one Julianus who vomited Blood, both of them deſpair'd of by all, that they were directed by the Oracle of that God, to certain Medicines that recover'd them. The cure of one Caius a blind Man was Magical-miraculous. This blind Man was bid by the Oracle to come to the ſacred Altar, and to kneel there, then to go from the right ſide to the left, and to put his five Fingers upon the Altar, then to lift up his Hand and to put it upon his Eyes. And again he ſaw aright, the People being preſent, and congratulating, that great Miracles were done under our Emperor Antoninus.

(3.) The extatick Violences of the divinatory Enthuſiaſts, which they ſometimes ſuffered unto Death; for they felt within themſelves a violent Correption, Obſeſſion and extatic Motion from another (p) diſtinct from themſelves (ὅτι ἔχουσι μεῖζον ἐν αὐτοῖς, that they have ſomething grand within them,) and that a Spirit from without agitated them, as Apollo's Oracle deſcribeth the Spirit of Divination. (q)

An influence from Phœbus fair
Hid under breathings of fine
Air Drawn forth by Cants and words Arcane
Fell on the pure Receivers Brain,
Deſcending down it fill'd the Veſt,

Recur-

(c) Phot. cod. 242. col. 1061, 1063.

(d) De Def. orac. p. 434.

(e) Tertul. Apol. c. 22.

(f) C. 63.

(g) Annal. l. 2. p. 63.

(h) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 355.

(i) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 3. diſſ. 1. c. 2. S. 3. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. p. 14, 15 Cic. de N. D. l. 3. Dion. Halicarn. l. 2. p. 128.

(k) Jam mihi cernuntur trepidis delubra moveri
Sedibus, & clarum diſpergere culmina lumen,
Adventum teſtata Dei, &c.
Claudian. De rap. Proſerp. l. 1.
Euſeb. pr. ev. l. 5. c. 13.

(l) Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 65.

(m) Tacit. Hiſt. l. 4. ſub fin. Sueton. c. 7.

(n) L. 4. c. 1.

(o) Gruter. Theſaur. p. 71. Van Dale p. 100, 101.

(p) Plotin. En. 5. l. 3. c. 14. Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 65.

(q) Ῥεῦμα τὸ φοιβεῖης ἀπονευμενον ὑψόθεν αἴγλης
Πνοιῇ ὑπὸ λιγυρῇ κεκαλυμμένον ἠέρος ἁγνοῦ
Θελγόμενον μολπαῖσι καὶ ἀῤῥήτοις ἐπέεσσι
Κάππεσεν ἀμφὶ χέρνιον ἀμωμήτοιο δοχῆος
Λεπταλέων ὑμένων, μαλακὸν δ' ἐνέπλησε χιτῶνα

Αμϐολάδην διὰ γαςρὸς ἀνεκπύμενον παλίνορσον
Αὐλῆ δ' ἐκ βροτέοιο φίλην ἐτεκνώσατο φωνήν.
Euſeb. pr. ev. l. 5. c. 8.

Recurring upwards to the Breaſt
By Human voice it ſelf expreſt.

So the Pagan Theologers attribute their divinatory Enthuſiaſm to (r) ἀναβακχεύοντα τοὺς ἀνθρώπους πνεύματα, Spirits deriv'd from the Gods that make Men Bacchical. And Plutarch relateth upon his own Knowledge, (s) that an oracular Pythia died by extatic Violence. She deſcended into the Oracle unwillingly and with reluctance, preſently it appear'd in her firſt Anſwers by the aſpirity of her voice, that ſhe was impell'd as a Ship with Wind and unable to bear it, ἀλάλου ϗ κακοῦ πνεύματος οὖσα πλήρης, being replete with a mute and malign Spirit. In the iſſue being all in a commotion, and impell'd to go out, with a terrible cry ſhe threw her ſelf down, ſo that not only they that conſulted the Oracle fled, but alſo Nicander the Prophet, and thoſe of the Holy (τῶν ὁσίων,) that were preſent. After a while entring in they took her up diſtracted, and ſhe lived a few days. Theſe extatic Violences are thus deſcrib'd by Lucan l. 5.

——— ſi qua Deus ſub pectora venit,
Numinis aut pœna eſt mors immatura recepti
Aut pretium: quippe ſtimulo fluctuque furoris
Compages humana labat: pulſuſque Deorum
Concutiunt fragiles animos. ———

(4.) More than human Divinations. For the perſonal Oracles were in ſuch Reputation amongſt the Heathen, that they called their Vates (t) Veratores, and in the old Burgundian Laws Veratura ſignifieth Divination. Of the Delphic Oracle Plutarch affirmeth, (u) οὐδένα καθ' αὐτῆς ἔλεγχον ἄχρι νῦν παραδέδωκεν, not any one hath produced a conviction of falſhood againſt it unto this day. The Oracles therefore were managed by more than human Politicks, and there are in this Author (Plutarch de Pyth. Orac.) ſeveral great inſtances of more than human Divination. In Cicero de Fato we are told, that this was the Doctrine of Diodorus touching neceſſity and contingency, Non neceſſe fuiſſe Cypſelum regnare Corinthi, quanquam id milleſimo ante anno Apollinis oraculo editum eſſet, that it was not neceſſary, Cypſelus the Tyrant ſhould Reign at Corinth, though that was a thing predicted by Apollo's Oracle a thouſand years before. Voſſius therefore ſtrenuouſly argueth, (w) To reſolve the Oracles into the Artifice of the Prieſts only, is inſufficient, becauſe they predicted many things, to which the Mind of Man cannot reach. But to this unanſwerable Argument the admirers of Lucian and Epicurus make anſwer. (x) Quomodo conſtat ea non poſt eventum fuiſſe conficta? How doth it appear, that thoſe Predictions of the Oracles were not fram'd after the Event? Which is the Anſwer of Men that are baffled and driven to an abſurdity; for the ſame abſurd Anſwer Porphyry made, when preſs'd with the Vaticinations of the Prophet Daniel, he ſaid, they were made after the Event.

(5.) The Pagans methods of obtaining their Divinatory Enthuſiaſm; for which their oracular Vates prepar'd themſelves with great and ſolemn Sanctimony. Pythia might not go to her Tripos, nor offer her ſelf to be an Organ to God (y) not being pure in all reſpects as a prepared Organ and well ſounding, but in perturbation and incompoſ'd. The oracular Vates at Colophon (z) faſted a whole Day and Night, before he drank his divinatory Water, and was retired himſelf alone ἐν ἱεροῖς τισιν ἀβάτος τῷ πλήθει, in certain ſacred places inacceſſible to the multitude. The oracular Woman at Branchidæ holdeth in her hand a Rod (the Diviners proper bearing as a Scepter is the King's,) which originally came from ſome God. And from the multitude of Sacrifices, the Law of Sanctimony, the waſhings of the Propheteſs, and her faſting three whole days, and retirement in ſecret places, it appeareth (ſaith Jamblichus) παράκλησιν τοῦ θεοῦ ὥστε παραγενέσθαι, that God is called upon to be preſent. (a) To prepare the Phantaſie, to receive God (in order to Divination,) ſometimes they made uſe of καταπόσεις, the Sorcerers Potions, ſometimes ἐπῳδαὶ, Charms, ſometimes συςάσεις, magical Compoſitions. (b) To prepare themſelves for ſeeing things Divine, the Egyptians are ſaid to anoint their Eyes, either with Tarrum (Aloes probably) or a Liquor of Frankincenſe, or Bdellium: But the Aſſyrians by Characters, and certain arcane Names, ſanctifying themſelves by myſtic Letters, in ſacerdotal Spangles. Theſe things are ſaid by Porphyrius and Jamblichus, ſaith Pſellus. We are blind, if we ſee not Magick in theſe Preparatives for Divine Viſions and Oracular Divination. Whence it appeareth, that Origen was not miſtaken in ſtiling the Extaſie of Pythia (c) μαγικὴ κατάςασις, a magical State of Mind: Nor did Theodoret take his meaſures amiſs in calling the Oracles (d) τὰς μαντικὰς μαγγανείας, divinatory Inchantments.

VII. This Epicurean Hypotheſis touching Oracles is Anti-rational as being contrary to the plain Reaſon of things. For if there be evil Demons, that affect a Divinity and God-head over Mankind, and to have them their Religioniſts, they muſt neceſſarily require from them a Religion and God-Service; and therefore Mankind muſt have from them a λόγος προφορικός, Word or Revelation, which is an Oracle. And conſidering how outragiouſly Heathen Mankind are addicted to Divination, (e) Auguriis & ariolis ad inſaniam dediti, (and at the ſame rate they are addicted to near converſe with their Gods,) it is manifeſtly impoſſible, that thoſe evil Demons ſhould have them and keep them for their Religioniſts, unleſs they afford them Oracles and Divination. The Heathen Oracles and Divination therefore are a neceſſary conſequence of the Exiſtence of evil Demons, that affect a Divinity and God-head over Mankind. And conſequently the exploding their Oracles and Divination as meer human Forgeries, is a denying the Exiſtence of ſuch evil Demons, which is a total ſubverſion of Chriſtianity and of Paganiſm alſo, which is an Inſtitution of the Pagan Gods and Demons. The Pagans underſtood very well, that it belonged to the Gods, to inſtitute the matters of their Religion and God-ſervice, (f) and there is not any one thing, but Mankind hath learned it of them, and ſo hath done them Religious Service. If the Pagans had their oracular (r) Jambl. de Myſt. p. 71.

(s) De Def. Orac. p. 438.

(t) Salmaſ. Not. in Hiſt. Aug. p. 431.

(u) De Pyth. orac. p. 408. See Dr. Barrow on the Creed, Ser. 9. p. 13..

(w) Non ſatis eſt, ſi in ſacerdotum ſubſiſtatur ſolertia, quia multa prædicerentur, ad quæ non pertingeret mens humana. De Idol. l. 1. c. 6.

(x) Van Dale p. 223.

(y) Μὴ παντάπασι καθαρὰν ἶναι, ὥσπερ ὄργανον ἐξηρτυμένον ϗ εὐηχὲς, ἀλλ' ἐμπαθῆ ϗ ἀκατάςατον. Plutarch. de Def. Orac. p. 437.

(z) Jambl. de myſt. p. 73, 74.

(a) Jambl. ibid. p. 77, 78. Gale not. p. 233, 240.

(b) Ad divinas viſiones percipiendas parabant ſe Ægyptii, ut ferunt, vel tarro, ſic enim vocant, oculos oblinentes, vel thuris liquore, vel bdellio. Aſſyrii verò teſſeris quibuſdam infandiſque (ἀῤῥήτοις) nominibus, myſticiſque literis in ſacerdotalibus bracteis ſeipſos ſanctificantes. Hæc Porphyrius & Jamblichus. Gale ibid. p. 231.

(c) C. Celſ. l. 7. p. 333.

(d) Θεραπ. Ser. 10. initio.

(e) Magini Geograph. in Braſil.

(f) Καὶ ὅλως ἓν οὐδέν ἐςιν, ὃ μὴ παρ' αὐτῶν μαθόντες οἱ ἄνθρωποι οὕτως αὐτοὺς ἐτίμησαν. Porphyr. ap. Euſeb. l. 5. c. 11.

Documents touching matters of Religion, not from their Gods, but from their Prieſts only, Paganiſm muſt be thought the Religion, not of evil Spirits, but of evil Prieſts and evil Men only; and the Religion of Demonolatry muſt not be thought originally the Religion of evil Demons. The Religion of Serpents, to which Human Nature hath an antipathy, muſt be thought a meer Human Inſtitution; and the ſame judgment muſt be made of the Pagans ὠμοφαγίαι κὴ αἰσχρολογίαι πρὸς ἱεροῖς, tearing and devouring raw fleſh and filthy obſcene Speeches in their Sacra, and of other monſtrouſly abſurd Rites, which ſome of the Pagan Theologers derive from evil Demons, pronouncing them Cyclopic and unnatural, (g) as Porphyry doth the ὠμοφαγία, tearing and devouring raw fleſh. And that Judaiſm may be ſubverted by this Epicurean Hypotheſis (as well as Chriſtianity and Paganiſm) the Inſtitutes of the Zabii muſt be thought only fondly ritual not religious-magical; for if they were magical, the Oracles that inſtituted them, muſt be magical. If the Rite of pouring Blood into a Ditch to the Dii inferi was magical, (h) the oracular Apollo that inſtituted it, muſt be thought a Magick Oracle. If the invoking Mercury, the Sun, the Moon, Saturn and Venus on their ſeveral days κλήσεσιν ἀφθέγκτοις, with words arcane found out by the beſt of the Magi, are Aſtrological-magical Rites, (i) the Oracle that injoin'd theſe Rites was magical. And ſuch were the Oracles that injoin'd a Religion of ἀνθρωποθυσίαι and τεκνοθυσίαι, ſacrificing Millions of Men to the Heathen Gods, ſlaughtering, ſacrificing and burning their own Children; for theſe prodigious inhumanities could not be the Inſtitutes of meer Humanity. The Heathen Writers that ſpeak of them, generally exclaim againſt them as horrible, nefarious, monſtrous, of dire immanity (as Tacitus calleth them;) therefore they are matter of horror to natural Light and the kindly inſtincts of human Nature. Yet they prevailed all over the World of degenerate Mankind, which is a plain demonſtration, that they were of more than human Inſtitution. It is far more credible (k) that a Cow ſpake at Rome with an human voice (Roma cave tibi,) than that meer humanity inſtituted the inhumanities of the Heathen Religion. (l) Some explode the Roman Plebeian's Dream from Jupiter, the Apparition of Caſtor and Pollux, the attraction of a Ship by Claudia's Girdle, and all the Prodigies reported by Livy, Dio, Pliny, Valer. Max. as things fabulous and incredible: But are any of theſe portentous things half ſo portentous or incredible as the prodigioſa Sacra (as Pliny calleth them) of the Heathen Religion, of which no Man is incredulous? Theſe are Tranſcendentals and of a ſtrain paramount to meer human Inſtitutes of Wickedneſs: Nor can the Origin of them be deriv'd meerly from ſuch Principles or Propenſions as are in the human Nature. For if Mankind had a mind to expreſs their higheſt devotional Eſteem and Affection for their Gods, if they thought it the beſt way of obliging them, to offer to them the deareſt things they had which ſome ſay (m) was the Origin of τεκνοθυσία, ſacrificing Children,) yet this could be no inducement to them, to Sacrifice Captives, Strangers, and poor Shipwrack'd Refugees, which were ſacrific'd to Diana Taurica. If we derive the Original of the human Sacrifices from an Opinion, which they had in ancient times, (n) that the Life of Man and human Sacrifices were of far greater Dignity and Precioſity than the Sacrifices of inferiour Animals, and of far greater Efficacy and Avail with the Gods, we give a true account of their Original indeed, but we derive it from ſomething higher than the human Nature, becauſe Mankind in thoſe ancient times could not have had ſuch an Opinion of the efficay and avail of the human Sacrifices, unleſs they had underſtood the mind of their Gods, and been impos'd upon by their Artifices. Had they not been impos'd upon by their Artifices, their Opinion of the Precioſity of the Life of a Man muſt neceſſarily have produc'd a contrary effect, and deterr'd them from their Man-killing Trade, from butchering and cutting Throats, burying and burning alive innocent Men, Women and Children. Had they not underſtood the mind of their Gods, they muſt neceſſarily have ſuppos'd, that their barbarous and bloody Murders were the way to incenſe, not to appeaſe the Divine Vengeance, to provoke the diſpleaſure, not to gain the favour of the Gods (whoſe Vengeance is ſuppos'd by the Barbarians to purſue Murderers Act. 28. 4.) therefore the Heathens ἀνθρωποθυσίαι, τεκνοθυσίαι, Sacrifices of Men and Children, muſt be deriv'd from their Oracles and Divination, and thoſe Oracles muſt be Magical and Diabolical.

Such was that ancient Oracle in Dionyſ. Halicarnaſ. (o) that requir'd human Sacrifices for Jupiter and Apollo, (p) the Delphic Oracle order'd the Athenians, to ſend twice ſeven Boys and Virgins to the Cretians, to be ſacrific'd. The Locri were directed by their Oracle, for the aſſwaging a Peſtilence, to ſend every Year two Virgins to Troy, which had their Throats firſt cut, and then were burnt in Sacrifice to Pallas Trojana. And the butchering of Iphigenia at the Altar of Diana in Aulis was by direction of the Oracle. (q) Amongſt the Romans a certain Virgin Elbia was Thunder-ſtruck, and three Veſtal Virgins polluted, which being look'd upon as atrocious Accidents they conſulted the Sibylline Oracles, wherein thoſe things were foretold, and that they would prove calamitous to the Common-wealth: But thoſe Oracles directed them by way of prevention, to bury alive two Men and two Women, Greeks and Gauls, as an Oblation ἀλλακότοις τισὶ δαίμοσι κὴ ξένοις, to certain alien and ſtrange Demons. It appeareth abſurd (ſaith Plutarch,) to reproach the Barbarians as doing things nefarious, yet they themſelves do the ſame things, προσταχθέντες ἐκ τῶν Σιβυλλείων, being commanded ſo to do by the Books of the Sibylline Oracles. Such was the Origin of the human Sacrifices. (r) The Devil ſuggeſted to the Mexican Prieſts, to go to their Kings, telling them, that their Gods dy'd for hunger, and therefore ſhould be remembred. Then aſſembled they their People to Wars, to furniſh their bloody Altars. The Rite of τεκνοθυσία, Parents burning their own Children alive (s) is ſo monſtrouſly inhuman, ſo outrageouſly barbarous and cruel, and ſo prodigiouſly contrary to natural Affection, that it is not imaginable, it could ever have been practis'd by Mankind, if the Devil had not put them upon it. This Inſtitute atrocious and flagitious to the height of Wickedneſs is of Affinity with another Inſtitute of the ſame Author of Oracles. (t) The Pelaſgi devaſtated a City of Bœotia, which the Thebans defended, and ſent to conſult the Oracle at Dodona touching the Victory in the War. The Oracles Anſwer was, that the Thebans ſhall be victorious, εἰ μέγιστον ἀσέβημα ἀσεβήσουσι, if they do the greateſt of Impieties. It ſeem'd to them, that this was

(g) Spencer de Leg. Hebr. l. 2. c. 4. S. 2.

(h) Niceph. in Syneſ. p. 411.

(i) Euſeb. pr. ev. l. 5. c. 14.

(k) Van Dale p. 193.

(l) Ibid. p. 192.

(m) Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 293.

(n) Grot. de ſatisfact. p. 200. Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 2. c. 10. S. 3.

(o) Euſeb. pr. ev. l. 4. c. 16.

(p) Ibid. 5. c. 19.

(q) Plutarch. Qu. Rom. p. 283, 284.

(r) Franc. Pa. l. B. 8. c. 11. S. 1. & vid. ibid. c. 7. S. 4.

(s) Spencer ſupr. l. 2. c. 10. S. 4.

(t) Phot. cod. 239. col. 539.

was the greateſt of Impieties, τὸν χρησμὸν ἀνελεῖν, to ſlaughter the Oracle (or the Vates that deliver'd it,) and accordingly they did it.

VIII. This Epicurean Hypotheſis touching Oracles is Anti-probable and Anti-poſſible. For as a learned Man argueth; (u) it is altogether improbable, that the Nations of old would have worſhipp'd their Images at ſuch a rate as they did, and have given them the Names of their Gods, unleſs Demons had often entred into them, and thence afforded them Oracles, and given other Teſtimonies of their Preſence. Of the Delphic Oracle Cicero ſaith; never would that Oracle have been ſo renown'd, nor ſo ſtufft with the Gifts of all Nations and Kings, if every age had not experienc'd the truth of thoſe Oracles. This hath ſomething of improbability; for the Hebrew Book Coſri ſaith; (w) that the Jews were ſometime drawn to the uſe of Images and ſpiritual Virtues (Teleſms,) becauſe they were in thoſe times approv'd by Experiments. And is it probable, that the Pagan World ran after Oracles for many ages together, which were never approv'd by Experiments? (x) It is probably thought that the Dodonean Oracle had its Name from Dodanim the Son Javan, and that the Ammonian had its Name from Ham: Whether ſo or otherwiſe, thoſe Oracles were doubtleſs of very great antiquity (for they were in the time of Mycerinus King of Egypt,) and can it be imagin'd, that they ſhould hold up a great Reputation in the World, with learned and unlearned, with Princes and People, till about the times of Chriſtianity at leaſt, if there had been nothing of the reality of Oracles in them, nothing more than human deluſion? To ſuppoſe the Oracles ſuch (a meer human Artifice and Impoſture,) is to ſuppoſe, that a great multitude of People of very diſtant and remote Countries, who never convers'd together, conſpir'd in a Plot, to abuſe and impoſe upon Mankind, that this Conſpiracy was carry'd on from one Generation to another, for many ages, without being reveal'd by any one (although innumerable Perſons of different Sex and Condition, Inclination and Intereſt, were concern'd in it;) that they conſpir'd, to abuſe and impoſe upon, not only the rude and ignorant, but the wiſe, the learn'd, the Philoſophical World of Mankind in Greece, Egypt, Babylon, and that ſilly Men and Women carry'd on the groſſeſt of Impoſtures with ſuch artifice for many ages, that the great and learned and religious Pagans could not diſcover it; all which are not only improbable, but impoſſible Suppoſitions. They that entertain this Hypotheſis, that the Oracles were a meer Artifice and Impoſture of the Pagan Prieſts, muſt think the Pagan Prieſts but ordinary Men, no Sorcerers or Wizards, yet they are ſuppos'd to carry on a Plot which hath no Parallel. They muſt think (y) Apuleius's Βασιλεὺς, or wooden Seal but an ordinary piece of Wood. They muſt ſuppoſe, that the Oracles were ſubſervient to a meer human Intereſt, which manifeſtly ſubſerved a grand Intereſt of Religion, the Intereſt of Satan's Religion and Kingdom; and how ſhould he deceive all Nations, if he did not imploy all his Policy and Power to inveigle them? They muſt ſuppoſe, that the Heathen Gods were not near unto them, nor animated their Statues, nor inhabited their Temples (which were called Fana, becauſe their Gods were wont in them fari, to give oracular Reſponſes,) and have theſe atheous Sentiments any likelihood or appearance of Truth? Notwithſtanding the eager Conteſts that were between the Pagan and the Chriſtian Theologers in the Primitive times touching matters of Religion, yet both Parties retained ſo much ingenuity, they did not deny plain and well atteſted matter of Fact, each Party acknowledg'd the Miracles of their Adverſaries Religion, but at the rate that Porphyry (z) acknowledg'd the Miracles of the Martyrs, who look'd upon them as Præſtigiæ Dæmonum, the falſe Miracles of Demons. He made a right judgment (as I ſuppoſe) touching the Miracles that introduc'd Church-Demonolatry, of which the Devil was certainly the Founder and Promoter. And therefore the anſwer (a) of Apollo Daphnæus to Julian touching his ſilence (that his Neighbour dead hindred him from giving an oracular-Reſponſe) may reaſonably be thought a Politick Trick of the Devil, to lapſe the Church into Idolatry hy a pretended Miracle (that he was fetter'd by the Martyr Babylas's Bones,) agreeably to his method in thoſe times, which was, to introduce the Worſhip of Reliques by his illegitimate Miracles. That there are ſuch kind of Miracles the Scripture ſo frequently affirmeth, Exod. 7. Deut. 13. Matth. 24. 24. Act. 8. 10, 11. 2 Theſſ. 2. 9. Apoc. 13. 13. that it muſt be thought inconſiſtent with the Chriſtian Profeſſion, to explode the Pagan oracular Miracles. And it appeareth (b) from the Emperors Veſpaſian, Adrian, and the times of M. Antoninus, that the Pagans affected Miracles, ſo that to gratifie the Propenſions of his Religioniſts, the Devil was oblig'd to afford them Oracles and Miracles, ſuch as tranſcend meer human Artifice and Impoſture, and which might impoſe upon Heathen Mankind, who muſt be allow'd to be Men of Senſe and common Prudence. And if we allow them, to have been ſuch, it will appear, that thoſe many methods of human Artifice, (c) whereby ſome ſuppoſe the Pagan Prieſts to have impos'd upon them Oracles and Miracles, were in great part impracticable and impoſſible things (things that never were, nor ever can be in human Affairs,) and therefore their Oracles and Miracles muſt be reputed in great part (ſuch as Porphyry reputeth the Miracles of the Martyrs) Præſtigiæ Dæmonum, the Artifices and Impoſtures of evil Demons.

Which Religious Hypotheſis is incumbred only with theſe two Difficulties, which incumbred the Speculation of Oracles in Plutarch's time; namely, the Ceſſation of Oracles, and Pythia's ceaſing to anſwer in Verſe. The latter of theſe Difficulties is now no difficulty, for Plutarch himſelf (de Pythiæ Oraculis) hath ſufficiently aſſoil'd it. And as to the former of theſe Difficulties, the Ceſſation of Oracles, if we ſpeak of Oracles in general; ſeeing the Divinations of Witches and other modes of Divination were by the Pagans rightly called Oracles, it is manifeſt, that there never was, nor ever will be, a total Ceſſation of Oracles till Witchcraft and Magick ceaſeth. But if the Name of Oracles be reſtrain'd to the eminent and famous local Oracles of the Pagans, it muſt be acknowledg'd, that there was a partial Ceſſation of thoſe Oracles ſomewhat before the time of our Saviour's coming, and a total Ceſſation of them in and after the time of the Emperour Theodoſius, when the Religion of Paganiſm was ruin'd in the Roman Empire. Which Ceſſation of Oracles cannot be attributed to our Saviour's injoining them ſilence, (d) as ſeveral ancient Wri(u) Spencer ſupr. l. 3. Diſſ. 5. c. 7. S. 1.

(w) P. 300, 301.

(x) Spencer ſupr. Diſſ. 6. c. 2. S. 3.

(y) Seld. de D. Syr. Synt. 1. c. 2.

(z) S. Hierom. adv. Vigilant.

(a) Theodoret. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 3. c. 10.

(b) Baron. ad an. 311. n. 45.

(c) Van Dale de orac. p. 314, 320, 331, &c.

(d) V. Van Dale de orac. Diſſ. 1. Elmenhorſt. in Arnob. p. 45, 46. Theodor. Θεραπ. Ser. 10.

ters of the Church ſuppoſe, nor is the Anſwer of Apollo Delphicus to Auguſtus (that an Hebrew Child had commanded him to remove from his Dwelling) any thing better than Eccleſiaſtic Legendary Stuff; but the true reaſon both of the partial and total ceſſation of theſe Heathen Oracles may reaſonably be ſuppos'd, to be this; The God of this World hath his proper times and ſeaſons for Oracles and Miracles as well as the true God. Before our Saviour's coming there was a ceſſation of Oracles, Miracles, Prophets and appearances of Angels in the Church of God, which were uſual in the ancient times of the Church, and continu'd for many Ages. And although upon our Saviour's coming they were reviv'd again, yet now they are totally ceaſed, and this ceſſation of them hath been for many Centuries of Years. Upon the ceſſation of miraculous and prophetic Gifts in the Chriſtian Church Satan had a proper time and ſeaſon for his Oracles and Miracles, ſuch Oracles and Miracles as introduc'd Church-Demonolatry (the generality of the degenerate Chriſtian Church running mad that way:) but thoſe Oracles and Miracles of his declin'd, and either have totally vaniſh'd, or at leaſt have been Rarities in degenerate Chriſtendom for many Ages. So the elder times of Paganiſm were a proper time and ſeaſon for the Devil's Oracles, when Heathen Mankind ran mad after them; but about and ſomewhat before the time of our Saviour's coming, (e) they ſlighted them, and grew averſe from them (finding much of Illuſion and Impoſture in their Diviners and their Divination, as there is in all Magick,) and the Devil found that was not a proper time and ſeaſon for Oracles, which muſt neceſſarily cauſe a partial Ceſſation of them, as the ruin of the Pagan Religion in the Roman Empire by Theodoſius muſt neceſſarily cauſe a total ceſſation of them. Agreeably to this Account of the ceſſation of the Pagan Oracles (namely, that the God of this World hath his proper time and ſeaſon for Oracles as well as the true God) the Apoſtate Julian diſcourſeth touching the Pagans Divinatory Enthuſiaſm, which was a principal Fountain of Oracles. (f) The Spirit or Inſpiration which cometh from the Gods to Men, is but ſeldom and in a few. It is not eaſie, for every Man to be partaker of it, nor at every time; accordingly it is ceas'd among the Hebrews, nor hath it continu'd among the Egyptians until now. It ſeemeth alſo, that thoſe Oracles, which were of Divine Original, yield to the Revolutions of Time; which our Lord and Father Jupiter, a lover of Men, conſidering, that we might not be altogether deſtitute of Communion with the Gods, he gave us the ſacred Arts (of Divination) and the Inquiry that we make by them, that thereby we might have ſufficient help for our needs.

IX. An Eighth plain appearance in Paganiſm of Satan's Pagano-mundane Empire is the Sibylline Oracles, which were an eminent Branch of that impure Magick and Wizardiſm that reign'd in Paganiſm and govern'd the Heathen World. The Name Sibylla ſignifieth an Oracle, (g) for it is deriv'd from Σιὸς (which in the Æolick Dialect is the Name for God) and βουλὴ, Mind, and therefore denoteth the Mind of God made known (in the way of Divination) which is an Oracle. The Sibylls were ſo many perſonal Oracles, and every ἔνθους ϗ μαντικὴ γυνὴ, inſpir'd, fatidical or divinatory Woman (as Strabo calleth a Sibyll) might have been called by their Name; but uſe hath appropriated the Name to ſome of them (the Number is uncertain) that were eminently ſuch. Divinitas & quædam cœlitum ſocietas nobiliſſima ex fœminis in Sibylla fuit: Amongſt Women Divinity and a moſt noble Society of the Celeſtials, was in the Sibyll, ſaith Pliny. So the Poet Virgil deſcribeth the Sibyll.

—— Magnam cui mentem animumque
Delius inſpirat Vates, aperitque futura.
Who by Apollo's Inſpiration
Hath a great mind for Divination.

The Eminency of their Magical Divination appeareth in the place of their abode; for they liv'd ſequeſtred from common Converſation in ſome ſpacious Grot or Den (as Goddeſſes in their Temple,) which was an uſual place amongſt the Pagans for Magical Correſpondences (for this is one of their Modes of Divination, (h) to converſe with ſubterraneous Demons in a caliginous Den about things future, ſaith Gr. Naz. whence the ſame Poet ſaith of the Sibyll, Horrendas canit ambages antroque remugit.

Reſiding in their Dens they were conſulted and gave Oracular Anſwers at the ſame rate with the Local-perſonal Oracles (the Delphic, Ammonian or the like:) So Æneas in Virgil conſulted the Sibyll, who is ſaid to have foretold him all that ſhould befall him.

—— Horrendæque procul ſecreta Sibyllæ,
Antrum immane petit. ——

The divinatory Enthuſiaſm of other Oracles is well atteſted; but the divinatory Enthuſiaſm of the Sibylls hath ſo great and many Atteſtations, that to ſuppoſe it nothing more than Humane Artifice, Impoſture or Diſtemper, is to prefer Lucian and Epicurus before all the Learned Heathen Writers, Philoſophers, Poets and Hiſtorians. Nor do theſe Learned Writers give a bare Atteſtation to the Sibylls and their Oracles; but they rationally prove, and give Inſtances of their more than Humane Divination. (i) Boethus the Epicurean derideth the Sibylls Predictions as nothing more than words fortuitouſly thrown out, ſome of which were fortuitouſly fulfill'd. But Plutarch (in the Perſon of Serapio) anſwereth; (k) Not only the future Event is foretold, but how and when, in what order and with what concomitants; and ſuch a Prediction is more than a fortuitous throwing out words, and more than a bare Conjecture, it is τῶν πάντως ἐσομένων προδήλωσις, a premonſtration of the things that will certainly come to paſs. Thus the Sibyll foretold (ſaith he) the Romans Conqueſt of the Carthaginians with the emerſion of a new Iſland (that ſhould emerge with much Fire and boyling of the Waves) and their making War with all Nations together five hundred Years before the time. (l) The Sibyll (ſaith Pauſanias) οὐκ ἄνευ θεοῦ, not without God foretold to the Macedonians —— ἀγαθὸν ϗ πῆμα Φίλιππος, that a Philip ſhould be both their Good and their Damage, that by one Philip they ſhould gain Power and Glory, and by another they ſhould loſe it. The Athenians alſo cite the Sibylline Oracles (as the ſame Author reporteth)

(e) Cic. de Div. l. 2. Strabo, l. 16, 17.

(f) Τὸ γὰρ ἐκ θεῶν εἰς ἀνθρώπους ἀφικνούμενον πνεῦμα, σπανιάκις μὲν ϗ ἐν ὀλίγοις γίνεται, ϗ οὔτε πάντα ἄνδρα τούτου μετασχεῖν ῥάδιον, οὔτε ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ· ταύτῃ τοι ϗ τὸ παρ' Ἑβραίοις ἀπέλιπεν, οὐκ οὖν οὐδὲ παρ' Αἰγυπτίοις εἰς τοῦτο σώζεται· φαίνεται δὲ ϗ τὰ αὐτοφυῆ χρηστήρια ταῖς τῶν χρόνων εἴκοντα περιόδοις. ὁ δὴ φιλάνθρωπος ἡμῶν δεσπότης ϗ πατὴρ Ζεὺς ἐννοήσας· ὡς ἂν μὴ παντάπασι τῆς πρὸς τοὺς θεοὺς ἀποστερηθῶμεν κοινωνίας, δέδωκεν ἡμῖν διὰ τῶν ἱερῶν τεχνῶν ἐπίσκεψιν, ὑφ' ἧς πρὸς τὰς χρείας ἕξομεν τὴν ἀποχρῶσαν βοήθειαν. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 6. p. 198.

(g) Orac. Sibyll. p. 2, 129. Montacut. Apparat. 5.

(h) Gr. Naz. or. 3. p. 71.

(i) Plut. de Pyth. orac. p. 399.

(k) Οὐ μόνον λέγεται τὸ γ νησόμενον, ἀλλὰ ϗ πῶς ϗ πότε ϗ μετὰ τί ϗ μετὰ τίνος. Eugubin. de Per. Phil. l. 1. c.

(l) Orac. Sibyll. p. 415.

eth) that foretold their defeat at Ægos Potamos, and that it ſhould befall them,

——Δολεροῖσι τρόποις κακότητι νομήων.

by the treacherous dealings of their Leaders.

The Sibylls and their Oracles therefore have not only the Atteſtation of particular Men, but of great States and Governments, eſpecially of the greateſt Government in the World; for (m) no holy or ſacred thing is ſo kept amongſt the Romans (ſaith Dionyſ. Halicarn.) as the Sibylline Oracles. Theſe Oracles were kept recondit from the People, whence a Pontifician Theologer (n) taketh occaſion to commend the Pagans as wiſer than the Hereticks, and to applaud the Equity and Sanctity of his Roman Church in not granting the People liberty to read the Scriptures in the Vulgar Tongue; which is a fair acknowledgment, that the Religion of the Church of Rome is Pagano-Chriſtian, and that ſhe ſymbolizeth with Rome Pagan; which for the cuſtody of her Sibylline Oracles (that were not always the ſame; for the Romans firſt Sibylline Oracles were burned in the burning of the Capitol, to ſupply the place whereof, they ſent abroad, and made a Collection of ſuch Sibylline Oracles as they could get) appointed the Quindecim viri ſacris faciundis, theſe they conſulted, when any danger threatned their Commonwealth; and by the (real or pretended) direction of theſe Oracles they placated their ſeveral Deities, built Temples to them, dedicated Images, made Vows, Prayers, Supplications, Oblations, Sacrifices, Luſtrations, Expiations, Proceſſions about the City, ſang Verſes, inſtituted Feſtivals, Faſts, Holy-days, Sacred Times and Solemnities, Lectiſternia, and publick Spectacles in honour of their Deities. By theſe Oracles (o) τρία κάππα κάκιστα, the three worſt of Cappa's were predicted, by their monition the Symbol of the Goddeſs Cybele was ſent for from Peſſinus, and the Symbol of Æſculapius from Epidaurus (to recover the Salubrity of the City) and brought to Rome. And by the direction of theſe Oracles the Romans made thoſe extraordinary Sacrifices (which Livy calleth minime Romanum ſacrum) their ἀνθρωποθυσίας, Humane Sacrifices, which Sacrifices ſhew, that in ſome caſes at leaſt they really had and follow'd the direction of the Sibylline Oracles, that their Sibylline Oracles were of Magical or Diabolical Original, and that the Roman Empire was under the Domination and Government of Satan, who can make great and ſtrange Predictions upon this account amongſt others, becauſe (though not without limitation) he hath ſo great a ſtroke in the Affairs of this World, that he can fulfill his own Predictions.

X. This account of the Sibylls and their Oracles is not well conſiſtent with their Opinion, who ſuppoſe them, to have been ſo ſupernaturally aſſiſted (or inſpir'd) as that they predicted the coming of Chriſt and the times of Chriſtianity. This Opinion is grounded upon the fourth Eclogue of Virgil (a Prophecy of the Cumæan Sibyll,) that ſeemeth to be meant of Chriſt (although the Poet flatteringly applieth it to Saloninus Pollio's Son,) upon a Sibylline Oracle in Cicero's time, which predicted a King, and upon a Saying of Cicero himſelf, who would have the Sibylline Oracles made uſe of, for the taking down, rather than the taking up Religions. To countenance this Opinion (which hath the Suffrage of S. Auſtin and of ſeveral other ancient Writers of the Church) the Prophecies of Balaam are alledg'd; for why might not the Sibylls be ſupernaturally aſſiſted, to predict Chriſt's coming among the Pagans in the Weſt, as well as Balaam the Aramitick Sorcerer in the Eaſt? This Opinion is well deſign'd (to recommend Chriſtianity) and is the iſſue of pious and good Affection, but the Grounds of it are not ſolid. For (ſuppoſing Balaam's Prophecies to be meant of Chriſt, which is not probable) there is a great diſparity between the Aramitick Sorcerer and the meer Paganical Witches and Wizards. Balaam had the knowledge of the God of Iſrael, whereas the Sibylls were perfect Pagans. In reſpect of his Behaviour Balaam was ἐπαμφοτερίζων, ſometimes ſiding with God and his People, and ſometimes with their Adverſaries; and therefore as Bellarmine ſtileth Eraſmus but Semi-Chriſtianus; ſo Balaam may be called but Semi-Paganus, although the worſer half of him was the better half and the more prevalent, upon which account he muſt be conſider'd as a Pagan Sorcerer. But in his Prophecies he was joyn'd with the People of God, he was imploy'd to propheſie by their God on their behalf, his Prophecies were Oracles given to them, and are a part of the Jews Oracles, to whom alone were committed the Oracles of God, and who alone had the promiſe of the Meſſiah. If we ſuppoſe, that the Heathen World was not without Chriſt, without the Promiſe, without the Covenants, without the Oracles, that Chriſt was preach'd to them before the Goſpel was preach'd, we ſpeak ſelf-contradictions, and expreſly contradict the Scripture; and therefore the caſe of Balaam and of the Sibylls are far from being parallel. The Propheſie of the Cumæan Sibyll in Virgil's fourth Eclogue may ſeem at firſt ſight to be meant of Chriſt and the times of Chriſtianity; but upon a thorough inſpection it will appear, to be nothing elſe but a Branch of pure Pagan Theology, and ſuch a Branch of it which was pure Paganical Phancy.

Ultima Cumæi venit jam carminis ætas,
Magnus ab integro ſeclorum naſcitur ordo,
Jam redit & virgo, redeunt Saturnia regna,
Jam nova progenies cœlo demittitur alto, &c.

In this Poem ſeveral Branches of the Poetic Fabulous Theology, the Platonic magnus Annus (great Year) and the Cumæan Sibylls Prophecy are complicated together. The ſeveral Branches of the Poetic Fabulous Theology are The fabulous Virgin Aſtræa, Saturn's reign and the Golden Age, which the Pagans phancy'd to be an Age of ſenſitive mundane Felicity, (p) and therefore the Poets call their Elyſium (where ſoft and pompous ſenſitive Delights abound) τὴν Κρόνου τύρσιν, the City of Saturn, and deſcribe it by the Golden Age. (q) As the Men of the Golden Age are call'd by Heſiod, the Men of the Golden-kind: So Aurea progenies in the Poet Claudian (ſurgit gens aurea mundo) is the ſame with Nova progenies in the Poet Virgil.

Jam nova progenies cœlo demittitur alto.

The Poetic Phancy of the Golden Age is complicated by Virgil with the Phancy of the Platonic magnus Annus or great Year, (r) according to Servius, and as the Poet's words import.

Magnus ab integro ſeclorum naſcitur ordo.

(m) Ibid. p. 464.

(n) P. Lanſel. calumn. Caſaub. diſp. c. 6. inter oper. J. Mart.

(o) Orac. Sibyll. p. 480, 482, 486, 492.

Rom. 3. 2. and 9. 4. Eph. 2. 12.

(p) Pindar. Olymp. od. 2.

(q)——Illic pretioſior ætas Aurea progenies habitat.— Claudian. de rapt. Proſerp. l. 2.

(r) Dixit etiam finitis omnibus ſeculis rurſus eadem renovari. quam rem etiam philoſophi hac diſputatione colligunt, dicentes, completo magno anno omnia ſidera in ortus ſuos redire, & referri rurſus eodem motu, quod ſi idem ſiderum motus, neceſſe eſt, ut omnia quæ fuerunt habeant iterationem.

The Poetic Phancy of the Golden Age and the Platonic Phancy of a great Year is complicated by Virgil with the Prophecy of the Cumæan Sibyll, who divided the Ages of the World by the Metals:

Ultima Cumæi venit jam Carminis ætas.

The Cumæan Sibyll therefore (according to Virgil's account of things) foretold the reſtitution of the Poets Golden Age, Golden kind, the return of their Virgin Aſtræa, of the Reign of Saturn, and nothing more. She predicted an Age of Pagano-mundane Virtue and of Pagano-mundane Felicity; which implieth, that her Predictions were touching things and perſons, that have no connection at all with Chriſt, Chriſtians and Chriſtianity, but are wholly alien and of a diſſonant kind. Chriſt and Chriſtianity were no conſtitutive Ingredients of the firſt Paganical Golden Age, nor muſt they be thought conſtitutive Ingredients of that Golden Age reſtor'd. If the Cumæan Sibylls Prophecy was meant of things and perſons Chriſtian, whence is it, that it was never ſo underſtood, till the Theologers of the Church affix'd ſuch a Senſe to it? For her Predictions were not only as intelligible by Pagans as by Chriſtians, but they had far greater advantages of underſtanding her Senſe; yet none in the Heathen World ever underſtood the Sibylls Prophecies to be meant of the things and perſons of Chriſtianity; and we muſt not ſay, that the Sibylls were ſupernaturally aſſiſted, to predict Chriſt among the Pagans in the Weſt, ſo as that no body could ever underſtand them, to ſpeak of any thing Chriſtian. They that interpret the Cumæan Sibylls Prophecy to be meant of Chriſt, may as well interpret the Virgo in Virgil, (s) to be meant of the Virgin Mary (as a great Man hath interpreted it;) and at the ſame rate of confounding things Paganical and Chriſtian, they may interpret Plato's ἀποκατάστασις (Reſtitution) to be the ſame with the Chriſtian Reſtitution of all things, Act. 3. 21. But there is no appearance, no probability, that the Cumæan Sibyll in this Prophecy predicted the Birth or Coming of any perſon particularly; but that Pagan Propheteſs having foretold a Golden Age and a Golden Kind (to commence after the Iron,) Virgil in complement and flattery to Pollio dateth the Epocha of that Golden Age and the Inchoation of that Golden Kind from the birth of his Son Saloninus, whom he ſtileth (ſpeaking nothing but groſly Paganical Senſe and Language)

Clara Deum ſoboles, magnum Jovis incrementum.

There is no appearance, that the Cumæan Sibyll foretold ſo much as the Birth or Coming of a King; for the Poet Virgil ſaith nothing of it (he only ſaith, that Apollo reigneth, becauſe of the completion of his Prediction in the commencing of the Golden Kind;) but about his time in Cicero's Days a Rumour was ſpread about by Cæſar's Party (who deſign'd for him the Honour of King) that the Sibylline Oracles pronounc'd, (t) The Parthians could never be vanquiſh'd but by a King, as the Roman Hiſtorians relate. Cicero giveth this Account of that Sibylline Oracle, which Cæſar's Party alledg'd on his behalf. Eum, quem revera Regem habebamus, appellandum quoque eſſe Regem, ſi ſalvi eſſe vellemus; which words (that plainly enough concern the Diſpute of thoſe times, whether Cæſar ſhould be ſaluted and called King or not) are thus render'd into Engliſh by a Learned Man: That if we would be ſafe, we ſhould acknowledge him for a King, who really was ſo. Grotius ſaith, (u) In thoſe ſame Sibylline Oracles this was contained, that we muſt acknowledge him for King, who was indeed our King. Thus by a careleſs repreſenting and tranſlating a Sibylline Oracle, it is made to carry a ſhew of being meant of Chriſt. But beſides that the Senſe is diſtorted, there is great reaſon to believe, that this Sibylline Oracle, as Cæſar's Party called it, was not genuine. Dio and Plutarch ſpeak ſlightly of it; Cicero argueth, that the pretended Sibylline Verſes containing this Oracle are counterfeit, becauſe of the Acroſtick that is in them. The Learned Varro and Dionyſ. Halicarnaſſ. are of Cicero's mind, they pronounce them Suppoſititious, and make the Acroſtick an Indication of their Spurioſneſs. But if we ſuppoſe, that this Sibylline Oracle was not Suppoſititious, the utmoſt that can be inferr'd from thence, will be nothing more than thus much. The Romans found ſomething in their Sibylline Oracles, that favour'd the change of their Government from a Commonwealth into a Monarchy; for that this Sibylline Oracle (real or pretended) concern'd the Roman Monarchy and nothing more, plainly and undeniably appeareth from that Branch of it before cited from Dio, Plutarch and Suetonius, that the Parthians could never be vanquiſh'd but by a King. If the Roman Hiſtorians had reported to us a Sibylline Oracle, which foretold the riſe of a new King and Kingdom diſtinct from the Roman Monarchy, or if Virgil's Eclogue had reported to us ſuch a Sibylline Oracle, there had been juſt ground for this Hypotheſis, that the Sibylls foretold the coming of Chriſt and the Kingdom of Chriſtianity; but in all the Roman Hiſtorians and in that miſtaken Eclogue there is nec vola nec veſtigium of ſuch a Sibylline Oracle. Nor can the Patrons of that Hypotheſis relieve themſelves by that Saying of Cicero touching the Sibylline Oracles; (w) Valeant ad deponendas potius, quàm ad ſuſcipiendas religiones, let them be of avail for the taking down, rather than the taking up Religions. For Cicero in this Saying doth not at all intimate, that thoſe Oracles of themſelves rather tended to the leſſening than the increaſing the Pagans Superſtitions; or, that thoſe Oracles predicted a change of the Pagan Religion, to be introduc'd by the worſhip of one God. It is not poſſible, that Cicero ſhould intimate any ſuch thing, who knew very well, that a vaſt abundance of the Roman Superſtitions were introduc'd by the Sibylline Oracles. His words have plainly this meaning; He would have the Roman Senate, to put their State-Oracles to a contrary uſe, than they had hitherto been put to, not to the increaſing Superſtition (of the overſpreading whereof he ſadly complaineth in his ſecond Book de Divinatione,) but the abating and retrenching it. His words are; (x) Let us have the Sibyll, not expos'd, but hidden, that as our Anceſtors enjoyn'd, the Books may not be ſo much as read without the command of the Senate, and let them (the State-Oracles) be put to this uſe, the taking down, rather than the taking up Religions or Superſtitions. Cicero had a mean Opinion of the Sibylline Oracles, and would have them ſubordinated to the Intereſt of the Commonwealth; but the more

(s) Orac. Sibyll. p. 442.

(t) Nunquam Parthos aliter quàm à Rege ſuperari poſſe.

(u) In iiſdem Sibyllinis erat, pro rege agnoſcendum, qui verè rex noſter eſſet. De V. R. C. l. 4. S. 9.

(w) Intell. Syſt. p. 283.

(x) Sibyllam quidem ſepoſitam & conditam habeamus, ut, id quod proditum eſt à majoribus, injuſſu Senatus ne legantur quidem libri, valeantque ad deponendas potiùs, quàm ad ſuſcipiendas religiones.

more Religious Romans had a like veneration for them, as the Greeks had for their Delphic Apollo. The Apoſtate Julian ſpeaketh their Senſe. (y) It appeareth that Jupiter gave theſe (mighty beneficial) things to the City by Divine Correption and Inſpiration, by the Sibylls Oracles and thoſe others, that were in their Country-language Oracle-ſpeakers. Their Sibylls were had in greateſt Eſteem agreeably to their Divinations, which were great and extraordinary. Nor is their Credit blaſted by our Interpretation of the Cumæan Sibyll's Prophecy, which underſtood only in a general Senſe as a Prediction of a future happy State of things upon Earth muſt be allow'd to be a true Prediction.

But like the reſt of the Pagan Oracles the Sibylline muſt be deriv'd from the God of this World; yet not without the over-ruling, ordering and diſpoſal of the Divine Providence, which in ſome Caſes more eſpecially concern'd it ſelf for the fulfilling its own Decrees and Deſigns, as an ancient Writer diſcourſeth. (z) It was not without Divine Providence, that the Nations truſting their Oracles were deceiv'd by them, made War with the Aſſyrian and fail'd of their hopes. Iſa. 10. 5. Or that the Aſſyrian was incourag'd by his Oracles, to undertake his proſperous Wars. In the Wars between Alexander and Darius Divine Providence confirm'd the oracular Predictions which the one had, and fruſtrated the Oracles of the other. The King of Babylon ſtood at the parting of the Way, at the head of the two Ways, to uſe Divination, to know which way to lead his Army with good Succeſs, againſt the Ammonites, or againſt the Jews, and by the diſpoſal of Divine Providence his Divination directed him, to lead his Army againſt Jeruſalem. Ezek. 21. 21, 22. So by the diſpoſal of Divine Providence (a) there might be a Prodigy at Rome a little before Auguſtus was born, which portended (according to Jul. Marathus) regem pop. Rom. Naturam parturire, that Nature was parturient of a King for the People of Rome. The Romans might have a Sibylline Oracle, which perſwaded them to a King (as Cæſar's Party pretended) at ſuch a time, when Divine Providence deſign'd the Erection of the Roman Empire or Monarchy. And as Auguſtus's ſhutting the Temple of Janus may well be thought a prelude deſign'd by Providence, to uſher in the King of Peace: So the Erection of the Roman Empire or Monarchy, the Preſages, Sibylline Oracles and buſie Expectations of Men touching a King in Jul. Cæſar's time, may reaſonably be thought a prelude deſign'd by Providence, to uſher in a Divine King and his Divine Empire; and this is all the Chriſtianity that I know of in the ancient genuine Sibylline Oracles. As for the Sibylline Oracles which we now have, they are doubtleſs the compilement of ſuch Chriſtians, (b) whom the better ſort of Chriſtians reproach'd with the Name of Sibylliſtæ (becauſe of their extravagant addictedneſs to Sibylline Oracles;) but there is in this Farrago of Oracles, (c) the Forgeries of ſome Jews in the later times of their Commonwealth. A craſs Impoſture theſe Sibylline Oracles are, yet there are thoſe in the Chriſtian Church, that ſay of God, (d) as by his Son he illuminateth the impious as well as the pious, ſo by a wonderful Counſel he gave much more clear Revelations touching the Meſſiah to the Prophets of the Pagans, as may appear from the Sibylline Oracles, than to the Prophets of the Jews themſelves.

XI. A Ninth plain appearance in Paganiſm of Satan's Pagano-mundane Empire is the monſtrous anomalous Sanctity of the Pagan Religioniſts, which ſpeaketh them Satan's Religioniſts, and that the Rites of their Religion were of his Inſtitution. (e) Such were the Rites of the Zabii (ſo monſtrouſly anomalous, that they could never have come into any Man's Head, if the Devil had not invented and inſtituted them,) the plowing with an Ox and an Aſs together (probably to make their Agriculture proſperous, Deut. 22. 10.) the making thoſe kind of Animals copulate and gender together, Lev. 19. 19. The ſeething a Kid in his Mother's Milk (making the Mother deſtructive of her own Off-ſpring by her own Milk, Exod. 21. 19.) and their defiouring a young Woman in a Preternatural way at the preciſe time, when they grafted a Sciens into any Tree, as Maimonides relateth. Of like abſurdity and anomaly to theſe magical Rites were many Inſtitutes of the Heathen Religion; for what can be more prodigiouſly abſurd and anomalous than their Holineſs of Uncleanneſs and Filthineſs, their Sanctity of Sodomy and Beaſtiality? Such was the Sanctity of thoſe ſolemn Religious Inſtitutions the Dionyſiaca, Cybelaica, Iſiaca, Eleuſinia, and the like, (f) the ſenſleſneſs on the one ſide and the beaſtlineſs and wickedneſs on the other, of thoſe things that were performed and obſerv'd under the Name of Religion being beyond all exaggeration, nay beyond any ſober Man's Imagination. Their hidden Myſteries that were called Opertanea, were not inſtituted at one time, nor by one; they differ'd in ſome certain Rites and Ceremonies: But in point of Brutiſhneſs and Licentiouſneſs were otherwiſe ſo like, that though we diſtinguiſh the Founders by Names, yet we muſt needs acknowledge them all guided by one Spirit, ſtiled in the Goſpel an unclean Spirit. S. Auſtin maketh this Inference from the Romans Scenical Plays (having been a Spectator of them,) wherein were celebrated and repreſented both by acting and ſinging (full of obſcenity) the flagitious things that were perpetrated by their Deities, (g) By being pleas'd with ſuch things as theſe they confeſs themſelves to be unclean Spirits. Strabo relateth of the multitude of People, that went from Alexandria in Egypt to the feſtival Conventions at Canopus, where the God Serapis had his Temple, (h) that they behav'd themſelves μετὰ τῆς ἐσχάτης ἀκολασίας, with the moſt extreme laſciviouſneſs. And of the City Comana in Cappadocia he relateth, (i) that it was a little Corinth, and that there was there a multitude of Women, that traded and got Money with their Bodies, the moſt of which were ſacred. Above a thouſand ſuch Women liv'd in the Temple of Venus at Corinth, who traded with their Bodies, and as Prieſteſſes thus did ſervice to their Goddeſs. For theſe ſacred Harlots were conſecrated to their Deities, and committed Harlotry as an Act of Religion and God-ſervice in honour of their Deities, to whom alſo their impure gain was conſecrated, as Herodotus relateth, agreeably to that account which the Apocryphal Epiſtle of Jeremy giveth

---

(y) Ταῦτα μὲν ἐκ καλῆς ἐπιπνοίας θείας, ἔκ τε τῶν τῆς Σιβύλλης καὶ τῶν ἄλλων, οἳ δὴ γεγόνασι κατὰ τὴν πάτριον φωνὴν χρησμολόγοι, φαίνεται δοὺς ὁ Ζεὺς τῇ πόλει. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 6. p. 194.

(z) J. Mart. Q. & R. ad orthod. Qu. 146.

(a) Sueton. in Auguſt. c. 94.

(b) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 5. p. 272.

(c) Joſeph. Antiquit. l. 1. c. 5.

(d) Ut ſole ſuo impios æque ac pios illuſtrat, ita vatibus Ethnicorum admirando conſilio multo clariores de Meſſia Revelationes dedit, ſicut ex Sibyllinis conſtare poteſt, quàm ipſiſmet Judæorum Prophetis. Præfat. Typograph. Plotin. oper. præmiſſ.

(e) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 2. c. 8, 19, 20.

(f) D. Mer. Caſaub. of Enthuſiaſm. p. 6, 7.

(g) Se hujuſcemodi voluptatibus immundos ſpiritus eſſe confitentur. De C. D. l. 2. c. 26.

(h) L. 17.

(i) V. Spencer. ſupr. l. 2. c. 22, 23.

of the Babylonian ſacred Women, v. 43. The Women alſo with cords about them ſitting in the ways burn bran for perfume, but if any of them, drawn by ſome that paſſeth by, lye with him, ſhe reproacheth her fellow, that ſhe was not thought as worthy as her ſelf, nor her cord broken. “The Babylonians (ſaith Herodotus) have this moſt filthy Law; every Woman of that Country ſitting in the Temple of Venus muſt once in her Life-time have to do with a Man that is a Stranger. But many being Rich, and thereby puffed up, diſdaining to aſſociate with the other Women, being carry'd in the arched or vaulted part of Waggons, ſtand before the Temple, their multitude of Servants following. The moſt do in this manner. In the Temple of Venus there ſitteth crown'd with a ſmall Cord about their Head, a multitude of Women, of which ſome come, others go away. Extended Lines or Cords diſtinguiſh their places, which have every way a paſſage to them becauſe of the Women-Strangers thereby paſſing they are choſen out. If any Woman ſitteth there,. ſhe may not return home, till ſome Stranger throwing Money into her Lap have had to do with her without the Temple. When he caſteth the Money into her Lap, he muſt ſay, Ἐπικαλέω τοι τὴν θεὰν Μύλιττα, I invoke thee Goddeſs Mylitta, for the Aſſyrians call Venus Mylitta. This Money how much ſoever it is, ſhe may not refuſe, for this Money becometh ſacred, nor doth ſhe reject any, but followeth the firſt that caſteth Money into her Lap. After ſhe hath had to do with him, being conſecrated to the Deity (or having done the Sacra of the Deity) ſhe is at liberty to return Home, and from thenceforth no ſuch great matter is requiſite to enjoy her. So many of theſe as are very beautiful, are ſpeedily ſet at liberty: But thoſe of them that want beauty ſtay a great time, not being able to fulfil the Law; for ſome of them ſtay the time of three or four Years. Somewhere in Cyprus there is a like Law. (k) Amongſt the Cypriots it was a Cuſtom for young Women to gain themſelves a Portion by playing the Harlot before Marriage, conſecrating part of their gain to their unclean Goddeſs, and there were the like Cuſtoms amongſt the Lydians, Armenians, Phœnicians, Egyptians, Africans. And as there were in Paganiſm Women, that were ſacred Harlots, ſo there were Men alſo that were ſacred Pathicks (or Sodomites) agreeably to that γενέσεως ἐναλλαγή, change of Kind, which the Book of Wiſdom remarketh in Paganiſm. And both theſe ſorts of ſacred Scortators (the Feminine and Maſculine) are probably thought to be the Perſons prohibited in the Moſaic Law, Deut. 23. 17. There ſhall be no קדשה Whore of the daughters of Iſrael, nor a קדש ſodomite of the ſons of Iſrael. But ſuch ſacred Sodomites appertain'd to the Religion of Heathen Idolatry. (l) “In ſome part of Peru there were Boys conſecrated to ſerve in the Temple, and at the times of their Sacrifices and ſolemn Feaſts the Lords and principal Men abus'd them to that deteſtable filthineſs. And generally in the Hill-Countries the Devil under ſhew of Holineſs had brought in that Vice. Every Temple or principal Houſe of Adoration kept one Man or two or more, which were attir'd like Women, even from the time of their Childhood, and ſpake like them, imitating them in every thing under a Pretext of Holineſs and Religion their principal Men on principal Days had that helliſh Commerce. A Friar dealt with two of theſe Ganimedes about the filthineſs of this Vice: And they anſwer'd, that they held it no Fault; for from their Childhood they had been plac'd there by their Caciques, both for that imployment, as alſo to be Prieſts and to keep the Temple. (m) The Temple of Venus Aphacitis in Phœnicia demoliſhed by Conſtantine was a School of Wickedneſs, where the Men were Women rather than Men, having relinquiſh'd their venerable Nature θηλείᾳ νόσῳ τὴν δαίμονα ἱλεῶντο, by ſuffering what Women do, they propitiated the She-demon. (n) Men may be ſeen in the very Temples, to ſuffer the things that are proper to Women, and to make oſtentation of that foul blemiſh of an impure and unchaſt Body. Some of the Heathens Religious Inſtitutes therefore reſemble their Deities, both were Prodigies of Uncleanneſs. (o) Their Groves of Idolatry were ſacra proſtibula ſacred Brothel-houſes, nor were their Temples of a better Character. (p) So great was the fooliſhneſs of the Minds of Men, and ſo prone and precipitant was the rude vulgar to fleſhly Luſt, that almoſt all Mankind thought it no Wickedneſs, to perpetrate nefarious Unchaſtities in their Temples, ſuppoſing, that in ſo doing (becauſe the Seminary of Procreation) they did a ſacred thing. As Harlotry and Sodomy were Branches of their Sanctimony: So their Religion ſanctified an immodeſt Rite bordering upon theſe Impurities, which the Moſaic Law (in oppoſition to their unclean Superſtition) prohibiteth, Deut. 22. 5. The woman ſhall not wear that which pertaineth to a man, neither ſhall a man put on a womans garment: For all that do ſo, are abomination unto the Lord thy God. (q) The Phœnicians, Aſſyrians, Greeks, Aſiaticks, and the generality of the Heathen Nations chang'd their Garments, when they perform'd the Sacra of ſome of their Deities, the Men putting on the Womens Apparel, and the Women the Mens Apparel (and ſometimes putting on the Mens Military Habiliments above their Feminine Apparel,) which leſſer Rites of Impurity iſſu'd in thoſe greater and more ſubſtantial Impurities Harlotry and Sodomy. (r) It is not hard to conjecture, whence every one of theſe Impurities had its birth, ſeeing it is certain, that the moſt of the Gentiles ſacra had their Original from the unclean Spirit. From this Original not only the Heathens groſſer Pollutions, but alſo their Rites of cleanſing and purifying (their Luſtrations, Purifications, Expiations) manifeſtly derive themſelves. (s) For theſe (ſaith Procopius Gazæus) were wont to be made with Inchantments. (t) They have in veneration red Wooll and Grains of Salt, and Torches and Scilla and Sulphur inchanted by Magicians according to certain unclean Catharms.

XII. A Tenth plain appearance in Paganiſm of Satan's Pagano-mundane Empire is the quality

---

(k) Spencer. ſupr. Vives in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 4. *c.*10.

Ch. 14. 26.

1 King. 14. 24. and ch. 15. 12. 2 King. 23. 7.

(l) Purchas par. 1. B. 9. c. 11. S. 2.

(m) Euſeb. de vit. Conſtant. l. 3. c. 55.

(n) Videre eſt in ipſis Templis ——— viros muliebria pati, & hanc impuri & impudici corporis labem glorioſa oſtentatione detegere. Jul Firmic. ap. Spencer. ſupr. c. 17.

(o) Spencer. ſupr. c. 15. S. 3. c. 23. S. 3.

(p) Tanta animorum inſipientia fuit, & tam præceps libido imperiti vulgi, ut omnes ſere mortales in templis coire, & nefariis libidinibus immiſceri, ac pudendis genitalibus ſacram facere, quod procreationis ſeminarium forent, nefas non putarent. Al. ab Alex. Gen. Dier. l. 6. c. 26.

(q) Spencer. ſupr. c. 17.

(r) Unde mos ille natus eſt, conjectu non eſt difficile, cum certum ſit pleraque Gentium ſacra ſpiritui impuro principia ſua debuiſſe. Spencer. ibid. c. 22.

(s) Spencer. ibid. l. 3. Diſſ. 3. c. 2. S. 1.

(t) Ἔρια πυῤῥὰ ϗ ἁλῶν χόνδρυς, ϗ δᾳδας, σκίλλαν τε ϗ θεῖον δεδίασι πρὸς τῶν γοήτων καταγοητευθέντας κατά τινας ἀκαθάρτους καθαρμούς. Clem. Strom. 7. p. m. 512.

lity and character of the Roman Empire (an Empire of the Heathen Religion;) for by the bloody War which this Empire manag'd againſt the Religion of Chriſtianity and on behalf of its Heathen Gods and Religion, it is manifeſt, that the Univerſe of Rationals is in a divided State, divided into two oppoſite Kingdoms, which are in a State of War; which two oppoſite Kingdoms can be no other but the Kingdom of God and of Satan, the Divine and the Diabolical Empire. And if there be two ſuch oppoſite Kingdoms, they are eaſily diſtinguiſh'd by their oppoſite Nature and Character, and by their ſymbolizing with God and with Satan, who are alſo of oppoſite Nature and Character. For in the Divine kind of Kingdom the holy and Divine Life reigneth: But Satan's Kingdom is the Empire of atheous Darkneſs, of Fraud and Falſhood, of Lyes and Fables, of Luciferian Pride, Ambition and Domination, of Worldlineſs and Wickedneſs, of Lewdneſs and Uncleanneſs, (complicated with a Mock-Sanctimony and Civil Virtue) of ſottiſh ſervile Superſtition, of Idolatry, Demonolatry and Sorcery, of deadly Malignity and barbarous Cruelty; and ſuch was the Empire of Rome Pagan (as it was an Empire of the Heathen Religion,) and it were Happy, if the Empire of Rome Pagano-Chriſtian was not an Image of that Pagan Empire, and did not Symbolize with Satan's Kingdom in the main of its Characters, as it too manifeſtly doth; ſo prodigiouſly have his Artifices prevail'd againſt Chriſtianity. Which no ſooner began to diſpread it ſelf in the World, but there were plain appearances of an inviſible and deadly inimical Power vigorouſly oppoſing it and endeavouring the ruin of it, partly by introducing monſtrous Hereſies (the great ſcandal and prejudice of Chriſtianity) and partly by raiſing tragical Perſecutions. For the ſhole of the Gnoſtick Hereſies in the Primitive times were ſo monſtrous, that they are not to be thought on without horrour and amazement, the wickedneſs both of their Principles and their Practices was portentous to the height of wonder and aſtoniſhment, they exceed all thought and imagination of Man; and therefore every Man that can think a wiſe thought, will think them of Diabolical Original. A like portentous, unimaginable and unſpeakable were the tragical Sufferings of the Primitive Chriſtians from the Heathens of the Roman Empire, which therefore muſt be deriv'd from the ſame Original, the ſame Author that inſtituted their bloody Spectacles of Gladiators, that were a Rite of Human Sacrifices (u) the Romans thereby intending to ſatiate their Deities with Human Blood. If their Deities were of this Nature, the Roman Empire muſt be look'd upon as (w) Dæmonarchia mundana, a mundane Demonarchy, the Regent Party whereof was the bloody truculent red Dragon (ſanguinolentum Numen) and from him the Chriſtians tragical Perſecutions muſt be deriv'd, as will further appear from ſome other Conſiderations.

(1.) The tragical Perſecutions of the Chriſtians were ſuch an immenſity of Evils, as muſt in all Reaſon be deriv'd from an inimical hurtful Potentate or evil Power of a Superiour Nature to Man, and conſequently from the evil One (the eldeſt of all evil Ones, the Ringleader of them, who is evil to the height of being ſo, the Author, Artificer, and Promoter of all Evil;) therefore ſuch a Power exiſteth in the World and preſided in the Roman Empire. No other Hypotheſis can Salve this otherwiſe unaccountable Phænomenon. And with this Hypotheſis a great number of the Pagan Theologers (thoſe that are Ditheiſts and thoſe that are no Ditheiſts) ſo far agree, they acknowledge in the Univerſe both a Principle of Good, a beneficent Power, and alſo a Principle of Evil, an evil Power, which they call Oromaſden & Arimanium, Oſirin & Typhonem, Jovem & Vejovem, θεὸν ϗ δαίμονα, God and Demon. The Chalday Oracles make a conſiderable approach to the Chriſtian Hypotheſis; (x) for the Chaldeans take Hades in various ſenſe and ſignification. They account Hades a God, who hath the Principality of the laſt and circumterraneous Lot or Portion.

(2.) The tragical Perſecutions of the Chriſtians were for Religion and meerly for their Religion; for although the Heathens of the Roman Empire (y) charg'd them with overturning the Commonwealth, yet that was only, becauſe they were Adverſaries to the old eſtabliſh'd Religion, and introduc'd a new Religion, which they ſuppos'd, to be (in the conſequence of it) an overturning the Commonwealth. They ſuffer'd for Religion and God-ſervice, for appropriating it to the true God and his Chriſt, and for denying it to the Heathen Polity of Gods; which ſheweth, that their Perſecutions were a mighty Conteſt between two oppoſite Imperial Powers, both claiming their Religion and God-ſervice. They ſuffer'd for the Religion of the One only true God diſcarding all the Heathen Gods (whence they got the Name of Atheiſts,) which provok'd the diſpleaſure of the Heathen Gods, and enrag'd them againſt the Chriſtians, as the Heathen Romans ſuppos'd. Whence a Chriſtian Apologiſt thus ſpeaketh of our Religion. (z) Is this that audacious and outragious wickedneſs, for which your heavenly Powers bend the Stings of their Anger and Indignation againſt us? For which your ſelves when you will exerciſe Cruelty, deſpoil us of our Goods, baniſh us, inflict upon us capital puniſhments, torture us, tear us (with Whips, Shells, the Ungula) torment us by Fire, and at laſt throw us to be torn in pieces by the wild Beaſts? If the Heathens Deities were enrag'd againſt the Chriſtians, their horrendous ſufferings neceſſarily iſſu'd from the rage and truculency of the ſupreme of the Heathen Roman Deities.

(3.) The tragical Perſecutions of the Chriſtians were for the Religion of the Son of God, who in his Doctrine reproacheth and ſtigmatizeth Satan at the higheſt rate imaginable, it breaths and ſpeaks forth the greateſt Enmity and Hoſtility againſt him poſſible or conceiveable, and deſcribeth him in the blackeſt Character (as horribly odious and pernicious,) that none may conſort with him, but all may abominate him, abandon and reſiſt him, and take heed of the ruinous Miſchiefs he is doing againſt them. At the firſt of his coming into the World he profeſs'd an open Hoſtility againſt Satan, entred the Liſts and fought a Battel with him (as it were) Hand to Hand, repell'd and vanquiſh'd his Temptations, expell'd him out of his Poſſeſſions, beat his Troops out of their Quarters, and trampled upon his Power. His deſign and buſineſs was againſt Satan as he is the Prince of this World, to oppoſe his Deſigns and Intereſt, to diſcover him (that he may be hated, forſaken and reſiſted,) to deſtroy his Works (the deadly criminal and penal Evils of Men,) to deliver Mankind from being under his Reign and Power (and therefore from being under the Reign of Sin and the Law,) to withdraw them from being the Subjects of his Kingdom, to take his Kingdom from him, to ſet up an oppoſite Kingdom, to diſſipate his heatheniſh darkneſs, to aboliſh his Idol-worſhip, to ruin (by degrees) his mundane Domination, and at the long run to burn him and his Adherents. Agreeably to his deſign and buſineſs Chriſt ingageth all his Religioniſts, to follow the Captain of their Salvation in an Hoſtility againſt Satan, to be his deadly Enemies at the higheſt rate imaginable, to manage an Holy War againſt him (Offenſive and Defenſive,) againſt his Temptations, Intereſts and Deſigns; and he promiſeth to Crown them, if they be faithful and victorious in this War. Chriſtianity therefore pretending to raiſe a deadly and deſtructive War againſt an adverſe Power, if we ſee ſuch a War rais'd againſt Chriſtianity, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that it was rais'd by this adverſe Power, which would not be behind hand with Chriſt and Chriſtians in acts of War and Hoſtility; that as Chriſt's deſign and buſineſs was againſt this adverſe Power, ſo his deſign and buſineſs was againſt Chriſt, to ruin utterly his Religion and Kingdom, which was the deſign of the Roman Emperours in perſecuting Chriſtianity, and ſeveral of them thought that they had accompliſh'd it. And conſidering that this War was at the moſt prodigious rate bellum internecinum, deadly, bloody and ſlaughtering, it is but reaſonable to believe that this adverſe Power which rais'd it, is of Character Abaddon, Apollyon, (a) our daily Antiochus (Epiphanes) ἀνθρωποκτόνος ἀπ᾽ ἀρχῆς ϗ μισόκαλος, a Man-ſlayer from the beginning and hater of that which is good.

(u) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 35.

(w) Mr. Mede on Apoc. 6. 12, 13, &c.

(x) Τὸν γὰρ ᾅδην πολλαχῶς καλοῦσι Χαλδαῖοι· θεόν τε γὰρ ἡγοῦνται τοῦτον, ϗ τῆς ἐσχάτης ϗ περιγείου λήξεως ἀρχηγόν. Niceph. Schol. in Syneſ. p. 383.

(y) Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 103.

(z) Hoccine eſt audax illud facinus & immane, propter quod maximè cælites aculeos in nos intendunt irarum atque indignationum ſuarum? Propter quod vos ipſi, cùm libido inceſſerit ſæva, exuitis nos bonis, exterminatis patriis ſedibus, irrogatis ſupplicia capitalia, torquetis, dilaceratis, exuritis, & ad extremum nos feris & belluarum laniatibus objectatis? Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 1 p. 14.

(4.) The tragical Perſecutions of the Chriſtians were an Inhumanity more than Human, Human Nature is ſo abhorrent from it, that it could not have been in Man unleſs actuated by a Diabolical Spirit: As the Fortitude and Patience of the Chriſtians was plainly Divine, and could not have been in Man unleſs animated by a Divine Spirit. For the Torments and Executions of the Chriſtians (Racks, Croſſes, Wheels, Grid-irons, red-hot Iron Chairs, Brazen Bulls, wild Beaſts and innumerable others) are not to be thought on without horror, Human Nature is abhorrent from inflicting them upon any ſave only real or ſuppos'd Malefactors of the higheſt Demerit: But to inflict them upon the Innocent and the Righteous, becauſe they are the Innocent and the Righteous, upon vaſt multitudes of them of all Ages, Sexes and Conditions (which was really the Caſe of the Roman Empire,) this muſt be thought an Inhumanity more than Human, ſuch a Prodigy of Wickedneſs as could not be in Man unleſs acted by a Diabolical Spirit. (l) This is (otherwiſe) unaccountable, that their Man-killing Trade is againſt thoſe that know not to do Evil. This Conteſt in reſpect of the Intereſt conteſted about was a Tranſcendental to Human Wars. For the Chriſtians Tribulations were their Temptations to Apoſtacy from their God and Saviour; they militated for their Soul-Intereſts; and therefore they had great Reaſon to apprehend, that their Tribulations iſſu'd from ſuch an evil Power, which is the Fountain of Temptations, and that they wreſtled not againſt Fleſh and Blood, but againſt Principalities, againſt Powers, againſt the Rulers of the darkneſs of this World. And this is the more credible, becauſe the Chriſtians Fortitude was plainly Divine-heroical, (c) and ſuch as both in reſpect of Kind and Degree, and in reſpect of the vaſt multitudes that exercis'd it (who were of all Ages, Sexes and Conditions) far tranſcended any Fortitude, that is to be found in meer Human Nature. They made this noble Challenge; (d) If God will have us combat again for Piety, let our Antagoniſts come, to whom we will ſay, I can do all things through him that ſtrengtheneth me. (e) Let the Ungula's dig us, the Croſſes hang us, the Fires be put to us, the Swords cut off our Throats, the Beaſts leap upon us, a Chriſtian is prepar'd for all torments. (f) They entertain'd and bare their Sufferings, not only without Regret and Trouble, but with Joy and Exultation, laid down their Bodies for Piety more readily than a Philoſopher would put off his Cloak, and through an inſpir'd Patience (as themſelves ſay) the fire could not extort a Sigh from them. This ſtrange ſublimity of Virtue (g) ſtumbled ſome of their Adverſaries, convinc'd others of their Innocency, ſatisfy'd others, that ſomething of God was in them; ſo that in this tragical Conteſt with the Pagan Empire that of the Apoſtle was viſible, greater is he that is in us, than he that is in the World.

XIII. The Sufferings of the Primitive Chriſtians may reaſonably be thought an Effect, not only of the Popular Pagans Vice and Folly, but of the Philoſophic Pagans Wiſdom and Virtue; for their truly great and generous Maxims of Virtue in their ſenſe and application lead to the Perſecution of the Chriſtian Church and Religion, and make it Virtue and Duty. Their moſt noble and generous Maxims of Virtue are touching the Societive Duty of Man, Duty to the Publick, to the Whole, to the Univerſe of Rationals. For they ſuppoſed, that every particular Man is a Member of the Publick and of the Whole conſiſting of Heathen Gods and Men, a part of that whole; and that as a part he is for the whole intirely (for himſelf only as a part of the whole) for its Being and Well-being, to conſtitute and conſerve it, and to be uſeful and ſubſervient to its Intereſt, according to that ſaying of Plato in his Tenth of Laws, μέρος μὴν ἕνεκα ὅλου, the part is for the whole. (h) So the Phyſician cutteth off morbid Parts of the Body ἐπὶ σωτηρίᾳ τοῦ ὅλου, for the ſafety and welfare of the whole. (i) God hath ſhewed Human Phyſicians, to cut ſome Parts, burn others, putrifie others, divide others for the conſervation of the whole. (k) Both Nature and Art contemneth the Parts for the Whole. Nature driveth out the Humours that annoy her from the principal into the extimous Parts (from the Heart, Brain, Liver, and the Belly, into the Feet, Hands and Skin)

(a) Gr. Naz. or. 22. p. 408. & or. 12. p. 199.

(b) Hoc inenarrabile eſt, quod fit adverſus eos, qui malefacere neſciunt. Lactant. l. 5. c. 9.

(c) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 2. p. 86.

(d) Ibid. l. 8. p. 424.

(e) Nos ungulæ fodiant, cruces ſuſpendant, ignes lambant, gladii guttura detruncent, beſtiæ inſiliant, paratus eſt ad omne ſupplicium Chriſtianus. Tertul. Apol. c. 30.

(f) Ibid. c. 2. & 50. Orig. ſupr. l. 7. p. 357. Min. Fel. p. 339.

(g) Tertull. ibid. c. 50. J. Mart. Apol. 1. p. 50. Lactant. l. 5. c. 13.

(h) M. Tyr. diſſ. 30.

(i) Τὰ μὲν κόψαι τῶν μερῶν, τὰ δὲ καῦσι, τὰ δὲ σήψαι, τὰ δὲ διελεῖν σωτηρίας ἕνεκα τοῦ ὅλου. Porphyr. ap. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 5. p. 155.

(k) Simplic. in Epict. c. 13, 34.

Skin) by Puſtula's and Tetters, and maketh, putrifying Apoſtems in the Parts διὰ τὴν τοῦ ὅλου σωτηρίαν, for the ſafety of the whole. The Medicinal Art imitating Nature putrifieth Apoſtems, and cutteth and burneth, and diſtendeth and cutteth off Parts διὰ τὸ σῶσαι τὸ ὅλον, for the ſaving the whole. (l) The Foot muſt ſometimes enter the Dirt, and tread on Thorns, and ſometimes be cut off ὑπὲρ τοῦ ὅλου, for the whole. So thou being a Man, the part of an whole, it is requiſite, that for that whole thou ſhouldeſt ſometimes be Sick, and ſometimes Navigate, and ſometimes be in Danger, and ſometimes in Want, and at ſometime Die. (m) The part ought not to complain of any of thoſe things that are done ὑπὲρ τοῦ ὅλου, for the whole. (n) Thoſe things that we call Evils and Corruptions, which are matter of Lamentation to us, thoſe the Artificer of the Univerſe calleth the Conſervation of the whole; for his care is for the whole: But the part muſt neceſſarily ſuffer for the whole. (o) He that would be happy, let him not be diſpleas'd at any thing, that may befall him, and let him wiſely conſider, that thoſe very things which ſeem to hurt him, appertain to the Conſervation of the Univerſe.

As particular Men (and leſſer Syſtems) muſt ſuffer for the whole: So they are deſign'd and oblig'd, faithfully to affect, take care of, and co-operate unto the weal of the whole (and of their Fellow-members and Fellow-citizens their near Kindred,) wherein their own Welfare is involv'd as a part in the whole. (p) A City or Body Politic conſiſteth of all parts co-operative, as the Body natural which conſiſteth of many parts, and to which many are needful (the Feet to carry it, the Hands to work, the Eyes to ſee, the Ears to hear,) is conſtituted and conſerved by the ſeveral parts contributing to the ſervice of the whole. The good of many (the publick and univerſal good) is the great good; the doing good to many is the great doing good; the vile and villainous ſelfiſhneſs is the great evil and the ſumm of all evil, therefore virtuous Princes (q) ſeek the publick and common utility, diſcard private advantage for the ſake of it, regarding the concerns of their Subjects as their own, as the Poet indoctrinateth a Prince, —— Conſule cunctis, non tibi. Or as Cato was minded

Non ſibi ſed toti genitum ſe credere Mundo.

So the Philoſophic Emperor conſidereth Mankind as his Fellow-members, Fellow-citizens, Fellow-commoners, join'd and link'd together into one Body, one City or Society, of the ſame Original, Nature and Kind, of near Cognation or Kindred, and therefore looketh upon himſelf as oblig'd (agreeably to the inſtincts and inclinations of Nature,) to bear them and do them kindneſs, to take care of them, and to the utmoſt of his power to promote the common Utility. (r) Becauſe I am of Kin to thoſe parts of the Univerſe, that are of the ſame kind, I will practiſe nothing unſocietive: But rather I will take care of thoſe that are Congenial and Cognate, and incline my whole Man to the common utility, and avoid the contrary. (t) Often ſay to thy ſelf, ὅτι μέλος εἰμὶ τοῦ ἐκ τῶν λογικῶν συστήματος, that I am a Member of the Syſtem of Rationals: ἐὰν δὲ μέρος εἶναι ἑαυτὸν λέγῃς, But if thou ſay, I am a (diſtinct) part of that Syſtem, thou do'ſt not yet love Men from the Heart, nor conſider thy ſelf as comprehended in the whole. As the parts are comprehended in the whole, ſo every particular Man's good and happineſs, or evils and calamities, are involv'd in the publick, nor can they have peace and ſafety but in the publick ſafety and peace. (u) Alteri vivas opportet, ſi vis tibi vivere, thou muſt live to others, if thou wilt live to thy ſelf. The Nature of the Rational Animal is ſo fram'd by Jupiter, (w) that he cannot obtain any of his own Goods, unleſs he contributeth to the publick utility. (x) That which is not good for the Bee-hive, cannot be good for the Bee. Τοῦ ὅλου οὐ καλῶς ἔχοντος, ἀδύνατόν ἐστι τὸ μέρος εὖ ἔχειν. If the whole be not well (ſaith Plato in his Charmides,) it is impoſſible, that the part ſhould be ſo. Self-intereſt therefore obligeth all Men, to affect and endeavour the Common-weal (he that will not contribute to the Safety and Protection of others, cannot reaſonably expect that they ſhould contribute to his; or that any body ſhould care for him, who careth for no body; let him fend for himſelf and ſtand upon his own Legs;) and for this reaſon Mankind live in Society, that they might be helpful and uſeful, auxiliary and beneficent to one another, that every one might contribute and co-operate to the good of every one (ut eadem ſit utilitas unius cujuſque & univerſorum, Cic.) as the Hands, Eyes and Feet are made to co-operate together for their mutual benefit, as the rows of the upper and lower Teeth are made for one common Operation, ſo all are made and deſign'd (adapted alſo and oblig'd) for one common operation, to conſpire together for the common Welfare. And he that is not thus affected, is not naturally affected (as to the beſt of Nature,) not well nor juſtly affected, not charitatively, nor ſocietively affected, not honourably, not humanly affected, ἀπώλεσε τὸν ἄνθρωπον, he hath loſt the Man, as the Philoſophers ſuppoſe.

But although theſe Notices and Maxims of theirs touching Virtue and Duty to the whole are all of them hugely ſolid and truly generous, if apply'd and determin'd to a genuine and legitimate Whole or Univerſe, yet in their Paganical application and determination of them to their Whole, Univerſe or Catholick Syſtem (conſiſting of Heathen Gods and Men) they are horribly falſe and wicked, and manifeſtly lead them to perſecute the Chriſtian Church and Religion. For the Chriſtians were a People ſeparated or broken off from their Whole or Univerſe, and conſequently were ſuch as M. Antoninus calleth Apoſtems of the World. It was but to their own mundane Tribe therefore that the Popular and Philoſophic Pagans were charitatively and ſocietively affected (the World will love its owns) the Chriſtians that were Aliens, and who profeſs'd, that Jeruſalem was their Country, (y) they treated as thoſe that were no longer Men. The Philoſophers thought themſelves oblig'd στοχάζεσθαι τῶν ὁμογενῶν, to have regard for Rationals, that were Congenial and Cognate to them; and accordingly they ſuppos'd themſelves oblig'd, to take care of their Gods and Demons; for theſe they look'd upon as Congenial and Cognate. But Chriſt and Chriſtians erected and conſtituted a Whole or Univerſe oppoſite and deſtructive to their Whole Univerſe or Catholick Syſtem, which it

(l) Epict. diſſ. l. 2. c. 5.

(m) M. Ant. l. 9. S. 39. Gat. not. p. 195.

(n) M. Tyr. diſſ. 25.

(o) Nihil indignetur ſibi accidere, ſciatque illa ipſa quibus lædi videtur, ad conſervationem Univerſi pertinere. Sen. Ep. 74. M. Ant. l. 10. S. 7. Simplic. in Epict. c. 78.

(p) Πόλις δέ ἐστι πρᾶγμα ἀνακεκραμένον ἐκ πάντων συνεργούντων, καθάπερ ἡ τοῦ σώματος χρεία, πολυμερὴς τε οὖσα καὶ πολυδεὴς σώζεται τῇ συντελείᾳ τῶν μερῶν πρὸς τὴν ὑπηρεσίαν τοῦ ὅλου. M. Tyr. diſſ. 5. v. Epict. diſſ. l. 2. c. 10.

(q) Gat. ſupr. p. 31, 123.

(r) Καθόσον δὲ ἔχω πως οἰκείως πρὸς τὰ ὁμογενῆ μέρη, οὐδὲν πράξω ἀκοινώνητον· Μᾶλλον δὲ στοχάσομαι τῶν ὁμογενῶν, καὶ πρὸς τὸ κοινῇ συμφέρον πᾶσαν ὁρμὴν ἐμαυτοῦ ἄξω, καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐναντίου ἀπάξω. M. Ant. l. 10. c. 6.

(t) Idem l. 7. S. 13.

(u) Gat. ſupr. p. 387, 354.

(w) Ἵνα μηδενὸς τῶν ἰδίων ἀγαθῶν δύνηται τυγχάνειν, εἰ μή τι εἰς τὸ κοινὸν ὠφέλιμον προσφέρηται. Epict. diſſ. l. 1. c. 19.

(x) M. Ant. l 6. S. 54.

(y) Euſeb. H. E. l. 8. c. 10. & de Mart. Palæſt. c. 11.

if they look'd upon themſelves, oblig'd to take care of and uphold, they muſt neceſſarily think themſelves oblig'd to deſtroy Chriſtianity. Every Man muſt promote the Intereſt of their Mundane Demonarchy, and with Celſus, Zoſimus, Julian and the reſt of their Aſſociates (z) muſt ſtrenuouſly endeavour to maintain the old Religion of their Anceſtors, ſuccour the ruinous Empire of the Gods (which Chriſtianity came to demoliſh) and to reſtore it to its Grandeur and Magnificence. The Hebrew Doctors have the ſame Notices and Maxims with the Philoſophic Pagans touching Virtue and Duty to the Publick and to the Whole, and are alike perſecutive of Chriſtianity. (a) A particular Man is in the whole Congregation, as one Member is in the whole Body. If the Arm ſhould be ſparing of its Blood, when there is a neceſſity of Phlebotomy, this would be an hurt to the Body and to the Arm it ſelf. A particular Man therefore muſt be ready, to bear Dolours unto Death for the welfare of the whole. And the principal thing that a particular Man ought to have in his Eye, is, that a Part of the Whole muſt contribute thereto, and not withdraw from it.

(z) V. Mr. Mede on Apoc. 6, 12, 13, &c.

(a) Coſin 183, 184. Ed. Baſ.

BOOK III.

An Idea of God and of his Original Creation and Kingdom.

CHAP. I.

1. The Idea of God of the contracted Form with a recapitulation of the foregoing Proofs of it. 2. Proofs of it from the Hebrew Names of God and from the Hebrew Tongue. 3. Proofs of it from the Senſe of the Fathers. 4. Proofs of it from their Senſe touching the Perſons of the Godhead. 5. Proofs of it from the Nature of Religion 6. Proofs of it from the Pagans Theology and Religion. 7. Proofs of it from the Religion of Jews and Chriſtians: 8. A principal Proof of it, that this Name God belongs to Nobility-Learning.

I. OUR Account of the Kingdom of Darkneſs hath this great good in it, The firſt Notice or Idea of God in Religion (which is his true Idea of the contracted Form) is repreſented in it and enlightned by it. For this Name God (in the ſtrictly religious Senſe) ſignifieth,

> The Imperial Eſtate, the Sovereignty, the Kingdom-eſtate, the Lord, the King, the Potentate Divine.
>
> Whereby we mean
>
> The Imperial Eſtate (the Lord, the King, the Potentate) Creature-tranſcendent,
>
> The Honour and Eſtate of Nobilitation Creature-tranſcendent,
>
> The Lord of the Univerſe (that ſtands againſt and is over the Univerſe of Creatures)
>
> So as to be the God-kind of Sovereignty.

For we have ſhew'd from our Saviour's Apotheoſis (his being Deify'd in Eſtate and Condition,) that Deity or Godhead of Eſtate conſiſteth in having the Place, Eſtate and Dignity of Lord of all (the Kingdom-eſtate of the Supreme Potentate) in being the King of Kings and Lord of Lords, over all bleſſed for ever, in having all Power in Heaven and Earth and having all things under his Feet, in being the Head of all Principality and Power, and being far above all Principality, and Power, and Might, and Dominion, and every Name that is named (all created Potentacy) in this World and the World to come, in having a Name (Potentacy) which is above every Name, Angels, Authorities and Powers being ſervient and ſubject thereto, in reigning and being rais'd higher than the Heavens, the utmoſt height of created Nature, Heb. 7. 26. The God-head of Eſtate therefore (which God is as his Eſtate) is this Sovereignty, The Sovereignty or Kingdom-eſtate, Creature-tranſcendent, which we have prov'd and illuſtrated by comparing it with the Sovereignty or Kingdom-eſtate of Secular Sovereigns; for the Godhead is ſubſtantially, fully and abſolutely what their Kingdom-eſtate is in an umbratile and limited Senſe, The magnificent and reigning, un-abject and un-ſubject Eſtate, The Regial and Imperial Celſitude of Condition, The height of Honour and Nobilitation of Eſtate, The fulleſt height of Glory, Proſperity, Felicity and Beatitude, The height of Rule and Government, of Power and Puiſſance, of Liberties, Immunities and Priviledges, An Eſtate of Sacredneſs, of Monarchy or ſingularity of Rule. And as the Kingdom-eſtate of Secular Sovereigns is in a limited Senſe, the ſubject-tranſcendent Eſtate, they are ſubject-tranſcendent in all reſpects, ſo far as they are capable (in their Titles, Rights and Prerogatives, Powers, Enſigns of Dignity, Reſpects of Honour and Service, and ſuch more:) So Godhead of Eſtate is abſolutely the Subject-tranſcendent and therefore the Creature-tranſcendent Eſtate, and is in all reſpects Creature-tranſcendent. The Doxologies in Scripture (which are Aſcriptions of Divinity and Godhead) manifeſtly ſignifie a Creature-tranſcendent Sovereignty or Imperial Eſtate, and without conſidering this Sovereignty they are unintelligible; for what can be thought of that Doxology, which concludeth our Lord's Prayer, Thine is the Kingdom, the Power and the Glory, but that it is an Aſcription of the Creature-tranſcendent Kingdom-eſtate and the Glory of the Kingdom? Dan. 11. 20. The other uſual Doxologies in Scripture run in the ſame Stile and are of the ſame Importance; for they are Aſcriptions and Attributions of the Kingdom over all (the Church and the World) the Majeſty, the Glory, the Greatneſs, and the Power, the Might and Dominion, of the Throne and of Reigning, of Creature-tranſcendence and of God-eminence. Thou art exalted far above all Gods, Pſal. 97. 9. We have ſhew'd alſo, that God is the Name of the Supreme Potentacy, that his Potentacy, Sovereignty and Domination is the ſame thing with his Divinity or Godhead (of Eſtate and Condition,) that God's People profeſs themſelves the Religioniſts ſummi Regis, Principis, Imperatoris, of the Supreme King, Prince, Emperour (ſuch Titles and Attributes of God expreſſive of his Nobilitation and Perfection of Eſtate and Condition uſually occurr in Scripture, as the great King, the King Eternal, the bleſſed and only Potentate,) and ſome of them expreſly call the Divinity τὸ βασιλικὸν ἀξίωμα, the Regial Dignity. Agreeably whereunto we have argu'd, that the Attributes of Goodneſs inherent and ſhining in the Deity (Liberality, Clemency, Mercy and ſuch more) ought to be conſider'd as ſo many glorious Princely Virtues, without which God could not be a legitimate kind of Potentate.

The Names of God uſual in Scripture and among the Eaſtern People ſpeak his Idea. Such as The Power, The moſt High, παντοκράτωρ, Omniimperial, The Lord of Heaven, The Lord of Heaven and Earth, The Lord of Hoſts, which the Jews diſtinguiſh into צבאות מעלה the upper Hoſts viſible and inviſible and צבאות מתה the inferiour Hoſts. Agreeably to which Name the Alexandrian Cyril intituleth God, (b) The King and Legiſlator of the Supernal Spirits, and of Men on Earth likewiſe, commanding over the Elements, and as it pleaſeth him, turning the nature of things. The moſt uſual Name of God is Adonai the Lord, the ſame with the Greek κύριος, by which the Septuagint render the Hebrew יהוה Jehovah. The Lexicographers ſay of this Name (Adonai) that God is ſo called (c) becauſe he is ארון העולם Lord of the World, ſo the words which in Gen. 21. 33. we render the Everlaſting God, (d) Maimonides rendreth Deus Mundi. The Orientals are obſerv'd, to call God by ſuch Names, as denote and ſignifie univerſal and abſolute Domination, ſuch as the Chaldee רבון עלמא Lord of the World, and the Syriack אחיר כל All-imperial. All ſuch Names plainly denote and ſignifie The Creature-tranſcendent Lord, King or Potentate; and if theſe other Names plainly denote this Idea of him, the Name God muſt neceſſarily denote and ſignifie the ſame Idea; for S. Chryſoſtom obſerveth and proveth, (e) that theſe Names God and the Lord are promiſcuouſly us'd, and that the Name God doth not at all tranſcend the Name Lord. From S. Chryſoſtom's obſervation touching the Equivalence of theſe two Names we may infer alſo, that the Name God is a Divine Imperial Perſonal Name; for this Name the Lord is manifeſtly ſo. Agreeably whereunto we have before obſerv'd, that the Imperial Potentates of this World are reſemblances of God, that they are prone, to conceit themſelves Gods, and to aſſume to themſelves the Name of God, as it is a Divine (Creature-tranſcendent) Imperial-perſonal Name (in which Senſe it is the incommunicable Name, Wiſd. 14. 21.) and that Noſtra Divinitas, Noſtrum Numen in the Stile of the Roman Emperours ſignifieth our Divine Potentacy. We have alſo obſerv'd, that theſe Names God, the Lord, the King, are uſually conjoyn'd in Scripture and by Interpreters as exegetical of one another, and identical in ſignification, which is an Indication, that this Name God ſignifieth the Creature-tranſcendent Potentate as ſuch: So to be a God unto Pharaoh, Exod. 7.1. is to be as a God in the Buſineſs of Pharaoh, an high and mighty Potentate, (whence the Chaldee ſubſtituteth (f) רב a Prince, and the Gloſs of Jarchy expoundeth it by exerciſing Domination over him,) having Pharaoh under his miraculous Power, and being one, on whom he muſt depend in the managery of his Affairs, and to whom he muſt have recourſe and become a Suppliant. To have ſuch a Potentacy over him, is a Metaphorical or Analogical Godhead of Eſtate: So the Imperial Eſtate of Secular Kings is a metaphorical or analogical Godhead of Eſtate, which conſtituteth and denominateth them (analogically) Gods. So the Lord of all, or (as the Fathers uſually ſpeak) παμβασιλεύς, the King of all, ὁ ἐπὶ πᾶσι θεός, God over all, ὁ τῶν ὅλων θεός, the God of the Univerſe, is properly God by that Creature-tranſcendent Potentacy, which is Godhead of Eſtate. The Godhead of Eſtate is the Creature-tranſcendent Potentacy, and the Creature-tranſcendent Potentacy is the Godhead of Eſtate; for it is τὸ ἀξίωμα τῆς θείας ὑπεροχῆς, the Dignity of the Divine Tranſcendence.

II. The Name God in Hebrew is ſometimes of a large Acceptation (it is not always לשון קרש of a ſtrictly Religious Acceptation, as the Hebrew Grammarians teach;) but the Signification of it in the ſtrictly Religious Acceptation may be underſtood from the Signification of it in the large Acceptation; in which Acceptation the high Ones above Men are call'd Gods and the Gods. And theſe high Ones above Men that are ſo called, are ſaid to be (g) Principes ſive Potentes, Princes or Potentates, Angels, Judges or Rulers, Secular Sovereigns. Whether theſe be properly and primarily called Elohim (Gods) and the Name is from them tranſlated to Angels and to the Creator (as Maimonides and Aben Ezra think, whom Mercerus followeth;) or the Name Elohim primarily and properly ſignifieth God (as Abarbinel diſputeth) is not much material, ſeeing theſe Hebrew Names El, Eloah, Elohim (which anſwer to the Name God) both in their large and ſtrict Acceptation are of this one ſignification, they denote a Ruling Power, Potentate, or Potentates, the High Ones above Men. Of the Name Elohim Grotius obſerveth, (h) Whereſoever Elohim occurreth in the Hebrew Text, Empire is ſignify'd. This Name God therefore is a Name of Empire, Lordſhip and Domination, and is the ſame with this Name Divine (or Creature-tranſcendent) Lord. A Learned Interpreter of our own ſaith, (i) That El is the Title God, is ſufficiently known, taken from his Supreme Power, which he hath over all the World. The word Elohim (ſaith he) is by the Chaldee rendred Judges, and by the Syriack Kings. Vatablus noteth, (k) that ſome of the Hebrews ſay, that God is called Elohim, quòd ſit Dominus & Judex omnium, becauſe he is Lord and Judge of all. But the Senſe of the Hebrews is beſt underſtood from theſe Sayings of R. Salomon, (l) The Name Elohim every where ſignifieth a Judge. Non eſt Elohim niſi Judex, there is no Elohim but a Judge. So R. David ſaith, Omne Elohim ſignificationem habet Judicis, Elohim always ſignifieth a Judge. Theſe Sayings imply, that Elohim muſt be diſtinguiſh'd as an ancient Jew diſtinguiſheth them, and that there is no fault in ſaying with Maimonides, that God is called Elohim in a Senſe

(b) Τῶν ἄνω πνευμάτων βασιλέα ϗ νομοθέτην, ϗ τῶν ἐπὶ γῆς ὁμοίως, ϗ δεσπόζοντα τῶν στοιχείων, ϗ πρὸς τὸ αὐτῷ δοκοῦν μετακλίνοντα τῶν ὄντων τὴν φύσιν. Com. in Amos T. 3. p. 300.

(c) Schindler in voce ארון Hotting. Diſſ. de nom. Dei, p. 299.

( ) Mor. Nev. par. 3. c.29. & *par.*2.c.30.

(e) In 1 Cor. λογ. κ. *vid. Petav. in Trin. l.*3. c.1. *S.*12.

(f) Selden. de synedr. l. 1. c. 16. p. 655.

(g) *Druſ. de voce Elohim. Hotting. Hexaem. p.*20.

(h) Ubicunque eſt אלהים in Hebræo, ſignificatur imperium. Expl. Decal. ad Exod. 20. 2.

(i) Dr. Ham. on Pſal. 82. not. a, b.

(k) In Gen. 1. 1.

(l) Druſ. ſupr.

of Eminence: An ancient Jew ſaith, Elohim eſt Epitheton Dominatoris aut Judicis: & talis eſt vel univerſalis, dominium habens in mundum univerſum; vel particularis, & Judex inter homines; Elohim is an Epithet or Appellative of a Dominator or Judge; and ſuch an one is either the Univerſal, having dominion over all the World; or Particular, as a Judge amongſt Men. Maimonides ſaith of God; (m) He is the God of Gods, that is, the God of Angels, and Lord of Lords, that is, the Lord of the Spheres and of the Stars, which are Lords of all other Bodies.

The Name God is manifeſtly a Name of Eminence and Highneſs, which Highneſs and Eminence we are to underſtand in ſuch Senſe, as when we ſpeak of High Ones above Men; therefore this Name God denoteth and ſignifieth Potentacy and Domination. For it is ſo manifeſtly a Name of Eminence and Highneſs, that it is the Cuſtom of the Hebrews (as all Hebrew Grammarians teach) to expreſs the Superlative Degree by the Name of God; as the Cedars of God (the higheſt Cedars,) Lions of God, trembling of God, ſopor Domini (i. e. maximus) Civitas magna Deo, which denoteth a very great City. So things ſuperlative, ſublime and tranſcendent are uſually ſtiled Divine (θεῖα ϗ τιμιώτατα) and perſons of Highneſs and Eminence are called in Homer θεοειδεῖς, θεοείκελοι, ἰσόθεοι, Deiform, they are as Gods amongſt Men (Plato is called by Cicero, Deus noſter Plato,) whence Homer ſaith Odyſſ. θ.

Ἐρχόμενον ἀνὰ ἄστυ θεὸν ὡς εἰσορόωσιν.
One of theſe Men is look'd upon as a God.

The Phœnicians are ſaid (n) to have called God Halonium: So in Plautus's Pœnulus the Gods and Goddeſſes are called עליונים ועליונות which Names denote their Highneſſes. The Pagans had ſuch an apprehenſion of the Highneſs of their Deities, that they thought it requiſite upon the account of Congruity, to perform their Sacra in high places (which are frequently condemn'd in Scripture becauſe of their Idolatry, as is alſo another Rite of theirs, the eating of the Sacrifices upon the Mountains,) which high places were the tops of Mountains furniſh'd with Altars and other Requiſites for performing their Sacra. (o) But the Perſians (ſaith Strabo) erect neither Altars nor Statues, yet ſacrifice in an high place. They ſacrifice to Jupiter (ſaith Herodotus) ἐπὶ τὰ ὑψηλότατα τῶν ὀρέων ἀναβαίνοντες, aſcending the higheſt Mountains. The tops of Mountains were to them inſtead of Altars, and from thoſe במות high places, the Greek word βωμοὶ (Altars) is commonly deriv'd. Upon the account of Congruity alſo (p) the Heathen erected very high Altars to their Dii ſuperi, ſuch as they plac'd in Heaven, and look'd upon as Supernal Potentates; and S. Hierom noteth of them, (q) omne quod ſupra ſe eſt, Deos putant, all that is above them they account Gods. They had a Notion of God's Eminence, and therefore were prone, to deifie every thing that was ſublime and eminent, as Acoſta ſaith of the Americans, that they were wont to venerate ipſos montes & quicquid communem naturæ ordinem egreditur, the Mountains themſelves and whatever is eminent beyond the common rank of Nature. Ὕψιστος, moſt High, was one of the Attributes of the Supreme God amongſt the Pagans, and Simplicius preſcribeth this method of inveſtigating the true Idea of God, (r) not to ſtop in our Abſtractions and Aſcenſions, ἕως ἂν εἰς τὰς ἀκροτάτας ἐννοίας ἔλθωμεν, till we come to the top and the ſublimeſt thing conceivable.

III. S. Auſtin obſerveth, that all Men who have any thoughts of God (although very remote,) think him to be of Summity and Supremacy; (s) their thought reacheth at ſomething, than which there is nothing better and more ſublime. If we ask of Tertullian an Idea or definitive Notion of God, his Anſwer is, (t) So far as Man can define touching the Deity, I make a definition of it, which the Conſcience of all Men will acknowledge, God is the Supreme Great. (u) That which is God, muſt neceſſarily be of Summity or Supremacy, ſaith an ancient Writer, ſuppos'd to be Novatianus. And this is that which is call'd by Arnobius (w) Vocaminis hujus eminentia, the Eminence which this Name God importeth. The common Notice therefore and the firſt Notice that Mankind have of God (according to theſe ancient Writers) is the higheſt Eminence; which Notice or Idea of God is not rightly underſtood, unleſs we ſuppoſe it to be the ſame with the Supreme Potentate, according to that of S. Ambroſe, (x) God and Lord the Name of Magnificence is a Name of Potentacy. The ſame Father's Senſe the Commentaries in his Works that bear his Name, ſpeak, when they thus expound the Name above every Name given to our Saviour, which is the Supreme Potentacy; (y) certè nomen quod ſuper omne nomen eſt, Dei nomen eſt; certainly the Name which is above every Name, is the Name of God. The Name of God is the Supreme Potentacy; whence this is Clemens's definitive Notion of God. (z) To me it is ſufficient to ſay, that God is the Lord of all. And this according to a Chriſtian Apologiſt is our innate Idea of God. (a) Is there any of Mankind, who did not enter upon the firſt Day of his Nativity with a Notion of that Prince? Who hath it not innate in him, affix'd to him, yea in a manner impreſs'd upon him in the Womb of his Mother? Who hath it not implanted in him, that there is a King and Lord the Moderator of all things? If the mute Animals had the uſe of Speech, if the Trees, Clods, Stones were animated and could ſpeak, having Nature for their Guide and School-miſtreſs, and not having corrupted their Simplicity, or the Faith that accompanieth it, would they not underſtand, that God is, and proclaim, that the Lord of all things alone exiſteth? When the ancient Theologers of the Church contemplate the Fabrick of the World and of Man, the Order, Harmony and uſe of things, to prove the Exiſtence of God againſt Atheiſm, they expreſs this firſt Notice or Idea of God (which implieth and involveth in it the Nobilitation of the Creator) intituling him, (b) The Lord of the Creation and Maker of all that ſubſiſteth, a Lord that combin'd things together,

whom

(m) Ipſe eſt Elohe haelohim, Deus Deorum, h. e. Deus Angelorum, & Dominus Dominorum, h. e. Dominus Sphærarum & Stellarum, quæ ſunt domini omnium aliorum corporum. Mor. Nev. par 2. c. 6.

(n) Huet. Dem. Ev. prop. 7. S. 14. p. 516. ed. 2.

(o) Dion. Voſſ. in Maimon. de Idol. c. 1. S. 2. Spenccr. de Leg. Hebr. l. 1. c. 8. S. 1. & l. 2. c. 11. S. 2.

(p) Ibid. l. 2. c. 7. S. 1.

(q) Com. in Dan. c. 2.

(r) In Epict. c. 38. p. 207.

(s) Ut aliquid quo nihil melius ſit atque ſublimius illa cogitatio conetur attingere. De Doctr. Chriſt. l. 1. c. 7.

(t) Quantum humana conditio de Deo definire poteſt, id definio, quod & omnium conſcientia agnoſcet, Deum ſummum eſſe magnum. C. Marcion. l. 1. c. 3.

(u) Quod Deus eſt, ſummum ſit neceſſe eſt. Novatian. de Trin. c. 4.

(w) Adv. Gent. l. 7. p. 251.

(x) Deus & Dominus nomen magnificentiæ, nomen eſt poteſtatis. De Fid. ad Grat. l. 1. c. 1.

(y) S. Ambr. com. in Phil. 2.

(z) Καίμοι ἀπόχρη [illegible] θεὸν εἶναι τὸν κύριον πάντων. Strom. 6. p. m. 446.

(a) Quiſquámne eſt hominum qui non cum iſtius principis notione diem primæ nativitatis intraverit? cui non eſt ingenitum, non affixum, imò ipſis penè in genitalibus matris non impreſſum, non inſitum, eſſe Regem ac Dominum, cunctorum quæcunque ſunt moderatorem? Ipſa denique hiſcere ſi animantia muta potuiſſent, ſi in linguarum noſtrarum facilitatem ſolvi: imò ſi arbores, glebæ, ſaxa, ſenſu animata vitali vocis ſonitum quirent & verborum articulos integrare, ita non duce natura, & magiſtra, non incorrupta ſimplicitatis fide, & intelligerent eſſe Deum, & cunctorum Dominum ſolum eſſe clamarent? Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 1. p. 18, 19.

(b) Τὸν τ̃ κύριον ϗ πάσης ὑποστάσεως δημιουργὸν, τ̃ συνδήσαντα κύριον, ᾧ ϗ αὐτὰ τὰ στοιχεῖα, ὥσπερ δοῦλα διαπίπτει whom the Elements obey as Servants their Lord, the Ruler of the Creation, the Lord of theſe things, and Prince, and Moderator, and King. In their Diſputes for the Unity of the Godhead againſt Polytheiſm they alſo expreſs this firſt Notice or Idea of God. (c) Unum Dominum communis natura teſtatur, common Nature (ſaith S. Auſtin) teſtifieth, that there is but one Lord, becauſe there is but one World. If there had been many τῆς κτίσεως ἄρχοντες, Princes or Rulers of the Creation (ſaith Athanaſius) there could not have been kept ſuch an Order of the Univerſe as we ſee. Several of the Fathers ſuppoſe, that Man's being the Image of God conſiſteth ἐν τῷ ἀρχικῷ, in his being dominant and imperial (in having Empire and Denomination as a Prince in this Creation;) agreeably whereto Nemeſius calleth God ἐξουσίαν ϗ φύσιν ἐξουσιαστικὴν, Imperial Authority, and the Nature Imperial-authoritative.

IV. But the ancient Writers moſt clearly expreſs our Idea of God (the firſt part of it) in their Diſcourſes of Idolatry and of the Divinity of our Saviour and the Holy Spirit. (d) I underſtand (ſaith Gr. Naz.) two higheſt differences of Beings, Domination and Servientneſs. The one is call'd God, the other is with us and is call'd Creature. So S. Baſil ſaith; (e) There being two things, the Creature and the Deity, and it belonging to the Creature to be of ſervient and obedient Condition, but to the Deity, to have Rule and Domination: He that taketh away from the Son the Dignity of Domination, and throweth him down into the lowneſs of Servientneſs, doth he not thereby manifeſtly rank him with the Univerſality of the Creature? (f) The nature of created things is ſaid to be beneath (ſaith S. Cyril) as being ſubject and neceſſarily ſervient to God calling it to exiſtence; but the Divine and Ineffable Dominant Nature is ſaid to be above, as having all created things under its Feet, and ſubject to the Yoke of its Authority. (g) The Supreme Nature is beyond all viſible and inviſible Creatures; and (h) ὁ ὑπὲρ πᾶσαν τὴν κτίσιν, he that tranſcendeth the Univerſe of Creature, is this Father's periphraſis of God. (i) We ſee God and Creature (ſaith he) and nothing beſides theſe; for what is ſhort of being God is a Creature, or a thing that is made, and what is exempt from being a Creature, is within the Boundaries of the Godhead. Or as this Father ſometimes ſpeaketh, (k) it tranſcendeth the meaſure of things ſervient, ſo as to be within the Boundaries of the Dominant Eſſence, which is called by him (l) κύριος ϗ θεὸς, Lord and God, and is oppos'd to τὰ δοῦλά τε καὶ ποιήματα, the Creatures that are of ſervient condition. The Name God therefore ſignifieth the Lord and Potentate tranſcendent to Creature (whoſe Notion implieth much of Vileneſs and Imperfection) and the Lord of all Creatures, as in Iſidore Peluſiota. (m) How doſt thou teach, that the Holy Spirit is a thing made or created, or of ſervient Nature, and not of the Lordly and Creative and Regal Eſſence? for if it is of the Servient Condition, let it not be reckon'd with the Lord. (n) Whatever exiſteth (ſaith the Expoſition of Faith in J. Mart. Works) is either created or uncreated Nature. That which is uncreated, is dominant and free from all Neceſſity; but that which is created, is of Servient Condition, and under the command of its Lord. Thus the Godhead ſtandeth againſt the Univerſe of Creatures, thus God and Creature are rightly contradivided and confronted. The one Name denoteth τῆς δεσποτείας τὸ ἀξίωμα, the Dignity of Lord, King or Potentate, not τῆς δουλείας τὸ ταπεινὸν, the lowneſs of the Servient Condition: The other Name denoteth τῆς δουλείας τὸ ταπεινὸν, the lowneſs of the Servient Condition, not τῆς δεσποτείας τὸ ἀξίωμα, the Dignity of Lord, King or Potentate. Of the Beings call'd by theſe Names one muſt be nothing leſs than Tranſcendence above the lowneſs of the Servient Condition, not Creature in any reſpect: The other muſt be nothing at all of that Tranſcendence (nothing more than the lowneſs of the Servient Condition) not God in any reſpect. By Idolatry (the Sin of Idol-making) they are made God in ſome reſpect; for (o) Idololatria Dei honorificentiam uſurpat & vindicat creaturæ, Idolatry unrightfully taketh what is properly honorificent to God, and aſſerteth (or giveth) it to the Creature. Idols are therefore made Gods, becauſe ſome of God's honorificent Properties or Peculiarities are given to the Creatures, whereby they are made the Creature-tranſcendents or Gods. So God is God by his Creature-tranſcendence, and his Name denoteth and ſignifieth it. It denoteth τῆς δεσποτείας τὸ ἀξίωμα, the Dignity of Lord, King or Potentate over the Univerſe of Creature, and therefore denoteth the Creature-tranſcendent Lord, King and Potentate.

Every Supreme Lord, King or Potentate is neceſſarily a Sovereignty or Imperial Eſtate; if therefore God is notic'd to us as the Lord, King or Potentate Creature-tranſcendent, he muſt neceſſarily be notic'd to us as (that Sovereignty) the Sovereignty or Kingdom-eſtate Creature-tranſcendent. To call God the Sovereignty which is over all, is to call him by the ſame Name that Tertullian doth, (p) ſumma majeſtas, the Supreme Imperial Majeſty. His Name being a Divine (Creature-tranſcendent) Imperial-perſonal Name, himſelf being of Divine Imperial Eſtate and of Divine Imperial Rank and Quality (as King, Emperour, Sovereign Lord or Humane Imperial Perſonal Names,) he ought to be notic'd as Men are, that are of Imperial Eſtate, who are commonly called (q) The great Eſtates, the great Governments, and ſome of them are call'd by the Name of that Sovereignty which they are; for by the Papacy we underſtand that Sovereignty (real and perſonal) which the Pope is: So by the Deity, the Divinity or Godhead muſt neceſſarily be underſtood that Sovereignty of Eſtate which God is and which is Godhead of Eſtate. And as by this Name the Papacy we underſtand both the real Sovereignty of Eſtate and the Perſonal Nature or Eſſence which is inveſted with it (and which are ſeparable in Humane Sovereignties:) So the Deity ταχθέντα, εἴκει ϗ πείθεται, τὸν κτίσεως ἄρχοντα, τὸν τούτων δεσπότην ϗ ἄρχοντα, ϗ κοσμήτορα, ϗ βασιλέα. S. Athan. c. Gent. p. 31, 32, &c. Comm.

(c) Petav. T. 1. l. 1. c. 3, 4. & T. 3. l. 2. c. 3. & c. 4. S. 5.

(d) Δύο διαφορὰς ἐν τοῖς οὖσι γινώσκω, τὰς ἀνωτάτω, δεσποτείαν τε ϗ δουλείαν.——καλεῖται δὲ ἡ μὲν θεός, ἡ δὲ μεθ' ἡμῶν τε ἐστὶ ϗ καλεῖται κτίσις. Gr. Naz. or. 24. p. 428.

(e) Δύο γὰρ ὄντων πραγμάτων, κτίσεως τε ϗ θεότητος· ϗ τῆς μὲν κτίσεως ἐν δουλείᾳ ϗ ὑπακοῇ τεταγμένης, ἀρχικῆς δὲ οὔσης ϗ δεσποτικῆς τῆς θεότητος, ὁ ἀφαιρούμενος τῆς δεσποτείας τὸ ἀξίωμα, ϗ εἰς τὸ τῆς δουλείας ταπεινὸν καταβάλλων, οὐχὶ δῆλός ἐστι ϗ διὰ τοῦτο συστοιχοῦντα αὐτὸν τῇ πάσῃ κτίσει δεικνύς; S. Baſil. c. Eunom. l. 2. p. 73.

(f) Κάτω μὲν γὰρ τὴν τῶν γενητῶν φύσιν εἶναι φησιν, ὡς ὑποκειμένην, ϗ ὡς ἐξ ἀνάγκης δουλεύουσαν τῷ πρὸς τὸ εἶναι καλοῦντι θεῷ· ἄνω δὲ πάλιν τὴν θείαν ϗ ἄρρητον δεσπόζουσαν φύσιν, ὡς πάντα ὑπὸ πόδας ἔχουσαν τὰ γενητὰ ϗ τῷ τῆς ἐξουσίας ὑποθεῖσαν ζυγῷ. S. Cyr. Com. in Joan. p. 165.

(g) Idem c. Jul. l. 7. p. 231.

(h) Com. in Oſe. T. 3. p. 164.

(i) Θεὸν ὁρῶμεν ϗ κτίσιν, ἕτερον δὲ παρὰ τούτοις οὐδὲν, ὃ γὰρ ἂν ἐκπίπτει τοῦ εἶναι θεὸς κατὰ φύσιν, τοῦτο πάντως ἐστὶ γενητόν· ϗ ὅπερ ἂν τὸν τοῦ πεποιῆσθαι διαφεύγει λόγον, εἴσω πάντως ἐστὶ τῶν τῆς θεότητος ὅρων. In Joan. p. 52.

(k) Τὸ δουλικὸν ἀναβεβηκὼς μέτρον, ὥστε ϗ ἐντὸς ὅρων τῆς δεσποζούσης οὐσίας ὑπάρχων. Theſaur. l. 32. p. 301.

(l) Ibid. p. 55.

(m) Πῶς διδάσκεις ποιητὸν, ἢ τῆς δούλης φύσεως εἶναι; ἀλλ' οὐ τῆς δεσποτικῆς καὶ δημιουργοῦ καὶ βασιλίδος οὐσίας;——εἰ γὰρ δοῦλον, μὴ ἀριθμείσθω μετὰ τοῦ δεσπότου. L. 1. Ep. 109.

(n) Ἐπεὶ γὰρ ἐστὶν ἐν τοῖς οὖσιν, ἢ ἄκτιστος φύσις ἐστὶν, ἢ κτιστή· ἡ μὲν ἄκτιστος δεσποτικὴ καὶ πάσης ἀνάγκης ἐλευθέρα· ἡ δὲ κτιστὴ, δουλικὴ, καὶ νόμοις δεσποτικοῖς ἑπομένη. p. 374.

(o) S. Ambroſ. com. Epheſ. 5.

(p) Apol. c. 6.

(q) Fulbeck prepar. to the ſtudy of the Law, p. 13.

Deity denoteth in complication both the Sovereignty or Godhead of Eſtate which God is, and alſo (r) τὴν δεσπόζουσαν οὐσίαν, that Eſſence which is Imperial over all, and is in Dominion and Sovereignty over the Univerſe.

V. The firſt notice of God that introduceth Religion amongſt Men, is a Sovereignty over them Creature-tranſcendent (which human Sovereignties reſemble;) for God as ſuch is the object and reaſon of Religion, of Religious Homage, Subjection, Service, Obedience, Hope and Fear. The Nature of Religion noticeth God to be the Creature-tranſcendent Sovereignty; for Religion is his peculiar Homage as ſuch; where there is ſomething of that Homage, there is ſomething of Religion; and where there is nothing of that Homage, there is nothing of Religion, but perfect Atheiſm. Religion may be conſider'd as matter of inſtinct and innate Propenſion; for indeliberately and without any reaſoning upon the matter Mankind in Caſes of Injuſtice and great Oppreſſion appeal to a ſuperiour Power, and invoke it to vindicate their Innocence; in caſe of extremity of Danger, which is beyond human Help, they invoke a ſuperiour Power for their Relief; in great Caſes they naturally put ſomething ſacred upon their Aſſeverations and Atteſtations, they invoke a ſuperiour Power by way of Imprecation upon themſelves, and to be a Witneſs and Judge of their Fidelity and Veracity. Mankind naturally ſpeak Religious Language, (s)Benedicat te Deus, Deus videt omnia, Deo commendo, Deus reddet, Deus inter nos judicabit, God bleſs you, God ſeeth all things, I commend it to God, God will recompenſe, God will judge between us. Mankind are by way of inſtinct the devotional Suppliants of a ſuperior Power, and of ſuch a ſuperiour Power whom they ſuppoſe Supreme and Sovereign, the Maker, Monarch and Governour of all; ſo far therefore natural inſtinct noticeth God to Mankind in the firſt place as the Sovereignty over them Creature-tranſcendent. But Religion muſt be conſider'd as matter of Law and Obligation (of Diſcipline alſo and Inſtitution,) and ſo it denoteth the whole buſineſs of being God's Servants, and conſequently the whole matter of God-ſervice owing to God. Religion therefore in Nature and Notion of it noticeth God to Mankind in the firſt place as a Sovereign Power over them (Sovereign, uncreated, and creative of all things, and therefore Creature-tranſcendent,) who is to them the Law of Subjection, Duty and God-ſervice. Epicurus (as he pretendeth) would have Men, to Worſhip the Gods (only) becauſe of the excellency of their Nature; which pretence is a Branch of his Atheiſm and Irreligion; for it deſtroyeth all Mens bounden Duty and Service to God. Notwithſtanding ſuch Deities which are no Governments, no authoritative Powers, they are left fully at liberty, to do what they liſt, for who is Lord over them? The Criticks ſay, (t) that Religion properly ſignifieth a certain dread or horrour which things Divine tranſcending human Power impreſs upon us, whereby we are held bound and reſtrain'd. (u) Jacob ſware by the Fear (God) of his Father Iſaac, and ſome great Grammarians derive the word Deus from the Greek Θεὸς, which ſignifieth Fear, which Critical accounts of the word God and Religion are not deſign'd to befriend Atheiſm, but to ſhew what Religion in general is, and what is the Origin of it; that it is a natural Awe which Mankind have of an inviſible Sovereign Power. (w) A Sovereign Power which only God is, his Wrath and Judgment the Soul of Man is naturally conſcious of, and feareth to offend him. This Fear of a Deity which is natural to Mankind, and which profeſs'd Atheiſts cannot totally extinguiſh (naturalis Timor animæ in Deum) noticeth God to Mankind as the ſupreme Potentate or Sovereignty over all; and becauſe of this natural Notice and the Fear that accompanieth it, the Univerſality of Mankind are in ſome kind and degree Religioniſts.

VI. Paganiſm in a conſiderable degree retaineth the true Idea of God; but ſo, that many prejudices are done to it by the Follies and Impieties of that Religion and Theology. For in the firſt place, the Popular-pagan Theology doth not acknowledge one unmix'd Sovereignty or Imperial Eſtate, that ſtands againſt and is over an Univerſe of Subjects (as is uſual in Human Kingdoms and Empires,) but it mixeth, combineth and aſſociateth together various ſupreme Deities (of ſeveral Kinds and Notions;) and it alſo mixeth and aſſociateth ſubordinate Deities in one and the ſame Sovereignty or Imperial Eſtate with the ſupreme Deity (συνάρχοντες αὐτῷ, Co-reigners with him;) which is an effacing the Idea of God at an horrible rate. In the next place Paganiſm ſubſtituteth an Univerſe of Gods and Men inſtead of an Univerſe of Creatures, whereby we mean Creatures that are not God, which therefore have the meanneſs, inferiority and imperfection of Creatures They are of the ſubject and ſervient Condition, and as ſuch have a Lord over them, whoſe they are, whoſe Beneficiaries they are, and to whom they are accountable, as they are not of themſelves, ſo they are not for themſelves, but are ſubordinate and ſubſervient to an higher end. As what they have is not primarily and originally, but dependently and at the Will and Pleaſure of another, and by Participation; ſo they have but a meaſure of Dignity and Excellency, their Prefection is mix'd with Imperfection, inſufficiency and diſparaging Properties; they are but particular, finite Beings, not univerſal, not comprehending or compriſing All in their Eſſence, Operation, Power or Authority (for they are but ſome Excellency and Power,) they are abject Underlings, mean and low in compariſon.

In the third place (x) all the ancient Philoſophers (not the later Platoniſts) held an Opinion, that the matter was innate and unproduc'd (becauſe nothing could be produc'd out of nothing,) and that God did only contrive and frame this orderly Syſtem of the Univerſe out of Præexiſtent Matter which is no ſmall prejudice to the Idea of God. Nor is it an inconſiderable prejudice that is done to this Idea by the Opinion of the Chaldeans, of Ariſtotle and the later Platoniſts (y) touching the Worlds Exiſtence from

(r) Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 12. S. 4.

(s) Tertull. de Teſtim. Anim.

(x) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 14. c. 16. Coſri p. 35, 286. Windet. de vit. funct. p. 62. Tertull. adv. Valentin. c. 15. Theodoret. Serm. [illegible] Ser. 2. Plutarch. de An. procreat. p. 1016. M. Ant. l. 5. S. 13. Gale in Jambl. p. 303. Procl. in Tim. p. 117. & Plat. Theol. p. 281.

(y) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 1. Petav. T. 1. l. 3. c. 5. S. 4.

(t) Religio proprie horrorem ſignificat, quem res divina & vim humanam ſuperantes nobis infligunt: quo fit ut quaſi conſtricti teneamur. Herald. in Arnob. p. 176, 221.

(u) Juravit Jacob per פחד Pahad patris ſui Iſhac, quod interpretatum eſt Timor.—— primus in orbe Deos fecit Timor. Et ſunt nonnulli, & iidem nobiles Grammatici, qui Deos à timore tranſtulere. Nam Θεὸς Græcè Timor eſt Latinè. Reuchlin. de verb. mirif. p. 181.

(w) Quid timetur niſi ira? Unde ira niſi ex animadverſione? Unde animadverſio niſi de Dei judicio? Unde judicium niſi de Poteſtate? Cujus poteſtas ſumma niſi Dei ſolius? Tertullian. ſupr.

from Eternity, (z) of which Opinion Plato himſelf was (at ſome times;) for in his Phædrus he diſputeth, that the Soul is not generated or made in time. The Platoniſts ſuppoſe the Human Soul Siſter to the Soul of the World, and the ancient Philoſophers coupled God and the Matter as Brother and Siſter, or rather as Husband and Wife together.

In the fourth place the higher rank of Beings in the Philoſophic-Pagan Theology are ſuppoſed to be (a) ἀπόρροιαι τινὲς καὶ προϐολαὶ τȣ͂ πρώτȣ αἰτίȣ, certain Emanations, Prolations or Emiſſions of the firſt Cauſe, ſo that God and the Beings of the World are of one piece, one continu'd Web of Being, or one Ladder of Entity, of which God is the higheſt round (πάντων ἀκρότης,) the top of all, ſaith Simplicius,) they are an Expanſion, Evolution and Explication of the Deity like the Cabaliſts Mundus Azilutbicus World of Emanation. (b) In Stoiciſm the Souls of Men are Parts and Decerptions of God, to be refunded into him again. In the commonly received Pagan Theiſm the viſible mundane Syſtem is a God, as animated is the ſupreme Deity, God is all things, all things are God, every thing muſt be called by his Name; and he by the Name of every thing, the ſeveral parts of the World are the ſeveral Parts and Members of God; and at this rate of Theologizing there can be neither Creator nor Creature properly ſo called.

In the fifth place, as Paganiſm furniſheth a multitude of Beings with the Attributes of God, ſo it ſpoileth his Idea in great degree by a multitude of Makers of the World. As Cicero ſaith, that the World was conſtituted Providentiâ Deorum, by the Providence of the Gods. Which Polytheiſtic Language being Popular Pagan, is not to be interpreted of Plato's eternal Ideas, (which the Popular Pagans knew nothing of:) But of the College of Sempiternal Deities. So M. Tyrius muſt be underſtood, to ſpeak of the Gods of the Poetic and Popular Pagan Theology in his Devotional Exclamation, (c) O Jupiter and the Gods, the Fathers and Makers of the Earth and Sea. The Ditheiſtic Conceit (the Opinion of two Self-exiſtent Deities, the one the Principle of Good, the other of Evil) was alſo in ſome Pagan Nations a Branch of their Theiſm, which is an Hypotheſis that ſpoileth the Idea of an Increate Sovereignty, which ſtands againſt and is over the Univerſe of Creatures.

But although Paganiſm aboundeth with atheous Conceits prejudicial to the Idea of God, and doth (d) Dominationem obumbrare, obſcure and efface the Domination, yet in a conſiderable degree it retaineth this Idea. For it acknowledgeth (e) a ſupreme Deity, that is, πάντων βασιλεὺς ϗ πατὴρ, King and Father of all, (or as Heſiod ſpeaketh πάντων βασιλεὺς ϗ κοίρανός ἐστιν, he is King and Lord of all,) and this ſupreme Deity is ſuppos'd to be a Sempiternal Lord, who is the Law of Religion to Mankind. For this was the Quarrel which the Epicureans had with the Pagan Theiſts, (f) impoſuiſtis cervicibus noſtris Sempiternum Dominum, ye have put upon our Necks (a Deity) a Sempiternal Lord, whom we muſt fear Night and Day. Such a Sovereignty of Religion the Epicureans thought grievous and intolerable, and therefore they roſe up in Arms to demoliſh and pull it down, which Epicurus is ſaid to have attempted and atchiev'd with great bravery, as one of his Diſciples repreſenteth him.

Humana ante oculos fœdè cum vita jaceret
In terris oppreſſa gravi ſub Religione,
Quæ caput à Cœli regionibus oſtendebat,
Horribili ſuper aſpectu mortalibus inſtans
Primum Grajus homo mortales tollere contra Eſt oculos auſus, primuſque obſiſtere contra.
Quare Religio pedibus ſubjecta viciſſim, &c.

When human Life was filthily caſt down
On Earth, oppreſs'd by grievous Religion,
Which ſhew'd its head from Heavens Region high
With dire aſpect, drudging Mortality
Firſt a Greek Man dar'd to lift up the head
Againſt it, and Religion proſtrated.

VII. The Religion of Jews and Chriſtians noticeth God in the firſt place as the Sovereignty over us Creature-tranſcendent; as appeareth from his moſt uſual and obvious Name in Scripture Adonai (the Lord) of which the Jews ſay, (g) there is no way in the World to ſee the face of the bleſſed King but by his Name Adonai. No Prayers or Supplications are admitted but by the Name Adonai. Therefore the Ancients ordain'd it in the beginning of all Prayers, as Adonai (Lord) open my Lips. It is a Treaſure, wherein are all the ornaments of the King. In the Proem of the Ten Commandments God is call'd by the Name Elohim; and ſo it was requiſite, that in his Legiſlation (making the Laws of Religion) he ſhould be called by ſuch a Name, which denoteth his Imperial Power. And for this reaſon perhaps the Greek Interpreters choſe to render the Names אליהם and יהוה rather by the Greek Κύριος than Θεός, (at leaſt this is a more probable reaſon than Grotius's Conjecture, (h) that they wav'd the Name Θεός, becauſe the Greeks called their Demons Θεοί,) becauſe in Religion it is requiſite, that God ſhould be very plainly and perſpicuouſly notic'd as a Potentate over Men Creature-tranſcendent. Accordingly his Laws to the Jews were commonly inacted in this form I am the Lord. And that Religion noticeth him as ſuch in the firſt place, is plain from hence, becauſe the firſt thing which it demandeth of us, is to acknowledge his Lordſhip and Domination, and actually to become his Subjects and Servants. Hence the Jews conceive, (i) that the Preface or Proem to the Ten Commandments (I am the Lord) is the Firſt Commandment, which injoineth them receptionem imperii divini, the reception or acknowledgment of the Divine Empire, jugum regis cœleſtis ſcil. obedientiam divinorum mandatorum, the Yoke of the heavenly King, namely, Obedience to the Divine Commands. For (ſay they) Princes ſeek to eſtabliſh their Authority in the firſt place, before they proceed to make Special Laws and Conſtitutions, the Law which determineth, who ſhall be the Sovereign, and who ſhall be the Subjects, is in all Governments the general and fundamental Law, which preceedeth all particular Laws. Some of the Hebrew Doctors ſuppoſe that the Proem to the Ten Commandments is Præceptum Fidei, a Precept of Faith; accordingly the Chriſtian Church in the very entrance of the firſt Article of our Creed propoſeth God to us as of this Notice or Idea in the firſt place παντοκράτωρ, All-imperial. And Ruffinus in his Expoſition of the Creed ſaith of the Name God (k) God is the Name of the Nature or Subſtance which is above all. He is called Omnipotent, becauſe he hath the Potentacy of

z) S. Aug. le C. D. l. o. c. 31.

(b) Euſeb. r. ev. l. 13. c. 15.

(b) M. Ant. l. 4. S. 14.

(c) Ὦ Ζεῦ καὶ θεοὶ πατέρες καὶ ποιηταὶ γῆς καὶ θαλάττης. Diſſ. 34. Confer. Diſſ. 29.

(d) Tertull. c. Marcion. l. 1. c. 10.

(e) M. Tyr. diſſ. 1.

(f) Cic. 1. de N. D.

(g) Hotting. Diſſ. de nom. Dei p. 277, &c.

(h) Explic. decal. ad Ex. 20. 1.

(i) P. Burgenſ. addit. 1. in Exod. c. 20.

(k) Deus naturæ ipſius vel ſubſtantiæ quæ eſt ſuper omnia eſt Appellatio. Omnipotens dicitur, quod omnium teneat potentatum.

All. So our Lord's Prayer in the entrance of it noticeth God as the heavenly ſupernal Potentate (for the coming of whoſe Kingdom we Pray;) and from the Chriſtian Apologiſts account of their Doctrine and Devotions we learn what is the firſt Notice or Idea of God in Religion. (l) We diſpleaſe, becauſe we Preach one ſole Lord (or God) by this one ſole Name, from whom are all and under whom are all, ſaith Tertullian. In noticing the true God to the Heathen (which is alſo the method of other Apologiſts for Chriſtianity) and confuting their Polytheiſm from the Teſtimony of the human Soul (to which he ſpeaketh,) he firſt conſidereth Godhead of Eſtate and then proceedeth to the Nature of God. Omnem illi confiteris poteſtatem, ad cujus ſpectas voluntatem. Thou aſcribeſt all Potentacy to him, to whoſe Will thou haſt reſpect. ——— de Natura quoque Dei quam prædicamus, nec te latet. Nor is the Nature of God which we preach unknown to thee. The Devotion of Chriſtians is (m) ἡ θρησκεία εἰς τὸν ἕνα ϗ πάντων δεσπότην, Devotion towards one and Lord of all. This Idea of God is eaſie and familiar to the meaneſt Underſtandings, that are inſtructed in the true Religion. A certain Beggar in our Nation ask'd an Alms of a Gentleman that was an Atheiſt, in the form that Beggars commonly uſe, for the Lord's ſake. The Atheiſt ask'd him, who is your Lord? The poor Man made an anſwer the Lord of Heaven and Earth. The Atheiſt reply'd, I thought ſo, for I never ſaw any of his Servants better clad. Thus the Atheiſts in Chriſtendom underſtand their Enemy, and the Poor in Chriſtendom underſtand their Patron, under this Notion or Idea, the Lord, King or Potentate, Creature-tranſcendent. (n) By God is underſtood the Cauſe of the World. Which implieth, that his Idea is the Lord of the World.

VIII. The ancient Theologers (both Pagan and Chriſtian) have excogitated ſeveral Etymologies of the Greek Name Θεὸς God, (o) ſome deriving it ἐκ τοῦ αἴθειν, from burning or enkindling (whence the Stars were call'd Θεοὶ, Gods,) others deriving it ἀπὸ τοῦ θεῖν vel ἀπὸ τοῦ θεᾶσθαι, from running, pervading, or from beholding, (p) others will have God called θεὸς παρὰ τὴν θέσιν, from ſetting all things in order. One of theſe Etymologies ἀπὸ τοῦ θεῖν, from running or pervading (which is Plato's) is judiciouſly (q) confuted by Tertullian. And it muſt be ſaid both of that and the other Etymologies of the Greek Name (which alſo may be ſaid of almoſt all the Etymologies of the Latin Deus and the Engliſh God,) that they cannot reaſonably be thought any thing better than Etymological pedantry and trifling. For this Name God (as it is expreſs'd in the ſeveral Languages) is certainly a Name of Honour and Nobilitation, and belongeth (together with the Idea which it denoteth) to a ſort of Learning, which we have call'd Nobility-learning. It denoteth and ſignifieth Honour and Nobilitation, Honour and Nobilitation of Eſtate, an Honour and Nobilitation of Eſtate, an Honour and Eſtate of Nobilitation, Creature-tranſcendent, and his being God conſiſteth in being the Honour and Eſtate of Nobilitation Creature-tranſcendent; therefore his Name God denoteth and ſignifieth the Lord, King or Potentate Creature-tranſcendent, and his being God conſiſteth in being the Sovereignty or Kingdom-Eſtate Creature-tranſcendent. To explicate the Senſe and aſcertain the truth of this Argument, we will ſhew three things. (1.) That the Name God is a Name of Honour and Nobilitation in general. (2.) That it is the Name of an Honour and Eſtate of Nobilitation. (3.) That it is the Name of an Honour and Eſtate of Nobilitation Creature-tranſcendent.

(1.) In Paganiſm the Names of God, Gods, Goddeſſes, are manifeſtly Names of Honour and Nobilitation in general; for the Nobility which the Greek and Latin Poets celebrated, was Deity, or Divinity. (r) The Men of ancient times that chiefly glory'd in the Nobility of their Anceſtors, accounted this the ground and foundation of their Ennobliſhment, that themſelves or their Anceſtors were immediately deſcended from Gods and Goddeſſes, as we ſee every where in Homer and Virgil and the reſt of the Poets. And if the Poets would praiſe any Perſons upon the account of their Nobility, they refer their Pedigree to the Gods. Hence Virgil ſo oft inculcateth Nate Dea, Goddeſs-born, and Homer conſtantly calleth Kings and others eminently Noble διογενέας, διοτρεφέας, Jove's Offſpring and Nurſlings. The ſame Poet calleth Noblemen δίους, and Noble-women δίας, uſually, that is, Divine. Nam & δῖος & δίαι, utramque habent ſignificationem & nobilis & divini ſive divinæ. The ſame word ſignifieth both Noble and Divine. And in Homer (s) Διογενὴς ὀδυσσεὺς, God-born Ulyſſes, δῖος ὀρέστης, Divine Oreſtes, δῖα 'Ανδεία, Divine Andia, with the like, uſually occur. Servius interpreteth Dia generoſa, εὐγενὴς, noble generous. Græcis Nobilis non ſolum διογενὴς, ſed & δῖος, dicitur. A Perſon of Honour and Nobility is called by the Greeks not only God-born, but Divine. Φαίδιμος, is of the ſame ſignification (ſaith Tiraquell,) as when Hector is called Φαίδιμος Ἕκτωρ, Illuſtrious Hector, Ajax, Φαίδιμος Αἴας, Illuſtrious Ajax. So are κλυτὸς, ἀγαυὸς, ἀγλαὸς, Noble, Glorious, Reſplendent, which are uſual ornamental Epithets in Homer. To ennoble Ulyſſes (t) Ovid ſaith of him ——— Deus eſt in utroque Parente, whereby is meant, that he was Noble by both Parents. (u)

Θείων δ' ἀμφοῖν ἐκγόνων ῥιζωμάτων
Τίς ἂν προσειπεῖν ἀξιώσειε χάτριν.

The infamous Name of a Servant is incompetible to One, both whoſe Parents were Divine or Noble.

In the holy Scriptures (which are in great part Nobility-learning) the Names God, Gods, Sons of God, are manifeſtly Names of Honour and Nobilitation; whence ſome ſay, that by the Sons of God, Gen. 6. 2. are meant (w) Principes populorum vel Judices, the Princes of the People or the Judges, or as the Chaldee, Filii magnatum, the Sons of the Grandees, or as the Arabick, Filii illuſtrium viderunt Filias Plebis pulchras, the Sons of the Illuſtrious ſaw that the Daughters of the Plebeians were fair; and in Aben Ezra's Expoſition the Sons of God are Filii Principum & Judicum, the Sons of the Princes and Judges. (x) Leo M. ſpeaketh the Senſe of the New Teſtament, when he ſtileth the Children of God adoptiva Nobilitas, the adoptive Nobility, Genus electum & regium, the Elect and Royal Race. In Arnobius's Diſcourſe touching the Origin of Human Souls (y) to ſuppoſe them Dei Progenies, Regia Soboles, Dominica Proles, a Progeny of God, a Royal Offſpring, of Lordly Deſcent, are ſynonymous Expreſſions; and he argueth, that they could not be weak and wicked, ſi generoſitas eos aſſereret principalis, & ab rerum capite deſcendentium ducerent honeſtamenta natalium, if the higheſt Nobility

(l) Non placemus Dominum prædicantes hoc nomine unico unicum, à quo omnia & ſub quo univerſa. Tertul. de Teſt. An.

(m) J. Mart. de Monarch. Dei init.

(n) Leviathan. Par. 2. ch. 31. p. 190.

(o) Zanch. de Nat. Dei, l. 1. c. 11. Petav. T. 1. l. 8. c. 8. Simpl. in Epict. c. 38.

(p) Clem. Str. l. 1. in fine.

(q) Ad nation. l. 2.

(r) Tiraquell. de Nobil. p. 24, 25.

(s) Ibid. p. 183.

(t) Metamorph. l. 13.

(u) Tiraquell supr. p. 85.

(w) Bever. Addit. ad Seld. de Syr. p. 109.

(x) Ser. 6. de Nativ. c. 3.

(y) Adv. Gent. l. 2. p. 68, 75, 78.

lity did vouch them for his Off-ſpring, and if they deriv'd the illuſtriouſneſs of their Pedigree and Deſcent from the head of all. Such Notices of God (abounding in Books of Learning) are a palpable Indication, that the Name and Idea of God belongeth not to vulgar Science, but to Nobility-learning as the proper Seat of it.

(2.) The Name God is manifeſtly (not only a Name of Honour and Nobilitation in general, but) one of the Names of Honour, Dignity and Nobilitation of Eſtate, which Nobility-learning treateth of, and which ſecular Nobility-learning calleth Titles of Honour. Some Names are indifferent, neither honourary nor diſgraceful, as Socrates, Speuſippus; others are terms of infamy, vilipendency, indignity, diſgrace and diſreſpect; and others are graceful and honourary to thoſe that bear them, they are definitiones cum laude, as defining and denoting Perſons with a mark of Praiſe and Honour; and theſe in a large Senſe may be call'd Tituli Honorarii, Titles of Honour. So the Title moſt Excellent given to Theophilus in S. Luke's Goſpel may be called a Title of Honour, which yet denoteth not any Dignity of Eſtate. (y) Moſt Excellent is not here the Name or Note of a Dignity, ſaith Camerarius. But Titles of Honour in this Notion are of a large and general acceptation; in a ſtricter acceptation by Titles of Honour are meant the Names of Honours, Dignities and Eſtates of Nobilitation, whether they be the Honourary or the meerly Officiary. And in the ſtricteſt acceptation Titles of Honour are confin'd to the Honourary Dignities Civil and Eccleſiaſtical, of which there are large Liſts and Catalogues ſome importing more, others leſs, of Honour and Dignity of Perſonage. (z) As amongſt Scholars רבן Rabban is the Name of a more excellent Dignity than רב Rab or רבי Rabbi, ſay the Jewiſh Writers. So in Governments, (a) Deſpote was a Title, that ſometime ſignified τὸ τῆς βασιλείας ἔγγιστα ἀξίωμα, the Dignity next to the Imperial. In this ſort of Learning it is diſputed (b) an divitiæ, virtus, ſcientia nobilitent? Whether Riches, Virtue, Learning do ennoble their Poſſeſſors? To which the Anſwer is, that they do conciliate a ſort of Nobility, Pulchritude and Precioſity of Perſon, they are of ſingular value that are Wiſe and Virtuous. (c) An excellent Man cannot be ignoble, although his Dignity or Quality is not to be found in the Liſts of thoſe Honours and Nobilities, that are the Subject of Armory-nobility-learning. Mundane Riches ſo far Nobilitate, they conciliate a regard to their Poſſeſſors, and render them of great account in the World. (d) For a ſervile Miſcreant, if Rich, will be much ſet by in the minds and carriage of Men. But although Virtue, Learning and Riches in ſome ſort ennoble their Poſſeſſors, they do not conſtitute them ſuch Eſtates of Nobilitation, that are contradiſtinct to the Plebeians of a Kingdom. Amongſt which Nobilitations of Eſtate thoſe meer Officiary Dignities muſt be reckon'd, (e) that in ſome ſort ennoble (as the Office of Chancellour:) But principally and eminently the honourary Dignities are the Honours and Eſtates of Nobilitation, and they only are ennobled with Titles of Honour in the ſtricteſt acceptation. For in this ſort of Learning Titles of Honour are oppos'd to Titles of (meer) Office, and the Honourary Dignities (which are certain collectives of matter of Honour) are oppos'd to the meer Officiary Dignities, which differ as the High-Sheriff of a County differeth from a Saxon Earl of the County. They diſtinguiſh Honourary from Officiary Dignity, that ſay, The Peers in England ſit in Parliament, non ratione Nobilitatis ſed Officii, not upon account of their Honour, but their Officiary part in the Government; and that Officium eſt imperare, non regnum, to be a Governour, is not a matter of Regnancy, but of Office. (f) In the Roman Empire they that had well diſcharg'd an Office of Service, Charge and Truſt (a meer Officiary Dignity,) were uſually rewarded with an Honourary Dignity, (g) which in other Nations hath been uſually the Reward of great Virtues and great Atchievements. Agreeably to which Uſages in the Kingdoms and Empires of this World our Bl. Saviour muſt be ſuppos'd for his great Virtues and great Atchievements and after the faithful diſcharge of an Officiary Dignity, to be rewarded with an Honourary Dignity, when he was Crown'd with Glory and Honour, Heb. 2. 9. which Honour being both the Crown-dignity and the Godhead, from thence it appeareth, that the Godhead of Eſtate is of generical Notion an Honourary Dignity in the ſtricteſt Senſe of Armory-nobility-learning, for ſuch is the Crown-dignity. Accordingly, the Maſters of this ſort of Learning (h) amongſt the greater Honourary Dignities and the Titles of Honour that denote them, reckon θεὸς, θεότης, Dii, Divi, God, Gods, Deity, Divinity, κύριος, βασιλεὺς, Numen, Lord, King, Divine Potentacy.

(3.) To be a King is Honour and Nobilitation in general, it is an Honour, Dignity and Eſtate of Nobilitation, it is an Honour, Dignity and Eſtate of Nobilitation Subject-tranſcendent, and all this the Name King denoteth and ſignifieth: In like manner, to be a God, is Honour and Nobilitation in general, it is an Honour, Dignity and Eſtate of Nobilitation, it is an Honour, Dignity and Eſtate of Nobilitation (Subject-tranſcendent) Creature-tranſcendent, and all this the Name God denoteth and ſignifieth. The Gods in Paganiſm muſt be conſider'd in reſpect of what they were really and on their Part, and in reſpect of what they were aſcriptitiouſly and on our part. If they had been really and on their part Honours, Dignities and Eſtates of Nobilitation Creature-tranſcendent, they had been true Gods: But becauſe they were only aſcriptitiouſly and on our part Honours, Dignities and Eſtates of Nobilitation Creature-tranſcendent, therefore they were but Idols and Idolatrouſly made Gods. And as in Human Governments Men are ennobled by being made Honours, Dignities and Eſtates of Nobilitation in civil Society: So the Pagans way of ennobling Men was by making them (on our part and aſcriptitiouſly Gods) the Honours, Dignities and Eſtates of Nobilitation in Religious Society. So the Emperour Nero could create Gods, as eaſily as the King can create Barons.

> Stultè verebor, eſſe cum faciam Deos.
> It were Non-ſenſe for me to fear Gods, that make Gods.

So Libanius the Sophiſt promis'd a Godſhip to Julian, Σοὶ δ' ἔσται μὲν, ὅτε θύσουσιν ἄνθρωποι καὶ βωμοὺς ἱδρύσονται, The time will be, when Men ſhall do Sacrifice to thee and erect Altars. So Demades the Athenian ἐψηφίσατο θεὸν τὸν Ἀλέξανδρον, decreed, that Alexander ſhould be a God. The Name God therefore

(y) Nec Epitheton κράτιστος hic Dignitatis nota eſt, magis quàm apud Latinos optimus.

(z) Buxtorf. de abbreviat. p. 153.

(a) Selden Titles of Hon. p. 236. ed. 3.

(b) Tiraquell. ſupr. c. 3, 4, &c.

(c) Ἀνὴρ ἄριστος οὐκ ἂν εἴη δυσγενής.

(d) Καὶ δοῦλος ὢν γὰρ, τίμιος πλουτῶν ἀνήρ.

(e) Selden ſupr. p. 717.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Ibid. p. 455.

(h) Ibid. p. 32, and p. 43.

therefore in Paganiſm denoteth and ſignifieth a Religion-kind of Honour, Dignity and Eſtate of Nobilitation, which (the Religious Honour and Worſhip being proper to God) is the ſame with a Creature-tranſcendent Honour, Dignity and Eſtate of Nobilitation. So in Holy Scripture the Name God denoteth (which is an Honour, Dignity and Eſtate of Nobilitation Creature-tranſcendent) the Religious kind of Honour, Dignity and Eſtate of Nobilitation. For a God and a Σέβασμα (a Religious Honour or Worſhip objectively underſtood) are terms ſynonymous; 2 Theſſ. 2. 4. Who oppoſeth and exalteth himſelf ἐπὶ πᾶν τὸ λεγόμενον θεὸν ἢ σέβασμα, above every thing that is called God or a Σέβασμα. So Photius mentioneth (i) τὰ τῆς ἑλληνικῆς θρησκείας σεβάσματα, θεὺς, the Greeks Religious Honours or Worſhips (objectively underſtood) that is, their Gods: οἰκεῖον ἐδυσφήμησε σέβασμα, he reproach'd his own Σέβασμα or God. So Wiſd. 14. 20. σεβάσμα is tranſlated a God; and Act. 17. 23. the Athenians σεβάσματα ſignifieth their Devotions objectively underſtood, or their Devotional Honours and Worſhips. The Pagans Image σεβάσματα were (objectively) their Devotional Honours and Worſhips, and therefore are intituled Gods; Iſa. 46. 6. He maketh it a God, they fall down, yea they worſhip. They proceeded to ſuch madneſs, (k) ὡς τ' ἐλαΐνον κορμὸν θεῶσαι, to deifie a piece of Olive-wood, becauſe they made it a Σέβασμα. Some of the beſt learned in the Oriental Languages derive the Hebrew Name (l) Eloah and Elohim (God) from the Arabick אלה which ſignifieth to venerate or worſhip; ſo that Eloah and Elohim (God) is the ſame with Σέβασμα. And to be a Σέβασμα, is an Honour, Dignity and Eſtate of Nobilitation Creature-tranſcendent, according to Apoc. 4. 11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive Glory, and Honour, aud Power, for thou haſt created all things: Apoc. 14. 7. Worſhip him that made Heaven, and Earth, and the Sea, and the Fountains of Water. His being God therefore (properly and formally ſuch) is his being an Honour, Dignity and Eſtate of Nobilitation Creature-tranſcendent; as the King's being properly and formally ſuch, is to be an Honour, Dignity and Nobilitation of Eſtate Subject-tranſcendent.

(i) V. Dr. Ham. in 2 Theſſ. 2. 4.

(k) Euſeb. Pr. Ev. l. 5. c. 36.

(l) Hotting. Hexaem. p. 20. Diſſ. de nom. Dei, p. 258.

CHAP. II.

1. Conſectary from our Account of the Name of God and his Idea, that the Name God is in different Senſes a Proper and not a Proper Name. 2. Conſectary, that the Metaphyſical Ens is not the moſt proper or accommodate Name of God. 3. Conſectary, the Hebrew Name Jehovah is not the ſame with the Metaphyſical Ens, although it ſeemeth to be ſo. 4. A Conſideration of the Dignity of that Name. 5. A Conſideration of the full Expreſſion of it. 6. A Conſideration of the Senſe and Reaſon of it, and that this Name is not of the Metaphyſical, but of a Popular-Religious Interpretation. 7. The firſt Argument againſt the Metaphyſical Interpretation. 8. A ſecond Argument. 9. A third Argument. 10. A fourth Argument. 11. A fifth Argument. 12. A ſixth Argument. 13. A ſeventh Argument. 14. An eighth Argument. 15. A ninth Argument. 16. Of the Promiſſory ὁ ὢν or Ens. 17. Of the Prophetic ὁ ὢν or Ens. 18. Of the Metaphyſical ὁ ὢν or Ens.

I. From our Account of the Name of God and his Idea many Conſectaries are deducible, and ſome of them are of great importance; others are of leſs value and the lower Houſe. Such is this, which hath the firſt place. Conſect. 1. The Name God muſt be accounted a proper Name, and not a proper Name in the Senſe of Nobility-Learning. The Scholaſtick Divines both Jews and Chriſtians make a Diſpute, whether the Name God be a Proper Name or an Appellative? But (agreeably to the Metaphyſical and Philoſophic-Pagan kind of Theologizing) in a Senſe and Notion quite alien from that of Nobility-Learning; (m) for by a Proper Name they mean שם עצם nomen ſubſtantiæ, a Name of the ſubſtance of God; by an Appellative they mean שם תאר nomen Attributi, the name of an Attribute; and in this Senſe ſome of the Fathers affirm, others deny, that the Name God is a Proper Name. Thus the Senſe and Notion of a Proper Name according to Nobility-Learning is not at all taken notice of in this ſort of Theology, which yet ought not to be overlook'd. For according to Nobility-Learning the Titles of Honour and Dignity are diſtinguiſh'd from the Proper Names; (n) as a late Greek Writer ſaith of the Names Gylas and Carchan, They are not ὀνόματα κύρια, ἀλλὰ ἀξιώματα, Proper Names but Dignities. In the ſame Senſe the Name God is not a Proper Name; for it is certainly a Title of Honour and Dignity. But it muſt be called a Proper Name in ſuch Senſe as Titles of Honour are; and in the ſtrictly religious Senſe it is the incommunicable Name, Wiſd. 14. 21. In ſuch Senſe therefore it is a Proper Name; and accordingly Tertullian affirmeth, (o) it is Nomen proprium Divinitatis, the proper Name of the Divinity.

(m) Petav. T. 1. l. 8. c. 8, 9.

(n) Selden. Titles, p. 66.

(o) Ad Nation. l. 2.

II. Conſect. The Name ὁ ὢν, Ens or he that is, τὸ ὂν or αὐτοὸν, Ipſum Ens (Being it ſelf) τὸ ὄντως ὄν, that which truly and properly is, οὐσία, Eſſence (underſtood as a Metaphyſical or Platonic Name) is not the moſt proper or accommodate Name of God. The Platonic School (as we have ſeen before) calleth its ſublime Intelligibles and Incorporeals, the Platonic Ideas and the comprehenſion of them (their ſecond Archical Hypoſtaſis) αὐτὸ τὸ ὂν μετ' ἀληθείας, that which is indeed with truth, becauſe it is the ſuppoſed Nature and Eſſence of thoſe abſtract Natures and Eſſences, to be ſempiternally and immutably. (p) This Branch of the Platonic Scholaſticiſm or Ontology hath been appply'd to God both by the Jewiſh and Chriſtian Theologers, who although they ſuppoſe the Eſſence and Nature of God, to be altogether unknowable and inexplicable, yet thus much they underſtand of it, that this is his Nature and Eſſence, He is id quod eſt, an Eſſence to which the whole of Eſſence and Exiſtence is appropriate, the infinite fulneſs of real Eſſence and neceſſarily exiſtent. And becauſe they ſuppoſe, that this is chiefly eſſential unto God, and the primary Notice which they have of him, therefore they they ſuppoſe, that the Name which denoteth it, ὁ ὤν, or Ens, is the moſt proper and accommodate Name of God. So J. Damaſcen ſaith, There are two principal Names of God, ὁ ὤν, Ens, and ὁ θεός, God; the firſt of which Names he calleth, κυριώτερον πάντων τῶν ἐπὶ θεοῦ λεγομένων ὀνομάτων, the moſt proper of all the Names of God. Even Gr. Naz. ſaith of thoſe Names, ὁ ὢν καὶ ὁ θεὸς, Ens and God, that they are τῆς οὐσίας ὀνόματα, the Names of the Eſſence, καὶ τούτων μᾶλλον ὁ ὤν, and chiefly (above the other) Ens is ſo. In this Metaphyſical Name and Notice of God, ſimply conſider'd, there is nothing but what is laudable, common Reaſon diſcerneth, that ſomething is neceſſarily exiſtent, and that God is in ſuch Senſe ὁ ὤν, he that is; and to ſay, that he alone is, that created Beings are not truly and properly, is nothing but truth, and what is really honourary to God. Neverthelеſs this Branch of Scholaſtic Theology cannot be excus'd from a twofold Criminality.

(p) Petav. T. 1. l. 1. c. 6. H. Zanch. de Nat. Dei, l. 1. c. 11.

(1.) The one is a Criminal Platonizing in the uſe of this Name ὁ ὤν, or Ens, which iſſueth in Abſurdity and Impiety; (q) for the Platoniſts uſually affirm, that the Supreme Deity of their School their Monad or Myſtic-Metaphyſical firſt Nature) is not Mind, Ens, Eſſence or Intelligible, but above and beyond all theſe, and that theſe Names are appropriate to their ſecond Archical Hypoſtaſis (the Archetypal World,) which is Ens it ſelf and the comprehenſion of Entia. The Platonizing Scholaſticks of the Church therefore, after they have ſaid, that Ens is the moſt proper Name of God, think themſelves oblig'd, in expreſs terms to unſay it; (r) for they will have God intituled ἀνύπαρκτος, without Exiſtence, ἀνούσιος, without Eſſence, ἄνους, without Mind or Intelligence, ἄζωος, without Life; and J. Damaſcen ſaith, He is ὑπὲρ τὸ εἶναι, above Being. (s) Innumerable the like places of the ancient Fathers might be produc'd (ſaith Petavius) which affirm, that the Divine Eſſence cannot be declar'd by any Affirmation (or affirmative Attribute,) ſo that Being, Eſſence or Subſtance cannot be predicated of it. Euſebius Platonically ſaith of God, (t) ἁπάσης ὢν ἀνωτάτω οὐσίας, He is beyond all Eſſence. Plato (ſaith he) admirably declar'd T'Agathon, μὴ εἶναι οὐσίαν, ἀλλ' ἐπέκεινα τῆς οὐσίας, not to be Eſſence, but beyond Eſſence, ὃν δὴ καὶ μόνον εἰκότως θεὸν τὰ Ἑβραίων ἀναγορεύει λόγια, whom the Hebrew Oracles declare to be the only God. (u) Conſtantine the Great ſaith of Plato, Πρῶτον μὲν θεὸν ὑφηγήσατο τὸν ὑπὲρ τὴν οὐσίαν καλῶς ποιῶν, He rightly taught the firſt God, to be above Eſſence or Subſtance. All the Fathers who ſuppoſe the Platonic Triad a deſcendent from the Hebrews, muſt ſuppoſe, that the Platoniſts Myſtic-Metaphyſical firſt Nature is the true God, and therefore Authorities more than a few (although not one good Reaſon) may be alledg'd in favour of this Platonic Conceit, that the Name Ens or οὐσία is not agreeable unto God; from whence it will follow, that (according to the Scholaſtic Theologers themſelves) Ens is not the moſt proper Name of God, that in great degree it is an improper Name, and that (according to them) it is a diſputable caſe, whether Ens or Non Ens be the moſt proper Name of God. Maximus the Interpreter of the counterfeit Dionyſius ſaith, (w) that τὸ εἶναι καὶ μὴ εἶναι, being and not being are neither of them properly ſaid of God; but he alſo ſaith, τὸ μὴ εἶναι μᾶλλον διὰ τὸ ὑπερεῖναι, becauſe of his ſuper-Being Not being (Non Ens) is rather to be apply'd to God as the more proper. (x) So ſome Platoniſts, to ſhew, that the Divine Majeſty differeth from every thing that can be thought, call it Non Ens. So we have ſeen, that the Name which the Jewiſh Cabaliſts (Platonizing and making Riddles of God) uſually give the Deity, is אין Non Ens. The Deity (ſaith Reuchlin) is called by the greateſt Maſters of Contemplation Non Ens, as it is written Exod. 17. is Adonai, among us Ens or Non Ens? (y) Some ſay, that he is both Ens and Non Ens, becauſe both the things that are and are not, are from him and after him. In like manner he is non Unum, Not-One, being the cauſe of every Unite, and Unity is after him, and he is none of them, neither of thoſe that are after him, nor of thoſe that are not; as R. Hamai ſaith, that all things are deriv'd from his Unity, and he is not like One it ſelf. This not only the Judaical Wiſe Men ſay, but the Chriſtian ſay the ſame thing; for Dionyſius the Areopagite in his Book of Myſtical Theology ſaith, The Deity is neither Number, nor Order, nor One, nor Henotety; what then is the Deity? Simonides anſwer'd Hiero, the more I think, the leſs I underſtand; and ſo it fareth with me. (z) When having paſs'd over or caſhier'd all created things, I mount above Ens, I find nothing but an infinite Sea of Nihilitude, and the Fountain of all Entity flowing from the Abyſs of Darkneſs perpetually. This is a mode of Theologizing worthy the Wiſe Men of the Cabala; this is the conſequence of Philoſophic-Paganizing the Matters of Theology; this is the iſſue of applying the Platonic Scholaſticiſm to the true God. It hath fill'd the Chriſtian Theology with profane Jargon, Abſurdities and Impieties; of which number this muſt be thought one: To diſpute, that ὁ ὤν, Ens (or he that is) is the moſt proper Name of God, and then to play Platonic Tricks with that Name of God, and (in great degree) to bereave the Divine Majeſty of his really proper and ſuppos'd moſt proper Name.

(2.) A ſecond inexcuſable Criminality there is in this Branch of Scholaſtick Theology, which is a ſcurvy Reflection upon and Diſparagement of the Name God. For the Scholaſtick Theologers have a peculiar fondneſs for the Name Ens, as being moſt agreeable to their Metaphyſical and Scholaſtick Genius, whoſe Theology is very much of kin to the Philoſophic Pagan (that was but an higher ſort of Phyſiologizing,) and accordingly they love to contemplate God (a) as πέλαγος τῆς οὐσίας ἄπειρον, an interminate Ocean of Eſſence, that hath and comprehendeth in himſelf ὅλον τὸ εἶναι, the whole of Being. Upon account of this Congruity to themſelves and not upon any rational or religious account the Metaphyſical Name ὁ ὤν, Ens, is made the primary and principal Name of the Deity, ὁ θεός, God, is but δεύτερον ὄνομα (as J. Damaſcen calleth it) a Name that muſt come in the ſecond place, and lacky after the other; for which the Reaſons alledg'd by Schoolmen and Scholaſtic Divines (b) have nothing in them, that looketh like Reaſon. For if this Name Deus (God) denoteth the Divine Eſſence (as all Schoolmen affirm) no Name can be more eſſential to God. If ὁ ὤν, or Ens, be

---

(q) Petav. ſupr. S. 10. & ibid. c. 5. S. 11.

(r) Ibid. c. 5. S. 9.

(s) Poſſunt alia generis ejuſdem innumera proferri loca veterum Patrum, quæ divinam eſſentiam nulla prorſus θέσει vel καταφάσει, hoc eſt, affirmativè, declarari poſſe perſuadent; adeóque nec ipſum eſſe, aut οὐσίαν de illa prædicari. Ibid. c. 6. S. 13.

(t) Dem. Ev. l. 5. c. 11. & pr. Ev. l. 11. c. 21.

(u) Orat. ad ſanct. cœt. c. 9. vid. Gale in Jambl. p. 300.

(w) Petav. ſupr. c. 6. S. 12.

(x) Sic quidam Platonici divinæ majeſtatis ab omni re quæ cogitari poſſit, diſcrimen oſtendentes, appellant eam Non Ens. Eugubin. de Per. Phil. l. 7. c. 5.

(y) Legitur in libro de via fidei & expiationis, quod ſit utrumque היש ואין Ens & Non Ens, quoniam ea quæ ſunt & ea quæ non ſunt, ex ipſo ſunt, & poſt ipſum ſunt. Reuchlin. de Art. Cab. l. 3. fol. 65. b.

(z) Cùm exactis omnibus creatis aſcendero ſupra Ens, non invenio aliud quam infinitum pelagus Nihilitudinis, & fontem omnis Entitatis ex abyſſo tenebrarum manantem perenniter. Ibid.

(a) Petav. ſupr. c. 6. S. 7.

(b) Aquin. 1a. Qu. 13. Art. 11. P. Burgenſ. Addit. in Exod. c. 3.

be more the Name of meer Eſſence (as Gr. Naz. affirmeth,) yet it is not more the Name of the Divine Eſſence. If this Name Qui eſt (he that is) denoteth the Eſſence of God more at large, and is leſs determinative, that ſpeaketh it leſs definitive and deſcriptive, and therefore leſs proper and accommodate. If this Name Qui eſt denoteth the ſtanding duration of God) without flux or temporary ſucceſſion,) that ſignification of it importeth but one particular Attribute of God. If the Name God be communicable metaphorically, analogically, opinionatively, ſo is the Name Ens. If the Name Ens is more intimous and leſs extraneous, and therefore a more proper Name of God than Deus (as Cajetan (c) expoundeth Aquinas's Text,) how is it, that Piety is leſs abhorrent from the Attribute ὑπερούσιος, ſuper-eſſential (or ſuper-ſubſtantial) than from the Attribute ὑπέρθεος, ſuper-God? Marius Victorinus who ſaith of God, (d) nec ὂν ſed magis προὸν, he is not to be intituled Entity, but rather Præ-entity, would ſcarce think it tolerable, to attribute to him προθεότητα, Præ-Divinity and Præ-Godhead; which ſheweth, that the Name God is more intimous and leſs extraneous (of cloſer coherence and connection with the Deity) than the Name Ens. If Ens is a more proper Name than God, how is it, that Scholaſtick Divines in great degree deny unto God the Name Ens? Or dare they in great degree deny unto him the Name God? They attribute to him μὴ εἶναι, not Being, as more proper than εἶναι, Being, but do they think it more proper, to attribute to him μὴ εἶναι θεὸν, not being God? As the counterfeit Dionyſius (e) intituleth God ἀλογία, καὶ ἀνοησία καὶ ἀνωνυμία, vacuity of Speech, of Mind and of Name: So according to Marius Victorinus he muſt be intituled ἀνουσία, Vacuity of Eſſence; but they muſt be more than ſubtil Metaphyſicians that enſtyle him Ἀθεΐα, Atheonſneſs and Vacuity of God. Yet to theſe Sublimities of Madneſs and Impiety the counterfeit Dionyſius proceedeth, and Eugubinus doth not diſallow them; (f) apud Dionyſium eſt negatoria Theologia, quod Deus non ſit Deus: there is a negative kind of Theology in Dionyſius (ſaith he) that God is not God. The Platonic Philo is not much ſhort of the counterfeit Dionyſius; for he affirmeth, (g) That this Saying, I am thy God, is ſpoken Catachreſtically, not properly; for Ens as being Ens, is not of the number of Relatives. The Reward which he allotteth to the virtuous is of the ſame ſtrain. (h) What more florid and becoming Garland can be made for the virtuous and victorious Soul than that, whereby it may with acute Eye-ſight contemplate Ens? But the Beatitude which the truly Religious aſpire after, is (not to ſee Ens, but) to ſee God, which is a Name that they much prefer before the Metaphyſical and Platonic Ens (wherewith the Scholaſticks make wild work in Theology,) as being far more ample, definitive, comprehenſive, deſcriptive, auguſt and venerable, and of kind the Holy, Religious and Divine Name, which the Metaphyſical Name Ens is not. What thing ſoever belonging to God, the Name ὁ ὢν Ens, denoteth (from whence that Name is given him) the Name ὁ θεὸς, God, denoteth the ſame and much more. It denoteth his Divinity of State and Nature, of Kind and Degree, his being God both on his part and ours, the whole of his being God. And as Noble Mens Titles of Honour are in a certain Senſe their Proper Names; for they are called by them, as other Men are by their Proper Names, and thoſe Names are the Proper Names of that Honour, Dignity and Eſtate of Nobilitation which they are: So the Name God is in a certain Senſe the Divine Majeſty's proper Name; it is the Name whereby he ought to be called, as Men are by their Proper Names, and it is the Proper Name of that Honour, Dignity and Eſtate of Nobilitation which he is (which cannot be ſaid of the Metaphyſical Name ὁ ὢν, Ens) according to that excellent Saying of Greg. Nyſſen. (i) συμφυὲς ἐστὶν ἀξίωμα τῷ θεῷ αὐτὴ ἡ θεότης, the Godhead it ſelf is a Dignity connatural to God. The Name God therefore is his definitive Name, if the Name Ens be ſubſtituted inſtead of it, God is deſtroy'd, as will appear preſently.

III. Conſect. The Hebrew Name Jehovah cannot be thought of inferiour condition to the Name God, and therefore cannot be the ſame with the Metaphyſical Ens; but it ought to be look'd upon as the proper diſtinctive Name of the true God, ſignifying his being God in reality (and therefore comprehenſively and incluſively whatever the Metaphyſical Name Ens ſignifieth) and his being a God in reality to the Hebrews. It is generally agreed, that the Name Jehovah (or Jah, or Ehjeh, which may juſtly be reckon'd the ſame Name) ſignifieth ὁ ὢν, he that is, or τὸ ὄν, id quod eſt (that which is) or ὁ ἐσόμενος, he that will be; for it is deriv'd from הוה or היה, which ſignifieth, to be or exiſt. In Exod. 3. 14. the Septuagint render the Name Ehjeh ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ ὢν, I am he that is, ὁ ὢν ἀπέσταλκέ με, he that is hath ſent me. An ancient Interpreter Theodotion rendreth the Name Jah τὸ ὄν, (k) Hallelu Jah he rendreth αἰνεῖτε τὸ ὄν, praiſe that which is. (l) In Clemens Alexandrinus the Name Tetragrammaton or Jehovah is interpreted ὁ ὢν καὶ ἐσόμενος, he that is and will be. (m) Euthymius interpreteth the Name Jah in like manner as the Name Jehovah τὸν ὄντα, he that is. (n) Origen accounteth Ἰὰ and Ἰαὰ the ſame word in Senſe, becauſe ὁ ὢν utroque ſignificatur, the ſignification of both of them is Ens or he that is: So Druſius in his Tetragrammaton calleth that Name, and thoſe other Jah and Ehjeh, nomina τοῦ ὄντος, the Names of Ens or he that is. And becauſe all the Learned agree, that the Hebrew Name Jehovah cometh from a Root, which ſignifieth nothing but Eſſence or Exiſtence, (o) hence one of them will have the Greek Name κύριος (by which the LXX render the Name Jehovah) deriv'd from κύρω or κυρῶ in its ancient ſignification, in which ſignification it is the ſame with εἰμὶ or ὑπάρχω, ſum, I am, ſo that κύριος immediately deriv'd from thence muſt be ὁ ὢν or ὁ ὑπάρχων (he that is) and conſequently the proper Interpretation of Jehovah. Thus that Hebrew Name at firſt ſight ſeemeth to be the very ſame Name with the Metaphyſical ὁ ὢν or Ens, and accordingly both amongſt the Hebrew Doctors and in the Chriſtian Church they have been taken for the ſame Name (ſome counting them abſolutely the ſame Name, others making them for the main the ſame;) to rectifie which miſtakes in the Scholaſtick Theology, we will illuſtrate this Conſectary by taking into conſideration three things touching the Name Jehovah. 1. The Dignity of it. 2. The full Expreſſion of it. 3. The Senſe and Reaſon of it.

IV. The Dignity of this great Name would be as unſpeakable, as the Name it ſelf is ſuppos'd to be by the Jews, if the ineffable Myſteries which

(c) In Aquin. 1. par. Qu. 13. Art. 11.

(d) Petav. ſupra, c. 5. ſ. 9.

(e) Ibid. c. 6. ſ. 11. & c. 5. ſ. 9.

(f) Ubi ſupr.

(g) Ὅτι τὸ ἐγώ εἰμι θεὸς σὸς λέγεται καταχρηστικῶς, οὐ κυρίως· τὸ γὰρ ὄν, ᾗ ὄν ἐστιν, οὐχὶ τῶν πρός τι. Opuſcul. p. 9.

(h) Τίς δ' ἂν εὐανθέστερος, ἢ ἐπιτηδειότερος πλέκοιτο νικηφόρῳ ψυχῇ στέφανος, ᾗ δι' οὗ τὸ ὄντα δυνήσεται θεωρεῖν ὀξυδερκῶς; Ibid. p. 29.

(i) C. Eunom. l. 1. p. 117.

(k) S. Amam. Antibarb. Bibl. p. 475.

(l) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 32.

(m) Fuller. Miſc. l. 4. c. 13.

(n) Ibid.

(o) Biſhop Pearſon on the Creed, Art. 2.

which they imagine to be in the Letters of it, were not meerly imaginary. (p) Menaſſeh ben Iſrael hath given a large Account of the Grammatical, Arithmetical, Muſical, Cabaliſtical Myſteries, which the Jews find or fancy in the Letters of the Name of Jehovah, and of the wonder-working Power, which they aſcribe to it (as that when King Menaſſeh ſought to ſlay the Prophet Iſaiah, he by pronouncing this Name incloſ'd himſelf in a Cedar-tree;) ſo Moſes and Chriſt himſelf wrought Miracles by their knowledge and uſe of this Name, as the Jews ſuppoſe. The Chriſtians following the Jews Example have alſo diſcover'd many Myſteries in the Name Jehovah, which were never there; ſuch as (q) the Myſtery of the Trinity, the two Natures of Chriſt, and the origin of the Name Jeſus. The Letters of it (r) which the Jews call flatus literæ (that are pronounc'd meerly by the Breath) are ſaid, to indicate, that all have their Life and Breath from God; and its quieſcent Letters are ſaid to indicate, that in him only is true and ſolid reſt: All which are groundleſs Imaginations. (s) The ſignification alſo of three times, paſt, preſent and to come, conceiv'd to be in this Name (in the contrivance of the Letters and Vowels of it) ſeemeth to be deſtitute of any good and ſolid Foundation. Of the ſame nature is that Conceit of ſome Learned Men, (t) that this Hebrew Name according to one mode of pronouncing it in Greek is Jeova, and that in this mode of pronouncing it the ſeven Greek Vowels are contain'd; and therefore this Name ſo pronounc'd in Greek is the celebrated Name of Seven Vowels. It is much more probable, that this Name as it is in the Hebrew, was call'd by ſome Ancients the Name of Seven Vowels; for although its Letters are all Conſonants, that doth not hinder, but that this Name might be call'd the Name of Seven Vowels anciently, if thoſe Conſonants were reputed Vowels. Now, Jod and Vau are by S. Hierom call'd Vowels, (u) and He ſeemeth to have been a Vowel (before the uſe of Points) among the ancient Hebrews. (w) P. Burgenſis ſaith, Literæ omnes ſunt vocales, all its Letters are Vowels; and Joſephus ſaith, That the Tetragrammaton is τέσσαρα φωνήεντα, four Vowels. Now, there is little reaſon to doubt, but that (howſoever the Name Jehovah was read and pronounc'd) with theſe four Letters reputed Vowels three real Vowels were conjoyn'd for the reading and pronunciation of them; for although ſome Grammarians will ſcarce allow Scheva to be call'd a Vowel, yet a better Hebrician than any of them (x) expreſly calleth it by that Name; therefore the Hebrew Name Jehovah may be the Name of Seven Vowels (y) mention'd by Euſebius, if we admit the Hebrew Vowels, to be called Letters in Greek, as the Greeks call their own Vowels.

Ἑπτά με φωνήεντα θεὸν μέγαν ἄφθιτον αἰνεῖ
Γράμματα, τὸν πάντων ἀκάματον πατέρα.

I a great God, immortal, perpetual,
Father of the great Machine Univerſal
Have my Name form'd of Seven Letters vocal.

The Jews know not (z) the Pronunciation of the Name Jehovah, but have wholly loſt it from about the time of the deſtruction of their Second Temple; (a) which ſeemeth to have been (not meerly an effect of their Superſtition, but) an adorable Providence, that when they loſt their God and ceas'd to be his People (at the deſtruction of their Temple a ſolemn Divorce was given them,) they ſhould alſo loſe his Name as their God, and be thenceforth ignorant of his proper Name; (b) for they have rightly call'd this Name המיוחד his proper Name, to him alone attributed, whereas the Name Elohim is a Name communicated to others; but as for this Name (ſaith Kimchi) none partaketh with him. Names may be called Proper Names in ſeveral Senſes and Notions, which the Jews are not careful to diſtinguiſh: But from the Account which they give of this Proper Name, it is manifeſt, that they look upon it as a Proper Name in the common ordinary Senſe, as Iſaac or Jacob is a Proper Name; for they obſerve (and all the Learned in Hebrew agree with them,) that it hath all the Characters of ſuch a Proper Name; it admitteth not the demonſtrative He at the beginning of it, nor an Affix at the end of it, nor of the Plural Number, nor of the ſtate of Conſtruction, or to be in regimine, (c) ſicut non dicitur ὁ Σωκράτης μȣ Socrates mei, ſo it is not ſaid Jehova Abrahæ, Jehova Iſaaci. Sometimes indeed Jehova Zebaoth occurreth in Scripture; (d) but that is an elliptical form of Speech (wherein the Name Elohim or Adonai is underſtood), which fully expreſs'd is Jehova Elohe exercituum, Jehovah the God of Hoſts, 1 King. 19. 10, 14. Some of the Learned ſay, (e) it is certain, that ſometimes it (the Name Jehovah) hath the nature of an Appellative, as Deut. 6. 4. The Lord our God is יהוה אחד one Jehovah, which our Engliſh Tranſlation rendreth one Lord. There is no fault in this Tranſlation; but the meaning of the Text is miſtaken, when an Argument is founded upon it, to prove, that the Name Jehovah hath the nature of an Appellative; for the Text is a Law againſt Polytheiſm and Idolatry; it ſaith, the Lord our God is one Jehovah (but one, and that one is Jehovah) in oppoſition to any more, or any other Gods. The Name Jehovah therefore in this Text hath not the nature of an Appellative, but is the proper diſtinctive Name of the true God, the God of Iſrael. Agreeably to this Text Moſes ſaith to Iſrael, Deut. 4. 35. Unto thee it was ſhew'd, that thou mighteſt know, that יהוה Jehovah he is God, there is none elſe beſides him. Iſrael therefore muſt have but one God, and that one God muſt be Jehovah, which is the meaning of that great Law, Deut. 6. 4. Hear, O Iſrael, Jehovah our God is (but) one (and that one is) Jehovah. Much of the Buſineſs of the Old Teſtament is, to declare, who is the one true God by his one Proper Name Jehovah, (f) which is not communicated to any other, but appropriated to him alone, as Maimonides and all the Rabbins ſay, and as Abarbinel operoſely demonſtrateth.

Exod. 20. 2, 3. I am Jehovah thy God (or I Jehovah am thy God,) — thou ſhalt have no other God before me. Pſal. 81. 9, 10. There ſhall no ſtrange God be in thee, neither ſhalt thou Worſhip any ſtrange God. I Jehovah am thy God. 1 King. 18. 39. Jehovah he is the God, Jehovah he is the God. Pſal. 83. 18. That all Men may know, that thou whoſe Name alone is Jehovah, art the moſt High over all the Earth. Deut. 7. 9. Know therefore, that Jehovah thy God, he is God. 1 King. 8. 60. That all the People of the Earth may know, that Jehovah is God, and that there is none elſe. Iſa. 43. 11, 12. I, even I, am Jehovah, and beſide me there is no Saviour. —— ye are my Witneſſes, ſaith Jehovah, that I am God. Iſa. 44. 6. Thus ſaith Jehovah the King of Iſrael, —— I am the Firſt, and I am the Laſt, and beſides me there is no God. Iſa. 45. 6. I am Jehovah and there is none elſe, there is no God be- ſides

(p) In Exod. Qu. 3.

(q) P. Fagius in Exod. 28. 30. v. Druſ. Not. in Tetragram.

(r) P. Fagius in Exod. 6. 3.

(s) Fuller. Miſc. l. 2. c. 6.

(t) Ibid. l. 4. c. 13.

(u) Petav. T. 1. l. 8. c. 9. S. 4.

(w) Addit. in c. 3. Exod.

(x) Coſri p. 143. ed. Buxt.

(y) Pr. Ev. l. 11. c. 6.

(z) Pocock on Hoſ. 12. 5.

(a) Walton Proleg. 8. S. 19.

(b) Pocock ſupr. v. Druſ. Tetragr. c. 2. & 5. Hotting. Diſſ. p. 251. Zanch. de Nat. Dei, l. 1. c. 13.

(c) Petav. ſupr. l. 8. c. 9. S. 3.

(d) Zanch. ſupr.

(e) Biſhop Pearſon, ſupr. p. 302. ed. 1.

(f) Hotting. Diſſ. p. 251, 252 Hoornbeck. c. Jud. l. 5. c. 2. p. 394.

ſides me. v. 21, 22. Who hath declared this from ancient time? Who hath told it from that time? Have not I Jehovah? And there is no God elſe beſide me. —— I am God and there is none elſe. Jer. 32. 17. Behold I Jehovah am the God of all Fleſh. Hoſ. 13. 4. I am Jehovah thy God from the Land of Egypt, and thou ſhalt know no God but me; for there is no Saviour beſide me. The Name Jehovah pervadeth the Old Teſtament as the proper diſtinctive Name of the one true God; for of this Nature and Notion it is, when it is the proper diſtinctive Name of the moſt high God, Gen. 14. 22. I have liſt up mine hand unto Jehovah the moſt high God, or when it is the proper diſtinctive Name of the God of Heaven and Earth. Gen. 24. 3. I will make thee ſwear by Jehovah the God of Heaven, and the God of the Earth. Jon. 1. 9. I am an Hebrew, and I fear Jehovah the God of Heaven. Or when it is the proper Name of the God of Hoſts. Hoſ. 12. 5. Jehovah the God of Hoſts, Jehovah is his Memorial. Or when it is the proper Name of the mighty God. Pſal. 50. 1. The mighty God Jehovah hath ſpoken. Or when it is the proper Name of the God of Gods. Joſh. 22. 22. Jehovah the God of Gods. Or when it is the proper Name of the holy God. Joſh. 24. 9. Ye cannot ſerve Jehovah, for he is an holy God. Or when it is the proper Name of the God of Iſrael. Exod. 3. 18. Jehovah God of the Hebrews. 1 King. 8. 23. Jehovah God of Iſrael, there is no God like thee. And that we ought to conſider Jehovah as the Name of the one true God, appeareth from the Prophet. Jer. 10. 10. Jehovah is the true God, he is the living God and an everlaſting King. God uſually noticeth himſelf by it as by his proper Name. Gen. 15. 7. and 28. 13. Exod. 34. 6. He calleth it his Name, thereby to diſtinguiſh himſelf the one true God from all pretending Deities. Iſa. 42. 8. I am Jehovah, that is my Name, and my Glory will I not give to another. So Moſes intendeth, to notice him as the one only true God, when he ſaith, Exod. 15. 3. Jehovah is his Name. Whereſoever therefore the Name Jehovah occurreth in Scripture, when it ſpeaketh of calling upon the Name of Jehovah, the Way of Jehovah, the Houſe of Jehovah (multitudes of the like Expreſſions occur in Scripture;) when the Ark ſeemeth to be called by this Name, or when it is the ingredient of a Title put upon an Altar, or a City, or when it is put upon the Angel of God's Name, in theſe and all other Inſtances it muſt be conſider'd as the proper diſtinctive Name of the one only true God. From whence it followeth, that the Name Jehovah is equivalent to this Name the one true God; and therefore it can be nothing leſs than this Name God; for this Name God and the one true God are the ſame Name, according to that of Plotinus (g) ὐδ' ἄλλο μὲν φιλόσοφος, ἄλλο δὲ ὁ ἀληθινὸς, a Philoſopher and a true Philoſopher is the ſame. The Name Jehovah therefore being no leſs than the Name God may juſtly be call'd by the Jews (h) השם the Name (in a Senſe of Excellence,) הנכבד the Name to be honour'd, יתעלה the Name to be extoll'd, יתברך the Name to be bleſſed, שמא רבא the great Name, הנורא the reverend or fearful Name, שם כבודו his glorious Name, or the Name of his Glory. Becauſe this Name was of peculiar Reverence anciently, when it was pronounc'd, hence (as I ſuppoſe) the Jews have call'd it שם המפורש, Shem hammephoraſh, Nomen explicatum. For this Epithet ſeems to ſignifie a Name that being pronounc'd is of great Reverence.

V. The full expreſſion of this Name is the God (or the Lord) Jehovah. For as the proper Name of any Honour or Dignity (Lord, King or Emperor) muſt in the full expreſſion of it be conjoin'd and complicated with the Name of his Honour and Dignity (as the Lord Jeſus, King David, the Emperor Theodoſius;) for that is his Name fully expreſs'd: So the proper Name of any God real or reputative, muſt in the full expreſſion of it, be conjoin'd and complicated with this Name God or Goddeſs (as the God Berith, the Goddeſs Diana;) for that is his Name fully expreſs'd. If therefore the Name Jehovah is the proper Name of a God (as all the Learned agree,) that Name fully expreſs'd muſt be the God (or the Lord) Jehovah, as all the Heathen Writers expreſs it. (i) Sanchoniathan (ſaith Porphyry) receiv'd his Information of the Jews Affairs from a Prieſt of the God Ieuo or Jehovah (παρὰ τῦ ἱερέως Θεῦ τῦ Ιευὼ:) And Diodorus Sic. ſaith of Moſes, that he feigned τὸν Ἰάω ἐπικαλέμενον θεὸν, the God called Iao (or Jehovah,) to have deliver'd his Laws to him. The Oracle of Apollo Clarius was conſulted, Quis Deorum habendus ſit, qui vocatur Ἰάω, who of the Gods that is which is called Iao? The Name Iao therefore fully expreſs'd according to the Heathen Writers is this Name the God Iao. And in like manner both the Jewiſh and Chriſtian Writers ſometimes expreſs the Name Jehovah. For Zanchy looketh upon it as an effect of Providence, that the Name God in all Nations conſiſteth of four Letters, and therefore he ſaith of it, (k) Certè non ſine ſingulari Providentia Dei Jehovæ hoc factum eſt, ſurely this was not done without the ſingular Providence of the God Jehovah. R. Jehuda Levita ſaith, as Men. Ben. Iſrael repreſenteth him. (l) If any one asketh what God is to be worſhipp'd, the Sun, Moon, Heavens, Stars, Planets, Signs, Fire, Air, the Genii or the like, becauſe every one of theſe hath his Empire and his force in the generation and corruption of things: The anſwer muſt be, that our Worſhip ought to be done to the Lord Tetragrammaton (Jehovah,) in the ſame manner as we diſtinguiſh Reuben, Simeon and other Men from the reſt by their proper Names. In this Diſcourſe of an Hebrew Doctor we may obſerve in the firſt place; that if the Queſtion be ask'd quis Deus colendus ſit, to what God muſt we do our Religious Worſhip? It ſuppoſeth, that the Anſwer ought to be Deo Jehovæ, to the God Jehovah; for this Anſwer beſt ſuiteth to the Terms of the Queſtion, and thus he intendeth to anſwer, that uſeth an equivalent expreſſion Domino Tetragrammato to the Lord Tetragrammaton or Jehovah; and therefore he ſuppoſeth, that the Name of God fully expreſs'd is the God or the Lord Jehovah.

A Second thing is obſervable in our Hebrew Doctor's Diſcourſe; that the Name Jehovah is not equivalent to the Name God in every Notion; for then there could be no occaſion for the Queſtion, Quis Deus colendus ſit, to what God muſt we perform our Worſhip? The Pagan Polytheiſts by the Name God uſually mean (m) τὶς τῶν θεῶν, ſome one of the Gods. But the Name Jehovah is equivalent to the Name God in the true and holy Popular Notion and the ſtrictly Religious Senſe. Accordingly, the Name God is often us'd in Scripture inſtead of the

---

(g) En. 3. l. 7. c. 5.

(h) Druſ. Tetragram. c. 5.

(i) Fuller. Miſc. l. 2. c. 6. Voſſ. de Idol. l. 2. c. 14.

(k) De Nat. Dei l. 1. c. 13.

(l) Si quis quærat quis Deus colendus ſit, Sol, Luna, Cœli, Stellæ, Planetæ, Signa, Ignis, Aer, an Genii aut ſimilia, quia cuique horum ſuum imperium & ſua vis ſit in generatione & corruptione rerum: Reſpondendum eſſe, Domino Tetragrammato perinde atque Reubenem ac Simeonem, & mortalium alios propriis nominibus à cæteris diſtinguimus. In Exod. Qu. 3.

(m) Jamb. de vit. Pythag. c. 1.

Name Jehovah. (n) As 2 Sam. 7. 3. Jehovah is with thee. For which is written 1 Chron. 17. 2. God is with thee. 2 King. 11. 10. The Houſe of Jehovah: For which in 2 Chron. 23. 9. is the Houſe of God. So the Mouth of Jehovah Deut. 8. 3. is interpreted the Mouth of God, Matth. 4. 4. Belief in Jehovah, Gen. 15. 6. is Belief in God, Rom. 4. 3. Jam. 2. 23. Jehovah hath given me, Iſa. 8. 18. is, God hath given me, Heb. 2. 13.

A Third thing is obſervable in our Hebrew Doctor's Diſcourſe; that the Name Jehovah is ſuch a proper Name, as Reuben and Simeon, and that by this Name one God is diſtinguiſh'd from another (the true from the fictitious,) as Men are diſtinguiſh'd from one another by their proper Names. From whence it followeth (the proper Names of Gods being of the ſame Nature with the proper Names of Men,) that as the Heathen Gods were diſtinguiſh'd from one another by their proper Names (Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, and ſuch more,) ſo the God of the Hebrews was diſtinguiſh'd from them all by his proper Name Jehovah. And as the Name of an Heathen God is not fully expreſs'd, unleſs his proper Name be conjoin'd and complicated with the Name God (as the God Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Bacchus :) So the Name of the Hebrew God is not fully expreſs'd but in this manner the God or the Lord Jehovah. Accordingly he is ſtiled in Scripture אדני יהוה Lord Jehovah, and יהוה אדני Jehovah the Lord, and יהוה אלהים Jehovah God, which is ſuch a Name as Antiochus, ϑεὸς, Antiochus God.

When Moſes was commanded to tell the Iſraelites in Egypt, the God of your Fathers hath ſent me unto you, he foreſaw that they would ask, what is his Name? The Iſraelites in Egypt were laps'd into Heathen Idolatry and Polytheiſm, and therefore their interrogatory muſt be underſtood in the Senſe of Heathen Idolaters and Polytheiſts. Now, if Heathen Polytheiſts ask, what is the Name of a God? They mean a proper Name ſuperadded to the common Name God (like a Cognomen,) whereby that God is diſtinguiſh'd from all other Gods. And that this was the Senſe of the Iſraelites Queſtion (o) is plain from the like Queſtion, which the Heathen uſually ask'd the Chriſtians in the Primitive times. The Primitive Chriſtians could not tell the Heathen any ſuch proper diſtinctive Name, which their God had: But Moſes was furniſh'd with ſuch a proper diſtinctive Name, God ſaid unto Moſes, thus ſhalt thou ſay unto the Children of Iſrael, Ehjeh aſher Ehjeh, and again Ehjeh hath ſent me unto you. This Name being deſign'd for an anſwer to the Idolatrous and Polytheiſtic Iſraelites, cannot be underſtood, to be the Name of God ſingly and ſeparately, but only in Conjunction and Complication with the Name God in this manner; the God Ehjeh aſher Ehjeh, or the God Ehjeh (the ſame Name with the God Jehovah) hath ſent me unto you.

VI. The Senſe and Reaſon of this Name is that twofold verity and reality of being (or being in verity and reality,) which it denoteth and ſignifieth: Namely, the verity and reality of being A God and what is God-eminence (which comprehendeth and includeth whatever the Metaphyſical Name Ens denoteth;) and the verity or reality of being a God to the Hebrews. For upon this account and for this reaſon, to denote both theſe realities of being, the God of the Hebrews would be called Jehovah. All the Learned agree, that this Name Jehovah is the ſame with ὁ ὢν, or Ens, (Buxtorf in his Hebrew Lexicon, and Schindler alſo render it Ens;) they alſo agree, that the Name ὁ ὢν, or Ens, as it is the ſame with Jehovah, denoteth and ſignifieth (emphatically) verity and reality of being (the oppoſite to nothingneſs, ſhew and figment;) that it ſignifieth (p) him that is in truth and reality, (q) that which indeed is, (r) him who alone truly is, that hath true and ſincere being, and not only hath the Name, but truly is. They ſuppoſe therefore, that the Name Jehovah denoteth truth and reality of being, and that this is the Engliſh of it, he that is in truth and reality. And becauſe the Name Ehjeh or I am, Exod. 3. 14. muſt neceſſarily involve in it the ſame Notion, therefore it muſt neceſſarily ſignifie I am in truth and reality. Thus far there can be no matter of debate touching the ſignification of the Name Jehovah; for God himſelf implicitly affirmeth, Exod. 6. 3. that his Name denoteth truth and reality of being. But from this acknowledg'd ſignification of his Name this debate ariſeth; whether the truth and reality of being which the Name Jehovah denoteth, muſt be underſtood only or mainly in the Metaphyſical ſenſe touching Eſſence and Exiſtence Metaphyſical, (conformably to the Metaphyſical Name Ens, or id quod eſt,) or primarily and principally in a Popular-religious Senſe touching the truth and reality of being God (and what is God-eminence,) and the reality of being a God to the Hebrews? The former of theſe Interpretations of the Name Jehovah (the Metaphyſical) is liable to many and great exceptions, and the latter of them (the Popular-religious) will appear, to be the true and genuine by many Arguments, ſuch as theſe following.

VII. The Rabbins that are the Metaphyſical Interpreters of the Name Jehovah, and the great Patrons of that Interpretation, uſually diſtort the Scriptures from the Popular-religious Senſe to a common Metaphyſical and Philoſophical Senſe, and ſo far criminally Philoſophic-Paganize the Scripture-Theology. So Maimonides buſieth himſelf to prove, (s) that God alone is true or truth, and there is no truth in any like his truth (whereby he meaneth, that nothing elſe truly is.) For though we ſay, that created things exiſt, yet the word exiſt is not Univocal, but Equivocal (we ſay Analogical, not equally Predicated,) when attributed to God and created things. For they have Potentia mix'd with Act, and Neceſſity with Contingence, and Exiſtence with Privation: But there is none of this in God, and therefore his Truth and theirs is not alike. And this he proveth from a Saying of the Prophet Jeremiah, Dominus Deus veritas eſt, Jehovah God is Truth. Jer. 10. 10. Moſes ſaith Deut. 4. 35. Jehovah he is God, there is none elſe beſides him. Which words plainly mean, that there is no other God beſides him: But the Rabbins have found out another meaning of them, (t) that nothing is in Exiſtence beſides him. The ſeparate Intelligences (ſay they) are called Elohim, how then can it be ſaid, that there is no other Eloah (God) beſides him? Tetragrammaton docet de Exiſtentiæ veritate, the Tetragrammaton ſpeaketh of the truth of Exiſtence; and therefore the meaning of the word is, there is (n) Ainſworth on Gen. 2. 4.

Exod. 3. 13, 14.

(o) Euſeb. H. E. l. 5. c. 1. Min. Fel. p. 143, 144.

(p) Τὸν ὄντα μετ' ἀληθείας.

(q) Τὸ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὄν, τὸ ὄντως ὄν. Druſ. Tetragram. c. 5.

(r) Τὸν ὄντως μόνον ὄντα, Eſſe verum, eſſe ſincerum, eſſe germanum, quod vocatur, & non ſolum vocatur, ſed verè eſt. Hic ſolus verè eſt, & ideo veritas eſt. Ipſe ſolus eſt. Eſt enim verè ſolus. Petav. T. 1. l. 1. c. 6. S. 6, 9.

(s) V. Abravanel. de cap. Fid. ap. Vorſt. p. 95.

(t) Ibid. p. 97, 98.

no Exiſtent of neceſſary Exiſtence beſides him. Non eſt verum Exiſtens præter illum ſolum, nomen enim Jod, He, Vau, He de veritate docet. There is no other true Exiſtent beſides him only, for the Name Tetragrammaton meaneth truth of Exiſtence. Thus the Rabbins interpret Scripture, not like ſerious Religious People, but like (themſelves) Profane Sophiſts and Scholaſticks. And ſeeing they have manifeſtly perverted ſeveral places of Scripture by interpreting them in favour of their Metaphyſical Conceits touching the Name Jehovah, it is but reaſonable to ſuppoſe (the Scriptures being Homogeneous,) that they have perverted the Scripture in all places, which they interpret to that purpoſe.

VIII. The Rabbins in their account of the Name Jehovah are ſuperlative Metaphyſicians; for they ſuppoſe, both that God is ſo denominated from his Eſſence and Exiſtence in the Metaphyſical Senſe, and that the Name denoteth his naked Eſſence abſtracted from his Godhead of Eſtate and from the Divine Attributes, which yet are no leſs Eſſential to God, nor leſs neceſſarily Exiſtent than his naked Eſſence or Subſtance. Theſe are great Metaphyſical Subtilties, and who can believe that the Holy Bible ſhould oblige Men to buſie their Heads about ſuch uſeleſs Metaphyſical Abſtractions, which the generality of Religious People are incapable of, which properly belong to the common Learning of Metaphyſicks, and are of no concern in Religion? yet thus the Hebrew Doctors ſay; Other Names are attributed to God according to his various actions and the effects of them: (u) But the Tetragrammaton denoteth only the very Eſſence of the Divinity. The Name Ehje and the Tetragrammaton are Names of the Divine Eſſence. The Tetragrammaton is called the Name explicated or expounded, becauſe clearly and without any equivocation it denoteth the Subſtance of the Creator. I am that I am is in Hebrew a Name deriv'd from the verb Hajah, which ſignifieth Eſſence or Exiſtence. The Hebrew Doctors therefore ſuppoſe, that the Tetragrammaton denoteth the Self-ſubſiſtent Eſſence as ſuch, and conſequently it denoteth Neceſſity, Eternity, and verity of Exiſtence. It ſignifieth ſomething (ſay they,) that hath neceſſary Exiſtence, the Eternity and Exiſtence of God. God bad Moſes tell the Iſraelites, Ehjeh (I am) hath ſent me, as if he had bid him, ſhew and prove to them, (w) Me to be who am (ſaith Maimonides,) that is, my Eſſence to be ſelf-ſubſiſtent, and not dependent on another, as all other which exiſt, becauſe they had their origine from me, and ſo are that they might not, and yet may not be. One Branch of the Rabbins account of the Name Jehovah is not eaſily reconcileable with the other; for they ſay, it denoteth Neceſſity, Verity, Eternity of Exiſtence, that are Attributes which ſeemeth to claſh with that grand Scholaſtick Notion of theirs; (x) Between the Tetragrammaton and the other Names of God there is this difference; they denote not the Subſtance of God only, but as having Attributes or Properties; the Tetragrammaton denoteth his Subſtance only. This Rabbinical Scholaſticiſm is entertain'd by the Schoolmen, the learned Philologers and Modern Divines of the Chriſtian Church. The Names Jehovah, Ehjeh, Jah, are intituled (y) the Names that denote the Eſſence of God. (z) It ſignifieth the pure Eſſence of God, which is not intelligible or explicable, therefore the Jews think it unlawful to pronounce this Name Jehovah. (a) It was impoſed, to ſignifie the very incommunicable and ſingular Subſtance of God. (b) It ſignifieth an Eſſence the moſt Simple and Eternal. (c) This Name alone is deſign'd, to ſignifie the Eſſence of the Divine Majeſty, plainly, expreſly and abſolutely. (d) I am that I am is the proper and eſſential Name of God (all Divines agree in this, I know none that differ,) becauſe it expreſſeth him in his Eſſence without any limitation or modification. (e) Many learned Men ſuppoſe, that the Name Ehjeh and Jehovah doth not only ſignifie τὸν ὄντα, him that is or ſubſiſteth, but alſo τὸν οὐσιοῦντα, Him that giveth Eſſence and Subſiſtence to all things elſe: But this Interpretation is altogether groundleſs.

IX. The ancient Fathers in their Interpretations of Scripture which concern the Name Jehovah, follow'd Philo, who was little better than a Philoſophic Pagan; and who ſeemeth to have been the firſt Author of the Metaphyſical Interpretation of the Name I am that I am. His uſual Name for God is τὸ ὄν, Ens, (underſtood as a Metaphyſical or Platonic Name,) which Name he hath a peculiar kindneſs for, (f) becauſe he ſuppoſeth, that we cannot know, who God is (being better than Good, more ſimple than a Monad,) but only that he is and ſubſiſteth; and becauſe no other Name can be properly attributed to God. Therefore Moſes (ſaith he) was commanded, to tell the Iſraelites, when they inquir'd, what is his Name that ſent thee, Ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ ὤν, I am he that is. (g) That having learned the difference between Ens and Non Ens (as Gelenius rendreth the words of Philo,) they might alſo be taught, that no Name can properly be attributed to me, to whom only being is competible. It is ſcarce credible, that Divine Moſes was imploy'd, to teach Mankind the difference between Ens and Non-Ens, or to read to thoſe poor Slaves the Iſraelites in Egypt a Lecture of Metaphyſicks, of ſuch Metaphyſicks which are no where proper but in the Schools, and which the generality of Mankind would nauſeate as uncouth Scholaſticiſm; although it muſt be acknowledg'd, that there is a Metaphyſical diſparagement of created Beings involv'd in it, which (in ſome degree) is true and laudable. For upon this account (ſaith Philo) God ſaith of himſelf Ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ ὤν, I am he that is, (h) ſignifying, that thoſe things which are after him, are not indeed, but only (which is too much to be ſaid of the Spiritual and Eternal things) are reputed to ſubſiſt by Opinion. (i) Agreeably to Philo Epiphanius ſaith of God, that he is αὐτὸ τοῦτο ὄν, illud ipſum quod eſt, that very thing that is, as Moſes ſaid to the Children of Iſrael, ὁ ὢν ἀπέσταλκέ με, he that is ſent me. (k) He that is, is Ens, and Ens is Eſſence or Subſtance. Euſebius diſcourſeth, that τὸ ὄν, the Ens of Moſes is the very ſame with τὸ ὄν, the Ens of Plato, Numenius and Plutarch, and that Plato deriv'd his Metaphyſical τὸ ὂν ἀεὶ, γένεσιν δὲ οὐκ ἔχον, that which ſempiternally is without Geneſis, and his ἀΐδιος οὐσία, eternal Subſtance, (l) to which the ſucceſſive parts of time Erat, Eſt, Erit, are not applicable, (only τὸ ἐστι, it is, may be applied thereto,) from the holy Scriptures; and therefore he concludeth his Diſcourſe with the ſaying of Numenius, τί γὰρ ἐστι Πλάτων, ἢ Μωσῆς ἀττικίζων; what is Plato but Moſes in Greek? Becauſe τὸ ὄν (that which is) is ſo much celebrated in the School of Plato, (m) S. Auſtin is prone, to think, that he was acquainted with the Books of Moſes, and with that Name of God in them Ego ſum qui ſum, qui eſt miſit me ad vos. A Modern Writer Druſius (n) having obſerv'd that the Name Jah is the ſame with τὸ ὄν, Ens, proceedeth to ſay, Ita Plato Deum nominat, ſo Plato calleth God. Nota vox Ariſtotelis, quam moriens emiſiſſe fertur, Ens Entium miſerere mei. The words of Ariſtotle, which he is reported to have utter'd dying, are known, Being of Beings have Mercy on me. (o) Gr. Naz. thinketh the Name Ens (ὁ ὢν) the name of Eſſence a more accommodate Name for the Deity than the Name God, for this reaſon (amongſt others,) becauſe he put upon himſelf this Name, when he bad Moſes tell the People ὁ ὢν, he that is hath ſent me. S. Cyril alſo Philonizing ſaith of God (p) to whom (the Metaphyſical) Ens is the moſt proper Name. By degrees this Metaphyſical Name came to be of ſuch repute in the Church (Scholaſticizing and Philoſophic-paganizing in her Theology,) that the ſame Father ſaith of the Son of God, (q) ἔστι τοίνυν ἐξ Ὄντος ὁ ὢν, καὶ ὄνομα τοῦτο προσφυέστατον αὐτῷ, he is Ens from Ens, and that is the moſt accommodate Name for him. So Clemens ſaith of the Father appearing in the Son, (r) ἐπεφάνη ὁ ἐν τῷ ὄντι ὤν, he that is appeared in him that is. (s) Athanaſius proveth againſt the Arians, that according to the Scriptures God may be ſaid, to have an Eſſence, becauſe himſelf ſaith in Exodus ἐγὼ εἰμὶ ὁ ὤν, I am Ens. (t) there is one ὄντως οὖσα οὐσία, Eſſence that truly and indeed is, which ſaith ἐγὼ εἰμὶ ὁ ὤν, I am Ens. So (u) Origen, (w) S. Cyril, (x) S. Hierom, S. Hilary, S. Ambroſe, S. Auſtin, and ſeveral other ancient Writers of the Church interpret that Name, to ſignifie, that the Divine Nature alone truly is, and that the Deity only is τὸ ὄντως ὄν, that which indeed is, becauſe his Being is ſelf-originate, ſempiternal, immutable, without temporary flux and ſucceſſion, and our Being is in compariſon not Being. All which Notices of God how good ſoever they may ſeem, yet are no better than the Scholaſticiſm of the Philoſophic Pagans, to whom they are accommodate, but not to the People of Iſrael, not to their Conduct, not to their Caſe (in which Metaphyſical Notions were a very cold Comfort,) and being made the chief and only Interpretation of the Name of God, they are an impoſing upon him an unholy Philoſophic-pagan Name (Ens) to the injury, degrading and diſparagement of his Religious and holy Name.

(u) Tetragrammaton nonniſi ipſam Eſſentiam Divinitatis denotare. Ehje & Tetragrammaton Divinæ Eſſentiæ vocabula. שם המפורש nomen explicatum vel expoſitum, quia clarè & citra ullam æquivocationem de ſubſtantia Creatoris docet. Ehjeh aſcher Ehjeh eſt nomen derivatum à verbo Hajah, quod ſignificat Eſſentiam vel Exiſtentiam. Significat aliquid quod neceſſariam habet Exiſtentiam. Æternitatem & Exiſtentiam Dei ſignificat. Men. ben. Iſr. in Exod. Qu. 3. Maimon. Mor. Nev. Par. 1. c. 61, 63.

(w) Me eſſe qui ſum, hoc eſt meam eſſentiam à ſeipſa ſubſiſtere, nec ab alio dependere, ut cætera omnia quæ exiſtunt, quia à me proveniebant, & ita ſunt, ut potuerint & adhuc poſſint non eſſe.

(x) Docet de ſubſtantia Dei, reliqua verò nomina omnia docent de attributis, h. e. non de ſolâ ſubſtantiâ, ſed de ſubſtantiâ proprietates vel attributa habente. Maimon. ſupr. c. 61.

(y) Nomina eſſentialia. Hotting. Diſſ. p. 351, &c. Petav. ſupr. l. 8. c. 9. S. 2.

(z) Significat puram Dei Eſſentiam. Druſ. Tetragram. c. 6, 7, 17, 18. & vid. Not.

(a) Eſt impoſitum ad ſignificandum ipſam Dei ſubſtantiam incommunicabilem & ſingularem. Aquin. 1. Qu. 13. Art. 11.

(b) Eſſentiam, eamque ſimpliciſſimam & æternam ſignificat. Zanch. de Nat. Dei, l. 1. c. 1.

(c) Nomen hoc ſolum præter cætera ad Divinæ Majeſtatis eſſentiam planè, diſertè & abſolutè ſignificandam eſt deſtinatum. Fuller. Miſc. l. 4. c. 13.

(d) Dr. Preſton 1 Ser. on Exod. 3. 13.

(e) Hotting. ſupr. p. 265. & Amam. Antibarb. Bibl. p. 477. P. Fagius in Exod. 6. 3.

(f) Petav. ſupr. l. 1. c. 6. S. 5.

(g) Ἵνα μαθόντες διαφορὰν ὄντος τε καὶ μὴ ὄντος, προσαναδιδαχθῶσιν, ὡς οὐδὲν ὄνομα ἐπ' ἐμοῦ τὸ παράπαν κυριολογεῖται, ᾧ μόνῳ πρόσεστι τὸ εἶναι.

(h) Ὡς τῶν μετ' αὐτὸν ὄντων κατὰ τὸ εἶναι, δόξῃ δὲ μόνον ὑφεστάναι νομιζομένων.

(i) Petav. ſupr. S. 9.

(k) Ὁ ὢν ἓν ἐστὶ τὸ ὄν· Τὸ δὲ ὂν ἡ οὐσία τυγχάνει.

(l) Pr. Ev. l. 11. c. 9, 10. vid. Viv. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 8. c. 11.

(m) De C. D. l. 8. c. 11.

(n) Tetragr. c. 1.

(o) Orat. 36. p. 589.

(p) Ὧ καὶ τὸ εἶναι κυριώτατον ὄνομα. Theſaur. p. 133.

(q) C. Jul. l. 8. p. 266.

(r) Προτρεπτ. p. m. 5.

(s) Ep. ad African.

(t) Or. 5. c. Arianos.

(u) Περὶ ἀρχ. l. 1. c. 3.

(w) C. Jul. l. 1. c. 23.

(x) Petav. ſupr. c. 6. & l. 3. c. 3. S. 8.

X. Although the ancient Writers uſually follow the Metaphyſical Interpretation of the Name Ehjeh and Jehovah, yet ſometimes they hit upon the Popular-religious Interpretation. For S. Auſtin expounding thoſe words of the Pſalmiſt (y) & cognoſcant quia nomen tibi Dominus (Jehovah,) expreſſeth the genuin ſenſe of the Hebrew Name. Cognoſcant, inquit, quia nomen tibi Dominus, tanquam nec vero nec ſuo nomine nuncupentur, quicunque alii Domini nominantur. Let them know (ſaith he) that thy Name is the Lord (Jehovah,) as if they are not called by a true, nor by their own Name, whoſoever elſe are called Lords. Which Interpretation of the Pſalmiſt's words implieth, that God's Name and Title Dominus (Jehovah) denoteth and ſignifieth, he that is the Lord in truth and reality. So in Jer. 14. 13. and ch. 32. 17. the Septuagint render אדני יהוה ὁ ὢν κύριε, O more than pretended Lord, the Lord indeed! Inſtead of Ehjeh aſher Ehjeh Iſidore uſeth the Name Ejeje, (z) which is interpreted qui eſt Deus, he that is God (in truth and reality,) which is the Popular-religious Interpretation of the Name Jehovah.

(y) Enarr. in Pſal. 82. ſub. fin.

(z) Petav. T. 1. l. 1. c. 6. S. 9. p. 43.

XI. Jehovah the proper Name of God is primarily and principally deſign'd to denote him in oppoſition to falſe Gods; therefore the truth and reality which it ſignifieth is primarily and principally deſign'd to denote his truth and reality in oppoſition to falſe Gods; and what is his truth and reality in oppoſition to falſe Gods, but the truth and reality of his being God? Nothing can be more apparent throughout the Old Teſtament, than that Jehovah the proper Name of God is primarily and principally deſign'd, to denote him in oppoſition and contradiſtinction to falſe Gods. Schindler in his Lexicon thus expoundeth it. Nomen Dei proprium quo diſtinguitur ab Idolis. It is the proper Name of God, whereby he is diſtinguiſh'd from falſe Gods. Zanchy ſaith (a) perpetuò apud Prophetas hoc nomine Jehovæ ſeſe diſcernit ab omnibus Diis fictitiis. Perpetually in the Prophets God by this Name Jehovah diſtinguiſheth himſelf from all fictitious Deities. If this Name is primarily and principally deſign'd to be diſtinctive of him from fictitious Deities, the truth and reality which it ſignifieth, muſt be that which is primarily and principally diſtinctive of him from fictitious Deities (the truth and reality which is diametrically oppoſite, not to Non Entia, Metaphyſical, but to falſe Gods;) therefore it muſt ſignifie (not only he that is, but) primarily he that is God in truth and reality. Agreeably whereunto the Book Coſri hath taught us, (b) that if the Queſtion be ask'd, what God is to be worſhipp'd? The Anſwer muſt be יהוה Jehovah. Which is an appoſite Anſwer indeed, if that Name ſignifieth, he that is God in truth and reality.

Jehovah is the Name of the one true God as oppoſite unto falſe and fictitious Deities; therefore it is the Name of the one true God as ſuch, and conſequently muſt ſignifie he that is God in truth and reality. Iſa. 42. 8. God ſaith, I am Jehovah, that is my Name, quo a Diis gentium diſcernor, whereby I am differenc'd from the Gods of the Gentiles, * ſaith Grotius. The following words my Glory will I not give to

(a) De Nat. Dei, l. 1. c. 13. S. 4.

(b) P. 257, 258.

* Vid. Not. in Matth. 22. 44.

to another, nor my Praiſe to Graven Images. Grotius thus expoundeth; Eſt λιτότης, vult enim dicere, ſe vindicaturum ſeverè in eos, qui nomen quod ipſius eſt dant Belo, Neboni, Meraducho & aliis, τοῖς μὴ φύσει οὖσι θεοῖς. God intendeth to ſay, that he will ſeverely puniſh thoſe, who give his proper Name to Bel, Nebo, Merodach, and others that in reality are no Gods. Thus the God Jehovah throughout the Old Teſtament ſtandeth confronted and oppos'd to falſe Gods: And the Name Jehovah ſtandeth confronted and oppos'd to this Name οἱ μὴ φύσει ὄντες θεοὶ (thoſe that in reality are no Gods, but Idols only,) which Antitheſis between the two Names cannot be compleat and full, unleſs the Name Jehovah ſignifieth He that is God in reality.

XII. Moreover, God ſaith, I am Jehovah, that is my Name, in a caſe of Diſpute and Conteſt about who is God truly and really ſuch. For this was the thing in Diſpute and Conteſt in the Times of the Old Teſtament; and to determine this Diſpute, God by the Prophet challengeth the Heathen Religioniſts and their Deities, to produce Witneſſes on their part, Iſa. 43. 9. Let them bring forth their Witneſſes (Witneſſes of the real Divinity of the Heathen Gods; that they may be juſtified; or let them hear and ſay, It is truth. It was but reaſonable, if they were deſtitute of Witneſſes, that they ſhould yield the Cauſe, acknowledge the Truth to be on the God of Iſrael's ſide, that he was truly God, and their Deities were Idols and Figments; for the God of Iſrael could produce ſufficient Witneſſes of the truth and reality of his Divinity and Godhead; Iſa. 43. 12. I have declared, and have ſaved, and I have ſhewed, when there was no ſtrange God among you; therefore ye are my Witneſſes, ſaith Jehovah, that I am God. Quòd Deus verè ſim (ſaith Piſcator) that I am truly and really God. In this caſe of Diſpute and Conteſt God ſaith (in oppoſition to Idols and falſe Gods,) Iſa. 42. 8. I am Jehovah, that is my Name. Iſa. 43. 11. I even I am Jehovah; whereby nothing leſs, nothing elſe can be meant, but that I am truly and really God; therefore the Name Jehovah ſignifieth He that is God in truth and reality.

XIII. Although the Jews have now the Tetragrammaton in ſuch Superſtitious Reverence, that they have made it capital to pronounce it according to the Letters of it, yet this is the Name, that God would have conſtantly in the Minds and Mouths of his ancient People in oppoſition to falſe Gods. (c) None that is converſant in reading the Old Teſtament in Hebrew can doubt, but that God would have that Name moſt familiarly known to the Jews from their Infancy, yea us'd daily in their Speech, as a ſhort, ſingular and moſt obvious Memorial of his moſt holy Majeſty, Exod. 3. 15. God indeed prohibited the Iſraelites with the greateſt ſeverity, to make any the leaſt mention of falſe Gods, Exod. 23. 13. make no mention of the Name of other Gods, let it not be heard in thy Mouth; but he commanded his moſt holy Name Jehovah, to be always in their Mind, Mouth and Eyes, Exod. 3. 15. This is my Name for ever, and this is my Memorial unto all Generations; as if he had ſaid, I deſire all Memory of Idols to be bury'd in eternal oblivion; but I ought to be perpetually remembred and celebrated; to which purpoſe chiefly, ye muſt know, that this ſingular and peculiar Name is adapted and deliver'd unto you. On this account he would not have the leaſt token or footſtep of any fictitious Deity extant amongſt his true Worſhippers, that they might be every where daily and wholly taken up with the remembrance of his moſt auguſt Name. The God of Iſrael would have his People continually to acknowledge him by the Name Jehovah; and it is certain, that he would have them, continually to acknowledge him under this Notion the one true God; but it is not certain or probable, that he would have them continually to acknowledge him under this Notion the one true Ens. In calling himſelf by this Name Jehovah he contriv'd a proper ſignificative Name, which ſhould be of continual uſe amongſt his People (doubtleſs) for the promoting true Religion, and to be a preſervative againſt Idolatry. A ſignificative Name contriv'd and deſign'd for ſuch ends by Divine Wiſdom muſt be thought, to be of ſuch a ſignification, as tendeth moſt effectually to thoſe good and holy Ends. And which of theſe two ſignifications of the Name Jehovah hath the moſt effectual tendency to thoſe good and holy Ends, He that is Ens in truth and reality, or he that is God in truth and reality? The proper Name Jehovah muſt in all reaſon be thought to denote what is chiefly and eminently remarkable concerning God, as the proper ſignificative Names which God impoſeth upon eminent Perſons, denote what they are chiefly and eminently remarkable for (ſuch as Melchizedek, Abraham, Iſrael, Joſhua, Jeſus;) now, what was it, that the Iſraelites were chiefly and eminently to remark concerning God? Was it τὸ ὄντως μόνον ὄντα, that he alone truly exiſteth, or τὸ μόνον ἀληθινὸν θεὸν, that he is the only true God? He is not ſo ſolicitous, to have one Ens diſtinguiſh'd from another, the true from the falſe, as to have one God diſtinguiſh'd from another, the true from the falſe. Although he concerneth himſelf, to have one Ens diſtinguiſh'd from another, yet it is only ſo far as is of concern to his Godhead, that created Beings be not idoliz'd and deify'd; which plainly argueth, that the Name Jehovah was not primarily intended, to be a diſtinctive Name of the true Ens (as ſuch) from the Fictitious, but of the true God from Idols. And this further appeareth from the full expreſſion of that ſacred Name, which is the God Jehovah.

XIV. The Name Jehovah is the great Holy-popular Name; but the Metaphyſical Name Ens is neither Holy nor Popular. It is not Holy; for it belongeth to the common unholy Learning of Metaphyſicks (whereas the Name Jehovah belongeth to the Diſcipline of Sanctity and true Religion,) and that which it denoteth (according to the Rabbins) is not God in any conſiderable degree; for abſtract from God the Godhead of Eſtate and the Divine Attributes, and leave nothing but bare Eſſence ſelf-exiſtent, and what have we left but the Caput Mortuum of a Deity? meer Ontotety or Entity in the higheſt degree is on this ſide Sanctity. If the Name Jehovah therefore be meerly a Name of Entity, it will be far inferiour to the Name God (as the Metaphyſical Ens is,) and cannot be the Holy Name. This will clearly appear from a fabulous Story, which the Rabbins tell of a Conference between God and Adam: (d) That when Adam had given Names to all Creatures, God ask'd him, Quodnam eſt nomen meum, what is my Name? Adam made anſwer יהוה (Jehovah) quia tu es המהות לכל המציאות Quidditas omnis exiſtentiæ, becauſe thou art the Quiddity of all Exiſtence. If Adam had thus Scholaſticiz'd with God, he muſt have been thought a ſubtle Metaphyſician; but would God have thought him a ſerious Religioniſt? Such toying with God and with the Name of his Glory is not tolerably Religious; nor can it be doubted, but that thoſe Mundane Sophiſts the Rabbins by their Metaphyſical Crotchets profane that holy Name. And as their Metaphyſical Ens is an Unholy Name, ſo it is of kind and quality Unpopular; for they ſuppoſe, that when Moſes was ſent to the Iſraelites he ask'd of God, what he ſhould ſay, (e) Si quærerent Iſraelitæ de Eſſentia ejus à quo mitteretur, if the Iſraelites ſhould make inquiry touching his Eſſence that ſent him? מה שמו quid eſt nomen ejus, ſignificat מה מהותו quæ eſt eſſentia ejus? what is his Name, ſignifieth what is his Eſſence? The People of Iſrael muſt be Metaphyſical and Scholaſtick kind of Men, if they propounded a Queſtion touching his Eſſence, that ſent Moſes; and they muſt be deeply skill'd in Scholaſtick Learning, if they underſtood the Metaphyſical Name, that is ſuppos'd to be given in anſwer to their Queſtion, Nomen ὐσιώδης, an eſſential Name, τὸ ὄν, id quod eſt, αὐτοών, (f) as Junius rendreth the Name Jehovah. (g) The Book Coſri ſuppoſeth, that when God in anſwer to Moſes (asking what he ſhould ſay to the Iſraelites touching his Name that ſent him) call'd himſelf by the Name Ehjeh, his meaning was, to tell them, that they ought not to inquire of that which is beyond their Capacities (the Verity of his Eſſence being impoſſible to be known; and it is as reaſonable to ſay, that ſuch an Anſwer which is beyond their Capacities, ought not to be given to their Queſtion, as to ſay, They ought not to buſie themſelves about a Queſtion, which is beyond their Capacities.

(c) Nulli dubium eſſe poteſt, qui modo mediocri cum diligentia in veteris Inſtrumenti Scripturarum Hebraicarum lectione ſit verſatus, quin Judæis olim, prima ab infantia, Deus notiſſimum eſſe voluerit nomen illud, imò ſermone quotidiano uſurpatum, tanquam ſanctiſſimæ majeſtatis ſuæ καθ' ἐπιτομὴν (ut ita dicam) μνημόσυνον, vel monumentum ſingulare maximéque obvium, Exod. 3. 15. Summâ quidem ſeveritate Iſraelitis interdixerat Deus, ne ulla Deorum falſorum vel tenuiſſima fieret mentio. Nomen inquit, Exod. 23. 13. Deorum alienorum nè recordamini, nè auditor in ore tuo, ſed יהוה ſanctiſſimum nomen ſuum ſemper eis in animo, in ore, in oculis eſſe juſſit, Exod. 3. 15. Hoc eſt nomen ſuum in ſeculum, & hoc memoriale meum in generationem & generationem, q. d. Idolorum quidem memoriam omnem oblivione ſempiterna deleri & penitus obrui cupio: Me verò perenni celebratione memorari par eſt: ad id autem efficiendum, ſingulare hoc & peculiare Nomen imprimis comparatum vobiſque traditum ſcitote. Nullum enim propterea, ne minimum quidem, indicium aut veſtigium ficti alicujus & commentitii Numinis exſtare voluit apud veros ſui cultores, ut auguſtiſſimi nominis ſui memoriâ eos aſſiduè & ubique totos poſſideret. Fuller. Miſc. l. 4. c. 13.

Maimonides ſaith, (h) When God appear'd to Moſes, and commanded him, to ſpeak to Men in his Name, and to diſcharge the Function of his Embaſſadour, preſently he thought with himſelf, that before all things they would deſire him, to prove the Being of a God in this World; for at that time all Men, except ſome few, were ignorant of the Exiſtence of God; their higheſt Speculation conſiſted in the Contemplation of Heaven and of its Virtues and Operations, and reach'd no further; they ſuffer'd not themſelves to be withdrawn from things ſenſible, nor were perfect in the Perfection intellectual; wherefore God gave him a Science to deliver to them, which might perſwade them, that God is, namely, the Name Ehjeh aſcher Ehjeh; which Name is deriv'd from the Verb Hajah, which ſignifieth Eſſence or Exiſtence, for Hajah ſignifieth, to be or exiſt. All the Myſtery of which Name conſiſteth in the Repetition of the ſame Word, which ſignifieth Exiſtence by way of Attribute or Predicate; for the Relative Pronoun Aſcher importeth the mention of an Attribute inherent in it, and the firſt Name is as the Subject, Ehjeh I am or will be, and the ſecond Name which is the Attribute thereof in like manner is called Ehjeh (plainly in ſubſtance the ſame Word with the former) as if he would ſhew, the Subject and Attribute to be one and the ſame in ſubſtance, which is nothing elſe but what we ſay, that God exiſteth but not by Exiſtence; wherefore the Explication and Expoſition of that Ehjeh aſcher Ehjeh is, The Exiſtent who is Exiſtent, that is, who neceſſarily exiſteth; for this is that which he ought to prove and demonſtrate, that God is a Being neceſſarily exiſtent. In this Rabbinical Account of the Name of God and the Embaſſie of Moſes (which is almoſt wholly an enormous miſtake) we may contemplate the Way and Genius of Scholaſticks, at what a rate they interpret the Holy Bible, ſubſtituting inſtead of the things Holy-popular things Unholy and Unpopular, Scholaſtical and Metaphyſical: Of this nature is the Platonic Ens (ὁ ὢν or τὸ ὄν;) therefore J. Mart. Euſebius and Theodoret are very much miſtaken in ſuppoſing it a Deſcendent from the holy Scriptural Ehjeh or Jehovah.

XV. The Name Jehovah interpreted according to the Phraſeology of Scripture (the Popular-religious mode of ſpeaking) denoteth and ſignifieth, He that is God in truth and reality. For this Name muſt be interpreted in the firſt place according to Grammar and Dictionary, and ſo interpreted it ſignifieth he that is in truth and reality. In the next place the different Senſes of this Grammatical Signification of the Name muſt be diſtinguiſh'd; for this Grammatical ſignification of it may be underſtood in the Metaphyſical and Philoſophical Senſe, and it may be underſtood in the Popular-religious Senſe. If the Grammatical ſignification of the Name be underſtood in this latter Senſe, He that is in truth and reality and He that is God in truth and reality, are ſynonymous Expreſſions; as will appear by conſidering, the Being that is ſo denominated, the End of the Denomination, and the Matter to which it relateth. The Being that is denominated ὁ ὢν, τὸ ὄν, Qui eſt, Id quod eſt or Jehovah (He that is in truth and reality) is a pretending or imagin'd Deity, touching whom to affirm, that he is in truth and reality, is the ſame thing, as to affirm, that he is God in truth and reality. 1 Cor. 8. 4. We know (ſaith the Apoſtle) that an Idol is nothing in the World, and that there is none other God but one. 1 Cor. 10. 19. Say I then, that the Idol is any thing? An Idol hath a real Eſſence and Exiſtence, yet hath no real Eſſence or Exiſtence; it is a Subſtance, yet is nothing ſubſtantial; it is Matter, yet is nothing material; it is a Thing, and yet is Nothing; for as a Deity it is wholly fictitious and imaginary, and being wholly fictitious and imaginary, it hath no real Eſſence, or Exiſtence, or Subſtance, or Matter, or Entity, but is a very Nothing, as

(d) Buxt. not. in Coſri, p. 54.

(e) Men. ben Iſr. in Exod. Qu. 3.

(f) S. Amam. Antibarb. Bibl. p. 477.

(g) P. 262.

(h) Cùm Deus Moſi apparuiſſet, & ipſi in mandatis dediſſet ut ſuo nomine mortales alloqueretur, hancque legationem apud ipſos expediret, ſtatim apud ſe cogitavit, illos ante omnia petituros, ut probet Deum eſſe in hoc mundo.——Omnes etenim homines, paucis quibuſdam exceptis, neſciebant tum temporis Deum eſſe: ſed ſumma ipſorum ſpeculatio conſiſtebat in contemplatione cœli ac virtutum & operationum ejus, neque ulterius ſe extendebat. à rebus ſenſibilibus abſtrahi ſe non patiebantur, neque perfecti fuerunt perfectione intellectuali. proinde docuit ipſum Deus ſcientiam, quam ipſis traderet, & quæ ipſis perſuaderet Deum eſſe. Nomen ſcil. hoc Ehjeh aſcher Ehjeh. Eſt autem hoc nomen derivatum à verbo Hajah, quod ſignificat Eſſentiam vel Exiſtentiam; Hajah enim ſignificat Eſſe vel Exiſtere. Myſterium verò ejus omne latet in iteratione vocis ejuſdem, quæ ſignificat exiſtentiam per modum attributionis vel prædicationis. Nam pronomen relativum Aſcher continet in ſe mentionem Attributi alicujus inhærentis ſibi, & poſitum eſt nomen primum, quod ſubjecti vicem ſuſtinet, Ehjeh ero, & Nomen ſecundum, quod Attributum ejus eſt, itidem vocatur Ehjeh ero, vox plane in ſubſtantia eadem cum priore, quaſi oſtendere vellet, Denominatum ſive ſubjectum & Attributum unum idemque eſſe in ſubſtantia, quod nihil aliud eſt, quàm quod nos dicimus, Deum exiſtere ſed non per exiſtentiam. Quare explicatio & expoſitio illius Ehjeh aſcher Ehjeh eſt, Exiſtens qui eſt Exiſtens, h. e. is qui neceſſario exiſtit. Hoc enim eſt, quod probare & demonſtrare debuit, Deum eſſe Ens neceſſariò Exiſtens. Mor. Nev. par. 1. c. 63.

every one muſt affirm, that believeth it to be an Idol. But if any one affirmeth the contrary touching this pretending or imagin'd Deity, if (as ſuch) he intituleth it id quod eſt, that which is in truth and reality; this is the ſame thing, as to deny it to be an Idol, and to affirm, that it is a God in truth and reality. Theſe things are eaſily apply'd, and evidently true, if they be apply'd to any pretending or imagin'd Deity (true or falſe;) if therefore the God of Iſrael be denominated Qui eſt, he that is in truth and reality, or Id quod eſt, that which is in truth and reality, This Name denoteth him to be no Idol or falſe Deity, but a God in truth and reality. His Name Jehovah ought to be interpreted agreeably to his Pretenſions in a caſe of Debate and Conteſt in the ancient Times; which Debate and Conteſt was not, whether other Beings were Entia or not, but whether any other Beings were Gods or not? The End of the Denomination and the reaſon why he would be called Jehovah, was to diſcriminate him from the Idol-Gods, that are called אלילים No things, things of nought, meer Vanities, Lyes and lying Vanities (as pretending or imagin'd Deities they are wholly ſuch,) and the place of their worſhip is not Bethel (the Houſe of a God,) but Bethaven, an Houſe of Vanity, Iſa. 2. 20. and 44. 9, 20. and 41. 24. Jer. 14. 22. Jon. 2. 8. Hoſ. 4. 15. When Names of Nullity and Non-entity are given to Idols, all Men ſuppoſe, that thoſe Names denote them, to be no Gods, and that thoſe Names are given them upon that account, becauſe they are no Gods; thus the Name אלילים No things is expounded, (i) non Dii, no Gods; eſſe ex nihilo, eſt eſſe fictitios Deos, to be of nothing, is to be Fictitious Gods. If Names of non-entity or not-being given to Idol-Gods denote their not-being Gods in truth and reality, and are given them upon that account, ſhall it not be thought, that Names of Entity and reality of Being given to the true God, denote his being God in truth and reality, and that they are given him upon that account, ſeeing there is the ſame reaſon for both ſorts of Names, and there is alſo a manifeſt Antitheſis between the Names, as there is between the things to which they are apply'd? (k) When Origen and Cedrenus call an Idol-God οὐκ ὄν, that which is not, the meaning of that Name is, it is no God in reality; therefore when the Scripture calleth the true God τὸ ὄν, that which is, the meaning of that Name is, he is God in reality. Agreeably to which Account of the Names of the true God and of Idols, the Words of Schindler muſt be underſtood, who thus expoundeth the Name Jehovah. Nomen Dei proprium, quo diſtinguitur ab Idolis, quæ non ſunt, non exiſtunt, ſed finguntur: It is the proper Name of God, whereby he is diſtinguiſh'd from Idols, which are not, exiſt not, but are fictitious.

Our Interpretation of the Name Jehovah will further appear, to be true and genuine, if we conſider the Matter to which it relateth, which is Matter of God-exiſtence and God-eminence. The Scripture uſing the Name Jehovah ſpeaketh touching matter of God-exiſtence and God-eminence, and the Name Jehovah, or ὁ ὢν (he that is) muſt be underſtood with relation thereto; therefore that Name muſt ſignifie he that is as to matter of God-exiſtence and God-eminence; as when Moſes and Solomon ſay, Jehovah he is God, and there is none elſe; the meaning is not, there is none elſe in exiſtence, (as the Rabbins ſuppoſe;) but the plain Senſe is, that as to being God or as to matter of God-eminence there is none elſe. So the devotional words of Hannah, 1 Sam. 2. 2. There is none beſide thee, relate to matter of God-exiſtence and God-eminence, and therefore muſt be thus expounded, As to the being God, or as to matter of God-eminence (which is the ſame thing) there is none beſide thee. The words are not the Speech of a Scholaſtic Metaphyſician, but of a genuine Devotioniſt, and therefore they do not mean, that ſolus Deus reverâ eſt, God only is truly in exiſtence (as ſome Criticks fondly and Rabbinically expound them;) but the Arabick Verſion rightly expoundeth their meaning, Non eſt Deus præter te, there is no God beſides thee. So the antecedent and ſubſequent words expound their Senſe: There is none holy as the Lord (there is none elſe of the holy Honour, which is to ſay, none elſe is God,) for there is none beſide thee; neither is there any Rock like our God: which laſt words mean, that as to the being an Helper and a Saviour (which is God-eminence) there is none but Jehovah, Iſa. 43. 10, 11. That ye may know and believe me, and underſtand that I am he: before me there was no God formed, neither ſhall there be after me. I even I am Jehovah, and beſide me there is no Saviour. Upon thoſe words underſtand that I am he, Forerius thus commenteth: (l) Here is an alluſion to thoſe words of the Lord in Exodus, He that is hath ſent me unto you; and the Etymology of the Name Jehovah it ſelf is explain'd; for the place may be render'd, that ye may underſtand, that I am he that is; for this is the force of the Pronoun Hu. If the Pronoun Hu is in the Prophet of the ſame ſignification with Qui eſt or Jehovah, then the Name Jehovah muſt ſignifie he that is God (in truth and reality;) for ſo the Pronoun Hu ſignifieth in the Prophet, as Grotius rightly expoundeth it, (m) Ego ipſe ſum, Nempe Deus, I am he, to wit, I am God. He that is God in truth and reality may as ſuch be fitly call'd for diſtinction-ſake The Popular-religious ὁ ὢν (he that is in truth and reality,) which Popular-religious ὁ ὢν, muſt neceſſarily be the promiſſory ὁ ὢν, (he that is in truth and reality,) the Prophetic ὁ ὢν, (he that is in truth and reality,) the Metaphyſical ὁ ὢν, he that is in truth and reality.

XVI. The Promiſſory ὁ ὢν (he that is in truth and reality) denoteth him, to be real in performance as in promiſe, agreeably to what himſelf ſaith, Exod. 6. 3. I appear'd unto Abraham, unto Iſaac, and unto Jacob, by the Name of God Almighty, but by my Name Jehovah was I not known to them. God was known to them by this Name in one Senſe (they knew the Name Jehovah,) but not in another Senſe; for he was not known to them by that which the Name Jehovah importeth, namely, a Realizer of his Promiſe by Performance. (n) I did not ſhew my ſelf as in fact a Fulfiller of my Promiſe. This Interpretation of the Name Jehovah (in this place) is almoſt generally entertain'd by Learned Men of the Chriſtian Church of late Times; and one of the Rabbins ſaith; (o) God was not known to the former Patriarchs by that which that Name importeth (for it is only us'd concerning God, when he fulfilleth his Promiſes,) becauſe he had not yet made good his word

(i) V. Druſ. & Grot. in 1 Cor. 8. 4. Forer. in Iſa. 41. 24.

(k) Grot. ſupr.

Deut. 4. 35. 1 King. 8. 60.

(l) Alluſio eſt ad verba illa Domini in Exodo, Qui eſt miſit me ad vos: & ipſius nominis Jehovah etymologia explicatur. Reddi namque poteſt, & intelligatis, quòd ego ſim ille qui eſt. Hæc eſt enim vis illius pronominis הוא.

(m) Not. in Iſa. 43. 10.

(n) Non oſtendi me eum eſſe qui reipſa implerem. Grot. in loc. v. P. Fag. in locum. Zanch. de Nat. Dei, l. 1. c. 13. Pocock on Hoſ. 12. 5.

(o) Nequaquam Deum ſe prioribus Patriarchis notum feciſſe per id, quod ſignificet iſtud vocabulum (etenim illud tantum uſurpari de Deo cùm promiſſa ſua implet,) quia nondum datam fidem impleverat, de eripiendis ex ſervitute Ægyptiaca Iſraelitis, ut terram promiſſam illis daret. R. Salomo ap. Men. ben Iſr. Qu. in Exod. p. 53.

word touching the deliverance of the Iſraelites out of the Egyptian Bondage, that he might give them the Land of Promiſe. Of the ſame Interpretation with the Promiſſory Jehovah is the Name Ehjeh (I am) both in the more large and more contracted form. For when God ſaith to Moſes (in anſwer to the Iſraelites Queſtion, what is his Name that ſent thee? Exod. 3. 13, 14.) Ehjeh aſcher Ehjeh, I am that I am; the meaning is, That I am in promiſe, I am in performance, without any variation, real both in making and performing: Or, I will be what I have promis'd I will be. And when he addeth (ſpeaking in the more contracted form,) Thus ſhalt thou ſay unto the Children of Iſrael, I am (or I will be) hath ſent me unto you, his meaning is, I am (or I will be) truth and reality of performance. The Name Ehjeh therefore and Jehovah denoteth him, to be a God in truth and reality to the Hebrews, as appeareth from the words that follow the Name Ehjeh; for God having called himſelf by that Name, immediately ſubjoyneth, Exod. 3. 15. Thus ſhalt thou ſay unto the Children of Iſrael, Jehovah the God of your Fathers, the God of Abraham, The God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob, hath ſent me unto you; this is my Name for ever, and this is my Memorial unto all Generations. God intituleth himſelf the God of the Hebrews (by intituling himſelf the God of the Patriarchs,) and as ſuch he denominateth himſelf Ehjeh and Jehovah; that Name therefore denoteth him, to be a God in truth and reality to the Hebrews. The Name was his Memorial unto all Generations; (p) for upon the hearing of that Name Men ought to remember that God, who brought the People out of Egypt. In ſo doing he was φερώνυμος, anſwerable to his Name (Jehovah) as it denoteth him to be veracem in præſtandis atque implendis promiſſis, true in performing and fulfilling his Promiſes, (q) as Menaſſ. ben Iſrael ſaith from R. Solomon. Which veracity in performing his Promiſes whence God is denominated Jehovah, peculiarly relateth to the Hebrews (to the miraculous bringing them out of Egypt, the giving them their Land, erecting their Theocracy, and becoming a God to them in Society, according to his Promiſes made to the Patriarchs;) the Name Jehovah was theirs by peculiar priviledge, as the Book (r) Coſri affirmeth, agreeably to what God ſaith to Moſes and Aaron, Exod. 6. 6, 7. Say unto the Children of Iſrael, I am Jehovah, and I will bring you out from under the Burdens of the Egyptians. ——And I will take you to me for a People, and I will be to you a God, and ye ſhall know, that I am Jehovah your God.

(p) Quo audito homines meminiſſe debent in perpetuum Dei illius, qui eduxit populum ex Ægypto. Zanch. ſupr.

(q) Qu. in Exod. p. 53.

(r) P. 261.

XVII. By the Prophetick ὁ ὢν, (he that is in truth and reality) I mean that Prophetick or Apocalyptick Name ὁ ὢν, καὶ ὁ ἦν, καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος, he that is, and that was, and that is to come. The Conſtruction of this Prophetick Name of God is obſerv'd, to be againſt the Rules of Grammar, but is eaſily reconcileable thereto, if theſe words who is, or who is named, be underſtood, as they ought to be; for the only reaſon, why it is not agreeable to Grammar, is, becauſe it is a Name of God; as when Plotinus ſpeaking of Numbers ſaith, (s) μένοντος μετὰ τοῦ ἓν, the Senſe is, That which is named One remaining. So when the Apocalypſe ſaith, ch. 1. 5. καὶ ἀπὸ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ὁ μάρτυς ὁ πιστὸς, the Senſe is, And from Jeſus Chriſt, who is, or who is named, the faithful Witneſs. In like manner this Prophetick Name of God is expreſs'd, Apoc. 1. 4. Grace be unto you, and Peace, ἀπὸ τοῦ ὁ ὢν, καὶ ὁ ἦν, καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος, and the Senſe is, from him that is, or that is named, he that is, and that was, and that is to come: Which Prophetick Name is commonly ſuppos'd, to be a full and juſt Interpretation of the Name Jehovah (wherewith it hath a manifeſt conſonance;) but this Opinion is uncertain, or rather is certainly a miſtake; for it is not a Name of ſuch celebrated Dignity as the Name Jehovah, and it would be abſurd, to uſe it ordinarily and conſtantly, as the Name Jehovah was uſed in ancient times. The Name Jehovah in the full expreſſion of it is, The God Jehovah; the like cannot be ſaid of this Prophetick Name. The Name Jehovah is the proper Name of God as contradiſtinct to falſe Gods, and was deſign'd to be didactical or doctrinal of true Religion in oppoſition to Polytheiſm and Idolatry; but ſuch is not this Prophetick Name. The Name Jehovah relateth to the Affairs of the Literal and Carnal Iſrael, to whom it was eminently a Promiſſory Name; but this Apocalyptick Name relateth to the Affairs of the Myſtical and Spiritual Iſrael, is a magnificent Preface to a Prophecy touching their Affairs, and is eminently (not a Promiſſory, but) a Prophetick kind of Name; as will appear from a particular account of that variety of Notions which may reaſonably be ſuppos'd to be compriſed in it. For it is manifeſt, that this Name denoteth God's co-exiſtence with all Time (paſt, preſent and to come,) and therefore it may reaſonably be ſuppos'd, to be a Name equivalent to ἀεὶ ὢν, he that ever is, and to be deſign'd, to celebrate God's Eternity of Duration, which the Rabbins thus expreſs; (t) Ipſe fuit, ipſe eſt, & ipſe erit glorioſe! By the like Expreſſions the Heathen aſcrib'd Eternity of Duration to Jupiter (u).

(s) En. 5. l. 5. c. 5.

(t) Lud. Cappell. Not. in Apoc. 1. 4.

(u) S. Amam. Antibarb. Bibl. p. 477.

Ζεὺς ἦν, Ζεὺς ἐστι, Ζεὺς ἔσσεται, ὦ μεγάλε Ζεῦ.

Jupiter was, Jupiter is, Jupiter ſhall be; O great Jupiter!

It denoteth alſo an impoſſibility of failing to co-exiſt with all Time; for as this Name He that liveth for ever and ever, doth not only denote, that God actually liveth for ever, but alſo an impoſſibility of failing ſo to do (in which Senſe he only hath Immortality:) So this Divine Name, he that is, and that was, and that is to come, denoteth this God-eminence and Peculiarity an impoſſibility of failing to co-exiſt with all time. It denoteth alſo God's Invariableneſs in all the Succeſſions of Time (that he is always the ſame;) for the Rabbins Explication of the Name Ehjeh in Elle Shemoth rabba may reaſonably be thought a true Interpretation of this Name. (w) The bleſſed God ſaid unto Moſes, ſay unto them, I that have been, and I the ſame now, and I the ſame for time to come. Theſe honourary Notices of God are (doubtleſs) compris'd in this Apocalyptick Name.

(w) Ainſworth on Exod. 3. 14.

But the principal thing which it is deſign'd to ſignifie, is his God-like ordering Affairs and what cometh to paſs in time, which belongeth to him as rerum Dominus, the Lord of Affairs. It denoteth his unfailing and unvariable co-exiſtence with Time as the God-like orderer of Affairs and the Events of time paſt, preſent and to come; as appeareth from the Doxology of the four and twenty Elders, which ſat before God on their Seats, and falling on their Faces worſhipp'd God, ſaying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and waſt, and art to come, becauſe thou haſt taken to thee thy great Power and haſt reign'd. It is for the God-like ordering Affairs that the four and twenty Elders give Thanks; which is a plain indication, that this Divine Name relateth thereto. They conjoin alſo this Divine Name with the Divine Attribute Omni-imperial, which ſheweth, that God is intituled that art, and waſt, and art to come, not in reſpect of an idle and inactive co-exiſtence with time, but in reſpect of a God-like ordering Affairs in the ſeveral Succeſſions of time. Sometimes this Divine Name is conjoin'd and ſurrounded with ſeveral other Names of Divine governing Agency. Apoc. 1. 8. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, ſaith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty. All theſe Divine Names Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending (of Affairs,) the Lord the Almighty (All Imperial) are Names of Divine governing Agency; therefore this Divine Name (that is, and that was, and that is to come) is alſo a Name that denoteth Divine governing Agency; and God is ſo denominated, not meerly upon account of an inactive co-exiſtence with time, but in reſpect of his God-like governing, ordering and carrying on Affairs through the ſeveral Succeſſions of time. To what purpoſe ſhould this Divine Name be inſiſted on in Prophecy, if it denoteth nothing of Divine governing Agency in Affairs?

Apoc. 11. 16, 17.

The genuin Interpretation of this Divine Name will further appear by illuſtrating thoſe other Divine Names, with which it is combined and aſſociated, Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, the firſt and the laſt. God is intituled by theſe Names, to ſignifie his management of Affairs from the beginning to the end; and not meerly to ſignifie that management of Affairs, but to ſignifie his actual and jural management of Affairs in the ſupreme way of Regency from the beginning to the end, or from firſt to laſt. They denote him therefore to be the ſupreme Potentate, unſubject, independent, unaccountable, uncontrollable, αὐτοκράτωρ, Self-ſovereign, παντοκράτωρ, actually and jurally the Commander of all and the Diſpoſer of all things. So in the Prophet God often intituleth himſelf, I am the Firſt and I am the Laſt, thereby intending to ſay, I am He, or I am God. So our Saviour in his deified condition often intituleth himſelf Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, the firſt and the laſt. Which Apocalyptic Names denote the Godhead as actually and jurally adminiſtring Affairs in the ſupreme way of Regency from the beginning to the end through the various Succeſſions of time. Of the ſame import is the other Apocalyptick Name he that is, and that was; and that is to come, which therefore is a Prophetick kind of Name, and conſequently can be no more than a partial Interpretation of the Name Jehovah. But becauſe it hath a manifeſt conformity, reſemblance and alluſion thereto, (as the Apocalypſe deſcribeth the New Iſrael and their Affairs with alluſion to Old Iſrael and their Affairs,) it muſt be ſuppos'd at leaſt a partial Interpretation of the Name Jehovah, and the Name Jehovah muſt be ſuppos'd in part a Prophetick Name. So far without prejudice to our other Interpretations of the Name Jehovah we may comply with the common Opinion, and with the Paraphraſt Jonathan, who thus interpreteth the Name Ehjeh. (x) Ego ille qui ſum, & qui futurus ſum, I He that am and that am to come. The bleſſed God (ſaith R. Bechai) hath the Rule of three times, the paſt, preſent, and to come, and the Name Ehjeh alone compriſeth thoſe three times. In the proper Name (Jehovah) alſo thoſe three times are compriſed, as is known unto all.

XVIII. The Popular-religious ὁ ὤν, (he that is in truth and reality) is comprehenſively and incluſively the Metaphyſical ὁ ὤν, or Ens; for to be God in truth and reality, is to be appropriately and peculiarly the truth and reality of Eſſence and Exiſtence Metaphyſical. The God at Delphos admoniſh'd every one that approach'd his Temple (ſaith Plutarch) γνῶθι σεαυτόν, know thy ſelf, ἡμεῖς δὲ πάλιν ἀμειβόμενοι τὸν θεὸν, Εἶ φαμὲν, and we ſay again in anſwer to God, thou art, giving him the Appellation of Being. (y) To God the Name of Eſſence or Being truly belongeth and to him alone (ſaith S. Hierom,) becauſe he is Eternal, that is, without beginning. God truly is (ſaith an ancient Writer,) therefore is truth. The Creature in compariſon is not, and therefore is to God as falſity to verity. Nothing is underſtood, to be more proper to God, than to be (ſaith S. Hilary;) for that which is, muſt be underſtood of that which neither hath ending, nor beginning. The Metaphyſical Ens therefore muſt be ſuppoſed a Name and Attribute of God. But as if we ſuppoſe (with the Alexandrian Cyril) the Metaphyſical Ens, to be a Name and Attribute of Chriſt, this will not infer, that it is his true definitive Name, Notion and Idea; to ſuppoſe it ſuch, is indeed to deſtroy Chriſt and his true Idea, and to ſet up in his ſtead a Metaphyſical Name and Notion (therefore it muſt be a Name and Attribute of Chriſt only in due Conjunction with and Subordination to his true definitive Name, Notion and Idea:) So if Ens be ſuppoſed the moſt proper and principal Name of God, a Metaphyſical Name and Notion is ſet up inſtead of his legitimate Idea and his true definitive Name, of which Gr. Naz. ſometimes ſaith, (z) the Name above every Name τί ποτε ἄλλό ἐστιν ἢ θεός; what is it elſe but the Name God? The Name Jehovah may be called the Eſſential Name; for in part it is ſuch; the Eſſence and Exiſtence which the Metaphyſical Ens denoteth, is comprehended and included in the Hebrew and Holy-popular Interpretation of it, but is not the primary importance of that Divine Name, which is primarily deſign'd to ſignifie the God of the Hebrews, that he is God in Truth and Reality. If this Popular-religious Interpretation of it be exploded or over-look'd, if this ſacred Name be criminally diſtorted towards Metaphyſicks, if the Interpretations that are made of it be only or mainly of Kind and Quality Metaphyſical (ſuch as that of Maimonides, who ſaith, (a) de nulla alia re vel proprietate docet, niſi de Eſſentiâ Dei, it denoteth nothing of any thing or property, but of the Eſſence of God,) or if this Popular-religious Name be confounded with the Philoſophic-Pagan Metaphyſical Names; ſuch Interpretations of it cannot be acquitted of the Vice and Folly of criminal Scholaſticizing and Philoſophic-paganizing the matters of Theology. Which Vice and Folly hath been the Peſt and Bane of the Chriſtian Theology almoſt ever ſince the Apoſtles times; for the principal Articles of our Faith have been criminally

Iſa. 41. 4. and 44. 6. and 48. 12.

Apoc. 1. 11, 17. and 2. 8. and 22. 13.

(x) Buxtorf. Lex. Hebr. in rad. הוה p. 148.

(y) Deus ſolus quia æternus eſt, hoc eſt, quia exordium non habet, eſſentia nomen verè tenet. Deus verè eſt, igitur veritas eſt. Creatura autem ei collata quaſi non eſt. Et idcirco quaſi falſitas ad veritatem eſt. Non enim aliud proprium magis Deo quàm eſſe intelligitur; quia id ipſum quod eſt, neque deſinens eſt aliquando, neque cæpit. Petav. T. 1. l. 1. c. 6.

(z) Orat. 36.

(a) Mor. Nev. Par. 1. c. 63.

minally Scholaſticiz'd and Philoſophic-paganiz'd at the ſame rate with the Name Jehovah. Of which having given a large account we will proceed to deduce ſome other Conſectaries from the Name and Idea of God before repreſented.

CHAP. III.

1. A Fourth Conſectary touching the Plenary Idea of God, that it doth not belong to Metaphyſicks, but to the Science of Sanctity. 2. The Science of Sanctity defin'd. 3. The Tranſcendency of it. 4. The ſpuriouſneſs of the Scholaſtic Theology. 5. It is rather Neſcience than Science of God. 6. It is no friend to affirmative Attributes, nor acquainted with the true Ideas of things. 7. It claſheth with common Reaſon and with Sanctity. 8. A Fifth Conſectary, that God is not duely notic'd in the Scholaſtick way without duely noticing the Sovereignty that God is. 9. A Sixth Conſectary that Men may have an Idea or definitive Notion of God.

I. OUR Fourth Conſectary is, That the Plenary Idea of God doth not belong to the Science of Metaphyſicks, but to the Science of Sanctity. In the Metaphyſicks of the Philoſophic Pagans (Platonic and Ariſtotelian) the great things which are ſpeculated, are certain ſublime Incorporeals of theirs, which are meer Philoſophic-Pagan Deities; and inſtead of theſe Philoſophic-Pagan Deities the Schools of Chriſtendom have ſubſtituted God and his Attributes and the Angels, which fall within the compaſs of the ſubject of Metaphyſicks (as they ſuppoſe,) becauſe Metaphyſica eſt Scientia de Ente ſecundum rem & rationem abſtracto à materia. Metaphyſicks is the Science touching Ens both really and notionally abſtracted from Matter. And becauſe God is knowable by natural Light, therefore ſo far as he is ſuch, his Plenary Idea ought to be treated of in ſome natural Science which muſt be the Metaphyſicks, as the Maſters of this ſort of Learning argue, (b) who have the ſame Conceits of its Excellency, that the Philoſophic Pagans had of old; for they have intituled it θεῖόν τι ϗ θαυμάσιον, divine and wonderful, nobiliſſima Scientia, the moſt noble Science, becauſe the moſt noble Beings God and Angels are the Subject thereof. But although they treat of Angels, they pretend not to treat of Holy Angels as ſuch, nor of an Angel that is a Sovereignty (of the Kingdom of Darkneſs,) nor of Angels that are made God's (Religion-kind of Honours;) theſe things being quite beyond the bounds of their Science, they muſt pretend to treat of Angels only reſpectivè as being immaterial and incorporeal Eſſences; and not without the like limitation they ought to treat of God, whoſe Plenary Idea (both according to natural Light and ſupernatural Revelation) is manifeſtly quite beyond the bounds of their Science. And as out of the Science and Diſcipline of Chriſtianity no ſuch thing as Chriſt can be found: So out of the Science and Diſcipline of Sanctity and Religion no ſuch thing as God can be found. They that cannot pretend to treat of any Human kind of thing, cannot pretend to treat of Man, who is neceſſarily an Human kind of Thing or Being. They that cannot pretend to treat of any Chriſtian kind of thing, cannot pretend to treat of Chriſt, who is eſſentially a Thing or Being of the Chriſtian kind. So they that cannot pretend to treat of any God-kind of thing, how can they pretend to treat of the Plenary Idea of God, who is eſſentially a Thing or Being of the God-kind? But the Metaphyſicians might not only be pardon'd, but would deſerve our Thanks, although in treating of God they tranſgreſs'd the bounds of their Science, if they had promoted the true knowledge of God and illuſtrated his Idea: But they are ſo far from underſtanding the true Idea of God, that in Samnio Samnium you may ſeek God in the Metaphyſicians God, and in great degree not find him. Much of his Idea they underſtand nothing of, and what they do underſtand of it they miſunderſtand. For it muſt not be thought that God is denominated Ens primum, Ens ſummum, Ens independens, Ens à ſe, Ens increatum, Ens purè neceſſarium (the prime, ſupreme, independent, ſelf-originate, increate, neceſſarily exiſtent Being) meerly as an Eſſence or Subſtance, as the Metaphyſicians ſuppoſe; but as an Honour and Eſtate of Nobilitation, and as the Sovereignty; for the Sovereignty as ſuch is neceſſarily Ens primum, Ens ſummum, Ens independens. If the Metaphyſicians had thus rightly underſtood the moſt obvious Attributes of God, which themſelves treat of, they could not have fail'd to diſcern, that God is as Alien from their vulgar Science, as the Sovereignty, the God-Sovereignty, the Holy Sovereignty, the Sovereignty of Sanctity and Religion implieth. His Idea therefore, ſo far as he is ſuch by natural Light, belongeth to natural Religion and Sanctity, of which Cicero ſaith (c) Sanctitas eſt Scientia colendorum Deorum, but in better Language Sanctitas eſt Scientia colendi Numinis, Sanctity is the Science of ſerving and worſhipping God. By the Science of Sanctity the true God is diſcriminated from the Deities of the Philoſophic Pagans; for Plato held a ſupreme Monad; Ariſtotle ſuppos'd that the ſupreme Deity was a ſupreme Mind, Intellect or abſtract Intelligence; and Anaxagoras held an infinite active Mind free from all mixture of Matter: But none of theſe Philoſophic Deities were of any concern to the buſineſs of Sanctity and Religion, and therefore none of them was the true God. Cicero underſtandeth the Deity to be (d) a certain looſe and free Mind ſegregate from all mortal Concretion, perceiving and moving all things. Sext. Empir. ſaith, that the Deity was thought (e) a certain happy Animal (or Vitaliſt) and incorruptible and perfect in happineſs, and incapable of any evil. But none of theſe ſuppos'd Deities in Paganiſm was of kind the Deity or Sovereignity of true Sanctity and Religion; and therefore none of them was the true kind of God. Nor muſt we only oppoſe the Science of Sanctity (which is in great part Nobility-learning) to the Theology of the Philoſophic Pagans: But to the Metaphyſical

(b) Th. Barlow Exercit. Metaphyſ. 3. & 4.

(c) De N. D. l. 1.

(d) Mens ſoluta quædam & libera, ſegregata ab omni concretione mortali, omnia ſentiens & movens. Tuſc. l. 1.

(e) Μακάριόν τι ζῶον ϗ ἄφθαρτον, ϗ τέλειον ἐν εὐδαιμονίᾳ, ϗ παντὸς κακοῦ ἀνεπίδεκτον. Petav. T. 1. l. 1. c. 2. S.9.

phyſical and Scholaſtic Theology of Jews and Chriſtians, which is not a Theology from natural Light only, but is the Scripture-Theology turn'd into a criminally Metaphyſical and Scholaſtic Theology. Which is but a natural and neceſſary conſequence of the Metaphyſicians pretenſion to treat of the Plenary Idea of God. For if this belongeth to the Science of Metaphyſicks, the true and genuin kind of Theology muſt be of Kind and Quality Scholaſtical and Metaphyſical. But how mean and vile, how uſeleſs and unprofitable, how criminal and miſchievous, how ſpurious and illegitimate, this ſort of Theology is, and how oppoſite to the Science of Sanctity (the only true and genuin kind of Theology) will appear, if we compare together theſe two ſorts of Theology, and make ſome few remarks upon them.

II. The Science which Sanctity is (underſtanding thereby both that which is of Nature and that which is by Divine Grace) belongeth to the Saints of God as ſuch, and is the Saint of God-kind of Learning. Which Notion of it ſufficiently diſtinguiſheth it from all Arts and Sciences of the common unholy kind, the Pædagogical, Metaphyſical, Phyſiological, Mathematical, Medicinal, Political, Juriſprudential, Mechanical. In ancient Latin Authors Sanctity and Religion (f) are terms ſynonymous; and to ſuppoſe the Gods to be of Religion and of Sanctimony is the ſame thing. Whence Cicero ſaith, ad Deorum Religionem Sanctimoniamque migrare, to remove to the Religion and Sanctimony of the Gods. (g) Servius ſulpitius deriv'd the word Religion à relinquendo, from leaving us; for he ſuppoſ'd it, to denote That which being of Sanctity is therefore remov'd and ſegregated from us. Religion importeth Sanctity,. and is of the ſame import with it. The Science which is Sanctity, is the ſame with the Science of Religion, which ſignifieth inſtitutively the Doctrine, Diſcipline or Inſtitution of Religion; and conſtitutively univerſal Sanctity on our part (conſtitutive of the Saints of God) and more eſpecially of the intellectual Virtue, which Sanctity or Religion is, and without which (intellectual Virtue, Knowledge or Science) none can be Holy and Religious. In both theſe Notions (as Inſtitutive and Conſtitutive) it is called in Scripture the knowledge of the Holy, which implieth, that it is the Science which belongeth to the Saints of God (the holy People) as ſuch, and is the Saint of God-kind of Learning. Prov. 9. 10. The knowledge of the holy is underſtanding. Prov. 30. 3. I never learned wiſdom, nor have the underſtanding of the holy. The Knowledge of the Holy (Scientia Sanctorum) ſo plainly ſignifieth the Science of Sanctity or Religion, that the Septuagint explicate the meaning of the Phraſe by this annexed Clauſe τὸ γνῶναι νόμον, to know the Law. The Science of Sanctity therefore in reſpect of the Subject to which it belongeth, is the Holy Learning; for it belongeth to none, but as they are or ought to be Holy. In reſpect of the Subject alſo in which it reſideth, it is the holy Learning; for it conſtituteth and denominateth them that profeſs it holy by profeſſion, and diſtinguiſheth them from the unholy; and unleſs they have it in ſo ſlender a degree, as that in the main they have it not, it maketh them and denominateth them really Holy. In them that are really Holy it is of ſpecific Nature the holy Learning; and it is alſo the holy Learning objectively, or in reſpect of the matter which it is converſant about, which is Holineſs of State, Life, Society, holy Perſons and holy Things (the matters of God-ſociety,) agreeably whereunto Munſter obſerveth, that this Phraſe the knowledge of the Holy is rendred by the Hebrews intelligentia rerum ſanctarum, the underſtanding of holy things. It is originally Holy; for it is of God as Father of the holy Family, and Founder of the holy Empire; and the End, Uſe and Effect, to which it is deſign'd and adapted, is to make Men holy; upon all which accounts it muſt be denominated the holy Learning. For as the way of the righteous and the righteous way, ſo the knowledge of the holy and the holy knowledge are ſynonymous Expreſſions. The wiſe Man ſtileth it Knowledge, Wiſdom, Underſtanding, Prov. 2. 5. ſimply and without addition (which Names ſignifie what is good Underſtanding) and the knowledge of God, which ſpeaketh it to be the genuin Theoſophy (the Holy and Divine kind of Learning,) which is the Holy and Divine kind of Good and Excellency, the comprehenſion of all Holy and Divine kind of Goods and Excellencies.

(f) Qui Sancti? qui Religionem colentes? Cic. orat. pro Planc. Nihil ſanctius, nihil omni religione munitius. Idem orat. pro Dom. Nonne omnem religionem funditus ſuſtulerit? quæ enim poteſt eſſe ſanctitas? Idem de N. D. l. 1. De ſanctitate, de pietate adverſus Deos libros ſcripſit Epicurus. Ibid.

(g) Servius ſulpitius religionem eſſe dictam tradidit, quæ propter ſanctitatem aliquam remotum ac ſepoſitum à nobis ſit; quaſi à relinquendo dicta. Macrob. Saturn. l. 3. c. 3.

III. From which definitive Notices of the Science of Sanctity its Tranſcendence appeareth; for the Name of a Learning, Knowledge or Science ſpeaketh it to be the Knowledge of a comprehenſion of things, that are of worth to be learned; and thoſe only a Philoſopher accounteth ſuch, which belong to the Pythagoric Inſtitution and Science of Sanctity. (h) Thoſe things only are worth the Learning, which carry us to the Divine Similitude, which make us conſult before action, that fooliſh things be not done; that ſuffer us not to be drawn aſide by any, by Word or Deed, which inable us, to diſcern the difference between Diſcourſes that occur, which perſwade to bear calmly the Calamities ſent by Providence, and to make Medicinal applications to them, to bear well Death and Poverty, to practice Juſtice, and ſtrictly to bound the Belly and the things about it; which introduceth the Laws of Friendſhip, and the Honour of Parents, and which ſhew the Worſhip of the ſuperiour kinds of Beings. Another Philoſopher will not allow, that any thing is worthy the Name of Learning and Erudition on this ſide the Stoical Inſtitution and Science of Sanctity (Sinleſneſs) and Beatitude. (i) Why do'ſt thou call thy ſelf Learned? What is thy Erudition Man? Is it becauſe thou haſt made Syllogiſms? Wilt thou not unlearn, if it be poſſible, all theſe things, and beginning again agree with me, that until now thou haſt not touch'd the buſineſs? For thou art to learn, not to envy, not to pity, not to emulate, not to tremble, not to deplore thy fate or fortune.

(h) Ἄξια δὲ ἐκεῖνα μόνα [μαθήσεως] ὅσα πρὸς τὴν θείαν ὁμοίωσιν ἡμᾶς ἄγει· ἃ ποιεῖ βουλεύεσθαι πρὸ ἔργου, ὅπως μὴ μωρὰ τέληται· ἃ οὐκ ἐᾷ παράγεσθαι ὑπ' οὐδενὸς οὔτε λόγῳ οὔτε ἔργῳ· ὅσα διακρίνειν ἱκανοὺς ποιεῖ τῶν προσπιπτόντων λόγων τὸ διάφορον· ὅσα τὰς δαιμονίας τύχας πρᾴως φέρειν καὶ ἰᾶσθαι πείθει, καὶ τὴν θανάτου καὶ πενίας διδάσκει, καὶ δικαιοσύνης ἄσκησιν, καὶ γαστρὸς καὶ τῶν περὶ τὴν γαστέρα τὴν ἐγκράτειαν· ὅσα τοὺς τῆς φιλίας νόμους εἰσηγεῖται καὶ τὴν γονέων τιμήν· ὅσα τῶν κρειττόνων γενῶν τὸ σέβας ἀποδείκνυσι. Hierocl. in aur. Car. p. 174.

(i) Τί ἐπιλέγεις πεπαιδεῦσθαι; ποίαν παιδείαν ἄνθρωπε; ὅτι συλλογισμοὺς ἔπραξας μεταπίπτοντας; οὐ θέλεις ἀπομαθεῖν, εἰ δυνατὸν, πάντα ταῦτ καὶ ἄνωθεν ἄρξασθαι συναισθόμενος ὅτι μέχρι νῦν οὐδ' ἧ τοῦ πράγματος. Epict. Diſſ. 2. c. 17.

(k) Give me a young Man, that cometh into the School ſaying, I bid adieu to all things elſe, this one thing is to me ſufficient, if I may live without being liable to impediment and without trouble. So in Cebes's Table nothing is accounted ἀληθινὴ παιδεία, true Erudition, but that which ſaveth Men from their great Evils, and conducteth them to Virtue and Beatitude. All other Learning is called ψευδοπαιδεία, falſe Erudition, becauſe comparatively and unleſs it be conjoin'd with and ſubordinated to the true Erudition, it deſerveth no other Name. (l) A Man that can ſpeak as well as Demoſthenes, and unlooſe Syllogiſms as well as Chryſippus, nothing hindreth ἄθλιον εἶναι, πενθεῖν, φθονεῖν, ἁπλῶς ταράττεσθαι, κακοδαιμονεῖν, but that he may be miſerable, may lament and envy, and (to ſpeak compendiouſly) may be in perturbation and infelicity. Much of this Nature occurreth (m) in Philo and the Pagan Divine Philoſophers; agreeably whereto the Church of God ſuppoſeth, that her Saint of God-kind of Learning is the only valuable and important Learning. (n) In hac nulla eſt hominis ſapientia niſi Pietas, quâ rectè colitur verus Deus. In the Church there is no Wiſdom but Piety, whereby the true God is truly Worſhipp'd. All other Arts and Sciences (although of good uſe in the Church yet) are τὰ ἔξωθεν, μαθήματα, exoterical Learning (as Sophronius calleth them,) they are on this ſide Religion, which is totum Hominis, the whole of Man (the whole of his Duty and of his Intereſt,) and therefore they are like the things of this Life, but τὰ πῶς ἀναγκαῖα, in ſome ſort needful (they are not like the grand Neceſſaries for Man his Holineſs and his Happineſs,) comparatively they are little worth, of ſlender importance, and in great degree needleſs and ſuperfluous. (p) Quæ neque ſcire compendium, neque ignorare detrimentum eſt ullum, which there is no (great) profit in knowing, nor detriment in not knowing. In themſelves they are vile and ſorry kind of things (as are alſo the things which they are converſant about,) common, graceleſs and unholy (therefore but of common price,) common to the wicked and atheous, conſiſtent with Diaboliſm (and therefore on this ſide what is choice and precious,) but notional and ſhadowy, jejune and ſuperficial (not like the holy-vital, the ſavoury and ſubſtantial Knowledge,) empty and unſatisfactory, flatulent and tumid, always dangerous, uſually miſchievous, in great degree imperfect, and impertinent to our true excellency and felicity. The Exoterical Arts and Sciences are the beſt of Human Goods, and ought to be eſteem'd according to their worth and uſefulneſs: But they are no better than the human, ſecular and mundane kind of Goods and Excellencies (that Chriſtians duely deprecate and relinquiſh,) which are * the paganical and mundane kind of glories. As Julian challengeth the Chriſtians, (q) to produce a Man of theirs that might compare with Hippocrates for Learning in Phyſick: To which S. Cyril well replieth, what is that to Religion? The whole of Exoterical Learning without Sanctity is Exoterical to our true Wiſdom, it maketh none wiſe in the main (the Men of Knowledge and Underſtanding,) but the greateſt proficients in it remain Fools in the main notwithſtanding their Exoterical Learning, and in the whole computation of things are not the wiſer and better for it; agreeably to what Cicero ſaith of Antonius, he gave his Maſter a great reward, to teach him to be never the wiſer. The Chriſtians of old ſaid in their Prayers to God, (r) although any one be perfect among the Sons of Men, yet if he be devoid of the Wiſdom that cometh from thee, he muſt be reputed as nothing. There is no compariſon, no proportion between the common, human, ſecular and mundane kind of Goods and Excellencies (Learning, Wiſdom, Riches, Honours, Peace and Safety, Comfort and Felicity,) and the Holy, Spiritual, Divine and ſaving Goods and Excellencies. For what are evanid Shadows to the great ſubſtantial Realities? A counterfeit Eye or Pearl to that which is true and genuine? Traſh to Treaſure? Things exoterical and vulgar to the ſaving Precioſities? The beggarly Riches and ignoble kind of Honours to the truly noble and Divine? What is a trifle to a Kingdom? Athens to the heavenly Jeruſalem? The Saint of God-kind of Learning and Wiſdom (the Science which Sanctity is, and which is Sanctity) is of no leſs value and importance than God, his Religion, his ſaving Truth and true Worſhip, his Life and Kingdom, and the immenſe Goods thereof, and the whole being of a Saint of God (both here and hereafter;) for it is all theſe ineſtimable Goods and Excellencies in it ſelf and to us. And becauſe it compriſeth univerſal Sanctity and Piety (in compariſon whereof all things are vanity,) it is ſummum bonum, the Sovereign and peerleſs Good, ſummum bonorum, the ſummary and aggregate of all our true and great Goods, which bring along with them the Goods of the lower Houſe. The Saint of God-kind of Learning and Wiſdom (objectively and ſubjectively ſuch) is ſuch a knowledge of the Saint of God kind of things (which are of Excellency invaluable and infinite importance,) as ſaveth Mankind from all their great Evils, and therefore J. Mart. had reaſon to ſay, (s) This I found the only certain and profitable Philoſophy.

IV. If any Inſtitution calleth it ſelf a Theology, which is not of Kind and Quality the Inſtitution and Science and Sanctity, it is not of Kind and Quality genuin, but ſpurious and illegitimate. For although it be as the Name Theology ſignifieth (t) תורת האלהות the Doctrine or Inſtitution of the Divinity, חכמת האלהות the Wiſdom touching the God-head, yet if it is not the Diſcipline and Science of Sanctity, but on this ſide it, and of an Alien-kind from it, It muſt be counted illegitimate, becauſe it is not the Saint of God-kind (and therefore not the God-kind) of Learning and Wiſdom concerning God. That is not the genuin kind of Theology, which is not the true and genuine Theoſophy; and that is not the true and genuin Theoſophy, which is not the true and genuine kind of Wiſdom, which is the Saint of God-kind of Learning and Wiſdom. If Theology is Theoſophy, it muſt be the Knowledge of God (the comprehenſion of what is and ought to be known of God;) and if it is the genuin Knowledge of God, it muſt neceſſarily be coincident with that which alone is ſuch, the Science of Sanctity. Theology is Divina Scientia (the Divine Science) which if genuin muſt neceſſarily be the Holy and Divine kind of Learning and Science, which is the ſame with the (k) Ἐμοὶ τὰ μὲν ἄλλα πάντα χαιρέτω, ἀρκεῖ δὲ εἰ ἐξέσται ποτὲ ἀπαραποδίστῳ ϗ ἀλύπῳ διαγαγεῖν. Ibid.

---

(l) Epict. ſupr. c. 23.

(m) Philo opuſc. p. 22, 23. Lipſ. Manud. l. 1. Diſſ. 1. l. 2. Diſſ. 6. Epictet. Diſſ. l. 2. c. 19. 21. Gat. in Ant. p. 9, 14, 44, 45.

(n) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 14. c. 28.

(p) Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 2. p. 86.

* S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 5. p. 179.

(q) Ibid. l. 7. p. 223.

(r) Κἂν γάρ τις τέλειος ἐν υἱοῖς ἀνθρώπων, τῆς ἀπό σου σοφίας ἀπούσης, εἰς οὐθὲν λογισθήσεται. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 6. p. 283, 284.

(s) Ταύτην μόνην εὕρισκον φιλοσοφίαν ἀσφαλῆ τε ϗ σύμφορον. Dial. cum Typh. p. 225.

(t) Hotting. Theſ. Phil. p. 69.

the Inſtitution and Science of Sanctity. Theology is Divinity Doctrinal, and what can be more plainly illegitimate than a Divinity which is not of kind and quality Divinity (and therefore is not φερώνυμος, the truth of its Name?) an Inſtitution of God which is not of the God-kind and ſymbolizeth not with him? An unholy and undivine kind of Divinity, which is not (u) ϑεία ϑεολογία, Divine kind of Theology (as Clemens ſpeaketh,) is like an unchriſtian kind of Chriſtianity, an unplatonic kind of Platoniſm; it is an atheous kind of Theiſm, and the Deity in ſuch an Inſtitution muſt neceſſarily be (in great degree) an Atheous kind of God. Theology touching the Godhead belongeth to Sanctity or Religion (as it is an Inſtitution or Science) as properly as the Theology touching Chriſt belongeth to the Chriſtian Religion; and as the Chriſtian Religion (the Goſpel of Chriſt) is Chriſtology, ſo the Inſtitution, Diſcipline and Science of Sanctity is Theology. The Theology of a Saint properly belongeth to the Saint of God-kind of Learning and Philoſophy, how much more doth the Theology of the Godhead properly belong thereunto, ſeeing God is (w) Sanctus Sanctorum (the Saint of Saints,) which is his being God? Wherefore it fareth with the Idea of God as with an obſcure Book, which Heraclitus wrote touching Nature or Phiſiology; for as one interpreted that obſcure Book touching things Politick or Moral, miſtaking the very kind of Learning of which it treated; ſo they that form their plenary Idea of God in Phiſiology, Metaphyſicks, or any unholy Learning (as the Philoſophic Pagans did) miſtake the very kind of Learning to which it belongeth.

(u) Clem. ap. Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 2. c. 2. ſub ſin.

(w) Petav. T. 4. par. 2. l 11. c. 14. S. 4.

So our Chriſtian Apologiſts very much miſtake the Idea of God, when (confounding ἱεροῖς βέβηλα, the Holy with the Profane) at this rate they follow and applaud the Philoſophic-Pagan Theology of the Godhead. (x) I have expos'd (ſaith one of them) the Opinions of almoſt all the more illuſtrious Philoſophers, that they denoted one God although by many Names; ſo that one may rationally think, either that the Chriſtians now are (Pagan) Philoſophers, or that the (Pagan) Philoſophers of former Ages were then Chriſtians. They that ſuppoſe ſuch an Harmony between the Chriſtian and Philoſophic-Pagan Theology of the Godhead, are criminally deficient in underſtanding either one or both of them; which is too viſible in this Apologiſt, who with the reſt of the Chriſtianizing Philoſophic-Pagans reckoneth Democritus, Strato and Epicurus. It is much, that the Chriſtian Apologiſts ſhould not be ſolicitous for other Notices of the Godhead, (y) than ſuch as their Pagan Adverſaries might and did acknowledge, and yet continue Pagans ſtill. But thus Lactantius ſometimes ſuppoſeth, (z) That the Philoſophers touch'd upon the whole Truth and all the recondite Learning of Divine Religion. In the elder times of the Chriſtian Church the Platonic Scholaſticiſm was criminally introduc'd into our Religion. (a) The Chriſtian Schools drew ſome of their Articles through the Limbecks of Plato's Philoſophy, and to this Day the reliſh remaineth upon ſome of them. (b) Some of the Philoſophers betook themſelves to the Chriſtian Religion upon the riſe of it, chiefly of the Platonic Sect, which then was the principal, and coming into the Church they left not their Platoniſm behind them, but transferr'd many things from their Philoſophy into the Chriſtian Religion, eſpecially in the matter of the Trinity, of which there is ſome reſemblance in that Philoſophy. But in after-times as Ariſtotle grew into credit, the Theorems of Theology (Dogmata Theologica) and the method of handling them was accommodated to the Ariſtotelian mode of philoſophizing; (c) and in the Year 1629, the Parliament of Paris gave Sentence againſt ſome extravagant Chymiſts, upon remonſtrance of the Sorbon, who held, that to oppoſe the Principles of Ariſtotle's Philoſophy, was to oppoſe thoſe of Scholaſtick Divinity receiv'd in our Church. (d) The Colonienſes wrote a Book de Salute Ariſtotelis; and Thannerus ſaith, that Ariſtotle was Chriſt's forerunner in naturalibus, as John Baptiſt was in gratuitis. At this Day ſome ſay, (e) Senza Ariſtotele noj mancarono di molti Articoli di Fide, without Ariſtotle we ſhould fail in many Articles of our Faith. But Ariſtotle is not every where rever'd as the great Oracle of Wiſdom: Platoniſm of late hath reviv'd and made head again. And not a few diſcarding the over-fond admiration both of Plato and Ariſtotle, have generouſly betaken themſelves, to contemplate Divine Matters with great freedom of Mind, but in a method remote and alien from the Science of Sanctity, Carteſianiſm alſo (not content with its Mechanicks) pretendeth to a Metaphyſical Theology, to form Ideas of God and of Spirits, and of the Chriſtian Trinity it ſelf, which (according to the Genius of that Philoſophy) muſt be (f) tres modi cogitandi, three modes of thinking. Such unholy and exotick modes of Theologizing being introduc'd into the Church, a Metaphyſical and Scholaſtick kind of Theology of ſeveral Forms and Denominations (and agreeable to ſeveral Schools of Metaphyſicians,) ſhe hath chang'd her Science of Sanctity (in her Theology of the Godhead) and ſubſtituted inſtead of it an illegitimate kind of Theology.

(x) Expoſui opiniones omnium fermè philoſophorum, quibus illuſtrior gloria eſt, Deum unum multis licet deſignaſſe nominibus: ut quivis arbitretur, aut nunc Chriſtianos philoſophos eſſe, aut philoſophos fuiſſe jam tunc Chriſtianos. Min. Fel. p. 155.

(y) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 1. p. 32.

(z) Totam veritatem & omne divinæ religionis arcanum Philoſophi attigerunt. L. 7. c. 3.

(a) Biſhop Taylor Duct. Dub. B. 1. c. 2. r. 3.

(b) Petav. de Trin. l. 1. c. 3 S. 1.

(c) The compariſon of Plato with Ariſt. p. 192, 193.

(d) Dr. Tuckney. None but Chriſt. p. 60.

(e) Palavicin. l. 8 c. 19.

(f) Liber de S. Amore Ep. Theol. p. 105.

So the Metaphyſical Rabbins (that are now no more the holy People) have chang'd their Science of Sanctity by criminally Scholaſticizing and Philoſophic-Paganizing the Theology of the Godhead at an enormous rate; (g) their Mercavah or Science of God and Spirits is Metaphyſica, and compriſeth their Hyper-phyſical Contemplations (as mine Author ſpeaketh,) which are not thoſe of the high-flown Platonic, but of the Ariſtotelian Form and School. Not but that the Platonic Metaphyſicks are entertain'd amongſt the Jews, and were ſo of ancient times (they appear in Joſephus, Philo and the Cabaliſts;) but the more receiv'd Philoſophy of the Judaical Schools from ancient times (the times of Antiochus, as Learned Men ſuppoſe) hath been that of Ariſtotle, his Hypotheſis of Celeſtial Orbs and Spheres occurreth in Jonathan ben Uzziel's Paraphraſe upon Ezekiel's Viſion of the Wheels (which Paraphraſe was written many Years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem,) and in the Jezirah, which is thought the moſt ancient Book they have, (h) and a Relique of the ancient Judaical Philoſophy. Agreeably to the Genius of their Philoſophy the Rabbins ſuppoſe, (i) that the Celeſtial Orbs are living, rational and intelligent, and the holy Angels are in their account the ſame with Ariſtotle's Abſtract, Intelligences that move the Spheres. And as they paganize the holy Angels into Ariſtotelian abſtract Forms and ſeparate Intelligences: So (agreeably to Ariſtotle) they repreſent the Deity as a great ab-

ſtract

(g) Vorſt. in Maimon. de fund. Leg. p. 23.

(h) Coſri, p. 301.

(i) Maimon. Mor. Nev. par. 2. c. 4.

ſtract Intelligence, that is, above the Intelligences of the ſeveral Orbs or Spheres, and the ſame with Ariſtotle's τὸ πρῶτον κινοῦν ἀκίνητον, firſt immoveable Intellect, to which he attributeth the motion of the Primum Mobile; (k) for the Rabbins ſtile the Deity Intelligentia abſtracta, an abſtract Intelligence, and one of theſe Doctors ſaith, (l) I have ſeen in a moſt ancient Book, that Socrates whom they call Divine, firſt found out by Philoſophy, quod ſit Ens aliquod abſtractum, that there is a certain abſtract Being. (m) The firſt Cauſe moveth the Primum Mobile, ſaith Abarbinel, (n) whirling the World about without Hand and Body, ſaith Maimonides. Alex. Aphrodiſ. and ſome others of Ariſtotle's Interpreters are of Opinion, that the (o) Intellectus agens (which is ſaid to illuminate the Mind of Man in the act of underſtanding) is God himſelf or the Supreme Mind that moveth all the Orbs. Agreeably to this Branch of Peripatetick Philoſophy the Rabbins ſuppoſe, (p) that God is the Intellectus agens at leaſt to their Nation, and of this they underſtand the Pſalmiſts words, In thy Light ſhall we ſee Light. As theſe ſpurious and illegitimate kind of Theiſts criminally follow Ariſtotle in their Notices of the Deity; ſo their Notion of Theology agreeth with the Philoſophic Pagan. For their Mercavah is that which they call (q) חכמת האלהות or Knowledge Theological. Thoſe things that are wholly ſegregate from Nature, and from all Matter and Motion eſſentially, they call Theological.

(k) Ibid. par. 1. c. 67. & par. 3. c. 9.
(l) Buxtorf. in Coſri, p. 31.
(m) Abarb. ap. Menaſſ. ben Iſr. Qu. in Gen. p. 51. & de cap. Fid. ap. Vorſt. p. 98.
(n) Ibid.
(o) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 3. c. 42. Gaſſend. T. 2. l. 9. c. 1.
(p) Selden. de J. Nat. & Gent. l. 1. c. 9.
(q) Quæ à natura prorſus & ab omni materia & motu ſunt eſſentialiter abſoluta & ſeparata, dicimus Theologica. Reuchlin. de Art. Cab. l. 1. fol. 5. & 14.

V. The Metaphyſical and Scholaſtic kind of Theology is rather Neſcience than Science of the Godhead and of the Matters of genuine Theology. For ſo far as it is remote from the genuine knowledge of God and the good underſtanding of things (which is in great degree,) ſo far as it is a ſpurious and illegitimate kind of Theology, ſo far it is Neſcience, not Science. It underſtandeth not, nor can explicate the principal and moſt obvious Names of the Deity (as God and Jehovah;) nor is it poſſible, that they ſhould be underſtood and explicated aright but in the Science of Sanctity. It perverteth the one of theſe ſacred Names (the holy-popular Name Jehovah,) and it commonizeth and profaneth the other (the holy Name God) both by its trifling Etymologies, and by dignifying above it the Metaphyſical Ens; whereby this filthy abſurdity emergeth, that his Being is not ſo much the being God (which is Sanctity on his part and on ours,) as Metaphyſical Entity, which is dignify'd above Sanctity, that is a very great ſtranger in this Theology. It underſtandeth not the Holineſs of the Name of God (which is his Godhead,) nor well underſtandeth his Holineſs of Nature; and having brought Greeks into the Temple it hath polluted this holy place, by confounding (in great degree) the Platonic or Ariſtotelic Theiſm with the Scripture-Theology. (r) It frequently confoundeth the true God with the Platonic Hen or Monad, which is altogether unconceivable, unintelligible, unſayable (innominable alſo,) and the object of Neſcience, not of Science. Accordingly this Theology aboundeth with φλεγμαίνοντα ὀνόματα, turgid Expreſſions deriv'd from the Platoniſts, which are no better than Superintelligible Grandiloquies (intituling the Deity ἑνὰς ὑπερηνωμένη, ſuper-unite Unity, ὑπερούσιος, ſuper-eſſential, (s) ἐπέκεινα νοῦ καὶ οὐσίας, beyond Mind and Eſſence; (t) προαιώνιος, præ-eternal; ὑπερτελής, ſuper-perfect; ὑπέρθεος, ſuper-God,) all which Platonic Metaphyſical Names and many ſuch more are like that Title of Honour in Nobility-Learning ſuper-illuſtris, of which ſome Lawyers ſay, (u) that in truth there is no ſuch Title. This Theology fanſieth a docta ignorantia, Learned Ignorance, it imitateth Plato's Parmenides, and affecteth to make the Deity unintelligible, as Cuſanus doth in his Book de Docta Ignorantia (and even Gr. Naz. hath compos'd an Oration, to render the Deity as unintelligible, as his excellent Wit could make him, Orat. 34.) it affecteth alſo to make Riddles of God, and to attribute to the Deity inconſiſtences; (w) ſuch as ἑνὰς καὶ οὐχ ἑνάς, an Unity and not an Unity, νοῦς ἀνόητος, mindleſs Mind, τὸ προούσιον ὄν, the præ-eſſential Ens, which is Syneſius's Name for God. None that affect not Neſcience and Obſcurity in Divine Matters, will admire Scaliger's Subtilty (for which he admir'd himſelf) in excogitating this Name for God αὐταυτός, ipſiſſimus ipſe; or that of Boethius, (x) Ipſiſſima Ipſeitas, or that of the Book Coſri, (y) a definition conſiſteth of the generical notion and difference, which are incompetible to the firſt Cauſe, from whence it followeth, שיהיה הוא הוא quòd ipſe ſit ipſe. It is not for the Intereſt of Religion, that the Godhead ſhould be repreſented as unknowable and unintelligible; for it is really a ſad Story to the truly Religious, and a foul blemiſh to Theology (as if the deſign of it was not to teach the knowledge of God, but to indoctrinate Men with this dark Conceit, that God cannot be known,) and very edifying Doctrine to the Atheiſts, who deſire nothing more, than to have Religion and the Notion of a Deity repreſented as a bundle of Inconſiſtences, and who pretend, that a Deity is impoſſible, becauſe unconceivable and unintelligible. But this Theology loveth, to expatiate in repreſenting the Deity unintelligible, eſpecially the Divine Nature and Eſſence; for it ſuppoſeth, (z) that thoſe Perfections which in our way of conceiving and underſtanding are attributed unto God, οὐ τὴν φύσιν δηλοῖ, ἀλλὰ τὰ περὶ φύσιν, do not declare his Nature, but what is about his Nature. (a) His Being is ſimple, unknowable, inacceſſible to all, and altogether inexplicable. (b) This one way we may know, how to underſtand what God is, if we think him to be that, which cannot be underſtood, nor ſo much as enter into thought, of what ſort it is and how great it is. His Eſſence is ſaid to be (c) utterly unknown (d) of God, what he is in himſelf, nothing can be ſaid by us, nor ſo much as thought. In this Theology he is intituled Non Ens, (e) as ſuppoſing him the ſame with the Platoniſts Hen or Monad, which is an Acroamatical Deity, that tranſcendeth all Entia, and all Form and Idea. (f) And as no Name is competible to that Platonic primordiality (for nothing is ſayable of him;) ſo this Theology intituleth the true God innominable, as ſuppoſing him ſo unknowable, inexplicable, and undeclarable, and that no Name is agreeable to him. In the Inſtitution and Science of Sanctity the Name of God is of higheſt regard; but in this Scholaſtic Theology the Deity muſt be ἀνώνυμος (he muſt have no Name)

(r) Petav. T. 1. l. 1. c. 6. *S.*10. l. 2. c. 8. S. 8. ibid. c. 6. S. 6. &c.
(s) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 357.
(t) Eugubin. de Per. Phil. l. 1. c. 13.
(u) Selden. Tit of Hon. p. 102.
(w) Petav. ſupr. l. 2. c. 7. S. 8. vid. l. 1. c. 5. S. 6. & c. 6. *S.*11.
(x) De Trin. c. 4.
(y) *P.*313.
(z) Petav. ſupr. l. 1. c. 6. S. 12. v. ibid. c. 11. S. 9.
(e) Ibid. l. 1. c. 5. S. 12.
(f) Ibid. l. 8. c. 6. S. 6.

(a) Simplicem & ignorabilem (ἄγνωστον) atque inacceſſam omnibus & prorſus inexplicabilem habet exiſtentiam. Petav. ibid.

(b) Quomodo intelligere licet quid ſit Deus, uno modo mente capiemus, ſi cogitaverimus id illum eſſe, quod quale & quantum ſit, non poſſit intelligi, ne in ipſum quidem cogitationem poſſit venire. Petav. ibid. l. 1. c. 6. S. 3.

(c) Funditus ignota. Ibid. l. 2. c. 5. S. 4.

(d) De Deo cujuſmodi in ſe eſt, nihil à nobis dici, ac nè cogitari poteſt. Ibid. l. 1. c. 6. S. 3.

for the ſame reaſons (g) that the Platoniſts will allow none to their firſt Principle of all things. (h) The Deity is innominable. (i) The Name is a certain definition of a thing. How is he ſayable or expreſſible, who is neither Genus, nor Difference, nor Species, nor Individuum? By Names we ſignifie things that are known; but who can notifie by a Name τὸ ἀγνοούμενον, that which is unknown (k)?

Μοῦνος ἐὼν ἄφραστος· ἐπεὶ τέκες ὅσσα λαλεῖται.
Μοῦνος ἐὼν ἄγνωστος· ἐπεὶ τέκες ὅσσα νοεῖται.

Seeing all ſpeakable things are from thee, thou art
ſole unſpeakable.
Seeing all knowable things are from thee, thou art
ſole unknowable.

(l) We are ſo far from the knowledge of that Supreme, that we do not know his Name: It is his own Increpation, why inquireſt thou my Name, which is wonderful? and Damaſcen ſaith, the Divinity is altogether incomprehenſible (unapprehenſible) and innominable. This ſoundeth high, (m) but how much more auguſt and worthy of God is that confeſſion, unſpeakable, unſayable, not to be expreſs'd but by Silence? I add a third reaſon (ſaith Lipſius) from Damaſcen, to ſhew, that the knowledge of God is obſcure and impenetrable: (n) Knowledge is of thoſe things that have Eſſence; but God is above Eſſence, therefore above Knowledge, or without Cognoſcibility.

In conſort with theſe Scholaſticks of the Chriſtian Church the Hebrew Doctors affirm; (o) our Minds cannot apprehend God, nor can any one apprehend what God is, except God himſelf. (p) All ſound Philoſopers acknowledge, that a Definition is incompetible to God. (q) We apprehend nothing of God but his Being, namely, that he is an Exiſtent, to whom nothing is like in the Univerſe of Beings, and that he hath nothing in common with any other; (r) whoſe Eſſence is altogether hidden and unconceivable (yet the Tetragrammaton is ſaid, to expreſs and explicate it.) They deny, that we have any proper formal Conceptions of any thing that God is, and that Life, Wiſdom, Will, Power, Mercy and Grace are attributed to God and other Beings univocally, or ſo much as analogically, but they are attributed only ὁμωνύμως, equivocally, as they ſuppoſe; (s) If we ſay, that God is living, our Intention is, to deny, that the attribute of Death belongeth to God; for as a Stone is of too low a condition, to be capable either of Folly or Wiſdom, ſo the Divine Eſſence is too ſublime, to be receptive either of Life or Death: If we ſay, that God hath Life, but not as our Life, we mean, that we have no conception of any other Life but our own, and it is as much, as if we ſhould ſay, that we do not know, what the Life of God is. If they ſay, that God is merciful or gracious, they do not mean, that Grace or Mercy is inherent in the Divine Eſſence; but that God doth that which Men do through inherent Grace or Mercy (or is effectively merciful and gracious,) namely, he relieveth the Miſerable, or ſheweth Favour to ſuch, to whom he is not oblig'd. (t) So they admit not, that Life, Wiſdom, Will or Power, are formally in the Divine Eſſence (but God is conceiv'd to be powerful, becauſe effective of all things in the Creation, and willing or volitive, becauſe he maketh to exiſt, what is in being,) nor that any thing which we conceive of as Perfection is properly and formally in God, or any thing analogous thereto. And this Metaphyſical Theory is thought, to be of ſuch importance, that the People muſt be taught it by way of Cabala. Agreeably to which Cabala of miſchievous Metaphyſicks (that render the Deity unknowable) their Cabaliſts have denominated God (as is before remark'd) tenebroſe Aleph, colour of Black, and Non Ens, (u) becauſe we have no apprehenſion of the Deity, (w) nor any Notion at all. (x) To whom will ye liken me? ſaith God, for ye can have no apprehenſion of me. If we ask the Cabaliſts, how any Name (ſuch as the Lord of the Worlds) can be given to their recondite primordiality, if ſo totally unknown? their anſwer is; we know thus much דאנת הוא thou art he. As the Platonic Scholaſticks of the Chriſtian Church ſay, (y) The Deity is inexpreſſible and innominable, therefore to be venerated and ador'd in ſilence: So the Hebrew Doctors ſay, (z) Tibi ſilentium laus eſt, whereby they mean, that it is better to be ſilent, than to ſpeak forth God's Praiſes. Thus the Scholaſtick Theology is come to a very fair Iſſue!

VI. The Metaphyſical and Scholaſtic kind of Theology is no Friend to affirmative Attributes, and ſo far is no Friend to the knowledge of God, nor to true Piety, which is the knowledge of God; (a) for Maimonides wholly diſcardeth affirmative Attributes as falſe Affirmations, and of the negative Attributes he ſaith, (b) A Negation doth not notifie to us the nature of that thing, touching which we deny ſomething. If therefore Theology muſt admit of none but negative Attributes, God muſt remain unknown for the main at leaſt, and conſequently for the main at leaſt he muſt not be of our acquaintance, intercourſe and correſpondence, nor muſt he be regarded, or eſteem'd, or fear'd, or loved, deſir'd or imitated, prais'd or worſhip'd aright; the beſt People muſt remain an atheous kind of People for the main at leaſt, God being to them ſo far an unknown God. (c) Abarbinel agreeth with Maimonides, that God cannot be deſcrib'd by any affirmative Attribute; and to this purpoſe he expoundeth this Saying of the Preacher, Eccl. 5. 2. God is in Heaven; that is (ſaith he) extremâ occultatione à nobis abſconditus, hid from us by the utmoſt occultation, his Exiſtence is vaſtly remote from our Exiſtence as Heaven from Earth, and therefore his Attributes are not as ours, but there is the wideſt difference between them; and therefore we ought not to aſcribe any but negative Attributes to the Deity. In the diſtributions which the Rabbins make of the Divine Attributes the affirmative Attributes are not named. (d) The Attributes of God (ſay they) are ſome Active, ſome Acceſſory, ſome Negative. The Active are taken from the Works or Doings of God, as making poor, rich, bringing low, lifting up, merciful, gracious, jealous, vindictive, potent, munificent, and the like. The Acceſſory (or Aſcriptitious) are bleſſed, praiſed, holy, high, exalted, which are taken from the exaltation of devout Perſons that ſpeak of God. The Negative are ſuch as Living, One, Firſt, Laſt, which are attributed to God, not to affirm thoſe things of God, in ſuch a manner as we underſtand them, but to deny the contraries. (e) The Rabbinical Scholaſticks expreſs a great zeal againſt the uſe of affirmative Attributes, and in this Extravagance they are ſingular and alone; (f) but the Scholaſticiſm which hath prevail'd in the Chriſtian Church is no friend to affirmative Attributes, it is rather againſt them than for them, and therefore is for Neſcience rather than Science, according to that of the Alexandrian Clemens, (g) non id quod eſt, ſed quod non eſt cognoſcentes, not knowing what he is, but what he is not. Plotinus contemplateth the Godhead blindfold and by obliterating all things ἄφελε πάντα, (ſaith he,) agreeably whereunto a good Man hath taught this bad method of contemplating God; (h) Caſt every thing out of your Mind, deny whatever occurreth, know your own weakneſs, and whatever occurreth that is cogitable, ſay, He is not That. This rule of contemplating God muſt interpret ſome other Sayings of the ſame Father touching God, (i) qui ſcitur melius neſciendo, who is better known by neſcience (ſaith he) cujus nulla ſcientia eſt in anima, niſi ſcire quomodo eum neſcias, of whom there is no other Science in the Soul but the Science of Neſcience. Petavius thus apologizeth for the uſe of Negative Attributes in Deſcriptions and Notices of God. (k) It is more tolerable in treating of God than of created things, that the Negative Attributes ſhould ſtand for the Eſſential, becauſe his Nature is altogether unknown, and may better be declar'd by removing what is not, than by affirming what ſeemeth to be, as Dionyſius affirmeth. This mode of Theologizing is a deſcendent from the School of Plato, whoſe Supreme Deity is incapable of Affirmative Attributes; for theſe Scholaſticks do not contemplate God as the Holy Imperial One (as the Science of Sanctity doth,) but as if God was a Platonic Metaphyſical kind of Primum Unum (becauſe Primum Ens,) they have given him the Platonic Metaphyſical Name, (l) The Monad and Henotety; and ſome of them ſo exactly tranſcribe the Phantaſtry of the Platoniſts touching their Monad, that he who readeth their Scholaſticiſm, cannot but imagine, that he is reading ſome Platonic-Pagan, not any Chriſtian Author. (m) This Hen or Unum is unſayable and innominable (ſaith Eulogius of Alexandria) as being the cauſe of one it ſelf, and the maker of every Henad to be one, and ſuper-ſimplify'd above all Unite and Multitude; becauſe it is properly one and in all, and is known above all, the Eſſence-maker of all Beings, ſeated above in ſuper-eſſentiality, and proper monotety (ſingularity) and is Theologically called the Henad and the Monad. The Monad is σκότος ἄγνωστον, Darkneſs beyond all ken (as the Platonic Monad was intituled) and ſuch was the conſequence of introducing this Monadic Theology into the Church; for like an opacous Body it eclips'd the light of the knowledge of God in the Chriſtian Theology, and introduc'd ſuch a Darkneſs into it, that in the times of the counterfeit Dionyſius the Areopagite and J. Damaſcen it reſembled the ſtate of Man after the Fall, when he became according to Gr. Naz.

(g) Ibid. & l. 1. c. 6. S. 10.

(h) Τὸ θεῖον ἀκατονόμαστον. Gr. Naz. orat. 36. p. 589.

(i) Nomen certa rei definitio eſt. Πῶς ἂν εἴη ῥητὸν, ὃ μήτε γένος ἐστὶ, μήτε διαφορὰ, μήτε εἶδος, μήτε ἄτομον; Petav. ſupr. l. 8. c. 6. S. 6, 7, &c.

(k) Gr. Naz. Carm. Jamb. ſub fin.

(l) Adeo à cognitione ſummi illius remoti ſumus, ut ignoremus & nomen. ipſe increpat: cur quæris nomen meum, quod eſt mirabile? & Damaſcenus: Τὸ θεῖον ἀκατάληπτον πάντως καὶ ἀνώνυμόν ἐστι.

(m) Sed quanto auguſtior & Deo dignior illa confeſſio, ἀνεκλάλητος, ἄρρητος, σιωπῇ φωνούμενος, ineffabilis, non dicendus, ſilentio exprimendus? Lipſ. not. ad cap. 2. l. 1. polit.

(n) Cognitio eorum eſt quæ ſunt, at Deus ſuper eſſe eſt, ergo eſt ſupra atque extra notitiam, quia ſupra eſſentiam. Ibid.

(o) Mentes noſtras Deum non poſſe apprehendere, nec quenquam apprehendere quid ſit (Deus) niſi ipſemet Deus. Maimon. Mor. Nev. par. 1. c. 59.

(p) In confeſſo eſt apud omnes ſanæ rationis philoſophos Deum definiri non poſſe. Ibid. c. 52.

(q) De eo nihil niſi τὸ εἶναι ejus apprehendimus, quòd videlicet ſit exiſtens, cui nihil ſit ſimile in univerſa rerum natura, & quod cum nullo alio ulla in re communicet. Ibid. c. 58.

(r) Cujus eſſentia penitus occulta eſt, neque concipi poteſt. Menaſſ. ben Iſr. in Exod. Qu. 3.

(s) Coſri, p. 77, 78.

(t) Maimon. ſupr. par. 1. c. 53. Petav. ſupr. l. 1. c. 11. S. 8.

(u) Propterea quod non apprehenditur. Lib. Jezirah, p. 42.

(w) Nec ulla omnino notio. Ibid. p. 167.

(x) Cui me aſſimilabitis? quia nulla vobis datur apprehenſio mei. Ibid. p. 165.

(y) Ineffabilis & innominabilis Deitas eſt; ſilentio igitur veneranda & adoranda. Mut. Panſ. de oſc. Ethn. & Chriſt. Philoſ. p. 102.

(z) Maimon. Mor. Nev. par. 1. c. 59.

(a) Mor. Nev. par. 1. c. 57, 58.

(b) Negationem nobis non notificare de veritate ſive natura illius rei de quâ aliquid negamus.

(c) Ap. Vorſt. p. 14.

——ὅλον σκότος ἀντὶ Θεοῖο.
All Darkneſs inſtead of a God.

Although the Scholaſtic Theology ſeemeth to put a great value upon the Negative Attributes (which it preferreth before the Affirmative,) yet really it doth not ſuppoſe them, to be of any conſiderable uſe for the purpoſe of notifying God; for it pretendeth, that the Deity is (n) ὑπὲρ πᾶσαν καὶ ἀφαίρεσιν καὶ θέσιν. above all Ablation and Poſition, Negation and Affirmation. It contemplateth the Godhead much what at the ſame rate, that Ariſtotle and Ptolomee have contemplated the viſible Syſtem of the World; for as they (by their Orbs, Epicycles and Eccentricks) have made the World a moſt intricate ill-favour'd Bungle: So the Schools in their Theology have made the Godhead a moſt perplex'd, unintelligible and unlovely Object of Contemplation.

The genuine expreſſive Idea of God is neceſſarily loſt in this Theology, which is ſuch a prejudice to Religion, as the loſs of the Hypotheſis of the Earth's motion would be to Aſtronomy or Natural Philoſophy; for as the knowledge of the true Syſtem of the World is neceſſarily loſt, if the Hypotheſis of the Earth's motion is loſt out of our Philoſophy: So the Schools of Chriſtendom having loſt the genuine expreſſive Idea of God, have loſt alſo (in great degree) the Theology of the Kingdom of God, and the knowledge of the Kingdom of God-kind of things. They are unacquainted with the true Ideas of things, monſtrouſly miſtaken in their Notions, and uſually they ſubſtitute what is alien and ſpurious inſtead of the true and legitimate Notices of things. Thus a late Thomiſt propounding this Queſtion; Per quid natura divina, ſub ratione naturæ, & radicis Attributorum, formaliter conſtituatur? What is it that formally conſtituteth the Divine Nature as a Nature and the Root of the Attributes? after a long debate maketh this Anſwer; (o) The Divine Intellection under the formal conception of ultimate compleat actuality, and ſubſiſting by it ſelf in the intellectual kind, is the formal conſtitutive of the Divine Eſſence or Nature. As to one that asketh, what is Humanity? the anſwer is a rational Nature: So to him that asketh, what is the Deity? the Anſwer is, A Nature at the fulleſt height and moſt perfectly underſtanding. The Conſequence of this illegitimate kind of Theology touching the Godhead is nothing leſs than the Introduction of Paganical Deities and of a Philoſophic-Pagan kind of Trinity (Platonic or Ariſtotelian) into the Church of God. And in its own nature it is a Theology that

(d) Coſri, p. 76, 77.

(e) Maimon. ſupr. c. 59.

(f) Petav. l. 1. c. 5. S. 6, &c.

(g) Ibid. S. 11.

(h) Totum ab animo rejicite, quicquid occurrerit negate, cognoſcite infirmitatem cordis veſtri, & quicquid occurrerit, quod cogitari poſſit, dicite, non eſt illud. Ibid. c. 6. S. 12.

(i) S. Aug. de ord. l. 2. c. 16, 18.

(k) Hic autem eo magis in Deo quàm in creatis rebus permittimus, ut hæc ἀφαιρετικὰ pro eſſentialibus habeantur, quod illius natura penitus ignota ſit, meliuſque negando ac removendo quod non eſt, quam quod eſſe videtur affirmando, declarari poſſit, ut in libro de divinis nominibus Dionyſius affirmat. De Trin. l. 5. c. 2. S. 8.

(l) Petav. 1. l. 2. 8.

(m) Ἄῤῥητον γάρ ἐστι, καὶ ἀνωνόμαστον τοῦτο τὸ ἕν· ἐπεὶ καὶ αὐτό τε ἑνός ἐστιν αἴτιον, πάσης ἑνάδος ἑνοποιόν· καὶ παντὸς ἑνὸς πλήθους ὑπερηπλωμένον. διὰ κυρίως ἓν εἶ), καὶ ἐν πᾶσιν ναι καὶ ὑπὲρ πάντα γινώσκεαι, οὐσιοποιὸν μὲν τῶν ἁπάνν τῶν ὄντων, ὑπεριδρυμένον δὲ τῇ ὑπερουσίῳ, καὶ ἰδίᾳ μονότητι· άς καὶ μονὰς θεολογούμενον. id. S. 22.

(n) Petav. ibid. c. 5. S. 6. & c. 6. S. 12.

(o) Intelligere divinum ſub conceptu formali ultimæ actualitatis completæ, & per ſe ſubſiſtentis in genere intellectuali, eſſe conſtitutivum formale Eſſentiæ vel naturæ divinæ. Sicut interroganti quid ſit humanitas? rectè reſpondetur natura rationalis: ita quærenti quid ſit Deitas? rectè reſpondebitur, natura ſummè & perfectiſſimè intelligens. Gonet. Clyp. Theol. Thomiſt. T. 1. Diſp. 2. Art. 1. S. 5.

that is on this ſide the genuin Theology and knowledge of God, which maketh Men believe, that they know God as well as others, although they are in the State and Life of alienation from him. It is devoid of ὁ θειασμὸς τοῦ χριστιανισμοῦ, the Divine Excellency that is in the Chriſtian Theiſm, and like Ariſtotle's Sapience, it is buſied about τὰ χαλεπὰ, difficult things, but ſuch as are (in great part) ἄχρηστα, of no utility. It changeth Theology, and maketh it of the ſame Nature with the common Arts of ſecular Learning, and is the Learning of the Schools of Sophiſts, not the Saint of God-kind of Learning and Philoſophy. Inſtead of the matters of Science of Sanctity (in great degree) it ſubſtituteth jejune and barren Theories (a Pedlars Pack of Small-wares) Logical Subtilty, Spinoſity, Futility and diſputative Brangling, which is the Seed of innumerable Miſchiefs to the Church. It turneth every thing in Religion into matter of brangling and trifling Altercation, the buſineſs of it is a Technical Trick of diſputing, the worſt Men may be beſt at it, nor is it principally deſign'd to make Men truly Good and Holy; for the diſputacious Pretenders to it ſay of it, (p) magis eam eſſe ſpeculativam quàm practicam, it is more ſpeculative than practical. Thus as in Peſtilential Diſeaſes ſome few fermentative Particles being admitted into the Body change the whole Craſis of the Blood and Juices: So the Introduction of ſome Branches of the Philoſophic-pagans Scholaſticiſm into the Church of the Primitive times hath by degrees chang'd the whole Body of her Theology from Divine into Dialectical, her Precioſities into Spinoſities and Futilities, her Learning of Sanctity into Sophiſtry, and her holy Science into unholy Neſcience of God. If we ask the Scholaſtick Theologers, whence it is, that Mankind are ſo exremely incapacitated for the knowledge of God? (q) They impute it chiefly, (not to any Vicioſity, but agreeably to the Philoſophic-pagan Metaphyſicians) to their corporeal Conſtitution, and the corporeal Phantaſms which they make uſe of in Intellection. So Maimonides ſaith, (r) The Matter is a great Partition-Wall and Veil hindring the true apprehenſion of the abſtract Intelligence. Which ſaying ſeemeth to call God by ſuch a Name, as none but an Ariſtotelian Scholaſtick would give him, an abſtract Intelligence.

VII. The Metaphyſical and Scholaſtick-kind of Theology in many inſtances and ſeveral of its Theorems concerning God claſheth with common Reaſon and the Science of Sanctity, which ſpeaketh it a bad kind of Theology. (s) For Philo (a principal Scholaſtick Theologer) is ſo fooliſhly and profanely Platonic that he ſuppoſeth the Deity to have about him a Guard of Platonic Ideas (which he calleth δυνάμεις, Powers,) and introduceth God making an inept Oration to Moſes touching the inviſibleneſs and incomprehenſibleneſs of his Ideas. He undeifieth God and maketh him one of the Guardian Powers to his τὸ ὂν, or Ens. (t) He cometh neareſt the Truth, that ſaith, the Father of all is in the middle, who in holy Scripture is called by the proper Name Ens. On each ſide him are the ancienteſt and neareſt Powers of Ens, of which the one is called the Opificiary, the other the Regial. The Opificiary is alſo called God, for by this he ſet in order and adorn'd the Univerſe; but the Regial is called Lord. In Philo's Deity therefore Ens hath the Grandeur and the Majeſty. God and Lord are ſtated as Attendants upon Ens, which may ſay of them (as the Roman Emperours ſpake of their Attendants) Quos noſtri lateris comitatus Illuſtrat.

—Τὸ ὄντος ὂν
Θεὸς] [Κύριος

The Rabbins are great Men at Metaphyſicks, and pretend to have nothing leſs than demonſtration for their Maxims; and therefore they make no bones of expreſly contradicting the Scripture. For they ſuppoſe, (u) that Creatures are no Similitude of God, (w) that God is not truly ſaid to be Eternal, (x) and they bereave the Deity of all Paſſion and Compaſſion at the Stoical rate. Their Notices alſo of the Unity or Simplicity of the Divine Eſſence and of the Immutability of God are deſervedly cenſur'd as extravagantly Metaphyſical by ſome that are none of the beſt Friends to God and true Religion. (y) The Jews and Arabians egregiouſly Philoſophize touching the Unity and Simplicity of God, although in my Opinion too Metaphyſically. But theſe Metaphyſical over-doings are of much greater extent than the Rabbinical and Arabian Schools; for the Scholaſtick Theology of the Chriſtian Church ſymbolizeth with them in their Extravagances. It excludeth from the Divine Eſſence (that it may not be a compound kind of thing) not only what is really a compounding, but (z) all Plurality, Multitude or Multiplicity, Variety, Diverſity, Diſtinction, Duplicity, Binality, Number (whatever looketh like compoſition, although it is really not compounding,) and attributeth thereto a phantaſtick, incongruous and impoſſible Unity and Simplicity. (a) God is neither ſaid to be properly Intelligent, nor known by Underſtanding, leſt he be thought compounded. For that which is Intelligent, connoteth a power of Underſtanding, and that which is known by Underſtanding, connoteth a Power or Capacity to be underſtood. Nor is he Intellection; for Intellection hath naturally a Subject-ſubſtance, which is receptive of it. The Platoniſts attribute a greater Unity and Simplicity to the firſt Principle of all in (ſuppoſing it above the multiplicity of Knowledge and Underſtanding,) than is competible to any intellectual Nature; and doubtleſs thoſe Scholaſticks are guilty of the like abſurdity, who ſuppoſe, (b) that there is no diſtinction between Will and Underſtanding in God, and conſequently, that he willeth all the Evil which he knoweth. Voluntas in Deo idem eſt quod Intellectus, & velle idem quod intelligere. Will in God is the ſame with Intellect, and to Will and Underſtand is the ſame. The Acts of the Divine Will which are free, are in this Theology ſuppos'd not to be at all different from the very Subſtance of God (which is abſolutely neceſſary) Scholaſtically underſtood. (c) This is the principal thing, we ought to hold touching the Divine Will, that neither the Faculty nor the Action, (both which the Name Will compri- ſeth)

(p) Gonet. ſupr. Diſp. proœm. Art. 4.

(q) Petav. T. 1. l. 1. c. 5. S. 2, 7.

(r) Materia eſt veluti Maceria magna & velum impediens veram apprehenſionem intelligentiæ abſtractæ. Mor. Nev. Par. 3. c. 9.

(s) Petav. ſupr. l. 4. c. 9. S. 12.

(t) Ἀλλ' ἔστιν ὡς ἄν τις τῆς ἀληθείας ἐγγύτατα ἱστάμενος εἴποι, πατὴρ μὲν τῶν ὅλων ὁ μέσος, ὃς ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς γραφαῖς κυρίῳ ὀνόματι καλεῖται ὁ ὤν. Αἱ δὲ παρ' ἑκάτερα πρεσβύταται καὶ ἐγγύταται τοῦ ὄντος δυνάμεις. Ὧν ἡ μὲν ποιητική, ἡ δὲ βασιλικὴ προσαγορεύεται. Καὶ μὲν ποιητικὴ θεός. Ταύτῃ γὰρ ἔθηκέ τε καὶ διεκόσμησε τὸ πᾶν. Ἡ δὲ βασιλικὴ κύριος. Περὶ Ἀβραάμ. p. 249. & περὶ θυόντων. p. 585. Ed. Gr. Paris.

(u) Maimon. Mor. Nev. Par. 1. c. 56.

(w) Ibid. c. 57.

(x) Ibid. c. 54.

(y) Simon. Hiſt. Crit. l. 3. c. 6.

(z) Petav. T. 1. l. 2. c. 8. S. 15, 23, &c.

(a) Deus neque Intelligens dicitur, neque Intelligentiâ captus, nè compoſitus exiſtimetur. Nam & quod Intelligens eſt, is cum unà conſideratam habet intelligendi potentiam, & quod intelligitur, potentiam ut intelligatur. Sed neque eſt Intellectio; nam Intellectio naturâ ſuâ ſubjectam ſibi habet capacem ſui ſubſtantiam. Petav. ibid. l. 5. c. 11. S. 4.

(b) Reg. de Sch. de Theol. Nat. p. Aquin. 1. Qu. 27. Art. 3.

(c) Hoc ante omnia de Dei voluntate ſentiendum eſt, neque facultatem ipſam, neque actionem, quod utrumque voluntatis nomine continetur, ab ipſa Dei differre ſubſtantia. Eſt ſeth) is at all different from the very Subſtance of God. For the Action of free Will in its own Nature is immanent in him, from whom it proceedeth. Wherefore, ſeeing nothing is accident or adherent to the Subſtance of God (or is ſuperadded to it,) but all that is in God, is God, that Action of Will is God, and of the ſame Eternity with God. Otherwiſe he will not be ſimple, but compounded, and made up of two. (d) What God willeth, he willeth not only from Eternity but ſimply and abſolutely, and his volition is identical with his Divine Eſſence, (Scholaſtically underſtood;) for to ſuppoſe any real difference between God and his Will and Decrees, is to ſuppoſe accidents in God, and to overthrow his Simplicity. But without theſe extravagances the Divine Simplicity is ſufficiently preſerv'd in the Science of Sanctity, which ſuppoſeth, that the Actions of the Will of God are God as ſomething of him, and as ſomething of his truly Divine Eſſence, which is Eſſential Sanctity, the life that God is and liveth.

The external Action and Efficiency of the Deity this Scholaſtic Theology calleth (e) a created thing and produc'd by God in time: But the interiour and immanent Action is ſuppos'd, to be altogether indiſtinct from the Divine Subſtance. (f) The Platoniſts held the ſame, that Action or Operation in God is not diſtinct from his Subſtance, for ſeeing Action is the ultimate Complement of the Subſtance, as the end for whoſe ſake it is, as alſo its Powers and Faculties, if this in God be adventitious and additional to his Subſtance, the Subſtance will be maimed and defective, and of it ſelf will want its ultimate perfection. Agreeably to this account of the Divine ἐνέργεια, Action or Operation, this Theology maketh the Deity rather Omni-efficient than Omni-potent; for it ſuppoſeth his infinite Power, always to be in Act (immanently at leaſt) ad ultimum poſſe. (g) God is a meer and ſimple Act without any meer Power (which is on this ſide Action) of effecting any thing. What is this but a Turning, and a certain groſs mutation, to paſs from a meer Power of Agency into Act? But although this Theology ſuppoſeth Omnipotency in God, to be always active, yet it maketh the Deity (like a mare mortuum) altogether immoveable, for it affirmeth, (h) that God is of ſuch ſtability of State and Conſtancy, as to admit of no kind of Motion. For this Reaſon there can be no Motion in God, becauſe he ſuffereth no Mutation. No vital Nature can be without vital Sympathy and Antipathy. But this Theology ſaith, (i) There is nothing new in God, nothing which is not Eternal, no interiour Motion, and impulſe upon occaſion of things. If any thing be riſen in the Subſtance of God, which was not before, it is not truly called that eternal Subſtance.

Of the truth and ſolidity of theſe Branches of the Scholaſtic Theology (and ſuch more) a Judgment may be made by conſidering what is Perfection unto God (in whom is no Imperfection;) and what is Perfection unto him or otherwiſe, may be determin'd by conſidering what is Nobilitation to a Divine Potentate, ſuch as God certainly is. For it is not Nobilitation to ſuch a Potentate, to be a Monad, that is without all diſtinction of Ideas, without all multiplicity of Knowledge and Underſtanding, without all diſtinction of Will and Underſtanding, without all liberty of Will and freedom of Agency, without all Motion, and that is incapable of moving (and therefore of acting ad extra) or of being moved as a Log or Idol. (k) Deus non eſt Deus, ſi non movetur, quod eſt proprium viventis. He is not God, if he is not moved, which is the property of one that is alive. To be unmoveable by Prayers and Devotional Addreſſes, to be incapable of being affected with any thing or mov'd to favour or diſpleaſure, to be unconcern'd whether Men be Holy or Sinful, and to be incapable of acting towards them, as there is occaſion, are not the Properties and Perfections of a Deity, but are Incongruities, Blemiſhes and Imperfections utterly incompetible unto God. Who alſo cannot but perceive and animadvert the things that are done in the World in the Succeſſions of time (perceiving things paſt, that they are paſt; things preſent, that they are preſent; things to come, that they are yet to come;) ſo that new Perceptions cannot fail to be in God but without any blemiſh or imperfection. And it muſt not be ſuppos'd, that the Attributes of Simplicity and Immutability do belong unto God, any further than they are his Perfections, and therefore no further than they are Nobilitations to a Divine Potentate. A like judgment muſt be made touching that difficult Attribute, which perplexeth the learned Expoſitor of our Articles. (l) "That infinite " Perfection excludeth from the Idea of God " ſucceſſive Thoughts as well as ſucceſſive Du- " ration; which ſeem inconſiſtent both with E- " ternity and with infinite Perfection. There- " fore the Eſſence of God is one perfect Thought, " in which he both vieweth and willeth all " things. And though his tranſient Acts that " paſs out of the Divine Eſſence (ſuch as Crea- " tion, Providence and Miracles) are done in " a ſucceſſion of time, yet his immanent Acts, " his Knowledge and his Decrees, are one with " his Eſſence. Diſtinct Thoughts are plainly " an Imperfection, and argue a Progreſs in " Knowledge, and a deliberation in Council, " which carry defect and infirmity in them. " To conceive, how this is in God, is far above " our Capacity, who though we feel our Im- " perfection in ſucceſſive Acts, yet cannot ap- " prehend how all things can be both ſeen " and determin'd by one ſingle Thought. A " vaſt difficulty alſo ariſeth here; for if theſe " Acts are one with the Divine Eſſence, which " is neceſſarily exiſtent, they are neceſſary " (not free;) and ſince all God's tranſient Acts " are the Effects of his immanent ones, if " theſe are neceſſary, the tranſient muſt be " likewiſe ſuch; and ſo every thing muſt be " neceſſary, a Chain of neceſſary Fate muſt " run through the whole order of things, and " God himſelf is no free Being, but acteth by " a neceſſity of Nature. If Fate is eſtabliſh'd, Induſtry is deſtroy'd and all Prayers and Enctio libera voluntatis ſuapte natura manens in eo, à quo proficiſcitur. Quare cùm nihil aut ccidat aut adhæreat ſubſtantiæ Dei, ſed omne id quod ineſt Deo, ſit ipſe Deus, etiam illa quæ dicitur actio voluntatis, Deus eſt, & eâdem æternitate cenſetur. lioqui Simplex non erit, ſed ompoſitus, & ex duobus conſtatus. Petav. ſupr. l. 5. c. 14. S. 12.

---

(d) Hulſ. Theol. Jud. l. 1. Par. 2. p. 240.

(e) Petav. ſupr. l. 5. c. 11. S. 11.

(f) Idem & Platonicis viſum eſt Philoſophis, non eſſe ἐνέργειαν à Dei ſubſtantia diſtinctam. Cùm enim actio ultimum ſit ſubſtantiæ complementum tanquam finis, cujus gratia tàm eſt ipſa quàm ejus vires ac facultates, ſi adventitium quiddam in Deo ſit, ejuſque ſubſtantiæ additum, ea manca erit ac defecta, atque ex ſeſe carebit abſolutione ſui ultima atque perfecta. Ibid. S. 10.

(g) Deus merus ac ſimplex eſt actus, non δύναμις, id eſt potentiam habens rei alicujus efficiendæ. Quid hoc aliud eſt quàm converſio, & craſſa quædam veluti viciſſitudo, à potentia migrare in actum? Ibid. l. 5. c. 11. S. 8. & 3.

(h) Eâ ſtabilitate ſtatus ſui & conſtantia Deum eſſe præditum, nullum ut motionis admittat genus. Ideo nullam in Deo motionem eſſe, quia nullam commutationem patitur. Ibid. S. 2, 3. & v. l. 3. c. 1. S. 13, 15.

(i) Nihil in Deo novum, nihil non æternum eſt; nullus ex rerum occaſione ſuſceptus interior motus & impulſus. Si exortum eſt aliquid in Dei ſubſtantia, quod prius non erat, non veraciter dicitur æterna illa ſubſtantia. Ibid. l. 3. c. 2. S. 16. & l. 5. c. 13. S. 3.

(k) Lactant. de ira Dei, c. 4, & 17. V. Epiſcop. Inſtit. Theol. l. 4. S. 2. c. 26.

(l) P. 26, 27.

deavours. Theſe Difficulties plainly ſhew, that all things ought not to be determin'd by one ſingle Thought in God; nor is ſuch an All-knowing and All-determining Thought a Perfection of one that is a Divine Pontentate and Government, who muſt live to Eternity in the exerciſe of wiſe and governing Thoughts, which muſt not be ſuppos'd in vain or ſuch as can have no place. So far as this Eſſential Perfection requireth, there muſt be diſtinct and ſucceſſive Thoughts in God (without Progreſs in Knowledge or ſuch Imperfection as is in our Deliberations,) and the contrary Hypotheſis muſt be thought a Branch of that Metaphyſical over-doing, which is extremely injurious to Religion, and which hath produc'd theſe pernicious Conceits, that none but Scholaſticks could ever have excogitated. That God knoweth Creatures, not in themſelves, but in his own Eſſence. That God might have made a reaſonable Creature not oblig'd. That there is nothing in its own Nature juſt or unjuſt. That if God damneth the Innocent, his Will is the Rule of Juſtice. That all Truths which are not God himſelf, wholly depend upon the arbitrary determination of his Will, and are only therefore true, becauſe he appointed them to be ſo. That God may command a Man to hate him, and make it meritorious. That God willeth mala culpæ. That God is the Author of every Sin of Commiſſion, becauſe in Commiſſion there is ſomething poſitive, which is forbidden by the Law directly. Doubtleſs ſuch Scholaſtick and Metaphyſical Theology touching the Godhead is (as Euſebius ſpeaketh of the Egyptian Theology) ἀθεότης μᾶλλον ἢ θεολογία. Atheiſm rather than Theology. But we will now proceed to ſome few other Conſectaries from our account of the Name and Idea of God.

Conſect. 5. God is not duly notic'd in the Metaphyſical way of repreſenting God, by noticing the Divine Eſſence and Attributes, unleſs it proceedeth to a due noticing the Sovereignty that God is. It is an irregular Method to begin the Theology of the Godhead with the Divine Eſſence and its inherent Attributes; for they that deſcribe a Prince or Prelate, do not conſider his Eſſence and inherent Attributes in ſeparation from, but in Conjunction with his Honour and Dignity, and this they notifie in the firſt place. Yet it is poſſible, that in the other method (obſerv'd by Philoſophers, Divines and Schoolmen) the Sovereignty that God is may be duly notic'd at the long run: But without the due notices thereof our Theology of the Godhead is criminally imperfect and defective, either in greater or leſſer degree, either totally omitting, or elſe imperfectly noticing the Sovereignty that God is. It may be totally omitted, as in theſe following definitive or deſcriptive notices of God. (m) Deus eſt Spiritus æternus, God is an eternal Spirit. (n) God is a Spirit eternal, infinite in Eſſence and Goodneſs, Omniſcient, Omnipotent, and of himſelf neceſſarily exiſtent. Our Catechiſms deſcribe God in this manner. God is a Spirit infinite, eternal, unchangeable in his Being, Wiſdom, Power, Holineſs, Juſtice, Goodneſs and Truth. There is one only God (ſaith a pious Catechiſt,) an infinite Spirit of Life, Underſtanding and Will, moſt perfectly powerful, wiſe and good. In our publick Confeſſions of Faith God is thus notic'd. We believe in Heart and confeſs with the Mouth, that there is one only and ſimple ſpiritual Eſſence, which we call God, eternal, incomprehenſible, inviſible, immutable, infinite, who is wholly wiſe, and a moſt plentiful Well-ſpring of all good things, ſaith the Confeſſion of Belgium. (o) God is a Spirit (ſaith an ancient Author) an inviſible Eſſence, incomprehenſible to every Creature, poſſeſſing the totality of Life, and of Wiſdom, and all Eternity together: Being Life, Wiſdom, Truth, Juſtice, Eternity it ſelf. (p) That there is one God according to Nature and in Truth (ſaith S. Cyril,) above all Intellect and Reaſon, Incomprehenſible, without Figure Vivificative, and the Principle of all things, ingenit and incorruptible, is plainly teſtified by the Divinely inſpir'd Scripture. The Idea of God thus repreſented is criminally defective and irregular, becauſe of a total Omiſſion of the Sovereignty that God is, which ought to be notic'd in the firſt place, becauſe the Divine Attributes (commonly ſo called) appertain thereunto. For God is not meerly an Eſſence, but an Honour, Dignity and Sovereignty, that is of thoſe Attributes. Exod. 34. 6. The Lord merciful and gracious. 1 Tim. 1. 17. The King Eternal, Immortal, Inviſible. (q) All the Divine Attributes together are ſignificative of his Power and Perfection, who is omni-imperial. Some ſay, that whatever belongeth to God, is either his Eſſence or his Operations; not conſidering, that his Godhead of Eſtate (which is adherent) is as Eſſential unto God as the inherent Attributes of his Eſſence. The moſt High therefore (agreeably to the high Ones above Men) muſt not be contemplated, as if we were contemplating Squares and Triangles, wherein we only regard their inherent Properties.

If the Sovereignty that God is be not totally omitted, yet if it is very defectively noticed in our definitive or deſcriptive Notices of God, they are criminally imperfect and defective. As if we ſay, (r) there is one God, an Almighty, Eternal, Infinite, Good, Merciful, Righteous and Holy Spirit, who made the World and all things therein out of nothing, and is the ſupreme Ruler and Governour thereof. (s) This is the firſt Theorem in Theology, that God is, that is, an eternal Mind, moſt good, powerful and wiſe, which is the cauſe of all things on which they depend, and by which they are govern'd. If theſe imperfect Notices of the Sovereignty that God is, were only propos'd as ſuch, if they were deſign'd to be nothing more than inchoations of a more expreſs and perfect Idea thereof, there would be nothing of criminal defect in them: But they are ſuppos'd, to be ſufficiently perfect and without any defect, a juſt and legitimate Idea thereof. For a learned Divine of our own faith; (t) God is the one ſupreme infinite Spirit, that by Almighty Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs made and governs the World. If Men entertain'd ſuch a Notion of God inſtead of thoſe rude and falſe draughts which are pictured in their vain and falſe Imaginations, they would pay him an Homage more agreeable to his Divine and their own reaſonable though human Nature. They would then ſerve him with the pure Religion or ſincere Chriſtianity, which is not adulterated either with Idolatry or

(m) Crell. de Deo & Attrib. c. 15.

(n) Dr. H. More Immort. of the Soul. B. 1. c. 4.

(o) Deus Spiritus eſt, Eſſentia inviſibilis, omni creaturæ incomprehenſibilis, totam vitam, totam ſapientiam, totam æternitatem ſimul eſſentialiter poſſidens: Idem ipſa vita, ipſa ſapientia, ipſa veritas, ipſa juſtitia, ipſa æternitas exiſtens. Auth. de cognit. ver. vit. inter op. S. Aug. c. 8.

(p) Εἷς μὲν ὢν ὅτι Θεὸς, κατὰ φύσιν τε καὶ ἀληθῶς ἐςὶ, παντὸς ἀνωτάτω νῦ καὶ λόγυ, ἀπερίληπτος, ἀνείδεος, ζωοποιὸς, καὶ πάντων ἀρχὴ, ἀγένητος, ἄφθαρτος, γενεσιουργὸς τῶν ὅλων, μεμαρτύρηται σαφῶς παρὰ τῆς θεοπνεύστου γραφῆς. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 1. p. 32.

(q) Ἀθρόως ἅπαντα ἐνδεικτικὰ τῆς τῦ παντοκράτορος δυνάμεως. Clem. Str. l. 5. p. m. 428.

(r) Mr. Gouge's Cat. ſub fin.

(s) Primum totius Theologiæ Theorema illud eſt, eſſe Deum, hoc eſt Mentem æternam, optimam, potentiſſimam, & ſapientiſſimam, quæ ſit cauſa rerum omnium, & è qua omnia pendeant & regantur. Le Blanc. Theſ. p. 90.

(t) Dr. Teniſon of Idolatry, p. 1, 2.

Superſtition. But it is not imaginable, that this Idea of God would work any great Cures, if all Men entertain'd it in their Minds; it would not effectually ſave them from Idolatry and Superſtition (but rather leave them immers'd in it;) for it only noticeth the Sovereignty that God is as a governing Providence. The Jews Muhammedans and Pagans are not cur'd of their Idolatry and Superſtition (by acknowledging a governing Providence;) Nor is it reaſonable, to ſuppoſe, that ſuch an Idea of God will effectually ſave Men from Paganiſm, and make them Chriſtian Worſhippers, which hath nothing of Sanctity or Chriſtianity in it, and which (conſider'd without ſpecific and individual determination) is common to us and to the Pagan Religioniſts.

Conſect. 6. Men may have a true Idea or definitive Notion of God. Some have rais'd a Diſpute againſt the Name Idea, which they ſuppoſe, to be incompetible to God in the proper Senſe, becauſe it properly denoteth and ſignifieth the Image of an object in the Phantaſy. (u) The forms of things the Greeks call Ideas (ſaith a late Diſputant againſt the Carteſian Metaphyſicks,) do you underſtand what Form or Species the immenſe Majeſty of God is of? (w) God hath no Species (ſaith another,) nor is the Deity conceived by a Species, but by multifarious Conceptions of various Attributes inadequate, partial and imperfect. But in this Diſpute againſt the Name Idea, there is much of Vanity; for they that oppoſe the Name as incompetible to God, do not deny, that we have intelligible Notion and Conception of the Diety; and therefore their Diſpute is meerly a Logomachy and Strife about the uſe of a Word. There is much of miſtake alſo in their Diſpute againſt the Name Idea; for they deny unto God Form and Species, (x) which even the Scholaſtick Theology in Conſort with the Scriptures attributeth to the God-head. They miſtake alſo in affirming, that there is no conceiving of God but by multifarious Conceptions of various Attributes. For God as well as Man may be apprehended under one Adequate or total Notion, which is uſual and familiar in the Minds and Mouths of his Religioniſts, namely the Divine Majeſty, which is the ſame with the Divine Sovereignty. And if we underſtand the Divine Sovereignty, to ſignifie both the Creature-tranſcendent Sovereignty and the Divine or God-kind of Sovereignty, this Name the Divine Sovereignty is a true Idea and definitive Notion of God of the more contracted form. For as Chriſt is rightly defin'd the Chriſtian Sovereiguity, the Devil is well enough defin'd the Diabolical Sovereignty, and the Pope is well enough defin'd the Papal Sovereignty: So God is rightly defin'd the Divine Sovereignty. And if the word Divine be underſtood, as we have explain'd it, this definition of God is more than Expoſitio nominis. It is ſtrictly a regular definition conſiſting of generical Notion and Difference, which are not incompetible to God (as the Schools ſuppoſe,) nor is God incapable of a regular definition (as they pretend,) nor is this Scholaſtic Maxim of any regard, Non eſt in Deo generis ac differentiæ compoſitio, the compoſition of generical Notion and Difference (Metapyſical Parts) is incompetible to God.

A difference there is between this Idea and that uſual Idea of God, a Being abſolutely perfect: But there is only this difference between them; they are two Ideas of one and the ſame thing according to ſeveral modes of conſidering it; the one is its genuin expreſſive Idea and the other its laudatory Idea. A Circle (as Euclid defineth it) is a plain Figure contain'd by one Line called the Circumference, to which all the right Lines drawn from a point within the Figure are Equal. This Euclidian definition is the true Idea or Notion of a Circle. But ſo is alſo the moſt perfect Figure; the one is its genuin expreſſive Idea, the other is its laudatory Idea. A Rational Animal is the true Idea or Notion of a Man: But ſo is alſo (y) τῶν ζώων τιμιώτατον, the moſt perfect or moſt excellent Animal; the one is its genuin expreſſive Idea, the other is its laudatory Idea. The Chriſtian Life is the Life of Regeneracy, and this is the true Idea and Notion of it: But ſo is alſo the moſt perfect Life. In like manner the Divine Sovereignty is the true Idea or Notion of God: But ſo is alſo a Being abſolutely perfect. Which latter Idea doth not particularly expreſs any thing that God is (in Nature or State,) and therefore is not the genuin expreſſive Idea of God: But it is a general comprehenſive Notice of what God is, and it is his laudatory Idea, which is expreſs'd in other Terms very variouſly. (z) If you ask, what is God? the anſwer is, than whom nothing better can be thought of. (a) All Conteſt for the Excellency of God: Nor is there any Man to be found, who believeth that to be God, which is not the Beſt. Therefore all in this agree, that is God, which they ſet before all other things. (b) We have this Anticipation concerning God, that he is not inanimate, and that in univerſal Nature there is nothing more excellent. As the reaſoning mind of Man naturally and neceſſarily formeth ſeveral Principles of knowledge (the whole is greater than the part, two contradictories cannot be true:) So it naturally and neceſſarily formeth a true general Idea of God; ſuch as the moſt excellent Being poſſible and conceivable, a Being abſolutely perfect; which is not only a Formal, but a Normal Idea of God. For according to this general Notice or Idea all Conceptions of the Deity according to particular conſiderations ought to be regulated, and thereby they muſt be try'd and examin'd. But becauſe this Normal Idea is wholly general, and remote from particular conſiderations of what God is, Mankind may be in the depths of atheous Ignorance nowithſtanding this their Normal Idea of God; for how ignorant is ſuch a Man of a Circle, that knoweth nothing of it but the Name, and that it is the moſt perfect Figure? Nor will the genuin expreſſive Idea of God ſave Men from their atheous Ignorance, unleſs it be well underſtood.

CHAP.

(u) Quas Latini rerum formas, Græci ἰδέας vocant. Tu igitur quâ formâ, quâve ſpecie ſit immenſa Numinis Majeſtas intelligis? Dr. Parker Diſp. de Deo p. 550.

(w) Deus ſpeciem non habet, neque per ſpeciem ſui concipitur, ſed per variorum attributorum conceptus multiplices, inadæquatos & imperfectos. Hoornbeck. Irenic. p. 28.

(z) Petav. T. 1. l. 6. c. 1. ſub fin.

(y) Jamb. προτρεπτ. p. 57.

(z) Quid eſt Deus? Quo nihil melius cogitari poteſt. S. Bernard. de conſid. l. 5. c. 7.

(a) Omnes pro excellentia Dei certatim dimicant: Nec quiſquam inveniri poteſt, qui hoc Deum credat eſſe, quo melius aliquid eſt. Itaque hoc omnes Deum conſentiunt eſſe, quod cæteris rebus omnibus anteponunt. S. Aug. de Doctr. Chriſt. l. 1. c. 7.

(b) Talem eſſe Deum certa notione animi præſentimus, primùm ut ſit animans, deinde ut in omni natura nihil eo ſit præſtantius. Cic. de N. D. l. 2.

CHAP. IV.

1. Againſt our genuine expreſſive Idea of God it will be objected, That God was not Lord and King from Eternity, as many affirm. 2. The contrary demonſtrated, 3. God was Lord and King the Kingdom-eſtate Creature-tranſcendent from Eternity in a large Senſe. 4. God was from Eternity Lord and King the Kingdom-eſtate Creature-tranſcendent in the Senſe of Nobility-Learning. 5. God was from Eternity Lord and King the Kingdom-eſtate Creature-tranſcendent in a limited Senſe, according to Political Learning. 6. The uſefulneſs of this Theory for ſhewing the ground of God's Dominion and Sovereignty over Man and over the Creatures.

I. OUR genuine expreſſive Idea of God is liable to this Objection, That God was not a Sovereignty, not Lord and King from Eternity: Which great Objection obligeth us, to take into conſideration a Queſtion in Theology, which ſome great Divines look upon as a very great difficulty, namely, (c) Whether theſe Divine Names Lord and King be always and meerly nomina σχετικὰ, Names which import a relation of God to the Creatures, and whether God was of theſe honourary Names from everlaſting? Some look upon them as meerly relative Names, yet ſuppoſe them neceſſarily to belong to God from Eternity; whence they infer the Creation and Exiſtence of the World from Eternity. Others look upon them as meerly relative Names, but ſuppoſe them incompetible to God from Eternity, becauſe the World had not its Exiſtence and Creation from Eternity. Others ſuppoſe, that they are not meerly relative Names, and that they are competible to God from Eternity without ſuppoſing the World's Eternity. Others are afraid, to determine any thing touching theſe Divine Names, and look upon this Queſtion in Theology as beyond humane reach; for ſo S. Auſtin (d) is ſometimes overcome with the difficulty of it, and thinketh it a Queſtion not to be ask'd or anſwer'd. But ſome (as Proclus) are too forward in determining, (e) that the World exiſted from Eternity, becauſe the opificer and maker of the World was actually ſuch from Eternity. So Origen argueth, (f) As a Father cannot be, if there is not a Son; a Lord cannot be without a Poſſeſſion; ſo God cannot be called Pantocrator or Omnipotent, if there are none, on whom he may exerciſe Power; and therefore all things muſt ſubſiſt, that God may be called Pantocrator. At the ſame rate the Heretick Hermogenes argu'd for the Eternity of Matter: (g) He could not be counted always Lord, as always God, if there had not been always ſomething, of which he might be counted Lord. Tertullian that hath written a Book againſt Hermogenes and his Dogma touching the Eternity of Matter, yet thus far agreeth with his Adverſary: He aſſerteth this Divine Name Dominus, to be meerly and neceſſarily a Relative Name: but he ſuppoſeth it incompetible to God from Eternity, becauſe the World was not exiſtent from Eternity. (h) We ſay, that the Name God always was, but the Name Lord not always; for they are of different condition. God is the Name of the Subſtance it ſelf; that is, of the Divinity; but Lord is not the Name of the Subſtance, but the Potentacy. The Subſtance always was with its Name, which is God, Lord was not till afterwards being the Name of an Accident, or Acceſſional; for he was both made and called Lord by an acceſſion of Power, from the time that thoſe things began to exiſt, on which he might exerciſe Power. As God is both Father and Judge, yet he is not therefore alway Father and Judge becauſe always God: for he could not be a Father before a Son, nor a Judge before Sin; but there was a time, when neither Son nor Sin exiſted, which might make him a Father and a Judge. So he was not Lord, before theſe things exiſted, of which he is Lord; but his being Lord was future, as a Father by a Son, as a Judge by Sin, ſo a Lord by thoſe things which he had made to be ſervient to him. (i) To prove, that his Account of this Divine Name is legitimate, he obſerveth, that in the Moſaic Hiſtory of the Creation God is not called by the Name Lord till the Story of the Creation is perfected; for Moſes ſaith, In the beginning God made Heaven and Earth, and throughout that Hiſtory he is only called by the Name God; God ſaid, God made and God ſaw; but when all was perfected (and chiefly Man) then and not before he is called Lord. Agreeably to Tertullian, Ruffinus in his Symbolum ſaith; (k) No one is called Lord, unleſs he hath a Poſſeſſion or Servant under his Domination. The Commentators upon Gr. Naz. thus rightly repreſent his Senſe touching the Names of God. (l) The Names God and Ens ſignifie more the Eſſence; but the Names King and Lord the Power, as being conſider'd in a certain Relation. Reuchlin ſaith, (m) We cannot deny, but that Lord ſignifieth Imperial Majeſty, and King, and God, if we follow J. Damaſcen. Gr. Nazianzen placeth them amongſt Relatives; for we read of Lord of Lords, and King of Kings, and Holy of Holies, and God of Gods: Ens only, as he ſuppoſeth, is chiefly the Name of God without Relation. S. Auſtin, who is ſometimes reſerv'd and modeſt, and thinketh it dangerous, either to affirm or deny, that God is Lord from Eternity, yet elſewhere thus diſcourſeth,

---

(c) Petav. T. 1. l. 3. c. 2. S. 5. & Proleg. c. 6. S. 6.

(d) De C. D. l. 12. c. 15.

(e) Petav. ſupr. l. 3. c. 2. S. 6, 10.

(f) Ibid. S. 5.

(g) Nullo modo potuiſſet ſemper dominus haberi, ſicut & ſemper Deus, ſi non fuiſſet aliquid retrò ſemper, cujus ſemper dominus haberetur. Ibid. S. 6.

(h) Dei nomen dicimus ſemper fuiſſe apud ſemetipſum, Dominum verò non ſemper: diverſa enim utriuſque conditio. Deus ſubſtantiæ ipſius nomen, id eſt, divinitatis; Dominus verò non ſubſtantiæ, ſed poteſtatis: ſubſtantiam ſemper fuiſſe cum ſuo nomine, quòd eſt Deus, poſtea Dominus accidentis ſcilicet rei mentio. nam ex quo eſſe cœperunt, in quæ poteſtas Domini ageret, ex illo per acceſſionem poteſtatis & factus & dictus eſt Dominus: Quia & pater Deus eſt, & judex Deus eſt, non tamen ideò pater & judex ſemper, quia Deus ſemper. Nam nec pater potuit eſſe ante filium, nec judex ante delictum: Fuit autem tempus, cum & delictum & filius non fuit, quod judicem, & qui patrem Dominum faceret. Sic & Dominus non ante ea, quorum Dominus exiſteret, ſed Dominus tantum futurus quandoque, ſicut pater per filium, ſicut judex per delictum, ita & Dominus per ea, quæ ſibi ſervitura feciſſet.

(i) Deus quidem quod erat ſemper, ſtatim nominat: In principio fecit Deus cœlum & terram. Ac deinceps quamdiu faciebat quorum Dominus futurus erat, Deus ſolummodo ponit, & dixit Deus, & fecit Deus, & vidit Deus, & nuſquam adhuc Dominus. At ubi univerſa perfecit, ipſumque vel maxime hominem qui propriè Dominum intellecturus erat, Dominus etiam cognominatur.

(k) Nemo dicitur Dominus, niſi habeat vel poſſeſſionem vel ſervum, cui dominetur. Inter oper. S. Hieron. T. 9.

(l) Dei & Entis vocabula magis quodammodo eſſentiam declarant: hæc autem nomina Rex & Dominus potentiam, ut quæ in relatione quadam conſiderentur. El. Cret. com. in or. 23.

(m) Negare verò non poſſemus, quin imperatoriam majeſtatem Dominus ſignificet, & Rex & Deus, ſi Damaſceno Joanni obſequemur. Gregorius certè ille Nazianzenus inter ea collocat, quæ ad aliud referuntur. legimus enim Dominus Dominantium, & Rex Regum, & Sanctus Sanctorum, & Deus Deorum, ſolum ὢν, id eſt Qui eſt, potiſſimum per ſe eſſe Dei nomen arbitratur. De Verb. Mirific. p. 254.

courſeth. (n) We ſay, his being Lord is not from Eternity, leſt we conſequently ſay, that the Creature is from Eternity; for he could not be dominant from Eternity, unleſs this be ſervient from Eternity. As he cannot be a Servant, that hath not a Lord, ſo he cannot be a Lord, that hath not a Servant. Syneſius ſaith, (o) There is no Name found out, which reacheth the Eſſence of God; Men being unable to declare it, endeavour to reach it by the things that are from him. Whether you call him Father, or Maker, or Principle, or Cauſe, all theſe are habitudes or reſpects to all thoſe things that are from him. (p) If you call him King, you endeavour to apprehend his Nature, not from what he is in his own Perſon, but from thoſe that are ſubjected to him. The Name of a King according to Philo is neceſſarily a Relative Name, (q) βασιλεὺς γὰρ τινός, for a King is the King of ſome body. So the Schools ſay, (r) that the Name Dominus denoteth a relation of God to the Creatures conſequent upon the action of Creation, and that ſuch Names ex tempore de Deo dicuntur, are not ſaid of God from Eternity. Agreeably to the Schools Divines uſually ſay; (s) The Names which denote a Relation between God and the Creatures, as Creator, Lord, and the like, are predicated of God in Time, but not from Eternity. (t) Without inconvenience or crime he may be ſaid, to have been then made Lord, when he made the Creature, of which he ſhould be Lord. Yet this Author counteth it abſolutely unlawful, to ſay, that he was made God. (u) Before the World was fram'd, there was nothing but God himſelf, properly nothing is ſaid to have dominion over it ſelf; this is a Relative Attribute reflecting on the Works of God.

II. It appeareth, that ſince the Humour of Scholaſticizing and Philoſophic-paganizing the Matters of Theology hath been regnant in the Church, ſhe hath (in great degree) loſt the true meaning of the Names of God to the infinite prejudice of true Theology: For theſe miſtakes touching the Divine Names muſt not be thought ſlight matters (as Petavius thinketh the Queſtion about them of ſmall importance;) for they are deſtructive of the true and genuine Idea of God from Eternity. If our Idea of God was only an Idea of what he is in the Univerſe of Beings and ſince the Creation, it would be of no extraordinary value; but we have prov'd the truth of it by many ſuch Arguments (and will prove it by ſeveral ſuch more,) as plainly demonſtrate it, to be the genuine Idea of what God is not only from Time, but from Eternity. Theſe Arguments appear in our Notion of the Godhead-eſtate (which is neceſſarily the Kingdom-eſtate, and therefore is Eternally ſuch,) in our Account of thoſe Honourary Names Lord and King, in our ſeveral Accounts of the Name God, and of the Identity of theſe Names God, Lord and King, Divinity, Potentacy and Kingdom, in our Account of ſeveral Divine Attributes and Honourary Titles of the Godhead (The moſt High, The Power,) and of the Scripture-Doxologies. No Demonſtration in Mathematicks can be of greater certitude than theſe following Arguments. The Godhead of Eſtate conſiſteth in being the Lord, King and Potentate Creature-tranſcendent. The Supreme Being is neceſſarily the Supreme Potentate. The dominant and regnant Eſtate of Might, Majeſty, Power and Dominion eſſentially belongeth unto God. He is God from everlaſting, The Potentate Creature-tranſcendent; therefore from Eternity he is the Lord and King, Creature-tranſcendent. His is the Power, and His is the Glory from Eternity; therefore His is the Kingdom from Eternity, according to our uſual Doxology. No Mind of Man can evade the force of this Argument, which I will propoſe in form of a Syllogiſm.

To be a God is an Honour and Dignity of Eſtate.
It is the Sovereign and Supreme Honour and Dignity of Eſtate (which is the Kingdom-eſtate.)
Therefore God is the Kingdom-eſtate neceſſarily and from Eternity.

The Epicureans complain'd, that the Religious Pagans would impoſe upon them Sempiternum Dominum, a Sempiternal Lord; and the Supreme Deity was intituled by thoſe Religious Pagans Hominum Divumque æterna poteſtas (the Eternal Potentate of the Gods and Men;) therefore the World of Religious Pagans acknowledgeth, that God is Lord and King from Eternity. The Hebrew Doctors tell us a Saying of the ancient Wiſe Men: (w) Ante creatum mundum Deum & nomen ejus tantum extitiſſe, before the World was created, God and his Name only did exiſt. This Name which is ſuppos'd to have been before the World is the Name יהוה which the Septuagint always render κύριος, Lord (the Apoſtles alſo following the Septuagint ſo render it) and S. Hierom, Dominus; therefore the Hebrew Doctors (implicitly at leaſt) acknowledge, that God was Lord from Eternity. So the Commentaries under S. Ambroſe's Name expreſly ſay, (x) Deus non poteſt non eſſe Dominus, God is neceſſarily the Lord. So ſome of the Schoolmen ſay, (y) Sicut divina voluntas æterna eſt, ità & imperium, As the Divine Will is eternal, ſo is Empire. So S. Ambroſe attributeth to Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, (z) imperiale jus æternæ poteſtatis, the imperial right of eternal Potentacy. Mankind cannot but have this conception of things, that Godhead of Eſtate is (a) the Eſtate of Liberty and Domination, whence the Divine Nature (that is called by Iſidore Peluſiota, the dominant and regial Eſſence) is ſtiled by Tertullian, Domina juvandi & nocendi, and doubtleſs it was ſuch from Eternity. The ſame Father affirmeth, that God created the World (b) for the honour of his Majeſty; and ſo S. Hilary ſaith, (c) The Dignity of the Works ſhew his Majeſty that made them. Theſe Fathers ſuppoſe, that there was a proper Majeſty before the World, which could not be, if there was not an Imperial Eſtate before the World, agreeably to what Theodoret ſaith of God, (d) He hath Empire connate to his Eſſence. S. Ambroſe ſaith of our Saviour, (e) As Man he was a Servant, as God he was the Lord. And as it is falſe, to ſay of our Saviour, that he was not

---

(n) Eccè Dominum eſſe non mpiternum habet, nè cogamur tiam ſempiternam creaturam di-ere, quia ille ſempiternè non doinaretur, niſi etiam iſta ſempiernè famularetur. Sicut au-ernè non poteſt eſſe ſervus, qui em non habet Dominum, ſic nec Doinus qui non habet ſervum.
e Trin. l. 5. c. 16.

o) De Regn.
. 8.

(p) Καὶ βασιλέα τοίνυν εἰ-ὼν, ἀπὸ τῶν βασιλευομένων, λλ' οὐκ αὐτοπροσώπως ἐπιχει-ῶς τῆς φύσεως αὐτοῦ δεῖξα-ι.

(q) Ap. Petav. T. 1. l. 8.
7. S. 6.

(r) Valent. T. 1. Diſp. 1. Qu.
3. punct. 4.

(s) Nomina quæ relationem in- er Deum & res creatas indi-ant, uti eſt nomen creatoris, omini & ſimilia, in tempore,
n autem ab æterno prædicantur
Deo. Zanch. de Nat. Dei,
1. c. 10.

(t) Citra incommodum aut pi- culum dici poteſt tunc factus ominus, quando fecit ipſe Crearam, cujus eſſet Dominus. loppenburg. compend. Socin.
. 39.

) Char- ck of the
x. and ttrib. of od, p. 708.
r. Stough-
n. right.
an's plea.
r. 6. p.
8.

(w) Men. ben Iſr. in Exod. Qu. 3. Druſ. Tetragram. c. 5.

(x) In 1 Cor. 8.

(y) Suarez de Leg. l. 2. c. 1. S. 6. & ibid. c. 4. S. 2.

(z) De Sp. Sanct. l. 2. c. 12.

(a) Tertull. ad Nation. l. 2.

(b) In ornamentum majeſtatis ſuæ. Apol. c. 17.

(c) Operum dignitas majeſtatem ejus, qui ea ſit operatus, oſtendit. Enarr. in Pſal. 65.

(d) Αὐτῷ τῷ εἶναι συμφυὲς ἔχει τὸ κράτος. L. 1. de provid.

(e) Servitus carnis, dominatus autem divinitatis eſt. T. 3. l. 7. Ep. 47.

the Lord, till ſuch time as by ſome fact of his he became the Lord: So it is equally falſe, to ſay of God, that he was not Lord, till he made himſelf ſuch by his Creation. Divines acknowledge, (f) an Eternal Sovereignty, which is ἐξουσία (Authority,) which the ancient gloſſes Greek and Latin render Majeſtas, Ditio, Poteſtas, Majeſty or Potentacy. They that aſſert the Decree of abſolute Election and Preterition, found it upon the Doctrine of God's Sovereignty; therefore they ſuppoſe, that there was a Dominion and Sovereignty from everlaſting. (g) Abſolutum, liberum & æternum jus habet in omnia, from Eternity God hath abſolutely the height and fulneſs of Power both of Right and Might (which is abſolutely the Sovereign Power,) an abſolute and plenary Right and Authority to command (jus imperandi,) and to make a diſpoſal of all Things and Beings as Sovereign Lord of Affairs (ſo Kings are rerum Domini;) God did actually make a due diſpoſal of them in his Decrees and Counſels, before the World was. The Apoſtle celebrateth his eternal Potentacy and Godhead, ſtileth him The King Eternal, which honourary Title the beſt Expoſitors parallel with that in the Prophet Daniel, The ancient of Days; therefore (if they miſtake not) it ſpeaketh God to be Lord and King from everlaſting. So do theſe other honourary Titles, The high and lofty one that inhabiteth Eternity, An everlaſting King. The Pſalmiſt plainly affirmeth, that God is Sovereign Lord and King from everlaſting, when he ſaith, Thy Throne is eſtabliſh'd of old, thou art from everlaſting, Pſal. 93. 2. (h) If the Throne of God be mention'd, it ſignifieth his Kingdom. The Throne, that is, the Principality and Kingdom. (i) The Throne of God is the Name of an Eſtate of Dignity, which can be nothing leſs than the Supreme and Sovereign. Whether we contemplate God therefore as now exiſting in the Univerſe of Beings, or as pre-exiſting from Eternity, his Idea (but not without ſome little diſtinction and limitation of Senſe) muſt be one and the ſame. For,

III. God was from Eternity Lord and King (the Kingdom-eſtate Creature-tranſcendent) in a large Senſe. In one Senſe he may be King from Eternity and not in another; for the Criticks obſerve, (k) that the Hebrew word מלך and the Greek βασιλεύειν (to be King) are ſometimes taken in a large Senſe. (l) Some ſay (and with great reaſon,) that thoſe who tranſcend in Dignity, Authority and Power are called Kings in Scripture, Pſal. 2. 10. and 148. 11. Act. 4. 26. Apoc. 6. 15. and 19. 18. that Penelope's Suitors, becauſe they were of principal Dignity and Authority, are called Kings in Homer; and that Heſiod calleth τοὺς κρείοντας, Judges and Potent Men by the Name of Kings. Such illuſtrious Eſtates in the World are a ſort of Supra-ſubjects (beyond the mean and underling Eſtates) and therefore a ſort of Kings. And (doubtleſs) God is ſo far and in ſuch ſenſe a King from Eternity, as to be tranſcendent in Dignity, Authority and Power. In ſuch Senſe alſo he is undoubtedly a King from Eternity, as the Soul of Man is ſaid to be a King: (m) That the Soul of Man is of ſublime and regial Dignity, and her diſtance from a Plebeian abject condition, is ſeen in her free unſubject Eſtate and the Government of her Affairs imperially, by her own Volitions; for to whom is this proper but a King? and to be an Image of that Nature that ruleth all, what is it but to be a Regial Nature? The Saints are called Kings becauſe of their reigning condition in a large Senſe of that Phraſe; their Celeſtial and Divine Condition is called a Crown and a Kingdom, which ſpeaketh them Kings; and who can doubt, but that God is a King from Eternity in that Notion, wherein the Saints of God are Kings? Apoc. 1. 6. and 5. 10. and 20. 4, 6. when Death is called the King of Terrors, and the Leviathan the King over all (faſtuous Animals) the Children of Pride, the Name of King ſignifieth only a Chieftain or Supreme; and in this Senſe God is undoubtedly a King from everlaſting. In a large Senſe All are called Kings, that are of maſterly and dominant condition in chief, although but diminutively and in ſlender degree; (n) for Maſter, King, Commander, are of identity of Senſe both in Greek and Latin, and what one Author calleth Kingdoms, another calleth Magiſteries. So the Lions are Kings amongſt the Beaſts becauſe of their maſterly dominant condition amongſt them, according to that of the Poet —— κλυτὸν βασιλῆα λέοντα, Noble King Lion. So Telemachus in Homer ſaith, (o) I will be King of mine own Houſe. All Mankind are a ſort of Kings becauſe of their maſterly dominant condition in this lower World; they are ſaid to have (p) τὸ κατὰ πάντων τῶν ἐπιγείων βασιλικὸν ἀξίωμα, a Kingly Dignity (or Eminency) over all things upon Earth. So many of the Fathers are of Opinion, that the Image of God, in which Man was created, (q) conſiſteth ἐν τῷ ἀρχικῷ καὶ βασιλικῷ, in Empire, Domination and Rule (over the lower Creation,) and there are ſeveral Paſſages in Scripture, which favour their Opinion, Gen. 2. 26, 28. 1 Cor. 11. 7. Man ſhould therefore contemplate God as Lord and King from Eternity, ſeeing himſelf was made the Image of a great Lord and King; for it is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the Ectype is as old as the Archetype, and the Picture as the Exemplar; or that God began to be Lord and King but at that time, when he made Man the Image of his Domination and Regality. Theodorus Mopſueſtenus ſaith, that when God made Man (r) this was if a certain King having built a great City, and adorn'd it with many and various Works, after he hath perfected all, ſhould command a very great and beauteous Image of himſelf, to be ſet up in the midſt of the City, to ſhew, who was the Builder of it. Kings are uſually the Founders of Cities, but they are Kings before they found them, and ſet up Statues in the midſt of them, to repreſent their Greatneſs. According to the courſe of Humane Affairs therefore God muſt be ſuppoſed King, before he founded the World, or ſet up Man, to be his Statue, to repreſent the Founder. If Men and Animals are called Kings, becauſe they are of maſterly dominant condition diminutively and in ſlender degree, there is great reaſon, that God ſhould be accounted King from Eternity, to whom it belong'd from everlaſting, to be of maſterly dominant Condition plenarily and abſolutely, and of whom it may be ſaid, (s) that he was his own Kingdom. As the Name King belongeth unto God from everlaſting; So with great aſſurance we may affirm, that in a large Senſe he is Lord from everlaſting. For as S. Auſtin himſelf ſaith, (t) Quid eſt dominari, niſi propria poteſtate gaudere? What is it for God to be a Lord, but to be a Potentate by his own Power?

(f) D. H. Mori oper. vol. 1. p. 433.

(g) Zanch. de nat. Dei l. 1. c. 17.

Rom. 1. 20.
1 Tim. 1. 17.
Dan. 7. 9.
Iſa. 57. 15.
Jer. 10. 10.

(h) Θρόνος εἰ λέγοιτο Θεοῦ, τὴν ὑπ' αὐτοῦ βασιλείαν κατασημαίνοι ἄν —— Ὁ θρόνος τουτέστιν ἡ ἀρχὴ καὶ ἡ βασιλεία. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 2. p. 70.

(i) Ὁ θρόνος τοῦ Θεοῦ ἀξιώματός ἐστιν ὄνομα. S. Baſil. c. Eunom. l. 1. p. 35.

(k) Spanhem. Dub. 86.

(l) Ravanel. Bibliothec. Sacr. p. 440. col. 2.

(m) Ἡ μὲν γὰρ ψυχὴ τὸ βασιλικόν τε καὶ ἐξῃρημένον δείκνυσι πόῤῥω τῆς ἰδιωτικῆς ταπεινότητος κεχωρισμένον, ἐκ τοῦ ἀδέσποτον αὐτὴν εἶναι καὶ αὐτεξούσιον, ἰδίοις θελήμασιν αὐτοκρατορικῶς διοικουμένην. τίνος γὰρ καὶ ἢ βασιλέως ἐστίν; καὶ ἔτι πρὸς τούτοις τὸ τῆς δυναστευούσης τῶν πάντων φύσεως εἰκόνα γενέσθαι, οὐδὲν ἕτερόν ἐστιν, ἢ εὐθὺς βασιλίδα δημιουργηθῆναι τὴν φύσιν. Gr. Nyſſ. de Hom. opif. c. 4.

Job 18. 14. and 41. 34.

(n) Of the Rex convivii & menſæ, called alſo [illegible] Imperator Modimperator, Voſſius obſerveth, Quem Latini vocant Magiſtrum, eum Græci dicunt βασιλέα ita quæ Cicero in Ca*tone appellat magiſteria*, hæc Ho*ratius regna appellat.* nec regna vini ſortiere talis. imo ab hac conſuetudine eſt, quod paraſiti eos à quibus ad convivium vocaren*tur, reges nominabant.* Etymol. Lingu. Lat. in voce Modimperator.

(o) Αὐτὰρ ἐγὼν οἴκοιο ἄναξ ἔσομ' ἡμετέροιο. Odyſſ. α.

(p) Petav. T. 3. l. 2. c. 3, 4.

(q) Ibid. & Euſeb. p. Ev. l. 7. c. 4. l. 11. c. 27. Voſſ. Idol. l. 3. c. 40.

(r) Ap. Petav. ſup.

IV. God was from Eternity Lord and King (the Kingdom-Eſtate Creature-tranſcendent) in the ſenſe of Nobility-Learning. For it belongeth to Nobility-Learning (peculiarly,) to treat of Honours and Dignities of Eſtate, as they are meerly matter of Eminence (not of Office;) in the Senſe therefore of this ſort of Learning God is from Eternity Sovereign Lord and King, if he is ſuch as to Honour and Dignity of Eſtate. And he is manifeſtly ſuch as to Honour and Dignity of Eſtate, that is of the Sovereign dominant and imperial Eſtate (the fulleſt height of Eminence and Dignity,) the bleſſed and only Potentate, deriving from none, holding of none, Αδέσποτος, unſubjected to any Lord, Αυτόνομος, unſubjected to any Law, Αυτοκέφαλος, unſubjected to any Head, Ανυπεύθυνος, unſubjected to any account, Αυτοκράτωρ, unſubjected to any Rule, and ſo far παντοκράτωρ, Omni-imperial, as to have all things in his Hands and ſubjected to his diſpoſal. To his Honour and Dignity of Eſtate (neceſſarily and from Eternity) thoſe honourary Names belong, which in Nobility-learning denote and embelliſh the Kingdom-Eſtate, (u) The ſupreme Power, the fulleſt height of Majeſty, the imperial celſitude and culminant Eſtate, the higheſt ennoblement and perfection of Condition, the ſummity and conſummation of Dignity. To be a God therefore is that Honour and Eſtate of Nobilitation, the Imperial Eſtate (Subject-tranſcendent and Creature-tranſcendent;) ſuch Nobilitation and Perfection which is conſtitutive of the Kingdom-Eſtate, from Eternity belongeth to the God-head-Eſtate; therefore God was King and ſupreme Lord from Eternity, although no Subject or Servant was then Exiſtent. Upon account of his Honour and Dignity of Eſtate he was from Eternity noble and unvile in abſolute Perfection; which could not be, if his Honour and Dignity of Eſtate was not the Kingdom-Eſtate (which is Matter of pure Honour unmix'd and unſtain'd with any Vileneſs;) this therefore was Præ-exiſtent to his Creation. (w) Erat omnitenens Conditor & Dominus ſinè habitudine, he was without Relation the Omnitenent Creator and Lord. In reſpect of his Perfections and Diſpoſition, his Creature-tranſcendence of Condition, becauſe he was always the Creator-party, it always appertain'd to him to create actually, and as to (meer) Honour and Dignity of Eſtate, he was from Eternity the Creator, as Adam was the Genitor of Mankind, before he generated any.

V. In Political Learning the Kingdom-Eſtate (to be Sovereign Lord and King) is not meerly an Honour and Dignity of Eſtate, but a Relation and an Office or Officiary Dignity. In the ſenſe of this Learning therefore God cannot be ſaid, to be the Kingdom-Eſtate (Lord and King) from Eternity without diſtinction and limitation of Senſe. Which diſtinction and limitation of Senſe may be illuſtratated from what a late Writer of Politicks hath diſcours'd touching the origin of Government. (x) By the appointment of God as ſoon as Adam was created, he was Monarch of the World, though he had no Subjects; for though there could not be actual Government, until there were Subjects, yet by the right of Nature it was due to Adam, to be Governour of his Poſterity: Though not in Act, yet at leaſt in Habit, Adam was a King from his Creation. This learned Writer was too learned, to think, that there can be either a Conſtitution or Adminiſtration of Civil Government without the Exiſtence of both Parties (pars imperans & pars ſubdita:) He ſaith therefore, that Adam was a King from his Creation, though not in Act, yet in Habit. But thus he might better have expreſs'd his Senſe; that Adam as to meer Honour and Dignity of Eſtate (without Relation) was King from his Creation; and ſuch was God from Eternity in the ſame Senſe. As Adam from his Creation (according to this Author) had this right and due, to be a Sovereign Governour of his Poſterity, and was by Divine appointment the Monarch of the World of Mankind; So God from Eternity had this right and due, to be the Sovereign Governour of his Creatures, and if he had his being God from Eternity by appointment, he would be from Eternity Lord of the World (or of the Creature) by appointment. But as his being God from Eternity is Eſſential to him: So it is Eſſential to him (to his being God,) to be from Eternity (anſwerably to Adam's ſuppos'd Monarchy from his Creation) Lord of the World. And as Adam's ſuppos'd Right of Government is a Right to be the Imperial Eſtate or Sovereignty in civil and human Society, and in the State and Relation of King there: So God's Right of Government from Eternity is a Right to be the Imperial Eſtate or Sovereignty in God-Society, which is to be the holy Empire's Imperial Eſtate. Theſe Notices of God agreeable to Political Government remove all difficulties from our Idea, ſatisfie all Objections, and the conſideration of Political Government ſuggeſteth an argument (to be added to the large heap of many others,) which plainly ſheweth, that our Idea is the true Idea of God from Eternity.

This Argument ariſeth from the conſideration of thoſe three illuſtrious eternal Attributes Wiſdom, Goodneſs and (executive,) Power, two of which are royal princely Virtues, and all three eſpecially belong to Government, are of eſpecial uſe in it and eſpecially neceſſary, and therefore muſt be intituled the Attributes of Government. For that there may be the good of Government in the Univerſe, there muſt be Goodneſs to deſign it, Wiſdom to direct to it, and Power to accompliſh it. Government is deſpicable without Power, which protecteth, rewardeth and puniſheth, manageth the jus gladii, and is like Talos (a Man of Braſs or of Iron,) to look to the obſervance and execution of Minos's Laws. The Kingdom-Eſtate is celebrated for its Strength or Power, Dan. 2. 37. Apoc. 5. 12. But Power alone maketh no better Governours than ferine Animals (ſuch as the four Monarchies are compar'd to Lions, Bears, Leopards,) it is Goodneſs that maketh them Sovereign Friends and Fathers, (Shepherds, Guardians, Saviours and Beneficent Rulers,) their

Diſpoſi-

(s) Eſt ipſe regnum. P. Chryſol. Ser. 72. Regnum erat ipſe ſuum. Claud. vict. ap. Lipſ. Phyſiol. Stoic. l. 2. Diſſ. 8.

(t) De Verb. Dom Ser. 33. V. Zanch. de Nat. Dei, l. 4. c. 5. Qu. 2.

(u) Suprema Poteſtas, faſtigium Majeſtatis, culmen Majeſtatis, apex imperii, imperialis apicis dignitas, &c.

(w) Hugo Etherian. ap. Petav. T. 1. l. 3. c. 2. S. 9.

(x) The Anarchy of a limit. or mix'd Monarchy. p. 13.

Diſpoſition and Behaviour conſentaneous to their Dignity, their Government tolerable and deſirable (and as ſome of the wiſe have defin'd Government (y) cura ſalutis alienæ, care of the Welfare of others,) but without it Government is not Rule, but Miſ-rule. Eccl. 5. 8. Jer. 9. 24. Mic. 3. 9, 10. Wiſdom is Queen Regent, muſt ſit at Stern, and regulate all in Government. Eccl. 10. 10. Prov. 8. 15. By me Kings Reign, (ſaith Wiſdom) and Princes Decree Juſtice. They diſcern between right and wrong, good and bad, they make and execute Righteous Laws, (z) and Govern well by Wiſdom the Science of Government, which Plato calleth τὴν βασιλικὴν ἐπιστήμην, the Regial Science. Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs are the Regial accompliſhments; therefore God (in whom they are infinitely and eſſentially inherent and ſhining from Eternity, and of whoſe Attributes they are a ſummary) ought to be contemplated as the Sovereignty or Kingdom-Eſtate from Eternity.

VI. This Theory containeth in it a clear Reſolution of this difficult Queſtion in Theology and Politicks, What is the ground of God's Dominion and Sovereignty over Man and the Creatures? The Atheiſtical Politicians aſſign no other ground of it but omnipotent Power; for they ſuppoſe, that irreſiſtible Power can do no wrong. Nor is it to be expected, that they ſhould aſſign any other ground of this Divine Dominion but Will and Power, who ſuppoſe, that there is nothing Good or Evil in its own Nature, but that all Good and Evil is made ſuch by the arbitrary Will of God. Inſtead of theſe Extravagances ſome have ſubſtituted this extravagant Suppoſition; (a) That God's right of Dominion over the Creatures could not be founded upon the Benefits of Creation, but upon the abſolute unlimitedneſs of his Power; becauſe God from Eternity was inveſted with a Power of doing any thing that was not misbecoming his Divine Perfections; which Power could not be made greater, and therefore he acquir'd not any new right from his Creation. But although God acquir'd no new Power from his Creation (for he had always the right of Dominion and Sovereignty over his Creatures, when they ſhould become his Exiſtent Creatures,) yet this right of Dominion muſt be conſider'd, as it is a Relation, and ſo conſider'd it is neceſſarily founded upon his Creation, whereby the Creatures are related to him as his Property, Men are related to him as of right and by obligation his Subjects and Servants, and are bound to acknowledge him their Lord. The nature of which Obligation ſheweth, that this Divine Dominion is not founded meerly upon the Benefits of Creation, (b) as ſome others ſuppoſe. For the greateſt Benefits can oblige to nothing more than Gratitude, they are no Title to Propriety in ſtrict Juſtice, nor can they ſo much as found a Political Sovereignty, becauſe Sovereign and Subject are neceſſarily link'd together by the Bond of ſtrict Juſtice. A Child is oblig'd to his Parent by the Benefit of Generation and of Education, but beſides this Obligation the Parent hath (in ſome degree) ſuch a ſtrict right of Property to his Child, as he hath to his Houſe and Land (which are not capable of being oblig'd by Benefits, but are for his Uſe and Benefit;) and if Benefits are not the ſole ground of Parental Dominion, they cannot be the ſole ground of this Divine Dominion. The buſineſs of Piety towards God is not only Gratitude, but Debt of Juſtice (Debt is but another Name for Duty,) it is ſtricti Juris, as a Servants Duty to his Lord is; if rational Beings revolt from God, they alienate themſelves from their natural Lord; if they live as their own Maſters, their Impiety is not meer ingratitude, but is ſuch foul diſhoneſty as the robbing a Man of his own. Obedience and Service is due to all Authority (Divine and Human) not meerly out of Gratitude, but out of Conſcience and Senſe of Due, in rigour of Law and Juſtice. Innumerable Creatures are incapable of Benefits, yet God is related to them as their Lord, which is an uncontrolable Argument, that the Benefits of Creation are not the ſole ground of his Dominion and Sovereignty over Man and the Creatures. Nor can the Divine Dominion be chiefly founded in the Divine ὑπεροχῇ, Tranſcendence, Excellence or Supereminene, (c) as ſome ſuppoſe. For they that far tranſcend others, are not neceſſarily Lords of them and their Eſtates, their inferiours may owe them an honourary Reſpect, but thoſe ſuperiours have no right to take away their Liberty from them. Dominion over others is Tranſcendence, but Tranſcendence at large is not Dominion over others. For it is no ſuch Honour and Dignity of Eſtate, that implieth Dominion (ſuch as Lord and King,) no Right of Juſtice, no Political Relation, no Title to Property. To ſuppoſe, that God is Lord of the Creatures chiefly becauſe of the Tranſcendence of his Perfections, is like Cyrus's Error, who allotted the biggeſt Coat to the biggeſt Boy, although it was not his.

In a late learned Author's account of the Law of Nature the Divine Dominion and Sovereignty is deriv'd meerly from the neceſſity of publick good, and upon this alone it is founded. For his Senſe, (d) It is neceſſary for the common good and in order thereto, that a ſupreme Power of governing all Creatures be aſſum'd by God, and this is the ground of his Dominion and Sovereignty. Which Propoſition involveth in it this Paradox; that it is neceſſary for the common good and in order thereto, that God ſhould aſſume to himſelf the being God (for without ſo great a Perfection as univerſal Dominion and Sovereignty he is not God,) and upon this prudential Aſſumption his Dominion is founded. This is extremely amiſs (upon ſeveral accounts:) But there are ſeveral other Paradoxes of like Nature involv'd in this Propoſition, which will be diſcours'd of in another place. We will here only add, that it is Eſſential to God, to be the Lord of all (the Lord of all Creatures;) and this being his great Eſſentiality (whereby he is defin'd by Clemens) common Senſe ſheweth, what is the true ground of the Divine Dominion and Sovereignty. (e) Some ſuppoſe, that the Production of any thing maketh it his who produceth it, and if he formeth it out of his own matter, it is wholly his; and this is the ground which they aſſign of the Divine Dominion. But although this account of it is agreeable to the Senſe of the imperial Lawyers, it muſt not be thought a juſt account of it. For if an Opificer maketh a piece of Work (having firſt made the matter of it) at the command of another, if he maketh it not at all for his own, but meerly for that other's uſe and ſervice, if he hath not right ſo to produce it, as to be the Proprietor of it, his Production of it cannot be a

---

(y) Am. Marcellin. l. 29.

(z) Eraſm. Inſtit. princip. præfat. & p. 22.

(a) Dr. Sa. Parker of God's Dominion. p. 148.

Pſal. 24. 1, 2. Act. 17. 24.

(b) Curcell. de Jur. Dei, in Creatur. innocent.

(c) Amyrald.

(d) Dr. Cumberland. de Leg. Nat. c. 7. p. 342, 343, 344.

(e) Opus quodvis quâ tale eſt, natura ſua opificis eſt, & ſi ex ſua, non aliena materia id formarit, totum eſt ipſius. Crell. de Deo & ejus Attribut. c. 23.

Title to the Property, as appeareth from that principal ground of Propriety alledg'd by Pharaoh in his vain boaſt. My river is mine own, and I have made it for my ſelf, Ezek. 29. 3. If the Maker of all things is the Proprietor of all things upon the account of producing them, he muſt be abſolutely ſui Juris, which is an Honour and Dignity of Eſtate. If he was but a ſubordinate Agent in Creation, as Plato's Demons are ſuppos'd, to have been, he could not be the Owner of all things upon the account of creating them. If Adam had begot Children for another Man, as Slaves generate for their Maſters, he could not have been Lord of them; which ſheweth, that his Honour and Dignity of Eſtate was in part the ground of his (limited) Dominion and Sovereignty over them. It is not therefore the meer fact or benefit of Creation, which is the ground of the Divine Dominion; but it is Creation in Conjunction with God's eſſential Honour and Dignity of Eſtate, which is to be Lord of the Creature; and to be ſuch in Relation ſuppoſing the Creature to exiſt. His right of Dominion and Sovereignty over Man and the Creatures muſt be conſider'd both as it is a meer eſſential Honour and Dignity of Eſtate antecedent to the Creation, and as it is a Relation conſequent upon it. As it is a meer Honour and Dignity of Eſtate (being his eſſential Nobilitation,) it is not founded upon any thing: As his prerogative of acting independently, unaccountably, and managing all things in the Sovereign way of Regency, is not founded upon any thing. But as it is a Relation, it is like Adam's (ſuppos'd) Sovereignty over his Poſterity, which was founded upon his Generation of them, yet not only upon his Generation of them, but upon his Generation of them in Conjunction with his antecedent Honour and Dignity of Eſtate.

CHAP. V.

1. Of the expanded Idea of God and the two parts of it. 2. That God is (peculiarly) all Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitation and Perfection in general. 3. That God is (peculiarly) all Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitation and Perfection of State and of Nature. 4. That God is (peculiarly) all Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitation and Perfection meerly Gradual and Specific-gradual. 5. Of the ſecond part of the expanded Idea of God, and that God is Politically and of kind the holy Empire's Imperial Eſtate. 6. That God is the Sanctity Imperial. 7. That God is the Sanctity Vital. 8. That God is the Sanctity Imperial-perſonal. 9. One Explication of it confuted.

I. IN repreſenting the Idea of God it is not unuſual with Men of Learning, to begin with ſome more rude and imperfect notice of God, ſuch as all Men are apt to conceive in their Minds upon the firſt hearing of the Word. At the next ſtep they proceed to a definitive Notice of God or ſomething like a definitive Notice. And at the third ſtep they proceed to a large expanded Idea, a more full and explicit deſcription of the Deity. The whole of this expanded Idea we are oblig'd to glance at, and it will be ſufficient, only to glance at a great part of it: But ſo much of it as needeth explication, we will carefully explicate and ſet in clear Light. This expanded Idea (if it be regular and legitimate) muſt conſiſt of two parts anſwerable to the two main Branches of the contracted Idea of God; and thus it ought to be ſummarily repreſented.

1. The Creature-tranſcendent Sovereignty (which God is) is peculiarly of all Creature-tranſcendent

Nobilitation and perfection, whether it be in general or particularly ſo, in State or of Nature
meerly gradual or ſpecific-gradual.

2. The God-kind of Sovereignty which God is Politically and Societively, is the holy Empire's

Sovereignty (or Imperial Eſtate,) which is the Sanctity Imperial,
the Sanctity Vital,
the Sanctity Imperial-perſonal.

II. (f) Accurately inquiring into the Nature of Beings we ſee God and Creature and nothing beſides theſe. As in Human Sovereignties (which conſiſt of the Party imperant and the Party ſubject) to be of the Subject-tranſcendent degree, is to be of the Sovereignty: So to be of the Creature-tranſcendent degree, is to be of the Godhead. All ſuch Nobilitation therefore which is Creature-tranſcendence (whether it be meerly Gradual or Specific-gradual) properly and peculiarly belongeth unto God. In Human Sovereignties all are either of the Subject-party or of the Sovereignty, becauſe to be of the Subject-tranſcendent degree, is to be of the Sovereignty, and is proper to the Sovereignty: So in the Univerſe of Beings all are either of the Godhead or of the Creature-party (which is the ſubject and ſervient Party,) becauſe to be of the Creature-tranſcendent degree, is to be of the Godhead and proper unto the Godhead. If any thing be rais'd to Creature-tranſcendence (as in Idolatry) it is made a God; for Creature-tranſcendence is that which maketh and conſtituteth a God truly and really ſuch; and therefore he is God, becauſe he is of Graduality, Perfection and Nobilitation Creature-tranſcendent. Such Perfection and Nobilitation therefore which is of Creature-tranſcendent degree, properly belongeth unto God; and all ſuch Nobilitation which is of Creature-tranſcendent degree properly belongeth unto God; and if it properly belongeth to him, it doth belong to him, and muſt be an Ingredient of his expanded Idea. One ſort of theſe Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitations are theſe general Notices of God (and ſuch more,) a Being of infinite Perfection, abſolutely without any defect or imperfection, excellence without any want of excellence, abſolutely unvile and unvileable, infinitely valuable, amiable, honourable, meer unſtain'd Nobilitation and Perfection, Brightneſs unſully'd with any Cloud, (g) παγκαλὲς καὶ αὐτοτελές, of abſolutely pure and perfect Pulchritude and Precioſity, Self-perfect, abſolutely exempt from all miſcreancy and miſery, the higheſt remove from and the moſt perfect oppoſite to all Evil. No acceſſion can be made to God (ſaith

(f) Τὴν τῶν ὄντων ἀκριβῶς ἐξετάζοντες φύσιν, θεὸν ὁρῶμεν ϗ κτίσιν καὶ ἕτερον ἐπὶ τούτοις οὐδὲν. S. Cyr. in Joan. l. 1. c. 6. p. 52.

(g) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 4. p. 120.

S. Auſtin,) nor can he ſuffer any diminution. For if he be capable of any Acceſſion, he is not perfect: and if he be diminiſh'd, he is not God. (h) And this is that which the Schools ſay, (in this ſenſe ſaying truly,) that God is a pure Act without any mixture of potentiality or capability of Perfection. He is whatever he can be. (i) He muſt be that which is moſt ſufficient (All-ſufficient) not indigent or inſufficient as to himſelf or as to any other. It belongeth unto God, to be the infinite and abſolutely perfect good, (k) Qui non ſolum ſummè bonus eſt, ſed etiam ſummum atque incommutabile bonum eſt, quia æternum bonum eſt, nullum habens defectum. Who is not only ſupremely Good, but the ſupreme and unchangeable Good, becauſe the eternal Good, having no deficiency. To theſe general Notices and Nobilitations of the Deity (wherein God is abſolutely not comparatively conſider'd) another ſort muſt be added, which are general Notices and Nobilitations of compariſon between God and Creatures, which are as nothing in compariſon of God. Iſa. 40. 14, 15, 17. (l) there is none like him with a likeneſs of compariſon. The God-head ſtands ſingular and alone without any Compeer or Co-partner, is Creature-tranſcendent in all Reſpects, ſeparated and diſcriminated from all (all Creatures and created Eminences) by way of Eminence, incomparably Paramount, Peerleſs and Super-eminent, the beſt and greateſt poſſible or conceivable, infinitely better than all the World (being the unfathomable Abyſs of good without bounds or bottom.) the only one in the Univerſe, whoſe Name alone is excellent. Pſal. 148. 13. All which are general Notices and Nobilitations of compariſon between God and Creatures.

III. All Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitations and Perfections of State and of Nature do belong (and peculiarly belong) unto God; who is the Honour and Eſtate of Nobilitation Creature-tranſcendent, the ſupreme Supremacy. The Sovereignty abſolutely Soveraign, the great King (the great Eſtate of Kingdom and Empire,) the fulleſt height of Dominion and (authoritative) Power, the Lord and the Poſſeſſor of Heaven and Earth, All-commanding, All-diſpoſing, ſuperintending and governing all things, the one Lawgiver, the Judge of all, the Lord of Life, the King of Glory, the Lord of the Spirits of all Fleſh, the Father of Spirits, the Alpha and Omega, the Maker and Preſerver of all things, the Saviour, the univerſal Benefactor. A reſemblance of his Godhead of Eſtate is viſible in that Eccleſiaſtic Monarch, who in a Paraſitical Addreſs is adorn'd by Morinus with theſe ſwelling Titles and Attributes. (m) Thou art conſtituted by God the Keeper and Preſident of the Church's Treaſure, the Diſpenſer of Eternity, the Interpreter of the Mind of God, the Arbiter of the Chriſtian Laws, the Judge of all Men, Self-maſter and Vindicator alone. His bigotted Partiſans have intituled him (n) Vice-God, the Vicar of the Immortal God; and in the gloſs of the Canon Law he is ſtiled Dominus Deus noſter Papa, our Lord God the Pope. Some of the Decretory Sentences of Greg. the Seventh are, (o) that all Princes kiſs the Feet of the Pope alone. That he only may uſe the Enſigns of Imperial Dignity. That there is but one Name in the World, that of the Pope. In the laſt Lateran great Synod under his Noſe and in his hearing the Pope was ſtiled by one Biſhop (p) The Prince of the World; another Orator called him King of Kings, and Monarch of the Earth. Another great Prelate ſaid of him, that he had all Power above all Powers both of Heaven and Earth. And the ſame Man told Leo X. To thee is given all Power in Heaven and in Earth. His Theologers celebrate the Papal Omnipotence, and one of them ſaith, the Power of the Pope is greater than all created Power, and extendeth it ſelf to the things Celeſtial, Terreſtrial and Infernal. So great a reſemblance there is between the God-head of Eſtate and the Papal Sovereignty, that in many Inſtances (with great Reaſon) we ſhall make uſe of it, to illuſtrate the Theory of God. To whom all Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitations of Nature as well as State do belong (and peculiarly belong;) as to be abſolutely infallible and impeccable (which attributes are extravagantly pretended to by the Papacy,) incapable of lying and of dying, impaſſible, incorruptible, unchangeable, of infinite Wiſdom, Goodneſs and Power, the excellent Glory (which as dwelling amongſt Men the Jews call Schecinah,) Immenſe alſo or Omnipreſent, according to that of Epictetus, (q) God and your Genius is within. It belongeth alſo to the God-head, to have Life in himſelf primarily, originally, eſſentially and in infinite fulneſs. (r) For the Divinity is everlaſting, not as participative of Life, but as ſuppletive or communicative to others of Life Divine. Several Divine Attributes belong to the Deity both in reſpect of his State and Nature, as increate, bleſſed, almighty, irreſiſtible.

IV. All Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitations and Perfections do belong (and peculiarly belong) unto God, whether they be meerly Gradual or Specific-gradual. Thoſe Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitations and Perfections I call meerly Gradual, which tranſcend not meer Creatures in the kind of them, but only in the degree of them; and as to the kind of them they are no better than common Excellency. For if by Omniſcience we mean nothing more than Creature-tranſcendence in common kind of Knowledge and Underſtanding, this Attribute is nothing better than Creature tranſcendent Graduality. Such is infinite Might and Strength, and ſuch is infinite Goodneſs, if by Goodneſs we mean nothing better than common kind of Goodneſs. To be abſolutely independent, a ſupreme Being, a ſupreme Mind, an infinite Spirit, an Ocean of Eſſence, denoteth nothing more than common kind of Excellence: Nor do theſe great Attributes in the Notion of the Pagan Theologers ſignifie any thing more than

---

(h) Hoc eſt quod Scholæ dicunt, Deum eſſe, Actum purum, id eſt, quod nullam habet potentiam admixtam. Petav. T. 1. l. 6. c. 7. S. 3.

(i) Δεῖ τι αὐταρκέστατον εἶναι—— μήτε πρὸς αὐτὸ, μήτε πρὸς ἄλλο ἐνδεὲς εἶναι. Plotin. En. 6. l. 9. c. 6.

(k) Fulgent. ap. Petav. T. l. 6. c. 2. S. 10.

(l) Exod. 8. 10. and 9. 14. and 15. 11. Deut. 33. 26. 2*Sam.* 7. 22. 1 Chron. 17. 20. Pſal. 86. 8. and 89. 6, 9. Iſa. 40. 25. and 46. 5, 9.

(m) Divinitùs conſtitueris Theſauri Eccleſiæ Cuſtos & Præſes, æternitatis diſpenſator, mentis divinæ interpres, legum Chriſtianarum Arbiter, omnium mortalium Judex, unicus tui Dominus & Vindex. Vita J. Morini. p. 6.

(n) Vice Deus, vicarius immortalis Dei. Roderic. Zamorenſ. Spec. hum. vit. l. 2. c. 1.

(o) Quòd ſolius Papæ pedes omnes principes deoſculentur. Quòd ſolus uti poſſit imperialibus inſigniis. Quòd unicum eſt nomen in mundo, Papæ videlicet. Baron. ad ann. 1076. n. 31.

(p) Orbis Princeps. Regum Rex & Orbis terrarum Monarcha. In quo erat poteſtas ſupra omnes poteſtates tàm Cœli quàm Terræ. Tibi data eſt omnis poteſtas in Cœlo & in Terra. Omnipotentiam Pontificiam. Papæ poteſtas eſt major omni poteſtate creatâ, extenditque ſe ad Cœleſtia, Terreſtria & infernalia. D. Barrow of the Pope's Suprem. p. 4. D. Sclater on 2 Theſſ. 2. 4. Pool's Synopſ. in loc.

(q) Ὁ θεὸς ἔνδον ἐστὶ, καὶ ὁ ὑμέτερος δαίμων. Diſſ. l. 1. c. 14.

(r) Οὐ γὰρ ὡς μετέχει τοῦ ζῆν, ἀλλ' ὡς παρεκτικὸν τῆς θείας ζωῆς, τὸ θεῖον ἀθάνατόν ἐστι. Procl. Plat. Theol. p. 65.

Creature-tranſcendent Graduality, to be abſolutely perfect, ſelf-full, the beſt and greateſt of Beings, τὸ πέλαγος τοῦ καλοῦ, the Ocean of Pulchritude. Theſe Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitations the Lord of all, the Prince of Life, the King of Kings and Lord of Lords, if they be underſtood and conſider'd in the general indeterminate Notion, abſtracted from Chriſt's true Specific and individual determination, which is Chriſtianity, they are meerly his Graduality (Creature-tranſcendent Graduality,) and not that which he is of proper kind. If theſe Creature-tranſcendent Attributes Vice-God, Prince of the World, the Potentate above all created Potentates, be conſider'd as abſtracted from the Pope's Specific and individual determination, they may as well be a Bravado of the Grand Segnior or of one of the old Roman Emperours, as the rightful Imperial Stile of our holy Father (whoſe Specific and individual Determination is Popery,) and they are meerly his Graduality, not that which he is of proper kind. So to be the ſupreme univerſal King, the moſt High, ſupreme Governour and Lord of the Univerſe (ſummus Rector & Dominus,) ὁ ἐπὶ πᾶσι θεὸς, the God above all, the Parent of the World (Mundi Parens) ὁ τῶν ὄντων πατὴρ ϗ δημιουργὸς, the Father and Maker of Beings, Ingenit, Immenſe, Beate, Immortal, all this Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitation underſtood in the general indeterminate Notion, abſtracted from God's true Specific and individual Determination (which is true Sanctity) is nothing more than Creature-tranſcendent Graduality, not that which he is of proper kind. That which he is of proper kind, is the God-kind of Excellence, and the God-kind of Excellence is the ſame with the Saint of God-kind of Excellence, (ſo the Saint of God-kind of Life is the God-kind of Life, Eph. 4. 18. and the Saint of God-kind of Love is the God-kind of Love, 1 Joh. 4. 7, 8.) and the Saint of God-kind of Excellence is manifeſtly the ſame with Sanctity or Holineſs. Holineſs or Sanctity is the uncommon kind of Excellence (or Unvileneſs,) this uncommon kind of Excellence is the Saint of God-kind of Excellence, this Saint of God-kind of Excellence is the God-kind of Excellence (each one of theſe Notices of it is the definition of it;) and becauſe it is the God-kind of Excellence, therefore it is the Creature-tranſcendent kind of Excellence, which is the Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitation and Perfection ſpecifical. This Specific Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitation and Perfection Creatures do partake of, but not in the Creature-tranſcendent degree; ſuch Nobilitation and Perfection which is Creature-tranſcendent both in kind and degree (the Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitation and Perfection Specific-gradual) belongeth unto God and peculiarly belongeth unto God.

Theſe Notices of Sanctity may be very much illuſtrated from the Writings of the Fathers, wherein the Saints are uſually called Gods, to which purpoſe they uſually cite thoſe words of the Pſalmiſt, I have ſaid ye are Gods, and all of you Sons of the moſt High. So Clemens ſaith of Chriſt, (s) by his heavenly Doctrine he maketh Man a God. The Scriptures he calleth (t) the deifying Writings. Of an heavenly Converſation he ſaith, (u) thereby being made Gods. And of one aſſimilated to God he ſaith, (w) ſuch a Man is made a God. Heraclitus therefore rightly ſaid Men-Gods and Gods-Men. (x) Of the end of Chriſt's coming he ſaith; the Logos of God was made Man, that thou mighteſt learn of Man, how Man may be made a God. So Gr. Naz. ſaith; (y) the commixture of God and Man in our Saviour was for this end, that I might be made as much a God, as he was made a Man. (z) His Solitude he calleth θεοποιὸς, that which maketh a God of a Man, (a) and the holy Spirit θεοποιοῦν, that which deifieth a Man. (b) If the holy Spirit is not God, how doth he make me a God by Baptiſm? (c) God ſtanding and judging in the midſt of the Gods that are ſaved, is the Language of the Father; and he reckoneth theſe Benefits of God; to be made a Son of God, a Coheir of Chriſt, (d) I will ſpeak boldly, and to be made a God. (e) I will not endure to Worſhip a Creature (ſaith he) being commanded to be a God. S. Baſil ſaith of the holy Spirit, (f) Every one of the Saints is a God by him. (g) Hence is our Similitude to God, hence is the chief of all deſirables, to be made a God. (h) We are called the Temples of God and Gods, and we are ſo, ſaith S. Cyril. (i) We are ſaid to be born of God, and therefore are called Gods. (k) Being made conformable to the natural Son, we are called Gods in Conſort with him and Sons of God. (l) Chriſt hath impreſs'd a Divine Illumination as it were a Divine Image on thoſe that believe on him, that they might be called according to his Similitude Gods and Sons of God. (m) In him we were firſt deify'd. (n) Doth it profit us nothing, to be called Gods and Sons of God and Brothers? (o) Of the holy Spirit he ſaith; by him we are called Gods alſo, as participating of the Divine and ineffable Nature by Conjunction with him. He argueth, that the holy Spirit cannot be a Creature, (p) which maketh us Gods. So Athanaſius proveth, that the Logos was God, (q) becauſe Man hath his θεοποίησις, Deification from him. The Salvation of Man is called by this Father his θεοποίησις, Deification; therefore he ſaith of Chriſt, that being God he became Man, (r) to deifie us. So many as were Sons of God (s) were by the Logos made Sons and Gods. The Word was made Fleſh, that we being partakers of the Spirit (t) might be deify'd. Of the holy Spirit he ſaith, (u) by which we are made Gods and the Temples of God. Of God S. Auſtin ſaith, (w) he maketh his Worſhippers Gods. (x) Created Gods are Gods by a Participation of the true God. By S. Cyprian Chriſtianity is called, (y) the Deifying Diſcipline; and Paulinus ſaith of our Saviour, (z) in reſpect of ſo much as is in him, he ſaid unto all Men, ye are Gods, and all the Sons of the higheſt. So Andreas Cæſarienſis ſaith, that Chriſt was made Man, (a) that Man may be made a God. So the Church of Rome in her Breviary ſaith, (b) He was made Man, that he might make Men Gods. By Simeon Theſſalonicenſis, one of the later Greeks, Chriſtians are called, (c) κατὰ χάριν θεοί, Gods by Grace becauſe κοινωνοὶ τοῦ θεοῦ, partakers of God. So S. Hierom ſaith; (d) If any one is a Saint, he is made a God. (e) Our Saviour was found in faſhion as a Man, that we might be made Gods of Men. Much of this Nature occurreth in the Writings of the Fathers, it is their ordinary Language (as ordinary as the High-way,) they look upon the Saints both in reſpect of their Grace (f) and alſo in reſpect of their Glory, as made Gods.

(s) Οὐρανίῳ διδασκαλίᾳ θεοποιῶν τὸν ἄνθρωπον. Προτρεπ]. p. m. 53.

(t) Τὰ θεοποιοῦντα γράμματα. Ibid. p. 41. & vid. p. 57.

(u) Καθ' ἣν ἐκθεούμενοι. Pædag. l. 1. c. 12.

(w) Θεὸς δὲ ἐκεῖνος ὁ ἄνθρωπος γίνεται. Ὀρθῶς ἄρα εἶπεν Ἡράκλειτος, Ἄνθρωποι θεοί· Θεοὶ ἄνθρωποι. Ibid. l. 3. c. 1.

(x) Ὁ λόγος ὁ τοῦ θεοῦ ἄνθρωπος γινόμενος, ἵνα δὴ ϗ σὺ παρὰ ἀνθρώπου μάθῃς μήποτε ἄρα ἄνθρωπος γίνεται θεός. Προτρεπ]. p. m. 6.

(y) Ἵνα γένωμαι τοσοῦτον θεὸς, ὅσον ἐκεῖνος ἄνθρωπος. Or. 35.

(z) Or. 2.

(a) Or. 37. p. 610.

(b) Πῶς ἐμὲ θεοῖ διὰ τοῦ βαπτίσματος. Or. 34. p. 429.

(c) Θεὸς ἐν μέσῳ θεῶν τῶν σωζομένων. Or. 36. p. 579.

(d) Τολμήσας εἴπω, καὶ θεὸν αὐτόν. Or. 16. p. 253.

(e) Θεὸς εἶναι κεκελευσμένος. Or. 20. p. 349.

(f) Θεὸς ἐστὶ διὰ τοῦτο ἕκαστος τῶν ἁγίων. Adv. Eunom. p. 140.

(g) Ἡ πρὸς θεὸν ὁμοίωσις, τὸ ἀκρότατον τῶν ὀρεκτῶν, θεὸν γενέσθαι. Ibid. p. 165.

(h) Ναοὶ δὲ θεοῦ ϗ θεοὶ κεκλήμεθα ϗ ἐσμέν. S. Cyr. Dial. de Trin. p. 639.

(i) Ἐκ θεοῦ γεγεννῆσθαι λεγόμεθα, ϗ θεοὶ διὰ τοῦτο χρηματίζομεν. Idem in Joann. p. 93.

(k) Σύμμορφοι γεγονότες τῷ κατὰ φύσιν υἱῷ θεοὶ κατ' αὐτὸν ϗ υἱοὶ κεκλήμεθα θεοῦ. Dial. 7. de Trin. p. 644.

(l) Κατ' αὐτὸν θεοί τε καὶ θεοῦ υἱοί. Idem in Joan. p. 70.

(m) Idem T. 2. p. 44.

(n) Τὸ ϗ θεοὺς ὀνομάσθαι ϗ θεοῦ τέκνα ϗ ἀδελφούς. Idem c. Jul. l. 6. p. 214.

(o) Κεκλήμεθα δι' αὐτὸ καὶ θεοί, ἅτε δὴ τῇ θείᾳ τε ϗ ἀπορρήτῳ φύσει τῇ πρὸς αὐτὸ συναφείᾳ κεκοινωνηκότες. Dial de Trin. p. 639.

(p) Ibid. p. 644.

(q) Or. 3. c. Arian. p. 241. com.

(r) Ἵνα ἡμᾶς θεοποιήσῃ.

(s) Διὰ τοῦ λόγου υἱοποιήθησαν καὶ θεοποιήθησαν. Ibid. p. 166.

(t) Θεοποιηθῆναι δυνηθῶμεν. De Syn. Nic. decret. p. 411.

(u) Δι' οὗ ϗ θεοποιούμεθα ϗ θεοῦ ναοὶ καθιστάμεθα. In Ep. Cathol.

(w) Facit cultores ſuos Deos. De C. D. l. 10. c. 1. Dii eſſent. Ibid. p. 159. ed. Lugd.

(x) Dii creati veri Dei participatione ſunt Dii. Ibid. l. 14. c. 13.

To juſtifie this uſual Language of the Fathers, Caſanbon argueth, (g) Who but a God, can be a Son of God? Agreeably whereto S. Auſtin ſaith; (h) He deifieth, that is of himſelf God, not by participation of another. Now he that juſtifieth (ſanctifieth,) he deifieth, becauſe by juſtifying he maketh Sons of God. If we are made the Sons of God, we are made Gods. So the Maſter of Controverſies ſaith of our firſt Parents, (i) They were rais'd to the Dignity of being Sons of God, and certain Gods, that is, partakers of the Divine Nature. This ſort of Language is allow'd by Proteſtant Divines; for Calvin ſpeaketh it with ſome ſmall limitation. (k) Let us note, that this is the end of the Goſpel, to render us conformed to God (God-like) which is as it were, to be deify'd. Bucer ſpeaketh with greater freedom, (l) That in theſe we may approve our ſelves his Sons and true Gods. An eminent Chriſtian Philoſopher argueth; (m) Becauſe Men are made bleſſed by getting Beatitude, which Beatitude is Divinity it ſelf, it is manifeſt, that they are made bleſſed by acquiring Divinity. And as they are by the acquiſition of Juſtice made juſt, by the acquiſition of Wiſdom made wiſe: So by parity of reaſon they are neceſſarily made Gods by the acquiſition of Divinity. Every bleſſed one therefore is a God; for although there is by nature but one God, yet nothing hindreth but that by participation there may be very many. Theſe Allegations from Learned Writers of the Chriſtian Church are therefore of great remark, becauſe they imply, that the Excellence, Nobilitation and Perfection of the Children, Sons and Saints of God as ſuch is of the God-kind. For they are not called Gods (as others are) meerly upon account of certain gradual reſemblances of the Deity, but on account of their kind; as appeareth from the Epithets and Appellatives uſual in profane Authors. (n) For this Appellative the Sons of Mars ſignifieth the Martial-kind of Men; and this Appellative the Sons of Neptune denoteth the Savage and Tyrannical kind of Men. So in Holy Writ the Wicked are intituled Serpents, a Generation of Vipers, Devils and the Children of the Wicked One, upon account of their kind, and to ſignifie, that they are a Serpentine and Viperous Brood and Race, Diabolici generis, of the Diabolical kind. When they are ſtiled thoſe that are of the Devil, of their Father the Devil, of that Wicked One, born of the Will of the Fleſh, thoſe that are of the World, the Children of this World; theſe Appellatives ſignifie what they are originally, and alſo of kind and quality (Diabolical, Carnal, Mundane;) therefore when the Holy People are ſtiled thoſe that are of God, born or begotten of God, the Children of God (and Gods,) theſe Appellatives denote, not only what they are originally, but of kind alſo, and that they are Divini generis (as Arnobius ſpeaketh,) of the Holy, Godly and Divine kind as God is, who is the Parental Head, Father and Founder of the holy Kind and Family, Eph. 3. 15. And as all genuine Chriſtians are thus far Chriſts, they are of kind and family Chriſts, or of the Chriſt-kind and Family, (o) whence they are called Chriſts, and S. Auſtin ſaith, (p) He maketh us his Members, that we alſo might be Chriſts in him: So all the Saints of God are thus far Gods; they are of kind and Family Gods, or of the God-kind and Family, for which reaſon they are denominated Gods by the ancient Writers; for by this Name they mean, that they are the Sons of God. They are denominated Gods upon account of their kind; and it is upon account of their kind, that they are a Race of high ones above Men (or Gods;) therefore their Name of Gods denoteth them, to be of the God-kind. They are called Gods (as the ancient Writers ſay,) becauſe they are born of God; and they are not born of him meerly as Men and other Animals are, that have their original from him by an equivocal Generation; but the Generation of the Children, Sons and Saints of God is thus far a propagation of kind; they are θεῖον γένος, of God's Kind and Family, the Sons of the Divine Family that God is of. Their Excellence and Nobilitation therefore is of the God-kind, becauſe it is of the Saint of God-kind; for to be the Saints and Sons of God, and to be Gods, are identical Expreſſions with the ancient Writers: Who are Authorities ſufficiently great, to warrant us, to call the Saint of God-kind of Nobilitation and Perfection The God-kind of Nobilitation and Perfection. And in all reaſon it ought to be ſo called becauſe of its Creature-tranſcendence ſpecifical; for Sanctity belongeth not to any Creature, Man or Angel as ſuch; and it conſtituteth every one in whom it is found, one of the God-kind and Family, either God or a Child of God. If it be in any one in the Creature-tranſcendent degree, ſuch an one muſt neceſſarily be God in the ſtrictly Religious Senſe (an Object of Religious Worſhip;) but the Saints have it not in the Creature-tranſcendent degree, and therefore are not in this ſenſe Gods.

(y) Deifica diſciplina. p. 191. Ed. Pamel.

(z) Quantum in ipſo eſt, omnibus dixit hominibus, Dii eſtis, & filii excelſi omnes. Petav. T. 4. l. 13. c. 2. S. 10.

(a) Ibid. l. 2. c. 8. S. 2.

(b) Ut homines Deos faceret, factus homo. In Feſt. Corp. Chriſt. Lect. 4.

(c) V. H. Dodwell. Proleg. Apol. præfix. J. Stearn. libell. de obſtinat. S. 63. p. 264.

(d) Si quis ſanctus eſt, Deus efficitur. Com. in Pſal. 115.

(e) Salvator habitu inventus eſt homo, ut nos Dii fieremus ex hominibus. 2 Com. ad Galat. 4.

(f) J. Mart. paran. p. 40. Theophil. ad Autol. p. 101, 103. S. Baſil. adv. Eunom. l. 2. p. 41. Gr. Naz. or. 42. p. 680. Voſſ. not. in S. Greg. Thaumaturg. p. 127.

(g) Quis niſi Deus poteſt eſſe filius Dei?

(h) Ille deificat, qui per ſeipſum, non alterius participatione Deus eſt. Qui autem juſtificat, ipſe deificat, quia juſtificando filios Dei facit. ſi Filii Dei facti ſumus, & Dii facti ſumus. Enarr. in Pſal. 49.

(i) Primi parentes evecti fuerunt ad eam dignitatem, ut eſſent filii Dei & Dii quidam, id eſt, divinæ conſortes naturæ. T. 4. de Grat. 1. Hom. c. 6. ſub fin.

(k) Notemus hunc eſſe Evangelii finem, ut aliquando Deo conformes reddamur, id verò eſt quaſi Deificari. In 2. Ep. Petri c. 1. v. 4.

(l) Ut in his nos filios ejus, veroſque Deos præſtemus. In Rom. 2. Concil. 2. p. 120.

(m) Quoniam beatitudinis adeptione fiunt homines beati, beatitudo vero eſt ipſa divinitas, divinitatis adeptione beatos fieri, manifeſtum eſt. Sed uti juſtitiæ adeptione juſti, ſapientiæ ſapientes fiunt, ita divinitatem adeptos Deos fieri, ſimili ratione neceſſe eſt. omnis igitur Beatus Deus; ſed natura quidem unus, participatione verò nihil prohibet eſſe quàm plurimos. Boeth. de conſol. Phil. l. 3. p. 157.

(n) Dr. Hamm. in Matt. 5. 9.

(o) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 6. p. 33

(p) Faciens nos membra ut in illo & nos Chriſti eſſemus. Enar. 2. Pſal. 26.

V. The ſecond part of our expanded Idea repreſenteth God as politically and ſocietively The Holy Empire's Imperial Eſtate (or Sovereignty,) and that he is of proper kind ſuch. Which Notices of God are not ſhaded with ſuch obſcurity, but that they are clearly intelligible and evidently true, as if written by a Sun-beam: For (according to his Idea) God is the Sovereignty Creature-tranſcendent and over the whole Univerſe; which implieth, that the Univerſe of Rationals are or ought to be his Subjects in a Society or Polity, and conſequently he is of right the Holy Empire's Imperial Eſtate. If any number of theſe Rationals are actually in the State of Society with God as their Sovereign, he is actually their God politically and ſocietively, and is in fact the Holy Empire's Imperial Eſtate. The true God is the Deity or Sovereignty of the true Sanctity or Religion, of which the Holy Empire is the Region and Comprehenſion; therefore the true God is of the Holy Empire as the Imperial Eſtate thereof ſocietively and politically. So the Scripture repreſenteth God as the Church's Sovereignty (the ſame with the Holy Empire's Imperial Eſtate,) which is a neceſſary conſequence from his Idea, that repreſenteth him as a Sovereignty: For if he is properly a Sovereignty or Kingdom-eſtate, he is neceſſarily the Imperial Eſtate of his own Empire (politically and ſocietively ſuch) which Empire of his is the Church, the Church being the Church of God. The Old Teſtament proclaimeth (p) & eſſe principem mundi & unius electionem gentis, both the exiſtence of a Prince of the World and the election of one Nation, to be the People of God: For God was an Extrinſic Imperial Head, an Extra-ſocietive Lord and King as to the Heathen World; but to Iſrael (the Holy-popular Commonwealth) he was an Eſtate of Sovereignty ſocietively and politically, an Intrinſick Imperial Head conſtitutive of their Polity. The State of Iſrael inferreth the Conſtitution of the Catholick Church, which partly reigneth in Heaven, and partly ſojourneth on Earth (of which Iſrael was a Type,) that it conſiſteth of God's People as the Subjects and Citizens, and that God is an Intrinſick Sovereignty the Imperial Eſtate thereof. Whence in the New Teſtament he is intituled the King of Saints, Apoc. 15. 3. which Attribute ſpeaketh him to be the Church-Sovereignty, according to that of S. Auſtin; (q) Ex quo vocantur Sancti, eſt Eccleſia in terra: There is a Church on Earth from the time that Men are called Saints. The Saints or Holy People are of definitive Notion the God-ſocietiſts, whereby they are in the ſtate of Religion and Sanctity, and are diſtinguiſh'd from the Atheous, the Common, Profane and Exotick People, that are no People, but are in the ſtate of Aliens and Enemies, whereas the Saints (or the Holy People) are in the ſtate of Alliance and Society with God as the Subjects and Citizens of his Empire and Commonwealth (the Holy Commonwealth,) as his Domeſticks, the Children and Servants of his Family. They are his Liege-people and he is their God, Eph. 2. 12, 13, 19. Rom. 9. 25. Heb. 8. 10. Apoc. 22. 3. They are therefore of the ſame Polity, City and Kingdom that God is of as the Imperial Eſtate thereof, the Divine Majeſty is the Political Head of their Illuſtrious Republick, Heb. 12. 22, 23. Ye are come unto Mount Sion, and unto the City of the living God, the Heavenly Jeruſalem; and to an innumerable Company of Angels, to the general Aſſembly and Church of the Firſt-born, which are written in Heaven, and to God the Judge of all. The Nature of the thing (as well as the Tenour of Holy Scripture) plainly ſheweth, that God is ſocietively and politically of the Holy Empire as the Imperial Eſtate thereof.

Act. 20. 28. 1 Cor. 15. 9. Gal. 1. 13. 1 Tim. 3. 5. 15.

As there are ſeveral Empires and Sovereignties; ſo every one of them is of its proper kind. And as he that is an Humane Empire's, the Papal Empire's, the Diabolical Empire's, the Chriſtian Empire's Sovereignty is that kind of Empire's Imperial Eſtate: So God is the holy kind of Empire's Imperial Eſtate. A like Judgment alſo muſt be made of his ſpecific and individual Determination as of other Imperial Eſtates. For if God is (ſocietively and politically) a Sovereignty or Imperial Eſtate, he is neceſſarily a kind of Sovereignty (an Imperial Eſtate which is of his proper kind) as other Sovereignties are of their proper kind. And as the Chriſtian Empire's Sovereignty (that kind of Sovereignty) is the ſame with the Chriſt-kind of Sovereignty (Chriſt in Sovereignty ſocietively and politically being the Chriſtian Empire's Sovereignty:) as the Diabolical Empire's Sovereignty (that kind of Sovereignty) is the ſame with the Devil-kind of Sovereignty (the Devil in Sovereignty ſocietively and politically being the Diabolical Empire's Sovereignty:) So the Holy Empire's Sovereignty (that kind of Sovereignty) is the ſame with the God-kind of Sovereignty, God in Sovereignty ſocietively and politically being the Holy Empire's Sovereignty. He is of proper kind the Holy Empire's Imperial Eſtate, as Chriſt is of proper kind the Chriſtian Empire's Imperial Eſtate, as the Devil is of proper kind the Diabolical Empire's Imperial Eſtate, as the Pope is of proper kind the Papal Empire's Imperial Eſtate. The Holy Empire's Imperial Eſtate is the ſame with the Holy Imperial Name and Honour and with the Holy kind of Sovereignty, which God of proper kind is, as is plain from the Notion of Holineſs (which is the God-kind of Excellence,) and may be illuſtrated from the Nature and Notion of his Kingdom. (r) His Kingdom, I ſay, which is ſuch according to Cognation (not according to meer Creation) which is peculiar to him, becauſe it is like unto him in Holineſs, and as it were Homogeneal, not that which only by Creation belongeth to him. As Chriſtians becauſe they are of kind and quality Chriſtian, are of kin, and as it were Homogeneal to Chriſt; which inferreth, that he is of proper kind the Chriſtian or Chriſtian Empire's Sovereignty: So the Saints becauſe they are of kind and quality Sancti or the Holy, are of kin and as it were homogeneal to God; which inferreth, that he is of proper kind the Holy or Holy Empire's Sovereignty. He is no ſuch kind of Sovereignty as a God (no God-kind of Sovereignty,) if he is not a Sovereignty of Sanctity and Religion; therefore as he is God (the true God) the truly God-kind of Sovereignty, he is the Sovereignty of true Religion and Sanctity; and conſequently he is of proper kind the Holy Empire's Imperial Eſtate. He is ſo in relation and in actual Society and Polity ſince the Univerſe was conſtituted; and he was ſo without Relation and without actual Society and Polity before the Univerſe was conſtituted (from Eternity,) as appeareth from what we have diſcours'd of his Dominion and Sovereignty from Eternity. Thus far we have inveſtigated what God of proper kind is.

(p) S. Hilar. enar. in Pſal. 61.

(q) In Pſal. 128.

(r) Regnum in quam, τὸ κατ᾽ οἰκείωσιν, non τὸ κατὰ δημιουργίαν, quod illi propter ſanctitatis ſimilitudinem peculiare eſt, & quaſi germanum: non quod ſolo creationis ad eum jure pertinet. Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 3. S. 15.

VI. Chriſt (the Chriſtian Empire's Imperial Eſtate) may be fitly and definitively denominated The Chriſtianity Imperial as a Sovereignty, The Sovereignty thereof: And in the ſame ſenſe God (the Holy Empire's Imperial Eſtate) may be fitly and definitively denominated The Sanctity Imperial as a Sovereignty, the Sovereignty thereof. For as Chriſt's Religion is the Inſtitution of a Polity, which is Chriſtianity Imperial; ſo God's Religion is the Inſtitution of a Polity, which is Sanctity Imperial. As the Chriſtian Empire is the Comprehenſion of all Chriſtians and of their Chriſtianity Imperial: So the Holy Empire is the Comprehenſion of all Saints and of their Sanctity Imperial. Popery Imperial is the Pope's ſpecific Comprehenſion, and Sanctity Imperial is God's ſpecific Comprehenſion. It is the Comprehenſion, that he is of (Societively and Politically) as the Imperial Head thereof; and it is the Comprehenſion of his kind of things and perſons, his imperial kind of things and perſons. The Pope is Popery Imperial as his kind of thing, his Imperial kind of thing; and God is Sanctity Imperial as his kind of thing, his Imperial kind of thing (the God-kind of thing) and the thing of which he is politically and of kind the Imperial Eſtate and Sovereignty. Popery Imperial on our part is to the Pope his Kingdom, Intereſt and Eſſence Imperial; and with due limitation of Senſe it muſt be ſaid, that Chriſtianity and Sanctity on our part is unto Chriſt and unto God his Kingdom, Intereſt and Eſſence Imperial; thereby he is actually in his Imperial Eſtate and hath the Glory of the Kingdom, enjoyeth and exerciſeth his Sovereign Prerogatives, ruleth and reigneth, adminiſtreth Government, and receiveth the Tribute of Honour and Service according to the mode of Society and Polity. And this ſtate of things is ſuch an Eſſence or Being Imperial, as Imperial Eſtates have in Society and Polity. His being actually Imperial ſocietively and politically is actual Sanctity Imperial on our part; and his being jurally Imperial (ſocietively and politically) which is his eſſential right and due, is Sanctity Imperial on our part by way of Law and Obligation. God is therefore fitly denominated The Sanctity Imperial (the Sovereignty that is Sanctity Imperial) for many reaſons, and he ought to be ſo denominated for theſe additional reaſons.

(1.) To ſignifie what a God-kind of Sovereignty is true or falſe; for the Empire of ſuch a Sovereignty is conſtituted an Empire (an Imperial Polity) by a Religion or a Sanctity. An Imperial Polity may be Religious, yet not an Imperial Polity of Religion ſtrictly ſo called; for ſuch it is not, unleſs a Religion maketh it a Polity. Livy ſaith of Rome Pagan, Nulla unquam Reſpublica vel major vel ſanctior, never was there a Republick of more Greatneſs or of greater Sanctity. If we ſuppoſe the Roman Empire, to have been of this Character, it was a Religious Imperial Polity, yet a Religion did not make it a Polity; it was but a Civil kind of Polity (which muſt be Religious) not a Polity conſtituted ſuch by Religion, which is God-ſociety. But the Pagans Imperial Polity was no Civil kind of Polity, it was an Imperial Polity made ſuch by a Religion (called Religio deorum immortalium:) The Muhammedan Empire is an Imperial Polity of Religion (made by a Religion called Iſlamiſmus;) ſuch is the Chriſtian and ſuch is the Papal Empire; but the Judaical Polity was of both kinds, both a Civil kind of Polity and an Imperial Polity of Religion made by the Religion of Judaiſm. (s) Iſrael was in the ſtate of Society with God both as a Civil-ſocietive King, and as the King of an Imperial Polity of Religion (ſo God was to them a God, and they were to him a People,) which is the Nature and Conſtitution of the Holy Empire. It is an Imperial Polity made ſuch by a Religion or Sanctity.

(s) V. Spencer. diſſ. de Theocrat. Jud. c. 1.

(2.) To ſignifie what his God-kind of Sovereignty is, that it is the genuine Saint of God-kind of Sovereignty and the true Sanctity Imperial. All Religions have their Saintiſts real or imaginary; and if Satan's Empire is an Imperial Polity of Religion, he hath his Saintiſts and his Sanctity, ſuch as the Pagan Theologers magnifie. (t) Κεφάλαιον τῆς ἀρετῆς, ἡ περὶ θεοὺς ὁσιότης, The Head of Virtues is Sanctity about the Gods. The Pagans Religion was an Inſtitution of their Sanctity Imperial.

(t) Gale in Jambl. p. 280.

(3.) To ſignifie, that he is on his part ſuch Sanctity Imperial, which peculiarly belongeth to the Imperial and Governing Party; whereas Sanctity Imperial on our part is ſuch as belongeth to the Subject and Servient Party, which is thus defin'd by Clemens, (u) ὁσιότης ἡ θεραπεία τοῦ θεοῦ, Sanctity is the worſhip of God.

(u) Strom. l. 4. p. m. 3[illegible]

VII. God muſt be definitively denominated The Sanctity Vital; for Vital Sanctity is The Divine Vital Nature, The Saint of God-kind of Nature, The God-kind of Nature; therefore he is Vital Sanctity it ſelf (or Vital Sanctity primary, original, eſſential and in infinite fulneſs) as his kind of conſtitutive Nature and Eſſence. Our uſual Theology reckoneth Life amongſt the Attributes of God, and is careful, to inform us, that God is alive and living; but proceedeth not to conſider, what kind of Life it is, that God is and liveth, which is a monſtrous defect in Theology. Many Scholaſtick Divines allow not Sanctity a place amongſt the Divine Attributes (which they treat of,) it is not reckon'd one of the Number, nor maketh a Figure in their Accounts of the Divine Eſſence and Attributes; yet ſome of theſe (in tranſitu and by the way) have ſpoken excellent things touching the holy Life of God. (w) The Divinity is Grace it ſelf, or Sanctity, whereby God is Holy. The Divinity is Sanctity it ſelf. Man is gilded; God is Gold: That which is Grace in Man, is Nature in God. The Schools commonly ſay, (x) Sanctifying Grace (Vital Sanctity) is a participation of the Divine Nature. The Divine Nature is neceſſarily the Divine Vital Nature (as the Animal Nature is neceſſarily the Animal-vital Nature,) which muſt be Vital Sanctity, if Vital Sanctity in Man is a participation of it. Where there is ſomething of Grace and Holineſs, there is ſomething of God; if there be nothing of Grace and Holineſs in a Man, there is nothing of God (no God-kind of thing, nothing of that which is of God as to kind and quality;) therefore Vital Sanctity is his proper kind of thing, and that which he of proper kind is, as Chriſt is Vital Chriſti-

(w) Divinitas ipſa gratia eſt, ſive ſanctitas, qua Deus ſanctus eſt. Petav. T. 4. par. [illegible] c. 7. S. 4. Divinitas ipſa ſanctitas eſt. Ibid. p. 134. Homo deauratus eſt: Deus aurum eſt; quod in homine gratia eſt, in Deo natura eſt. Idem de Trin. l. [illegible] c. 4. S. 10.

(x) Gratia ſanctificans eſt divinæ naturæ participatio. Aquin. 122. Qu. 110. Art. 3. Conc. Clyp. Theol. Thom. T. [illegible] p. 632.

Chriſtianity. In making us Holy, he maketh us partakers of his Holineſs; therefore he is Holineſs (without want of Holineſs) in himſelf and to us. (y) Sibi qui eſt ipſa ſanctitas, quodammodo ſimiles nos reddit: He maketh us in ſome ſort like himſelf, who is Holineſs it ſelf. He is Holineſs, as he is of God-kind and quality (as a Saint of God is holy, as he is of Saint of God-kind and quality,) whence Grace and Holineſs is look'd upon by Divines as another kind of Communication than common Excellencies, and as ſuch is uſually called a Stream from that Fountain, a Beam from that Sun, Light and Life flowing from that Eternal Light and Life, the beaming forth of his Glory, a Sparkle of the Divinity, the Radiancy of the Divinity, a Ray of his Eternal Excellency. The holy Vitaliſts are peculiarly thoſe that are of God originally, and of Kind, Quality and Family; they are of his Family, his Children and Sons, and are born and begotten of him in reſpect of their Vital Sanctity; therefore he is the Holy and Divine Vitaliſt, who is Vital Sanctity. Becauſe they are come out of their Vital Carnality and Wickedneſs, and dwell in Vital Sanctity, Holineſs and Godlineſs, therefore they are ſaid, to dwell in God and to have God dwelling in them; which ſpeaketh him, to be Vital Sanctity in himſelf and to us. And as he is the Original, ſo he is the Pattern and Exemplar of Holy Vitaliſts and of Vital Sanctity: For the buſineſs and deſign of true Religion is our Aſſimilation to God (ὁμοίωσις Θεῷ) ſuch an Aſſimilation (z) which conſiſteth in being Holy as he is Holy. He is the Archetype according to which the Holy Vitaliſts (who are Tranſcripts from that Divine Copy) are moulded and faſhion'd; (a) every ſanctify'd Soul is ἄγαλμα θεῖον ϗ Θεῷ προσεμφερὲς, a Divine Statue like unto God; and it is Vital Sanctity that conſtituteth ſanctify'd Souls; this therefore is the Nature of God. The holy Vitaliſts as ſuch are his live Images, as Children are of a Father. Children have (b) ὁμοιότητα φυσικήν, a ſimilitude of Nature to their Father; therefore the Divine Vital Nature which is in the Regenerate Children of God, is likeneſs to God (to his Divine Vital Nature;) their Child of God-kind of Nature being his Vital Image and Effigies, ſheweth, that Vital Sanctity is the Nature of God as his kind of Nature, and that Holineſs and Godlineſs is his kind of thing, as the Orientals mode of ſpeaking implieth; for when any one hath put on Holineſs and Godlineſs, he is ſaid to be (c) Indutus Deo, one that hath put on God. If God is not devoid of the only true and genuine kind of Virtue, he muſt be Vital Sanctity; his Virtue muſt be of the ſame legitimate kind with that of his Regenerate Children; ſo far we muſt grant what Cicero and others affirm, (d) Virtus eadem in Homine ac in Deo eſt, Virtue is the ſame in Man and in God. If Holineſs was not his Specific Nature, Holineſs in Man could not be a participation of the Divine Nature, no more than the deriving common Excellencies and Perfections from God (Arts, Parts and Power) is a participation of it. Theſe are the Vile and Godleſs kind of Goods and Excellencies (dona Dei ſine Deo,) that are on this ſide Sanctity and Godlineſs (which is Godlikeneſs;) they are no Saint of God-kind of Goods and Excellencies; and if they cannot conſtitute a Saint of God, they cannot conſtitute him a God. His being God implieth, that he is his own kind of Goods and Excellencies as ſuch, the Holy and Divine kind of Goods and Excellencies (as Chriſt is the Chriſtian kind of Goods and Excellencies,) which alone are the choice kind of Goods and Excellencies and of ineſtimable Pretioſity. The Humane and Mundane kind of Goods and Excellencies (without the Sovereign and Peerleſs Excellencies that are in Sanctity) can make no Man truly excellent; they are vile in themſelves, and they ſave none from their Vileneſs; but they that have them are the Vile Perſons (for the Unholy are the Vile, of vile Eſtimation not of Pretioſity,) and though they ſpeak with the Tongues of Men and Angels, yet in juſt valuation and in God's account they are nothing, 1 Cor. 13. 1, 2. None can be unvile till they be ſanctify'd; therefore a God muſt be Vital Sanctity, and he muſt be ſo of proper kind.

His Vital Sanctity of proper kind ſuch appeareth from his vital (and therefore deadly) antipathy againſt all Sin and Wickedneſs (and the wicked ſinning kind;) and from theſe Scriptural Notices, that God is Light (the Light that Vital Sanctity is, 1 Joh. 2. 9, 10, 11.) and God is Love, the holy Love-nature and Practice. God is Love as his kind of Nature and Eſſence, and in ſuch ſenſe Love is God, (e) as S. Auſtin affirmeth. As it is in God, it is αὐτὸς ὁ Θεός, God himſelf, that which he of proper kind is (and therefore characteriſtical and diſtinctive of him;) and this Love in Man is ſo far God, as is ſomething of that which he is as his proper kind of thing, as the Apoſtle plainly declareth, 1 Joh. 4. 7, 8. Beloved, let us love one another, for Love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God (he is an Alien) for God is Love. The Love that God of proper kind is, is neceſſarily the God-kind, the Saint of God-kind of Love, the ſame kind of Love which dwelleth in regenerate Souls, and which is Divine Charity, (f) the ſame thing with Vital Sanctity; for Vital Sanctity (poſitively) is the pure ſinleſs kind of Love, that knoweth no Evil, but is perfectly oppoſite thereto. God is therefore Vital Sanctity, becauſe he is the holy kind of Love, which is his proper Vital Species, Specific Nature and Difference, his Divine kind of Nature (the God-kind of Nature) and the Divine Family's Nature (their kind of Nature,) which conſtituteth, denominateth and diſtinguiſheth thoſe that are of that Family, the holy Angels from the Devils, the Saints above from the Infernal Ghoſts (without it the Saints would be Devils,) and if God himſelf was devoid of it, he would be a Godleſs kind of God, a vile and villainous kind of Being and indeed an Almighty Devil. The Divine Charity (the Life of Grace and Holineſs) is in Man, (g) Pulchritudo animæ, the Pulchritude of the Soul (perfect Love is perfect Lovelineſs) God is therefore Vital Sanctity as his Divine Beauty. And he is it as his Divine Luminouſneſs and Clarity; (h) for he that is regenerate, is always in the Light. Do you not think, that he is in the Light, who hath Chriſt's Charity abiding in him? whence the Apoſtle Paul knew no Night? By this Apoſtle Vital Sanctity (both as it is in God and in Man) is called the Life of God, and the Schools ſay, It is both the Life of Grace and of Glory. (i) Grace is nothing elſe but a certain Inchoation of Glory in us. As it is in the Saints of God it is a Divine Nature

diſtinct

(h) Qui renatur, ſemper in luce eſt, an tibi non videtur in luce, qui Chriſti in ſe continet charitatem? unde nec Paulus Apoſtolus noctem ſciebat. S. Ambroſ. Enar. in Pſal. 43

(i) Gratia nihil aliud eſt quam quædam inchoatio gloriæ in nobis. Aquin. 22æ. Qu. 24. Art. 3.

(y) Piſcator in Heb. 12. 10.

1 Joh. 3. 9, 10. and 4. 6. and 5. 19. Joh. 1. 13. 1 Joh. 3. 9. and 2. 29. and 5. 1. 18. 1 Joh. 3. 24. and 4. 15, 16.

(z) Annot. in Boeth. de Conſ. Phil. p. 35, &c.

(a) Clem. Strom. l. 7. p. m. 529.

(b) Procl. in Tim. p. [illegible]

(c) [illegible] p. 27. [illegible]

(d) [illegible] Not. in Orig. c. Cels. p. 52.

[illegible] in Dei [illegible] Lactant.

Pſal. 15. 4. 1 Tim. 1. 9. 2 Tim. 3. 2.

1 Joh. 1. 5. and 4. 16.

(e) De Verb. Apoſt. Ser. 13.

(f) V. Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 12. S. 5. & 10.

(g) S. Aug. Expoſ. in Ep. 1. Johan. Tr. 9.

diſtinct from their human Nature; and as it is in God, it muſt be conſider'd as his Divine vital Eſſence diſtinct from his Metaphyſical or Scholaſtick Eſſence; for as the Nature of a Saint is of a twofold conſideration, ſo is the Eſſence of God. If in our accounts of his Eſſence and Attributes we attribute to him no other Wiſdom and Goodneſs but what is on this ſide vital Sanctity, we attribute to him nothing more than the Fool's kind of Wiſdom, and nothing better than the bad kind of Goodneſs. God can be no leſs holy than the holy Spirit, of whom S. Baſil ſaith, (k) τῷ μὲν φύσις ἡ ἁγιωσύνη, his Nature is Sanctity; and therefore he is not of a Nature that can fall and change. In the three Hypoſtaſes (of Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt) ὁ κατὰ φύσιν ἁγιασμὸς θεωρεῖται, we contemplate Sanctity which is by Nature, and which is not ἐπιγεννηματική, additional to Nature and Eſſence. We may add, that in God vital Sanctity is Sempiterna Vitalitas, Sempiternal Vitality, and that thoſe holy Souls, in which it reſideth, have eternal Life abiding in them.

VIII. God who is of proper kind (or in reſpect of his Idea as Specific) the Sanctity Imperial, and the Sanctity Vital, is alſo the Sanctity Imperial-perſonal, and muſt be ſo denominated becauſe of the Holineſs of his Name, which is the moſt celebrated and illuſtrious, and yet the moſt obſcure of all his Attributes. Nor is it only obſcure in the common Senſe of Language (becauſe it is of difficult Contemplation,) but in the Senſe of Nobility-Learning; for although in the Scripture-Theology it is of all the Divine Attributes the moſt illuſtrious and refulgent, yet there is little appearance of it in the Theology of the Chriſtian Church, nor hath it made any great figure in it ever ſince the Apoſtles times; which muſt be attributed to the indiſcreet Introduction of the Pagan Scholaſticiſm into the Church. The ancient Fathers knew little of it, the Schoolmen treat not of it, Divines uſually (although they treat of the Divine Eſſence and Attributes) either take no notice of it, or if any take notice of it, they have no notion of it, or fall ſhort of the true notion of it, as the Hebrew Doctors do at a great rate. For they ſay; (l) The Epithet Holy ſignifieth him, to be more Holy and Sublime than that any of the Properties of the Creatures can be apply'd to him, and if he be called by them, it is improperly and metaphorically. Therefore Iſaiah heard it innumerable times ingeminated Holy, Holy, Holy, Iſa. 6. 3. The Reaſon is, becauſe he is ſo Holy and Sublime, that no Pollution of that People, among whom his glory dwelleth, can reach him. But this cannot be the Holineſs of the Name of God; and therefore this Notion of the Rabbins is like themſelves alien and afar off. They add, that by the Epithet Holy is ſignified that which is Spiritual, wherein there can be nothing of corporeity, and in which there is nothing of thoſe things, which are in Bodies, as our wiſe Men ſay. Their great concern is to remove from God all corporeity, and therefore they preſcribe to their Devotioniſts, (m) to exalt, ſanctifie and magnifie him from every thing corporeal; as if Incorporeity or Spirituality in the common Philoſophical Senſe, which is not properly a Divine Attribute (being common to created Spirits both good and bad) was the ſame with the Holineſs of God. With this Attribute ſome Divines are ſo unacquainted, that they have no Notion at all of the Holineſs of the Name of God (as it muſt be called for diſtinction ſake,) but confound it with vital Sanctity thus defining it. (n) It is the infinite rectitude and perfection of the Will of God, whereby he doth Will and Work all things ſuitable to the infinite Excellency of his own Being. Others have ſome Notion of this Divine Attribute, but it is ſcarce better than none at all. (o) A thing is ſaid to be Holy, when it is ſeparated from common uſe to the ſervice of God. In this regard the Lord our God is Holy; for from all Eternity he was ſeparated from all other Objects to himſelf, to love himſelf, to take delight in himſelf. God is dedicated to himſelf from everlaſting, he is all for himſelf. This rude miſtaken Idea of this Divine Attribute may contribute (in ſome degree) to a right interpretation of the meaning of others in their definitive Notices of it. (p) The Holineſs of the firſt Being conſiſteth in his ſeparation from all Creatures by that Tranſcendency which maketh him their End. (q) Sanctitas divina ſignificat tranſcendentiſſimam ejus excellentiam & magiſtatem ejus eſſentialem. (r) He is called Holy, as he is tranſcendently above and ſeparated from all the Creatures, in compariſon of whom the Heavens are not clean, and from whom all things ſtand at an infinite diſtance. Theſe definitive Notices are rather a general Idea of God than juſt Notices of his Holineſs. But others have made a greater approach to the true notion of it. (s) The word Holy us'd concerning God often ſignifieth the ſame with auguſt, venerable, inviolable, as other learn'd Men have obſerv'd before us. Which ſignification it hath eſpecially in ſuch places, where God is called, not ſimply Holy, but the holy One of ſome other, as for inſtance of Iſrael, which Name is given him as often elſewhere, ſo moſt often in Iſaiah. The holy One of Iſrael therefore ſeemeth to ſignifie the auguſt and venerable Numen of Iſrael, glorious and full of Majeſty. Whence one of the Modern Interpreters rendreth it more than once the auguſt One of Iſrael. So Habakkuk calleth him his holy One, that is, his only colendous and venerandous One. In the ſame ſignification the word ſeems to be taken, when in Scripture often the Name of God is ſaid to be Holy, ſo that holy Name is the ſame with auguſt and venerandous. (t) The word Holy denoteth that Majeſty, which is conſpicuous in all kind of Excellence, namely, in the higheſt Wiſdom and Power, and ſupreme Dominion over all, whence God is worthy of all kind of Praiſe and Worſhip. So that Holy is often the ſame with Great, verendous and venerandous. Which kind of Holineſs the ſacred Writers attribute to God, when they call him the holy One of Iſrael, or his Name Holy. For the holy One of Iſrael is the ſame with that venerandous Numen of his, who alone was to be worſhipped by Iſrael. And the Name of God is called Holy, becauſe it is to be in- vok'd

(k) C. Eunom. l. 3. p. 81, 83.

(m) Coſri p. 181.

(n) Mr. Jer. Burroughs Ser. on Exod. 1. 5.

(o) Mr. Larkham of the Attrib. p. 48.

(p) Mr. Baxter Reaſ. of the Chriſt Rel. Par. 1. c. 5.

(q) Idem Meth. Theol. Par. 1. c. 2. p. 39.

(r) Idem of the Knowledge of God. c. 8.

(s) Crellius de Deo & ejus Attribut. c. 25.

(l) קדש Sanctus cognomen eſt, quo ſignificatur Ipſum Sanctiorem eſſe & Sublimiorem, quàm ut proprietas aliqua creaturarum ei adæquari poſſit, & ſi illis appellctur, id fieri per tranſlationem ſeu metaphoricè. Ideo audivit Eſaias innumeris vicibus ingeminari Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus. Eſa. 6 3. Ratio, quia ipſe Sanctior & Sublimior eſt, quàm ut immunditia aliqua populi illius inter quos gloria ejus habitat, eum poſſit comprehendere. Hinc vidit eum ſuper ſolio excelſo & elevato. Ver. 1. Per τὸ קדש Sanctus enim intelligitur Spiritualis, qui non poteſt incorporari, & in quo nihil eorum exiſtit, quæ in corporibus exiſtunt, ut ſapientes noſtri aiunt. Coſri p. 263, 264. Hotting. diſſ. de Nom. Dei or. p. 327.

(t) Ea voce intelligitur Majeſtas illa, quæ in omni excellentiæ genere, ſumma ſcilicet in ſapientia, & potentia, ſummaque in omnia dominio cernitur. Quibus rebus fit, ut Deus omni laudis genere, omnique cultu dignus ſit. Ut ſanctum idem ſæpe valeat quod magnum, verendum & venerandum. Quale autem Sanctitatis genus Deo tribuunt Scriptores ſacri, quoties eum ſanctum Iſraelis, nomenve ejus ſanctum vocant. Nam ſanctus Iſraelis idem valet quod venerandum Numen ejus, qui Iſraeli unicê colendus erat. Denique nomen ſanctum dicitur, ut ſummâ reverentiâ invocandum. Id quod docet Davidis illud, confiteantur nomini tuo magno, quoniam terribile & ſanctum eſt. Quo in loco ſanctum idem eſt, quod venerandum & laude dignum.

um. Dr. Outram de Sacrific. c. 1.

vok'd with the higheſt Reverence. As we learn from that of David, let them Praiſe thy great Name, for it is terrible and holy. Where Holy is the ſame with venerandous and worthy of all praiſe. But although this account of the Holineſs of God is in ſome degree commendaable, yet there are many defects in it (for it doth not explicate the Nature of Sanctity in general, not clearly diſtinguiſh the ſeveral kinds of it, nor the ſeveral acceptations of the Epithet Holy,) it only maketh a Lexicographer-like Interpretation of the word Holy, and this Interpretation is not very rightly made; for the Epithet Holy cannot ſignifie meerly auguſt, venerandous, colendous, but neceſſarily ſignifieth religiouſly venerandous and colendous.

A Divine of our own (in a Diatriba written on purpoſe) thus explicateth the Notion of the Holineſs of God, and of ſanctifying his Name. He obſerveth from the Hebrew Doctors (u) that every word of Sanctity imports a thing ſeparated or divided from other things by way of Exaltation and Pre-eminence. “ From the “ Scripture-notices of the holy Oyl, the holy “ Perfume, the holy People, this he obſerveth, “ that to be ſacred or holy, is to be ſeparated “ or ſet apart from other things by way of “ Excellence, or which is all one, to be ſet in “ ſome State of Singularity or Appropriatedneſs, “ whereby it is advanc'd above the com- “ mon condition of things of the ſame order. “ If Sanctity or Holineſs be a condition of “ diſcretion and diſtinction from other things, “ to ſanctfie, muſt either be, to put a thing in- “ to that State (which we call to Conſecrate,) “ or if it be ſuch already, to uſe and do unto “ it, as becometh the Sanctity thereof, that is, “ Habere cum diſcrimine, to put a difference be- “ tween it and other things by way of Ex- “ cellency or in a dignifying wiſe, by appro- “ priating it and ſevering it in the uſe there- “ of from things of ordinary and common “ Rank: Or which is all one, to uſe it ſingu- “ larly, appropriately, and in a word uncom- “ monly. Holineſs, which is original, abſo- “ lute and eſſential in God, is nothing elſe but “ the incommunicable Eminency of the Divine “ Majeſty, exalted above all and divided from “ all other ἀξιώματα, or Eminences whatſoever. “ For that which a Man taketh to be, and “ maketh account of as his God, he aſcribeth “ unto it in ſo doing a condition of Eminency “ above, and diſtinct from all other Eminences “ whatſoever, that is of Holineſs. Hence it “ cometh, that we find the God of Iſrael in “ Scripture ſo often ſtiled the holy One of “ Iſrael, that is, Iſrael's moſt eminent and “ incommunicable one, or which is all one, his “ God. Thus as Holineſs in general imports “ a State of Eminency and Separation, ſo this “ of God diſagreeth not from that general No- “ tion; for it conſiſteth in a State of Peerleſs “ incommunicable Majeſty. But would you “ underſtand it yet better? Apply it then to “ his Attributes, whereby he is known unto “ us, and know, that the Lord is Holy, is as “ much as to ſay, he is a Majeſty of peerleſs “ Power, of peerleſs Wiſdom, of peerleſs Good- “ neſs, and ſo of the reſt. Such a one is our “ God, and ſuch is his Holineſs. Now, to “ ſanctifie this peerleſs Name or Majeſty of his, “ muſt be by doing unto him, according to “ that which his Holineſs challengeth in reſpect “ of the double importance thereof; namely, “ to ſerve and glorifie him becauſe of his E- “ minency; and to do it with a ſingular, ſe- “ parate and incommunicated Worſhip, becauſe “ he is Holy. Not to do the former, is Irre- “ ligion and Atheiſm, as not acknowledging “ God to be the chief and Sovereign Eminency: “ Not to obſerve the ſecond, is Idolatry. For “ as the Lord our God is a ſingular and peer- “ leſs Majeſty, diſtinguiſh'd from and exalted “ above all things and eminences elſe whatſo- “ ever: So muſt his Worſhip be ſingular, in- “ communicable, and proper to him alone. “ Thoſe who communicate the Worſhip given un- “ to him, with any beſides him, are deemed to “ deny his incomparable Sanctity, and there- “ fore are ſaid to Prophane his holy Name. In “ a word, all that whole immediate Duty and “ Service which we owe unto God, whether “ inward or outward, contain'd under the “ Name of Divine Worſhip (when either we “ confeſs, praiſe, pray unto, call upon or ſwear “ by his Name,) yea all the Worſhip both of “ Men and Angels, is nothing elſe but to ac- “ knowledge in Thought, Word and Work “ this peerleſs pre-eminence of his Power, of “ his Wiſdom, of his Goodneſs and other At- “ tributes, that is, his Holineſs, by aſcribing “ and giving unto him that which we aſcribe “ and give to none beſides him, that is, to “ ſanctifie his moſt holy Name. The ſumm of “ all that the four animalia did in ſinging the “ Triſagium Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God Almighty, “ was but to agnize his Sanctity or Holineſs.

(u) Mr. Mede on Matth. 6. 9.

IX. In this large Explication of the Holineſs of God and of ſanctifying his Name there are many and great miſtakes, ſome of which will be mention'd hereafter, at preſent we will remark theſe following.

(1.) This Explication confoundeth Sanctity and Sacredneſs, which are ſo diſtinct, that they are really ſeparable; for in all Kingdom-eſtates amongſt Men the imperial Perſon is in ſome degree conſecrate, ſacred, inviolable: But in the Kingdom-eſtate of God the imperial Perſon is not only conſecrate, ſacred, inviolable, but this Sacredneſs is complicated with Sanctity of the imperial Honour-perſon, of which there is nothing in human imperial Eſtates.

(2.) In this Explication the definitive Notion of Sanctity is not commenſurate to the thing defin'd. For if Sanctity doth conſiſt in Diſcretion and Diſtinction from other things by way of Exaltation and Pre-eminence, there can be no ſuch Species of Sanctity as Sanctity vital. But notwithſtanding this Objection the Author of this Explication affirmeth, that all Notions of Sanctity and Sanctification in Scripture are deriv'd from Diſcretion and Separation, and that this now mention'd is likewiſe deriv'd thence. For it is a requiſite of that which is Holy, to be uſed in a peculiar and ſingular manner, and not as things common. Hence it is, that the obſervation of that peculiar and different form of Life, which God hath commanded thoſe whom he hath called and ſet apart from the World unto himſelf, in Scripture carrieth the Name of Holineſs or Sanctity. But this Anſwer is extremely inſufficient; for the vital Sanctity of holy People is not only a different form of Living, but a new Nature, which is in its own Nature vital Sanctity, as corrupt Nature is vital Carnality and Wickedneſs. The one is vital foulneſs, ſordidneſs, horridneſs: The other is the pure and immaculate kind of Love, a vital purity, brightneſs and beauteouſneſs (perfectly oppoſite to all Wickedneſs,) which as ſuch is vital Sanctity. So purity of Heart as ſuch is vital Sanctity; ſo the Divine Nature in God (which is not a peculiar and different form of Life, that God hath commanded thoſe whom he hath called) is Original and Eſſential Sanctity (vital,) and the exemplar thereof. Sanctity therefore muſt be diſtinguiſh'd into Sanctity of Purity and Sanctity of Dignity. The holy Life and Nature is Sanctity of Purity: The State of Sanctity which God's People are in, and the Holineſs of the Name of God is Sanctity of Dignity. From which legitimate diſtribution of Sanctity it appeareth, that Sanctity in general is not a diſcretion from other things by way of Exaltation and Pre-eminence. This cannot be the definitive Notion thereof, if there be any ſuch Species of Sanctity as Sanctity of Purity.

(3.) As this definitive Notion of Sanctity is too narrow, to be the definition of Sanctity in general, becauſe it comprehendeth not that eminent Species thereof Sanctity of Purity: So it is too looſe and general to be the definitive Notion of that other Species of Sanctity, which is Sanctity of Dignity, and therefore it is not the definition either of Sanctity in general, or of any one Species thereof. For there are innumerable things and Perſons in common civil Society (which is on this ſide Sanctity) that have a diſcretion and diſtinction from other things and perſons by way of Exaltation and Pre-eminence, and which are ſeparated and ſet apart from others by way of Excellence. All Gentlemen, Noblemen, Magiſtrates, Judges, Kings eſpecially, their Life, Honour, Diadems, Edicts, Palaces (and many other things appertaining to them which in the declining time of the Empire were called ſacred) have a diſcretion and ſeparation from other things and perſons by way of Excellence and Exaltation. Their diſcretion and diſtinction is from common (vulgar) things and perſons in a dignifying wiſe, they are in a State of Singularity or Appropriatedneſs, they muſt be us'd ſingularly, appropriately, uncommonly (which is habere cum diſcrimine, to ſever them in the uſe of them from things of ordinary and common Rank,) and if this be not Sanctity, it cannot be legitimately defin'd meerly by a diſcretion and diſtinction from other things (which may be called common without relating to Religion) by way of Excellence and Pre-eminence. Things and perſons may be put into a State and Condition of Diſcretion and Diſtinction from others of ordinary and common Rank without any thing of Sanctity or Sanctification in the Scripture-Notion thereof. R. Kimchi's definition therefore (as Mr. Mede calleth it) is not the definitive Notion of Sanctity: Nor is it ſafe, to rely upon the Authority of a Rabbi; for he is not ordinarily a Man of any great depth and reach of Thought.

(4.) From the Holineſs of the holy People and holy Things it cannot be inferr'd, that the Holineſs of God conſiſteth meerly in being diſcriminated from and exalted above all: But the contrary muſt be inferr'd; for the Holineſs of the holy People and the holy things doth not conſiſt meerly in being diſcriminated from and exalted above all. The holy People are a People ſeparated and ſet apart (a peculiar People,) they are in a State of Diſcretion, Diſtinction and Separation: But their Holineſs doth not conſiſt meerly in a State of Diſtinction and Separation from other People, but in being ſeparated and ſet apart for God, to be unto him a People, for God to Poſſeſs, Uſe and Enjoy, according to that uſual Maxim quicquid ſanctum eſt, Deo ſanctum eſt, whatever is Holy, is Holy unto God. Ye ſhall be Holy unto me; for I have ſevered you from other People, that ye ſhould be mine. Lev. 20. 24, 26. The holy People are in a State of Exaltation and Pre-eminence above other People: But their Holineſs doth not conſiſt in a meer Exaltedneſs and Pre-eminence above other People: But in being the peculiar People of God, which is an eſpecial kind of Exaltedneſs and Pre-eminence above other People. Deut. 26. 18, 19. The Lord hath avouch'd thee this day to be his peculiar People, —— and to make thee high above all Nations in Praiſe, in Name and in Honour, and that thou mayeſt be an holy People unto the Lord thy God. The holy People therefore are diſcriminated from and exalted above all People: But meerly in this their Holineſs doth not conſiſt; if it did, the old Romans muſt rather be intituled the holy People than the old Iſrael of God. The ſame account muſt be given of the Holineſs of things (of the holy Oyl, the holy Perfume) as of Perſons; they were diſcriminated from and exalted above all other things of the ſame Name: But meerly in this their Holineſs did not conſiſt; therefore the Holineſs of God doth not conſiſt meerly in being diſcriminated from and exalted above all.

(5.) To prove, that the Holineſs of God conſiſteth meerly in being diſcriminated from and exalted above all, this Explication alledgeth a Reaſon, which is utterly devoid of Truth and Reaſon. The firſt Original or abſolute Holineſs (ſaith this Explication) is nothing elſe but the incommunicable Eminency of the Divine Majeſty, exalted above all, and divided from all other Eminences whatſoever. For that which a Man taketh to be, and maketh account of as his God (whether it be ſuch indeed, or by him fanſied only,) he aſcribeth unto it in ſo doing, a condition of Eminency above, and diſtinct from all other Eminences whatſoever, that is, of Holineſs. The ſenſe of this Propoſition is not, that whoſoever duly taketh the true God for his God, doth aſcribe unto him a condition of Eminency above and diſtinct from all other Eminences whatſoever (which is his Sovereignty in reality and in our due Eſtimation;) for this Senſe is not to the purpoſe of proving the foregoing Notion of the Holineſs of God, nor do the Terms of the Propoſition admit of this Senſe. But three things this Propoſition may be underſtood to affirm, which are groſly abſurd. Firſt, That whatever a Man taketh to be, and maketh account of as his God (whether it be ſuch indeed or by him fanſied only,) he aſcribeth unto it in ſo doing a condition of Eminency above and diſtinct from all other Gods whatſoever (which are Eminences real or fanſied,) ſo that there never was, nor can be, any ſuch thing as ſuppos'd ſubordinate Deities. Secondly, This Propoſition may be underſtood to affirm, that whatever a Man taketh to be, and maketh account of as his God (whether it be ſuch indeed, or by him fanſied only,) he aſcribeth unto it in ſo doing a condition of Eminency as to Honour and Worſhip above and diſtinct from all other Eminences whatſoever (or σεβάσματα,) ſo that there is no ſuch thing as a ſubordinate Religious Worſhip. Thirdly, This Propoſition plainly affirmeth, that Holineſs is the ſame thing with a condition of Eminence above and diſtinct from all other Eminences whatſoever; and that every Man who intentionally aſcribeth to any the Holineſs of a God and of his God, aſcribeth unto it in ſo doing doing intentionally a condition of Eminency above and diſtinct from all other Eminences whatſoever. So that if a Pagan did intentionally aſcribe unto any thing (an Onion or an Animal, an Hero or a Demon) the Holineſs of a God and of his God, he aſcribed unto it, in ſo doing, intentionally the Eminence and Tranſcendence of the ſupreme Jupiter.

Omnem Deum videri cultori ſuo magnum, tametſi ſolus Jupiter magnus ſit. Servius ap. Gale in Jambl. p. 222.

(6.) To be the Imperial Honour-perſon of God, is to be a ſingular and peerleſs Eminency diſtinguiſh'd from and exalted above all: But meerly to be a ſingular and peerleſs Eminency diſtinguiſh'd from and exalted above all, is not to be the Imperial Honour-perſon of God. The difference between theſe two Notions may be underſtood by comparing a Pagan Idol and a Pagan Emperour, the Babylonian Bel and the Babylonian Nebuchadnezzar. Each of theſe may be ſuppos'd to be within the compaſs and comprehenſion of the Babylonian Empire a ſingular and peerleſs Eminency diſtinguiſh'd from and exalted above all: But the one of them muſt be ſuppos'd, to be meerly a ſingular and peerleſs Eminency diſtinguiſh'd from and exalted above all, (ſuch was Nebuchadnezzar;) the other of them (Bel) muſt be ſuppos'd, to be a ſingular and peerleſs Eminency diſtinguiſh'd from and exalted above all, ſo as to be withall the Honour-perſon of a God (the Imperial Honour-perſon of a God) which is Sanctity and Holineſs of Honour-perſon. There is therefore a viſible difference between theſe two Notions: The Honour-perſon of God (the Imperial Honour-perſon of God) and a meer ſingular and peerleſs Eminency diſtinguiſh'd from and exalted above all. From whence it followeth, that this learned Divines Explication of the Holineſs of God is viſibly diſtant from the true Notion thereof. His Language alſo is ſometimes irreconcilable with tolerable good Senſe. For if Sanctity and peerleſs Eminency is the ſame thing, it is not proper to attribute to God incomparable Sanctity, becauſe incomparable peerleſs Eminencey is an inept Tautology. Yet this learned Divine (ſpeaking of God) ſaith; in Scripture thoſe who communicate the Worſhip given unto him with any beſides him, or together with him, by way of object, that is, whether immediately or but mediately, are deem'd to deny his incomparable Sanctity.

(7.) His Explication is not made out of Nobility-Learning, it doth not conſider God as an Honour and Eſtate of Nobilitation, whence the true Notion of his Holineſs is unavoidably loſt. Nor doth he underſtand his true Notices of God in the Senſe of Nobility-Learning; for he ſuppoſeth, that the Name of God (which is to be hallow'd) ſignifieth the Divine Majeſty, which Divine Majeſty ought to be conſider'd as the Divine Honour-perſon: But he doth not ſo conſider the Divine Majeſty, but only (in the Scholaſtick way) as the Majeſty that is of theſe Attributes peerleſs Wiſdom, Goodneſs and Power. So great an infelicity it is, not to be well acquainted with Nobility-Learning.

CHAP. VI.

1. The Firſt Illuſtration of this great Attribute the Holineſs of God is from the Name of God. 2. A Second Illuſtration of it from certain Notices of Honour and of Nobility-Learning. 3. A Third Illuſtration of it is from the Holy of Holies and his Honour-perſon that is ſo. 4. A Fourth Illuſtration of it is from an identity of Things and Expreſſions. 5. A Fifth Illuſtration of it is from the Pagan Theology and the agreement of the Scripture-Theology therewith. 6. A Sixth Illuſtration of it is from ſeveral ways of contemplating God. 7. A Confutation of the Reaſon which ſome aſſign, why God demandeth Honour from us.

I. IF the ancient Fathers were unacquainted with this Theory, if Divines of modern times that have attempted it (with great Learning) have miſtaken it, it muſt neceſſarily be a vaſtly abſtruſe and difficult Theory, which is the beſt Salvo for our Credit (that I know of,) who pretending to the Science of Theology have not yet been able, to give a good account of the firſt Petition of our Lord's Prayer, which cannot be underſtood without the true Notion of the Holineſs of God. To take away this reproach from Theology, and to finiſh our Explication of the Idea of God, we are oblig'd, to make a due Illuſtration of this illuſtrious Attribute Holy, and to ſhew that it denoteth that God of proper Kind and Quality is ſo as to the Honour and Nobilitation of his Imperial Perſon (or as an Honour-perſon,) and his being ſo is Sanctity Imperial-perſonal. The Firſt Illuſtration that we will make of this great Attribute, is from the Name of God (which we pray may be hallow'd;) his Name ſignifieth the Honour-perſon of God, his Imperial Honour-perſon. For there are three Significations of the word Name (and no more,) which appertain to the matter in hand. It ſignifieth the Perſon, the Honour, and (both in Conjunction) the Honour-perſon. Uſually it ſignifieth the Perſon (being underſtood ſubjectively, or ſignum is put pro ſignato,) as Act. 1. 15. the Number of the Names is the number of the Perſons. (w) Θηβαῖον ὄνομα, the Theban Name ſignifieth the Thebans, nomen Romanum, the Romans. So amongſt the Writers of the Latin Church (x) Latinum nomen, ſignifieth the Party of the Latines, Catholicum nomen, the Catholic Party. Agreeably whereunto S. Auſtin ſaith, (y) in nullum nomen Religionis coagulari poſſunt Homines, i. e. in nullam Religionem. So when the Scripture ſpeaketh of believing on the Name of Chriſt, of being reproach'd for the Name of Chriſt, and of calling upon his Name, the word Name ſignifieth the Perſon. Act. 4. 12. There is no other Name given amongſt Men, whereby we muſt be ſaved, that is, there is no other Saviour. So the Name of God ſignifieth the Perſon. Pſal. 8. 1. How excellent is thy Name in all the Earth? (Thou art excellent in thy Works throughout all the Earth.) Pſal. 7. 51. Thy Name is near. Pſal. 5. 11. Let them that love thy Name. Pſal. 44. 5. Through thee will we puſh down our Enemies, through thy Name will we tread them under. Mal. 1. 6. Wherein have we deſpis'd thy Name? The meaning whereof is thus expreſs'd in the next Verſe, wherein have we polluted thee?

(w) Voſſ. Inſtit. or. Par. 2. l. 4. c. 7. S. 11.

(x) Petav. T. 2. l. 7. c. 3. S. 1. & T. 4. Par. 1. l. 6. c. 4. S. 1.

(y) C. Fauſt. l. 19. c. 11.

Name ſignifieth the Honour and Dignity as well as the Perſon; and we have both theſe ſignifications, Phil. 2. 9,10. God hath highly exalted him and given him a Name, which is above every Name; that at the Name of Jeſus every Knee ſhould bow. The Name of Jeſus ſignifieth the Perſon of Jeſus. (z) When it is ſaid, Phil. 2. that at the Name of Jeſus every Knee ſhould bow, Name doth not ſignifie the word Jeſus, but by a Metonymy it ſignifieth Chriſt himſelf, as Theophylact, Theodoret and Oecumenius expound it. But when the Apoſtle ſaith, that God hath given him a Name, which is above every Name, the word Name ſignifieth Honour, Dignity, Eminence; as Eph. 20. 21. He hath ſet him on his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all Principality and Power, and Might and Dominion, and every Name that is named. (a) Beza in his Annotations upon ſeveral places of Scripture, that ſpeak of the exaltation of Chriſt above every Name, by Name underſtandeth Dignity. (b) Amongſt the Hebrews Name often ſignifieth Dignity. There are many names, that are not ὀνόματα κύρια ἀλλ᾽ ἀξιώματα, Proper Names but Dignities, which the Poets call magna nomina, great Names, (nomina magna fuge, magnum Reginæ nomen obumbrat,) and of ſuch a Name the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, when he ſaith of Chriſt, Heb. 1. 4. Being made ſo much better than the Angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent Name (Honour and Dignity) than they. So in Heraldry, the Dignity, State, Degree, the Name and Stile of Perſons of Honour are terms ſynonymous.

But oftentimes the Name doth not ſignifie meerly the Perſon, nor meerly the Honour, but in a third Acceptation both in conjunction, the Perſon as connoting the Honour, or the Honour as connoting the Perſon, The Honour-perſon. As amongſt Men theſe Names Lord, Prince, the King, his Majeſty, his Highneſs, his Honour (and ſuch more) denote the Honour and the Perſon in conjunction, and ſignifie the Honour-perſon. (c) So Excellentia tua pro te: Of this Nature is the Name of the Lord, which ſignifieth the Perſon of the Lord, that Honour-perſon (that Imperial Honour-Perſon) in the uſual Phraſe of the holy Writers; to call upon the Name of the Lord, to truſt in the Name of the Lord, to praiſe the Name of the Lord, to fear the Name of the Lord, the Name of the Lord cometh from far, Iſa. 30. 27. (d) Glorificemus te, O nomen Domini, let us glorifie thee, O Name of the Lord, ſaith Rupertus. So the Name of God ſignifieth the Honour-perſon of God (that Imperial Honour-perſon,) the Name of the God of Jacob defend thee, Pſal. 20. 4. Agreeably to the honourary Notion of theſe Names, his Name (ſimply and without addition) ſignifieth the Honour-perſon that he is in the uſual Language of the Holy Writers; to blaſpheme his Name, to pollute his Name, to prophane his Name, to ſwear by his Name, to glorifie his Name, to build an Houſe to his Name, for his Name to dwell there, which the Pſalmiſt calleth The place where his Honour dwelleth, Pſal. 26. 8. If his Name ſignifieth his Honour-perſon in the uſual Language of the Holy Scriptures, it muſt be more eſpecially of that honourary Notion in our Lord's Prayer, which ſpeaketh of his Name being honoured, and ſo honoured as to be holied. So the glorious Name, Pſal. 76. 29. The great Name, Jer. 44. 26. (e) The Jews השם the ſupereminent Name, Nomen benedictum, the bleſſed Name; Nomen excelſum, the high Name; and in like manner, Nomen ſanctum, the holy Name, do all of them denote The Honour-perſon (the Imperial Honour-perſon) that God is. There are other ſignifications of the word Name, which occurr in Scripture, touching which (becauſe they appertain not to the matter in hand) I will remark nothing, ſave only that the Name of Things and Perſons is their due Appellation; and ſo the word Name ſignifieth in that ſomewhat obſcure place, Pſal. 138. 2. Thou haſt magnify'd thy Word above all thy Name. The meaning is, that by his Power, Goodneſs and Faithfulneſs, which was conſpicuous in fulfilling his Word God had made it more illuſtrious than any thing that ought to be named of him, attributed to him, celebrated in him, than any of his other due Appellations.

II. A Second Illuſtration of this great Attribute Holy is from Notices of Honour and Nobility-Learning, which plainly ſhew, that this Attribute belongeth to God as an Honour-perſon, that it is of this meaning, He is holy as to his Honour and Nobilitation of Imperial Perſon, and is Sanctity Imperial-perſonal. For as a Lord, a Prince, a King, ſo a God muſt be conſider'd as of generical Notion an Honour and Eſtate of Nobilitation, Deus and Divus (according to the beſt Authors) are terms ſynonymous; and it is well known, that the Pagano-Chriſtians Divi are certain Honours and Nobilitations of Eſtate, into which deceaſed Men are created, and whereby they are ennobled. So the Gods in Paganiſm muſt be conſider'd as certain Honours, Dignities and Eſtates of Nobilitation, into which Men were created, and whereby they were ennobled. (f) The Roman Emperours (for the moſt part) before their ἀποθεώσεως, or Conſecration were but Mankind of Honours and Dignities; but by their Conſecration they were (aſcriptitiouſly) made the God-kind or the Religion-kind of Honours, Dignities and Eſtates of Nobilitation, and were therefore made Gods, becauſe they were made of Honour-perſon, the God-honours, and therefore Sanctities and Religions of Honour-perſon. A God therefore is a God-honour perſonal, to whom belongeth the God-honour real; for Honour is ſometimes of a Perſonal Acceptation (it denoteth a Perſon,) and ſometimes it denoteth the Thing, not a Perſon, as when Honour is ſaid to be given, received or ſought, when Wiſdom is ſaid to have in her Hand Riches and Honour, Honour ſignifieth in the real Acceptation. But ſometimes it ſignifieth in the perſonal Acceptation; as Gen. 49. 6. Unto their Aſſembly mine Honour be not thou united. Pſal. 26. 8. The place where thine Honour dwelleth. Of both theſe Acceptations is the God-honour, which is manifeſtly the ſame with the Holy Honour; therefore a God is an Holy Honour (or a God-Honour) perſonal, to whom the Holy Honour (or the God-honour) real appertaineth; and herein his being a God doth conſiſt. If he is not an Holy Honour (a God-honour) perſonal, he is not (although never ſo great) of kind and quality a God; and if he is of kind and quality a God, the holy Honour (or God-honour) real is his kind of thing, his God-kind of thing, and his Imperial kind of thing, of which he is politically and of kind the Imperial Eſtate and Sovereignty. Theſe Notices of Honour and Nobility-Learning plainly direct and guide us, to interpret the Attribute Holy, to ſignifie what God is as an Honour-perſon, an Imperial Honour-perſon; that his being God Imperial-perſonal is Sanctity Imperial-perſonal.

(z) Phil 2. Dum dicitur, In nomine Jeſu omne genu flectatur, per nomen non vox Jeſus, ſed per metonymiam figuram res ipſa, ſcil. Chriſtus intelligitur: ut explicant Theophylactus, Theodoretus & Oecumenius. Vaſqu. in 3. par. Th. T. 1. Diſp. 108. c. 11.

(a) Beza in annotationibus ad Eph. 1. 21. & Phil. 2. 9. de exaltatione Chriſti ſuper omne nomen, ut & Heb. 1. 9. nomen accipit ſignificatione Dignitatis & ἀξιώματος. Mr. Mede Clav. Apoc. ad c. 11. v. 13. vid. S. Chryſoſt. in Philip. Hom. 7.

(b) שם nomen apud Hebræos Dignitatem ſæpe ſignificat. Grot. Not. in Phil. 2. 9, 10.

(c) Buxtorf. Lex. Talm. col. 1612.

(d) Petav. T. 1. Proleg. c. 9. s. 8.

(e) P. F gius in Lev. 24. 11.

(f) Amt. in Mon. R. p. 215, 221.

A God is a Sanctity, Holineſs and Religion of Imperial Honour-perſon; for ſo the true God is intituled in Scripture his Holineſs Imperial-perſonal, or his Holineſs of Imperial Honour-perſon, Pſal. 30. 4. Give thanks at the remembrance of his Holineſs (Imperial-perſonal) God ſitteth upon the Throne of his Holineſs (Imperial-perſonal Holineſs, or of Majeſty) Pſal. 47. 8. In the Mountain of his Holineſs (of Imperial Honour-perſon) Pſal. 48. 1. In the Courts of my Holineſs (of Imperial-Honour-perſon.) Iſa. 62. 9. Behold from the Habitation of thy Holineſs (Imperial-perſonal.) Iſa. 63. 15. The People of thy (Imperial-perſonal) Holineſs. Iſa. 63. 18. Becauſe of the words of his (Imperial-perſonal) Holineſs, Jer. 23. 9. His being a God, is to be an Holineſs as to Honour and Nobilitation of Perſon. He cannot be a God, unleſs he is a God-honour (as an Honour-perſon) and this again is an Holineſs as to Honour and Nobilitation of Perſon: It is ſuch an Holineſs on his part, which requireth that Holineſs on our part, of which Clemens ſaith; (g) Juſtice being Humane is a common thing, and muſt be ſubjected to Sanctity, which is according to Divine Juſtice. As Sanctity on our part is our Ennoblement, and denoteth our Ennoblement; ſo it denoteth God's Ennoblement, and therefore denoteth what God is as to Honour and Nobilitation of Perſon. It denoteth his being a God as to Honour and Nobilitation of Perſon, and therefore muſt be look'd upon as the reſult of his other Attributes, and the ultimate complement of his Deity. So high an Eminence is this God-eminence.

A God as to his Nature muſt be what is Sanctity of Purity; and as to his Honour (or Honour-perſon) he muſt be what is Sanctity of Dignity. His being a God is Sanctity as to Honour and Dignity; for it is the God-Nobility (of kind ſuch,) which is the definitive Notion of Sanctity. His Imperial Majeſty therefore is not meer Imperial Majeſty, but his being a God is Sanctity or Holineſs of Imperial Majeſty and Honour; and this Holineſs is that which is plainly meant by this great Attribute his being Holy.

III. A Third Illuſtration of this great Attribute is from the Holy of Holies and the Honour-perſon that is ſo, for although Holineſs is the God-kind and therefore the Creature-tranſcendent kind of Excellence, Unvileneſs and Nobilitation, yet Creatures partake both of Sanctity of Purity and Sanctity of Dignity. Which latter ſort of Sanctity belongeth to all the Saints of God, who are in the ſtate of Sanctity and Holineſs, which is the God-kind of Honour and Nobilitation of Eſtate. God therefore the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial muſt be contemplated, both as to what he is comprehenſively, and what he is diviſively. As Chriſt the Imperial Eſtate of Chriſtianity Imperial muſt be contemplated both as to what he is comprehenſively, and what he is diviſively. And the Pope the Imperial Eſtate of Popery Imperial muſt be contemplated, both as to what he is comprehenſively and what he is diviſively. God being the Imperial Eſtate of the Specific Comprehenſion of Sanctity and Religion Imperial, he is to the Subjects of the Holy Empire the ſtate of Sanctity and Religion, and therefore is (ſo far and in ſuch ſenſe) the ſtate of Sanctity and Religion comprehenſively conſider'd and underſtood. And he is the ſtate of Sanctity and Religion diviſively conſider'd and underſtood, as being the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity and Religion contra-divided to the Creature and Subject-party of the Holy Empire. His being their God in State and Place, in Majeſty and Honour, is his being the Holy of Holies (Sanctus Sanctorum,) the Holy One of the Holy Ones, as this Name the Holy One of Iſrael (the holy People) denoteth and ſignifieth. His being therefore the Honour-perſon, that is, the Holy of Holies, is his being the Honour-perſon of their God, who is the Honour-perſon ſeparate and diſcriminated from all, and exalted above all, ſo as to be the God-kind (the Holy-kind) of Honour-perſon, whoſe Honour is the Holy-kind of Honour, whoſe Majeſty is the Holy-kind of Majeſty, whoſe Worſhip is the Holy-kind of Worſhip, whoſe honourary Name is the Holy-kind of honourary Name, who in all reſpects is to be ſo honoured, as to be holied, and who as to his Honour and Nobilitation of Imperial Perſon is what is Sanctity Imperial-perſonal. As the Holy of Holies he is the Honour-perſon of being Holy (or of Sanctity and Holineſs) in all reſpects as to Honour of Perſon; the Honour-perſon of Sanctity and Holineſs of Honour-perſon.

But becauſe the Holy of Holies (the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial) muſt be contemplated, both as to what he is comprehenſively and as to what he is diviſively; therefore Holineſs, which is the God-kind of Excellence or Unvileneſs, muſt be called (as it is) The uncommon kind of Excellence or Unvileneſs; and this muſt be diſtinguiſhed into that Excellence or Unvileneſs, which is meerly the uncommon, and that which is not only the uncommon but the incommunicable. Things and Perſons peculiarly dedicated, conſecrated and related to God, and which appertain to God-ſociety, are called The Holy (becauſe they are not without this uncommon kind of Excellence or Unvileneſs,) his People are the Holy People, his Day is the Holy Day, his Book is the Holy Bible; his Temple is the Holy Temple, the Utenſils of his Service are called Holy, his Worſhip is the Holy Worſhip, his Law is the Holy Law, his Government is the Holy Government, his Empire is the Holy Empire, his Covenant is the Holy Covenant. But although innumerable Things and Perſons are Holy, yet the Stile of God's Devotioniſts appropriateth this illuſtrious Epithet to him alone, Thou only art Holy; which is an attributing to him the God-honour and Excellence not only as it is the uncommon, but as it is the incommunicable; ſuch is the God-honour of the Holy of Holies. So many things fall under the Name of Sanctity, Holineſs and Religion; but in all Diſputes about Idolatry Religion uſually ſignifieth (in a ſtrict acceptation) The God-honour, not only as it is the uncommon, but the incommunicable. (h) You know, that the Religion of the Creature (the God-honouring it) is under a Curſe.

Apoc. 15. 4.

IV. A Fourth Illuſtration of this great Attribute is this Identity of Things and Expreſſions; The being God as to Honour and Worſhip is the ſame with being Holy or of Religion as to Honour and Worſhip. For this is one of the principal Do-

(g) Ἡ δικαιοσύνη ἀνθρωπίνη ἔστι, ὡς κοινότητι ὑποβέβληκε τῇ ὁσιότητι, κατὰ θείαν δικαιοσύνην παρεχέσῃ. Strom. l. 6. p. m. 487.

(h) Non ignoras quin in maledicto ſit religio creaturæ. S. Hilar. de Trinit. c. 8.

ctrines of the Bible, and a principal Article both in Judaiſm and Chriſtianity (which the Unity of the Godhead inferreth,) That the Worſhip and Service of Religion is due unto God and to him alone. (i) Religion is only the Worſhip of God. This we ſay, is due to that God only, who is the true God. The Religion of the Creature is therefore horrendouſly criminal, becauſe it is a making the Vile Creature the Honour-perſon of God: For if we ſay of a Lord or King, that he is Sanctity, Holineſs, Religion of Honour-perſon, thereby we affirm, that he is the God-honour Perſon. And if we ſay, that he is the God-honour Perſon, thereby we affirm, that he is Sanctity, Holineſs and Religion of Honour-perſon. None can be Religious as to Honour and Worſhip without being Holy as to Honour and Worſhip: None can be Holy as to Honour and Worſhip without being God as to Honour and Worſhip; for Sanctity, Holineſs and Religion as to Honour and Worſhip, and the being God as to Honour and Worſhip, are but two Expreſſions of one and the ſame thing. They are of the ſame ſenſe and meaning in the Stile of the Prophet, Habak. 1. 12. Art not thou from everlaſting, O Lord my God, mine Holy one? To be my God (my God-one) as to Honour and Worſhip, and to be mine Holy One as to Honour and Worſhip is the ſame thing. So Iſrael's God (or God-one) as to Honour and Worſhip, and Iſrael's Holy One as to Honour and Worſhip, are ſynonymous Expreſſions, Iſa. 29. 23. They ſhall ſanctifie the Holy One of Jacob, and ſhall fear the God of Iſrael. Hoſ. 11. 9. I am God and not Man, the Holy One in the midſt of thee. Grotius is thus far right in his Interpretation of the Epithet Holy, he ſuppoſeth it to relate to Honour and Worſhip; for thus he expoundeth theſe laſt words of the Prophet Hoſea. (k) Holy, that is, ſanctify'd, honour'd by your Anceſtors with agreeable Worſhip. But this is a very ſlender and mutilate account of this great Name the Holy One; for the Pſalmiſt exhorteth to worſhip God with the Religious (or Holy) Worſhip, becauſe he is Holy as to Honour and Worſhip, Pſal. 99. 5. Exalt the Lord our God, and worſhip at his Footſtool, for he is Holy: v. 9. Exalt the Lord our God, and worſhip at his holy Hill; for the Lord our God is holy. The ſame reaſon is alledg'd in the Book of the Apocalypſe for giving the Religious Worſhip unto God and to him only, Apoc. 15. 3, 4. Great and marvellous are thy Works, Lord God Almighty, juſt and true are thy Ways, thou King of Saints; who ſhall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorifie thy Name? For thou only art Holy: for all Nations ſhall come and worſhip before thee; that is (ſaith Mr. Mede) they ſhall relinquiſh their Idols and plurality of Gods, and worſhip thee as God only. From which excellent Expoſition of the holy Text it appeareth, that to be the Honour-perſon of God, is to be Holy as to Honour and Worſhip; and that to be God only as to Honour and Worſhip, and to be him that only is Holy as to Honour and Worſhip, are the ſame thing. When the Seraphims cry, Iſa. 6. 3. Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of Hoſts, their meaning is to ſay, (and religiouſly acknowledge,) that he is the Honour-perſon of God, and that being ſuch he is Holy as to Honour and Worſhip (which is God-honour) to the fulleſt height of being ſo. Of the ſame meaning is the Triſagium, Apoc. 4. 8. The four Beaſts (which repreſent Bodies or Syſtems of Divine Devotioniſts) reſt not Day and Night, ſaying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come. Theſe four Beaſts therefore may well be ſaid, to give glory and honour to him that ſate on the Throne; for they give unto God the height and fulneſs of the God-honour (which is the being Holy as to Honour and Worſhip,) which is the ſublimeſt ſtrain of honouring God. In like manner Hannah glorifieth God (and withall celebrateth the God of Iſrael as the only true God and aſſerteth the Unity of the Godhead againſt Polytheiſm,) when ſhe ſingeth, 1 Sam. 2. 2. There is none Holy as the Lord (none elſe is of the God-honour, which is the being Holy as to Honour and Worſhip; for there is none (no God) beſides thee. Agreeably to theſe laudatory Hymns and Doxologies which uſually occurr in Scripture, the Song of Moſes ought to be underſtood, Exod. 15. 11. Who is like unto thee, O Lord, amongſt the Gods? who is like thee? glorious (or magnificent) in Holineſs, fearful in Praiſes, doing Wonders. If this Song muſt be interpreted agreeably to the uſual Doxologies in Scripture, That Holineſs of God which he celebrateth, muſt not be underſtood of his Sanctity of Purity, (l) as Expoſitors miſtake, but of his Sanctity of Dignity. The Song of Moſes ought to be interpreted agreeably to the Stile of Honour, Magnificence and Illuſtriouſneſs (which is the Stile of Doxologies) and agreeably to the Titles of Honour, wherewith Honours, Dignities and Eſtates of Nobilitation are ennobled; therefore that Holineſs of God which he celebrateth, muſt not be underſtood of his Vital, but of his Imperial-perſonal Sanctity. The words which we tranſlate Glorious in Holineſs are better render'd Magnificent in Holineſs; therefore Moſes ſpeaketh of that Holineſs of God, which is his Honour and Magnificence. Moſes conſidereth the Lord as contradiſtinct to Creature-Potentates and Lords, and as the ſole Honour-perſon of God amongſt the Gods (for he ſaith, Who is like unto thee, O Lord, amongſt the Gods?) therefore that Holineſs of God which he ſpeaketh of, is the Holineſs of his Honour-perſon. Moſes ſpeaketh of that Holineſs of God, which rendreth him fearful in Praiſes, which is the Holineſs of his Name, as appeareth from the Pſalmiſt, who exhorteth us, to praiſe God with Religious Fear and Reverence, becauſe of the Holineſs of his Name, Pſal. 99. 3. Let them praiſe thy great and terrible Name; for it is Holy; therefore he is fearful and reverend in Praiſes, becauſe holy and reverend is his Name, Pſal. 111. 9. Holineſs in the Song of Moſes muſt ſignifie, as it doth in their Hymn, that ſing the Song of Moſes, Apoc. 15. 3. therefore when he celebrateth God as Glorious or Magnificent in Holineſs, his intent is to ſay, that he is not only Glorious or Magnificent in Imperial Eſtate, Majeſty and Honour, but in Holineſs of Imperial Eſtate, Majeſty and Honour, which is the God-honour. And becauſe Holineſs is the God-honour, therefore God ſometimes ſweareth by it; as amongſt Men perſons of Honour often ſwear by their Honour, Amos 4. 2. The Lord God hath ſworn by his Holineſs. Pſal. 89. 35. Once have I ſworn by my Holineſs, that I will not lye unto David.

V. A Fifth Illuſtration of this great Attribute (Holy) is from the Pagan Theology, which ſome Divines (through a miſunderſtanding the Holineſs of God) have ſtrangely miſtaken. For they

(i) Religionem non eſſe niſi Dei cultum.—— Hanc ei tantum Deo deberi dicimus, qui verus eſt Deus. S. Aug. de C.D. l. 10. c. 1.

(k) Sanctus, i. e. ſanctificatus, cultu conveniente à majoribus veſtris honoratus.

Apoc. 4. 8.

(l) Rivet. in loc.

they ſay, (m) The Gods of the Nations were not properly and truly Holy, becauſe but partially and reſpectively only; for as much as the Divine Eminency which they were ſuppos'd to have, was, even in the Opinion of thoſe who worſhipp'd them, common to others with them, and ſo not diſcriminated from, nor exalted above all. —— Wherefore it is to be obſerv'd, that although the Scripture every where vouchſafes the Gentiles Dæmons the Name of Gods, yet it never, I think, calls them Holy Ones, as indeed they were not. (n) None of the Heathen Gods were ever ſeen, to make reckoning of Sanctity, nor ever commanded himſelf to be worſhipped under the Name of Holy. In which Accounts of the Pagan Deities there are no leſs than four miſtakes. For,

(1.) It is a miſtake, to affirm, That the Heathen Gods were not properly and truly Holy, but partially and reſpectively only; becauſe the Divine Emenency which their Worſhippers attributed to them, was common to others with them, and ſo they were not diſcriminated from and exalted above all. If we ſpeak according to the truth of the thing the Heathen Gods were not partially and reſpectively Holy; for they were not at all Holy. If we ſpeak according to the Opinion of the Pagan Religioniſts, their Gods were more than partially and reſpectively Holy; for they ſuppos'd them truly and properly Holy. They did not ſuppoſe, that the Holineſs of their Gods conſiſted in being diſcriminated from and exalted above all; but if this is the true Notion of Holineſs, ſome of the Pagan Gods according to the Opinion of their Worſhippers were truly and properly Holy; for their ſeveral ſorts of Supreme Deities were ſuppos'd, to be diſcriminated from and exalted above all.

(2.) It muſt be reckon'd a miſtake, to affirm, That the Scripture every where vouchſafes the Gentiles Demons the Name of Gods, yet never calleth them Holy Ones; for in ſtiling them their Gods the Scripture (implicitly at leaſt) ſtileth them their Holy Ones. Their God Ones as to Honour and Worſhip and their Holy Ones are ſynonymous Expreſſions, as the Author of this miſtake acknowledgeth, when he giveth this account of the Holy One of Iſrael, (o) which is all one his God.

(3.) It is a miſtake, to affirm, That the Heathen Gods made no account or no great account of Sanctity. For Religion and Sanctity are terms ſynonymous; the Heathens Inſtitution of Religion was the Inſtitution of their Sanctity. A Roman Prieſt told a Roman Virgin, coli Deos ſancte magis quàm ſcitè, the Gods are worſhipp'd by ſanctity rather than wittily. The Pagan Religioniſts Rites of Sanctity are innumerable, a ſuppos'd Sanctity was their great care and regard, the deſign of their Religious Inſtitution in general, of their Myſtic-religious and their Philoſophic Inſtitutions, and it was the Glory both of the Popular and Philoſophic Pagans.

(4.) It is a miſtake, to affirm, That no Pagan Deity ever commanded himſelf to be worſhipp'd under the Name of Holy. For the Pagan Deities that affected the Name and the Worſhip of God, affected the Holy Name and the Holy Worſhip; and their Religioniſts according to their Inſtitution (which was the Inſtitution of their Gods) gave unto their ſeveral Deities this honourary Epithet Sanctus or Sanctiſſimus. The Supreme Deity in the Acroamatical Theology is ſtiled (p) ἅγιος ἐν ἁγίοις, Holy in the Holies. The Supreme Deity of the Egyptians is called (q) σεμνὸς καὶ ἅγιος, Venerable and Holy; and Plutarch (as Eugubinus tranſlateth him) ſtileth the Supreme Deity (r) immutabiliter ſanctus, immutably Holy. J. Mart. affirmeth, that a Statue at Rome on Tiber between the two Bridges was erected to Simon Magus, and inſcrib'd Simoni Deo ſancto, To Simon the holy God. If this Inſcription to Simon Magus be a miſtake (as is moſt likely) yet it is certain, that the Pagans uſually made ſuch Inſcriptions to their Deities; for ſuch are theſe following.

(s) Deo ſancto Belatucardo
(t) Sanctiſſimo Herculi.
Herculi Pacifero, Invicto, ſancto ſacrum.
Herculi ſancto ſac.
(u) Soli ſanctiſſimo
(w) Aurea ſanctorum potuiſſent Templa Deorum Urere.

The moſt vile and ridiculous Deities amongſt the Pagans had the honourary Epithet of Holy given them; for one of them was intituled Sanctiſſimus Deus Riſus, the moſt holy God Laughter. They accounted their Gods Holy, and therefore they accounted them Holy, becauſe they were their Gods, as ſuppoſing their Gods, their God-honours and their Holy Honours to be terms ſynonymous. To be a God as to Honour and Worſhip, was in their Notion of things, to be Holy (or Religious) as to Honour and Worſhip. Their Gods were their God-honours, and this they accounted the ſame thing, as to be their Holy (or Religious) Honours. They look'd upon their Gods as ſuch Honours and Nobilitations of Eſtate, that were perſonal Sanctities and Religions as to Honour; whence they often ſpeak of them in this form; Deorum Sanctitates, Deorum Religiones, The Sanctities of the Gods, the Religions of the Gods. Agreeably to which Paganical Language the only true God (according to the Scripture-Theology) muſt be ſtiled The Imperial-perſonal Sanctity, and his Epithet Holy muſt be thus expounded; Holineſs is the God-kind of Honour, Excellence or Unvileneſs; therefore his being God as to Honour and Worſhip, is his being Holy as to Honour and Worſhip, which is his Propriety.

VI. A Sixth Illuſtration of this Divine Attribute Holy is from ſeveral ways of contemplating God, whoſe Holineſs of Name admitteth of ſeveral diſtinct Conſiderations, and yet needeth ſome Elucidations: For the fuller Explication of it therefore,

(1.) God muſt be contemplated antecedently to Society and Polity, and wholly abſtracting from it; for he is The God-excellence, Imperial-perſon, The Sanctity of Honour-perſon abſolutely (or in himſelf) as well as reſpectively to created Beings. The Pſalmiſt therefore conſidering him abſolutely or as in himſelf from Eternity, ſaith; Before the Mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadſt formed the Earth and the World, even from everlaſting to everlaſting thou art God. If he was God from everlaſting, he was the Honour-perſon of God from everlaſting, and his being ſuch was Sanctity of Honour-perſon (the God-honour and Nobilitation of Honour-perſon,) ſuch Sanctity which is primary, original, abſolute, eſſential and infinite Sanctity of Dignity. His being a God in Dignity is a Sanctity of Dignity, without which he could not be from Eternity deify'd (which is to be unvilify'd in abſolute Perfection,) and which is eminently (x) his ſingular Eminency, whereby he alone is God.

(m) Mr. Mede on Matth. 6. 9.

(n) Nullus è Deorum Ethnicorum grege ſanctitati pretium ſtatuere viſus eſt, nec unquam ſub ſancti nomine ſe coli juſſit. D. Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 1. c. 5. §. 2.

(o) Mr. Mede ſupr.

(p) Procl. Plat. Theol. l. 2. c. 11.

(q) Jambl. de Myſt. p. 151.

(r) Eugub. de Per. Phil. l. 6. c. 7.

(s) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 2. c. 17.

(t) Elmenh. in Arnob. p. 144.

(u) Beyer. Add. in Seld. p. 53.

(w) Ovid. de Amor.

Pſal. 90. 2.

(x) Singularis ſua excellentia, quâ ſolus eſt Deus. Cajet. in Aquin. 2. 2. Qu. 94. Art. 3.

The Jews ſay of his Name הוא שמו ושמו הוא he is his Name, and his Name is he. And the ſame muſt be ſaid of the Holineſs of his Name, and of his proper Honour and Dignity, which the Book of Wiſdom calleth the incommunicable Name. Ch. 14. 21. They aſcrib'd unto Stones and Stocks the incommunicable Name.

(2.) God muſt be contemplated with reſpect to us and to Society and Polity jurally, his Holineſs of Name being Law and Obligation to all Rationals, to be his Religioniſts, to exerciſe ſuch Piety towards him, and to give unto him all ſuch Religious Honour and Worſhip, whereby his Name is hallow'd. Unto us Men and Angels he is the Honour-perſon that is to be holied by having the God-kind of Honour. And the ſenſe of the word Holied ſo expounded may fitly be thus expreſs'd Holy-honoured; for God-honouring is Holy-honouring. Hereby he his differenc'd from all other Honours and Nobilitations of Eſtate, he is jurally the God-honour of Honour-perſon, and his Name therefore is legally the Holy-honour'd Name. For as his Honour-perſon muſt be beatify'd by way of honouring, ſo it muſt be (Holied) Holy-honour'd, and muſt not be any way unholied, which is to be profaned. Lev. 22. 32. Neither ſhall ye profane my holy Name, but I will be hallowed (Holied or Holy-honour'd) amongſt the Children of Iſrael. If he is Holied or Holy-honour'd, his Honour-perſon is Sanctified according to the ſenſe of the word in Scripture. Lev. 10. 3. I will be ſanctified (either by their Doings or by their Sufferings for their Profaneneſs I will be Holy-honour'd) in them that come nigh me. Numb. 20. 12. The Lord ſpake unto Moſes and Aaron; becauſe ye believed me not, to ſanctifie me (to Holy-honour me) in the eyes of the Children of Iſrael. Iſa. 29. 23. They ſhall ſanctifie my Name (Holy-honour my Honour-perſon,) even Sanctifie the holy One of Jacob, and ſhall fear the God of Iſrael. They ſanctifie him or holy him by way of honouring, that are pious and religious towards him; and they that (objectively) make him their religious fear and their dread, make him the Honour-perſon of their God. Iſa. 8. 13. Fear ye not their fear, neither dread ye it (the Gentiles Gods:) But ſanctifie the Lord of Hoſts himſelf, and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread. The Apoſtle maketh uſe of theſe words of the Prophet but in a ſomewhat different ſenſe, to ſignifie, that the Chriſtians ſhould not make the minacious things of the World the matter of their Fear comparatively with God, but ſhould religiouſly make him their fear and their dread, which is an holying him (by way of honouring) in our Heart, 1 Pet. 3. 15.

(3.) God muſt be contemplated as actually in Society with a Liege-people, amongſt whom he is the Imperial Honour-perſon of God, and it is not only his Propriety, but his Poſſeſſion, to be the hallow'd Name. For to be the Honour-perſon of a God in Society with his Religioniſts, is unto him Sanctity, Holineſs and Religion of Imperial Honour-perſon; and unto them it is ſuch Sanctity, Holineſs and Religion, as is competible to the Subject-party. Accordingly the Jews (who were under ſevere Injunctions, to ſanctifie the Honour-perſon of their God) profeſs to Worſhip in him the beauty (or magnificence) of Holineſs. Pſal. 29. 2. and 2 Chron. 20. 21. they are ſaid, to praiſe the beauty of Holineſs, as our tranſlation rendreth the words. But becauſe the Particle ל ſometimes ſignifieth in, therefore the words ומהללים להדרת קדש may be rendred conformably to the Pſalmiſts, and to praiſe in the beauty of Holineſs. Meaning by Holineſs, Holineſs of Service, Worſhip and Miniſtration according to the Jews Inſtitution, which had much of external Pulchritude and Magnificence in it. Holineſs of Worſhip (ſuch Service, Worſhip and Miniſtration which is Holineſs) is unto us Holineſs (we are Holy by it,) and it is unto God Holineſs of Imperial Honour-perſon.

(4.) God muſt be contemplated as being in his tranſcendent Judgments and Mercies Self-magnifying and Self-magnified, and therefore Self-ſanctifying and Self-ſanctified; for this God-magnifying (as being the God-honouring) is ſanctifying; and a God's being thus magnified (having the God-honour and Illuſtriouſneſs) is being ſanctified. The Prophet therefore repreſenteth God as ſanctified (becauſe God-magnified) in his Righteous Judgments upon the wicked. The Iſa. 5. 16.
Lord of Hoſts ſhall be exalted in Judgment, and God, that is holy, ſhall be ſanctified (or holied) in Righteouſneſs. This Language is uſual in the Prophet Ezekiel and no where elſe in Scripture. I will plead againſt Gog with Peſtilence and with Ezek. 38.
Blood, and I will rain upon him and upon his 22. 23.
bands, and upon the many People that are with him, and v. 16.
an over-flowing rain and great hail-ſtones, fire and and ch. 28. 22.
brimſtone. Thus will I magnifie my ſelf, and ſanctifie my ſelf, and I will be known in the eyes of many Nations, and they ſhall know, that I am the Lord. When I ſhall be ſanctified in thee, O Gog. O Zidon, I will be glorified in the midſt of thee, and they ſhall know, that I am the Lord, when I ſhall have executed Judgments in her, and ſhall be ſanctified in her. As in his Judgments on Heathen Nations, ſo in his wondrous deliverances of his People, God is ſaid, to ſanctifie his great Name, which is to magnifie it with the God-kind of magnifying; and to be ſanctified, which is to be magnified with the God kind of being magnified. Ezek. 36. 23. I will ſanctifie my great Name, which was profaned among the Heathen, which ye have profaned in the midſt of them, and the Heathen ſhall know, that I am the Lord, ſaith the Lord God, when I ſhall be ſanctified in you before their eyes. Ezek. 39. 27. When I have brought them again from the People, and gather'd them out of their Enemies hands, and am ſanctified in them in the ſight of many Nations. So Ezek. 20. 41. and ch. 28. 25. God is the great Exemplar of our ſanctifying his Name, which ought to be our greateſt Concern.

VII. It ought not to be ſaid, that God demandeth Honour of us meerly out of Goodneſs to us, for our benefit and advantage; ſuch Notions proceed from great miſapprehenſions touching the Godhead. For God Imperial is neceſſarily the Law of true Religion and Godlineſs to the whole Univerſe, and without true Religion and Godlineſs he cannot be God Imperial. The Duties of Religion are founded upon his being God, which (ſuppoſing our Exiſtence) is to be unto us a Sovereign Liege-Lord, the Imperial Eſtate of God, the God-kind of Sovereignty, the Sanctity and Religion of Honour-perſon. They are founded upon the Rights and Dues of his Godhead (which are ſingular, proper, incommunicable, inviolable, unalienable and eſſential to his being God,) upon the immutable Nature of Good and Evil, Right and Wrong, upon Gratitude and ſtrict Juſtice, and his Intereſt as well as our Intereſt. The Religious acknowledgment of his Rights and Dues is the Intereſt of his Pleaſure and Contentment, of his Honour, Service and conveniency of Living, of his Kingdom and Government and of his being God. If we make not a Religious acknowledgment of them, if we irreligiouſly oppoſe them and trample on them, this is a doing him the moſt real and deadly diſpleaſure and annoyance, injury and inconvenience, miſchief and prejudice, it is a denying him and bereaving him of his Subjects and Service, a villainous θεομαχία, fighting againſt him (as his mortal Enemies,) an infaming and vilifying him, and pouring Indignities upon him, a deſpoiling him of his Worth and Excellence, and of his Attributes and Perfections, a depoſing him and dethroning him, and (in an horrendous degree) a deſtroying his Life and Being, an undeifying him and a taking away his Kingdom from him. It is God's Intereſt therefore at an immenſe rate, that we ſhould do him Honour, as Kings and Fathers count it their Intereſt and Concern, that their Subjects and Children ſhould Honour them (the being of a King and Father is in great degree deſtroy'd, if they be not honour'd;) they do not require that the Subject-party ſhould Honour them meerly for that Party's Benefit and Advantage, but for the common and publick Intereſt. If meerly out of Goodneſs to us and for our Benefit and Advantage he requireth, that we ſhould Honour him, then it is meerly out of Goodneſs to us and for our Benefit and Advantage, that he requireth of us, not to diſhonour him. For not to ſlight him and to prize him, not to diſaffect him and to love him, not to diſhonour him and to honour him, are the ſame thing. But is it probable, that meerly for our Benefit and Advantage he forbiddeth us, to abuſe him, and undeifie him, and to make him a Lyar? Or to Crucifie the Son of God afreſh and to put him to open Shame? It cannot be ſuppos'd, that out of meer Goodneſs to us, he forbiddeth us to Diſhonour him, and commandeth us to Honour him; that his Honour and Intereſt is ſubordinate and meerly ſubſervient to our Commodity and Benefit; for what is Man to God, or the Creature to the Creator? As his Honour is his Intereſt (at an immenſe rate,) ſo his Intereſt is Paramount and Tranſcendent to ours. Whence ſome of the Pontificians in a ſtrain of great Piety ſay, (y) Sin againſt God ought not to be done for an infinite Good. Every offence of God is of infinite avoydance. All manner of penal Death and Annihilation ſhould be ſuffer'd, rather than commit any, how little ſoever, offence againſt God. His Honour and Intereſt muſt be our chief End and Buſineſs, Deſire and Deſign, and muſt be ſought above all, agreeably to the order of that καλὴ συνωρὶς, illuſtrious Pair the two great Commandments, the firſt of which requireth our Superlative Love for God, the ſecond injoineth the Love of our Neighbour in due Equality with our ſelves. So our Lord's Prayer allotteth the ſecond place to the matters of our Benefit and Advantage (properly ſuch) in the three laſt Petitions: But the firſt place (the Primacy and Supremacy) to the matters of God's Intereſt. In the three laſt Petitions the Stile is ἡμῶν, ἡμῖν, ἡμᾶς, for our Bread, the forgiveneſs of our Sins, and lead us not into Temptation: But in the three firſt Petitions the Stile is σοῦ, σοῦ, σοῦ, thy Name be hallowed, thy Kingdom come, thy Will be done. That his Name may be hallow'd, it is to be wiſh'd, that debauch'd Chriſtendom would go to School to the Jews, and learn ſomething of Sanctity from them, who when they ſpeak of God, uſually intitle him הקדוש ברוך הוא that holy bleſſed One. With which Remark we will conclude our Explication of the expanded Idea of God, and will now proceed, to deduce from it ſome uſeful Conſectaries of Theory and of Practice.

(y) Pro infinito bono non debet fieri offenſa Dei. Omnis offenſa Dei eſt infinitæ fugibilitatis. Quia potiùs toleranda eſſet omnis mors pœnalis & annihilatio, quàm committenda eſt quantumlibet parva offenſa in Deum. V. Petav. T. 4. l. 2. c. 14. S. 7. Gerſon. Lect. 1. de vit. ſpir.

CHAP. VII.

1. The firſt Conſectary, that God muſt be contemplated not meerly as a Nature, but as a Name. 2. God muſt be contemplated as within the comprehenſion of Sanctity Imperial. 3. God muſt be contemplated as of the City (or Empire) of the Regenerate. 4. Our ultimate Idea of God muſt be of the God-kind. 5. God ought not to be repreſented as unknowable by any but the Sons of Carnality and Unregeneracy. 6. The Godhead may be Atheiz'd in various degrees. 7. God is in himſelf and unto us a kind of Knowledge, which is his kind of Knowledge. 8. This Divine kind of Knowledge conſiſteth in being Wiſe and Intelligent in the main in the matters of Sanctity and ſaving Religion. 9. It ſaveth from the State of Blindneſs and blinding things. 10 It conſtituteth the State of Light and Knowledge. 11. It is our Spiritual Eye-ſight analogous to our Bodily. 12. It conſiſteth in being Holy and Spiritual in reſpect of our Intellectuals. 13. It is not meerly Intellectual, but Vital. 14. This Knowledge is of ſuch a Nature, as ſpeaketh it of great clearneſs. 15. And of Certitude. 16. And the incapacity of unholy Mankind for knowing and judging of Divine things.

1. THE Idea of God inferreth, that he ought to be contemplated and notic'd in Theology, not meerly as a Nature, but as a Name, not meerly as an Eſſence, but as an Honour; for ſo he is notic'd in the entrance of our Lord's Prayer (call'd by Tertullian, breviarium totius Evangelii, the breviary of the whole Goſpel;) which ſheweth, that this is primaria ejus notio, the primary Notion of him, conceptus Dei fundamentalis, the fundamental Conception of God. God muſt be notic'd as (of kind and politically ſuppoſing our Exiſtence) the Imperial Eſtate of God, the Imperial Honour-perſon of God; for ſo the Imperial Eſtate of Chriſt is the very Notion of him; and the Pope muſt be contemplated as the Imperial Eſtate of the Pope, and that Imperial Honour-perſon. So according to the light of Nature God muſt be glorified as God; therefore he muſt be contemplated as the Imperial Honour-perſon of God, the being which is Sanctity Imperial-perſonal. An Honour-perſon muſt be contemplated under the Notion of his Honour-perſon; our method therefore of contemplating God is extremely amiſs, if we Contemplate only the Divine Eſſence with its inherent Attributes.

II. The Idea of God inferreth, that he muſt be contemplated as within the Specific comprehenſion of Sanctity Imperial or the holy Empire. As our method of contemplating God is extremely amiſs, if we contemplate only the Divine Eſſence with its inherent Attributes: So if we only add thereto certain Names of Honour and Dignity, which are on this ſide Sanctity Imperial (ſuch as Lord of all, Sovereign Rector) our method of Contemplation is extremely amiſs. For as Chriſt is Lord of all, yet ſo as to be of kind and politically the Imperial Eſtate of Chriſtianity Imperial: So God is the Lord of all, yet ſo as to be of kind and politically the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial. And as Chriſt muſt be look'd for and contemplated as within the Specific comprehenſion of Chriſtianity Imperial, of which he is the Imperial Eſtate: As the Pope muſt be look'd for and contemplated as within the Specific comprehenſion of Popery Imperial, of which he is the Imperial Eſtate: So God muſt be look'd for and contemplated as within the Specific comprehenſion of Sanctity Imperial, of which he is the Imperial Eſtate. A principal difficulty in contemplating God ariſeth from our uſual Ideas of God, which leave the Mind to rove in uncertainty, not knowing where to fix, or which way to look, or where to find God, nor is he ſo notic'd, as to be an Object ſufficiently determinate for Contemplation. But if we contemplate God as of kind and politically the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial, this doth infinitatem rei ejicere, take away the indeterminateneſs of the thing and of the mind (as the Lawyers ſpeak,) it directeth her where to look for God, where ſhe may certainly find him, and may ſteddily fix her Eye upon him as upon an Object ſufficiently determinate for Contemplation. And where ſhould we look for the Imperial Eſtate of a God but in the comprehenſion of the Inſtitution of his Religion? Where elſe can we find the Holy of Holies but in the Communion of Saints? Within this Comprehenſion God is, as Gr. Naz. ſaith from Plato (z) ὅπερ ἐςὶ τοῖς αἰσθητοῖς ἥλιος, what the Sun is in the viſible World.

III. The Idea of God inferreth, that the City (or Empire) which hath God for its Imperial Eſtate, is only the City of the Regenerate, and that he is of the comprehenſion of Regeneracy, which is the comprehenſion of Sanctity Imperial and the Kingdom of his Saints. For this is the comprehenſion of the Things and Perſons of Regeneracy, oppoſite to the World and the Kingdom of Darkneſs, which is the comprehenſion of Unregeneracy; and theſe two Specific comprehenſions ſhare the Univerſe of Rationals between them. As he is the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial, his kind of City and Kingdom cannot be conſtituted by unregenerate Mankind, that are not the holy People (not the holy kind of People,) that are Aliens and Enemies, and cannot become his Subjects, Saints and Citizens, of his Alliance and Divine Family, nor be accepted and reconcil'd, ingrafted and infranchis'd but by entring into the State and Life of Sanctity, which is their Regeneracy. And as he is the Sanctity Vital, the wicked and mundane kind (nefarious Varlets in their Unregeneracy) are a deadly oppoſite and inimical kind unto God, and cannot be his Saints and Citizens, unleſs their kind be chang'd by Regeneration, and they become of the Saint of God-kind. The City of God therefore which is of his Kind and Quality, and of which he is the Imperial Eſtate (a) is the City of Regeneration, Generation is ſufficient for making an earthly City, but this heavenly City needeth Regeneration alſo to conſtitute it. The Citizens and Deniſons of it are natively Strangers and Foreigners, and they are endeniz'd by their Regeneration. They are natively improbous Sinners (of the unſanctify'd and unregenerate Maſs of Mankind,) and are made Saints by Regeneration. By this Door they enter into the City of God. (b) For how can an Alien be permitted to enter? But when he is enroll'd and made a Citizen, and hath receiv'd the Father, then he ſhall be amongſt the Sons of the Father, then he ſhall be thought worthy to inherit, then he ſhall have ſhare of the Father's Kingdom with his own Son the beloved. The Children of God, the Divine Family (that conſtitute this Divine City) are originated by Regeneration, which is Spiritual and Divine Generation (whereby an holy vital Nature, the Life of Grace is ingendred in them;) they are Gods deſcendents, thoſe that are of God originally, and becauſe they are the new and Divine born, they are denominated the Church of the Firſt-born. Heb. 12. 23. For this Phraſe the Firſt-born denoteth the Perſons of Excellency and Precioſity, of Honour, Eminence and Dignity (ſuch were the Firſt-born in ancient times,) which are the ſame with the Regenerate and Divine Family; for all that are of Ennoblement, Excellency and Precioſity in Religion, derive it from Regeneration, whence they have all their Sanctity, which is their Nobility. Ezek. 16. 3, 4, 5, 6. Thence it is, that they are the truly ennobled and unſordified People, of the Divine Birth and Pedigree, Alliance and Kindred, of the Divine kind and Divine Worth and Precioſity, of the truly Noble and Divine Spirit and Sentiment, Nature and Practice, Qualities and Properties, Imployments and Atchievements, Deſigns and Intereſts, Rights and Priviledges; and thence it is, that they are the truly Noble and Divine kind of Religioniſts, and the Goods which in the whole kind of them are peculiarly theirs, are the truly Noble and Divine kind of Goods. If therefore the City of God is the truly Noble and Divine kind of City, it muſt be of Kind and Quality the City of Regeneracy, and the Church of the New-born may fitly be intituled the Church of the Firſt-born (becauſe they are the Perſons of Excellency and Precioſity,) as Clemens interpreteth the Apoſtle. (c) For this is the Church of the Firſt-born, which conſiſteth of many good Perſons New-born. The Church of the Jews and the Literal Jeruſalem (often called the City of God in type and ſhadow) cannot juſtly be called the Church of the New-born: But the Church of the Holy Angels may be juſtly ſo intituled; for they have the thing that Regeneration denoteth (which is Generatio ex Deo, ſupernal Generation or to be Born of God) although without our mode of having it, which is by being Re-born. They conſti-

tute

(z) Orat. 21.

Joh. 1. 12, 13. Eph. 1. 5, 6. Rom. 5. 10. Joh. 8. 35. Rom. 11. 24. Eph. 2. 19.

1 Joh. 3. 1? 12, 10. Gal. 4. 22. Joh. 3. 3

Eph. 5. 26. 1 Pet. 2. 9. 1 Cor. 13. 2. Heb. 11. 38. Joh. 20. 17. Eph. 2. 15. 2 Pet. 1. 4. Matth. 5. 48. Phil. 2. 15. 1 Joh. 3. 9, 10. Rom. 8. 14, 21, 33. 1 Joh. 5. 1 Tim. 2. 1. Heb. 11. 10, 13. Gal. 4. 25, 26. Eph. 1. 3. and 2. 6. Heb. 3. 6. 1 Cor. 3. 21.

(a) Civitas Regenerationis. Terrena Civitas generatione tantum modo, Cæleſtis autem etiam regeneratione opus habet. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 15. c. 20. & 16.

(b) Πῶς γὰρ εἰσελθεῖν ἐπιτέτραπται τῷ ξένῳ; ἀλλ᾽ ὅταν, οἶμαι, ἐγγραφῇ καὶ πολιτευθῇ καὶ τὸν πατέρα ἀπολάβῃ, τότε ἐν τοῖς τοῦ πατρὸς γενήσεται, τότε κληρονομῆσαι καταξιωθήσεται, τότε τῆς βασιλείας τῆς πατρῴας κοινωνήσει τῷ γνησίῳ, τῷ ἠγαπημένῳ. Clem. Protrept. p. m. 40.

(c) Αὕτη γὰρ ἡ πρωτότοκος ἐκκλησία, ἡ ἐκ πολλῶν ἀγαθῶν συγκειμένη παιδίων. Ub. sup. p. 40.

tute therefore together with the Saints on Earth the City of Regeneracy, which is the comprehenſion of all the Goods and Excellencies of Regeneracy, of that Nobility and Honour, that Light and Love, that Life and Liberty, which are oppoſite to the Evils of Unregeneracy, and of that Righteouſneſs, Peace and Joy which the Kingdom of God is, and which God is as his kind of Goods and Excellencies (the truly Noble and Divine kind of Righteouſneſs, Joy and Peace,) which are (d) the Treaſure of the Kingdom and of the State of Salvation.

IV. The Idea of God inferreth, that he muſt be notic'd and repreſentented as of the God-kind, and if our Idea of God doth not ſo repreſent him, it is ſpurious and illegitimate. S. Chryſoſtom calleth the Jews Synagogue (e) τῶν δαιμόνων καταγώγιον, a place of reception for Devils, εἰδωλολατρείας τὸ χωρίον, the place of Idolatry, and he affirmeth, that οὐδεὶς Ἰουδαῖος προσκυνεῖ τὸν Θεὸν, no Jew worſhippeth God, proving it from our Saviour's Saying, Ye neither know me, nor my Father: If ye had known me, ye ſhould have known my Father alſo. This Father contenteth himſelf to have prov'd his Aſſertion from Teſtimony of Scripture without inquiring into the Reaſon of it, which muſt be deduc'd from our preſent Theory. For the only Reaſon imaginable why the God whom the Jews Worſhip, is not the true God, is becauſe he is not the God-kind of God (but ſpecifically different,) not the Sanctity Vital, not the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial, from whom the carnal Jews are of Religion and Condition aliens and extraneous. The Muhammedans are as ſpeculative and ſubtle Diſputants about the Divine Eſſence and Attributes, as the Jews are. (f) Their Al Calam or Metaphyſical Theology (as they define it) is the Learning which maketh inquiries about the Eſſence and Attributes of God. Their Sect of the Sephatii and Motazali are ingag'd in a Diſpute about eternal Attributes; and in theſe Scholaſtic Diſputes and Diſquiſitions they come not behind the Schools of Chriſtendom, nor do they come behind us in acknowledging a governing Providence, which the Pagan Theiſts alſo acknowledged. Yet Chriſtian Divines thus cenſure the Muhammedans God. (g) We call every thing an Idol, that a Man worſhippeth as God (ſimply or in ſome reſpect,) which is not the true God. Which may be either a thing really exiſtent, or imaginary only. The former is a real Idol: The latter is only an imaginary Idol, and ſuch is that God, whom the Jews and the Turks Worſhip. If Chriſtian Divines muſt not be ſuppoſed to Blaſpheme in reproaching the Muhammedans Deity, their God muſt be ſuppos'd, to be a falſe God, as not being the God-kind of God. for they expreſly deny any ſuch God, that is the Imperial Eſtate of the holy Empire, ſymbolizing with the Pagans in their fundamental Errour, that God hath no Kingdom but the mundane Empire. (h) They reject the ſecond Petition in our Lord's Prayer, becauſe (ſay they) God is every where; therefore it is inept to pray for his Kingdom to come. As the Muhammedan Scholaſtics Symbolize with the Pagans touching a mundane Kingdom of God: So the Chriſtian Scholaſticks Symbolize with them in their method of forming the Idea of God. For in forming this Idea the Platoniſts proceeded (i) κατ' ἀφαίρεσιν, by removing imperfections, and κατ' ἀναλογίαν, by analogy to things ſenſible. So the Chriſtian Scholaſticks in forming their Idea of God proceed via remotionis, removing from God the ſeveral imperfections we find in our ſelves; and via eminentiæ, adding infinity to all the Perfections we find in our own Natures. An Idea of God thus formed may ſerve well enough in Diſputes againſt Atheiſm, but if ſuch an Idea is our ultimate Idea of God, we are (ſpeculatively) Aliens from the true Idea of God much what at the rate of Jews and Muhammedans.

V. The Idea of God inferreth, that he ought to be repreſented as unknownable by the Sons of Carnality and unregeneracy, but not in the extravagant Senſe of Atheiſts and Metaphyſical Theologers, who pretend, (k) that they can give him no Name, nor any definition or deſcription, whereby it may be declar'd what he is. (l) The beſt Terms for Men to manifeſt their Underſtanding God by, are thoſe which manifeſt, that they underſtand him not. The great Lights of the Church were unhappily poſſeſs'd with theſe dark Conceits. For Gr. Naz. having cited this Saying of Plato, Θεὸν νοῆσαι μὲν χαλεπὸν, φράσαι δὲ ἀδύνατον, (it is difficult to reach God by any Preception of the Mind, but to declare him by Speech is impoſſible,) he ſubjoineth Φράσαι μὲν ἀδύνατον, ὡς ὁ ἐμὸς λόγος· νοῆσαι δὲ ἀδυνατώτερον. I would rather ſay, it is impoſſible, to expreſs God, more impoſſible, to underſtand him. (n) Whatever occurreth to your Mind, whatever you can think of, ſay, he is not that; for if he was that, it had not occurred to my Mind. Which is to ſay, that God is not any thing cogitable by Man. (o) Whatever Conceptions or Expreſſions we can have concerning God, are proper only to Human things. The one certain way of underſtanding God is, to know and think, that Man can ſay nothing of God. The Extravagance of this Apologiſt (Arnobius) may fitly be reproved and refuted by his own Reaſonings againſt the Pagans. (p) How can it be known, that any God is, if it ſhall be unknown what he is? For every one that becometh a ſuppliant to a Deity, neceſſarily ſhould know, to whom he maketh Supplication, whom he imploreth, of whom he deſireth aid for human Affairs and Neceſſities. They that pretend, to know, that God is, without knowing what he is, pretend to know him no otherwiſe (q) than the beholder of an excellent Harp knoweth the Harp-maker, of whom he hath no perſonal Notices, but only knoweth in general, that there is an excellent Harpmaker, (r) or as we know a Man with a Viſard on his Face, whom we know to be a Man in general only, but know not definitely and determinately who it is, or as a blind Man going into the Sun and finding himſelf warmed, knoweth in general, that there is a calefactive Principle, that warmeth him, but knoweth not the Sun definitely and determinately.

(d) Ὁ θησαυρὸς τῆς σωτηρίας. Clem. ſupr. p. 44.

(e) T. 6. p. 369.

Joh. 8. 19.

(f) Pocock. Spec. p. 198.

(g) Idoli nomine intelligimus, quicquid homo tanquam Deum, vel ſimpliciter, vel κατά τι & ex parte, ſibi extra verum Deum proponit fingitque colendum. Id autem eſſe poteſt, aut res vera & in rerum natura exiſtens; aut falſa & imaginatione tantum concepta. Si illud, reale fuerit Idolum; ſi hoc, imaginarium tantum: Qualis eſt ille Deus quem ſibi Judæi, Turcæ---- colendum proponunt. Zanch. T. 4. l. 1. c. 17.

(h) Hoornbeck Theol. pract. T. 2. l. 9. c. 16. p. 251.

(i) Alcin. de Doctr. Plat. c. 10.

(k) Gaſſend. T. 1. p. 295, 296, 302, 303.

(l) Scalig. de ſubtil. Exerc. 365. S. 2.

(n) Quicquid occurrerit quod cogitare poſſitis, dicite, non eſt illud. Non enim ſi illud eſſet, mihi jam occurriſſet. S. Aug. Enar. 2. in Pſal. 26.

(o) Quicquid de Deo dixeris, quicquid tacitæ mentis cogitatione conceperis, in humanum tranſilit & corrumpitur ſenſum. ---- unus eſt hominis intellectus de Dei natura certiſſimus, ſi ſcias & ſentias, nihil de illo poſſe mortali oratione depromi. Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 3. p. 111.

(p) Quemadmodum poterit an ſit Deus aliquis ſciri, ſi ignorabitur & neſcietur quid ſit? Omnis enim qui quærit alicujus numinis implorare reſponſum, debet neceſſario ſcire cui ſupplicet, quem imploret, à quo rebus auxilia & neceſſitatibus expoſcat, humanis. Ibid. l. 3. p. 124, 125.

(q) Gr. Naz. ſupr.

(r) Gaſſend. T. 1. p. 295.

So Men may know, that there is a God in general only, without knowing definitely and determinately who, or what he is, that is God. But the knowing only thus much of God, is not to be call'd the knowing God (it is really a not knowing him;) for he knoweth not the King, who knoweth only, that there is a King in our Nation, but knoweth not who, or what he is, that is King; and he that knoweth no more of the King, may do his Honour to one that is but a Kitchin-boy inſtead of the King. It is one thing to know in general only, that there is a God, and another thing to know, that God is (that he exiſteth who indeed is God:) He that knoweth in general only, that there is a God, is but a Theiſt in general only, a Vago-Theiſt (a Theiſt at random,) and muſt be a Religioniſt in general only without being of any definite or determinate Religion. But the great concern of ſerious Religioniſts is, to be of the true Religion, the Deity whereof is the true God, who is ſufficiently notic'd to us by the true Religion, as appeareth (more eſpecially) from that illuſtrious Idea of his ſpecific and individual determination, which we have repreſented, namely, that God as to what he is of kind and politically, is

The Sanctity Imperial,
The Sanctity Vital,
The Sanctity Imperial-perſonal.

I will not ſo far debaſe Theology, as to compare this Idea with thoſe noble Theories in Secular Learning, The Circulation of the Blood, the Motion of the Earth, and the true Syſtem of the Viſible World; for what is the World to God? Earth to Heaven? Humane Blood to Holineſs? or Secular Learning to the Science of Sanctity the Saint of God-kind of Learning? There is no Compariſon, no Proportion between Mundane and Divine kind of things, between the Secular and the Spiritual, the Vile, Common and Exotick, and the Choice, Special and Saving, between Humane Speculation and the Beatific Viſion, natural Theory and the genuine expreſſive Idea of God. It cannot be valued with the Gold of Ophir, with the precious Onyx or the Sapphire. (s) To reach a little of the Divine Things (ſaith Ariſtotle) is more delicious, than to know all theſe kind of things that are about us, διὰ τὴν τιμιότητα, becauſe of their tranſcendent Excellency and Pretioſity. The ſame Philoſopher wrote to Antipater concerning Alexander, (t) That it did not belong to him alone, to be elated in Mind, becauſe he had rule over many, ἀλλ' οὐδὲν ἧττον εἴ τις ὀρθῶς γινώσκει περὶ θεῶν, it doth no leſs belong to any Man, that hath attain'd the right knowledge of the Gods. But from this high and happy attainment the due diſcernment and underſtanding of God our Idea excludeth all the Sons of Carnality and Wickedneſs; for although God is notic'd to them many ways, in the plaineſt manner and with the loudeſt Voice, and Multitudes of them may profeſs his Theology and Religion, yet in the main they are neceſſarily aliens from God and from knowing him, being in the main aliens from the thing that God is, and from knowing it, extraneous to that Specific Comprehenſion which he is of, and not of his Correſpondence.

VI. The Idea of God inferreth, That the Godhead is Atheiz'd in various degrees by unregenerate Mankind; which is too viſible in the Pagan Theology, the Deities whereof are all of them ſpecifically different from the true God, all of them belong to the Specific Comprehenſion of Man's Unregeneracy, and had their riſe from his fall. Whence the Birds in Ariſtophanes's Avibus may well be allow'd to boaſt, that they being the firſt Off-ſpring of winged Cupid, were the Fore-elders of all the Gods of the Poets, πάντων τε θεῶν μακάρων γένος, and the whole Generation of the Gods were their Juniors. The Gentiles atheiz'd the Godhead (which was their great Crime) by their Image-σεβάσματα, changing the Glory of the Incorruptible God into an Image made like to Corruptible Man, and to Birds, and four-footed Beaſts and creeping things. Their Painters and Statuaries (u) oftentimes made the Images of their Goddeſſes in the form and ſhape of their own Harlots, whom they moſt fancy'd (ſuch as Phryne and Cratina,) Cicero ſheweth, (w) that the Image conſecrated by Clodius in his Houſe under the Name of the Goddeſs of Liberty, Tanagræam fuiſſe meretricem, was a Tanagræan Harlot. In great degree the Godhead was atheiz'd by that common Sentiment of the Pagans, (x) Naturam eſſe Deum; that Nature is God (underſtanding by Nature, not meerly the Corporeal Univerſe, but an Intelligent Mundane Animative Nature:) And in a leſſer degree the Godhead was Atheiz'd by Anaxagoras; for his infinite active Mind free from all mixture of Matter was not the Deity (or Sovereignty) of true Religion and Sanctity. Clemens and Lactantius applaud the Pagans for calling God Nature; but if meer Mundane Nature be deify'd, the Deity is atheiz'd (being deſpoil'd of every thing that is of God-kind,) our Theiſm can be no better than Athe-iſm, and it may be no better than the groſſeſt Atheiſm imaginable. Such is the Theiſm of the wiſeſt of the Sect of Xaca in China; (y) "they place their whole Intent on "the underſtanding the firſt Principle, whom "they believe, to be the ſame in all things, "and all things to be the ſame with him without any eſſential difference, operating according to the extrinſic qualities of the Subject, "as Wax is formed into ſeveral Figures, the "which being diſſolv'd by liquefaction remain "in ſubſtance the ſelf ſame Wax. They divide Mankind into ten Claſſes, the four firſt "whereof are good, that is, Principiantes or Beginners, Proficientes or Proficients, Provecti or "thoſe that have advanced, Conſummati or they "that are accompliſh'd. The three firſt do walk "well, although they are but yet in the way; "but the fourth is arriv'd at perfection by "means of contemplating the firſt Principle, "and by mortification of their Paſſions, which "did diſquiet them with Perturbations and "Scruples; and do already enjoy ſuch an internal quiet and peace of Mind, that nothing "doth give them any remorſe or trouble for "whatever they think, ſay or do; aſſuring "their Conſciences that after Death they are to "expect neither Reward nor Puniſhment, but "that every thing ſhall return to its Principle, "as it was at firſt. (z) Amongſt the Jewiſh Cabaliſts the Deity is transform'd into the moſt hideous Monſter imaginable (called Arich Anpin and Adam Cadmon,) their Idra Rabba hath made a deſcription of 9000 Myriads of Worlds in his Brain, 375 in his Noſe, and 208 elſewhere. If Muhammediſm is deriv'd in great part from Rabbinical Cabaliſm, (a) as ſome ſuppoſe; it is but reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that in the Muhammedans Notion of God there is a mixture of Rabbinical Phantaſtry and monſtrous Imagination. And this may the more reaſonably be thought, becauſe (b) their Orthodox Confeſſion of Faith is ſtuffed with the Monſtroſities of Moncari and

Naciri,

(s) Ariſt. de part. Anim. l. 1. c. 5.

(t) Plut. de Profect. p. 78.

Rom. 1. 23.

(u) Clem. προτρεπτ. p. m. 26. Plin. N.H. l. 35. c. 9.

(w) Or. ad Pontif. pro dom.

(x) Voſſ. de Idol. Ep. ad Lect.

(y) Semedo Hiſt. par. 1. ch. 18.

(z) See Dr. H. More against the Book Drachin, T. 1. p. 44 [illegible]

(a) Simon. Hiſt. Crit. l. 1. c. 7.

(b) Pocock. Spec. p. 274.

Naciri, of Muhammed's watering-place, a Bridge to Paradiſe not ſo broad as an Hair-breadth, and a Balance as big as the Surface of the Earth and the Heavens alſo. In the Ideas of God that are currant in the Schools of Chriſtendom, there is nothing of monſtrous Imagination, unleſs this may be thought a monſtrous Imagination, They have nothing of God in them, no God-kind of thing. If a Man is deſpoil'd of his Virility, we call him, (c) abſciſſum & ſpoliatum viro: So if in our Ideas of God he is Deſpoil'd of his Divinity (of kind ſuch) we have reaſon to complain, that he is abſciſſus & ſpoliatus Deo. If a Child of God is deſpoiled of the things of Regeneracy, he is no longer a Child of God but a vile kind of Perſon: So if our Ideas of God deſpoil him of the things of Regeneracy (of his Sanctity Vital and Imperial,) he is no longer God, but a vile kind of Being.

The Rabbins ſay, Orbem ſupremum & quicquid in eo eſt, Virum quendam eſſe, præditum membris, ſicuti Reuben ac Simeon. Vorſt. in Maim. de Fund. Leg. p. 30.

VII. The Idea of God implieth and inferreth, That in his own Nature and unto us he is a Knowledge (peculiar to Regeneracy,) that is fitly called his kind of Knowledge. For there is a Knowledge, that God is, and that is of God, as he is the Sanctity Vital and Imperial, the Father and Founder of the Regenerate and Divine Family, who in reſpect of their Knowledge are his living Images, the New Man being renew'd in knowledge after the Image of him that created him. To be renew'd into this Knowledge, is to be renew'd into the Similitude of God (which is the Life of Grace,) which therefore is not a common Humane kind of thing (as all other Knowledge is,) but it is a Divine Grace, and that which of kind and quality is of God, and a participation of his Godly Wiſdom, as our Engliſh Liturgy ſpeaketh. The Nature of this Divine kind of Knowledge will in part appear from theſe definitive Names of it.

(1.) This Divine kind of Knowledge is the Light of Life (ſo call'd by our Saviour,) which is a principal conſtitutive Ingredient of the Regenerate and Divine Family, (d) and differenceth them from the comprehenſion of Darkneſs, the benighted World of Unregenerate Mankind. Their Light of Life neceſſarily denoteth one of their Spiritual-vital Goods, and therefore denoteth (e) the Light of their Holy Spiritual Life, which leadeth unto Life Eternal. Not the whole of their Vital Sanctity, but the Intellectual Light of that Life, the Light of Knowledge, of Truth, and of Underſtanding is the Light of Life, Eph. 5. 8. 2 Cor. 4. 4. 1 Joh. 2. 27. and 5. 20. (2) It is Scientia Sanctorum, the Knowledge peculiar to and conſtitutive of the truly Holy; which is contradiſtinct not only to Secular and Humane Learning and Knowledge commonly ſo called, but to the common and unholy kind of knowing the matters of Holineſs and true Religion; for as there is (f) an Infidel kind of believing on the Name of Chriſt: So there is an unholy kind of knowing the Matters of Holineſs and Religion. Hypocrites and unſanctify'd Perſons within the Pale of the Church have a ſort of knowledge of the Doctrines and Propoſitions of the Science of Sanctity (and may compoſe Syſtems of Theology;) but this their knowledge is an Exoterical and School-kind of knowledge, of different kind and quality from the knowledge of the Holy; which is the Saint of God-kind of knowing the things of God, the Holy-virtuous kind of knowing the things of Holineſs. The knowledge which unſanctify'd Perſons have of divine things is no better than an humane kind of thing; but the knowledge of the Holy is the divine kind of knowing the things Divine, the godly kind of knowing the things of Godlineſs, the knowledge of the matters of Sanctity which is in Sanctity, and which is Sanctity (a Branch of it,) it is the Science of Sanctity, which is ſubjectively Sanctity of Science; for the truly Holy are uſually characteriz'd by their Science of Sanctity, 1 Joh. 2. 13, 14, 21. and 4.7. and 5.20. 1 Tim. 4. 3. Col. 3.10. Matth. 16.17. *Joh.*6.44,45. (3.) It is the knowledge of the Holy in a ſtrict acceptation; for as the Inſtitution of Religion and Sanctity is a Learning and Erudition (which Plato defineth, (g) εἰς ἀρετὴν παιδείαν, Erudition to Virtue:) So the whole of true Religion and Sanctity on our part is the Holy kind of Learning and Knowledge, and all the Ingredients of our Piety and Sanctity are the Science of Sanctity, in the ſame ſenſe that good Orations are Rhetorick, good Arguments are Logick, and decent Motions are the Science of decent Motion. The whole of Religion and Sanctity on our part conſiſteth in learning and knowing God as we ought, (whence it is uſually called in Scripture, The knowledge of God,) and the not knowing God as we ought, is the Eſſence and Summary of all Wickedneſs: (h) Not to know God, is Death, as to know him, is Life Eternal. In a large ſenſe, The knowledge of God or The Science of Sanctity conſtitutive compriſeth univerſal Sanctity on our part; but in a ſtrict acceptation it is not the whole of the Holy Life, but the Holy Light thereof, The Light of the knowledge of God, 2 Cor. 4. 6. (4.) The Science of Sanctity inſtitutive and the Science of Sanctity conſtitutive are one and the ſame Science; for the Science of Sanctity inſtitutive become a Divine Intellectual Virtue of the Mind is the Science of Sanctity conſtitutive. Both are (i) the ſame Divine Knowledge, Truth and Wiſdom, and Divine Intellectual Light, which barreth all pretenſion to extravagant Enthuſiaſm; for this Divine kind of knowledge conſtitutive is nothing elſe but quod veritas eſt in verbo, what is revealed Truth in the Divine Oracles. Clemens thus deſcribeth it: (k) It is not meer Words that we call Knowledge, but a certain Science, and that Light ingendred in the Soul by obeying according to the Commandments, that maketh all things manifeſt, the things in Generation and Man himſelf, fitting him to know himſelf, and teaching him to aim at God and making him an adeptus (in the knowledge) of God; for what the Eye is in the Body, that Knowledge is in the Mind. (5.) A Name accommodate for this Divine Knowledge may be deriv'd from the ſublimer Philoſophers, which is, the Divine Right Reaſon. For although the Stoicks account the

(c) Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 1. p. 24.

Col. 3. 10.

Joh. 8. 12.

(d) Joh. 1. 5. and 11. 10. and 12. 46. Act. 26. 18. 2 Cor. 4. 4. Eph. 4. 18. and 6. 12. Col. 1. 13. and 3. 10. 1 Theſſ. 5. 5. 1 Pet. 1. 14. and 2. 9. 1 Joh. 2. 10, 11.

(e) Joh. 1. 4, 9. and 12. 35, 36. 2 Cor. 4. 4, 6. and 3. 14. Eph. 5. 8, 14.

(f) Dr. Jackſon of Juſtif. Faith, c. 13.

(g) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 12. c. 18.

(h) Τὸ δὲ ἀγνοεῖν τὸν πατέρα θάνατός ἐστιν, ὡς τὸ γνῶναι ζωὴ αἰώνιος. Clem. Strom l. 5. p. m. 521. Of the knowledge of God, vid. 2 Chron. 28. 9. Prov. 2. 5. Iſa. 11. 9. Jer. 9. 24. and 22. 16. and 24. 7. Hoſ. 4. 1. and 6. 6. Joh. 17. 3. Eph. 4. 20. Phil. 3. 8.

(i) Pſal. 19. 8. and 119. 130. Prov. 6. 23. 2 Cor. 4. 4, 6. Joh. 1. 9. and 12. 36. Eph. 4. 23. and 5. 8. 1 Pet. 2. 9.

(k) Οὐ γὰρ λόγον ψιλὸν εἶναι τὴν γνῶσιν φαμὲν, ἀλλά τινα ἐπιστήμην θείαν, καὶ φῶς ἐκεῖνο τὸ ἐν ψυχῇ ἐγγινόμενον ἐκ τῆς κατὰ τὰς ἐντολὰς ὑπακοῆς, τὰ πάντα καταδηλα ποιοῦν, τά τε ἐν γενέσει, αὐτόν τε τὸν ἄνθρωπον ἑαυτόν τε γινώσκειν παρασκευάζον, καὶ τοῦ θεοῦ ἐπήβολον καθίστασθαι διδάσκον. ὡς γὰρ ὀφθαλμὸς ἐν σώματι, τοῦτο ἐν τῷ νῷ ἡ γνῶσις. Strom. l. 3. p. m. 324.

Reaſon of Mankind, (l) a Divine Thing, define God (m) by meer Reaſon or by common Right Reaſon (they ſuppoſing, that the Divine Nature is of no better kind than common Rational Nature,) yet the ſublimer Philoſophers thus diſtinguiſh; We ſhall not live according to Nature, which we all ſuperlatively deſire, (n) if we do not live according to Reaſon both Divine and Humane. (o) According to Empedocles the Criterion of Truth is not Sence, but Right Reaſon: Right Reaſon is of two ſorts, the one θεῖος, Divine, the other ἀνθρώπινος, Humane, of which the Divine is inexplicable, but the Humane is declarable. It is not to be expected, that the Philoſophers ſhould give an intelligible account of their undeclarable Myſticks; but from the Notices of the Chriſtian Religion a clear intelligible account may be given of Right-Reaſon both Divine and Humane; for if the reaſoning intelligent Mind be right, (without Ignorance, Error, Fooliſhneſs) this is Right Reaſon. The common Humane kind of Knowledge therefore (p) is the common Humane kind of Right Rreaſon, and the Holy Divine kind of Knowledge is the Holy Divine kind of Right Reaſon; which Holy and Divine kind of Right Reaſon conſiſteth in being divinely virtuous in our Reaſon (the oppoſite to Atheous Ignorance, Error, Fooliſhneſs,) and this Divine kind of Knowledge or Right Reaſon God is as his kind of Knowledge or Right Reaſon; for all that are imbu'd with it are θεοδίδακτοι, taught of God and taught divinely, Matth. 16. 17. Joh. 6. 45. (6.) It is Knowledge (good apprehenſion and diſcernment of things) and it is Faith alſo; it may be conſider'd as it is Faith, and it muſt be contemplated as knowledge and good underſtanding (q) εἰς ἐξομοίωσιν θεοῦ, which is Man's aſſimilation to God. The following deſcriptive Notices of it ſpeak its Divine Nature and Properties.

VIII. It conſtituteth its Poſſeſſours the Wiſe and Intelligent in the main, and therefore the Wiſe and Intelligent in the main in the matters of Sanctity and Saving Religion, without which none can be wiſe and intelligent in the main. The abſtract terms Knowledge, Wiſdom and good underſtanding (as others of like nature) ſignifie both in an abſtract material acceptation what is Knowledge, Wiſdom and good underſtanding of things (as a Man is ſaid, to intermeddle with all Wiſdom, Prov. 18. 1.) and in a concrete formal Acceptation, the being wiſe, knowing and of good underſtanding; for ſo the fear of the Lord is the beginning of Wiſdom, becauſe it is the beginning of being Wiſe, Prov. 1. 7. In both theſe Acceptations the knowledge of the Holy pretendeth to the Name of Wiſdom, and to be (comparatively ſpeaking) the only valuable Wiſdom, becauſe no other Wiſdom and Knowledge ſaveth Men from being ignorant and fooliſh in the main (which is the main of Folly) this only maketh them wiſe and intelligent in the main. No Man is perfectly wiſe and knowing (the Jews ſay, (r) There are ſixty Gates of Science, and all were deliver'd to Moſes one excepted,) none have good underſtanding in all things (therefore Socrates ſaid, None but God is wiſe;) but they that are of good underſtanding in the main, are the truly (though not perfectly) wiſe; and he that is not ſo far wiſe, muſt be called by the Name, which the Wiſe Man hath given him, The ſimple Man that lacketh underſtanding, Prov. 9. 4. Wiſdom conſiſteth in being wiſe in the main, which is to be wiſe in reſpect of the main Intereſt, to be holy and happy for ever. It conſiſteth therefore in being wiſe and intelligent in the main in the matters of Sanctity and Saving Religion, which is the knowledge of the Holy. Whence ariſeth an eminent Note of difference between Holy and Unholy Mankind; who could not be unholy, (s) if they were not in the main unintelligent of the matters of Sanctity, their true Idea, Reality and Worth, Excellency and Importance, of the wiſe Choice and the wiſe Bargain, of their own foul and deadly erroneous Conceits and Self-deluſions, of the true rates of things and the difference between the things momentous and momentaneous; nor could they be impos'd upon by deadly counterfeit ſhews of Truth, Piety and Sanctimony, and deluſive appearances of Felicity, did they ſee with their Eyes and underſtand with their Hearts; (t) their Eyes are holden ὑπὸ τῆς περὶ θεοῦ ἀγνοίας, by their ignorance of God. (u) It is impoſſible for them, to have the knowledge of God, who are ſway'd by their vitious Paſſions and Luſts, which are cauſally Atheous Ignorance, Error and Fooliſhneſs: (w) As Ruſt in a Looking-glaſs ſuch is Wickedneſs in Man; οὐ δύναται ὁ τοιοῦτος ἄνθρωπος θεωρεῖν τὸν θεόν, ſuch a Man cannot diſcern God. Art thou an Adulterer, a Fornicator, a Thief, a Raptor, a Defrauder, a Sodomite, a contumelious Perſon, a Reviler, Wrathful, Envious, Proud, contemptuous of others, a Striker, a lover of Money, diſobedient to Parents, a ſeller of thy Children, τοῖς ταῦτα πράσσουσιν ὁ θεὸς οὐκ ἐμφανίζεται, to them that do ſuch things as theſe God doth not appear, unleſs they firſt cleanſe themſelves from all Pollution. (x) He is miſtaken, that thinketh he knoweth the truth (the Saint of Godkind of Learning and Philoſophy) being yet wicked in his Life; for he is in the main deficient in knowing it being in the main in the ſtate of Atheous Ignorance, Error and Fooliſhneſs. Plato would have all other Learning ſlighted and neglected in compariſon of that Diſcipline, (y) which rendreth a Man βίον καὶ χρηστὸν καὶ πονηρὸν διαγινώσκοντα, diſcerning of a good and a bad Life. In this principal Learning and Diſcipline unregenerate Mankind would be better ſkill'd than they are, if they were not unintelligent in the main. Of their prodigious deficiency in it the Jews are an Inſtance, (z) who boaſt of the unſtained ſinleſs Life of their Doctors, and tell us of one of them, (a) who was ſo great a Saint, that he committed no ſin all the Days of his Life, this one misfortune excepted, once he put on his Frontal Phylacteries before thoſe of his Arm.

IX. It ſaveth from the ſtate of Blindneſs and blinding things: For as they that are devoid of the Holy Life, are in the ſtate of Carnality and Wickedneſs; ſo they that are devoid of the Light of Life, are in the ſtate of Blindneſs; which criminal and calamitous Blindneſs (according to the Chriſtian Theology) may be very much illuſtrated from the Philoſophers Complaints of the Blindneſs of Mankind, which they account one of their greateſt Calamities.

(l) Sen. Ep. 65.

(m) Chryſippus ait vim divinam in ratione eſſe poſitam. Cic. de N. D. l. 1. Ὁ ὀρθὸς λόγος διὰ πάντων ἐρχόμενος, Laert. in Zenon.

(n) Ἐὰν μὴ κατὰ λόγον ζῶμεν τὸν θεῖον καὶ τὸν ἀνθρώπινον. Jambl. προτρεπ. p. 18.

(o) Dr. Cudw. Intell. Syſt. p. 23.

(p) Secundum rectam rationem civilem vivebant. Cic. de Invent.

(q) Clem. Str. l. 6. p. m. 496.

Prov. 9. 10. Pſal. 111. 10. Matt. 25. 2. Luc. 1. 17. Col. 1. 9. and 2. 3. 1 Cor. 1. 20, 30. 2 Tim. 3. 17. Jam. 3. 13. Prov. 8. 5. Pſal. 119. 130. 1 Cor. 3. 18.

(r) Hotting. de Jur. Hebr. p. 208.

Luc. 1. 77. Joh. 17. 3. 1 Tim. 4. 3. Heb. 8. 11. 1 Joh. 2. 13, 14, 20, 27.

(s) Prov. 4. 19. and 30. 3. Pſal. 119. 18, 27. Iſa. 51. 7. Matth. 13. 15, 44. and 23. 19. Luc. 4. 18. Joh. 9. 39. and 12. 15. and 14. 17. and 16. 2, 3. and 17. 25. 1 Cor. 2. 14. 2 Cor. 3. 14. Eph. 4. 18. 1 Joh. 2. 11. and 5. 20. Apoc. 3. 17, 18. Dan. 9. 13. Prov. 2. 9.

(t) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 6. p. 321, 322.

(u) Clem. Str. l. 3. p. m. 324.

(w) Theophil. ad Autol. l. 1. initio.

(x) Errat quiſquis veritatem ſe putat cognoſcere, cum adhuc nequiter vivat. S. Aug. de Agon. Chriſt. c. 13.

(y) De Rep. l. 10. ſub fin.

(z) Coſri, p. 240.

(u) Lightfoot Hor. Luc. 15. 7.

mities. (b) He is a blind Man, that hath the Eye of his Mind ſhut. Men are in ſome ſort to be pitied, (c) becauſe of their ignorance of Goods and Evils, which is not a leſs defect or blindneſs, than that which depriveth us of diſcerning White and Black. A Thief and an Adulterer the Philoſopher calleth, (d) One in Error and deceiv'd about the greateſt things, and blinded, not as to the Eye-ſight which diſcerneth White and Black, but as to the Mind's diſcerning Goods and Evils. Philo ſaith of the Egyptians who worſhipp'd Vile Animals; (e) they were without Eye-ſight (the moſt neceſſary Sence,) not that of the Body, but that of the Soul, whereby alone true and falſe is diſcern'd. So the Scripture (f) looketh upon Mankind in the ſtate of Graceleſneſs and Wickedneſs, as in the ſtate of an Atheous kind of Blindneſs (not ſeeing, not knowing the Saint of God-kind of things,) which ſtate of Blindneſs is alſo the ſtate of blinding things, that abound, prevail and reign in it, whereby it becometh, not only a ſtate of not ſeeing, not knowing actually, but alſo a ſtate of ineptitude and indiſpoſition to ſee and know. (g) Exhalations from the Earth make a caliginous Air: So none have the Light of their Mind, if the Fumes of fleſhly Luſts are continually ariſing. Τυφλώττει ἡ πονηρία, all Wickedneſs is blinding, the love of any Sin, cuſtom in Sin, all the vicious Affections that reign and bear ſway in unholy Mankind, (Pride, Arrogance, Self-conceit, the admiration and love of the World, and over-valuing the Favour of Men,) to be ungodly affected (and addicted in any reſpect) indiſpoſeth the Mind for well diſcerning the matters of Godlineſs. (h) The Cuſtom and Faſhion of the World, Prejudice, Superſtition, Science falſly ſo called, are blinding things, and they are eaſily blinded by Impoſture, that are of themſelves prone, to miſtake the true nature, worth and uſe of things, to doat upon Gauds and Trifles, to a ſenſual Life and a ſenſitive Felicity, to Raſhneſs, Inconſiderateneſs, Security, Preſumptuouſneſs, Careleſneſs and Improvidence touching their great concerns, to deceive themſelves, and to ſport themſelves in their own deceivings. (i) As the Turks when they fall to their Cups, and are reſolv'd, to fill themſelves with ſuch Liquor, as they know, will intoxicate and make them drunk, are wont to make a great and unuſual noiſe, with which they call down (as they ſuppoſe) their Soul to the remoteſt part of their Body, that it may be as it were at a diſtance, and ſo not conſcious of their brutiſh Intemperance. The Divine Truth is unwelcome to the generality of Men (as being againſt the quiet of their Minds, their fleſhly Inclinations and worldly Intereſts, againſt what they eſteem and affect, and telling them unpleaſing things,) they like it not, and therefore will be of a different Opinion; for as the Athenian Orator ſaid, (k) What every one liketh and willeth, that he maketh his Opinion.

X. It conſtituteth the ſtate of Light and Knowledge; for by this Divine kind of Knowledge, (l) νὺξ φεύγεται, θάνατος οἴχεται, the Night is driven away, death is profligated; all deadly ſin is inconſiſtent with it, it ſaveth from all ſoul-damning Error (which is mortal Blindneſs;) for it is the knowledge of all things neceſſary to the ſtate of Life and Salvation, 1 Joh. 2. 20, 27. So far every one that is Spiritual (by ordinary Regeneration only) ἀνακρίνει μὲν πάντα, hath the cognizance of all things, 1 Cor. 2. 15. (m) Chriſtians diſcern and reject what is falſhood and impoſture, διὰ τὸ ἐν αὐτοῖς πνεῦμα, by that Spirit that is in them, which they have by their New-birth; for they are born into this Divine Knowledge, and their Divine Generation is according to Plutarch's Notion of Generation, (n) Generation is the going out of Darkneſs into the Sun and Light. They could not be in the ſtate of Life and Salvation, if they had not the Light of Life, which they that are totally devoid of, (o) are in the Region of Darkneſs and of Death. They may be Strangers to the common Sciences, but not to the Science of Sanctity and Salvation; and although they are unacquainted with the Wiſdom of gaining the Riches, Preferments and Honours of the World, yet they are emerg'd out of βαθὺ σκότος ἀφροσύνη, that deep Darkneſs their Fooliſhneſs (as Philo ſpeaketh,) and it is always and univerſally true, (p) the Soul of the Juſt is the Seat of Wiſdom. Their Body being dedicated to God is his Temple, (q) it becometh ſuch by their pure Sentiment touching the Creator.

XI. It is the Spiritual Eye-ſight, (r) which is analogous to the Bodily Eye-ſight; for as the Light which is in our Bodily Life, is our Bodily Eye-ſight, which is the Light of this Life, is from natural Generation, thereby we guide our Steps, and it is cauſed by an irradiation of the Light of this World into the Eye: So the Light which is in our Spiritual Life, is our Spiritual Eye-ſight, which is the Light of Life, is from Spiritual Generation, thereby we walk in ſafe Paths, and it is cauſed by an irradiation of the Light which God is into the Mind, 2 Cor. 4. 6. (s) It is Sun-light ϗ φῶς τοῦ θεοῦ, and the Light of God. And as this Name the Bodily Eye-ſight denoteth not only actual ſeeing, but the Eye as it is a luminous Senſory (apt to ſee;) ſo the Light of Life ſignifieth not only the actual knowing the things Divine, but alſo the Mind as it is a luminous Principle of knowing them, which muſt be called The Spiritual Eye-ſight. The renew'd Mind is (t) ὀφθαλμὸς καινὸς ϗ καλὸς, a new and good Eye; which Deſcription of it ſpeaketh it our Spiritual Eye-ſight: (u) We have the Eye of the Mind free, unobſtructed and lucid (ſaith Clemens,) whereby alone we behold that which is Divine. As Plato ſuppos'd, that there is an innate Light in the Eye, and that by conjunction thereof with the External Light (or a συναύγεια) Viſion is perform'd: So if the Mind hath not put off the blinding things, if Obſtructions are not remov'd, if the Intellectual Eye is not made lucid and diaphanous (ἵνα τῷ φωτὶ καταλαμβάνηται φῶς, (w) that Light may be enter- tain'd

(b) Τυφλὸς, ὁ καταμύων τῷ νοερῷ ὄμματι. M. Ant. l. 4. s. 29.

(c) Δι' ἄγνοιαν ἀγαθῶν ϗ κακῶν· οὐκ ἐλάττων ἡ πήρωσις αὕτη τῆς στερισκούσης τοῦ διακρίνειν τὰ λευκὰ ϗ μέλανα. Idem l. 2. S. 13.

(d) Τὸν πεπλανημένον ϗ ἐξηπατημένον περὶ τῶν μεγίστων, ϗ ἀποτετυφλωμένον, οὐ τὴν ὄψιν τὴν διακριτικὴν τῶν λευκῶν ϗ μελάνων, ἀλλὰ τὴν γνώμην τὴν διακριτικὴν τῶν ἀγαθῶν ϗ τῶν κακῶν. Epict. diſſ. l. 1. c. 18.

(e) Ὄψιν τὴν ἀναγκαιοτάτην τῶν αἰσθήσεων πεπηρωμένοι· λέγω δὲ, οὐ τὴν σώματος, ἀλλὰ τῆς ψυχῆς, ᾗ τὸ ἀληθὲς ϗ ψεῦδος μόνῃ γνωρίζεται. Περὶ βίου θεωρητ.

(f) Matth. 13. 13, 15. and 15. 14. and 23. 19. Joh. 9. 39, 40. and 12. 40. Act. 28. 26, 27. Eph. 4. 18. 2 Pet. 1. 9. Apoc. 3. 17.

(g) Clem. Str. l. 2. p. m. 300.

(h) Orig. c. Celſ. p. 322.

(i) Mr. Farindon 1. Ser. on Gal. 6. 7.

(k) Ὃ βούλεται τοῦθ' ἕκαστος ϗ οἴεται. Clem. προτρεπτ. p. m. 30.

(l) Clem. ibid. p. m. 55.

(m) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 1. p. 4.

(n) Γένεσις δὲ, ἡ εἰς ἥλιον ϗ φῶς ἐκ σκότους πορεία. Ap. Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 3. c. 1.

(o) In tenebris & morte verſantur. Lactant. l. 1. c. 5.

(p) Anima juſti ſedes eſt ſapientiæ. V. Petav. T. 4. l. 4. c. 13. S. 7.

(q) Τοιοῦτον ἀπὸ τῆς καθαρᾶς περὶ τοῦ δημιουργοῦ ἐννοίας γινόμενον. Orig. ſupr. l. 4. p. 177.

(r) Grot. Not. in Matth. 6 22.

(s) Clem. προτρεπτ. p. m. 38.

(t) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 6. p. 322.

(u) Ἐλεύθερον ϗ ἀνεμπόδιστον ϗ φωτεινὸν ὄμμα τοῦ πνεύματος ἴσχομεν, ᾧ δὴ μόνῳ τὸ θεῖον ἐποπτεύομεν. Clem. Pædag. l. 1. c. 6.

(w) Gr. Naz. orat. 34. of the Excellency of the Eye. vid. Jamb. προτρεπτ. p. 12, 13.

tain'd and comprehended by Light, the external by the internal,) we cannot be ſaid to have recovered our Eye-ſight; without which Eye-ſight (at leaſt in ſome degree and in fieri) we ſee not the things Divine, although external Light ſhineth round about us: But the Light ſhineth in Darkneſs, and the Darkneſs comprehendeth it not. Joh. 1. 5. So in reform'd Chriſtendom multitudes are as blind as Owls and Night-birds in the Day-light, and their Practices ſpeak them (in the main at leaſt) Heathen Sons of Darkneſs. They diſcern not the Cheat and Impoſture of ſenſitive things, nor the boundleſs Excellency and Importance of the things inviſible, nor the Pulchritude of Divine Virtue, and the horrid aſpect of Sin and Wickedneſs: But they wallow in Uncleanneſs, and Swear and Drink and Revel at the old Heathen Rate. Fools know not that they do Evil. So the Romaniſts kill the Innocent ſuppoſing it God-ſervice. Joh. 16. 2.

XII. It conſiſteth in being Holy-virtuous and duly Spiritual in our Intellectuals. For it is the holy Underſtanding. 1 Joh. 5. 20. the holy Underſtanding is the holy Light. (x) That which is Holy, properly called Light is amical to him (the Father of Lights) from whom it deſcendeth. To introduce this Divine Knowledge into the Mind, is (y) to remove out of the way thoſe Sins, which are of a caliginous Nature, and darkned (the Mind) the Divine Spirit, (z) to purifie the Mind by the Light of Truth, her diveſting her ſelf of thoſe Pollutions wherewith ſhe was replete, the abſterſion of her Eye to ſee clearly. All which Expreſſions (underſtood agreeably to the Scripture-Theology) import a Sanctity of the Intellectuals. Which Sanctity of the Intellectuals is one Branch (a) of the Sanctification of the whole Man, of the Renovation of the Mind; that eminent part of it, to be renewed in Knowledge, and to diſcern ſpiritually, manifeſtly conſiſteth in being holy and duly Spiritual in reſpect of our Intellectuals. Unholy Mankind are unholy in their Intellectuals, they are carnal and groſly erroneous in their Ideas of Things and Perſons (which are ſuch as the carnal Jews have of Abraham and the Meſſiah, and the vulgar Papiſts have of Jeſus and the Bl. Virgin,) inſtead of God they ſet up (b) an Old Man or a Golden Calf which they may dance about, as the Iſraelites did (a God indifferent to Sin and Holineſs,) and their Heaven is no Heavenly-kind of Heaven. They conceit themſelves and their Partiſans Wiſe, when they are Fools, Righteous when they are in their Sins, the Virtuous when they are the Vile, the only Saints, when they are Villains, and that to be their Sanctity and Religion, which is their Sin and Deluſion. They are beſool'd by groſly impoſturous Religions, deluded by Shews, miſtake Shadows for Subſtance, dream of Golden Mountains, delude themſelves into a Fool's Paradiſe, and not knowing what is good for themſelves (not ſeeing the Illuſion of the Pleaſures of Sin, nor foreſeeing the Fates that are to come,) their whole Life is one continu'd Error. Τοίη μοῖρα βροτῶν βλάπτει φρένας, ſuch is the blindneſs of Mankind! They Judge after the Fleſh (as the Fleſh inclineth and ſuggeſteth,) and in their Sentiments are as Darkneſs to Light oppoſite to the Divine Family, that ſymbolize with God in their Sentiments, and ſee no Riches but in Righteouſneſs, no Beauty but in Holineſs, no Treaſure but in the Kingdom, no Felicity but in Piety. That deprecate and diſcard all mundane Goods and Excellencies, ſo far as they come in Compariſon and ſtand in Competition with the Divine Goods and Excellencies; that ſee an immenſe diſproportion between immortal Joys and empty Bubbles, write Loſs and Dung upon the goodly admir'd things of mundane Religioniſts, and fallacious deadly Vanity upon the gay and ſpecious things of the World; that diſcern a recondite Wiſdom in the fooliſhneſs of the word of the Croſs, immenſe Riches under a veil of Poverty, and Divine Glory under a cloud of Diſgrace; that diſdain the Fleſh-pots of Egypt (the Senſualiſts Felicities,) make light of the Favours and Frowns of the World, and the Sin which unholy Mankind count but a trifle, is in their Eyes of aſpect as the Face of a Serpent, and in their eſtimation as the Poyſon of Dragons and the cruel Venom of Aſps. Theſe two Families are (in ſeveral Inſtances) extremely diſſonant in their Accounts; what the one counteth Wiſdom, (c) the other counteth Folly; what the one counteth Religion, (d) the other calleth Abomination; what the one counteth Poverty, the other (e) accounteth Riches; what the one accounteth Pearls and Treaſure, the other accounteth Pelf and Traſh; what the one calleth Martyrdom, the other calleth Perverſneſs and inflexible Obſtinacy; and him whom the one accounteth a Villain and naileth to a Croſs, the other adoreth as the Life of God in Fleſh. What one Man idolizeth, another trampleth on, and the other trampleth on what he adoreth. Denique non omnes eadem mirantur.——

(x) Φίλον δὲ τὸ ἅγιον τῷ ἐξ οὗ τὸ ἅγιον, ὃ δὴ κυρίως κέκληται φῶς. Clem. ſupr.

(y) Τὰς ἐπισκοτούσας ἁμαρτίας τῷ θείῳ πνεύματι ἀχλύος δίκην ἀποτρίβεσθαι. Ibid.

(z) Τῷ φωτὶ τῆς ἀληθείας καθαίρειν. Jambl. Προτρεπτ. p. 145. Ἡ ἀπόθεσις ὧν ἂν ἐπλήσθη μολυσμῶν. Hierocl. in aur. Car. p. 297. Τὸ ὄμμ. πρὸς ὀξυωπίαν ἑαυτῆς διασμήξασα. Ibid. p. 237.

(a) 1 Theſſ. 5. 23. Rom. 12. 2. Eph. 4. 23. Col. 3. 10. 1 Cor. 2. 14.

(b) Gaſſend. Inſtit. Log. Par. 1. Can. 3.

Joh. 8. 15.

Phil. 3. 8. Luc. 16. 15.

Eccluſ. 21. 2. Deut 32. 33.

(c) 1 Cor. 1. 23, 24. (d) Luc. 16. 15. (e) Apoc. 3. 8.

XIII. It is not meerly Intellectual, but Vital alſo (holy Vital kind of knowledge) vitally Perceptive, Affective and Effective. For it is a Branch of Spiritual Living (as the atheous Blindneſs is a Branch of Vital Carnality and Wickedneſs,) of ſuch a Nature as the Platoniſts fanſied Light to be. For they ſuppos'd, that Light in Heaven is Sence, and that the Celeſtial Bodies by the Protenſion of their Rays have the Perception of Objects. So this Divine kind of Knowledge is both Light and Life, a Tree of Knowledge and a Tree of Life. (g) Θεία αἴσθησις, Divine Sence is one of the Names of it: So the wiſe Man's Saying The Fear of the Lord is the beginning of Knowledge, is thus paraphras'd by the Septuagint, εὐσέβεια εἰς θεὸν ἀρχὴ αἰσθήσεως, Piety towards God is the beginning of Sence. The Divine Knowledge is Divine Sence, φρόνημα τοῦ πνεύματος, the ſence and reliſh of a ſpiritual Mind, or (as ſome have defin'd ſapientia) ſapida Scientia, ſavoury Science; for it is not a meer Theoretic inſipid kind of Knowledge, but a ſavour and reliſh of the things known; not a Syſtem of aerial Notions cold as the Moon-ſhine, but the Light of Life. They that are ſpiritually alive ſavour the things that are of God (others nihil ſapiunt niſi terram, (h) ſavour nothing but the Earth,) they are vitally perceptive of Sin and Sanctity, having a vital Antipathy and diſplicence againſt the one, and a vital Sympathy with, and Complacence in the other. Divine things are to them (not a dry Chip, or an empty Shell, but) ineffably agreeable, grateful and delicious, (the flower

(f) Ficin. com. in Plotin. p. 250.

(g) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 6. p. 322.

Matth. 1 23.

(h) Lactant. l. c. 1.

flower of their delight,) their knowledge of them is lively and affectionate, and ſuch a taſt they have of them, as Men have of delicious Meats and Drinks, of fragrant Odours or melodious Sounds (they are ſavoury Meat ſuch as they love,) and this kind of knowing the things Divine the Schools (agreeably to the Scriptures) call Scientia Guſtûs, the Knowledge of Taſt. The Divine kind of Knowledge therefore is duly Affective being always accompany'd with Affections ſuitable to the things known, which is a knowing them as they ought to be known, and as they are propos'd to be known. For the odiouſneſs of Sin is propos'd to be hated, the worthleſneſs of the World to be diſaffected, the Majeſty of God to be rever'd, his Juſtice and Power to be fear'd, and his infinite Amiableneſs to be belov'd. Neſcit Divina, qui non optat, qui non amat. The Divine Knowledge muſt be conſider'd alſo as duly Effective and Efficacious (productive of all other Branches of Sanctity in the Soul and Life) agreeably to the Stile of Scripture, which by Knowledge uſually meaneth efficacious Knowledge. So an Heathen Theologer ſaith of his Paganical Divine Knowledge. (i) The Knowledge of the Gods is Virtue and Wiſdom, and perfect Felicity, and maketh us like the Gods. The Knowledge of Divine things is not to purpoſe, if it doth not make us Holy and Divine. Which can be effected only by the Divine kind of Knowledge; for the attainment whereof a principal Requiſite is (k) τὸ φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς νεκρούμενον, the ſence and reliſh of the carnal Mind muſt be deadned; ſenſitive Delights muſt become dull and inſipid, the Joys of this bodily Life dilute and evanid, and worldly Glory muſt be wither'd in our Eyes, if the Soul becometh vitally-perceptive of the Divine things.

n. 27.4. al. 34. and 19.103. ob.4 34. eb. 6. 5. Pet. 2.3.

ob 13. Ezek. 6. 2. ſal. 143. Pro. 2. 9.

(i) Ἡ μὲν γνῶσις τῶν θεῶν ρετή ἐστι κ̀ σοφία κ̀ εὐδαι- νία τελεία, ποιεῖ τε ἡμᾶς θεοῖς ὁμοίους. Jambl. προ- τρεπτ. p. 7.

(k) Orig. Celſ. l. p. 334.

XIV. The Nature of the Divine kind of Knowledge ſpeaketh it of great clearneſs; for there are in it all Conditions requiſite for a clear and evident diſcernment of things. If Men have their viſive Faculty ſound and pure, if they are in a luminous Region, if the Objects of Sight be unveil'd (not hid and cover'd,) and at a due diſtance, they have a clear Viſion; all which Conditions concur in this Divine Knowledge. For all the Regenerate and Divine Family (Regenerate in ſeveral degrees) have in the main recover'd their Eye-ſight, and may juſtly be called τὸ ὁρατικὸν γένος, the ſeeing Generation, as Philo interpreteth the Iſraelites Name, which is good Divinity, although it be bad Grammar. They are alſo within the ſame Specific comprehenſion, that God is of (in Theiſm of Religion and Condition,) which is the luminous Region. And to them the Divine Objects are not hid and cover'd, but open'd to their view and unveil'd. Their ſeeing Eye to Eye and with open Face (without the covering of a Veil) denoteth a clear Viſion of them, and that they are evident and apparent. Nor are the Objects too remote; for they have not only certain remote Notices of the matters of Sanctity, which are competible to the atheous: But an acquaintance with the things themſelves, which is incompetible to unholy Mankind. For they have not ſeen, nor known the Divine Objects. 1 Joh. 2. 3, 4. and 3. 6. and 4. 7, 8. 3 Joh. 11.

Matth. 11. 25. and 16, 17. Cor. 4. and 3. 4, 18. Job. 14. Iſa. 2. 8.

XV. The Nature of the Divine kind of Knowledge ſpeaketh it of great Certitude; for it is Science and clear knowledge, which aſcertaineth the things Divine to the notice and apprehenſion of its Poſſeſſors. They know, that they are (as well as what they are,) are not pendulous and heſitant about them, nor only ſuſpect that they are true, nor have they only a weak and wavering opinionative Belief of them: But (although Doubts and Temptations to Infidelity may ſometimes aſſault them, yet) in the main they are firmly and throughly perſwaded of them; they affirm, that they are matters of infallible Proof and Aſſurance, ſure, firm, faithful, ſtedfaſt, without all controverſie, and that they know their verity and reality. Nor is the verity of theſe Divine Matters aſcertain'd to their Notice and Apprehenſion in their own Conceit only: But the Proofs and Reaſons of their Verity are as great, as Human and Divine Affairs will admit, and are abundantly ſufficient to aſcertain it to every well diſpos'd Mind, that conſidereth them. For no Paradoxical Scepticiſm is clogg'd with greater abſurdities than ſpeculative Atheiſm, no Theories in Natural Philoſophy are comparable for certainty to the Articles of Natural Religion, the grounds of Law (and conſequently of Religion) are as firm and impregnable as the grounds of Science. There are alſo in Humane Nature mighty propenſions to a Religion; and if Mankind muſt be Religious, it is not hard to diſcern, which is the true and ſaving Religion, ſeeing the Nature of the things which it conſiſteth of, and the State of the World, internal Excellency, Congruity, Affinity with God, and external Teſtimony (from God and Man, from Heaven and Hell,) Providence in its Propagation, Prophecies and their Completion, ancient Types and their Correſpondences, ſo plainly recommend and aſcertain it. The Divine Family therefore are aſcertain'd by objective Evidence, and (as Cicero ſaith) nihil clarius ἐναργεία, nothing is clearer than Evidence.

Luc. 1. 1. Joh. 6. 69. and 17. 8. Act. 1. 3. Col. 2. 2. 1 Theſſ. 1. 3. 1 Tim. 1. 15. and 3. 16. 2 Tim. 3. 14. Heb. 6. 19. 2 Pet. 1. 19.

But as the things Divine are aſcertain'd to their Notice and Apprehenſion: So their own Notice and Apprehenſion (in Conſort with other Evidences) doth alſo aſcertain them, in like manner as every Man's Apprehenſion and Notice of things by external Sence (or what is equivalent thereto) aſcertaineth the truth of things to his Mind. The internal Sence of holy Men (which is as certain as external Sence) is a grand Atteſtation to the Verity and Excellency of their Religion, and is ἐπιστήμη, Science, according to Ariſtotle's Etymology of the word; for it cauſeth στάσιν κ̀ ἠρεμίαν τῆς διανοίας, a ſteddy fixation and acquieſcence of the Mind. Their acquaintance with Divine Objects is a ſort of ſeeing them with their Eyes, looking upon them and handling them. If any Man will do his Will, he ſhall know of the Doctrine, whether it be of God. The Spirit it ſelf beareth Witneſs with our Spirit, that we are the Children of God. He that believeth on the Son, hath the Witneſs in himſelf, which illuminateth his Mind, begetteth and confirmeth Faith in him, ingendreth a new and Divine Nature, which is plainly of a Divine Original, carrieth the Print of a Divine Hand, and maketh the Heart of a Man (his ſtrongeſt Love, Deſires, Delights and Hopes) oppoſite to Infidelity, and is a vital Cognation to the things known. It fareth with him that hath made a conſiderable Progreſs in Regeneration, as the Hebrew Book Coſri ſaith of one that is arriv'd at the Viſio Prophetica, which alone is ſufficient, to beget the Fear and Love of God in Men, as that Author ſuppoſeth. (l) Then the Doubts which a Man had before concerning God vaniſh; and he is poſſeſs'd with ſuch a Veneration of him, and Love for him, as to lay down his Life for the Love of him, becauſe of the mighty Pleaſure that he hath found in adhering to him, and grief and loſs in being eſtrang'd from him. They that find and feel themſelves Regenerate, can they be unſatisfied touching the true God, or whether their Inſtitution be from God, which hath ingendred in them the Life of God? Can they queſtion the Exiſtence of a Regenerate and Divine Family in Heaven and Earth? Or can they make doubt of the Graceleſneſs and Wickedneſs of Unregenerate Mankind? We know, that we are of God, and that the whole World lieth in Wickedneſs. Having acquaintance with the Divine Objects they doubt no more of the Heavenly Felicity than of the World's Vanity; nor of the Excellency and Conſolations of Sanctity (which they find and feel) than of the horror of Sin, (which is of a frightful aſpect in their Eyes:) Nor are they at a loſs for the true Paſtor and the true Religion; for they can diſtinguiſh good Wine from ſophiſticate and adulterate Stuff, what is wholſom from what is poiſonous and wicked (as the Cattel in the Paſture will leave poiſonous Weeds and eat the wholſom Graſs and Herbs,) their holy Nature is a great antidote againſt and preſervative from all ungodly Errours. Impoſtours and their fraudulent Ware are Alien from them and diſagreeable to them. The Sheep follow the true Shepherd, for they know his voice; and a Stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him, for they know not the voice of Strangers. Joh. 10. 4, 5.

1 Joh. 1. 1. Joh. 7. 17. Rom. 8. 16. 1 Joh. 5. 10.

XVI. The want of this kind of Knowledge of Divine things in unholy Mankind, implieth their unacquaintedneſs with the things themſelves, which ſpeaketh their great incapacity of knowing (and judging of) them. For touching the knowledge of things in general, all Men reckon, that they are not well known without experience, obſervation and acquaintance with the things themſelves. Touching many things they reckon, that they cannot be known but by acquaintance with the things themſelves (at leaſt with that kind of things,) without which we have but ignorant Conceits of them. And all Religioniſts reckon, that there are choice Arcana in Religion (as well as Nature,) which are not obvious and expoſ'd, nor known but by Enjoyment. (m) If any one ſhould ask me, what a Bed-ſtaff or a Joint-ſtool is, the only way to acquaint him what they are, is not to amuſe him with fine artificial Definitions, but to ſhew him the things themſelves. The things teach the Knowledge of their Definitions, better than the Definitions teach the Knowledge of the things. The Definitions of things are known by experience and acquaintance with the things themſelves. (n) They that are awake (ſaith Porphyry) may diſcourſe many things touching him that is aſleep: But what ſleep is, what it is to ſleep, the true Notion thereof, will then be clearly diſcern'd, when you your ſelf ſleep, and by ſleeping have learn'd what it is to ſleep. The Rabbins ſay, (o) Judge not your Brother till you come to be in his Condition. For they that have been always rich and healthful, do not rightly judge of the ſick and poor. Nor are they likely to underſtand Health aright, that never ſaw the Face of it: Nor are they likely to underſtand Divine things aright, that are not ſo much as initiated into the Science of Sanctity (nor doth their Genius ſtand that way,) that are as great Strangers to them as Lucian s poor Man (always us'd to courſe Diet) is to delicious Fare, of whom he ſaith, (p) he never ſo much as dream'd of being fill'd with white Bread. Plato ſaith (in his Theætetus,) that Diana did not allow barren Women to be Midwives, becauſe of their want of Experience in matters of Child-birth; Anacharſis derided immuſical Men, that took upon them to judge of Muſicians. The unexperienc'd in things are generally thought unskilful in them.

Many things cannot be known but by Experience and Obſervation, they are unconceivable and unimaginable to them, that have not ſeen them, nor known any thing like them, to which they may be compar'd. (q) Quos vidimus nunquam, qui ſint, ſcire quemadmodum poſſumus? Thoſe whom we never ſaw, how can we know who they are? Can we know their Make and Mould, their Phyſiognomy and Complexion, if in their whole kind they are Diſſonant from all that we are acquainted with? How then can we know the Nature of God (the Divine Nature) the Divine Image, the Divine Affections and Tranſactions of the holy Life (their true Species and Idea,) if we have no acquaintance with any thing of like Nature? (r) We learn ſome things by the teaching of others, and ſome things by ſight. If one telleth you, that in India there is an Animal of a Nature heterogeneous to all other, but ſuch or ſuch, multiform and various, ὐκ ἂν πρότερον εἰδείης ἢ ἴδοις αὐτό· You cannot know it, till you ſee it, nor have you a word to ſay of it, unleſs you hear him that hath ſeen it. (s) As if we had not ſeen the ſenſitive fair things and apprehended them (which they cannot do that are Born blind,) we could not expreſs them in words: So neither the Pulchritude of Studies and Sciences (and ſuch like things) if we were not poſſeſs'd of it. So vital goods and Evils cannot be known otherwiſe than by Senſe and Experience, and acquaintance with the things themſelves. (t) For who can teach by Words and Names the difference between the ſweetneſs of a Date and a Fig? (u) What is ſweet, or not ſweet, is not apprehended but by Experience. This the Jews obſerve, and upon this ground ſome of their beſt Writers build the Pre-eminence of their Nation; for they ſuppoſe, (w) that God was known to their Nation only בטעם וראיה by Taſt and by Viſion, according to that of the Pſalmiſt, taſt and ſee, that the Lord is good. But the vital Good that God is, deprav'd Palates cannot Taſt; it fareth with them as with thoſe in the Jaundies, (x) τοῖς ἰκτεριῶσι τὸ μέλι πικρόν. to them Honey is bitter. Nor can the Divine Pulchritude, which is the beauty of Holineſs, appear to the unholy (as white cannot appear to the Eye infected with an Icteriſm,) the blind cannot know Colours (but have ignorant Conceits and Apprehenſions of them,) nor they the things that are ſpiritually diſcerned. The only way therefore to have the knowing diſcernment of things Spiritual and Divine, is to become Spiritual and Divine, agreeably to that Maxim of the Philoſophic Pagans τὸ ὅμοιον τῷ ὁμοίῳ γινώσκεται, like is known by like. So Empedocles wrote. We know Earth by Earth, Water by

(l) P. 279. 293, 294.

1 Joh. 5. 19.

(m) S. Parker Cenſure of the Plat. Phil. p. 67.

(n) Eugubin. de Per. Phil. l. 1 c. 11.

(o) Pirke Aboth c. 2.

(p) 'Ου δ' ὄναρ λευκῶν ποτε ἄρτων ἐμφορηθεὶς. Iraquel. de nobil p. 169.

De ſapientibus ſolus ſapiens poteſt judicare.

(q) Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 7. p. 211.

(r) J. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 221.

(s) Plotin. En. 1. 6. c. 4.

(t) Τίς γὰρ δύναται ὀνομα διαφορὰν δεῖναι ποιότητος γλυ κύτητος φοίνικος καὶ γλυκύτητ ἰσχάδος; Orig. c. Celſ. l. 6. p. 320.

(u) Coſri p. 343.

(w) Ibid. p. 295.

(x) V. Gat. in Ant. p. 255.

by Water, Air by Air, and Fire by Fire; Friendſhip by Friendſhip, and Contention by Contention.

Γαίῃ μὲν γὰρ (φησι) γαῖαν ὀπώπαμεν ὕδατι δ' ὕδωρ, &c.

Vital Sanctity * is as neceſſary for the knowing diſcernment of the matters of Vital Sanctity, as the Sence of Seeing, Hearing, Smelling is for the knowing diſcernment of Sights, Sounds and Odours. Who can know what Muſical Harmony is, that never heard Harmony, nor hath a Muſical Ear? No Catechiſms or Syſtems of Theology can teach the knowing diſcernment of ſpiritual vital Goods, but S. Auſtin's Saying of Honey belongeth to thoſe Divine Sweets. Qui non guſtaverit, non intelliget, he that taſteth it not, can never have the knowing diſcernment of it. Unholy Mankind therefore (through their unacquaintedneſs with the things themſelves) are incompetent for knowing and judging of the matters of Sanctity; of which there are ſome ſo Arcane, that the Holy Ghoſt ſaith of them, no Man knoweth them ſaving he that hath them. So in all Religions there are ſome things ſo Arcane, that none know them but the ἐπόπται, interiour Spectators. The Chriſtian Rites are called (y) Secreta Cœleſtia, Celeſtial Secrets. From a certain Goſpel Clemens citeth this ſuppos'd Saying of our Lord, (z) Myſterium meum mihi & filiis domus meæ, my Myſtery (or Secret) is to my ſelf and to the Sons of my Houſe.

* Sentitur antequam diſcitur. S. Cypr. Ep. 2.

Apoc. 2. 17.

(y) Selden. de Synedr. l. 3. c. 15. S. 4.

(z) Strom. l. 5. p. m. 421.

CHAP. VIII.

1. The firſt Conſectary of Practice from the Idea of God. His Subjects and Servants owe unto him ſuch Honour and Service which is proper to his degree. 2. They owe unto him whatever is Honour and Service to him. 3. They owe unto him the Utmoſt and Total of their Honour and Service. 4. They owe unto him their Sovereign Soul-honour and Service. 5. They owe unto him the Honour and Service, which is not communicable without the Crime of Idolatry.

I. DUTY to God is a due Correſpondence to his Idea. This Conſectary of Practice therefore naturally iſſueth from it in the firſt place; his Subjects and Servants (of Right and by Obligation ſuch) owe unto him ſuch Honour and Service, which is proper to his Degree. They owe unto him Honour and Service that of Right and by Obligation are his Subjects and Servants. All Rationals are under the vaſteſt Obligations, to be Good and Dutiful, Virtuous and Religious towards God. There is ſufficient Cauſe and Reaſon, why it muſt be ſo, and it may not be otherwiſe. There is no doing otherwiſe, ſo as to do well (tolerably well,) or to be and fare tolerably well. For the Name of an Atheiſt (Speculative or Practical) and of an ungodly Sinner, are Names that involve in them a Troop of the moſt foul atrocious Names imaginable. They denote an Ignaro, a Fool, a Clown, an Owl and Night-bird, an infamous Slave, a baſe Varlet, (devoid and depriv'd of all Spiritual and Divine Goods, and replete with and ſubjected to all the contrary Evils,) a foul polluted execrable and abominable Miſcreant, a Brutiſt, a Leper, a Dog, a Swine, a Viper, a profane ſacrilegious and contumelious Wretch, a blackned Criminal, a capital Malefactor, an Alien, a deadly Enemy, a Rebel, a Traytor, a Villain (as doing the moſt villainous things and being in the State of a Villain,) a Liar, a Thief, a Cheat, a Regicide, a Deicide, a Reprobate, a Diaboliſt, a Child of Hell, (a) iniquitate feralium Criminum, by his horrendous Criminality. Mankind may not act repugnantly to the Aptitude and Congruity of things, nor contrary to their End and Uſe; nor may they do any thing not allowable or tolerable, nor do ſuch foul things towards God, that are intolerable to be done to Men; nor may they do the Evil and Devil-kind of things, nor may they be horridly unnatural, ungrateful, unjuſt, baſe and unworthy towards him; nor may they deſpoil him of his Godhead and of all his Excellency, or deſpoil themſelves of all true Worth and Excellency; they may not make themſelves ſordid infamous Varlets, or make the holy God ſuch by putting Diſgraces and pouring Contumelies upon him; nor may they make themſelves vile and odious to extremity in Diſpoſition and Practice, State and Condition. They are therefore under the vaſteſt Obligations, to be Good and Virtuous towards God. If there were no Dues to God on our part, there could be no Dues amongſt Men (to Parents or Magiſtrates,) no humane Society and Government, no Order, no Laws, no tolerable living in the World. The Nations of the World therefore (as the Jews ſpeak) have their Religion, they have it in high Eſteem, Glory in it, and eagerly Conteſt about it. Their natural Inſtincts, the diſcernments of their Underſtanding, the dictates of their Reaſon, their Sence of Conſcience, their Hopes and their Fears proclaim, that they muſt be Religious. Nature furniſheth them with many fair Notices of the Exiſtence of a Divine Potentate over the Univerſe and an immenſe Benefactor (whoſe Subjects, Dependents and Beneficiaries they are,) and that they ought to be affected and behave themſelves becomingly and ſuitably to thoſe tranſcendent Excellencies which he is in himſelf and to them; and accordingly it is the voice of the World of Mankind (as bad as it is,) and of the worſt of Men when they fall into Adverſity, that they owe Honour and Service unto God.

(a) S. Cyr. ad Demetrian.

The Honour and Service which we owe unto God, is ſuch as is proper to his Degree and Dignity; for this is his Honour and Service (it belongeth to him,) he is worthy of it, may reaſonably require it, it is Juſt and Due, that he ſhould have it; to deny it to him is multifarious Wickedneſs, and no other is agreeable to him but this alone. His Degree and Dignity is the Creature-tranſcendent Soverignty, the Rights and Dues whereof (that belong to it and Conſtitute it) are the Creature-tranſcendent. His Dues of Honour and Service therefore are in degree the Creature-tranſcendent Honour and Service. If he is a God he is a Creature-tranſcendent Honour and Eſtate of Nobilitation; and he alone is ſo, if he is God alone. His Tranſcendence therefore of Degree and Dignity challengeth from us all the Creature-tranſcendent Honour, rendreth all other Honour incongruous to him, and maketh this Tranſcendent Honour peculiar to him alone. He is not honour'd but by ſuch Honour, which is Creature-tranſcendent. To love him with an underling under-graduate Love, is not to love him, but to be alienated from him and inimical to him; not to be his Lovers, but the Lovers of his Corrivals; not to be well-affected towards him, but villainouſly diſaffected. (It is not the Virtue and Duty of loving him.) Such Honour is to him an heinous Diſhonour, a nefarious deſpiſing, undervaluing and vilifying him, a degrading him into vile rank and place. (b) This is the ſhort and true definition of Virtue, it is the ordinate placing of things in our eſteem and affection. A due diſtance muſt be made between God and Creatures, as the Pagan Theologers ſay of Humane and Divine things, (c) to ſeparate them from each other according to the difference of the Excellent from the Vile. The Creatures muſt not be rais'd above their Rank and Degree, God muſt not be degraded: His Honour the Roman Clemens calleth, (d) τὴν μεγαλοπρεπῆ καὶ ἔνδοξον θρησκείαν τοῦ ὑψίστου, the magnificent and glorious worſhip of the moſt High. Such is the Religious Worſhip, which in all the Branches of it involveth ſomething of Creature-tranſcendence. It muſt be called The God-honourary Service and Worſhip, and contradiſtinguiſh'd to the Man-honourary Service and Worſhip; for there are but theſe two legitimate Species of Honourary Service and Worſhip. A great eſteem and affection we owe to the glorify'd Saints and the holy Angels; but this is no ſuch thing as a Saint-honourary Service and Worſhip, an Angel-honourary Service and Worſhip. An Inſtitution of ſuch Honourary Service and Worſhip is neceſſarily an Inſtitution of the God-honourary Service and Worſhip miſplac'd upon undue Objects; for there is no middle Sovereignty between the Divine and Humane.

II. We owe unto God (which is proper to his Degree) whatever is a doing Honour and Service to him. For by the ſame reaſon that we are bound to any thing that is a doing Honour and Service to God, we are bound to all and every thing, that is a doing Honour and Service unto him. Piety may be defin'd the Buſineſs of doing Honour to God; (e) for the whole of duty to Superiour Relations is compris'd in the Name Honour. And Piety may be defin'd the Buſineſs of being his Servants; who are bound to neglect nothing, that is a real ſerving him internally or externally, actively or paſſively, by way of abſtinence or performance. Their bounden duty (which immediately reſpecteth God) is, to regard him and be mindful of him, to take him into their thoughts and meditate upon him, to contemplate his Works admiring him and them, to ſeek acquaintance with him and to know him, to have right apprehenſions of what he is, to believe his Exiſtence, and not to diſcredit and diſhonour him by any Unbelief, but to credit and honour him by Faith; to acknowledge him to be God, the one only true God and our God, to become his Religioniſts and Adherents, his Subjects and Servants both in ſtate and fact; to repent and be converted unto him, to abandon whatever is contrary or inimical to him, or that cometh in competition with him (all Evil Religion as well as Evil Life, and together with Sin all other oppoſites to an Holy Life,) to eſteem and value him aright, and to love him, as all his friendly Relations muſt love him; to make him and his holy felicitative things the Objects of their Deſire and Delight, to be his Confidents and Dependents, rightly to hope and truſt in him, to fear him and be duely humble towards him, to be duely reſign'd to his Will, ſubmitted to his Diſpoſals, patient under thoſe of them that are afflictive, and the better for them; to have a reſpectful Eye to him in their Affairs and Ways and in his Providences, duely to imitate and be aſſimilated to him, to be duely thankful for his Favours, obſervant of his Inſtitutions, obedient to his Laws, and out of a virtuous regard to him to practiſe all Virtues and Duties towards themſelves and others; to confeſs his Name and Religion, and to conciliate Honour to it; to be loyal and faithful to him and his Service and faithful Stewards of his Goods; to be duely concern'd for his Concerns, to have a due Zeal and Fortitude in his Cauſe, and to make him and his Intereſts the end of their Doings and of their Life; to be throughly devoted to him and to his Service, truly devout Perſons, ſuch as miniſter the Divine Service of Prayer and Praiſes (and other Sacrifices,) and pay a due devotional Reverence unto God; which devotional Reverence muſt expreſs it ſelf in a due honourary reſpect to the Things and Perſons that are peculiarly related to God. (f) The Diſciples of R. Eliezer made a viſit to him, and amongſt other things ask'd of him this great thing; Rabbi (ſaid they) teach us the way which may lead us to Life Eternal: His Anſwer was; When you would make your Prayer, bethink your ſelves firſt, before whom you ſtand, ſo doing you ſhall come to Life Eternal. Theſe enumerated duties of Piety occur in numerous places of Scripture; Eccl. 12. 1. Job 22. 21. Prov. 8. 6. Pſal. 10. 4. 50, 22. 25, 15. 14. 7, 8. 31, 24. 37, 4. 42, 1. 63, 6. 76, 11. 69, 9. 77, 12. 73, 25. 119, 94. 128, 148. 84, 10. 89, 7. Exod. 15, 11. 20, 3. Apoc. 15. 3. 1 Chron. 28, 9. Act. 17, 27. 20, 21. 26, 20. Job. 4. 22. 24. 15, 14. Numb. 20, 17. Deut. 6, 4. 10, 20. 26, 17. Dan. 6, 23. Joſh. 24, 15. Heb. 11, 6. 12, 9, 10. 13, 15. Iſa. 2, 3. 44, 5. 5, 12. 56, 6. Hoſ. 14. 8. Jer. 24, 7. Act. 24, 14. 8, 2. 13, 2. Matth. 15. 8, 9. 3, 15. 5, 16. Gal. 4, 30. 2, 19. Jam. 4. 8, 15. Ruth. 2, 12. Mic. 6, 8. Luc. 21, 42. Rom. 1, 21. 12, 12. Eph. 5. 1. 1 Pet. 1, 15. 2, 13. 2 Cor. 8. 5.

III. We owe unto God (which is proper to his Degree) the utmoſt and total of our Honour and Service; for it is not enough, to ſerve God a little (as Jehu ſpeaketh of ſerving Baal,) nor is it enough, to ſerve him a great deal with ſuch Extrinſicks (multitudes of Sacrifices,) which are on this ſide our being his faithful Servants; they give nothing valuable to him, that give not themſelves to him abſolutely, intirely and unreſervedly (without making any exception or with-holding any thing from him,) to ſerve him with their All (all that they are, have and can do;) that dedicate not their whole Man, Soul and Body and all that is theirs, to be wholly for his uſe and ſervice; for to be partially and mutilately affected towards his Honour and Service, is to be villainouſly and traiterouſly diſaffected. His loyal adherents faithfully devote themſelves, to live a Life of doing him ſervice, and to make that the whole of their Buſineſs, Drift and Scope, which is the whole of Man, Eccl. 12. 13. Rom. 14. 8. Their Heart is not divided, but is fully, ſingly and intirely for God and his Service; and their Rule is, to ſerve him, not remiſly, perfunctorily and by halves (ſuch little Piety is a great deal of Impiety,) but with all their Faculties and Affections, their Time and Talents, Abilities and Intereſts (all which muſt be given to him and imploy'd for him) and with all their Mind and Might.

(b) Definitio brevis & vera virtutis, ordo eſt amoris. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 15. c. 22.

(c) Κατὰ τὴν ὅλην τὰ τιμιώτερα διαφορὰν χωρὶς τιθέναι ἑκάτερα. Jambl. de Myſt. S. 1. c. 21.

(d) Ep. ad Corinth. p. 59.

(e) Exod. 20. 12. Matt. 15. 6. Eph. 6. 1, 2. 1 Tim. 6. 1. 1 Sam. 2. 30. Pſ. 50. 15. and 86. 9. and 96. 7, 8, 9. Prov. 3. 9. and 14. 31. Iſa. 25. 3. and 29. 13. and 43. 20, 23. Matth. 15. 8, 9. Joh. 8. 49. Numb. 14. 24. Deut. 1. 36. and 13. 4. 1 King. 11. 34. 2 King. 10. 32. Iſa. 56. 6. Ezek. 18. 21. Matth. 22. 23. Rom. 6. 20. and 14. 8. 2 Tim. 2. 22. Heb. 12. 4.

(f) Bux Syn. Jud. c. 5. p. m. 157.

2 Kin 18.

Τοῖς ἀνι- προςτάγ- μασι ἀνα- κειμένοι consecrated to his Precepts. Epict. diſſ. l. 2. c. 16.

God hath the utmoſt of their Eſtimation and the total of their appreciative Love; for they reckon, that the fulneſs of eſteem belongeth to the fulneſs of all Worth and Excellency (both of degree and kind;) that God is an infinite Good both in himſelf and to his People; that in having him (as their God) they have all that is worth the having, and in loſing him they loſe all that is worth the enjoying; that there is but one thing needful, to make their Happineſs and Miſery compleat and conſummate, which is his Favour and his Diſpleaſure; and they chuſe him and the Goods of his Kingdom for their whole portion and ſhare of Goods, the fulneſs of their Felicity. (g) That which he hath ſaid by the Prophet, I will be their God, what meaneth it, but that I will be That to them, whence they may be ſatiated: I will be all things to them that are honeſtly deſir'd by Men, Life, Health, Livelihood, Plenty, Glory, Honour and Peace, and all manner of Goods: So that of the Apoſtle is rightly underſtood, that God may be All in All. (h) In the uſual Expreſſions of devout Souls this high and raiſed eſteem for God appeareth, and in that of Paulinus, who when the Goths had ſack'd Nola, and plunder'd him of all, lifting up his Eyes to Heaven ſaid, Domine, ubi ſunt omnia mea, tu ſcis. A Muhammedan Devotioniſt may be allow'd, to ſpeak the Senſe of holy Souls. (i) The Son of one of that Profeſſion (Abu Obeidalla Sitrenſis) had an Hogſhead of Oyl, which brake as he was carrying it out of the Houſe into the Market-place, whereupon he made a great complaint, as having loſt his whole Stock, but his Father thus ſpake to him, O Son, get to your ſelf the ſame portion of Goods which is your Father's; verily I have nothing at all but God in the life preſent and that which is to come.

(g) Quid eſt enim aliud quod per prophetam dixit, Ego ero illorum Deus.—niſi, ego ero unde ſatientur: ego ero quacunque ab hominibus honeſtè deſiderantur, & vita, & ſalus, & victus, & copia, & gloria, & honor, & pax, & omnia bona. ſic enim & illud rectè intelligitur, quod ait Apoſtolus, ut ſit Deus omnia in omnibus. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 22. c. 30.

(h) Deus meus & omnia. Tu ſatis es nobis & ſine te nihil. habet omnia, qui habet habentem omnia.

(i) Erpen. Gram. Arab. p. 209

As God hath the fulneſs of their Appreciative Love; ſo their Rule and Practice is to love him with the utmoſt and total of their * affectionate Love (with nothing leſs than their whole Heart and Soul, Matth. 22. 37.) to let out the fulneſs of their Affections towards him without any ſtint or limitation. They have Love and Friendſhip for God in the Integrity of it (elſe they are not his Lovers,) they cannot duely with-hold or alienate any of their Love from him; they owe therefore the utmoſt and total of their Love to him. So the chief of the Schoolmen interpret that principal Law of God's Society and Sovereignty. (k) Unicuique præcipitur, ut Deum diligat quantum poteſt, every one is commanded to love God, as much as he can love any thing. S. Auſtin and his Followers ſuppoſe, that this Divine Law requireth the perfection of Charity (which is the perfection of Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs,) which is a reaſonable Interpretation; for the Divine Law is the perfect Rule of Righteouſneſs (of what ought to be done,) all Sin is a Deviation from that ſtraight Rule, which therefore can allow no ſinful failure or deficiency, nor require any thing leſs than abſolute ſinleſs Perfection. But the Rule of the Law of God muſt be diſtinguiſh'd from the terms of his Acceptance; for as he accepteth Sincerity in Piety, ſo he accepteth the utmoſt and total of our Love in Sincerity and Faithfulneſs, which is an Evangelical Perfection of Charity, 1 Joh. 2. 5. Whoſo keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected. If he keepeth his word in abſolute ſinleſs Perfection, he hath abſolute ſinleſs Perfection of Charity: If he is a faithful keeper of his word, there is no groſs or horrible flaw or defect in his Charity, in the main and according to the terms of God's acceptance (though not in rigour of Law) his Love is without defect, and what is without defect is perfected. In the ſame Senſe God muſt have (objectively) the utmoſt and total of his People's Love, and that in a threefold conſideration; as it is conſider'd intenſively, extenſively and comprehenſively. For the ſeveral words of this Divine Law that are heap'd upon one another (requiring that God be lov'd with all the Heart, Soul, Mind and Strength) denote the utmoſt and total of our Intenſive Love, (l) which is Love the moſt ardent and fervent (ſuch as the Pſalmiſt expreſſeth, Pſal. 18. 1. Erchomcha, I will love thee from the Bowels:) Nor is cold and languid Love to be counted Love ſo much as want of Love. The total of our Love conſider'd extenſively (which the Divine Law requireth) is Love as it extendeth it ſelf to all ſorts of Virtuous Love (the Love of Friendſhip, Deſire, Benevolence, Complacence, Gratitude commonly ſo diſtinguiſh'd) and to all the Duties and Offices of Love. The love of God muſt be for his own ſake and no viciouſly ſelf-intereſted Love (the love of Friendſhip;) it muſt be a deſiring ſeeking Love, an ardent benevolent Love (which earneſtly deſireth and endeavoureth, that no Evil, Injury or Prejudice be done to God, but that all Honour and Service may be done to him, as he that loveth any one hath a great concern for his Goods and Evils,) a complacential delighting Love, a returning thankful Love, an active diligent Love, and (occaſionally) a paſſive Love, a generous and bounteous Love (that ſticketh at nothing, but readily parteth with any thing for his ſake,) an Heroic Love (that contemneth and wreſtleth through all Difficulties and Hardſhips) a conſtant never-failing Love. His Friends and Lovers muſt not be deficient in the Duties of Piety; for this is Love and Friendſhip to him, faithfully to do the part of his Friends, to relinquiſh all contrary Friendſhips, to adhere to God and his holy Laws, ſtudiouſly to imitate and reſemble his bleſſed Nature and Practice, (eadem velle, eadem nolle,) to befriend his Intereſt, never to ſide with his Enemies, to love that which is related to him, to be the Lovers of Righteouſneſs and haters of Sin and Iniquity (ſo to have common Friendſhips and Enmities with God,) to be careful to pleaſe him and to keep his Commandments with Vigilance and aſſiduous Diligence, with Zeal and Alacrity, and בכל מאד with all exceeding, as the Hebrews ſpeak, Deut. 6. 5. The total of our Love is of a third Conſideration, as it is comprehenſive; for Charity to our Neighbour, our Selves and all (capable) Creatures is comprehended in the love of God, which is loving him for his own ſake and them for his ſake. We ought to love our ſelves from a Principle of love to God; which Divine Charity to our ſelves is not privative of Natural Self-love, but accumulative thereunto.

* Modus diligendi Deum eſt ſine modo diligere. S. Bernard. de diligendo Deo.

(k) Aquin. q. Davenant. præl. de Juſtit. actual. c. 42.

(l) Grot. in loc.

Amor Amicitiæ, Deſiderii, Benevolentiæ, Complacentiæ, Gratitudinis.

(m) Confeſſ. l. 10. c. 29.

unto. S. Auſtin therefore may be allow'd to ſay unto God, (m) Minùs te amat, qui tecum aliquid amat, quod non propter te amat; His love to thee is defective, who loveth any thing with thee, which he doth not love for thee. So the Subjects of God's Sovereignty ſuppoſe, who do not give to him a degree and meaſure of their Love and Friendſhip (which is Love with abatement,) but the utmoſt and total of their Love and Friendſhip; and conſequently they give unto him the utmoſt and total of their Honour and Service (which is beyond any ſtinted imperfect degree of Honour and Service,) for Man hath nothing more to give than the All of his Love. He that giveth the All of his Love, giveth the All of himſelf and all things with himſelf (his Will and his Love commandeth all the reſt, and carrieth all that he hath and can do along with it,) whence a Schoolman ſaith; Amor eſt primum donum, in quo omnia alia continentur: Love is the firſt gift, which compriſeth all other.

The Divine Law (according to this Expoſition of it) which requireth the All, the Whole, the Total of our Love, to be given unto God, doth not mean in a Senſe of Compoſition, nor in a Senſe of Confinement, but in a Senſe of Indeficiency and Perfection. It doth not mean in a Senſe of Compoſition, that all the parts of our Love compounded into one whole muſt be given to God (according to the Logical Definition of Totum:) Nor doth it mean in a Senſe of Confinement, (that we ought to love nothing but God, and ought not to have one degree of love for any Creature;) but it meaneth in a Senſe of Indeficiency and Perfection, that God muſt be lov'd without any abatement and diminution of Love, which is the utmoſt poſſibility of Man. So the Marianolatriſts profeſs to worſhip their Goddeſs totis Medullis cordis, totis præcordiorum affectibus, totis deſideriis, with all their Heart and Deſire. So the Pope pretendeth, to have the All or Whole of Eccleſiaſtical Power; and in ſuch Senſe our Saviour had the All or Whole of Power conferr'd upon him at his Reſurrection, Matth. 28. 18. And as this his Fulneſs or Intireneſs of Power doth not hinder, but that there is a ſubordinate Power of Creatures: So the Fulneſs or Intireneſs of our love to God doth not hinder, but that there is and ought to be in us a ſubordinate love of Creatures. To love the Creatures ordinately and regularly in conjunction with and due ſubordination to God, is not inconſiſtent with the Perfection of Charity in Man; for it maketh no Abatement or Diminution of the love of God, which is no more prejudic'd thereby than if the Creatures were not lov'd at all.

Prov. 4. 23. Matt. 7. 17. and 12. 35. and 19. 19.

IV. We owe unto God (which is proper to his Degree) our Supreme and Soveraign Soul-honour aud Service. The Honour and Service which the Subjects of God's Soveraignty owe unto him is their Soul-honour and Service; for the Piety and Sanctity of the inward Man is in it ſelf and its effects the All of Piety and Sanctity; as the Wickedneſs and Pravity of the Inward Man is in it ſelf and its Effects the All of Wickedneſs; as the Philoſophers call Man, (n) ψυχάριον βαςάζον νεκρὸν, a Soul carrying a Corps, and Chriſtian Writers call Men Animæ corporibus clauſæ, Souls inclos'd in Bodies: So to conceive aright of Piety and Sanctity, it muſt be conſider'd as the Piety and Sanctity of the Inward Man expreſs'd in External Actions; for it conſiſteth in the Piety and Sanctity of the Inward Man, and in External Acts only ſo far as they have the Piety and Sanctity of the Inward Man in them. The Inward Man is the only Seat and Subject of it, and it is the Virtue and Goodneſs, or the Vitioſity and Wickedneſs of the Inward Man, that maketh the Man and his Life, either Pious and Holy, or Impious and Wicked. The Piety and Sanctity of the Inward Man the Divine Lawgiver primarily and principally requireth, Prov. 3. 1. and 23. 26. Matth. 22. 37. It is both the Duty-part and the Benefit-part of his Covenant, Ezek. 18. 31. and 36. 26. thereby he maketh a Judgment and Eſtimate of Men, 1 Sam. 16. 7. It is the Piety and Sanctity of the True Man and Truth of Piety and Sanctity, Pſal. 51. 6. the Soul of Piety and Sanctity whereby all External Acts muſt be animated, elſe they are Soul-leſs, Lifeleſs, Heartleſs, Sapleſs, a Skeleton or Carcaſe. No Honour and Service done to God is valuable without it, but all ſemblances of Piety that are devoid of it, are Hypocriſie and Villainy, Matth. 15. 8. and 23. 25. This the Subjects of God's Sovereignty owe unto him peculiarly; for his Sovereignty is peculiarly the Soul-Sovereignty, and his Laws are the Laws of that Sovereignty. Humane Lords and Sovereigns are but Maſters after the Fleſh, their Sovereignty may be ſtil'd the Bodily Sovereignty, they pretend not to make Laws for Soul-concerns (peculiarly ſuch,) nor can they take cogniſance of the Inward Man (in the Territory of the Soul we have none to fear, or pleaſe, or approve our ſelves to, but God only,) nor have they power to inflict Soul-evils, or to beſtow Soul-goods (properly ſuch,) nor ought they to be ſerv'd with the Soul-honour and Service as the Sovereigns of our Hearts and Souls. All theſe are his Prerogatives, whoſe Sovereignty is the Soul-Sovereignty, to which Sovereignty Men and Angels owe a due Subjection of the Soul, who ought to have the Supremacy and Sovereignty in the Soul, and accordingly his genuine Subjects give unto him ſuch Honour and Service, which is the Supreme and Sovereign Honour and Service of the Soul; honouring him with the Sovereign Regard and Eſtimation, loving him with a Sovereign Love, fearing him with a Sovereign Fear, and making him their Sovereign Truſt. They give unto him that Obſervance and Regard, that Faith and Hope, that adherence and Dependence, thoſe Deſires and Delights, Intentions and Deſigns, that Veneration, Submiſſion and Subjection, which are the Sovereign Honour and Service of their Souls; and all ſuch Soul-honour and Service which is their Sovereign Honour and Service, they account his proper Honour and Service; for by this Honour he is ſet up in the place of God, (in that Sovereignty which belongeth to him) and is in the Soul, as he is in the Univerſe, Subject-tranſcendent and over all, Rom. 9. 5. By this Honour he is Deify'd (made God and our God) in Honour and Service, and we are conſtituted his genuine Subjects and Servants. From which account of Interiour Piety we may deduce a more particular account of the Love that is indiſpenſably due unto God (the like account muſt be given of other Duties of Piety;) for if God's Subjects and Servants muſt neceſſarily give unto him the Sovereign Love of their Souls, they muſt neceſſarily give unto him all ſuch Love, which is the Sovereign Love of their Souls; therefore they muſt give unto him peculiarly,

(1.) Their prime and chief Love. If God is not lov'd above all, if they give him not the Summity

(n) M. Ant. l. 4. S. 41.

Gen. 6. 5. 2 Chron. 22. 9. Pſal. 7. 10. and 58. 2. and 66. 18. Ezek. 18. 32. Matt. 5. 8. and 11. 29. Luc 8. 15. Acts 8. 37. and 11. 23. and 15. 9. Rom 10. 10. Heb. 3. 12. and 10. 22.

Gen. 15. 6. and 22. 1
1 Sam. 2. 2. and 3. 18 2 Chr
15. 15. Pſal. 4, 6. 20, 7. 6
1, 3. 73, 25. 76, 7. Prov. 3
Iſa. 8. 13. Matth. 6. 24.
10. 28, 37. and 13. 44.
14. 33. Rom. 14. 7, 8. Phil.
7, 8. Jam. 4. 4. 1 Joh. 2. 1
Apoc. 22. 9.

Summity and Top-flower of their Eſteem and Affection, if he is not uppermoſt in their Regard and deareſt to their Affection (the chief and ſovereign good of the Soul,) they can be none of his Friends and Lovers. (o) The loweſt degree of Divine Love is, that nothing be lov'd above or againſt God or equally unto him: Whoſoever falleth ſhort of this degree of Perfection, doth not at all fulfill the Precept. The Philoſopher ſaith of Hercules; (p) His Familiars were his Friends, but he ſuppos'd, that nothing muſt have more friendly Affection from him than God. So the devouter Pagans gave the Supremacy of their Eſteem and Affection to their Idol Gods. (q) One that was initiated into the Myſteries of Mithras had a Crown offer'd him, which he took and put upon hisHead, and preſently took it off again ſaying, Mithram eſſe coronam ſuam, that Mithras (his God) is his Crown.

(2.) Their predominant and prevailing Love. For he that weareth the Crown and ſwayeth the Scepter, is neceſſarily the chief Ruler. God is not ſet up in the Sovereignty that belongeth to him in any Soul that is not rul'd and ſway'd by him: Nor are any ally'd to him as his Subjects and Servants, that are Rebel-ſinners, or under the Reign of Sin; that are not obedient to him as his Subjects aud Servants, but live as their own Maſters, or are under the rule and ſway of the contrary inimical Powers, to which they belong and whoſe Partiſans they are, that are the Children of Diſobedience. The Servants of Sin cannot be his Servants, whoſe Service is (r) better not only than Liberty, but than the greateſt Kingdom: Nor can the World's Adherents be at the ſame time his Adherents, Matth. 6. 24. Jam. 4. 4. In his Subjects and Servants therefore (that are actually of his Ligeance and Obedience) not the worldly and fleſhly intereſt, not mundane and fleſhly Concupiſcence is regnant, predominant and prevailing (where theſe are the prevalent and regnant things, the Man is in the State of Carnality and Wickedneſs:) But a Love for God is regnant, predominant and prevailing againſt all oppoſites in the Soul and Life (for the main at leaſt,) the prevalent bent and byaſs of the Soul is for God and his Intereſt, which conſtituteth them his Subjects and Servants, Godly affected and addicted in prevalent degree, and ſuch as live the Life of living unto God. The Pagan Theology maketh every Man's Genius a God, and to this God the Philoſopher would have Men make ſuch an Oath as the Soldiers did to Cæſar. (s) They Swear, that they will prefer the Welfare of Cæſar before all things. So the Subjects of Gods Sovereignty in their holy Covenant abandon and relinquiſh all things, ſo far as they come in Compariſon or ſtand in Competition with their Divine Sovereign, ingaging themſelves to prefer and pleaſe, and ſerve him above and before All, which ſpeaketh the Supremacy of their Eſteem and Affection for him.

Joh. 8. 34. Rom. 6. 16, 22.

(3.) Their peerleſs and incomparable Love (t) according to the uſual Sayings of holy Men, for they reckon that there muſt be no compariſon between the regard which they have for Creatures, and that which they have for the Creator, that his Name alone is Excellent (all other are comparatively vile and contemptible;) that Creatures which are in Dignity and Power, are to be regarded, valu'd and fear'd as nothing in compariſon of God; that their Racks and Inquiſitions are but Flea-bitings compar'd with Divine Wrath; that Sin is therefore exceeding ſinful, becauſe it is ſinning againſt God; that a little of God (of the Good that he is as his kind of Good) is better than all the World, that Millions of Worlds cannot compenſate the loſs of God, that they are ſafe and happy, invincible and invulnerable having his Favour, and miſerable to extremity under his Diſpleaſure; that his Preſence turneth their Priſon into a Paradiſe, but to be forſaken of God and under his Frowns, is the Quinteſſence of Hell. All which Religious Computations of things ſpeak a regard and love for God incomparable beyond all Competition. What is Earth to Heaven? A Moment to Eternity? The World to God, or mundane Friends compar'd with this Sovereign and Divine Friend? All theſe Externals are riff-raff Stuff (σπιλὸς ὁ θησαυρὸς,) not worthy to be named in the ſame day with God and Piety; yet theſe are the things that prevail and ſway, that have more intereſt in Men, and can do more with them, to divert them from their Duty, than God and his Commands to enforce it; which ſpeaketh them lovers of Pleaſure and of their worldy Concerns and Precioſities more than lovers of God. 2 Tim. 3. 4.

(4.) Their only great Love (the total of that Love which is aloft and exalted in the Soul;) for all external things that are on this ſide God and his Kingdom, muſt have only a depreſs'd and ſubordinate Love. They are not the Divine Lovers, that part not with their Earthly All for the Kingdom of God's Sake. His Adherents muſt look upon all worldly human Excellencies and Precioſities (Wit, Parts, Power, Wealth, Beauty, Pomp, Splendor,) all worldly Felicities and voluptuous Enjoyments (all things that Fleſh and Blood doateth upon and admireth,) this mortal Life and all its Intereſts and Accommodations, as vile forſaken things; in due and great degree they muſt be alienated from them, never more having any great Concern or Affection for them (to the prejudice of Piety,) nor making any great account or reckoning of them, nor having any thing more than a mean and underling regard for them. All theſe things muſt be depreciated and ſet at nought, abandon'd (in Eſtimation and Affection) and called Nebuſhtan, σκύβαλα, and a dead Carcaſe. The Lovers of God and Piety count the worſt things in Piety (the reproaches that attend it) better than the World's beſt things (all its Preferments and Precioſities,) they look for no great matters here below, nor are theſe things of great conſideration in their Eyes; what others magnifie they make light of, and they are ſaid (u) to relinquiſh their mundane Relations, Subſtance and all their Poſſeſſions, becauſe they live without (mundane) Affection. The World muſt be to them in great degree a nigrum nihil and loathſom Spectacle, its Treaſures as Pelf and Traſh, its Glory as Pageantry, its Fineries as Fancies, its ſenſitive delights as Dreams, its buſineſs as (comparatively) trifling Impertinence, its Subſtance as a Shadow, Matth. 19. 21, 22, 27. and 16. 24, 25. and 13. 44, 45, 46. Luc. 14. 26, 33. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Gal. 6. 14. Phil. 3. 7, 8. 1 Cor. 13. 1, 2. Matth. 8. 22. Heb. 11. 26. 2 Cor. 4. 17.

(o) Infimus Divinæ dilectionis gradus eſt, ut nihil ſupra Deum, aut contra Deum, aut æqualiter Deo diligatur: à quo gradu perfectionis qui deficit, nullo modo implet præceptum. Aquin. 2. 2. Qu. 184. Art. 3.

(p) Συνήθεις ἔσχε φίλους, ἀλλ' οὐδὲν φίλτερον τοῦ Θεοῦ. Epict. Diſſ. l. 2. c. 16.

(q) Tertull. de cor. mil. in fine.

(r) Τῆς μεγίστης ἀρχῆς, οὐκ ἐλευθερίας μόνον ἀμείνων. Philo περὶ φυτουργ.

(s) Ὀμνύουσι πάντων προτιμήσειν τὴν τοῦ Καίσαρος σωτηρίαν. Epict. Diſſ. l. 1. c. 14.

(t) Cuncta parvi deputo præter Deum. Omnis copia quæ Deus meus non eſt, egeſtas mihi eſt.

(n) Ἀπολιπεῖν μὲν γένος τὸ κοσμικὸν, ἀπολιπεῖν δὲ οὐσίαν καὶ κτῆσιν πᾶσαν, διὰ τὸ ἀπροσπαθῶς ζῆν. Clem. Strom. p. m. 351.

(w) Porphyr. in vit. Platin.

(x) The ſelf taught Philoſ. p. 149.

(y) Pocock. Spec. p. 297.

Shadow, and this earthly Life (w) as πικρὸν κῦμα, a bitter Wave, or God is not lov'd. The Muhammedan Devotioniſts ſay, (x) the two Worlds (this and the other) are like two Wives belonging to one Husband, the one whereof if he ſeeketh to pleaſe, he provoketh the other to anger. (y) Qui ſe mundi & creatoris ejus amorem in corde ſuo pariter fovere dicit, mentitur. If a Man be infected and impoiſon'd with a worldly diſpoſition, his Heart is neceſſarily alienated from God and Piety. The Godly affected and addicted, and the Worldly affected and addicted are two contrary kind of Men. Chriſtians forſake the World in ſo great a degree, that this is the Language of their common Profeſſion, (z) we have no Concern in this World but (well and) ſpeedily to get out of it. A Chriſtian can deſire nothing of the World being greater than the World. God and Piety ſtand ſingular and alone in their eſtimate, their chief and only regard and obſervance is towards him, their chief and only care is to pleaſe him, their chief and only Hope and Truſt is in him, their chief and only Joy is in his Favour and Felicities, their chief and only buſineſs is his Service, their chief and only deſign is the Intereſt of his Kingdom, their chief and only deſire is after him and the Goods of his Kingdom, they ſee no valuable and conſiderable Wealth or Honour, Pleaſure or Proſperity, Safety or Felicity but in Piety and all things on this ſide Piety they account Vanity.

(z) Nihil noſtra refert in hoc ævo, niſi de eo quàm celeriter excedere. Tertull. Apol. c. 41. Nihil appetere jam, nihil deſiderare de ſeculo poteſt, qui ſeculo major eſt. S. Cypr. Ep. 2.

(5.) The unbounded fullneſs of their Love. For there is no Good beyond Piety, to which it ought to be ſubordinated, and by which it muſt be bounded and limited. God and Piety ought to be lov'd as much as any thing can be lov'd, deſir'd as much as any thing can be deſir'd, priz'd as much as any thing can be priz'd, according to that of Gr. Naz. (a) tunc dignè æſtimatur (Deus) cùm inæſtimabilis dicitur, God is then rightly eſteem'd, when he is counted ineſtimable. A Canoniſt ſaith; In donationibus factis Eccleſiæ optima menſura eſt rerum donatarum immenſitas. So if we would know in what degree and meaſure God is to be lov'd, the Anſwer is, God cannot be over-valu'd, nor overlov'd, therefore Immenſity is the meaſure.

(a) Orat. 49.

(6.) Their Love at the deareſt rate of Love. For ſo God muſt be lov'd and ſerv'd at the deareſt and coſtlieſt rate, whatever we loſe, do or ſuffer, whatever becometh of us in this World. At this rate Abraham ſerv'd God, when he offer'd up his only Son, and ſo did that excellent Woman, that lov'd her ſeven Sons moſt affectionately, yet when their temporal Proſperity came in Competition with Piety, ſhe choſe to have their Skin flead off, to have them fry'd in a Pan, and boiled in a Chaldron, rather than they ſhould diſobey God and his Law. So all that will be God's Servants and have him for their God, muſt chuſe his Service with all its Difficulties and Incumbrances, not declining the moſt hazardous, coſtly fleſh-diſpleaſing and diſcountenanc'd Duties, cutting off the Right-hand, plucking out the Right-eye, rather than they ſhould withdraw them from his Service; the World muſt be forſaken for him and their deareſt ſecular Intereſts (as Piety requireth) they muſt count nothing too much for him, nothing too good for him, ſtick at no Labour or Sufferings for the gaining his Kingdom, buying it at any rate, but at no rate muſt loſe or part with him, or do him any diſſervice; nothing muſt hire them (not all the Treaſures of Egypt) to offend him by any wilful Sin; they muſt not break with him upon any terms, but be always ready to let all go and caſt all over-board, that they may ſtick to him, and nothing may intercept their Love and Obedience. Sanctity and Piety muſt be with them no underling good, Sin muſt be no underling Evil, but an Evil above all Evil, a Calamity greater than any other Calamity; they muſt be for Sanctity and Piety and againſt Sin and Iniquity (all Sin and Iniquity) at any rate; they muſt make it their one thing and their All to be God's Servants, and muſt ſerve him with their All, and with the loſs of all their worldly Enjoyments (when they are called to it) reſiſting even unto Blood, ſtriving againſt Sin. There are ſome Sayings of Chriſtian Theologers, that ſpeak a dearer and coſtlier rate of love to God, than I have mention'd, which ſeem to be generous and pious, although God doth not put his Servants upon ſo hard an Election, as to be willing to be damn'd for his Glory, or to chuſe Hell rather than Sin. But it is reported in the Life of Anſelm, that his Friends often heard him ſay, If he ſaw with his bodily Eyes the horrour of Sin on the one hand, and the pains of Hell on the other, and muſt neceſſarily immerſe himſelf in one of them, he would chuſe Hell rather than Sin. Zuinglius ſaith, (b) Quas non oportet mortes præ-eligere, quod non ſupplicium potius ferre, imò in quam profundam inferni abyſſum non intrare, quàm contra conſcientiam atteſtari? Theſe Sayings expreſs an infinite and boundleſs hatred of Sin, agreeably whereto a Romiſh Pamphlet ſaith, If a venial Sin would ſave a Nation and the World it ſelf from being deſtroy'd, it is ſo far from being lawful to commit it, that we ought to periſh rather than to do it. (c) S. Thomas and other Doctors teach, that if the burning of the whole World and the eternal Damnation of all Mankind might be avoided by telling one Lye, the deſtruction of the World and ruin of Mankind ought rather to be permitted, than wittingly to tell a Lye, were it in a matter of ſmall moment. A better Author than the School-Doctors ſaith; (d) although Hell ſeemeth terrible to many, yet I will not ceaſe to ſay continually with a loud voice, that this thing (to offend Chriſt) is more grievous and formidable than Hell. S. Chryſoſtom exhorteth all his Auditors, to be thus minded; and if to holy Men Sin is more grievous and terrible than Hell it ſelf, it cannot reaſonably be thought hard meaſure, to be oblig'd, to prefer God and Piety before all worldy Advantages, and practically to count Sin and Wickedneſs worſe than all ſecular Evils. At this rate Pagan Philoſophers profeſs an Averſation from Vice and Improbity; (e) nothing ſhould deter them from practiſing what is virtuous, nothing ſhould allure them, to do what is vicious. But he that loveth his Riches better than God, will rather Sin than ſuffer Poverty. He that loveth his Credit better than God, will rather deny and forſake him than ſuffer Diſgrace. He that hath any thing higher in his eſteem

2 Maccab. 7. Gen. 39.9. Numb. 14. 24. Job 36. 21. Prov. 23. 23 Matth. 5. 29, 30. and 7. 13, 14 and 10. 37, 38. Marc. 14. 4. Luc. 7. 38. Act. 4. 34, 35. Gal. 1. 10. and 5. 24. Rom. 14. 8. Phil. 1. 21. 2 Tim. 2. 5, 12. Heb. 12 4. Apoc. 2. 2, 3. and 14. 4.

(b) Ep.

(c) Fulv. Androt. devout conſider. of frequent. the Bl. Sacram. p. 225.

(d) 'Ει γὸ ϗ πολλοῖς ἡ γέ εννα φοβερὸν εἶναι δοκεῖ, ἀλ ἐγὼ ἐ παύσομαι συνεχῶς, βοῶ ὅτι τῦτο (τῷ χριςῷ προσκρ) γεέννης ϗ χαλεπώτερον ϗ φο βερώτερον. S. Chryſoſt. in Matth. Hom. 36.

(e) Vir bonus quod hone facturum putaverit, faciet, e amſi laborioſum erit; faciet e amſi periculoſum erit. Rur quod turpe erit, non faciet, e amſi pecuniam affert, etiam voluptatem, etiamſi potentia ab honeſto nullâ re deterrebit ad turpia nullâ ſpe invitabit Sen. Ep. 76. Nemo juſtus poteſt, qui mortem, qui dolore qui exilium, qui egeſtatem met, aut qui ea quæ

and

traria æquitati anteponit. Cic. de Off. l. 1.

and dearer to his Affections than God, is at the Heart a Traytor to him, and will openly forſake him at a time of trial. To love and ſerve God therefore in an underling, undergraduate and diminutive way, (who muſt be lov'd and ſerved in the Soveriegn and Supreme way,) this is not to be his Subjects and Servants, but Aliens and Enemies. Such are all Hypocrites, that will go a little way in Religion, and ſerve God a little heartleſly, remiſly, unfaithfully, and upon the bye only, allowing him no other God-ſervice but what wicked and worldly kind of People can well ſpare, which is conſiſtent with their Convenience and with their Carnality and Wickedneſs of Mind and Life. God and Piety are not the things that their Hearts are ſet upon, they will not ſerve him with their beſt and their all and at any rate, nor allow him the total of his Honour and Service, not the utmoſt and total of their Honour and Service, not their Sovereign and ſupreme Soul-Honour and Service: But the mundane things and their fleſhly felicitatives have the chief of their Regard, Eſteem and Affection, and of their Care and Endeavour.

V. We owe unto God (which is proper to his degree) ſuch Honour and Service, which is not communicable without the Crime of Idolatry. Idolatry (which is εἰδωλοποιΐα, the making an Idol) may fitly be diſtinguiſh'd into two Kinds: The Devotional and the Spiritual; the one of which conſtituteth an evil Religion, the other conſtituteth an evil Life. Of the Devotional Idolatry there are three eminent Branches; for part of it is idolatrous Opinion (or Attribution,) part of it is idolatrous Affection, and part of it is idolatrous honourary Practice. Of theſe three Ingredients the Pagans and Pagano-Chriſtians devotional Idolatry is compounded; for in their Mind, interiour Opinion and Eſtimation they give unto Creatures and Figments the incommunicable Excellencies of God. And they give to them that Devotional Submiſſion and Subjection of Soul, repoſe that Truſt and Hope in them, exerciſe that dependence upon them, and have that mighty regard and love for them, which is proper to God alone, whereby they become their Idols. The Prophet heapeth Expreſſion upon Expreſſion, to ſet forth the immenſe devotional Affection, which Idolaters have for their Gods, Jer. 8. 1, 2. A Third part of the Pagans and Pagano-Chriſtians Devotional Idolatry is their idolatrous honourary Practice in erecting to the illegitimate Objects of their Devotion Temples and Altars, burning Incenſe, making Oblations, Prayers, Hymns, Thankſgivings and Vows to them, ſwearing by their Names, paying them the Religious Adoration in the geſture of their Mind and Body, appointing Prieſts and celebrating Feſtivals for their Honour and Service, conſecrating their Images (giving to them alſo the Religious Worſhip,) and doing Service unto them which by Nature are no Gods. Gal. 4. 8. The Pagano-Chriſtians ſuppoſe a middle Service and Worſhip (called Dulia) between the Divine and Human: But in this they delude themſelves; for they that tranſcend the Man-honourary Service and Worſhip immediately and neceſſarily proceed to the God-honourary Service and Worſhip, as appeareth from that Man-Idolatry, of which Princes, Popes and other great Perſons are the Objects; and from the account which one of their own Hiſtorians giveth of the entrance of the Duke of Guiſe into Paris and the Peoples manner of receiving him. (f) There was a kind of Madneſs in this Tranſport, or rather in this furious torrent of Joy, which was ſo extravagant, that it paſs'd even to Idolatry. —— ſome there were amongſt them, who kneeled to him, when he was paſſing by, and others, who when they could not reach him with their hands, endeavour'd to touch him with their Chapelets, which they kiſs'd, when they had receiv'd that honour, as the cuſtom is in adoration at the ſhrines of Saints. Something of like Nature with this Idolatry is not unuſual in the World; for its Grandees uſually arrogate to themſelves ſomething of a Deity, and the People of ſilly, weak, degenerous Minds (ſtruck with the admiration of mundane Gauds) are as prone, to aſcribe it to them, as they are to arrogate it to themſelves; and this ſort of Idolatry is called by Fileſacus Idololatria Politica. Iſa. 47. 8. Ezek. 28. 2. and 29. 3. Act. 12. 22.

The Political Idolatry may be reduc'd to the Devotional, and (in many Inſtances) the Spiritual Idolatry reſembleth the Devotional. (g) For we are told of a People (Carabaroi) in the Southern America, who believe, that there is a Numen in Gold. At certain times of the Year they imploy themſelves in gathering it, and all the time of gathering it they abſtain from Venery and all Pleaſure and Eat and Drink ſparingly. According to the Religion of their Anceſtors none may gather it but thoſe that are expiated and pure. As theſe barbarous Religioniſts devotionally Deify and Idolize Gold: So all the worldly avaricious ſpiritually Idolize and Deify Mammon. It is their Numen, ſummum bonum, their optimus maximus and their Jove. —— clauſum poſſidet arca Jovem. The Servitors of Mammon (that are none of God's Servants) by an idolatrous Eſteem and Affection, and Service and Truſt (ſuppoſing, that it will maintain them in a mundane happy Eſtate, which they count their Happineſs) make it their Idol and their Jove, their God and their All. That Law therefore ye ſhall not follow Idols, Philo interpreteth figuratively, to be of this meaning; ὅτι πλούτῳ τιμὰς ἀπονέμειν ἰσοθέους οὐ προσήκει, we may not give the Honours proper to God to worldy Riches. The World is to its Admirers and Lovers the great God Pan, and of ſome Senſualiſts the Apoſtle ſaith, their God is their Belly, (h) they deifie it in Honour and Service, it is their God and their All. The Life of unholy Mankind is an Idolatrous loving, ſerving and pleaſing the Fleſh (their Animal Senſitive Nature;) the pleaſures of it are their Sovereign Good, and they ſerve it with their All and at any rate. To make Fleſh our Arm, is alſo a Branch of Spiritual Idolatry, and much of it appeareth in the Self-idolizing Sin of Pride. The old Heathen Gods (Bacchus, Venus, Pluto) have their Worſhippers and Servitors in great number in all Religions. (i) Thou wilt ſay, thou do'ſt not Worſhip Venus, Mars, Mammon, becauſe thou do'ſt not bow thy ſelf to them: But thou giveſt them Worſhip much more by Works and Deeds; for this is the greater Worſhip. Conſider, who it is, that more Worſhip God; is it they that only ſtand in Prayers, or is it not they that do his Will? So it is with Mammon (or Bacchus,) It is they that do his Will, that more Worſhip him. (k) To Sacrifice the Soul to a Vice, is far more than to Sacrifice Sheep and Oxen to Images.

(f) Maimbourg. Hiſt. of the League p. 338.

(g) Hoffman. umbr. in luce p. 115.

De Monarch. l. 1.

(i) S. Chryſoſt. in Epheſ. Hom. 16.

(h) Avarus aurum, guloſus ventrem, libidinoſus penem & Beelphegor colit: Laſciva mulier, quæ cùm ſit in delitiis vivens mortua eſt, adorat venereas voluptates. S. Hieron. com. in Amos c. 2.

(k) Τοῖς μὲν ξοάνοις βοῦς καὶ πρόβατα θύουσιν· Ἡ δὲ φιλαργυρία λέγει, θῦσόν μοι τὴν σαυτοῦ ψυχὴν καὶ πείθει. Idem in Joan. Hom. 65.

CHAP. IX.

1. The Second Conſectary of Practice from the Idea of God, that our Piety and Religion muſt be ſuch as is of his Kind and Quality. 2. The firſt deſcriptive Notice of ſuch Piety; it is what is Truth of Piety and Religion. 3. A Second deſcriptive Notice of it; it is what is Truth of Piety according to the Religion of Soul-Intereſts. The Moſaic Law was a Civil-religious Inſtitution. 4. The great Precepts of it expounded according to that Hypotheſis. 5. The Moſaic Law was a Covenant of Civil-religious Repentance and Remiſſion of Sins. 6. Agreeably whereto the Doctrine of the Prophets is repreſented. 7. The Civil-religious Truth of Piety requir'd by this Law was both the Real and Perſonal. 8. A Third deſcriptive Notice of God's kind of Piety, it is the true and genuin kind of Piety.

I. A Second Conſectary of Practice naturally iſſueth from the Idea of God; that our Piety, Religion and Godlineſs muſt not be a Piety-leſs kind of Piety, a Religion-leſs kind of Religion, a Godleſs kind of Godlineſs, which is not of his Kind and Quality. It is like ἄλας ἄναλον, Salt without Salt, βίος ἄβιος, a Life-leſs Life (that is Life in one ſenſe not in another,) φίλος ἄφιλος, a Friendleſs kind of Friend, δῶρον ἄδωρον, a Giftleſs Gift, μήτηρ ἀμήτωρ, a Motherleſs Mother (in Sophocles,) and the Idol-ſhepherds, that are Shepherds not Shepherds: So a cowardly Souldier is a Souldier no Souldier, a wicked and ſlothful Servant is a Servant no Servant; (l) the Proverbs of Ben Sira call a profligate Son בר דלא בר a Son no Son, and the Greek Riddle calleth an Eunuch (m) a Man no Man. So the Philoſophers uſually ſay, that in a bad Man ἀπώλετο ὁ ἄνθρωπος, the Man is loſt, becauſe of his Morals he is a Man-no-man, a Man-beaſt, a Man-wolf, or a Man-ſwine, (n) θηρίον ἀνθρωπόμορφον, a Beaſt in the ſhape of a Man. (o) Some of us (ſaith the Philoſopher) are great Beaſts, and others little ill-moral Beaſts. The inordinate Domination of the Paſſions (p) doth not ſuffer Men to be Men. Non omnes homines homines ſumus. Eſt homo homo; & homo non homo. All of us Men are not Men, ſaith Origen. There is Man-man, and there is Man not-man. The greateſt part of Mankind conſider'd as Men are an unmankind of Men; conſider'd as Religioniſts they are an Irreligious kind of Religioniſts; and the greateſt part of pretending Chriſtians are an Unchriſtian kind of Chriſtians. Religioniſts therefore muſt be diſtinguiſh'd into two oppoſite Kinds and Families: God's kind of Religioniſts, and the mundane kind of Religioniſts, whoſe Religion is a Religion-leſs kind of Religion. For it is not by being no Religioniſts that the greateſt part of Mankind are loſt (almoſt all the World are ſome ſort of Religioniſts,) but by being none of God's kind of Religioniſts, who alone are ally'd to him, own'd and accepted by him to the purpoſe of eternal Life and Salvation. The reſt of Mankind are Religioniſts alienæ familiæ, not of his Alliance and Cognation, but of an Exotic kind, to whom he is Alien and Inimical. Such ſpurious kind of Religioniſts were the Heathen World, whoſe Piety was (q) Pietas impia, an impious kind of Piety; and ſuch Religioniſts were the carnal Jews, that needed a total Repentance and Converſion to God, were the Children of the Fleſh, not the Children of God, not Abraham's genuin Children, but the Servants of Sin, a Diabolical Brood, and an adulterous Generation. Which Phraſe Synecdochically denoteth a very naughty Generation, as in our Language a very naughty Woman ſignifieth an adulterous Woman. Such are the wicked, carnal and mundane kind of Religioniſts, who (being in their Graceleſneſs and Wickedneſs) are in the main none of God's kind of Religioniſts, whoſe Piety therefore muſt be denominated a Piety-leſs kind of Piety, a Religion-leſs kind of Religion, which is not conſtitutive of God's kind of Religioniſts, the truly Holy, Spiritual and Divine kind of Religioniſts. But his kind of Piety and Religion is that which is conſtitutive of his kind of Religioniſts (the Saint of God-kind of Religioniſts) and this is a general definitive Notice of it. With which general Notice we will not content our ſelves, but to give a clear and particular account of it, we will add theſe three deſcriptive Notices of it. It is what is Truth of Piety and Religion (both the Real and the Perſonal,) it is what is truth of Piety according to the Religion of Soul-intereſts, it is the true and genuin kind of Piety, Religion and Virtue.

Marc. 9. 50. Zech. 11. 17. Ezek. 14. 5, 8.

(l) Druſ. Proverb. Ben Sir. initio.

(m) Plato 5. de Rep. ſub fin.

(n) S. Chryſoſt. in 2 Cor. λογ. 5.

(o) Οἱ μὲν ἡμῶν μεγάλα θηρία εἰσὶν, οἱ δὲ θηρίδια κακοήθη. V. Gat. in Ant. p. 302, 356, 360.

(p) Οὐδὲ ἀνθρώπους ἐφίησιν εἶναι τοὺς ἀνθρώπους. Ibid.

(q) Lactant. l. 5. c. 21. Act. 3. 26. Rom. 9. 8. Joh. 8. 34, 39, 44. Matth. 12. 39.

Matth. 7. 21, 22, 23. Luc. 13. 26, 27. Rom. 8. 9, 14. 2 Cor. 13. 5. Gal. 5. 24. 1 Joh. 1. 6. and 2. 4. and 3. 2. and 4, 7, 8. 3 Joh. 11. Joh. 15. 14. Rom. 6. 20. Apoc. 2. 9.

II. In the firſt place his kind of Piety is what is truth of Piety and Religion both the real and the perſonal, for true Religion denoteth both what is truth of Religion ex parte rei (or the real,) and what is truth of Religion ex parte perſonæ, or the perſonal. The former of theſe may be underſtood from what the Father ſaith; (r) Religion is not to be ſought either in the blundering of Paganiſm or the blindneſs of Judaiſm. The latter of them may be underſtood from the ſame Father's Appellation of ſome Pagans, (s) the true Worſhippers of falſe Gods. The truth of Piety and Religion real is the Inſtitution of the true Religion, which the one true God is the Deity of, which acknowledgeth him and is acknowledged by him. (t) Nor are they likely to make Progreſs to Salvation, who miſſing the true ſalutary way, the further they walk, the further they go out of the way. The more Righteous they are according to the guiſe of falſe Religion, the more wicked and unrighteous they are; for their Religion it ſelf is Unrighteouſneſs. A true Religioniſt therefore muſt be of the true Religion real, and therewith he muſt combine the truth of Piety and Religion perſonal (which is, to be faithful to God and his Service;) for without Integrity and Uprightneſs of Heart Mens honouring God is not true honouring him, but an henious deſpiſing him and con-

(r) Neque in confuſione Paganorum, neque in cæcitate Judæorum quærenda eſt religio. S. Aug. de ver. rel. c. 5.

(s) Falſorum Deorum non fallaces cultores. De C. D. l 1. c. 24.

(t) Nec ambulando proficiunt ad ſalutem, qui ſalutaris [illegible] non tenent veritatem. S. Cypr. de Unit. Eccleſ.

Joſh. 24. 14. 1 Sam. 12. 24. 1 King. 2. 4. and 3. 6. 2 King. 20. 3. Pſal. 51. 6. and 97. 11. Joh. 1. 47. Pro. 15. 8. Pſal. 66. 18. Iſa. 1. 11, 12. Matth. 15. 8. Luc. 16. 15. 1 Tim. 4. 2.

temning him; their ſerving God is not due ſerving him, but mocking and abuſing him; their Religion is both a Vanity and a Villainy in Maſquerade; their Sanctity is not Sinleſneſs, but double Iniquity; their Sacrifices are not Atonements, but Sins and Provocations; their Piety is not truth of Piety, but an abominable Lye, and deadly Wickedneſs and Hypocriſie.

Truth of Piety and Religion therefore is oppoſite to a twofold Species of Irreligious Religion: Superſtition and Hypocriſie. Superſtition is falſe Religion, as falſe Religion is oppoſite to what is Truth of Religion real: Hypocriſie is falſe Religion, as falſe Religion is oppoſite to what is Truth of Religion perſonal. The former is Cheat-religion in reſpect of the truth of the thing; the latter is Cheat-religion in reſpect of the Perſon's Truth and Honeſty of Heart. It would be Pedantry and Trifling, to make a Diſpute about the uſe of the Greek word δεισιδαιμονία, or the Latin word Superſtitio (which doubtleſs (u) have been us'd in a good Senſe,) or to confine the Notion of them to what they ſignifie according to their Etymologies: (w) Which overſight hath occaſion'd Learned Writers (both Pagan and Chriſtian,) to overlook the true and general Notion of Superſtition, as it ſignifieth in a bad Senſe. If Men would conſult their own Minds, what they mean, when they reproach any thing by the Name of Superſtition, they would eaſily diſcern, that Superſtition is not only the worſhip of Demons, nor only δειλία πρὸς τὸ θεῖον, an over-timerouſneſs and exceſs of fear of the Deity, nor only a criminal nimiety and exceſs in Religion; but whatever Men account Falſe Religion (as Falſe is oppos'd to Truth of Religion real,) they uſually brand with the reproachful Name of Superſtition. (x) Religio veri cultus eſt, ſuperſtitio falſi, Religion is the Name of the true Worſhip, Superſtition of the falſe. So ſome Lexicographers interpret the word (y) falſus Dei cultus, and from A. Gellius, inepta religio, inept Religion. So Varro muſt be underſtood, when he ſaith; (z) Majores noſtri ſuperſtitionem à religione ſeparaverunt, our Anceſtors diſtinguiſh'd Religion from Superſtition. So Learned Men of the Church of Rome ſay, (a) Religio in virtute, ſuperſtitio in vitio ponitur, Religion denoteth the Virtue, Superſtition the Vice. So in Philo and Clemens, εὐσέβεια, Piety, ſtandeth oppos'd to two Vices, ἀθεότης or ἀσέβεια, which is no Religion, and δεισιδαιμονία, Superſtition, which is falſe Religion. (c) So in S. Hierom and the Latin Fathers generally (in whoſe Writings the word Superſtition frequently occurreth) every thing is called Superſtition, which they account falſe or inept Religion. (d) The Chriſtians call the Pagan God-ſervices Stultæ atque Irreligioſæ Superſtitiones, (e) Mimus Religionis, fooliſh and irreligious Superſtitions, the Ape of Religion, (f) they condemn omnia ſuperſtitionum genera quæ extra religionem Dei ſunt, all kinds of Superſtitions, which are without God's Religion; (g) they complain, that Superſtitionibus falſis religio vera ſubvertitur, true Religion is ſubverted by falſe Superſtitions. And the Pagans return upon them the ſame Language, and call their Religion, (b) nova & malefica ſuperſtitio, exitiabilis ſuperſtitio, a new and maleficent and peſtilent Superſtition. Superſtition and falſe Religion are manifeſtly terms ſynonymous in this Saying of Tacitus, (i) Gens ſuperſtitioni obnoxia, religionibus adverſa, and in this other Saying of an Hiſtorian; (k) nulla res efficaciùs multitudinem regit quàm ſuperſtitio. —ubi vanâ religione capta eſt, meliùs vatibus quàm ducibus ſuis paret: Nothing more effectually governeth the Multitude than Superſtition. When they are taken with vain Religion, they obey their Prophets better than their Commanders. Magical Spells therefore, Ligatures and Characters (matters of the Religion of Demonolatry) are rightly call'd by S. Auſtin (l) Execrable Superſtition. The Heathens Obſervations of lucky and unlucky Days, of Divinatory Signs and Omens (matters of their Religion of the Gods which govern'd their Divination) are rightly call'd by the ſame Father, ſignificationes ſuperſtitioſæ, ſuperſtitious ſignifications; and the ſame Vanities amongſt pretending Chriſtians ought to be reputed, not only an exceſs of Credulity (as a Learned Man (m) ſuppoſeth) but properly Superſtitious; for which a very good reaſon is given by an ancient Writer, (n) Qui hæc ſervat, ex parte paganus eſſe dignoſcitur, he that obſerveth theſe things, is known to be in part a Pagan. The Chaldeans Aſtrological Divinations (matters of their Religion of Aſtrolatry) are rightly call'd by S. Ambroſe (o) Vain Superſtition: (p) As the ſetting up Images of the Gods is called by another Father Superſtition, and whatever appertaineth thereto he rightly calleth Superſtitious. The Phariſees (that conceited themſelves mighty Saintiſts becauſe of their Fringes and Phylacteries) are call'd by S. Hierom (q) ſuperſtitioſi Magiſtri, the ſuperſtitious Maſters; and for the ſame reaſon the Aſceticiſm of the Philoſophic Pagan Saintiſts is call'd by S. Hilary Superſtition. (r) We ſee the Philoſophers cold and naked, they abſtain alſo from the very uſe of Marriage: Hereticks alſo live on dry Bread; but what advantage is there of this idle Inſtitution? the whole of it is vain and ridiculous, and to be lamented together with the cauſes of the Superſtition. The Opinion which the Phariſees had of their Phylacteries, that as holy and religious things they were of Virtue, to drive away Diſeaſes and Devils, and their wearing them from ſuch Opinion, was vain and falſe Religion; S. Hierom therefore rightly calleth certain Women (s) ſuperſtitioſæ mulierculæ, to whom little Goſpels and the Wood of the Croſs were the ſame thing that Phylacteries were to the Phariſees. Criminal Externalneſs and Rituality in Religion (t) is rightly call'd Superſtition; whence S. Auſtin ſaith, (u) Dicitur ſuperſtitioſis regnum Dei intra vos eſt, the Superſtitious are told, the Kingdom of God is within you. To make thoſe things Sanctimony and Religion (or matters of Sanctity and Religion) which are not really ſuch, is therefore Superſtition, becauſe it is falſe Religion. Whence S. Auſtin (w) calleth the religious obſervance of our own Phantaſms and timiditas in cæremoniis, an over-timerous ſcrupuloſity about indifferent Rites by the reproachful Name of Superſtition. So they that obſerv'd the Rite of waſhing before Prayer (x) are call'd by Tertullian Superſtitious. (y) And becauſe we have mention'd one thing (ſaith he) which is a vain Obſervation, we will take notice of the reſt alſo, that are deſervedly accounted Vanities, ſeeing they are done without the Authority of any Precept of our Lord or his Apoſtles, hujuſmodi enim non religioni ſed ſuperſtitioni deputantur, for ſuch things are not to be accounted Religion, but Superſtition. (z) So the Jews reverence in entring the Temple and for the Name Jehovah is called Superſtition.

A Learned Man therefore is extreamly beſide the Cuſhion, (a) who will ſcarce allow the Follies and Vanities of the Church of Rome, to be called Superſtition; and he can find no other Superſtition amongſt Proteſtants ſave only

the

(u) Dr. Ham. of Superſtit. and on Act. 17. 22.

(w) Plut. M. Tyr. Mr. Smith. Dr. H. More Ench. Eth. l. 2. c. 5.

(x) Lactant. l. 4. c. 28.

(y) Calepine.

(z) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 6. c. 30.

(a) Petav. T. 4. par. 2. l. 15. c. 1. S. 7.

(c) In Iſa. 57. 10.

(d) S. Hier. in Pſ. 34.

(e) Lactant. l. 2. c. 19.

(f) S. Hier. in Pſal. 4.

(g) S. Cypr. ad Demetr.

(h) Sueton. in Neron. Tacit. 15. Annal.

(i) Hiſtor.

(k) Q. Curt. 4.

(l) Ep. 73.

(m) Dr. Hammond ſupr.

(n) De rectitud. Cathol. Converſ. inter op. S. Aug. T. 9.

(o) De Abraham, l. 1. c. 4.

(p) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 4. c. 30.

(q) In Matth. 23. 5.

(r) In Pſal. 64.

(s) In Mat. 23. 5.

(t) Grot. de V. R. C. l. 5. S. 8.

(u) De ver. Rel. c. 3.

(w) Ibid. & Ep. 118.

(x) De orat. c. 11.

(y) Ibid. c. 12.

(z) Cunæus de Rep. Heb. l. 2. c. 13. Epiſcop. Inſt. Theol. l. 3. S. 1. c. 1.

(a) Dr. Ham. Tr. of ſuperſtit. S. 42, 43.

the dogmatizing miſtake (the impoſing as things neceſſary ſuch as the Law of Chriſt hath not made neceſſary;) whereas Cicero's complaint is not out of date, that Superſtition hath overſpread all Nations. Good Men (eſpecially thoſe of weaker Judgment) have in ſeveral Inſtances their Superſtitions, (b) S. Auſtin lamenteth one of them, wicked carnal Religioniſts, that only ſo far profeſs the true Religion, as to be devoid of the Truth of it (of which they are regardleſs) uſually ſubſtitute inſtead thereof ſome vile Superſtition; Proud Ignorant Religioniſts have their Helena's of fond Conceits and Modes, which are a Religion of their own deviſing; the ſeveral Sects and Churches into which Chriſtendom ſtandeth divided, diſtinguiſh themſelves by their Superſtitions. (c) The Armenian Patriarch of Jeruſalem, being deſirous to prove the Sanctity of his Church and Religion, to be greater than that of the Greeks or any other, brought it for an Argument, that they not only abſtain from Fleſh and Fiſh in Lent, but even alſo from Beans and Peaſe, which the Greeks allow'd of, conſulting more the Inclination of their Appetite than true Religion. (d) This I am very much troubled at (ſaith S. Auſtin,) that many Salutary Precepts in the Bible are little regarded, and Preſumptions every where ſo abound, that he is more grievouſly reprehended, who in his Octaves toucheth the Ground with his bare Foot, than he that burieth his Soul in Drunkenneſs. Superſtitioniſts are of various degrees; for many are Superſtitioniſts in ſmall Inſtances, that are not ſuch in the main: Nor can any (within the Pale of the Church) be Superſtitioniſts in the main, unleſs they be alſo Hypocrites in the main; nor would their Superſtition be deadly, if it was not complicated with deadly Hypocriſie. Such a Superſtitioniſt was Lewis the Eleventh of France, who was wont to ſwear and kiſs his Crucifix, to ſwear again and to kiſs it again, which ſpeaketh him both a deadly Superſtitioniſt and a deadly Hypocrite. An Hypocrite in Religion is in the main devoid of faithfulneſs to God and his Service, and therefore is fitly defin'd a perſonated Pietiſt, (e) as the word ſignifieth, and as ſome have called the Philoſophers (f) Philoſophos perſonatos, perſonated Philoſophers.

III. Secondly, God's kind of Piety is what is truth of Piety according to the Religion of Soul-intereſts; which is ſuch a truth of Piety and Virtue, as ſaveth from Carnality and Wickedneſs, and is eternally ſaving to the Soul. To this truth of Piety and Virtue, which muſt be denominated, The Spiritual-religious, we muſt confront and oppoſe another truth of Piety and Virtue, which muſt be denominated The Civil-Religious; which although it is far from being abſolutely and according to the Religion of Soul-intereſts truth of Virtue and Piety, yet it is truth of Piety and Virtue both real and perſonal according to the Religion of Secular Intereſts. To illuſtrate theſe diſtinct ſorts of truth of Virtue and Piety, it is neceſſary to ſurvey the Moſaic Law.

Which was —— { A Spiritual-Religious Law covertly.
A Civil-Religious Law expreſly.

Conſider'd as a Spiritual-Religious Law it was { Old Spiritual-religious Law, Rom. 7. 14. and 8. 4.
In ſome reſpects New Spiritual-Religious Law, 1 Cor. 10. 11. 2 Cor. 3. 3. Col. 2. 17.

As a Spiritual-Religious Law therefore it muſt be conſider'd { In a larger Notion as comprehending and including the Goſpel.
In a narrower Notion as contradiſtinct and oppoſite to the Goſpel.

This Delineation of the Moſaic Law ſuppoſeth (what is evident,) that it was a Law of Religion, which requir'd Piety, and conſequently Truth of Virtue and Piety. Accordingly, as a Spiritual-religious Law it requir'd the Spiritual-religious Truth of Virtue and Piety, and many that liv'd in the Times of it were true and genuine Saints of God (ſuch as the Patriarchs were before the Law,) whoſe Truth of Virtue and Piety was the Spiritual-religious (according to the Religion of Soul-intereſts,) although they were Symbolical and Holy-land kind of Pietiſts, whoſe Piety was in ſeveral Inſtances diſſonant from the Piety of the New Teſtament. But as it was a Spiritual-religious Law (which is an Inſtitution of Holy Spiritual Life in order to Spiritual and Eternal Soul-intereſts:) So all acknowledge, and the thing is manifeſt, that it was the Political or Civil Law of the Jews; which implieth, that it was a Civil-religious Law, which is an Inſtitution of Civil-religious Life in order to Secular Intereſts; for unleſs there can be a Commonwealth of Atheiſts, if Religion is the Foundation of the Commonwealth (as Plato, Xenophon, Plutarch and others have diſcours'd,) the Civil Law of every Common-wealth muſt neceſſarily be a Civil-Religious Law; and conſequently the Civil Law of the Jews muſt be Civil-religious; but Religious at an higher rate than ordinary Civil Laws as containing an expreſs Contract between God and them, that he would be their King and their God (in Society,) and that they would live in Society with him as his People. Such a Contract muſt neceſſarily found and conſtitute an Holy-popular Commonwealth; yet not an Holy-popular Commonwealth meerly ſuch (for the People of Iſrael were not as the Chriſtian Church is, meerly an Holy-popular Commonwealth,) but ſuch a Civil Society and Government as was alſo an Holy-popular Commonwealth. Ordinary Commonwealths take care of the ſame things with the Law of Moſes, of the Conſtitution and Adminiſtration of the Republick, of Magiſtrates and Judges higher and lower and their Offices, of Liberty and Servitude, of Inheritances, Contracts and Commerce, of Juſtice (the Fountain of Civil Happineſs,) of Civil and Criminal Cauſes, of War, Marriage and Divorce, of the Rights of Citizens, their Virtue and good Behaviour, but eſpecially of Religion, its Prieſts, Temples, Sacrifices, Ceremonies, which muſt be accompany'd with Moral Duty and Virtue. Ariſtotle (no great Religioniſt) ſpeaketh the common Sentiment of the Heathen World in conſtituting a Commonwealth; (g) πρῶτον ἡ περὶ τὸ θεῖον ἐπιμέλεια, the firſt and principal care is Religion. The Founders and Lawgivers of Pagan Commonwealths conſtituted them agreeably to their Notices of the end of man, (h) that he is made to live without Inordinacy, and for Religion no leſs than for Civil Juſtice. The Laws of Pagan Commonwealths therefore agree with the Law of the Jews in this their general Nature, they were Civil-religious, νόμος πόλεως, the Law of the Civil-Society, Civilis Diſciplina, their Civil Diſcipline; Jus Civile, their Civil Law, and are called by Varro

(b) Ep. 118.

(c) S. P. Rycaut. preſ. ſtate of the Greek Church. p. 35.

(d) S. Aug. Ep. 119.

(e) Grot. Not. in Matt. 6. 2.

(f) Betul. in Lactant. de ira Dei, c. 22.

Exod. 19. 5, 6, 8. Deut. 5. 2, 27. and 26. 17, 18. and 20. 12, 13. Ezek. 16. 8.

(g) Pol. l. 7. c. 8.

(h) Πρὸς ἰσότητα κ̀ θεο- βειαν κατεσκευάσθαι, ὐκ ἧττον πρὸς δικαιοσύνην. M. Ant. l. 11. c. 20.

Varro their Civilis Theologia, Civil Theology, as the Jews Religious Inſtitutes were the Law of their Commonwealth, Reſ-publica Judaica. The Attick and Roman Laws agree with the Law of the Hebrews touching things Civil, the Ritual Inſtitutes of the Law of the Hebrews anſwer to the Ritual Inſtitutes of Pagan Commonwealths, and in the Civil Law of ſome Pagan Commonwealths there was an Immenſity of Religious Inſtitutes much what at the ſame rate with that of the Hebrews. Babylon that was mad upon her Idols, the Egyptians (that were (i) θεοσεβέες περισσῶς μάλιστα πάντων ἀνθρώπων, exceſſively Religious above all Men,) Athens alſo and Rome (whoſe δεισιδαιμονία ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον ἐκτετραγώδηται, Superſtition is rais'd to ſuch a pitch, (k) ſaith the Hiſtorian) ſeem not to have come behind Judea in numeroſity of Religious Inſtitutes. Plato in his fourth of Laws inſtituting a Commonwealth after the Cretian, Athenian and Lacedæmonian Model appointeth Prayers, Oblations and other Divine Worſhip firſt for the Celeſtial Gods and thoſe that preſide over the City, next for the Terreſtrial Gods, and in the next place, Sacrifices for the Demons and Heroes, and then follow the Statues of the Country Gods conſecrated κατὰ νόμον, according to Law. At this rate the Heathen Lawgivers and Founders of their Commonwealths purſu'd their Maxim (that in conſtituting a Commonwealth the firſt and principal thing is Religion,) the Humour of the World in thoſe times was, to multiply their Gods and their Sacra to an immenſe Rabble, which ſeemeth to be one reaſon of the vaſt Numeroſity of the Rites of Religion in the Moſaic Inſtitution. The Heathen Lawgivers and Founders of Commonwealths propos'd to themſelves Rempublicam ſanctiſſimam, a moſt holy Commonwealth, (l) ſuch a Commonwealth Moſes erected, they pretended, to derive their Laws from ſome God or Goddeſs (at leaſt they would have their Laws recommended by an Oracle, as Lycurgus's were,) Moſes really deriv'd his Laws from the true God; as he erected a Theocracy, (m) ſo the Athenians by the Advice of the Oracle conſtituted Jupiter their King. As the Moſaic Inſtitutes are not meer Ritualities, but Ritualities with a mixture of Morality both towards God and Man; ſo the Civil Laws of Heathen Commonwealths took care of both Tables; the Imperial Laws injoyn'd the great Moralities towards Man (honeſte vivere, neminem lædere, pactis ſtare, to live honeſtly, to hurt none, to keep Covenants, and it is Moral Duty towards the (Heathen's) Deity, which the twelve Tables injoyn, Ad Divos adeunto caſte, pietatem adhibento, opes amovento, let the Gods be worſhipp'd chaſtly, with Piety, not with Riches. In the Civil Laws of ſeveral Pagan Commonwealths (n) there are ſome things that belong to the Morality of the Mind; and generally their Civil Laws are capable of that diſtribution, which is uſually made of the Moſaic Law, they may be divided into Ceremonial, Moral and Judicial. As the Law of the Pagans Religion therefore (being their Civil Law) muſt be called Civil-Religious, ſo the Law of the Hebrews muſt be denominated. And as thoſe Religious Societies, the Pagan Commonwealths, were all of them Civil Societies, and yet were ſo many Churches or Synagogues of Satan; ſo the Commonwealth of Iſrael was both a Civil Society and the Church of God, agreeably to the Character of their Law which was Civil-Religious.

Jer. 50. 38.

(i) Herod. l. 2. c. 37.

(k) Polyb. l. c.

(l) Cunæus de Rep. Hebr. l. 1. c. 1.

(m) Spencer. diſſ. de Theocrat. Jud. c. 3.

(n) In Zaleuci & Charondæ legibus & 12 Tabulis quædam inſerta erant, ad animi caſtimoniam pertinentia. Grot. Not. in Matth. 5. 17.

IV. The truth of this Character of their Law is viſible in the Sanction of it; for that literal old Covenant as ſuch was meerly a Settlement of the Commonwealth of Iſrael, and of the Bleſſings of the Land of Canaan. God undertook to be their God, that they ſhould be a Theocracy, and to give them all the Bleſſings of the Holy Land, and they undertook to acknowledge him for their God, and to worſhip and ſerve him according to the Law which he gave them, which implieth truth of Virtue and Piety. But this truth of Virtue and Piety which they promis'd on their part, was but the Civil-religious, as the Priviledges and Bleſſings which God covenanted for on his part, were but the Civil-Religious and Secular; for the Moſaical Covenant in the whole tenour of it covenanteth for nothing but Civil-religious Priviledges and Bleſſings; all the Promiſes of that Covenant are nothing more than Secular Felicities, and freedom from Temporal Calamities, and the Threatnings of it are nothing more than Temporal Calamities, Exod. 15. 25, 26. and 23. 25, 26. Lev. 25. 18, 19. and 26. 3, 4, &c. Deut. 7. 12, 13, &c. and 28. 2, 3, &c. and 29. 1. 24, 25. Heb. 7. 19. and 8. 6. and 9. 15. 2 Tim. 1. 9, 10. The Law as it is the literal Law-Covenant, Old Teſtament or ſettlement of things (the Law of the Commonwealth of Iſrael) is an Inſtitution of the Civil-religious Virtue and Duty in order to the Intereſts of this World, which are the only Sanction thereof. The grand Precepts of it therefore muſt be ſo expounded, as to have a different Senſe and meaning; the one according to the Spiritual-religious or Spiritual-moral Law (both the Old and New, which is Spiritual and Divine Morality: The other according to the Civil-religious Law and Life, which is but a Judaical Humane kind of Morality; for it is not imaginable, that the Spiritual Religious Virtue and Duty ſhould be requir'd meerly in order to Secular Intereſts. The Precept of loving God with all the Heart and Soul, as it is the Condition of the Civil-religious Covenant, requireth of the Iſraelites nothing more, than to be Adherents unto, and Religioniſts of the God of Iſrael in the Civil-religious way with all the Heart and Soul, in oppoſition to the being Revolters or Worſhippers of falſe Gods, who alone are ſaid to hate God, (o) as Maimonides affirmeth. So the great Law of loving thy Neighbour as thy ſelf, as it is the Condition of the Civil-religious Law, requireth of the Iſraelites nothing more than this Humane kind of Morality, to love their Neighbour in a Civil-religious way with a civil neighbourly kind of Love, and ſo far as Civil Society and the good Neighbourhood thereof requireth (according to thoſe Meaſures) every one's Neighbour muſt be unto him as himſelf. So the great Commandments of the Decalogue as they are a Condition of a Civil-religious Covenant, require only a Civil-religious abſtaining from Murder, Adultery, Theft, Falſe Witneſs, coveting that which is another Man's, an eſchewing thoſe Criminalities ſo far as they are oppoſite to that Righteouſneſs which is requiſite in Humane Society and Morality. So the young Gentleman that came to our Saviour, underſtood them, when he pretended to have kept them from his Youth; and ſo ſeveral of the Hebrew Doctors (p) miſtake their Law for want of underſtanding the different Conſiderations of it.

(o) Mor. Nev. par. 1. c. 36.

(p) Grot. Not. in Matth. 5. 20.

V. The Moſaic Law in the Letter of it is a Covenant of Civil-religious Repentance (Reformation of Life) and of Civil-religious Remiſſion of Sins.

That it is a Covenant of Repentance and Remiſſion of Sins is viſible throughout the Old Teſtament, wherein God is repreſented as a God of Pardons, that taketh away Iniquity, putteth away Tranſgreſſion as a Cloud, covereth it, blotteth it out, caſteth it behind his Back, caſteth it into the depths of the Sea, as gracious, and that waiteth to be gracious, not keeping Anger for ever, but in Wrath remembring Mercy, repenting him of the Evil, delighting in Mercy, and abundantly pardoning. To Moſes he proclaim'd his Name The Lord merciful and gracious, forgiving Iniquity and Tranſgreſſion; and this Proclamation of his Name was made upon Mount Sinai, and immediately ſubjoyn'd to the renewing the two Tables of the Law, which ſheweth it, to be a part of the Moſaical Covenant (as the Jews have always ſuppos'd it,) and that the Moſaical Covenant aſſureth a certain Pardon of Sin upon a ſort of Repentance. One Branch of this proclaim'd Name of God which our Tranſlators render that will by no means clear the guilty, is thus rendred by Onkelos in his Targum, ſparing them that turn to his Law; and thus the ancient Hebrews underſtood it (ſaith P. Fagius,) they ſuppos'd their Law to be a Covenant of Repentance and Remiſſion of Sins. So the proclaim'd Name of God is uſually alledg'd (q) in the Old Teſtament as virtually his Promiſe and Covenant; which is a competent proof, that the Moſaical Covenant is a Covenant of Repentance and Remiſſion of Sins. But the expreſs tenour of it is a plain demonſtrative proof of it (that putteth the matter quite out of doubt,) and it plainly demonſtrateth alſo, that this Covenant's Remiſſion of Sins is (not pertaining to the Conſcience, Heb. 9. 9.) but Civil-religious which is obtained by a like Repentance, 2 Chron. 7. 13, 14. If I ſhut up Heaven, that there be no Rain, or if I command the Locuſts to devour the Land, or if I ſend Peſtilence among my People: If my People which are called by my Name, ſhall humble themſelves and pray, and ſeek my Face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from Heaven, and will forgive their Sin and will heal their Land. So God himſelf repreſenteth his Moſaical Covenant and Diſpenſation of things, ſo it is repreſented in the Books of Moſes, Lev. 26. 40, 41, 42. Deut. 4. 27, &c. Deut. 30. 1, 2, 3. So it is repreſented by Hezekiah, 2 Chron. 30. 9. So King Solomon repreſenteth it in great variety of Expreſſion, 2 Chron. 6. 24.—40. If thy People Iſrael be put to the worſe before the Enemy, becauſe they have ſinned againſt thee; when the Heaven is ſhut up and there is no Rain, if there be Dearth in the Land, if there be Peſtilence, if there be blaſting or Mildew, &c. if they ſin againſt thee, and thou be angry with them, yet if they turn and pray, ſaying, We have ſinned, if they return to thee with all their Heart and all their Soul, then hear thou from Heaven, and forgive thy People which have ſinned againſt thee. The Light of the Day is not more clear than theſe Scriptural Accounts of the Moſaical Covenant, which plainly demonſtrate it an expreſs Covenant of Repentance and Remiſſion of Sins, of ſuch a Remiſſion of Sins which concerneth Secular Intereſts only, and therefore the Repentance which it requireth as neceſſary in order thereto, is only a Civil-religious Repentance; which Civil-religious Repentance is not without a like Integrity, and muſt be a truth of Repentance; for the Covenant requireth of the Jews this Integrity as eſſentially requiſite to their Repentance and their Pardon, to ſeek the God of their Fathers and to turn to him with all their Heart and Soul.

From the Writings of the Prophets (who were the Succeſſors of Moſes, whoſe Doctrine was not diſſonant from his, and who preach'd no other Covenant than the Moſaical, although they propheſy'd of another,) and from the Errands that the Prophets were ſent upon, it appeareth, that the Moſaical Covenant was a Covenant of Civil-religious Repentance and Remiſſion of Sins, Iſa. 1. 17.---20. Ceaſe to do Evil, learn to do Well, ſeek Judgment, relieve the oppreſſed, judge the Fatherleſs, plead for the Widow.—— Though your Sins be as Scarlet, they ſhall be white as Snow.—— If ye be willing and obedient, ye ſhall eat the good of the Land; but if ye refuſe and rebell, ye ſhall be devoured by the Sword. Jer. 36. 3. It may be, that the Houſe of Iſrael will hear all the Evil which I purpoſe to do unto them, that they may return every Man from his evil way, that I may forgive their Iniquity and their Sin. Jer. 7. 5, 6, 7. If ye throughly amend your ways and your doings; if you throughly execute Judgment between a Man and his Neighbour, if ye oppreſs not the Stranger, the Fatherleſs and the Widow, and ſhed not innocent Blood in this place, neither walk after other Gods to your hurt; then will I cauſe you to dwell in this place. Ezek. 6. 11. and 18. 30. The Houſe of Iſrael ſhall fall by the Sword, by the Famine and by the Peſtilence: Repent and turn your ſelves from all your Tranſgreſſions, ſo Iniquity ſhall not be your ruine. All the Prophets have one and the ſame Voice, they are ſo many Heralds proclaiming to Iſrael (r) Repentance and Remiſſion of Sins. Uſually they were ſent to Iſrael and Judah upon this Errand, to induce them to Repentance, and ſo to prevent their (Temporal) Ruine, 2 King. 17. 13. 2 Chron. 36. 15. One of them was ſent upon the ſame Errand to Nineveh, whoſe caſe ſheweth, that governing Providence is πρόνοια ἱλάσιμος, a placable Providence, and that God in his providential Government of the World governeth by the like meaſures as he govern'd Iſrael and Judah, by calling to Repentance and pardoning upon Repentance. So the Pagans, (s) they call Jupiter placid, as being very placable to them that relinquiſh Injuſtice and become Juſt. Their Soothſayers ſay, (t) That Eruption of Lightning which Jupiter alone ſendeth, is placable. Agreeably to which Heathen Notices of Jupiter the Prophets deſcribe the goodneſs of governing Providence with reſpect to the Ninevites, Jon. 4. 2. and to the Nations (who as ſuch can only be judg'd, puniſh'd and pardon'd in this Life,) who are promis'd a Pardon upon their Civil-religious Repentance, Jer. 18. 7, 8. (u) Many a natural Man (ſaith a Divine of our own) by the care he hath to deal juſtly with Men, and by his good Works, the Works of Charity that he doth, avoideth many Temporal Judgments of God, that do fall upon other Men. That is the reaſon, why the Prophet having threatned Deſolation againſt the Moabites, Eſa. 16. 3. adviſeth them, that by executing Judgment and ſhewing Mercy to the Oppreſſed they would labour to prevent it. And the Prophet Daniel, Dan. 4. 27. giveth hope unto Nebuchadnezzar himſelf, that by Righteouſneſs and ſhewing Mercy to the Poor he might obtain a lengthening of his Tranquility. The Prophet adviſeth him,

Exod. 34. 6, 7.

(q) Numb. 14. 18, 19. 2 Chron. 30. 9. Nehem. 9. 17. Pſal. 86. 15. Joel 2. 23. Deut. 4. 31.

(r) Iſa. 55. 7. Jer. 4. 14. and 20. 13. Ezek. 18. 21, 27. and 33. 12. Hoſ. 14. 1, 2. Joel 2. 12.—18. Amos 4. 6, 11. Mic. 6. 6. and 7. 18. Zeph. 3. 7. Hagg. 2. 17. Zech. 1. 3, 4. Mal. 3. 9, 10.

(s) Προσαγορεύουσι μειλίχιον τὸν Δία, εὐμείλικτον ὄντα τοῖς ἀδικίας μεταπιθεμένοις. Phurnut. de nat. Deor. p. 17.

(t) Id fulmen quod ſolus Jupiter mittit, placabile eſt. Sen. nat. Qu. l. 2. c. 49.

(u) Mr. Hilderſham in Pſal. 51. p. 252.

him, to redeem himſelf from his Sins by Alms-deeds (redeem thy Sins by Righteouſneſs;) for Alms delivereth from Death and from all Affliction. Tobit 4. 11. and 12. 9. Eccluſ. 3. 33. and 29. 15. Alms-giving belongeth both to the Spiritual-religious and the Civil-religious Repentance (the truth of them:) But that Alms-giving which is of no avail, ſave only to ſave from Affliction and Temporal Death, can be no better than a Branch of Civil-religious Repentance, to which impunity is promis'd in the Old Teſtament.

VI. For as the Civil Law of a Nation (w) tendeth and deſigneth, to make Men internally and really good and virtuous (which through the pravity of Men cannot be obtained,) but ſo that it appointeth temporal Rewards and Puniſhments according to their exteriour Innocence and Criminality: So the Doctrine of the Law and the Prophets did tend and deſign, to make Men Spiritual-religious and that the truth of their Virtue and Piety ſhould be Spiritual Religious, but ſo that it ſettleth temporal Felicities upon their Civil-religious truth of Virtue and Piety, and temporal Calamities upon the contrary Enormities. If the Virtues and good Works of the Gentiles were available to their ſecular Intereſts (temporale habent præmium, (x) as the Fathers concern'd in the Pelagian Controverſie ſuppoſe,) it is but reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that a Jew was juſtified and indemnified as to his ſecular Intereſts by his Civil-religious Obedience and truth of Piety, as the Scripture plainly declareth. Ezek. 18. 5---18. If a Man do that which is lawful and right, and hath not eaten upon the Mountains, neither hath lift up his Eyes to the Idols of the Houſe of Iſrael, neither hath defiled his Neighbours Wife, neither hath come near to a menſtruous Woman, and hath not oppreſs'd any, hath given his Bread to the hungry, hath not given forth upon Uſury, &c. He is juſt, he ſhall ſurely live. By their Civil-religious Obedience the Jews had a Juſtification of Life (were exempted from being put to Death by the Sword, by the Famine and the Peſtilence,) by ſuch pureneſs of Heart and Hand they were qualified for right of Citizenſhip in the literal Sion, thereby they held their ſplendid and delicious Temporalties, and ſecur'd the Intereſts of this Life, which are the Intereſts that the Prophets Sermons ſo intirely concern themſelves about, (y) that ſcarce one of them expreſly mentioneth any other Intereſt. Yet as the Jews diſtinguiſh the Precepts of their Law into מצות and חקים (ſuppoſing ſome things to be commanded, becauſe they are well-doing, and other things to be well-doing becauſe they are commanded:) So the Prophets uſually oppoſe the ſubſtantial Duties of Piety to the Sacrifices and Ceremonies of the Law, which were inſtituted in vaſt number, and therefore may ſeem, to have been highly pleaſing to God, and accordingly the Jews were apt to ſuppoſe themſelves eximious Pietiſts, becauſe they abounded in Sacrifices and Ceremonies, although they liv'd in the moſt nefarious Immoralities. The Prophets therefore inſiſt and inculcate, that Piety and acceptable Service to God conſiſteth not in Sacrifices and Ceremonies, that disjoin'd from what is truth of Piety real (the ſubſtantial Duties thereof) they are ſo far from being acceptable, that they are abominable, and that they are not at all acceptable, but as inſtances of Obedience and in Conjunction with better Obedience. They diſparage Sacrifices and Ceremonies (comparatively,) they urge and inculcate the weighty things of the Law, they lay the weight and ſtreſs of the Jews Piety, not upon Sacrifices and umbratile Ritualities, but upon the great Moralities and their covenanted Obedience. Jer. 7. 21, 22, 23. Thus ſaith the Lord put your Burnt-offerings upon your Sacrifices and eat fleſh (take your Burnt-offerings to your ſelves and devour them as well as your other Sacrifices;) for I ſpake not unto your Fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the Land of Egypt, concerning Burnt-offerings or Sacrifices. But this thing I commanded them, ſaying, obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye ſhall be my People: And walk ye in the ways that I commanded you, that it may be well with you. When the Children of Iſrael were brought out of Egypt, God did ſpeak unto them about Sacrifices, but did not covenant with them for the Offering Sacrifices, as for the thing that conſtituted them his Liege-people; for the thing that conſtituted them ſuch muſt neceſſarily be a covenanted Obedience to his Government and Commandments. The performance whereof was requiſite, that it might be well unto them, and it is requiſite, that it may be well unto you, ſaith the Prophet; for if Men perſiſt in Rebellion againſt God's Government, their Sacrifices are not Atonements, but Provocations. The Prophets manifeſtly ſpeak the Senſe and Language of the Law of Moſes, which is their Text, and their Sermons are Comments upon it. If therefore the Law of Moſes muſt be underſtood, to teach Spiritual Religious Obedience, but ſo as to ſettle temporal Felicity and Impunity upon the Civil-religious Obedience, ſo the Doctrine of the Prophets muſt be underſtood. The ſubſtantial Duties of Piety (the great Moralities) which they inculcate, muſt be conſider'd as done by a People that are of Kind and Quality Spiritual-religious, and ſo they are the Spiritual-religious truth of Virtue and Piety: And they muſt be conſider'd as done by a People, that are of Kind and Quality meerly Civil religious (ſuch as the moſt of the beſt of the Jews were,) and ſo they are only the Civil-religious truth of Virtue and Piety. Saul might have ſecur'd the Kingdom to himſelf by his Obedience (in compariſon whereof the Prophet Samuel diſparageth Burnt-offerings and Sacrifices,) although his Obedience had been meerly Civil-religious; and in the ſame manner the Jews might have ſecur'd their ſecular Intereſts, which the Prophets inſiſt upon.

VII. According to the Moſaical Covenant and as the Condition of it the Civil-religious truth of Piety real muſt be in a Jew combin'd with the Civil-religious truth of Piety perſonal; and without this Integrity, which is the Duty-part of the Covenant, he is not intitled to the Benefit-part. Deut. 11. 13 — 17. If you ſhall hearken diligently unto my Commandment, which I command you this day, to love the Lord your God and to ſerve him with all your Heart and all your Soul: Then will I give you the Rain of your Land in his due ſeaſon, the firſt Rain and the latter Rain, that thou may'ſt gather in thy Corn, and thy Wine and thy Oil. And I will ſend you Graſs in thy Fields for thy Cattel, that thou may'ſt eat and be full. Take heed to your ſelves, that thy Heart be not deceiv'd, and ye turn aſide and ſerve other Gods and Worſhip them: And then the Lords wrath

(w) Grot. Not. in Matth. 5. 17.

(x) Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 3. Par. 2. Theſ. 10.

(y) Grot. Not in Matth. 5. 20.

Iſa. 1. 10, 20. and 58. 6. and 65. 3. Jer. 9 24. and 22. 15, 16. Hoſ. 6. 6. Mic. 6. 8. Pro. 21.3.

be kindled againſt you, and he ſhut up the Heaven, that there be no Rain, and that the Land yield not her Fruit, and leſt ye periſh quickly from off that good Land. 1 Sam. 12. 20, 21, 24. Samuel ſaid unto the People, fear not; ye have done all this Wickedneſs, yet turn not aſide from following the Lord, but ſerve the Lord with all your Heart; and turn ye not aſide; for then ſhould ye go after vain things which cannot profit nor deliver, for they are vain. Only fear the Lord and ſerve him in truth with all your Heart. So Solomon is urgent with the People; 1 King. 8. 61. let your Heart be perfect with the Lord our God. The meaning of which Phraſe may be underſtood from the Law of Moſes, wherein the People are ſaid Deut. 13. 3. and 18. 13. to be perfect with the Lord their God, and to love him with all their Heart and all their Soul, when they will not be withdrawn from him and his Commandments, to Worſhip other Gods. And it may be underſtood from the Character, which the Scripture giveth of Jehu, that he did not walk in the Law of the Lord God of Iſrael with all his Heart 2 King. 10. 31. (becauſe of his groſs and heinous failure in Civil-religious Obedience;) of Solomon in his latter days, 1 King. 11. 4. that his Heart was not perfect with the Lord his God (for his Wives had turn'd it away after other Gods:) Of Amaziah, 2 Chron. 25. 2. that he did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, but not with a perfect Heart, becauſe of his lapſing to Idolatry. But if theſe Princes had not ſo enormouſly lapſed, the Scripture would have ſaid of them as of Aſa; 2 Chron. 15. 17. 1 King. 2. 4. the high places were not taken away out of Iſrael, nevertheleſs the Heart of Aſa was perfect all his days. Such an Integrity was the condition of the ſecular Proſperity of David's Poſterity, and as Deut. 30. 2, 3, 10. it was a neceſſary ingredient of the Jews Civil-religious Repentance, ſo in their great and ſolemn Repentances and Reformations they ingag'd themſelves, to keep God's Commandments (the words of the Covenant) with all their Heart and Soul, which was the condition of the Covenant. 2 King. 23. 3. 2 Chron. 15. 12, 15. and 34. 31. But in this Integrity they were notoriouſly deficient, when their Heart was divided Hoſ. 10. 2. (they gave part of it to their Idols,) when they halted between two Opinions (God and Baal;) when their Heart was not right with God, but they dealt unfaithfully with him becauſe of their high places and graven Images. Pſal. 78. 37, 57, 58. A Civil-religious Integrity was neceſſary, to conſtitute them the literal and carnal Iſrael, ſuch an Integrity was in Paul before his Converſion (for as to a Civil-religious Integrity he was no Hypocrite:) But the Spiritual-religious Integrity muſt be diſtinguiſh'd from the Civil-religious, as the Spiritual Iſrael muſt be diſtinguiſh'd from the literal and carnal Iſrael. The truth of Virtue and Piety according to the Religion of ſecular Intereſts is figurative and ſignificative of the truth of Virtue and Piety according to the Religion of Soul-Intereſts.

VIII. God's kind of Virtue and Piety according to our third deſcriptive Notice of it is the true and genuin kind of Virtue and Piety, which is the genuin virtuous People's kind of Virtue, the genuin pious Men's kind of Piety, and is like οἶνος οἰνώδης, vinous Wine, it doth not want Virtue, to make it the true and genuin kind of Virtue; it doth not want Piety, to make it the true and genuin kind of Piety. But to be virtuous only ſo far, as to be deadly vicious and criminal; to be pious only ſo far, as to be deadly impious; to be good no otherwiſe, than ſo as to be deadly bad; and to live well only ſo far, as to be a deadly ill Liver; this is not the true and genuin kind of Virtue, Piety, Goodneſs or good Life; this is a Virtue-leſs kind of Matth. 15. 9. Jam. 1. 26. Virtue, a Piety-leſs kind of Piety, a Religion-leſs kind of Religion, a bad kind Goodneſs and good Life. Which conſtituteth vain kind of Religioniſts, Baſtard and Pſeudogeneous (that are heterogeneous from the Divine Family and are not Religious to purpoſe,) the Virtue-leſs kind of virtuous People, the bad kind of good Men, and naughty kind of good Livers, which are not God's kind of (virtuous) People, nor of his Alliance and Kindred (not ſymbolizing with him in Genius and Practice,) nor the genuin and legitimate kind of Pietiſts, as their Epithet declareth. For they are ſtiled ἀδόκιμοι, 2 Cor. 13. 5. Reprobate or Rejectaneous, in the ſame ſenſe as we call counterfeit and adulterate kind of Money ἀδόκιμον νόμισμα, rejectaneous Money. If any therefore that pretend to be virtuous and pious, are in reſpect of their Soul-intereſts ἀδόκιμοι, rejectaneous with God (who judgeth of all things as they are,) if their Virtue and Piety doth not ſave them from being deadly Sinners (aliens from the Life of God,) if it doth not conſtitute them ſuch as belong to God (or God's Elect,) this demonſtrateth, that it is of Kind and Quality ſpurious and illegitimate, which ſpurious and illegitimate kind of Virtue and Piety (and conſequently the true and genuin) may be illuſtrated from

(1.) The Caſe of the Heathen, the great pretenders to Virtue, which in general may be defin'd what is the good and laudable Quality of an Agent as ſuch. It muſt be defin'd what is of laudable Quality (if there be any Virtue, and if there be any Praiſe, ſaith the Apoſtle;) and it muſt be defin'd what is the laudable Quality of an Agent as ſuch; for according to Ariſtotle (z) Virtue is the laudable Quality ὅσων ἐστί τις χρῆσις ἢ ἔργον, of ſuch things that there is ſome uſe (z) Eth. ad Eudem. l. 2. c. 1. of, or ſome work that they do. The good and laudable Qualities of Man's Underſtanding are intellectual Virtues; and his laudable Qualities in reſpect of Morals according to which a Man is ſaid to be a good Man (not a good Architect, or a good Pilot, but a good Man,) theſe are Moral Virtue, which may be defin'd what is εὐπραξία, Well-doing. This muſt be diſtributed into two Species, the one the true and genuin, the other the ſpurious and illegitimate kind of Virtue; for it is not reaſonable to ſay, with (a) a late (a) The falſhood of Human Virtue. French Author (and many others,) that the human Virtue is that which is no better than Vice, not any kind of Virtue, nothing better than Self-love and Self-intereſt, which in human Judgment and Eſtimation is culpable and Criminal, not laudable and commendable. For if an Heathen Child doth Honour to his Parents only or chiefly out of Self-love or Self-intereſt, to get a Portion from them, this in human judgment is Vice and Crime, not Virtue (being manifeſtly vicious and inordinate Self-love:) But if an Heathen Son payeth his θρεπτήρια, or requiteth his Parents (which the Heathen were extremely careful to do) chiefly out of Gratitude, natural Conſcience of Duty, and an unholy kind of Regard to an unholy kind of Worth and Virtue, ſhall this be thought any thing leſs than an humane and mundane kind of Virtue? (b) Non eſt Virginitas quæ precio emitur, non virtutis ſtudio poſſidetur. (b) S. Ambroſ. c. Symmach. Ep. 2. If a veſtal Virgin keepeth her Virginity only or chiefly becauſe ſhe is hired to do it, this is not Virtue: But if ſhe keepeth her Virginity, or if Ariſtides keepeth to Juſtice, if Pagans Practiſe what is materially virtuous (not meerly out of Self-love and Self-intereſt, but) out of Cicero's Principle, (c) an Averſation from turpitude and for the ſake of Honeſty, what Lover of Virtue will not allow them (with due limitation) the Name of Virtue? (d) We have read, or known or heard (ſaith S. Auſtin) of certain Deeds of Impietiſts, that truly Worſhip not God, which according to the rule of Juſtice we cannot only not diſpraiſe, but we alſo rightly and deſerv'dly Praiſe them. Although if we diſcuſs for what end they are done, ſcarce any can be found that deſerve the due Praiſe or Defence of Juſtice. It muſt be acknowledg'd, that the Pagans were far from being right in the end of their Actions: But thus far the Philoſopher is right. If you read a Lecture, ſaith he, (e) See that you refer it aright. Would you profit others or be prais'd? (f) If you read and ſtudy much for Glory, I call you a lover of Glory; if for Money, I call you a lover of Money, not induſtrious. Neither praiſe nor diſpraiſe the Actions of any from what is common, but from the purpoſes of their Mind; for theſe are proper to every one, and theſe make the Actions baſe or honeſt. (g) The Philoſopher earneſtly endeavoureth, that we ſhould chuſe that which is good, becauſe it is Good (Well-doing,) and not becauſe of the Opinion of the multitude. (h) When the Greeks at Troy were put to flight, Diomedes choſe rather to run the greateſt hazards than ignominiouſly to flee, that Hector might not ſay, he had put Diomedes to flight; which ſeem'd an extraordinary Fortitude: But Ariſtotle denieth, that this was true Fortitude, becauſe its end or impulſive cauſe was not, as it ought, τοῦ καλοῦ ἕνεκα. for Honeſty ſake. The Pagans having ſuch Notices of what is laudable and of the end of their Actions, and in many inſtances practiſing accordingly, it is but reaſonable that their ſplendid doings ſhould in ſuch inſtances have the Name of Virtue, but not without the additional diſparagement of ſpurious and illegitimate, as being no better than the graceleſs ungodly Man's kind of Virtue, not the Child of God-kind, nor the holy Man's kind of Virtue. For it is the holy virtuous kind of Virtue, that conſtituteth holy virtuous kind of Men.

(2.) The ſpurious and illegitimate kind of Virtue and Piety may be illuſtrated from the Caſe of the carnal Jews; for the Apoſtle contradiſtinguiſheth two oppoſite kinds and Families of Pietiſts and Religioniſts: The one are the Carnal, the other the Spiritual Iſrael; thoſe of the Literal and thoſe of the Spiritual Circumciſion; the Jews outwardly and the Jews inwardly; thoſe that are of the Earthly, and thoſe that are of the Heavenly Jeruſalem; thoſe that are of Mount Sinai, and thoſe that are of Mount Sion; the one are thoſe that are Born after the Fleſh only (are of meer natural and human Generation,) the other are thoſe that are Born after the Spirit; the one are thoſe that belong to the Law-religion, the other are thoſe that belong to the Religion of ſaving Grace, and are in the State and Life of Grace; the one are the old Covenants Religioniſts and the old Covenant's kind of Religioniſts; the other are the new Covenant's Religioniſts and the new Covenant's kind of Religioniſts; the one are thoſe that ſerve in the oldneſs of the Letter, the oldneſs of Law-religion (which is meer Letter, Spiritleſs and Lifeleſs, without the newneſs of Spiritual Life,) the other are thoſe that ſerve in newneſs of Spirit; the one are the ſervile Family, the other are the free and noble Family; the one are alive and live unto God (as his kind of Religioniſts,) to whom the other bring forth no fruit. They are therefore Nature's Religioniſts (being but of natural and human Generation,) the Laws kind of Religioniſts, the World's kind of Religioniſts, ſo as not to be God's kind of Pietiſts and Religioniſts. Agreeably to their Character the Virtue and Piety of this ſpurious kind of Religioniſts is not the true and genuin kind, but the ſpurious and illegitimate, (i) terrena carnaliſque Juſtitia, a terrene and carnal kind of Righteouſneſs, ſuch a Righteouſneſs are the Works of the Law (the Works of Law-religioniſts) or the Righteouſneſs which is of the Law, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. By which ſpurious and illegitimate kind of Righteouſneſs he doth not mean meerly an obſervance of the Precepts of the Ceremonial Law; for the Apoſtle treateth of the Law in general, and diſputeth, that the Law-religioniſts cannot be juſtify'd by the Moral Law or by their doing the Deeds and Works thereof. Rom. 3. 19, 20. The legal and carnal Man's Law-religious Practice in general (his Law-life and Converſation) his kind of obſerving the Laws Moral Precepts and Precepts of Civil Juſtice (all his Virtue and Piety) is the Righteouſneſs which is in the Law, the terrene and carnal (the carnal Man's) kind of Righteouſneſs. (k) Ἡμεῖς φαμὲν παλαιὸν μὲν ἄνδρα τὸν νόμον. καινὸν δὲ τὸ ἐυαγγέλιον. We Chriſtians call the Law the old Man: But the Goſpel (Chriſtianity) the new Man. From which Apoſtolical account of the true and genuine, and of the ſpurious illegitimate kind of Virtue and Piety we will deduce a fuller Explication of both.

1 Cor. 10. 18. Rom. 2. 28, 29. and 3. 27. and 4. 14. and 6. 14. and 7. 4, 5, 6. and 8. 2. and 9. 6. Gal. 2. 19. and 3. 12. and 4. 3, 25, 26, 29. and 5. 18. and 6. 16. Eph. 28. 9, 11. Phil. 3. 3. Heb. 12. 22. Joh. 8. 23.

Phil. 3. 6.

(c) Si omnia fugiendæ turpi- dinis adipiſcendæque honeſta-e cauſa faciamus. Tuſc. 2.

(d) Etiam impiorum nec De- m veraciter colentium quædam ſta vel legimus, vel novimus, el audivimus, quæ ſecundum ſtitiæ regulam non ſolum vitu-erare non poſſumus, verùm etim merito rectéque laudamus.
Quanquam ſi diſcutiatur quo fine ant, vix inveniantur, quæ juitiæ debitam laudem defenſione mereantur. Voſſ. Hiſt.
Pel. l. 3. Par. 3. Theſ. 8.

(e) Ἐφ' ὅ, τι ἀναφέρεις. σκέαι εἰ ἐφ' ὃ δεῖ, ὠφελῆσαι θέεις ἢ ἐπαινεθῆναι; Epict. Diſſ.
l. 3. c. 23.

(f) Φιλόδοξον, φιλάργυρον, ὀ ιλόπονον. Μηδέποτε γὰρ ἀπὸ τῶν κοινῶν μήτ' ἐπαινεῖτε, μήτε ψέγετε· ἀλλ' ἀπὸ δογμά-
των. Ταῦτα γὰρ ἐστι τὰ ἴδια ἑκάστου, ϗ τὰς πράξεις αἰσχρὰς ἢ καλὰς ποιοῦνται. Ibid. l. 4. c. 4.
id. c. 8.

(g) Τὸ ἀγαθὸν δι' αὐτὸ τὸ
ἀγαθὸν αἱρεῖσθαι, ϗ μὴ διὰ τὴν τῶν πολλῶν δόξαν. Simplic.
in Epict. c. 57.

(h) Oſor. de Nob. Chriſt. l. 2. p. 399.

(i) S. Aug. T. 4. Expoſ Ep. ad Gal. c. 3.

(k) Clem. ſtr. l. 3. p. m. 336.

CHAP. X.

1. According to the Apoſtle's Account of the genuine kind of Virtue and Piety it is not to be found in Mankind that are totally Unregenerate. 2. It is the Divine kind of Faith and Charity. 3. It is not any kind of Vertue and Piety, that is on this ſide Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs. 4. It is the holy-vital Virtue and Piety or vital Sanctity. 5. It is oppoſite to the baſe and ſervile kind of Piety. 6. It is the Spiritual-Religious Worſhip and God-ſervice.

I. According to the Apoſtle's account of the genuine kind of Virtue and Piety it is not to be found in Mankind, that are totally Unregenrate. For at the riſe of Chriſtianity the Name of (Carnal) Jews and Gentiles compriſed the whole World of Unregenerate Mankind; and as all Mankind that are totally Unregenerate into the holy Life, are of the ſame Kind and Family with the (carnal) Jews and Gentiles (a carnal and mundane kind of People:) So their Virtue and Piety is of the ſame Kind and Quality with theirs, who at the riſe of Chriſtianity were all under Sin, and could not be juſtified by their doing the Deeds of their Law-religion. The Virtue and Piety of Unregenerate Mankind was then the ſpurious and illegitimate; therefore ſo it is now, and ſo it will be for ever. Unregenerate humane Nature is like the Nation of carnal Jews (l) ἄγονος ἄκαρπος, ὐδὲν δὲ ὅλως καρπογονῦσα, ſteril, unfruitful, bringing forth no fruit at all; for the fruit which it bringeth forth, is either what is Vice, or what is not Virtue, or what is no genuine kind of Virtue. The natural Man's Hope and Truſt is not the holy-virtuous, but unholy vicious (what is Vice,) his Love is a graceleſs, carnal Affection (what is not Virtue,) and the Japoneſe Practiſe not any genuine kind of Virtue, although (m) many of their Virtues are ſaid to be their uſual Practice. As the Jews call Idolatry עבודה זרה ſtrange Worſhip: So the natural Man's Virtue and Piety is an Alien and a Foreigner, not of Kin to the Divine Family. Who ſeeth not, what a ſorry Counterfeit and Reſemblance the Hebrew Doctors Humility is of the true and genuine Humility? For they ſay, (n) you muſt not go with your Stature erect, becauſe it is ſaid, the whole Earth is full of his Glory. The natural Man's Virtue and Piety is of ſo bad a Character, that it ought to be of no conſideration in the Chriſtian ſettlement and diſpenſation of things, nor is it (in this Divine Settlement of things) of any conſideration with God; for he accounteth none Righteous upon the account of any good Works or Works of Righteouſneſs that they have done in their Unregeneracy; (o) But as Men pull down an old Houſe, to build a new one in its ſtead, ſo God hath not built any thing upon us (our unregenerate Virtue and Piety,) but hath new made us by the holy Spirit. His Counſel and Deſign is, that Mankind ſhould not attain Righteouſneſs and Salvation by their good Works in their Law-religion (their unregenerate Religious Practice,) but that they ſhould be Chriſtianiz'd and become his Workmanſhip created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good Works. Eph. 2. 10. Accordingly all that enter into Chriſtianity and Godlineſs, duly abandon that Virtue and Piety, which is of the old Houſe; they ſo far abandon their own Righteouſneſs which is of the Law, that they build not upon it; they account it of no worth or value as to Life eternal; they repute it Rags not Robes, and have no Confidence in the Fleſh (in the fleſhly Human kind of things of Unregeneracy,) the Virtue and Piety which alone is of Precioſity in their Eyes, is that which is of the Divine Family. For they are Born, not of Blood, nor of the Will of the Fleſh, nor of the Will of Man, but of God. The Apoſtle Characterizeth the truly Chriſtian Family by theſe four Properties; they are not originally and of Kind and Quality, an human natural Generation, an human carnal Generation, an human moral Generation, but a divine and ſpiritual Generation of Men. For Blood is (p) τῦ ἀνθρωπίνυ σώματος ἡ ὐσία, the ſubſtance of an human Body. So it ſignifieth Act. 17. 26. He hath made of one Blood all Nations of Men. So it ſignifieth in common Speech (as when we ſpeak of the Blood of both Parents, and conſidering Families as of one Blood we ſpeak of Jus Sanguinis, tainted Blood, noble Blood, the Blood-royal, and they that derive their Honour from many Progenitors are ſaid longo Sanguine cenſeri;) to be Born of Blood therefore, is to be originally of human natural Generation, ſo as to be of Kind and Quality an human natural Generation. The Will of the Fleſh ſignifieth fleſhly Luſts, corrupt Appetites and Carnalities, Eph. 2. 3. To be Born of the Will of the Fleſh therefore, is to be originally of human carnal Generation, ſo as to be of Kind and Quality an human carnal Generation. The human Morality is the human Will, Diſcipline and Inſtitution, that Virtue is the human, and the rule of it is but human; (q) there is one rule of human Virtues (ſaith Seneca,) which is one right Reaſon. To be Born therefore of the Will of Man, is to be originally of human moral Generation (or Inſtitution,) ſo as to be of Kind and Quality an human moral Generation. But the Children of God derive their Deſcent and Pedigree from nothing on this ſide God (like the ancient Heroes that are ſaid to be è ſtirpe Deorum, the God's Progeny,) they are originally of ſpiritual and divine Generation, ſo as to be of Kind and Quality a ſpiritual and divine Generation of Men in reſpect of their Virtue and Piety. Their Virtue and Piety therefore is of Kind and Family diſſonant from the Human-moral; and if the one is the true and genuin, the other can be nothing better than ſpurious and illegitimate. (r) Regeneration is the Origin of the true Life and the true Righteouſneſs; when a Man is regenerated, the truth of the Virtues ariſeth, which are nothing elſe but the Life of Grace. (s) touching the Life of Grace in us, examine, whether many of us are

Rom. 3. 9, 19, 20.

Eph. 2. 9. Tit. 3. 5.

Phil. 3. 3 9.

Joh. 1. 13.

(l) J. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 348.

(m) Maffeius Indic. l. 12. p. 531.

(n) Non eſſe erectâ Staturâ incedendum, propterea quod dicitur, plena eſt tota terra gloriâ ejus. Maimon. Mor. Nev. Par. 3. c. 52.

(o) Theophylact. in Tit. 3.

(p) Clem. Pædag. l. 1. c. 6.

(q) Una inducitur humani virtutibus regula, una enim e recta ratio. Sen. Ep. 66.

(r) Origo veræ vitæ veræ justitiæ in regenerationis est po ta Sacramento, ut ubi homo n naſcitur, ibi etiam ipſarum vir tutum veritas oriatur. Scri de vocatione Gentium l. c. 5.

(s) Dr. Hammon. Ser. 1 Act. 17. 30.

are not as arrant Heathens, as meer Strangers from Spiritual Illumination, and ſo from the myſtical Commonwealth of Iſrael, as any of them. Clem. Strom. 2. calls the Life of your unregenerate Man an Heathen Life, and the firſt Life we have, by which we live and move, and grow and ſee, but underſtand nothing; and 'tis our Regeneration by which we raiſe our ſelves ἐξ ἐθνῶν, from being ſtill meer Gentiles.

II. The genuine kind of Virtue and Piety according to the Apoſtle's account of it is a Saving Faith and a Divine kind of Charity; the former of which is Intellectual, the latter is (in ſtrict acceptation) Vital Virtue, Gal. 5. 6. In Chriſt Jeſus neither Circumciſion availeth any thing, nor Uncircumciſion, but Faith which worketh by Love. Faith conſiſteth in being Godly Believers; for ſuch only are God's kind of Believers; and Love is the Godly-virtuous loving God and Chriſt, for this only is the Chriſtian kind of loving him, and that which the Diſcipline of Godlineſs requireth. Ungodly and Mundane kind of People have a love for Chriſt, (t) becauſe it is creditable, the Faſhion of their Country, bringeth them Worldly Advantages, out of reſpect to their Forefathers, and becauſe it is the Religion wherein they were educated, or out of reſpect to the Authority of the Church; they have ſuch a reſpect and love for Chriſt, as Mundane People have for an eminent extraordinary Perſon, or as the Heathen had for their great Benefactors, or as any Natural Man would have for one, that he thinketh will be a Saviour to him (from a natural deſire of Salvation,) or for one that he counteth good to him and no way offenſive; but this their Love for him and their Faith in him are vile graceleſs kind of things, that have no Cognation with the Faith of God's Elect or with Divine Charity, each of which may juſtly be denominated the Univerſal Grace. For God hath no genuine Religioniſts but his Believers of the Divine Family, that are ſanctify'd by Faith, and live the Life of Sanctity by Faith. The true nature of Piety and Sanctity, what is Sanctity and Sin, the mighty reaſons inducing to Sanctity, the right Principles, Motives and Ends of the Duties of Sanctity, the Means and Helps of performing them, and of attaining Piety and Sanctity, are notic'd to them by Faith, and only by Faith, which is the prime leading part of their Sanctity, and is radically and virtually all Divine Duties and Virtues for they flow from it as Streams from a Fountain. Divine Charity is connex'd with Faith as the Heart and the Brain (the Vital and Animal Functions) are connex'd in Man, or as a Plant is connex'd with its Root; for Faith (that worketh Love and worketh by Love) is the Root of Charity, which is the Divine Nature (the Life of Grace and Holineſs) the Child of God-kind of Nature, the Summary and Abridgment of all holy Duty which the Divine Moral Law requireth, and of all Divine (Vital) Virtues; for all Virtues and Duties are either the Requiſites to it, or Parts of it, or Modes of exerciſing it (as all the variegated Colours of the Rainbow are but one ſimple Light variouſly modify'd and diverſify'd:) All Virtue therefore without this Divine Virtue (which is peculiar to Regenerate Souls) can be nothing better than Graceleſs, Spurious and Illegitimate. Fortitude as great as that of Peregrinus or Calanus the Indian (who gave his Body to be burned;) Liberality and Beneficence ſo great and generous as to give all my Goods to feed the Poor (as great as that of Cimon the Athenian, * Nulli fides ejus, nulli opera, nulli res familiaris defuit) if devoid of Divine Charity, which is our new Nature, hath nothing of Divine Worth in it, nor doth it conſtitute the Agent a Perſon of any Divine Worth. Our Saviour's Intention is, to tell the Jews, that they were Wicked and Ungodly, and totally devoid of the holy virtuous kind of Virtue, when he ſaith to them, Joh. 5. 42. I know you, that ye have not the love of God in you. This is the Truth of Religion; for the grand Indiſpenſables of it, the Chief and Main of it, the Soul and Vitals of it, the Eſſence and Subſtance of it, are fitly call'd the Truth of it. And ſpeaking as the Lawyers do of Niceties in a Cauſe, we may ſay of all things in Religion, that are on this ſide the Eſſence and the Main of it, veritatem negotii non tangunt, they touch not the truth of the Buſineſs. But the love of God and of Man is rightly call'd the Truth of Religion. (u) This is God's worſhip, this is true Religion, this is right Piety, this only is due ſervice to God. (w) The Scripture forbiddeth nothing but Luſt, commandeth nothing but Love.

(t) Dr. Jackſon of Juſtif. Faith. S. 2. c. 13, 14.

Heb. 11. 6. Joh. 1. 12, 13. Rom. 3. 3. Gal. 3. 9. and 2. 20. Act. 15. 9. and 26. 18.

1 Joh. 4. 7, 8. Rom. 13. 10. 1 Cor. 13.

* Corn. Nepos.

Non eſt fructus bonus, qui de charitatis radice non ſurgit. S. Aug. de ſp. & lit. c. 15.

(u) Hic eſt Dei cultus, hæc vera religio, hæc recta pietas, hæc tantum Deo debita ſervitus. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 10. c. 4.

(w) Scriptura nihil præcipit niſi charitatem, nihil culpat niſi cupiditatem. Idem de Doctr. Chriſt. l. 3. c. 10.

III. Such Virtue and Piety which is wholly exteriour to the Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs of the inward Man, is not the genuine kind of Virtue and Piety according to the Apoſtle's account of it, Eph. 4. 24. All Chriſtians agree, that the Carnal Jews Righteouſneſs is an External Righteouſneſs; but we do not agree, in what Senſe and Degree it is External: For it may be External in the greater Degree, as being Exterior to any Virtue and Piety in the Soul: And it may be External only in the leſſer degree, as being only Exteriour to the Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs of the inward Man. But it is commonly ſuppos'd to be External in the former ſenſe and in the greater degree; for Grotius thus repreſenteth the Senſe of the Jews touching that great Commandment, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy Heart and Soul. (x) The Jews greatly err, who ſuppoſe, that this Precept is ſufficiently obſerv'd, as alſo that other, Thou ſhalt not covet, if by External Acts of Diſobedience they depart not from the Law. So the Righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees is ſaid to be (y) an uncriminality as to External Facts, which are ſubjected to the cogniſance of Law-courts, which Paul had when he was a Phariſee. To juſtifie this account of the Phariſees Righteouſneſs, R. D. Kimchi is cited, who expoundeth the Pſalmiſts words, If I had ſeen Iniquity in my Heart, the Lord had not heard, to this Senſe, that if Men conceive Iniquity in their Heart, and fully purpoſe it in their Mind, yet if they do not act it, God will not hear it, that is, will not impute it to them as Wickedneſs; for an evil thought God doth not account as the fact, unleſs it be conceiv'd againſt his Faith and Religion. Such an Opinion there was amongſt the Phariſees in our Saviour's time, as appeareth from Joſephus; and according to this Interpretation the Jews Law exactly reſembleth the Civil-religious Law of our Engliſh Nation, which doth not condemn any but for the Overt Act except in the caſe of Treaſon. But from this Rabbinical Opinion and Interpretation of the Law it appeareth, that Righteouſneſs according to the Scribes and Phariſees is ſomething more than External Facts according to Law, and (x) Not. in Matth. 22. 37. ſo Bellarm. T. 4. c. 3.

(y) Grot. Not. in Matt. 5. 20. Hotting. de jur. Hebr. Lex. 225. p. 337.

that it is a miſtake, to ſay, (z) that the Obedience which the Law of the Jews requir'd of them, as the Condition of their Temporal Happineſs, was meerly the outward Obſervation of its Precepts; for their Civil-religious Law as ſuch requireth of them, to be the Religioniſts of the God of Iſrael in the Civil-religious way with all the Heart and Soul, which Internal Integrity was the Condition of their Temporal Happineſs; and if evil Thoughts were imputed in the caſe of Idolatry and Irreligion, their Law muſt neceſſarily require more than External Facts and the outward Obſervation of its Precepts. Their Civil-religious Law obliged them alſo, to take heed of a Thought in their wicked Heart prejudicial to their poor Brother, not to harden their Heart againſt him, that their Heart be not grieved, when they give unto him, that their Eye be not evil againſt him, and that he ſeem not vile unto them. So Petavius is of Opinion, (a) that by the generality of them (that were not rude Plebeians) evil Cogitations and Volitions were always accounted Sins; and he is of this Opinion, notwithſtanding that ſome Fathers ſuppoſe, Chriſt to have perfected the Law upon this account, becauſe the Jews thought, that thoſe were not Sins, which were committed by the Will, unleſs the Fact was committed; and he citeth the expreſs Aſſertion of Maimonides, that their Law forbiddeth every Cogitation that may ſhake their Faith in any of the Fundamentals of their Law; they may not harbour thoughts of an Idol, (b) and Philo and Joſephus (in their Accounts of the Judaical Polity) are afraid, that they ſin, when they think of any Impiety againſt God. Joſephus (a Man inſtituted in Phariſaiſm) ſaith; This was their one Virtue, not to do nor think any thing (μήτε πρᾶξαι, μήτε διανοηθῆναι) contrary to their Law-ſettlement. The Preface to the Decalogue (c) is counted a Precept of Faith (an Internal Virtue;) and they have ſuch a regard for Internal Purity, that Maimonides giveth this account of their Phariſaical Solicitude, to avoid External Pollution. (d) Separation from Things and Men profane keepeth the Body clean from Evil Actions, the cleanneſs of the Body conciliateth to the Mind a cleanneſs from Evil Opinions, and the Purity of the Mind maketh Men like to God, which is the Commandment, Be ye holy, for I am holy. I am the Lord that have ſanctify'd you. The Saying of the Wiſe Man, Let thy Garments be always white, we underſtand touching the Purity of the Mind, (e) ſaith another Rabbi; who alſo thus proveth the perfection of his Law. The Law commandeth a Man to be pure in Heart, to love his Neighbour as himſelf, not to hate his Brother, not to revenge, not to retain Anger, not to covet his Neighbour's Wife or Goods, to circumciſe his Foreskin; all which incite a Man to Innocence and Purity of Mind. Another Hebrew Doctor ſaith, (f) God multiply'd his Precepts to Iſrael, that he might imbue all our Cogitations with them, and that all our Operations might be conſecrated to them. A Man is moulded according to his Works; if he applieth himſelf to the perpetual ſtudy of the Law, although he doth not at firſt apply himſelf to that which is good from the love of God, yet his Operation that is not from the love of God, doth elicit an Operation that is from the love of God; for by virtue of his Works he killeth evil Cogitations. (g) The Jews have an uſual Saying (as Maimonides affirmeth,) That the Cogitations of a Sin are worſe than the Sin it ſelf; becauſe by thoſe thoughts a Man ſinneth againſt his own Soul. R. Hananiah ſaith, (h) He that waketh in the Night, or that walketh alone in the way, if he giveth his Mind to Idleneſs, he ſinneth againſt his Soul. The Notion that theſe Doctors have of ſinning againſt a Man's own Soul, ſpeaketh their Opinion, that they think themſelves oblig'd to an Internal Virtue and Piety: Which alſo appeareth in their ſevere prohibitions of looking upon a Woman; (i) That it is not lawful to look upon an Hair of a prohibited Woman, or her Heel or little Finger, nor to hear her Voice with intention to have pleaſure from it. To look upon a Woman with intention, is the ſame thing as to have to do with her. Nothing may be done, that begetteth the Cogitation of Women; for the Cogitation impelleth to the Fact. Theſe Doctors alſo ſeverely declaim againſt (tolerated) wandring thoughts in Prayer and reading the Law. (k) If thou moveſt thy Lips in Prayer, and turneſt thy Face to the Wall, but thinkeſt of thy Buſineſs and Merchandiſe; or if thou readeſt the Law of God with thy Tongue, but thy Heart is in thine Edifices and Grounds: Or if thou performeſt a Precept of the Law with thy Members, without conſideration of what is done, or of him who commanded it, or of the end of it; thou art one of thoſe, of whom it is ſaid, Thou art near to their Mouth, but far from their Reins.

There is a great Scrupuloſity amongſt theſe Doctors touching the Principle and End of Men's Actions; (l) for if one firmly believeth the Reſurrection of the Dead, yet doth not believe it to be of the Law, he is as an Infidel. Make not the Law a Crown (to get Glory by it,) nor a Tool to dig with (to get Riches by it,) the Law muſt be ſtudied, not to get Riches, or to be called Rabbi, nor to gain a Reward in the World to come, but for its own ſake and purely out of love; (m) which is a grand point with Maimonides, who calleth this degree the degree of Abraham. The Vulgar are allow'd to obey for hope of Reward and fear of Puniſhment, but he liketh no Religioniſt ſave only him that ſerveth out of Love only, citing with approbation the Saying of Antigonus Socenſis (whence the Sect of the Sadduces is thought to have had its Original) Be ye not like Servants that ſerve their Lord on condition to receive a Reward. (n) One Branch of the Phariſees in our Saviour's time was called Phariſæus ex amore (becauſe he was ſuppos'd, to keep the Precepts out of love only,) of whom the Jews ſay, Ne ſit tibi carus præ cæteris, niſi Phariſæus amoris; (o) he that ſerveth for Reward, ſerveth himſelf not his Maſter. (p) The Jews took care, to explore their Proſelytes of Juſtice, whether they undertook Judaiſm out of Love and Integrity of Heart (מאהבה ומלב שלם) not out of love of Secular Honour, or Riches, or Worldly Fear; and they tell us, that no Proſelytes were made in the time of David and Solomon, when Men paſs'd out of Gentiliſm ob vanitatem ſeculi (for the Vanity of the World,) and ſuch are not to be numbred amongſt Proſelytes of Juſtice. They are ſo far from ſuppoſing, that the Precept of loving God with all the Heart and Soul is ſufficiently fulfill'd by External Facts, that the chief of them diſtinguiſh a twofold love and fear of God: (q) One when we love God for ſomething elſe, the other for his own Excellency and Pulchritude (without reſpect to any Good or Felicity receiv'd or hop'd for from him; and this is true Love and worthy the Creator. So there is a Fear which cometh from the apprehenſion of Puniſhment, or ſome Evil, as excluſion from Paradiſe; and this is the Fear of the Vulgar, of Women and Children; there is another that ſpringeth from the Conception of the Supreme Majeſty of the Creator, which is rather to to be called Reverence. (r) R. Akiba (accounted by the Jews a Seraphic lover of God) at the time when he was to be put to Death, ask'd his Diſciples, If it was not time to read that Leſſon Audi Iſrael? they anſwer'd, Magiſter, huc uſque? do you remit nothing of your Zeal, but ſtill perſevere in it? He reply'd, All the Days of my Life I have been ſolicitous touching thoſe words, בכל נפשך with all thy Soul. Such Love they pretend to in their uſual Maxim, (s) let all thy Works be done for God, הכל לשם שמים all for God, for the Glory of the Divine Name. Theſe things are Evidence more than enough, that the Righteouſneſs of the generality of the beſt of the Carnal Jews (the Scribes and Phariſees) neither is, nor ever was * meerly an uncriminality as to external Facts (although anciently there was and ſtill is ſuch an Opinion amongſt them as that of R. D. Kimchi:) Nor is this all the Righteouſneſs which Paul had in his Judaiſm, when he ſo liv'd in all good Conſcience, that his Obedience and Righteouſneſs muſt be thought a ſort of internal Virtue and Piety. Such was the Virtue which the Stoicks taught, who were near of kin to the Phariſees and generally as great Hypocrites as they: But if both had not pretended to a Soul-virtue and Piety, they had not been ſo great Hypocrites as they were; they pretended to it, yet were devoid of the truth and main of it; and therefore their Virtue and Piety was but outſide, umbratile and ſuperficial (not becauſe it was wholly exteriour to the Soul, but) becauſe it was exteriour to the Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs of the inward Man. (t) Ἔνδον βλέπε, ἔνδον ἡ πηγὴ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ, look within, there is the Fountain of Good; there is the Spring of Action, there is the Seat of Vice and Virtue, and there is the Truth of things. If the Inward Man is not really Holy, the Religioniſt is like the Egyptian Temples, that were fair and ſpecious without, but within there was nothing better than a Cat or a Crocodile. Under an appearance of great Sanctity and a Severity of Life as great as his was, that dwelt amongſt the Tombs, Legions of Devils may inhabit.

(z) Mr. Thorndike Epil. B. 1. c. 12.

Deut. 15. 7, 9, 10. and 25. 3.

(a) T. 1. l. 10. c. 24. S. 12. Maimon. de Idol. c. 2. S. 4.

(b) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 8. c. 7, 8.

(c) Abravan. de c. Fid. apud Vorſt. p. 85.

(d) Pocock. port. Moſ. p. 452.

(e) Men. ben Iſr. Qu. in Lev. p. 192.

(f) Hotting. de Jur. Hebr. Lex. 20. p. 30.

(g) Maimon. mor. nev. par. 3. c 8.

(h) Pirke aboth, p. 13, 14.

(i) Hotting. ſupr. Lex. 188. p. 279.

(k) Maimon. mor. nev. par. 3. c. 51.

(l) Pocock. not. miſc. p. 98.

(m) Port. Moſ. p. 137, 138. Ainſworth on Exod. 20. 6.

(n) Druſ. de 3. Sect. l. 2. c. 22.

(o) Ibid. l. 3. c. 3.

(p) Selden. de J. nat. & G. l. 2. c. 2.

(q) Vorſt. in Maim. de fund. leg. p. 12.

(r) Coſri, p. 245, 312. P. Fag. Deut. 6. 5.

IV. The true and genuine kind of Virtue and Piety is the Holy-vital according to the Apoſtle's account of it; for he uſually confronteth two oppoſite Kinds and Families of Religioniſts; the one the Dead Formaliſts, the other the Holy Vitaliſts, Rom. 7. 6. they that ſerve in the oldneſs of the Letter, (which is Spiritleſs and Lifeleſs) are the dead external Formaliſts; they that ſerve in newneſs of Spirit, are thoſe that ſerve in the newneſs of Spiritual Life, and therefore they are the Holy Vitaliſts. So Gal. 4. 29. thoſe that are born after the Spirit, are the Spiritual-vital Religioniſts (for the Spirit giveth Life:) Thoſe that are born after the Fleſh (ſo as not to be born after the Spirit) are the carnal kind of Religioniſts ſpiritually dead, and therefore the dead Formaliſts. A Carnal Judaical Religioniſt is one of this Character, Rom. 2. 19. for to ſay of a conceited great Religioniſt, that he hath the form of knowledge and of the truth in the Law, and reſteth in it, is to ſay, he is one of meer exteriour Formality in Religion, no Vital Religioniſt. In all his Accounts of the two Covenants the Apoſtle inſiſteth upon this as a principal difference between them; by the New Covenant (the Religion of Saving Grace) the Religioniſts have the Holy Spirit, Spiritual Life, Sanctifying Grace, and are ſaved from the Domination of Sin: But the Old Covenant of Law-Religion (that ſettlement and diſpenſation of things) is nothing better than a bare dead Letter and an outward Rule, not vital to its Religioniſts; which ſheweth, that the New Covenant's Religioniſts are the Vital Religioniſts, and the Law-religioniſts can be nothing better than the dead Formaliſts: (u) The Law is Spiritual, but did not afford the Spirit. By the commanding and threatning Letter the Old Man was not cur'd, and therefore that is called the Old Teſtament; but this the New, becauſe of the newneſs of the Spirit, which cureth the New Man of his Vitioſity of Oldneſs. The Grace of the Holy Spirit is peculiar to the New Law, which (although it be written as well as the Old Law, yet) is principally, not Lex ſcripta, a Law externally written, but Lex indita, a Law internally written, (w) as Aquinas diſputeth: (x) Whence it is called the Spirit, διακονία τοῦ πνεύματος, the miniſtration of the Spirit, and the Law of the Spirit of Life, and they that are animated by the Holy Spirit, are ſaid, not to be under the Law; for the Law is called the Letter, διακονία τοῦ γράμματος, the miniſtration of the Letter, and in contradiſtinction to the New Law is ſaid, to be written and ingraven in Stones, becauſe it was meerly a dead external Script (that conſiſted in verbis not in virtute,) it communicated no Aſſiſtance, no Energy or Vigour, no Vital Principle (a Fountain of Vital Acts) to the Souls of Men. But the New Law is of a contrary Character; for whether we conſider it in a jural Notion (as a Settlement and Diſpenſation of things,) or in a Vital Notion (as a new live-nature in Man,) it is the Law of the Spirit of Life and of Man's Regeneration into the Holy Life; and conſequently, it is the Divine Moral Law not written in Tables of Stone, but in fleſhly Tables of the Heart, 2 Cor. 3. 3. Thus the Apoſtle clearly ſtateth the difference between the Law (in the narrower Notion) and the Goſpel Religion, as the Old and New Covenant are alſo differenced in the Prophet, Jer. 31. 31---33. I will make a new Covenant with the Houſe of Iſrael and with the Houſe of Judah. Not according to the Covenant that I made with their Fathers.——But this ſhall be the Covenant, that I will make with the Houſe of Iſrael, I will put my Law in their inward parts, and write it in their Hearts. If the Divine Law be written in the Heart of a Religioniſt, it cannot be alienated from God and Piety; he muſt be a faithful lover of them (which cannot be without a fervour of Affection;) and the Virtues and Duties which the Law injoyneth, muſt be implanted in him (elſe the Characters of the Law are not imprinted upon the Heart,) the Conſtitution and Diſpoſition of his inward Man which is the Spring of Action (σπέρμα τῶν πράξεων ἡ διάθεσις, ἀρχὴ καὶ πηγή, (y) the Diſpoſition is the Seminary, Principle and Fountain of the Actions) muſt be conformable to the Precepts of the Divine Law (and muſt anſwer thereto as Wax to the Seal,) and his inward Inclination muſt be ſuited to the external Rule. And if the Divine Law (which is a Law of Life,) be written in his Heart (the Fountain of Life) by the Holy Spirit (that giveth Life,) this internal conformity to the Divine Law muſt be a living Law, an holy vital Nature, whence the Religioniſt neceſſarily becometh one of the holy-vital Nature and Diſpoſition, of the holy vital kind (not one of the Profane and Sinning, but the Holy and Sinleſs; not one of the Wickedly and Worldly, but the Godly and divinely affected and addicted; not one of the leud and filthy, but the pure and abhorrent from all Filthineſs; not one of the proud and haughty, but the meek and lowly; not one of the hating and hurting, the envious and murtherous, but the harmleſs, benign and beneficent; not one of the crafty and deceitful, but the truly honeſt and faithful; not one of the baſe and ſordid, but the truly noble and unvile, by innate diſpoſition and by kind;) what is truly good and holy muſt neceſſarily be connatural and agreeable to him, he cannot fail to have a vital ſympathy with it, and a deadly Averſation from and Antipathy againſt all Sin and Wickedneſs. His Divine Vital Nature (becauſe it is a Nature and a Vital Nature) is a permanent and laſting, ſtable and uniform, conſtant and uninterrupted diſpoſition to the Duties of Godlineſs, wherein he findeth a vital Sweetneſs, as healthful Men do in their Meat and Drink (ſapor nobis vitalis infunditur, (z) a vital Savour is infus'd into us, ſaith Ennodius Ticinenſis) and his motion in the ways of Piety is free and ſpontaneous, eaſie and with alacrity, pleaſant and delightful.

(s) Pirke Aboth, c. 2.

* See Bellarmine puzzled de cult. ſanctor. T. 2. l. 3. c. 4. cir. med.

(t) M. Ant. l. 7. ſ. 59.

(u) Ὁ νόμος πνευματικὸς ἐστὶ, ἀλλ' οὐ πνεῦμα παρεῖχεν. S. Chryſoſt. in 2 Cor. or. 6. Propter veteris hominis noxam, quæ per literam jubentem & minantem minimè ſanabatur, dicitur illud Teſtamentum vetus: hoc autem novum propter novitatem ſpiritûs, quæ hominem novum ſanat à vitio vetuſtatis. S. Aug. de ſp. & lit. c. 20.

(w) 12*dæ* Qu. qu. 106. Art. 1.

(x) 2 Cor. 3. 6, 7, 8. Rom. 8. 2. Gal. 5. 18. Tit. 3. 5.

(y) Plut. de adulat.

Such is the conſtitutive Nature and Properties of the Holy-vital Religioniſts (but in ſeveral Degrees and not without exception of the diſtempers to which they are ſubject,) and theſe conſtitute that Vital Sanctity (the Life of Grace and Holineſs,) which is peculiar to the Divine Family of New-Covenanters: For the Old Law-Religioniſts are Graceleſs, Lifeleſs, Sapleſs kind of Religioniſts, Spiritually dead, wholly devoid of the Spirit of Grace and of Life, of all Vital Sanctity, without any Sence or Savour of Life, and like the Eunuch a dry Tree, Iſa. 56. 7. Their Piety hath no Heart in it, no taſte in it, but is like an Husk, or Shell, or Skeleton, or a Carkaſs, dry and jejune, dilute and diſpirited, Soul-leſs, Lifeleſs and inſipid form, that covereth a rotten and cadaverous Soul, which, like the Body without the Spirit, is dead and in the ſtate of Sin and of Death, Rom. 8. 2. It is Life that is the Sovereign Good; all Animals make ſome kind of Life their principal concern; but the chief concern of Man is (a) θεῖον βιῶσαι βίον, to live the Holy and Divine kind of Life, and therefore to be Spiritually and Divinely alive. The Letter of the Law ſerv'd to regulate Humane Life and Manners (as Civil Laws and Humane Inſtitutions of Morality do,) but being ineffectual, to ingender an Holy and Divine kind of Life in the Souls of Men, it was altogether inſufficient, to reach their great concerns, to make them truly Divine and Holy, and to incorporate them into that Divine and Heavenly Family, which conſiſteth of (as Proclus calleth ſome of his Deities) ζωαὶ ζέουσαι, fervent Lives; they are not meerly alive but lively (Vivacity is the good eſtate of Life:) So a Chriſtian and a Chriſtian Prieſt (as S. Chryſoſtom ſaith) muſt be ζέων τῷ πνεύματι, fervent in Spirit. Chriſt is ſaid, to baptize his Followers, not only with Water, but with the Holy Ghoſt and with Fire; which denoteth, (b) that according to Chriſt it is not enough, that we abſtain from evil-doing, which was intimated by waſhing; there muſt be alſo an internal force, which carrieth to that which is good and holy with great (but an holy-virtuous) Impetuoſity. If Chriſtians become tepid and Luke-warm, their Piety is nauſeous; if they were wholly dead, it would be as Vappa or Carrion. Such is our Piety, if it is of no better Kind and Family than the Law-religioniſts, if we are carnal and mundane kind of Religioniſts in the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity, if there is no lively affectionate and ſerious Piety towards God in our Souls, if our Holy Duties are inanimate and but the dead Images of living Piety, and if there is mors in ollâ, Death in the Pot (that which impoyſoneth every thing that cometh out of it, the old Leaven that ſoureth and defileth every thing,) if deadly Carnality and Wickedneſs liveth in us and we live in it. And if we ſuppoſe, that ſuch a ſpurious and mortiferous kind of Piety is ſufficient to ſave Men, if we make true Religion but a ſlight overly Buſineſs on this ſide the Holy Life, we are deadly and damnable Opinioniſts, nefarious Hypocrites and Traytors to the Intereſts of God's Kingdom and of the Souls of Men; and are ſo far from being piouſly affected, that we are villainouſly diſaffected.

V. The true and genuine kind of Piety is oppoſite to the baſe and ſervile according to the Apoſtle's account of it, Gal. 4. 30. In common Speech, the Senſe of the Philoſophers and Language of Holy Scripture any baſe incommodious ſubjectneſs (or reſtraint) is called Servitude and Bondage. To be ſubjected to a Tyrannical Government, to be chain'd to an Oar, to be held, to tug at a Gally, or to dig in the Mines; (c) to be Servants to any Luſts, (to obey, ſerve and gratifie them;) to be ſubjected to any external things (Drink, Women, Honour or Diſhonour, Riches or Poverty, Pleaſure or Pain) to be ſubjected to the Dominion of Fortune or any Humane Power (ſo that you cannot be in Proſperity, unleſs your Externals proſper,) is to be baſely and miſerably ſubjected; and to be peſter'd with vitious and calamitous Affections, to be timid, querulous, ireful, envious, diſcontented, full of Grief and Care, to flatter the great ones of the World, that have theſe external things in their power, this is to be baſely and miſerably ſubject (to be abject and baſe,) and is not ineptly called a Slavery (a baſe and miſerable Subjection,) although it is no Slavery in the ſtrict ſenſe of Civil Law, which by a Slave meaneth one that hath no right. So the Apoſtle (ſpeaking in a large ſenſe) ſaith; The Creature was ſubjected to the Bondage of Corruption, a Brother or a Siſter is not under Bondage, I will not be brought under the Power of any; (d) that is, I will not loſe my Freedom and be brought into Bondage. So if Men were Great and Noble in the World, yet the Philoſophers call'd them Slaves, if they had not attain'd to freedom from all that they accounted baſe and miſerable Subjection. And at the ſame rate our Saviour treated the Jews (which put them into a great huff;) for notwithſtanding their pretenſions to Nobility and Freedom, and their high Conceits of the Prerogatives of their Nation, yet Chriſt counted them in Bondage, minded them of their want of Freedom, (alluding to a Civil-Law Senſe) call'd them by the infamous Name of Slaves, told them, that their abode in the Viſible Church was but like that of Bondmen in a Family, and that their uſage muſt be the ſame with theirs; for they muſt be caſt out of the Family, unleſs they were made free by the Son, who maketh all his Freemen Sons, Joh. 8. 32—36. Our Saviour therefore ſuppoſeth, that as Families uſually in thoſe times conſiſted of Chil- (z) Ap. Petav. T. 4. par. 1. l. 9. c. 3. S. 9.

(a) M. Ant. l. 2. S. 5.

Procl. Plat. Theol. l. 5. c. 1.

(b) Non ſatis eſſe, Chriſto judice, ſi malis factis abſtineamus, quod lotio indicabat; ſed requiri vim ad bona opera agentem magno quodam impetu. Grot. Not. in Matth. 3. 11.

(c) Lip. manuduct. l. 3. diſſ. 12. Epict. Diſſ. l. 2. c. 1. & l. 3. c. 24, 26. Gat. Not. in Ant. p. 52, 296, 347. Dr. Jackſon Com. B. 10 c. 19, 21.

Rom. 8. 21. 1 Cor. 7. 15. and 6. 12.

(d) Grot. Not. in loc.

dren and Servants, Sons and Slaves: So in the viſible Church there are two Kinds and Families of Religioniſts; the one the Free and Filial, the other the Baſe and Servile. Such were the carnal Jews eſpecially and eminently, and ſuch are all carnal and mundane kind of Religioniſts, that (in the main) ſymbolize with them, and are of their Kind and Character. For the carnal Jews muſt be conſider'd as a Branch of ungodly and unregenerate Mankind; their Servitude (for the main of it) was not peculiar to themſelves, it belong'd to them in common with the reſt of ungodly Mankind, who are therefore a baſe and ſervile Family, and in the State of Spiritual Servitude, becauſe they are under the Reign and Domination of Sin. Joh. 8. 34. Whoſoever committeth Sin (is a committer of Sin) is the Servant of Sin (he is ſubjected to the Rule and Domination of it,) which is a baſe and miſerable Subjection. The Servants of Sin can be none of God's Servants ſimply ſo called: But they may be a Servile kind of Servants unto God, and may do unto him a Servile kind of God-ſervice. And ſuch is the Piety of the baſe-born carnal Legaliſts: Much of their Piety is in its own Nature Servile Task; what is not ſuch in its own Nature, they make it ſuch by performing it without gracious, ingenuous and kindly Affection; whence the whole of their Piety muſt be called the baſe and ſervile kind of Piety. The Judaical Ceremonies were in their own Nature ſlaviſh Tasks and Burdens, weak and beggarly Elements (of no Efficacy as to the Soul, devoid of the Richneſs and Precioſity of Grace,) the Religioniſts of the old Houſe were in Bondage under the Elements of the World (mundane Rites.) Mount Sinai gendreth to Bondage, the old Jeruſalem was a Bond-woman, and by her incommodious Subjection to theſe mundane Rites was in Bondage with her Children. The Ritualiſts Piety therefore, although it looketh very pompous, is really no better than vile Servility and Bond-ſervice, the Servile Family's kind of Piety. They are far from being duly unſerviliz'd and unenſlav'd in Religion, that ſink it into vile external Rites and frigid Inſtitutes, ſuch as the Inſtitutes of the Scribes and Phariſees, the Inſtitutes that make a great part of the Romiſh Religioniſts Piety, and thoſe of the Kaloirs or Greek Monks, (e) who are under an Obligation to perform their μετάνοιαι, that is, their bowings and kiſſings the Ground Three Hundred times every Four and Twenty Hours. There are other Branches of the Servile Family's Piety, which they make ſuch by performing them without Gracious-ingenuous and kindly Affection; for all ſuch doings (that Men preſcribe to themſelves or are preſcrib'd by others,) which claſh with Ingenuity, are Servility (of Kind and Quality ſuch) Servile Task and Drudgery. Such are the doings of Slaves in the Civil-law Senſe; they are ſervilely task'd by their Maſters, and the Services which they do them, are plodding Task and Drudgery (like that of the Carrier's Horſes upon the Road;) and ſuch are the Services which the Slaves of Sin do unto God. Their ſaying their daily Prayers upon the ſame Score, that the Iſraelites made Brick in Egypt, to fulfull their daily Task; their crouching Devotion and worſhipping God (as the Americans do the Devil) ne noceat, that he may not do them an ill turn; their caring for no more Religion than will juſt ſave them from Hell (which are vile diſingenuous things;) their repentance of Attrition, their flattering Humiliations. Pſal. 78. 36. (f) "The Prieſts of the Greek-Church run over their Offices, as the School-boys do their "Tasks, pronouncing their words ſo ſwift and "thick, as rendreth them inarticulcate and "unintelligible, and are of no ſavour or energy to Perſons that deſire to profit in Devotion. (g) The Ethiopick Monks have certain "Prayers, of which they ſay ſuch a number "believing their Piety fully ſatisfied, if they "finiſh their Task, which that they may "make the more haſt to accompliſh, they hnddle over the Pſalms of David with ſuch a "dextrous celerity, that I who have heard "them at Rome, holding the ſame Copy in my "Hand, could never follow them with my "Voice, and hardly with my Eyes. Such is the Piety and Devotion of the Slaves of Sin, the opus operatum of Religious Duties.

Act. 15. 10. Gal. 4. 9. and 5. 1. and 4. 3.

Gal. 4. 24. 25, 30.

(e) Sr. P. Rycaut of the preſ. State of the Gr. Church, p. 2.6.

(f) Ibid. p. 320.

(g) Ludolph. Hiſt. of Ethiop. B. 3. c. 3.

The Slaves of Sin under the Law (which ſaveth none from being ſuch) ought to be kept in ſlaviſh fear; for the Principle that diſpoſeth them to Obedience, is the ſlaviſh fear of Menaces, ſtern Correction and Puniſhment, (b) φεύγοντες ȣ̓ τὸ αἰσχρὸν, ἀλλὰ τὸ λυπηρὸν, they eſchewing not the Sin but the Puniſhment. Accordingly, the Law impos'd its Works and Tasks upon them rigorouſly, minaciouſly and imperiouſly (ſo as might impreſs great fear and terrour,) with great ſeverity it exacted the performance of them, thundring out Curſes if they were not done. As the Pagans Religion therefore was baſe and ſervile, becauſe of their ſlaviſh fear, dread and horrour of their Deities, (i) which was a principal Ingredient of their Piety: So in the legal and ſervile State and under the legal and ſervile Diſpenſation of things the carnal Jews were affected, and carry'd themſelves towards God as Slaves. Rom. 8. 15. Ye have not receiv'd the Spirit of Bondage (the ſervile Diſpoſition in Religion,) again to fear (to fear as Slaves do, that are kept in ſervile Awe and Fear;) for they that are of this Spirit, are the Religioniſts of the unregenerate and legal State, who are the vile Serviliſts, not the genuin Pietiſts. Theſe are alſo reſtrain'd and hamper'd by a ſervile awe and fear from running into groſs Enormities, and are forc'd to do their Tasks (the Deeds of the Law) contrary to their own Inclinations and Deſires, upon which account they are in Slavery; for as the Philoſopher ſaith, (k) where any one is againſt his Will, that place is a Priſon to him. As legal Juſticiaries alſo theſe Judaical Slaves of Sin are Serviliſts; for they will not have Righteouſneſs with God in the free and noble way, but will have it in their (proud yet) mercenary and ſervile way, by performing their legal ſervile Tasks, and as being thereby legally Righteous, which is inconſiſtent with their being God's kind of Religioniſts.

(h) Grot. Not. in Rom. 8. 15.

(i) Plutarch. de ſuperſtit.

(k) Epict. Diſſ. l. 1. c. 12.

VI. The true and genuin kind of Piety is the true and genuin kind of Religious Worſhip (or God-ſervice) and the true and genuin kind of Religious Worſhip is the Spiritual-religious (the being God's Religioniſts in that way of Worſhip) according to the Apoſtle's account of it. Rom. 7. 6. That we ſhould ſerve in newneſs of Spirit. Phil. 3. 3. We Worſhip God in the Spirit. Of this genuin kind of Religious Worſhip our Saviour diſcourſeth to the Woman of Samaria. Joh. 4. 21, 24. Woman, believe me, the hour cometh, when ye ſhall neither in this Mountain, nor yet at Jeruſalem Worſhip the Father. Te Worſhip ye know not what: We know what we Worſhip: For Salvation is of the Jews. But the hour cometh and now is, when the true Worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in Spirit and in Truth: For the Father ſeeketh ſuch to Worſhip him. God is a Spirit, and they that Worſhip him, muſt Worſhip him in Spirit and in Truth. It is not probable (l) that the Samaritans were Image-worſhippers and worſhipped God under the corporeal form of a Dove, which was hid in Mount Gerizim, as the Rabbins relate. For what Idolaters ever kept their Image-σεβάσματα in the Earth, and would have Worſhip pay'd to them under Ground? But they were Idolaters (although no Image-worſhippers;) for our Saviour ſaith, ye Worſhip ye know not what. In their Temple-worſhip they worſhipped their Temple-deity; if therefore their Temple was numine vacuum, the Object of their Worſhip muſt neceſſarily be a figment of their own, not the true Godhead. And ſo it fareth with thoſe Religioniſts, that are totally out of Theiſm of Religion and Condition: But God and Salvation were to be found in the Jewiſh Church and Religion, wherein there were ſome that were initially, imperfectly and in a lower degree true and genuin Worſhippers; and our Saviour declareth it, to be the deſign of his coming, to raiſe up a Generation of Worſhippers, that ſhould be eminently true and genuin (ὡς ἂν πνευματικοὺς ἀποδείξῃ προσκυνητὰς (m) to make Spiritual Worſhippers,) who ſhould Worſhip God, not in what is Carnality of Religion, but Spirituality; and with that which is Truth of Worſhip, not Figure and Shadow, which was the Jews and Samaritans Worſhip. The worſhipping God in Spirit, being thus confronted to the Jews and Samaritans Worſhip with deſign to aboliſh it, neceſſarily ſignifieth

(1.) Oppoſitively to the Judaical Worſhip, which was that which is Carnality of Religion. (n) By theſe words our Saviour hath taught us, that God muſt not be worſhipped ἐν σαρκὶ καὶ σαρκίναις θυσίαις, carnally and with carnal Sacrifices. (o) Οὐδὲ διὰ συμβόλων καὶ τύπων, nor by Symbols and Figures. (p) Our Saviour manifeſtly ſignifieth thus much, that we ought to ceaſe from the uſages of the Judaical legal Worſhip; which (abſtracted from the matters of Chriſtianity that they typified) were meer carnal Ordinances. (q) For theſe Inſtitutes, Circumciſe the Fleſh, anoint the Fleſh, waſh the Fleſh, cleanſe the Fleſh, ſhave the Fleſh, bind things on the Fleſh, nouriſh the Fleſh, reſt from labour as to the Fleſh, are they not all Carnal? And hearken what goods the Law promiſeth. Long Life to the Fleſh, Milk and Honey to the Fleſh, Peace to the Fleſh, Delicacies to the Fleſh. The Jews Ceremonial Worſhip conſiſted of outward bodily Rites and Actions, that concern'd the Fleſh only, and could not ſanctifie the Souls of Men, nor could their Sacrifices cleanſe them from the Guilt of Sin, but only from ſome outward legal Defilement, that rendred them incapable of coming to the Tabernacle or ſubjected them to temporal Puniſhment: But as to their Soul-condition they remain'd ſtill in their criminal State; for theſe Sacrifices did but cleanſe as to the purifying the Fleſh (the outward Man,) they made not the Religioniſt perfect (expiated) as pertaining to the Conſcience. The Ordinances about their Levitical Prieſthood and Temple-worſhip mainly conſiſted in bodily Labour and Expence (putting the inward Man to no ſtreſs at all,) the obſervance of them was competible to meer carnal People, was devoid of any Spiritual Grace, conſtituted them nothing more than a carnal kind of Religious People, and by accident ſubſerv'd the Intereſt of Carnality. For ritual and trivial obſervances are commonly made uſe of, to ſupply the place of ſubſtantial Piety, to excuſe from it, to make amends for their real Sins, and to purchaſe a Reward which they deſpair of obtaining by the regular method of real Holineſs.

(2.) Poſitively the Chriſtian-worſhip, this being that which is Spirituality of Religion. (r) We Chriſtians having abandon'd the craſs Judaical Worſhip, are injoin'd to perform a Spiritual Worſhip. This is the Worſhip, which our Saviour meaneth by Spirit, which is of a twofold Notion in the New Teſtament. For ſometimes it ſignifieth vital Sanctity, and ſometimes what is Spirituality of Religion: Anſwerably whereunto the Fleſh (which ſpeaketh an Antitheſis to Spirit) ſometimes ſignifieth vital Carnality, and ſometimes what is Carnality of Religion. Rom. 8. 9. To be in the Spirit, not in the Fleſh, is to be in vital Sanctity, not in vital Carnality; and to be in the Fleſh (Rom. 7. 5.) is to be in vital Carnality, devoid of vital Sanctity. Joh. 3. 6. That which is born of the Fleſh, is Fleſh, it is vital Carnality: That which is born of the Spirit, is Spirit, it is vital Sanctity. Joh. 6. 63. It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the Fleſh profiteth nothing; the words that I ſpeak unto you, they are Spirit and they are Life. They are meant of that which is Spirit, vital Sanctity into which the Spirit quickeneth; and they are meant of that which is Life, Life Spiritual and Eternal. To live in the Spirit, and walk in the Spirit, is to live and walk in vital Sanctity, and the Combat between Fleſh and Spirit is a Combat between two contrary Lives, of which the one is vital Carnality, the other is vital Sanctity. (s) The Name Spirit denoteth Spiritual Grace. But ſometimes it denoteth what is Spirituality of Religion (which vital Sanctity manifeſtly is,) as Gal. 3. 3. Having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the Fleſh? What is Carnality and vile Externalneſs of Religion the Apoſtle calleth the Fleſh. Rom. 4. 1. What ſhall we ſay then, that Abraham our Father as pertaining to the Fleſh hath found? Phil. 3. 3. We rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have no confidence in the Fleſh. What is Spirituality of Religion the Apoſtle in this place calleth Spirit. We are the Circumciſion (Spiritual Jews,) οἱ πνεύματι Θεῷ λατρεύοντες, that Worſhip God in Spirit, (t) τουτέστιν οἱ πνευματικῶς λατρεύοντες, that is ſuch as Worſhip ſpiritually, and ſo as to be the Spiritual and Divine kind of Worſhippers. The Regenerate and Chriſtian Family Worſhip God with all that is real Honour and Service unto him, and the whole of their Chriſtian Piety towards him is what is Spirituality of Religion; the Sacrifices and Oblations which they offer (as a Spiritual Prieſthood) are of Kind and Quality the Spiritual, of which the carnal legal Sacrifices were Figures and Shadows. They offer the Sacrifice

of

(l) Hotting. Exercit. Antimorin. S. 16, 17.

(m) S. Cyril. Dial. 1. de Trin. p. 399.

(n) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 6. p. 324.

(o) Euſeb. Dem. Ev. l. 1. c. 6.

(p) S. Cyr. Alex. T. 1. l. 1. p. 3.

(q) Τὸ γὰρ λέγειν, περίτεμε τὴν σάρκα, χρῖσον τὴν σάρκα, λοῦσον τὴν σάρκα, καθάρισον τὴν σάρκα, περίκειρον τὴν σάρκα, ἐπίδησον τὴν σάρκα, θρέψον τὴν σάρκα, ἄργησον τῇ σαρκὶ, ταῦτα εἰπέ μοι, οὐχὶ σαρκικά; εἰ δὲ θέλεις μαθεῖν καὶ τίνα ἃ ἐπηγγέλλετο ἀγαθὰ, ἄκουε· πολλὴ ζωὴ, φησι, τῇ σαρκὶ, γάλα καὶ μέλι τῇ σαρκὶ, εἰρήνη τῇ σαρκὶ, τρυφὴ τῇ σαρκί. S. Chryſoſt. in Ep. ad Hebr. or. 13.

Heb. 9. 9, 13.

Rom. 7. 5, 6.

(r) Ἡμεῖς δὲ τὴν οὕτω παχεῖαν ἀφέντες λατρείαν— πνευματικὴν ἀποπληροῦν προστετάγμεθα. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 10. p. 345. V. Lactant. l. 6.

Gal. 5. 16, 17, 25.

(s) Intelligimus Spiritus nomine donum Spiritualis gratiæ deſignari. Fulgent. l. 2. ad Monim. c. 2.

(t) S. Chry- ſoſt. in Philip.

1 Pe 5. Pſal. 17.

of a broken Heart and the Sacrifice of themſelves, (u) hoc eſt Sacrificium Chriſtianorum. They offer the Sacrifice of their Goods and the Sacrifice of Prayer anſwerable to the Judaical Incenſe, Pſal. 141. 2. (w) Prayer proceeding from a chaſt Body, an innocent Soul and from the holy Spirit. They offer the Sacrifice of Praiſe and Thanſgiving (x) ἀληθινοὶ καὶ πνευματικοὶ αἶνοι ϗ εὐχαριστίαι, true and ſpiritual Praiſes and Thankſgivings, together with whatever Oblations the holy Euchariſt compriſeth, which is the Crown of their ſolemn Miniſteries. (y) Their bodily Worſhip is the Spiritual, as proceeding from Spiritual Devotion and ordinated thereto.

(3.) Poſitively the holy Spiritual Man's kind of Worſhip, which is ſuch Worſhip as is in vital Sanctity, and ſuch is the Chriſtians kind of Worſhip, who are holy Spiritual kind of Men. (z.) The holy Spirit infuſeth the Gift of Spiritual Grace (vital Sanctity) in which God is worſhipped. Vital Sanctity is the ſpecific Nature and Excellency of the Chriſtian Religion and Diſpenſation and of the Chriſtian Religioniſts. Rom. 7. 6. and 8. 2. 2 Cor. 3. 3, 6. Gal. 4. 29. Heb. 8. 10. The Spirit of the Chriſtian Diſpenſation as in himſelf, and as in us is of definitive Notion vital Sanctity, Rom. 1. 4. 1 Cor. 6. 11. All authentic accounts of the Chriſtian Worſhip ſpeak it of proper kind the Worſhip that is in vital Sanctity, and this is that which conſtituteth it, denominateth and diſtinguiſheth it from all other. For becauſe of their vital Sanctity Regenerate Chriſtians are appropriately and peculiarly the Spiritual and Divine kind of Religioniſts, the true and genuin kind of Worſhippers; their Virtue is the Spiritual and Divine kind of Virtue, their Worſhip is the Spiritual and Divine kind of Worſhip, they know and worſhip God (a) καινῶς ϗ πνευματικῶς, newly and ſpiritually; they ſerve not in their old dead Religion, but in newneſs of Spiritual Life. Rom. 7. 6. they Worſhip God in the Spirit (in the Grace of it) Phil. 3. 3. their Prayer and Supplication is in the Spirit, in the holy Ghoſt (in vital Sanctity) Eph. 5. 18. Jude 20. their Oblation and Sacrifice (b) is not offer'd up by Smoak and Nidor, nor by Blood and Waſhings, but by the Grace of the Spirit; their Religion and Religious Worſhip is of proper kind the Spiritual-vital. Joh. 7. 39. Rom. 8. 2. and 12. 1. Apoc. 3. 1.

(4.) Oppoſitively to the carnal Man's (the carnal and mundane Religioniſt's) kind of Worſhip. Some of thoſe blind Seers the Hebrew Doctors although they are doating Ritualiſts, (c) yet hugely diſparage the material Incenſe and Sacrifices of their Temple-worſhip in compariſon of their Moralities and Moral Duties of Religious Worſhip. But ſeeing they are carnal Jews, the Slaves of Sin, the old Man's Religioniſts, it is not to be ſuppos'd, that their Moralities and Moral Religious Duties are fruit unto God, the holy kind of good Works, or ſpiritual Sacrifices: But at beſt they are ſpurious and illegitimate kind of Virtue and Piety. The Sacrifices of Chriſtians therefore muſt not be thought Spiritual Sacrifices, (d) meerly becauſe they are not οὔπω παχεῖαι ϗ ἔνυλοι, ſo craſs and material as the Jews Burnt-offerings and Sacrifices; for if this incorporiety and immateriality was ſufficient, to conſtitute them Spiritual Sacrifices, the carnal legal Religioniſts would offer up Spiritual Sacrifices as well as the Chriſtian; for they alſo offer Prayers, Praiſes and Alms-deeds. But the Judaical Incenſe was not a Figure and Adumbration of any ſort of Prayers, but of the Prayers of Saints only. Apoc. 5. 8. therefore the Worſhip of God in Spirit and Truth is only that kind of Worſhip, which is in vital Sanctity; all that are totally devoid of it, muſt neceſſarily be ſuch Religioniſts, that Worſhip in their vital Carnality with ſuch Worſhip, which is but the carnal Man's kind of Religious Worſhip and vile Externalneſs of Religion. Who can be none of God's kind of Religioniſts, as appeareth from our Saviour's Rule of Worſhip, and more eſpecially from that part of it, which is the Reaſon of it, πνεῦμα ὁ Θεὸς, God is Spirit. Which words are marvellouſly miſunderſtood by Expoſitors and in our Books of Theology, which ſuppoſe them to ſignifie, that God is a Spirit in the Senſe of common Philoſophy (immaterial or incorporeal;) whereas they ought to be interpreted (not from common Philoſophy, but) from the Science of Sanctity; and ſo interpreted they plainly ſignifie, that God (being vital Sanctity and of God-kind) is of Kind and Quality what is Spiritual-religious, and therefore muſt be worſhipp'd with the Spiritual-religious Worſhip. That this is the true Senſe of them, and the commonly received Senſe is a great miſtake, will appear by theſe following Arguments.

(1.) Amongſt the ancient Writers of the Church the word Spirit ſometimes ſignifieth what is of Kind and Quality Spiritual-religious, and it ſo ſignifieth, when God is denominated Spirit. For S. Auſtin ſaith; Quoniam Deus Spiritus eſt, qui Legem dedit, proculdubiò Lex Spiritalis eſt. Becauſe God is Spirit, who gave the Law, doubtleſs the Law is Spirital. Which place Petavius thus expoundeth. (e) The Word Spirital doth not ſo much ſignifie the Nature and Subſtance either of God or his Law, as the Moral Quality of both, that is, the Sanctity. As the word Carnal (the oppoſite thereto) doth not denote the Subſtance but the Vicioſity. So Spirit and Fleſh, Carnal and Spirital are contraries, not by a conſtitutive Nature, but by Affection. Spirit is the ſame with Holy or Sanctity: Or it is the ſame with Spirital, and if I might ſo ſpeak, Spiritality. He ſheweth, that unleſs Spirit be thus underſtood, S. Auſtin's Argument will ſignifie nothing; and doubtleſs our Saviour's will ſignifie as little. Many of the ancient Writers read our Saviour's Text, Joh. 3. 6 with this addition quia Deus ſpiritus eſt. (f) Quod natum eſt ex carne caro eſt: Quod natum eſt de ſpiritu, ſpiritus eſt, quia Deus ſpiritus eſt. That which is born of the Fleſh, is Fleſh: That which is born of the Spirit, is Spirit; becauſe the Spirit is God. If that which is born of the Spirit, is Spirit (that is, vital Sanctity, or Spiritual-vital,) becauſe the Spirit is God, then God is Spirit as being vital Sanctity, or Spiritual-vital, and he ought to be ſo denominated in the Senſe of the Science of Sanctity. Πνεῦμα ὁ Θεὸς τȣτέςιν πνευματικὸς, God is Spirit, that is, Spiritual, ſaith S. Chryſoſtom. If our Saviour had ſaid, that God is Spiritual, all would expound the Epithet, to ſignifie his

(u) S. Aug. de .D. l. 10. c. 6.

(w) Oratio de carne pudica, de anima innocenti, de Spiritu Sancto profecta. Tertull. Apol. c. 30.

(x) J. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 345.

(y) Adoratio corporalis in Spiritu fit, in quantum à Spirituali devotione procedit, & ad eam ordinatur. Aquin. 2. 2. Qu. 84. art. 2.

(z) Spiritus donum gratiæ Spiritalis infundit, in quo adoratur Deus. S. Ambroſ. de Sp. Sanct. l. 3. c. 12.

(a) Clem. Str. l. 6. m. 458.

(b) Οὐ διὰ καπνȣ̃ ϗ κνίσσης, ἀλλ' διὰ αἱμάτων ϗ λύτρων, ἀλλὰ διὰ τῆς τȣ̃ πνεύματος προσάγεται χάριτος. S. Chryſ. T. 6. p. 335.

(c) Maimon. Mor. Nev. Par. c. 32. Men. Ben. Iſr. Qu. in Levit. 181, 182.

(d) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 4. p. 126.

(e) T. 1. l. 10. c. 24. S. 7.

(f) S. Ambroſ. de Sp. Sanct. l. 3. c. 11. Concil. Carthag. inter oper. S. Cypr. Ed. Oxon. p. 231. P. Chryſol. Ser. 145.

Sanctity; therefore they ought ſo to expound the Attribute Spirit.

(2.) Spirit in the ſenſe of common Philoſophy (as is before noted) is no Divine Attribute, being common to Creatures, the worſt of Creatures, the unclean Spirits. It is no Divine Attribute either of Degree or of Kind. Whereas our Saviour is arguing for the Spiritual-religious kind of Worſhip; he is ſhewing what God is as to the buſineſs of Religion and Sanctity (on our part,) that not the Carnal, but the Spiritual-kind of Religion and God-ſervice is his kind of Religion and God-ſervice; and that not the Carnal, but the Spiritual-kind of Worſhippers and Religioniſts, are his kind of Religioniſts. This cannot be ſhew'd but from ſome Divine kind of Attribute; therefore the Attribute Spirit muſt be of ſuch ſignification in our Saviour's Argument. Elſe he alledgeth a Reaſon for the Spiritual kind of Worſhip, which can be no Reaſon; he foundeth the Spiritual and Divine kind of Worſhip upon a Spirituality, which is not of Spiritual and Divine kind; which is not peculiar to God or his kind of Religioniſts, nor is any thing of Virtue, nor the oppoſite to the Vice of Carnality, but is very well conſiſtent with Carnality of Mind, Life and Religion. For the Devil and the Souls of the wicked notwithſtanding their Philoſophic Spirituality are very well pleas'd with Carnality of Life and Religion.

(3.) Spirit in the latter part of our Saviour's Rule of Worſhip muſt neceſſarily correſpond to Spirit in the former part of it (the one being the Reaſon of the other;) if therefore Spirit in the former part of our Saviour's Rule of Worſhip ſignifieth what is Spiritual-religious, it ſo ſignifieth in the latter part of it. And it muſt ſo ſignifie; for if we ſuppoſe our Saviour thus to argue; God is a Spiritual Subſtance in the Senſe of common Philoſophy; therefore his Worſhip muſt be Spiritual in the Senſe of the Science of Sanctity; we make him to argue à baculo ad angulum, to infer quidlibet ex quolibet, and μεταβαίνειν εἰς ἄλλο γένος, in arguing to run from one thing to another of another kind.

(4.) Spirit in the Senſe of common Philoſophy is an Attribute, that moſt agreeably foundeth a wild Philoſophic Pagan Worſhip, ſuch as the Platoniſts gave to their Monad, which was a purely immaterial and incorporeal Worſhip. So ſome allot (g) a material Worſhip to their material Deities (thoſe that preſide over the matter,) but they ſuppoſe a Worſhip purely immaterial moſt agreeable to thoſe Deities that are purely immaterial. But we may as well ſuppoſe, that becauſe like loveth like, therefore God (being a Mind and Spirit) loveth every Mind and Spirit, as ſuppoſe, that becauſe God is meerly incorporeal, therefore his Religious Worſhip muſt be meerly incorporeal. Yet to a purely immaterial Mind and incorporeal Subſtance as ſuch no Worſhip can be ſo ſuitable, as that which is purely mental and incorporeal. Euſebius therefore in his criminally Philoſophic-paganizing ſtrain hath made our Religious Worſhip incorporeal at the Philoſophic Pagan rate. For what Worſhip is that but the Philoſophic-pagan, which conſiſteth (h) ἐν ἀπαθείᾳ ψυχῆς, in an apathy of the Soul, or vacuity of Perturbation (which is exactly (i) Philoſophic-pagan Language,) and which offereth unto God (k) ὐδὲν μὲν γεῶδες καὶ νεκρὸν,—— ὐδέ τι τῆς φθαρτῆς καὶ ὑλικῆς ὐσίας, nothing terrene and dead, nor any thing of corruptible and material Subſtance? S. Chryſoſtom interpreteth the Worſhip of God in Spirit, to be meant of Sacrifices and Oblations (l) that are offer'd by the Soul, by the Spirit of a Man, that need not the Body, nor corporeal Organs, nor places. But if this was our Saviour's meaning in his Rule of Worſhip, what would become of all the external part of the Acts of Religious Worſhip? And how groſly doth this excellent Perſon contradict himſelf? For having enumerated many Virtues, which are acceptable to God, he proceedeth to ſay, that there are other Sacrifices which are really whole Burnt-offerings, τὰ τῶν ἁγίων μαρτύρων σώματα, the Bodies of the holy Martyrs, τὸ σῶμα νεκρῶν, ὐχὶ ὁλοκαύτωσίς ἐστι; to mortifie the Body, is it not offering a whole Burnt-offering? Chriſtianity requireth the ſerving God with our Body and the Organs thereof, in due time and place, habit, geſture and poſture; our Saviour hath inſtituted ſome few laudably external Rites of Worſhip, which are of Kind and Quality Spiritual-religious; therefore his great Rule of Worſhip doth not mean, that God's Service muſt be purely incorporeal, nor is it founded upon τὸ ἀσώματον, the meer incorporeity of God.

(5.) Spirit underſtood in the common Senſe of Philoſophy ſo perverteth the Senſe of our Saviour's Rule of Worſhip, that it doth not reach the Caſe, which was in debate amongſt Religioniſts in our Saviour's time. For let us ſuppoſe with Grotius (m) that our Saviour's Reaſon of his Rule of Worſhip is the very ſame with Cato's, Deus eſt Animus, and that ſimilia ſimilibus gaudent, and that the conſequence is (as Grotius will have it,) that our Saviour's Rule of Worſhip is the very ſame with Cato's, God muſt be worſhipp'd, purâ mente, with a pure Mind. So the Pagan Poets, their Laws and Lawgivers, their Oracles and Philoſophers, Cicero and Seneca, Charondas and the Law of the Twelve Tables, Epicharmus, Menander, Perſius, Plato, Porphyry, Simplicius, Hierocles, Julian, and the Inſcription on the Temple of Epidaurus teach, that the Deity muſt be worſhipp'd with a pure Mind (a Mind that is not impious and wicked,) which is ſo uſually and univerſally the Senſe of the Pagan Theologers, that Lactantius cannot be excus'd from over-ſtretching the String, when he ſaith of the Pagan Worſhip, (n) non officio mentis, ſed miniſterio corporis conſtat (it is not mental, but bodily Miniſtery,) and that he could find nothing in it but Ritus ad manum & digitos pertinentes, Rites appertaining to the Hands and Fingers. Plato ſaith, (o) It would be a grievous thing, if the Gods have reſpect to our Gifts and Sacrifices, and not to the Soul, whether it be juſt and holy. To this I ſuppoſe the Gods have much more reſpect than to theſe coſtly Pomps and Sacrifices, which nothing hindreth, but a great Criminal as to the Gods and Men, both private Men and Republick may yearly perform. But they being ὐ δωροδόκοι, incorrupt by Gifts deſpiſe all theſe things. A Law of the Twelve Tables is, Pietatem adhibento, opes amovento, which a Modern Author (agreeably to the Senſe of Grotius) thus interpreteth. (p) Piety is of the Mind, whereby God is worſhipp'd: According to that, God is a Spirit, therefore to be worſhip'd in Spirit and Truth. The Law ſuppoſeth, that Piety is an Act of the Mind, ſo far the Law is rightly interpreted.

(g) Iamb. de Myſt. Sect. 5. c. 14.

(h) Pr. Ev. l. 3. c. 13. & l. 4. c. 4.

(i) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 2. p. 61.

(k) Euſeb. ibid. l. 4. c. 10.

(l) Τὰ διὰ ψυχῆς, τὰ διὰ πνεύματος, ὅσα μὴ δεῖται σώματος, ὅσα μὴ δεῖται ὀργάνων, μὴ τόπων. In Hebr. or. 11.

(m) Not. in Joh. 4. 24.

(n) L. 4. c. 3. & l. 5. c. 20.

(o) V. Betul. Annot. in Lactant. l. 5. c. 21.

(p) Pietas animi eſt, quo D us colitur: Juxta illud, De Spiritus eſt, adorandus ergo Spiritu & veritate. Betul. ſup. v. Lactant. l. 6. c. 2.

preted. But who can ſuppoſe, that the Senſe of this old Heathen Law is the ſame with the Senſe of the new Chriſtian Law, that God muſt be worſhipp'd in Spirit and Truth? That the Law of the Twelve Tables is the ſame with our Saviour's Inſtitution of the Chriſtian Worſhip? Wherefore it muſt be acknowledg'd, that Men may Worſhip the Deity with what they call a pure and pious Mind, yet ſo as to be no better than mundane and carnal kind of Religioniſts, as the Pagans undoubtedly were. And ſuch are the Hebrew Doctors, who yet pretend to (q) a clean Heart and a pure Soul towards the God of Iſrael. The whole World of Religioniſts, Jews, Pagans and Chriſtians, agree, that God muſt be worſhipp'd with the Mind and with that which they call a pure Mind; if this therefore is our Saviour's Senſe and the whole of it; if his Rule of Worſhip is the ſame with Cato's, Cicero's, Seneca's, and the Law of the Twelve Tables, he hath ſaid nothing new, nothing properly Divine and Chriſtian, nothing that reacheth his purpoſe (which was to introduce the new and regenerate Religioniſts kind of Worſhip,) nothing that reacheth the debate between the Spiritual aud Carnal kind of Religioniſts. For was this the debate between them, whether God muſt be worſhipp'd by the Mind and a pure Mind? Or was this the matter in debate (as others (r) expound our Saviour's words,) whether the Soul muſt be join'd with the external Performances? If theſe plain and obvious Principles of natural Religion were always commonly acknowledg'd, and never were matters of debate amongſt Religioniſts, our Saviour's Rule of Worſhip cannot be thought, to relate to any other debate than that grand one, which commenc'd with the riſe of Chriſtianity, namely, whether Men muſt be Chriſtian or no Chriſtian, Regenerate or Unregenerate, new or old, the new or old Man's, the Spiritual or Carnal kind of Religioniſts? Our Saviour began this Debate, and if his Rule of Divine Worſhip was deſign'd to put an end to it, that Rule muſt be founded upon a better Reaſon than Deus eſt Animus. This Debate compriſeth a Debate touching a pure Mind (for the Spiritual Religioniſts do not acknowledge the carnal Religioniſts pure Mind, they call it atheous, carnal, polluted,) but is of larger comprehenſion than it; for our Saviour's Rule muſt be underſtood oppoſitively, as deſigned to take away the mundane and carnal Religioniſts kind of Worſhip; and alſo poſitively, as deſign'd to introduce in its ſtead the Spiritual-religious Worſhip of the Spiritual Jews (purely and eminently ſuch) which is the Worſhip of the genuin Chriſtian Church.

But the degenerate Chriſtian Church hath badly underſtood and worſe practiſed our Saviour's Divine Rule of Worſhip. For the ſecond Nicene Council and their Followers (s) allot to Images a more overly and inferiour degree of Religious Worſhip (which is called τιμητικὴ, Honourary,) but the ſupreme and eminent Devotion they reſerve for God alone. And this Devotion, as they ſuppoſe, is that which our Saviour meaneth by latria in Spiritu & Veritate, Worſhip in Spirit and Truth. Which Expoſition of our Saviour's words ſuppoſeth, that Worſhip in Spirit and Truth doth not ſignifie God's kind of Worſhip, but God's peculiar degree of Worſhip; that it is not oppos'd to the Jews and Samaritans (the carnal Religioniſts) kind of Worſhip, but to a Branch of the Chriſtian Worſhip; that the whole of the Chriſtian Worſhip is not Worſhip in Spirit and Truth, but part of it only; and that their Image-worſhip is Chriſtian Worſhip, yet not Chriſtian Worſhip; for it is not Worſhip in Spirit and Truth. Card. Beſſarion maintaineth, that Plato worſhipp'd God in Spirit and Truth, becauſe he ſaith in his Epinomis, that the moſt ſuitable Worſhip of God is, to think honourably of him. But the Worſhip in Spirit and Truth according to our Saviour's Senſe is, that which is competible to none but God's kind of Religioniſts. One would think, that ſo much blindneſs and ſtupidity is ſcarce incident to humane Nature, as that any inſtructed in Chriſtianity ſhould ſuppoſe the groſs umbratil Judaical Rite of Incenſe a Spiritual Sacrifice; yet in the Liturgy called S. Chryſoſtom's the Prieſt ſaith. Θυμιαμά σοι προσφέρομεν Χριστὲ ὁ Θεὸς εἰς ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας πνευματικῆς, We offer Incenſe to thee, O Chriſt God, for a ſmell of Spiritual Fragrancy. In the Chriſtian Worſhip (according to our Saviour's Rule) there muſt be nothing but what is of Kind and Quality Spiritual-Religious: But degenerate Chriſtendom hath deviſ'd a Religion of ſuch Uſages and Obſervances, that are vile external Rites (External to what is Spiritual-religious Worſhip,) of an Unchriſtian Nature, of Kind and Quality mundane, the Ritual Religioniſts kind of Religious Worſhip, and which are ſo numerous, that they make their Religion as Ritual as old Judaiſm was. But in any Profeſſion of Religion Men may be carnal kind of Religioniſts, which can be none of God's kind of Religioniſts.

(q) Coſri p. 384.

(r) Dr. Hammond.

(s) Petav. T. 4. Par. 2. l. 15. c. 17. s. 2.

CHAP. XI.

1. A Third Conſectary of Practice from the Idea of God; that a mundane Temple Religion is not his kind of Religion. Of the difference between Temples and Synagogues. 2. A Temple defin'd. 3. What it is that maketh our Churches Temples according to the mundane Temple Religioniſts. 4. Of Popery as it is a mundane Temple Religion, of the Senſe of the Primitive Chriſtians and the Philoſophers touching Temples. 5. Of the Name Altar. 6. Of the Rites of mundane Temple-religion. 7. Of the Church-Lights, Muſick, and the Ritual Conſecration of Churches. 8. Of the Religion of Holy Places and of Reverence belonging to Churches. 9. Of that Reverence in the Church called bowing to or towards the Altar. 10. Of the pompous God-ſervice.

1. FROM the Idea of God we muſt deduce a Third Conſectary of Practice, that God cannot be (otherwiſe than typically, by way of Oeconomy and for a time) the Deity of a mundane Temple-Religion, which is not his kind of Religion, but oppoſite thereto. This Conſectary naturally iſſueth from the Idea of God as it is repreſented by our Saviour; for he diſcourſeth with the Woman of Samaria, that within a while the occaſion of the Diſpute between the Jews and Samaritans ſhall be taken away. Their Diſpute was, whether the Temple at Jeruſalem or that on Mount Gerizim was the right Temple or Place of Worſhip; but within a while (ſaith our Saviour) neither the one nor the other Temple ſhall be the holy place of Worſhip; for there ſhall be no ſuch holy place of Worſhip (no place of God's Symbolical Preſence and Reſidence,) all Holineſs of places and diſtinction between them (s) ſhall utterly ceaſe, the Spiritual Worſhip of the true Worſhippers ſhall be as holy and acceptable to God in one place as in another under the Goſpel; when the true Worſhippers ſhall worſhip God according to his Idea, there ſhall be no Temple nor Temple-worſhip. From the Idea of God our Saviour inferreth his kind of Religion, which is oppoſite to the Jewiſh Temple-worſhip, that was Carnality of Religion, Figure and Shadow. Judaiſm was a Mundane Temple Religion, and ſuch was Paganiſm; but both are oppoſite to God's kind of Religion. If a Deity hath a Mundane Temple (a Worldly Sanctuary,) he muſt take upon him and ſuſtain the Perſon of a Worldly Imperial Eſtate of Religion, the Imperial Eſtate of a Mundane Religious Polity and Republick, of a Civil-religious People, and of a Civil-religious kind of Sanctity and God-ſervice. The true God therefore, if he will inſtitute a Mundane Temple, muſt inſtitute Carnal Judaiſm; for in Chriſtianiſm there can be no ſuch thing. If any make it (more or leſs) a Mundane Temple Religion, it loſeth its Nature by this impious depravation of it, and (more or leſs) ceaſeth to be the Chriſtian Religion: For the holy Founders of it expreſly affirm, that there is no ſuch thing as a Mundane Temple in it, Joh. 4. 21. Act. 7. 48. and 17. 24. Apoc. 21. 22. (t) ſo do the ancient Apologiſts; and accordingly S. Chryſoſtom reckoneth (u) a Mundane Temple amongſt the Mundane Elements. The Chriſtian Apologiſts have the ſame Opinion of the true God, that the Poet had of the Goddeſs Concordia at Athens, which for this reaſon (as he ſuppoſeth) had no Image in her Temple, (w) — mentes habitare ac pectora gaudet, ſhe delighteth to dwell in Souls. (x) Doſt thou deſire, to ſee a Temple? do not run to the Synagogue, but be thou a Temple. God hath deſtroy'd one Temple in Jeruſalem, and hath rais'd up innumerable others much more excellent. Ye are the Temple of the living God, ſaith the Apoſtle: Beautifie this Houſe, expell every evil reaſoning, that thou mayeſt become an honourable Member of Chriſt, a Temple of the Spirit. (y) This New Teſtament far tranſcendeth the Old, for in this there is nothing ſhadowy; not a Corporeal Temple, not Carnal Sacrifices, not Legal Obſervances, but all things are more ſublime and perfect; for this Teſtament wholly conſiſteth of Spirituals. (z) The Chriſtian Temple is a pure Body; their Altar an holy Soul; their Images are all ſorts of Virtues.

(a) The Temple of God is one great, which is the Church; the other little, which is a Man, that is of the Seed of Abraham. (b) The way of the Ancients was, to attribute Temples (ſuch material Edifices) to the Heathen, Churches to Chriſtians. So long as the Chriſtian Church continu'd tolerably Chriſtian, ſhe acknowledg'd no other Temple of God upon Earth ſave only her ſelf and her living Members; but upon her lapſe into Judaical Superſtition and Pagan-like Idolatry, then a Mundane Temple Religion (in ſeveral reſpects) was introduc'd. The Chriſtians did not only build their magnificent Churches after the Pattern of Solomon's Temple (which might be done without crime,) nor did they only call them Temples (which in an improper Senſe might be allow'd; but they ſuppoſe their Churches to be properly Temples as the Judaical and Pagan Temples were,) and inſtead of one Mundane Temple which was deſtroy'd, there roſe up in degenerate Chriſtendom Mundane Temples innumerable. The Chriſtians ſymboliz'd with the Jews, and became as they Mundane Temple Religioniſts; but with this difference, the Jews were ſuch by Divine Inſtitution, the Chriſtians were inſtituted ſuch by vain and ſinful Imaginations.

For the Chriſtian Churches are not of the ſame Nature and Notion with the Judaical Temple, but with the Jewiſh Synagogues, which were many (whereas there muſt be but one Temple,) and were not inſtituted by the Law of Moſes, but were founded in Natural Religion, as the Chriſtian Churches are. (c) Synagoga is commonly interpreted Eccleſia, a Chriſtian Aſſembly is called Synagoga, Jam. 2. 2. both the Jewiſh Synagogues and the Chriſtian Churches are Εὐκτήρια, Oratories, Domus Congregationis, the Houſes of Aſſembly, (d) διδασκαλεῖα σωφροσύνης καὶ δικαιοσύνης, the Schools of Temperance and Juſtice, and a Synagogue may be called by the Jews (e) בית יהוה the Houſe of the Lord, in the ſame ſenſe that Chriſtian Churches are rightly called Domus Dei, κυριακά, God's or the Lord's Houſes. The Worſhip of God in the Synagogues by the Moral Duties of Religion is of much more affinity with the Chriſtian Worſhip than the legal Ceremonies of the Temple-worſhip. This Temple-worſhip was topical and confin'd to that one place; but the Synagogue-worſhip was like the Chriſtian, acceptable to God in any place. The Temple, its Holineſs and Ritual Inſtitutes of Worſhip are typical; but the Synagogues, their Holineſs, and Inſtitutes of Worſhip were not typical, which ſpeaketh them of like nature with the Chriſtian Churches. * The Temple was the holy place of Worſhip; a Church or a Synagogue is not the holy place of Worſhip, but the place of the Holy Worſhip. Of the Temple we muſt ſay, The Holy Worſhip is appropriated to the Holy Place, and thereby becometh the Holy Worſhip (for the Altar ſanctifieth the Gift:) But of a Church or a Synagogue we muſt ſay, The Place is appropriated to the Holy Worſhip, and thereby it becometh an Holy Place. As the Holy Worſhip is appropriated to the Temple, ſo is the Σέβασμα, or Holy Worſhip objectively underſtood; whence it is no leſs than the Holy of Holies; but ſuch Holineſs is incompetible to Synagogues and Churches.

(s) Euſeb. Dem. Ev. l. 1. c. 4.

Heb. 9. 1.

(t) Selden. de Synedr. l. 3. c. 15. Grot. Not. in Act. 7. 48. Herald in Arnob. p. 229, 237.

(u) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 3. diſſ. 6. præfat.

(w) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 9. c. 38.

(x) Ναὸν ἐπιθυμεῖς ἰδεῖν; μὴ δράμῃς εἰς τὴν συναγωγὴν, ἀλλὰ γενοῦ σὺ ναός. ἕνα καθεῖλε ναὸν ὁ θεὸς ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις, καὶ μυρίους ἀνέστησεν ἐκείνου πολλῷ σεμνοτέρους. ὑμεῖς ναὸς θεοῦ ἐστὲ ζῶντος, φησί, καλλώπισον ταύτην τὴν οἰκίαν, ἀπέλασον πάντα λογισμὸν πονηρὸν, ἵνα γένῃ μέλος τοῦ Χριστοῦ τίμιον, ἵνα γένῃ ναὸς τοῦ πνεύματος. S. Chryſoſt. T. 6. c. Jud. or. 3.

(y) Multò melius eſt teſtamentum hoc quàm vetus: quia nihil in hoc eſt imaginarium, ut puta non templum corporale, non victimæ carnales, non obſervationes legales, ſed altiora & perfectiora omnia: quia totum quicquid eſt, in ſpiritualibus eſt hujus teſtamenti ratio. S. Ambroſ. Com. in Heb 4.

(z) Templum Chriſtianis eſt corpus purum; altare animus ſanctus; ſimulachra verò omnis generis virtutes. Grot. Not. in Act. 7. 48.

(a) Ναὸς δὲ διττὸν, ὁ μὲν μέγας, ὡς ἡ ἐκκλησία· ὁ δὲ μικρὸς, ὡς ὁ ἄνθρωπος ὁ τὸ σπέρμα σώζων τοῦ Ἀβραάμ. Clem. Str. l. 7. p. m. 538.

(b) Mos fuit veteribus templa Ethnicis adtribuere, Eccleſias Chriſtianis. Pamel. Not. in Tertull. de exhort. caſt. c. 1.

(c) Buxtorf. Lex. Talm. col. 302, 1983, &c. Deus dedit mundo Synagogas, quas Eccleſias nominamus. Theophil. ad Autol. l. 2. p. 93.

(d) Grot. Not. in Luc. 7. 5.

(e) Buxt. de Abbrev. p. 75.

* V. Dr. Sherlock preſerv. againſt Popery, par. 2. p. 3 Fuller. Miſc. l. 2 c. 9.

As the Apoſtles therefore follow'd the Pattern of the Synagogue, and the Government of the Chriſtian Church correſpondeth, not to the Temple Hierarchy, but to the Government of the Synagogues: So the Chriſtian Churches anſwer not to the Judaical Temple, but to the ancient Jewiſh Synagogues; for they ought not to anſwer to the later Jewiſh Synagogues, becauſe the Jews wanting a Temple, yet extremely fond of a Mundane Temple Religion, (f) make their Synagogues (by an imitative Ark in them) irregular Imitations of a Temple, and beſtow upon them ſeveral Attributes proper to a Temple.

II. A Mundane Temple is not only God's Houſe ſo far and in ſuch a ſenſe as a Synagogue is, which is an Edifice ſet apart for the uſe of ſerving him, of which he is ſo far the Proprietor: But it is alſo God's Houſe as his Houſe-keeping Eſtate and his Houſe-keeping Seat and Manſion. When God had a Mundane Temple, he was a Mundane Imperial Eſtate, and had Houſe and Lands, and a Revenue of his own, and liv'd in State and Grandure, having his Domeſtick Attendants as Mundane Kings have. God was in his Temple as a King in his Royal Court, or as a Lord in his own Caſtle; it was appropriated to him, as a Mundane Houſe-keeping Eſtate is appropriated to Men, and ſo his Revenue was appropriated: But now God hath no ſuch Houſe, nor Land, nor Revenue; whence a difference muſt be made between conſecrated Goods under the Goſpel and under the Law: For to imploy the Goods of a Temple to charitable uſes, is to be charitable of that which is another's, and is Sacrilegious; but Church-goods being only appropriate to God for the uſe of publick ſerving him, may and muſt be made uſe of as the Service of God requireth; and therefore the Church (g) hath always made uſe of her conſecrated Goods, to ſerve charitable purpoſes, which is the beſt ſervice to God. Tithes are God's Revenue under the Goſpel as well as under the Law, but not in the ſame Notion; for under the Law they were appropriated to God as an Houſe-keeping Revenue is appropriated to the Owners of it, God out of his own Revenue maintain'd his Domeſtic Servants the Miniſters of his Temple, whereas now they are appropriated to God only as ſet apart for maintaining his Service and Servants. Whence under the Law God was ſole Proprietor of thoſe bona ſacra (as being Temple-goods,) his Houſhold Servants were no Proprietors (as the King's are not;) but under the Goſpel they that miniſter the Divine Service are Sub-proprietors of them, (h) as appeareth from the uſual forms of their Donation.

A Temple is God's Houſe as being his Regial Seat of Habitation and eſpecial preſence (ſedes & domicilium Dei;) and in this Notion a Chriſtian Church is ſuppos'd to be a Temple by the Mundane Temple Religioniſts; whence it is intituled, (i) A Sacred Houſe which is the Lord's Palace, (the Palace of the great King,) an Houſe of God wherein he dwelleth in a peculiar manner; The Seat of his eſpecial Preſence: A Temple in the ſame Notion with that of Solomon (and which is conſecrated in like manner,) Holy and Venerable and furniſh'd with Divine Virtue, an Image of Heaven, as the Heavenly Sanctuary, or a certain Terreſtrial Heaven. The Church of S. Sophia is by the Vain and Superſtitious Greeks not only compar'd with, but preferr'd before, Solomon's Temple, which they call (k) προεκτύπωμα, a prefiguration of it. They ſtile their magnificent Church παμμέγιστον τέμενος, the altogether greateſt Temple, νέα Σιών, new Sion, ἡ τῦ ἁγιάσματος κιβωτὸς, the Ark of Sanctification, the Church of our Saviour which the Holy Spirit hath built truly firm and inconcuſs upon the Rock of the Apoſtolic Mandates, τὸ τῆς τῦ Θεῦ σοφίας ἐνδιαίτημα, ὁ τῆς τῦ Θεῦ σοφίας οἶκος, the Houſe and Habitation of the Wiſdom of God. They ſuppoſe a Church alſo, to be the Habitation of the Holy Spirit; as appeareth from this form of Conſecration in Metaphraſtes; May it pleaſe the Merciful God, that his moſt holy Spirit may dwell in this Houſe, which we have built in his Name. The Chancel (that part of the Church) is called by the Greeks (l) Adytum, not to be enter'd, ἱερατεῖον, the Prieſts Peculiarity, ἱλαστήριον, the Propitiatory, Nec aberraveris, ſi ſanctum ſanctorum dixeris; nor will you miſtake, if you call it the Holy of Holies. So the Greeks call it, (m) The Holy of Holies, the Seat and Place of God and his Reſt. None might enter this holy Place (commonly called the Bema or Tribunal) but the Prieſts only, not Women, not Laicks, not the Emperour himſelf, except when he made his Oblations. (n) But oh grievous (as one complaineth) in our Days, wherein Heaven and Earth ſeem to be jumbled, all are at liberty to enter this ſacred Bema contrary to the Religious Conſtitution of the Church Primitive. Much of this Mundane Temple Religion occurreth in ſome parts of Reform'd Chriſtendom; for uſually in Books of Devotion a Church is confounded with the Sanctuary of God; and ſome call it, (o) The Houſe of his abode, the place where his Honour dwelleth. When our Saviour ſaith to the Woman of Samaria, Ye ſhall neither in this Mountain, nor yet at Jeruſalem worſhip the Father; ſome ſay, the meaning is, (p) in all places you may build a Temple, and God will dwell in it. God hath often declared that he loveth ſuch places, that he will dwell in them, holy places being the Reſidence of God's Name upon Earth, there where he hath put it. (q) All our Churches are called Sanctuaries, our greater and Mother Churches Baſilicæ, the Palaces where the King of Heaven dwelleth, and where God is a Refuge to his People. In this Houſe God hath put his Name, and made Promiſes to it above all places. I have hallowed this Houſe which thou haſt built, to put my Name there for ever, and mine Eyes and my Heart ſhall be there perpetually. God's Houſe is a little Heaven on Earth, here dwells the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt. (r) The place ſet apart for Divine Worſhip is the place where God records his Name. (s) The holy Table or Altar in our Chriſtian Churches anſwers unto the Ark or Mercy-Seat in the Jewiſh Temple, being ſolium Chriſti, or in the Language of Antiquity the Chriſtian Sanctum Sanctorum.

III. But our Chriſtian Churches are much more anſwerable to ſome jejune Temples of the

---

(f) Buxt. Syn Jud. c. 5.

(g) Nam & de vaſis Dominicis propter captivos & quàm plurimos indigentes frangi & conflari jubebat (S. Auguſtinus,) & indigentibus diſpenſari. Poſſid. de vit. S. Aug. c. 24.

(h) Coke's Inſtit. par. 1. l. 2. c. 6. S. 133. Simon's Hiſt. of Eccl. Reven. p. 47.

(i) Domus illa ſacra Domini palatium eſt, Eſt Domus Dei, in qua ipſe peculiari modo inhabitat. In Templis ſacratior & commendatior eſt præſentia Domini. Quod Deus promiſit templo Solomonis ſine dubio promiſit etiam templis Chriſtianorum: nam quod petiit Solomon cùm Templum dedicavit, idem petit Eccleſiâ cùm nova Tèmpla dèdicat. Templum conſecratum merito ſanctum & venerabile, ac divina quâdam virtute præditum exiſtimari debet. Templum Chriſtianorum eſt imago quædam Cœli, quaſi regia Cœli, ſive terreſtre quoddam Cœlum. Bellarm. de cult. ſanct. l. 3. c. 4, 5. l. 2. c. 9.

(k) Balſam. in Can. 12. Concil. 7.

(l) Guil. Bevereg. Annot. in Can. Concil. Nic. 1. p. 75.

(m) Mr. Smith Acc. of the Greek Church, p. 67.

(n) Noſtris autem, proh. dolor! diebus, quibus cœlum & terra commiſceri videntur, omnes pro libitu ſacrum hoc bema ingrediuntur, contra ac à primitivâ Eccleſiâ religioſè conſtitutum eſt. Guil. Bevereg. ſupr.

(o) Joh. Gregor. Not. & Obſ. c. 31.

(p) Dr. Jer. Taylor Great Exempl. p. 222, &c.

(q) Mr. Shelford of God's Houſe p. 4, 7, 14, 15.

(r) Mr. Mede on Eccl. 5. 1.

(s) Idem in Pſal. 132. 7.

Pagans than to the opulent Temple of God, wherein there was Houſe-keeping and Regial Houſe-keeping, as there muſt be in his Palace or Regial Houſe; (t) wherein there were all things requiſite for a Dwelling-houſe and Houſe-keeping (Regial Houſe-keeping,) a Candleſtick with its Lamps continually burning (to illuminate it,) a Fire continually burning in the Focus of it, a Table with its Diſhes, and Spoons, and Bowls, and Covers, always furniſh'd with Bread upon it, and (as ſome ſuppoſe) with Salt alſo, a numerous train of Attendants having their ſeveral Miniſteries and gorgeouſly apparelled (as in Kings Houſes,) with ſome to keep Watch, Muſick, Odours, Feſtival-days, Meat alſo for the Family, of which one part (conſum'd upon the Altar by the holy Fire that came down from Heaven) was God's Meſs, the other part belong'd to the Prieſts (who being God's Domeſticks ought to be maintain'd by him,) and this Meat was accompany'd with Bread and Drink (Minchah and Libamen,) and with Salt alſo that it might not be unſavoury. But of all theſe things our Chriſtian Churches are ſo extremely unprovided, as ſheweth, that there is no Houſe-keeping there, nor is there any Food in them ſave only what is Spiritual and Celeſtial (as Chriſtians are a Spiritual Houſe and their Sacrifices Spiritual,) which ſymbolizeth not with Mundane Edifices and Dwelling-Houſes; therefore no Mundane Edifice is God's Dwelling-Houſe. If the Law is now alter'd from Material things to Spiritual, (u) as ſome ſay, that agreeth not with the Hypotheſis of a Material Temple, but deſtroyeth it; for it implieth, that a Material Temple is chang'd to a Spiritual: Nor are theſe Mundane Temple Religioniſts agreed amongſt themſelves touching that ſpeciality of Divine Preſence, which inhabiteth their Mundane Temples. For,

(1.) Some ſay, it is the Grace of the Holy Spirit, which inhabiteth theſe conſecrated places; and ſo a Material Temple is made to be of the ſame Nature and Notion with a Spiritual Temple.

(2.) Sometimes they ſay, (w) that a King is there, where his Court is, where his Train and Retinue are: So God is there eſpecially preſent, where his Train and Retinue of Angels encamp and keep their ſtation, which is the true ratio of the Shecinah or Speciality of the Divine Preſence in one place more than another; by this the Shecinah and Special Preſence of the Divine Majeſty is to be defined, and in this only it conſiſteth. Learned Men have unawares entertain'd this Notion of the Shecinah, not conſidering, that it is a meer Device of its Author, excogitated without any reaſon, againſt plain and demonſtrative Reaſon, meerly to ſerve the Intereſt of that Mundane Temple Religion, which prevail'd in his time. For it is a true and proverbial Saying, that where the King is, there is the Court; but to ſuppoſe, that the King is there, where-ever his Courtiers are, and that the King's preſence is meerly the preſence of his Train and Retinue, is againſt plain Reaſon, and contradictory to what this Author himſelf ſometimes ſaith; (x) the Preſence of God is attended with multitudes of Angels, the Guard attending and miniſtring unto his Preſence; whereſoever he keepeth his Station, they pitch round about him. It claſheth with the moſt plain and demonſtrative Reaſons imaginable: For the Train and Retinue of Angels is either not at all, or not principally the Shecinah and Special Preſence of the Divine Majeſty. In many Inſtances it is not at all the Shecinah or Special Preſence of the Divine Majeſty; as when the Divine Majeſty appeareth to be abſolutely ſolitary (without any Angelical appearance,) or when his Glory maketh a diſtinct appearance from any Angelical appearance, Matth. 17. 2. and 18. 10. Joh. 1. 14. Act. 7. 55, 56. and 26. 13, 16. 2 Cor. 4. 6. 1 Pet. 4. 14. Apoc. 1. 14, 15. Ezek. 1. 28. and ch. 10. 19, 20. In ſome Inſtances the ſpecial Preſence of the Divine Majeſty is ſo far ſolitary, that it is without any Train or Retinue of Angels, yet it is not abſolutely ſolitary, nor doth it make a diſtinct appearance from an Angelical appearance, but is complicated with one Angel of his Name and Preſence, and in theſe Inſtances (before diſcours'd of) the Train and Retinue of Angels is not at all the Shecinah. There may be a Train and Retinue of Angels without any Shecinah (and in ſuch Inſtances the Train and Retinue of Angels is not at all the Shecinah) Pſal. 91. 11. Dan. 10. 13. Matth. 13. 41. Apoc. 12. 7. In thoſe Shecinahs which uſually occur in Scripture there is a Train or Retinue of Angels (or a viſible brightneſs which is accounted the appearance of Angels,) which in reſpect of us belongeth to the Shecinah, but is not principally the Shecinah; for there is in theſe Shecinahs the Divine Majeſty eſpecially preſent (either as complicate with the Angel of his Name and Preſence or otherwiſe,) paramount to, diſtinct from, dwelling amongſt, and attended by the Train and Retinue of Angels; and this Divine Majeſty is principally the Shecinah, Deut. 33. 2. 1 King. 22. 19. Iſa. 6. 1. Ezek. 1. 28. Dan. 7. 10. Jude 14. He that ſitteth between the Cherubims, dwelleth and is eſpecially preſent amongſt the Angelical Hoſts, Pſal. 68. 17. The Chariots of God are twenty thouſand, even thouſands of Angels, the Lord is among them, as in Sinai, in the holy place. Which words of the Pſalmiſt are thus rendred in the Chaldee, The Shecinah of the Lord reſteth upon them. The Divine Majeſty eſpecially preſent, dwelling and inthron'd amongſt the Angelical Hoſts, reſting upon them, and attended by them is the Shecinah in the Celeſtial Temple or Tabernacle, Apoc. 4. 2. and 5. 8. and 7. 15. Nor was it otherwiſe in the Judaical Temple or Tabernacle (an Image of the Heavenly,) if a Train and Retinue of Angels did conſtantly encamp there. In the firſt Temple a viſible bright ſhining Cloud (a Sign or Symbol of the Divine Majeſty's eſpecial preſence, and wherein the Divine Majeſty was eſpecially preſent) ſeemeth to have reſided upon the Ark between the Cherubims (which δόξα, or Glory was the Shecinah, the Divine Majeſtatick Glory as dwelling amongſt Men:) But becauſe there was no ſuch viſible Glory in the Second Temple, therefore the Jews ſay, that the Shecinah was one of the five things that were wanting in it; yet withall they affirm, (y) that in ſome ſort the Shecinah (the Divine Majeſty) did inhabit the ſecond Temple, otherwiſe it could not have been a Temple, a place wherein God recordeth (or putteth) his Name. By the Shecinah that inhabited it the Temple or Tabernacle (which was a Portatile Temple) became a Sanctuary, and deſerved the Name, which the Idolatrous Iſraelites gave to their Bethel (Houſe of God) מקדש מלך ἁγίασμα βασιλέως, the King's Sanctuary, Exod. 25. 8. Amos 7. 13. thereby it became the Seat and Habitation of his Holineſs (Imperial-perſonal) and of his Glory, his Imperial Palace, the Seat of the Imperial Eſtate of Religion, where he was peculiarly preſent (as in his place of Reſidence,) to receive

(t) Spencer. diſſ. de Theocr. Jud. c. 5. l. 1. Outram. de Sacrif. l. 1. c. 3.

Pſ. 134. 1.

(u) Shelford ſupr. p. 5, 6.

(w) Mr. Mede on Eccl. 5. 1. and on Deut. 16. 16.

(x) On Deut. 16. 16.

Tit. 2. 13. Matth. 16. 27.

Exod. 4 34. 1 Sam. 4 21. Pſal. 85. 1 King. 10, 11. Rom. 9.

(y) Buxt Lex. Tal in voce Shecina

receive Honour and Worſhip, Addreſſes and Oblations, to hear Prayers and to relieve the Needs of Men. And it is not hard, to conceive, how this Speciality of the Divine Preſence was competible to the Judaical Temple; that the Divine Majeſty every where preſent may exhibit himſelf as preſent in one place and not in another, and this he may do according to various modes of preſence, as viſibly preſent, as graciouſly preſent, as punitively preſent, or as gloriouſly preſent. So he may exhibit himſelf as majeſtatically preſent and inthron'd in a Regial Seat (refulgent with Gold) above the Ark (called his Footſtool) and between the Cherubims, that repreſented the Holy Angels, which attend upon and about the Throne of God. The Throne of God belongeth to his Temple, becauſe his Temple is his Regial Seat of Habitation, whence the Temple is called the place of my Throne, and the Throne is mention'd as a principal part of the Temple, Ezek. 43. 7. Iſa. 6. 1. Jer. 17. 12. Apoc. 6. 17. The Throne of God therefore and the Shecinah are two grand Ingredients of a Temple, both which being utterly incompetible to the Chriſtian Churches, it is certain, they are no Temples. The Temple was a Type; if therefore the Shadows of the Law are vaniſh'd, the Shecinah now reſideth not in any Mundane Temple. If the Jews of old had the preſence of God attended with multitudes of Angels at their Synagogue-worſhip, if the Angels prais'd God with them (as the Jews ſuppoſe they do at this day,) no one would imagine, that this Divine and Angelical Preſence is any ſuch thing as the Temple-Shecinah, or that thoſe places are alike Sacred and Venerable as the Temple: Nor may we entertain ſuch Conceits touching Chriſtian Churches meerly upon this ground and reaſon, becauſe the holy Angels are there (who are not there as in an holy place, but meerly as in a place of holy Worſhip, and only during the time of it, not with reſpect to the Place, but to the holy People and their holy Service;) much leſs may we ſuppoſe, that the holy Angels take livery and ſeizin of theſe Houſes and poſſeſs them in right of God; or that the Heavenly Guard encamp in Churches and keep their Rendezvous there as in their Maſter's Houſe; for if the Heavenly Guard encamp in Churches, they muſt be (z) caſtra divinæ majeſtatis, the Camp of the Divine Majeſty (as the Jews call'd their Temple;) which ſpeaketh a Temple-ſacredneſs incommunicable to Synagogues and Churches.

(3.) The Preſence of Chriſt in the Holy Euchariſt is ſuppos'd to make our Churches Holy at the rate of the Judaical Sanctuary; Chriſt is ſaid to be as much preſent here as the Lord was upon the Mercy-Seat between the Cherubims; the Holy Euchariſt is ſaid to be the true Ark or Propitiatory, and the Holy Table is ſaid to be ſolium Chriſti, and the Chriſtian Sanctum Sanctorum; which marvellous Imaginations involve in them theſe Abſurdities. Chriſtians may do their Religious Worſhip towards Chriſt in the Holy Euchariſt, as well as the Jews did theirs towards the Lord in the Mercy-ſeat. They muſt or may uſe ſuch ſigns of Reverence towards their Churchs, (a) as the Jews did towards their Temple. The Elements in the Sacrament are in a Philoſophical Senſe really and ſubſtantially that Body and Blood of Chriſt which is his Perſon, yea they are his Imperial Perſon, and the Holy Table is the Throne whereon he ſitteth. As he ſitteth on this Throne, he is the σέβασμα, Object of Religious Adoration; and being preſent in the Euchariſt as much as the Lord was upon the Mercy-ſeat, Chriſtians muſt or may worſhip Chriſt in the Euchariſt; for the Jews worſhipp'd God as in the Mercy-ſeat between the Cherubims. The Holy Table is both an Altar and a Throne; the Holy Euchariſt doth not only repreſent Chriſt in his Humiliation as a Lamb ſlain and ſacrific'd; but Chriſt is there inthron'd in his Majeſtatick Preſence and Exaltation. The real corporeal Body and Blood of Chriſt is ſo far ubiquitarian, that it is in all Chriſtian Churches; and Chriſt hath his Imperial-perſonal Reſidence, not only in one place or in Heaven only, but on Earth alſo and in places innumerable. Every Church is Chriſt's Temple, and in this ſenſe a Baſilica, it is Chriſt's Palace and Regial Seat, where the intempled and inthron'd Meſſiah ought to be ſerv'd in ſtate and honour, and conſequently in ſome ſuch guize, as the intempled and inthron'd Godhead was ſerv'd on the holy Mount. He is of Mundane Imperial Eſtate, being here externally inthron'd, and every Church and Holy Table in it is the Imperial Seat of our Religion. Chriſtians muſt have their Worldly Sanctuary and Sanctum Sanctorum (an Image of the Heavenly,) as the Jews had, and proper Rites of Carnal Judaiſm muſt remain, only the Name Chriſtian muſt be added to them. Not only a Church, but a Crypt, or Vault, or Gravel-pit, wherein the Chriſtians uſually celebrated the Sacrament, is Holy at the rate of the Judaical Sanctuary. Not only Chriſt ſacrific'd, but the Commemoration of Chriſt's Sacrifice is the Chriſtian ἱλαστήριον, or Propitiatory. Chriſt's repreſentative Body (the Holy Euchariſt which repreſenteth and exhibiteth his Body) is as properly a Temple as his real Body, and is much more Holy; for it communicateth an Holineſs to the place where it is, which his real Body never did; and this Sanctity which it communicateth (b) is a ſemblable Holineſs to that of the Judaical Sanctum Sanctorum. But the Sanctum Sanctorum of a Mundane Temple is inſeparably connex'd with another eſſential part and property of it, which is the Oracle. The Sanctum Sanctorum (which is eſſential to a Temple, becauſe it is the Reſidence of the Godhead) may not be actually Oracular; but is neceſſarily (becauſe it is the Reſidence of the Godhead) the place of the Oracle, 1 King. 6. 16, 19. and 8. 6. Pſal. 28. 2. If there be no ſuch thing as the Debir (Oracle) which the Sanctum Sanctorum neceſſarily is, there can be no ſuch thing as the Sanctum Sanctorum in our Chriſtian Churches.

IV. Mundane Temple Religion is the Soul of Popery. The Religion of unreformed Chriſtendom mainly conſiſteth of the Parts and Ingredients of Mundane Temple Religion; for ſuch are their Temples, Altars, Super-altars, their Religion of holy Places, the Inſtitution of them, and the Solemnities of their Dedication, their Shecinah, Throne, Propitiatories, their extravagant Conceits touching Burial in holy Places, and the greater availableneſs of private Prayers in them, their Conſecration of Temples to the Divi, intempled Divi, Images (ἀγάλματα,) Pilgrimages, Reliques, holy Oil, Anointings, conſecrate Aaronical Veſtments, their expiation and ſatisfaction for Sin by external Rites, their putting Holineſs and Religion in Meats and Drinks and divers Waſhings (Sprinklings) and

(z) Outram. ſup.

(a) Nemo in montem Templi veniat cum baculo, aut calceamentis pedum, neque cum mantiſa, neque cum pulvere pedibus adhærente, aut pecuniis linteo involutis. Cunæus de Rep. Hebr. l. 2. c. 12. Outram. de Sacr. l. 1. c. 3.

(b) In Euſeb. H. E. l. 7. c. 15. The Chancel or place where the Altar ſtood in a Church is called ἁγίασμα, the Sanctuary.

carnal Ordinances, their Incenſe and Feſtival Days, Church-lights, Muſick, Reverence of Churches, extravagant Rituality, illegitimate Kibla, their Sacrifice, ſacrificing Prieſts, mundane High Prieſt, ſenſitive pleaſing and mundane pompous Religion. Of all which Branches of mundane Temple Religion it would be tedious to diſcourſe; but of ſome of them we ought to make Remarks, eſpecially of thoſe principal ones, without which the Chriſtian Churches cannot be mundane Temples, Sacrifice, Prieſt and Altar; for Temple, Sacrifice, Prieſt and Altar are Relatives inſeparably connex'd, the one cannot be without the other. The Temple-ſervice properly ſuch is the Service of Sacrifice (literally and properly ſuch) with the Appendages thereof. The Miniſters of the Temple are Prieſts, and Temple-Prieſts miniſter the Divine Service of Sacrifice. Heb. 5. 1. An Altar is God's Table (the Table of his Meat or Meſs) whereon his Sacrifice muſt be laid and offer'd by his Prieſts. (c) Upon theſe Terms the Pontificians pretend, that their Churches are Temples; which plainly ſheweth, that the grand depravation of the Chriſtian Religion is the turning it into a mundane Temple-religion, of which Sacrifices, Prieſts and Altars (in the literal ſtrict and proper Notion) are proper parts and ingredients. For it is a great miſtake, to ſuppoſe, (d) that the holy Euchariſt (which is Epulum Sacrificiale) is in the proper Senſe a Sacrifice. And it is alike miſtake, to ſuppoſe, (e) that Lactantius calleth a Church Dei Templum (for he meaneth not the place (f) but the holy People;) and that the Chriſtian Apologiſts, when they deny, that they had any Temples, mean only, that they had no Temples according to the Pagan Notion of a Temple, which was an 'Ειδωλεῖον, an Edifice wherein a Deity was incloyſter'd by an Image. Agreeably whereto ſome are prone to think, (g) that this was the univerſal Senſe of the Pagans, that there can be no Temple without an Image. And ſome ſay, (h) this was the Reaſon why the Chriſtians deny'd, they had any Temples, becauſe the Heathens ſuppos'd, there could be no proper Temples without Images. But who knoweth not, (i) that the Romans had Temples many Years before they had any Images? The old Egyptian Temples (k) had no Statues. The People of Mengibir have no Idols in their Temples, (l) ſaith Le-blanc. It is not reaſonable, to ſuppoſe, (m) that thoſe many Indian and Bactrian Brachmans were without Temples, who yet diſallow'd the Worſhip of Images. This was not the Reaſon therefore, why the Chriſtian Apologiſts deny'd that they had any Temples, becauſe the Heathens ſuppos'd, there could be no proper Temples without Images. And this could not be the Reaſon for another Reaſon; becauſe the Chriſtian Apologiſts had the ſame reaſon to diſtinguſh themſelves from Jews as from Pagans; and they manifeſtly intended, to diſtinguiſh themſelves from both by this ſingularity in their Religion; they had no proper Temples or Altars. So the Pagans underſtood them, and thus they underſtood their Religion; that the Jews had a Temple without Images, but the Chriſtians had none. Therefore Cæcilius (looking upon them as heterogeneous from all other Religioniſts) objecteth againſt them; (n) the ſole and miſerable Nation of the Jews they alſo worſhipp'd one God, but they did it openly, with Temples, Altars, Sacrifices and Ceremonies. (o) It is manifeſt (ſaith Mr. Selden,) that theſe words do not at all concern the Chriſtians Rejection of the Gentiles Altars, Statues and Temples: Cæcilius blameth the Chriſtians, becauſe they had no Temples, no not ſuch as the Jews had, that is, without Images. (p) Clemens (with others) applaudeth the Philoſopher Zeno's Dogma, μὴ δεῖν θεοῖς οἰκοδομεῖν ἱερά, Men ought not to build Temples to the Gods; for that which is but the Work of ſordid Mechanicks cannot be holy and unvile, of any great precioſity or worthy the Gods. (q) Τὰ δὲ ἐκ τῆς ὕλης τῆς ἀργῆς γίνεται, theſe are things made of vain and vile Matter: But the Church (the holy People) is a Temple of God of great precioſity, not made by any ſordid Artificers Art. (r) Do not think Wood and Stones to be holy, and Men not ſo: But on the contrary think Men to be truly holy, and Stones to be what they are. He that diſcourſeth at this rate, certainly meaneth, that there are now no holy places (ſanctify'd by the Sanctity of the Divine Majeſty eſpecially and peculiarly there preſent) contradiſtinct to places of holy Worſhip meerly ſuch. And when he diſcourſeth, that every place is holy, (s) wherein we are mindful of God, (t) that the Man of Knowledge honoureth God οὔτε ἀφωρισμένον τόπον, neither in a determiate place, οὔτε ἐξαίρετον ἱερὸν, nor in an eximious Temple, but ἐν πάντι τόπῳ, in every place, doth he not manifeſtly diſcourſe againſt the topical Piety of all mundane Temple Religioniſts? When Origen diſtinctly anſwereth theſe three Heads of Crimination (u) the defect of Altars, Images, Temples in our Religion, when he copiouſly diſcourſeth, that our Altars, Images, Temples are the Spiritual and Metaphorical, that the holy People are unicum Dei Templum, that they do not Worſhip God παρ' ἀναισθήτοις ναοῖς, in ſenceleſs Temples, and that they do not build unto God (the Donor of Life) ἀψύχους καὶ νεκροὺς νεώς, dead and inanimate Temples, doth he not expreſly diſcard out of our Religion all ſorts of Temples, whether with or without Images, Paganical or Judaical? The Chriſtian Apologiſts well underſtood the Notion of a Temple, and when they affirm, that Chriſtians had no Temples, this is plainly their meaning, (w) They had no conſecrate Edifices for Sacrifice; for ſuch Edifices are Temples. (x) They had no ſuch conſecrate Edifices, to which Prieſts, Altars, Images appertain; for ſuch are Temples, (y) they had no ſuch conſecrate Edifices, that are the Habitations of a Deity; for ſuch are Temples. The Habitation of a God is the definitive Notion of a Temple, in this Notion the Chriſtian Apologiſts underſtand it, and therefore affirm, (z) that there is no Temple (on Earth) but the Church of Chriſtians, which is qualify'd εἰς παραδοχὴν μεγέθους ἀξίας τοῦ θεοῦ, for the reception of the greatneſs of the Divine Worth and Excellency.

(c) Bellarm de cult. ſanctor. l. 3. c. 4. de Miſſa l. 1. c. 2.

(d) Mr. Mede on Malach. 1. 11.

(e) Idem Proofs for Churches.

(f) Seld. de Syn. l. 3. c. 15. S. 5.

(g) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 3. Diſſ. 5. c. 6.

(h) Dr. Stillingfl. Def. of the Diſc. concern. Idol. p. 476.

(i) Selden. ſupr. c. 13. S. 4. & v. Baron. T. 1. præfat. S. 12.

(k) Marſham. Can. Chr. p. 34 Ed. Lipſ.

(l) Travails Par. 2. c. 14.

(m) Euſeb. Pr. Ev. l. 6. c. 10.

(n) Judæorum ſola & miſera gentilitas unum & ipſi Deum, ſed Palam, ſed Templis, Aris, Victimis Cærimoniiſque coluerunt.

(o) Seld. ubi ſupr. c. 15. S. 5.

(p) Strom. l. 5. p. m. 426. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 1. p. 6.

(q) Clem. Str. l. 7. p. m. 513.

(r) Idem προτρεπτ. p. m. 42.

(s) Str l. 7. p. 520.

(t) Ibid. p. 517.

(u) C. Celſ. l. 8. p. 389. &c.

(w) Numquid delubris aut Templorum conſtructionibus Deum honoramus? Numquid & beſtias cædimus? Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 6. p. 190. & l. 7. p. 122.

(x) Quid opus eſt ſupervacuis extructionibus occupare, quæ poſſint humanis uſibus cedere? Quid Sacerdotes conſtituere? Quid ſibi Templa, quid Aræ volunt, quid denique ipſa ſimulachra? Lactant. l. 1. c. 20. & l. 2. c. 2.

(y) Templum, inquit, hoc Martis eſt, hoc Junonis & Veneris, hoc Herculis, Apollinis, Ditis: Quid eſt aliud dicere quàm domus hæc Martis eſt, hæc Junonis & Veneris, Apollo hîc habitat, in hac manet Herculea illa ſummanus. Ita non prima & maxima contumelia eſt, habitationibus Deos habere diſtrictos? Arnob. ſupr. p. 191.

(z) Clem. ſupr. p. 514.

Excellency. And uſually thus they anſwer the Pagans Crimination the want of Temples in our Religion, (a) that God's true Temple is built of living Stones, his Habitation is the Souls and Bodies of the Juſt, that he ought to be ſeated (intempled and inthron'd) not in vile material Edifices, but in our own Souls; and that our principal care ſhould be, to cleanſe and adorn and repleniſh with God this inward Temple.

The Chriſtian Apologiſts therefore muſt be underſtood, to deny and diſpute againſt all Temples in the Senſe of mundane Temple Religion, and which are a Branch of mundane Temple Religion; for this mundane Temple Religion (Judaiſm and Paganiſm) was that which oppoſed and diſputed againſt them, and that which they oppos'd and diſputed againſt: So when they deny and diſpute againſt Sacrifices, Prieſts, Altars, they muſt be underſtood, to deny and diſpute againſt Sacrifices, Prieſts, Altars in the ſenſe of mundane Temple Religion, and which are Branches of mundane Temple Religion. Chriſtianity admitteth of no Temples, but Spiritual and Metaphorical, and in a large improper Senſe (in which Senſe our τόποι θρησκεύσιμοι, places of Worſhip, may be called Temples;) it admitteth of no Sacrifices, no Prieſts, no Altars, but Spiritual and Metaphorical and in a large improper Senſe, in which Senſe our holy Euchariſt may be call'd the Sacrifice, our Presbyters the Prieſts, and our Lord's Table the Altar. Theſe Names were not unuſual in the Church in thoſe very times when the Chriſtian Apologiſts liv'd, and declaim'd againſt Temples, Sacrifices, Prieſts and Altars. But Chriſtians were in thoſe times and are in all times at Liberty, to make uſe of thoſe Names, or not to make uſe of them, to apply them to the Inſtitutes of our Religion, or not to apply them, if their uſe of them doth not befriend the Intereſt of mundane Temple Religion, which is the common cauſe of Judaiſm, Paganiſm and Popery againſt Chriſtianity. During the three firſt Centuries the uſe of theſe Names ſeemeth to have been innocuous: But the Conſequence in after-times, was Fatal and Tragical. For no ſooner was the World come into the Church, but Chriſtianity began to be deprav'd into a mundane Temple Religion conformable to the guize of Judaiſm and Paganiſm. And if the unwary uſe of thoſe ambiguous Names was one occaſion of this horrendous Lapſe and Apoſtaſie of the Church, what can be the effect of perpetuating the unwary uſe of them, but the perpetuating the Church's Lapſe and Apoſtaſie? They properly belong to mundane Temple Religion, ſo far they are Alien from Chriſtianity; and although they may be apply'd to the Inſtitutes of it, yet where there is danger, this ought not to be done without expreſſing a due abatement diſtinction and limitation of Senſe. But to perpetuate and recommend the unwary uſe of them, and to diſpute for the propriety of them (as they are apply'd to the Inſtitutes of our Religion,) what is it leſs than a criminal depraving our Religion, a turning it into a mundane Temple Religion, which it was deſign'd to turn out of Doors.

V. Allegations from Church-antiquity (b) to ſhew, that ſome of the Fathers of the three firſt Centuries call the Lord's Table the Altar (Ara, Altare, θυσιαςήριον,) ſignifie little, ſeeing it is manifeſt, that they call it ſo in a large improper Senſe only; and it is plainly demonſtrable, that they could not call it ſo in the ſtrict and proper Senſe without palpable miſtake. (c) For it was never known amongſt the Jews or Heathens, that thoſe Tables upon which they did eat their Sacrifices, were called by the Name of Altars. It is true, an Altar is nothing but a Table, but it is a Table upon which God himſelf eateth, conſuming the Sacrifices by his holy Fire: But when the ſame Meat is given from God unto us, to eat of, the Relation being chang'd, the place on which we eat is nothing but a Table. In Scripture there is nothing to countenance the Application of the Name Altar to the Lord's Table ſave only that place of the Apoſtle. Heb. 13. 10. (We have an Altar, whereof they have no right to eat, who ſerve the Tabernacle,) where Altar metonymically denoteth Sacrifice (Chriſt's Sacrifice;) and that of our Saviour, Matth. 5. 23. If thou bring thy Gift to the Altar, and there remembreſt, that thy Brother hath ought againſt thee, leave there thy Gift before the Altar, and go thy way, firſt be reconciled to thy Brother. This Precept of our Saviour is doubtleſs an Evangelical Conſtitution, but ſuch an one that muſt be underſtood as a Synecdoche Speciei; for it doth not oblige the Jews only (during their Polity,) but extendeth it ſelf (d) to all God's Religioniſts and to all their Sacra which they muſt bring unto him. They have Moſes and the Prophets that have the New Teſtament only (for Moſes and the Prophets denoteth in general the ordinary ſtanding means of Salvation,) although they have not Moſes and the Prophets literally, ſtrictly and properly ſo called. And our Saviour's Rule touching hearing the Scribes and Phariſees and doing what they ſay Jure Cathedræ, extendeth to all Chriſtians and to all times, but doth not imply, that there ſhall be Scribes and Phariſees literally, ſtrictly and properly ſo called in the times of Chriſtianity: So our Saviour's Rule touching bringing our Gift to the Altar extendeth to all Chriſtians and to all times, but doth not imply, that there ſhall be either Gift or Altar literally, ſtrictly and properly ſo called in the times of Chriſtianity; for as Scribes and Phariſees, ſo Gift and Altar literally, ſtrictly and properly ſo called are meerly things Judaical. So the Greek word us'd in this Text of our Saviour θυσιαςήριον (Altar) in the beſt ſignification of it can ſignifie nothing properly but a Judaical Altar. But this is the Name, which the mundane Temple Religioniſts peculiarly apply to the Lord's Table; for they will have it called θυσιαςήριον, not βωμός. And of theſe two Names they ſay, (e) the difference is real not verbal only; for θυσιαςήριον, is the Altar of the true God, βωμὸς, ſignifieth ſuch an Altar as the Gentiles were which were Scabella Sculptilium & Simulachrorum, Idol-ſtools or Foot-ſtools of their Images, their Idols being placed before, upon or above their Altars. If this Criticiſm was true and ſolid (as it is not,) it would ſignifie nothing, to recommend the Name Altar. For notwithſtanding this difference of the words θυσιαςήριον, is as proper a part of mundane Temple Religion as βωμός, and in the beſt ſignification of it doth not properly ſignifie any thing but a Judaical Altar. The

---

(1) Clem. Orig. Lactant. ſupra. vid. etiam Lactant. de Ira Dei in fine. Min. Fel. p. 344. Tertull. de pudicit. c. 16. Cypr. Ep. 2. Quod Idola Dii non ſint. p. 62. de Diſc. & Hab. Virg. n. 8. J. Mart. Apol. 2. p. 101.

(b) Mr. Mede of the Name Altar. Maſius in Joſ. 22. 11.

(c) Dr. Cudw. Right Notion of the Lord's Sup. p. 55.

(d) Diſſidentes nullum boni operis ſacrificium Deo immolant, quamdiu à proximorum charitate diſcordant. Scriptum namque eſt, ſi offers munus tuum ad altare, &c. Gregor. M. in Paſtorali par. 3. c. 23.

Matth. 23. 1, 2.

(e) Mr. Mede ſupr. Bp. Fell Annot. in Cypr. de Idol. van. p. 15.

true God and his holy Oracles do not acknowledge any other θυσιαστήριον, but a Judaical Altar; and is not a Judaical θυσιαστήριον, intolerable in Chriſtianity as well as a Pagan βωμός; but ſome mundane Temple Religioniſts of the Chriſtian Church Symbolize rather with the Judaical, others rather with the Paganical Temple-religion. Thoſe of the former ſort are concern'd, that θυσιαστήριον, ſhould be reputed a better word than βωμός; therefore they ſay, that θυσιαστήριον, is the Altar of the true God. But they might as well have ſaid, that θυσιαστήριον, is an Idol-Altar; for an Idol-Altar is uſually called by that Name in the Greek Bible. Judg. 2. 2. and 6. 25, 28, 30, 31, 32. and 1 King. 12. 32, 33. and 13. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 32. and 16. 32. and 18. 26. 2 King. 11. 18. and 16. 10 — 15. and 21. 3, 4, 5. and 23. 12, 15, 16, 17, 20. 2 Chron. 14. 3, 5. and 23. 17. and 28. 24. and 30. 14. and 33. 3, 4, 5, 15. and 34. 4, 5, 7. Ezek. 6. 4, 5, 6, 13. Hoſ. 8. 11. and 11. 1, 2, 8. Amos 2. 8. and 3. 14. As θυσιαστήριον, in a vaſt number of places is the Altar of an Idol: So βωμός ſignifieth the Altar of the true God (f) in Philo ordinarily, (g) in Joſephus, (h) in Hecatæus, and in ſome parts of the Greek Bible, namely the Book of Eccleſiaſticus, and the ſecond Book of Maccabees. But in other parts of the Bible the Greek Interpreters deſignedly abſtain from calling the Altar of the true God βωμός (Bamoth high places being every where infamous except 1 King. 3. 4.) But they could not ſuppoſe, that every Altar which they call βωμος, was the Footſtool of an Image; for the Altar of the Reubenites was manifeſtly no ſuch Footſtool, which Altar is by them called βωμὸς and an Imitamen of the Altar of the Lord, Joſ. 22. 28. It doth not appear from any of the Pagan Theologers, that their βωμὸς, was neceſſarily the Footſtool of an Image: But the contrary is apparent; for thoſe Pagan Temples which had no Images, yet had their βωμοὶ, (Altars,) which are a part of a Temple ſo eminently conſtitutive of it, that in good Authors (as in Sophocles) a Temple is ſynecdochically called βωμός. The Name βωμὸς is accommodate to the Altar in Chriſtian Churches; for the place where it ſtandeth, is by the Greeks called βῆμα, which ſurely is near of kin to βωμὸς: Therefore it is the intereſt of all mundane Temple Religioniſts, not to diſparage that Name.

(f) Περὶ μέθης, περὶ βίου Μωσ. περὶ θυόντ. &c. c. 6.
(g) De Bell. Jud. l. 6. c. 6.
(h) Euſeb. Pr. Ev. l. 9. c. 4.

VI. Inſtead of the true Light and Lamp of Life, the true Oil and Incenſe, the true Sacrifices and Altars, the true Sprinklings and holy Veſtments, mundane Temple Religion ſubſtituteth umbratil Rituality, myſtical and ſymbolical Rites, and vile Externalneſs of Religion, agreeably to the old mundane Temple-ſervice, which ſtandeth oppos'd to Chriſtianity, (i) τὸ μὲν ἦν σκιά, τὸ δ' ἡ ἀλήθεια, that was ſhadow, this is the truth of things adumbrated by thoſe ſhadows. As the Day is not a Compound of Light and Shadow (the Shadow of the Night is gone in the Day-time:) So Chriſtianity is not a Compound of Truth and of Shadow, but the Truth and Spirituality of its Worſhip is oppoſitive and excluſive to the umbratil Rituality of mundane Temple Worſhip (admitteth it not;) ſo that all the care and concern of Chriſtian Religioniſts muſt be about real Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs (k) The whole of their Religion is, to live without any ſtain of Wickedneſs. But the care and concern of degenerate Chriſtendom hath not been for Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs; they have dealt with the true God, as Hercules dealt with the God Saturn, (l) inſtead of ſacrificing true Men and living Men their blind Superſtition hath ſacrific'd unto God Men of Straw. What Caſſiodorus ſaith of the Pagans, is true of the Chriſtians, (m) Religionem ſuam ludicrâ ſimilitudine profanarunt. They have inſtituted ludicrous Similitudes and Reſemblances of the matters of their Religion, whereby they have profan'd it and loſt the Subſtantials of it. So the Poets Fable, that Prometheus offer'd in Sacrifice to Jupiter two Bullocks: In the Skin of the one he inclos'd all the Fleſh and Fat of both, the Skin of the other he ſtuffed with Bones. The former of theſe is an Emblem of ſincere Religion, there is Fat and Fleſh in it, Zeal and Charity: The other is an Emblem of the mundane Temple Religion of the degenerate Chriſtian Church, (n) which is a bulk of Ritualities, that are dry inſipid Sterilities, which ſtuff a Skin and make a ſhew of a magnificent Sacrifice, but have nothing of ſubſtantial Good in them. They make a ſhew like Xerxes's golden Vine, but are like it, wholly unfruitful. They ſubſerve not the intereſts of Piety, but are in themſelves Vanities and make a vain Religion, which like the vain Luſts of Men is not of the Father but is of the World. For it is acknowledg'd, (o) that they are Deſcendents from thoſe old mundane Temple Religioniſts the Jews and Pagans, whence they muſt be called the Rudiments of the World (the mundane Religioniſts Rudiments,) and they ought to be depreciated and diſparaged at the ſame rate with the things of the World; for they are τὰ κοσμικὰ πράγματα, the things of the World, as S. Chryſoſtom calleth thoſe Judaical Gayeties, which S. Paul admir'd in his Unregeneracy. Phil. 3. But upon his Converſion to Chriſtianity, he forſook both the goodly admir'd things of the World and of his mundane Religion, accounting them (p) ἀδιηγήτου φλυαρίας, of inexpreſſible Triviality. And he expoſtulateth with the Coloſſians ch. 2. 20. If ye be dead with Chriſt from the Rudiments of the World, why as though living in the World, are ye ſubject to Ordinances? They that are in the State of Chriſtianity, are in the State of the dead from the Rudiments of the World (parted from them, no more ſubjected to them, to regard or obſerve them,) at their entring into the State of Chriſtianity they become dead with Chriſt (in Society with him and by Virtue of his Death, whereby the mundane Religion which was the Religion of their Unregeneracy was aboliſh'd, and the new Settlement was made, wherein nothing hath place, but what is new, ſpiritual, heavenly and divine,) yet as if they were living in the World, not in the Chriſtian State of the Dead, ſeveral of the Coloſſian Chriſtians were ſubject to the mundane Religioniſts Ordinances, which was an heinous inconſiſtence with their Chriſtianity. Chriſtians therefore that anſwer their Name, are far from being alive to them, fond of them, living in them, conteſting for them, making them their Righteouſneſs, multiplying them (as Lucullus did his Cloaks,) and are ſo far from doating on theſe ſanctimonious Trinkets, that they are wholly alienated and diſaffected from the mundane Temple

(i) S. Chryſoſt. T. 5. p. 557.

(k) Quorum omnis religio eſt, ſine ſcelere ac ſine macula vivere. Lactant. l. 5. c. 9.

(l) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 9. c. 28.

(m) L. 3. var. ad Fauſt.

(n) In altero nihil præter oſſa arida & nuda reperiuntur quæ nihilominus pellem farciunt, & hoſtiam pulcherrimam & magnificam imitantur. Per quæ rectè notantur externi & inanes Ritus & Cæremoniæ jejunæ, quibus homines cultum divinum onerant & inflant. Res ad oſtentationem potius compoſita quam ad pietatem facientes. Id. Bacon de Sap. Veter. p. 159.

(o) Baron. ad an. 34. n. 85. & ad an. 58. n. 72, 77. Rigalt. in Cypr. Ep. p. 159. Ed. Oxon.

(p) Jamb. [illegible] 52.

Temple Religioniſts Ritualities. Nor may they admit of any ſuch Rites, which are proper to mundane Temple Religion.

VII. The Church of Rome hath Candles burning in her Churches and upon her Altars, (q) and in the Greek Church they burn Lamps for the moſt part before the Altar; which although it may ſeem a ſlight Ceremony, yet becauſe (like Incenſe) it is properly a Rite of mundane Temple Religion, it is criminally introduc'd into Chriſtian Churches (r) ad ſacram myſteriorum pompam, to make a pompous God-ſervice. In mundane Temple Religion this Rite was agreeable, to illuminate and garniſh the Houſe of a Deity, according to that of Homer

'Αἰθομένȣ δὲ πυρὸς γεραρώτερος οἶκος ἰδέσθαι.

But it is expos'd and exploded (s) not only by ſome Chriſtian Apologiſts, but by the Stoicks alſo, who were no Friends to mundane Temple Religion. Some of them count it madneſs (t) medio lucernam die præferre, (u) nec lumine Dii egent, & ne homines quidem delectantur fuligine. As burning Day-light is one incongruity, ſo Candles ſtanding upon Altars that burn neither Day nor Night, ſeem to be another incongruity, and an umbrage of mundane Temple Religion.

Church-muſick (inſtrumental) is diſlik'd by Aquinas, (w) both as being a ſenſitive Delectation rather than conducive to a good Diſpoſition of the Soul, and as being a Judaical Rite peculiar to the Jews Terrene Religion. The Schoolmen upon him ſay, (x) that Organs and Muſical Inſtruments were not us'd in the Church in his time (they ſhould have ſaid, not generally uſed,) in Token whereof the Roman Church to this day doth not uſe an Organ before the Pope, ſaith Cajetan. The Primitive Chriſtians do not only declaim againſt (y) the Pagans Muſick in their God-ſervice, but were ſo abhorrent from ſenſitive Pleaſure, that there was no ſuch thing as Muſick amongſt them. (z) They declaim againſt Pſalteries, Cymbals, Timbrels, Fiſtulæ, Tibiæ (which the Pagans us'd in their Religious Worſhip,) they acknowledge no other Pſaltery for praiſing God but the Tongue, no other Harp but their own Spirit, no other Organ but their Body. (a) We uſe only the pacific word, whereby we honour God, not any more the old Pſaltery, and the Trumpet and Timbrel and Pipe. The Author of the Queſtions and Anſwers under J. Mart. Name (b) diſliketh the uſe of ſinging with ἄψυχα ὄργανα, inanimate Inſtruments, and ſaith, it was rejected by the Church. In Theodoret's Therapeuticks the ſame account is given of Sacrifices and of Muſical Inſtruments; (c) τὰ τῶν εὐήχων ὀργάνων ἠνέσχετο, he indulg'd them Muſical Inſtruments, not as delighting in their Harmony, but (as he indulg'd them Sacrifices) by little and little ſupreſſing Idolatry. Theſe ancient Writers look upon Church-muſick as a proper Rite of mundane Temple Religion, which yet ſeemeth not to have ſuch a Connexion therewith; and therefore ſeemeth allowable, if it be really ſubſervient to Devotion. But of that ſubſerviency Card. Cajetan diſcourſeth very dubiouſly, and not without Reaſon; for even the Organ drowneth the melodious Harmony of Voices, which is better Muſick than it ſelf, and more efficacious to excite Devotion. Which muſt neceſſarily be hugely wanting in thoſe Churches, where the Service of God (the divineſt part of it) is miniſtred by idle Boys and leud Men (that know not God nor his true Worſhip) to the horrible Profanation of Religion, which muſt be God's kind of God-ſervice.

With theſe Rites of mundane Temple Religion (real or reputed) we will connect the ſolemn Ritual Dedication and Conſecration of Churches, which muſt be diſtinguiſh'd from their meerly real Dedication. If any ſurrender and appropriate an Edifice to the publick Service of God, by Word, Writing, or an Inſcription (as the Pagans uſually made Dedications,) affixing a Title thereunto (which being uſually affix'd in ancient times hath given Churches (d) the Name of Tituli) this is a Dedication meerly real. But the Temple of Solomon had a ſolemn Ritual Dedication (which involv'd in it a Conſecration) with ſolemn Prayer, Sacrifice and Feaſting, which were its Encænia. 1 King. 8. 63, 64. So the Pagan Temples had a ſolemn Ritual Dedication and Conſecration (e) by Sacrifice, Prayer, Sports, Banquets (and many other Heatheniſh Religious Rites:) And as the Birth-day of Princes is annually celebrated, ſo the day of the Dedication of their Temple was an anniverſary Feſtival amongſt them. So the Chriſtian Churches in the time of the Emperour Conſtantine are generally ſaid (although a certain Author (f) denieth it,) to have had a ſolemn Ritual Dedication and Conſecration, (g) the Biſhops far and near were conven'd to Jeruſalem, to Conſecrate the magnificent Churches, which that Emperour had erected there; which Conſecration was accompany'd with a πάνδημος ἑορτή, a Feaſt for all People, and theſe Encænia were celebrated by an anniverſary Feſtival at Jeruſalem, whence it ſoon became a cuſtom in all Churches, annually to celebrate the Dedication of their Church. But this whole buſineſs the ſolemn Ritual Conſecration of Churches was a novelty introduc'd in the Reign of this Emperour, the Primitive Chriſtians knew nothing of it, as a Divine of our own faith. (h) I do not remember, that I have met with the Footſteps of any ſuch thing in any approved Writer till the Reign of Conſtantine. If Churches are deſign'd meerly for places of holy Worſhip, a ſolemn Ritual Conſecration of them ſeems not more needful than the ſolemn Ritual Conſecration of Lands, Tythes, Garments, the Veſſels of Miniſtery and other Utenſils of God's Service, of which S. Auſtin ſaith (i) ipſo Miniſterio conſecrata ſancta ſunt. But if the ſolemn Ritual Conſecration of Churches deſigneth to make them holy Places (more than places of holy Worſhip meerly ſuch,) ſuch Conſecration is altogether unlawful; for it is a proper Rite of mundane Temple Religion. In the Church of Rome the Conſecration of Churches (k) is rather Conjuration than a Conſecration.

VIII. Holy places are ſuppos'd, to recommend the Devotions of thoſe that viſit them, and unclean places are thought ſo inept for Devotion, (l) that the Jews dare not utter or think of the Name of God in a place that is not pure; and they ſay, (m) The Heart and Soul cannot be clean an pure, but in a place that (in imitation of their Temple) is dedicated to God. So in the Church of Rome Men are allow'd to pray out of conſecrated Churches, (n) but not without exception of unclean places. And the Pope's Canon-Law ſaith; (o) It is better not to conſecrate, (q) Mr. Smith Acc. p.59.

(r) Baron. ad an. 58. n. 70, 77. Betul. in Lactant. p. 321. Dall. de Rel. cult. obj. l. 2. c. 15.

(s) Lactant. l. 6. c. 2.

(t) Sen. de vit. beat. c. 27.

(u) Idem. Ep. 95.

(w) 22æ Qu. 91. Art. 2. ad 4.

(x) Cajetan. Valent. T. 3. Diſp. 6. Qu. 9.

(y) Arnob. adv. Gent. l 7. p. 237.

(z) Clem. pæd. l. 2. c. 4. Herald. in Arnob. p. 104. 274.

(a) Τῷ λόγῳ μόνῳ τῷ εἰρηνικῷ ἡμεῖς κεχρήμεθα, ᾧ γεραίρομεν τὸν Θεόν· οὐκ ἔτι ψαλτηρίῳ τῷ παλαιῷ, καὶ τῇ σάλπιγγι καὶ τυμπάνῳ καὶ αὐλῷ. Clem. ſupr.

(b) P. 462.

(c) Ser. 7. p. 105, 106. v. Eraſm. in 1 Cor. 14. 19. Plutarch. ſept. ſap. Conviv. p. 150.

(d) Seld. de Syn. l. 3. c. 15. S. 4.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Dallæus de rel. cult. object. l. 3. c. 15. p. 435.

(g) Seld. ſupr. S. 6.

(h) Dr. Cave prim. Chriſtian. Par. 1. p. 150. So Selden. ſupr.

(i) Ennar. Pſal 113. Conc. 2.

(k) Dr. Brevint Saul and Sam. p. 319.

(l) Buxt. Syn. Jud. c. 4 & 8.

(m) Coſri p. 384.

(n) Bellarm de Sanct. cult. l. 3. c. 4.

(o) Selden. ſupr. c. 16. Ariſt. in Can. 7. Concil. 7.

crate, than to conſecrate in a place not hallowed. If Mankind had acquaintance with true Sanctity, they would alſo have a Senſe of their own Excellency, (p) and a juſt eſtimate of themſelves, as the Primitive Chriſtians had. But it far'd with the Chriſtians of after-times as with the World of Pagan-religioniſts, who being aliens from true Sanctity loſt alſo the juſt ſenſe of their own Dignity, (q) which was a principal Source of their Vice and Wickedneſs in general, but eſpecially of their Idolatry and Superſtition in ſubjecting and debaſing themſelves to things below them; for having Life, Sence and Reaſon, and deriving their original from Heaven, they ador'd things inanimate, ſenceleſs, irrational and terrene. And the Chriſtians alſo in the time of the Emperour Conſtantine ſo enormouſly debas'd themſelves and their Religion, that they ſunk it into that craſs Superſtition, the Religion of holy places; for the ſumptuous and magnificent Churches which that Emperour erected at Jeruſalem (r) were erected with reſpect to the holy places there. All the places whereon our Saviour's Footſteps were impreſs'd, and the Temple wherein he taught, were reputed Holy; the place where Abraham dwelt near the Oak of Mamre, was thought a place of eximious Sanctity, and Paleſtine was reputed the Sacro-ſanct Land. Hence aroſe the blind devotion of making Pilgrimages, and the blind Zeal of going to war for the recovery of the Holy Land, which was thought a work ſo meritorious, (s) that it was an undoubted maxim in the Divinity of thoſe times, that whoſoever was ſlain in thoſe Wars by the Turks and Saracens merited Eternal Life and ſhould wear a Martyr's Crown. In thoſe times the Religion of Holy Places prevail'd amongſt the Chriſtians at the ſame rate with the Jews, (t) who ſay of their holy places (which they ſuppoſe inhabited by the Shecinah, and that the Angels encamp about them,) We are bleſſed in them and in the Duſt and Stones of them. Amongſt the Muhammedans a certain Preacher made this Prayer for the Emperour; (u) O God be the helper of our Lord Selim Cham, the Miniſter of (Mecca and Medina) two illuſtrious ſacred places: Which Title was ſo grateful to the Emperour, that at his return from the Temple putting off his own Garments of great value, he ſent them to the Preacher. So all Mundane Religioniſts have their mundane holy places, which they viſit in great Devotion, and by viſiting them ſuppoſe themſelves more holy and bleſſed. A Mundane Temple Religioniſt of our own Nation ſaith, (w) In obſerving Saints Days and in dedicating Temples to God in their Names we have the bleſſed Saints ſtill living and dwelling among us, oh bleſſed we! To which Exclamation our Saviour will warrant us, to ſubjoyn another, oh Fools and Blind!

Of the Religion of Holy Places a principal Branch is an extravagant Reverence for Churches (to which yet we owe a reverential reſpect,) which by degrees mounted ſo high, that the Reverence which Chriſtians had for their Churches was ſuch as properly belong'd to the Jews Sanctuary. (x) For a man may not come into the Mountain of the Houſe, with his Shooes on his Feet. It is unlawful for him to ſpit in any part of the Mountain of the Houſe, but he muſt wrap up his Excrements in his Handkerchief. He may not make the Mountain of the Houſe a thorow-fare, to go in at one Door and out at another. Whoſoever had accompliſh'd his ſervice and went his way, did not go out with his Back on the Temple, but went backward by little and little, and went ſoftly ſidelong, till he was out of the Court-yard. All this was for reverence of the Sanctuary. And whoſoever aſſembled into the Court-yard, went ſoftly unto the place, whither it was lawful for him to come, and he was to conſider, that he ſtood before the Lord (as he hath ſaid, mine Eyes and mine Heart ſhall be there all Days,) and he was to go with dread and with fear and trembling. The Pagans ſymboliz'd with the Jews in the Rite of Diſcalceation, (y) they put off their Shooes when they enter'd their Temples. The Turks follow the example of the Jews and Pagans; for when they enter their Moſques, they leave their Shooes at the Door, and enter ſome barefooted, others having on a clean kind of Sandal, which they call Meſth. At this Day among moſt of the Eaſtern Nations it is accounted a piaculary crime, to tread upon the Pavement of their Temples with their Shooes on their Feet. (z) The Pontificians like this ancient Symbolical Rite, and the Habaſſine Chriſtians zealouſly practiſe it. None are permitted, to go into their Churches but barefooted, nor is it lawful for them, to ſpit, hawk, or hem in the Church; becauſe the Churches of Ethiopia (as they ſay) are like unto Mount Sinai, where God ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying, put off thy Shooes from thy Feet, for the Ground whereon thy Feet tread is Holy. (a) If any of them be riding a Journey, and in great haſte, yet coming near a Church, in reverence to the place, they alight off from their Horſes, and walk on Foot, till they have left the Church a great way behind them. The Turks in their Moſques ſtand as it were immoveable (nulla tuſſis, nullus ſcreatus, nulla vox, nullus circumacti corporis aut reſpicientis motus,) if a Turk doth but ſcratch his Head with his Finger, he thinketh his Prayer loſt. (b) Amongſt the Pagans it was unlawful, πτύσαι ἢ ἀπομύξασθαι, to ſpit, or wipe their Noſes in their Temples. (c) It was uſual amongſt them, to creep on their Knees towards the Temple; and with Pythagoras it was a point of Religion, (d) to kill a Louſe in a Temple. (e) Saxo Grammaticus telleth of a certain Prieſt (Arcon,) who ſo rever'd the Houſe of his Idol, that he thought it unlawful to draw his Breath in it, as oft as he had occaſion ſo to do, he ran to the Door, that he might not pollute the Preſence of a God with the Contagion of mortal Breath. All theſe Rites of Reverence towards Mundane Temples are of one and the ſame Character, they are the proper Rites of Mundane Temple Religion; and ſeeing there is but one ſort of them (that of the Jews,) that is true Mundane Temple Religion, all the reſt of them muſt neceſſarily be of this Character, they are baſe and ſervile Superſtition, of the ſame Nature with theſe other Rites of the Pagans, who in ſome cariers of Devotion towards their Gods (f) lick'd the Soles of their Feet and kiſs'd their Footſteps. Such illegitimate Devotion is no exemplary Pattern for Chriſtians, who are no Mundane Religioniſts, nor Mundane Temple Religioniſts, and therefore learned and good Men ſhould not teach them (g) to come into the Church as into the Palace of the great King with fear and trembling (ſo as the Jews are ſaid to come into their Synagogues, (h) horrentes & trementes: Nor may we with Gr. Naz. praiſe his Mother Nonna for this, (i) that ſhe never turn'd her Back upon the Altar, nor ſpit upon the ſacred Pavement, which latter Rite of Reverence implieth a Suppoſition of Holy Ground, and both of them are proper Mundane Temple Rites Judaical and Paganical.

IX. Bowing

(p) Lactant. l. 2. c. 1.

(q) Ibid. c. 12. Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 8. c. 9.

(r) Baron. ad an. 326. n. 27, 37, 38, 67.

(s) Dr. Jackſon of juſtif. Faith pref.

(t) Coſri, p. 55. 58.

(u) Pocock. Supplem. Hiſt. Dynaſt. p. 49.

(w) Shelford Ser. of God's Houſe p. 27.

(x) Maimon. ap. Ainſworth on Lev. 19. 30.

(y) Mr. Mede on Eccl. 5. 1. Grot. in Exod. 3. 5.

(z) Maſius in Joſ. 5. 15.

(a) Joh. Gregor. not. & obſ. c. 31. Tanta Gentium in rebus frivolis plerumque religio eſt. Plin.

(b) Epictet. Diſſ. l. 4. c. 11.

(c) Sen. de vit. beat. c. 27.

(d) Jambl. de vit. Pythag. c. 28. p. 140.

(e) Joh. Gregor. ſupr.

(f) Herald. in Arnob. p. 249, 250.

(g) Dr. Cave Prim. Chriſtian. par. 1. p. 156.

(h) Buxt. Syn. Jud. c. 5.

(i) Mr. Mede on Eccl. 5. 1.

IX. Bowing to or towards the Altar is alſo a proper Mundane Temple Rite; for they that write in defence of it call it, (k) bowing towards the Altar whereby we worſhip God, at our ingreſs into his Houſe, and likewiſe at our egreſs, and as oft as we ſtand before the Altar for the performing of Divine Service. But the Canon recommendeth only (l) the doing Reverence and Obeyſance both at our coming in and going out of the Church: Whence it appeareth, that as Men uſe a Salutatory Bowing towards one another, when they meet, and when they take their leave: So the thing deſign'd by the Canon is, that we ſhould uſe the like behaviour towards God in his Houſe. This appeareth alſo from the Senſe and Reaſon of this Rite, which one of its principal Aſſerters hath thus expounded: (m) God's Houſe hath ſomething ſingular from the reſt; ſhould we then come into it as into a Barn or Stable? It was not once good manners ſo to come into a Man's Houſe; for our Bleſſed Saviour, when he ſent forth his Diſciples to preach the Goſpel, Matth. 10. ſaid, when ye enter into an Houſe ſalute it; why ſhould we not think it a part of Religious Manners, to do ſomething anſwerable, when we come into the Houſe of God? In this Account of the Senſe and Reaſon of this Rite it is ſaid, to be ſalutatory of God in his Dwelling-houſe (and like the Salutatory Bowings which Men have from us in their Dwelling-houſe,) and if this be the mind and meaning of it, it is a proper Mundane Temple Rite, which cannot lawfully be admitted into the Chriſtian Worſhip. But the Name of a proper Mundane Temple Rite apply'd to this Ceremonial Bowing muſt be underſtood with Limitation; for although it is ſo far a proper Mundane Temple Rite, it involveth the ſuppoſition of a Mundane Temple, and is not receivable into any Religion, which admitteth not a Mundane Temple, yet it is no pious Mundane Temple Rite, as will appear by a ſecond Criminality that is in it.

A ſecond Criminality which is in it, is its Original, Kind and Quality; for it is not of Scriptural and Hebraical, but of Grecanical Original, Kind and Quality, (n) ἐξ ἀγέλης ἑλληνικῆς, of the Grecanic Herd, τῆς ἑλληνικῆς ἀβελτηρίας, the Grecanic Levity and Vanity (as a Father ſpeaketh;) which is not the leaſt of its Criminalities. For the Scriptural and Hebraical Bowings were a ſubſtantial worſhipping and ſerving God, as the Hebrew word שחה (to bow) uſually ſignifieth, to do unto God the Duties of his immediate Worſhip and Service. But the Grecanical bowing is ſuch bowing, which is a turning the ſubſtantial worſhipping and ſerving God into external ceremonial bowing: For a late Account of the Greek Church ſaith; (o) A great part of their Worſhip conſiſts in External Adorations, which they call μετάνοιαι of which they make two ſorts; the greater, which they call στρωτὴ or ἐδαφιαῖα, bowing the Body very low almoſt to the Ground; and the leſs, with a little Inclination of the Head and Knee. This they do, when they come into the Church, or when they are in ſight of a Church or Chappel, either upon Land or Sea, repeating theſe words Ἐλέησόν με κύριε, or ſuch like. In the Liturgy call'd S. Chryſoſtom's the Prieſt and Deacon injoyn in the performance of Divine Service προσκυνήματα ποιεῖν ἔμπροσθεν τῆς ἁγίας τραπέζης, that bowings be made before the Holy Table to the number of forty at leaſt, and there are the like ſupernumerary bowings in the Church of Rome. So the Kaloirs or Greek Monks (before-mention'd) are under an obligation to perform their μετάνοιαι, or bowings three hundred times every twenty four hours. Of theſe Grecanical Bowings it muſt be ſaid, that they are a turning Religion into impertinent and incongruous cringing and congeying; and ſeeing the Rite of bowing towards the Altar is one of theſe Grecanical προσκυνήματα or μετάνοιαι (Bowings,) as all its Aſſertors acknowledge, it muſt be counted of the ſame Nature and Denomination.

A third Criminality is in it; for it introduceth into the Chriſtian Worſhip an illegitimate Kibla or Kebla: For Chriſtians have this ſingularity in their Inſtitution, which diſtinguiſheth them from all Mundane Religioniſts (Jews, Pagans, Muhammedans,) neither any Quarter of the Sky, nor any Mundane Edifice, nor any Part or Furniture of a Mundane Edifice is the Kibla of their Worſhip: Nor do they acknowledge any other Kibla ſave only the Throne of God in the Heavenly Sanctuary, where God exhibiteth and preſentiateth himſelf in a poſture for our Addreſſes, Matth. 6. 9. Joh. 11. 41. and 17. 1. Heb. 4. 16. and 10. 19, 20, 21. Hence the Chriſtian Apologiſts reprehend the Pagans (p) not only for the Idolatry of their Worſhip, but becauſe they made ſome terrene thing the Kibla of their Worſhip, and did not ſuſpend and lift up their Eyes and Minds to Heaven, where they ought to ſeek God. (q) For not only by paying Religious Adoration to Walls, Stones and Wood, or the Corners of an Earthly Edifice, but by making theſe terrene things the Kibla of our Salutatory Adorations (as the Mundane Temple Religioniſts (r) do profeſſedly) in a Criminal Degree εἰς τοὔδαφος καταφέρομεν τὴν εὐσέβειαν, we draw down Piety from Heaven to Earth, as Clemens ſpeaketh. The Chriſtian Apologiſts therefore diſcourſe, that Heaven is our only Kibla; but this the Pagans deny'd, (s) ὡς πρὸς μόνα ὁρᾷν δέον τὰ οὐράνια, as if our Eyes were only to be turn'd to the Celeſtials; for that their Gods might be nigh unto them (and live in Society with them) they erected Statues of their Deities, and theſe were their Shecinah and Temple-Kibla. Beſides which Temple-Kibla they had another, which may be called their Coſmical Kibla: (t) For although the Accounts which ancient Authors have given of the Situation of their Temples are contradictory to one another, and although in their Religious Worſhip they turned themſelves towards ſeveral parts of the World, yet the Eaſt (the Quarter of Sun-riſing) ſeemeth to have been for the main their Kibla. (u) So Zaraduſht (Zoroaſter) appointed for his Fire-worſhippers, that the Eaſt ſhould be their Kibla. At the Door of the Temple of the Lord, between the Porch and the Altar, were about five and twenty Men, with their Backs towards the Temple of the Lord, and their Faces towards the Eaſt, and they worſhipp'd the Sun

(k) Of worſhip. God towards the Altar, p. 2.

(l) Can. and Conſtit. c. 7. 1640.

(m) Mr. Mede on Eccl. 5. 1. S. 3. and on Pſ. 132. 7.

(n) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 6. p. 213. & l. 7. p. 248.

(o) Mr. Smith, p. 213.

(p) V. Dall. de rel. cult. object. l. 1. c. 20. initio.

(q) Quicunque ſacramentum hominis tueri, rationemque naturæ ſuæ nititur obtinere, ipſe ſe ab humo ſuſcitet, & erecta mente oculos ſuos tendat in cœlum: non ſub pedibus quærat Deum,—— ſed quærat in ſublimi. cur oculos in cœlum non tollitis? cur ad parietes, & ligna & lapides potiſſimùm quàm illò ſpectatis, ubi Deos eſſe creditis? Ille (Deus) vobis ſublimem vultum dedit, vos in terram curvamini. Humi etenim miſeri volutamini, cùm deorſum quæritis, quod in ſublimi quærere debuiſtis.

O curvæ in terras animæ & cœleſtium inanes.

Quanto rectius eſt, omiſſis inſenſibilibus & vanis, oculos eò tendere, ubi ſedes, ubi habitatio eſt Dei veri? ne hunc cœleſtem vultum projiciamus ad terram, ſed oculos eò dirigamus, quò illos naturæ ſuæ conditio direxit. Lactant. l. 2. c. 19, 2, 5, 18. Quia orantes oporteat dicere, pater noſter qui es in cœlis, quid aliud videtur oſtendere, niſi Deum in melioribus mundi partibus requirendum? Orig. περὶ ἀρχ. l. 2. c. 4. Rectum te Deus fecit, & cùm cætera animalia prona, & ad terram ſitu vergente depreſſa ſunt, tibi ſublimis ſtatus, & ad cœlum atque ad Deum ſurſum vultus erectus eſt; illuc intuere, illic oculos tuos erige, in ſupernis Deum quære. S. Cypr. ad Demetrian.

(r) Mr. Mede on Pſal. 132. 7.

(s) Phid. ap. Dion. Chryſoſt. Ser. 12.

(t) Selden. de Syn. l. 3. c. 16. S. 2. Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 3. diſſ. 6. c. 2. S. 4.

(u) Pocock Spec. p. 148.

toward the Eaſt, ſaith the Prophet, Ezek. 8. 16. Moſes autem & Hebræi occidentem ſpectari conſuerunt, (w) ſaith Alexander ab Alexandro. (x) The Jews ſay, that Abraham dedicated the Weſt, which is the Region towards which Men ought to pray, majeſtas divina eſt in occidente; which is ſo far true, as that the Entrance of their Temple was towards the Eaſt, and their Sanctum Sanctorum (which was their Kibla) was ſituate in the Weſt, (y) the Stairs of their Altar alſo looked towards the Eaſt, that ſo the Prieſt in his miniſtration might turn his Face towards the Weſt, Ezek. 43. 17. But if we will ſpeak accurately as things ſtood in the Jews Religion, we muſt affirm, that neither Weſt nor Eaſt, nor any other part of the World, was the Jews Kibla, nor had they any Coſmical Kibla; (z) but (as the Book Coſri diſcourſeth) The Iſraelites bowed themſelves before the Shecinah, when they ſaw it. As the Pagans directed their Devotion to an Image, ſo the Iſraelites when they came ought of Egypt, look'd towards and bow'd before the Pillar of a Cloud and of Fire; and in like manner they had before them the Pillar of a Cloud which deſcended upon Moſes, when God talked with him. Afterwards the Ark was made, to be to them a viſible thing, before which they might perform their Devotion. The Shecinah therefore reſiding in their Temple and more eſpecially in their Sanctum Sanctorum, was their Kibla; and conſequently, if any of them had their abode Weſt of their Temple, they muſt neceſſarily worſhip towards the Eaſt; for in performing their Religious Worſhip they were bound to turn their Faces towards their Temple, 1 King. 8. 44. Pſal. 5. 7. and 28. 2. and 138. 2. Dan. 6. 10. 3. Eſdr. 4. 54.

X. The Inſtitution of the Old Temple Service (by the Grandeur and Ornaments of the Structure, the Richneſs and Coſtlineſs of the Utenſils, the Splendor and Sumptuouſneſs of the Prieſts Veſtments, their ſtately mode of Miniſtration, and the Silver Trumpets ſounding over the Sacrifices ſuperlatively Pompous and Magnificent) was agreeable to the Mundane Religioniſts Genius, that magnifie and admire the goodly ſpecious things of the World, deſpiſe Sanctity in an homely dreſs, and where they ſee not a Temple-ſtate and Stateline ſs of Religion, are prone to imagine, (a) that there is none at all. So it far'd with the Pagans (who counted the Primitive Chriſtians Atheiſts or without a God and a Religion, becauſe they were without a Temple-ſtate and Statelineſs of Religion;) and for the Jews that were (b) περὶ τὰ αἰσθητὰ ἐπτοημένοι, aſtoniſh'd admirers of the things ſenſible, a ſtately and magnificent God-ſervice was requiſite, that they might be admirers of their own Religion, and thereby might be kept from being allur'd to the Pagans Idolatrous God-ſervice by the Splendor and Gaiety thereof; (c) for their God-ſervice ſeem'd to be as ſumptuous as Riches could make it, they oſtentated their Magnificence in it, beſtow'd all their Pretioſities upon it (laviſhing Gold out of the Bag, Iſa. 46. 6.) and at the ſame rate the Pagano-Chriſtians adorn and furniſh their Mundane Temple-ſervice. (d) This Error is deriv'd unto us, to ſuppoſe Religion in Riches. (e) It is thought a Pious Work, to adorn the Temples of God at an immenſe rate, becauſe the Tabernacle and Temple, and the Garments of the Prieſts appertaining thereto were refulgent with Gold, Silver, precious Stones, Silk, Purple, fine Linen and Cedar. They were made of the choiceſt Materials and with the moſt exquiſite Art, and ſeem to have outvy'd the Pagans Mundane Pomps, as much as the Chriſtians Mundane Pomps ſeem to outvy the Judaical; (f) for the Glory of the latter Houſe (which is the Church of the Gentiles) in reſpect of the Mundane Pomp of her Churches is ſaid to be greater than the Glory of the former. (And accordingly, to keep a decorum, the Prieſthood in the Church of Rome have deriv'd upon themſelves (g) that extravagant Pomp and State which the Roman Prieſts had in the time of Paganiſm.) So Juſtinian ſuppos'd, when upon the dedicating his Temple of S. Sophia he boaſted in a rapturous tranſport of Joy, (h) O Solomon, I have got the better of thee. But ſuch a rapturous Gloriation (doubtleſs) had better become a Pagan than a Chriſtian Emperour; for to glory in the Magnitude and Pulchritude, the Splendor and Richneſs of Temples, is properly a Pagan, not a Chriſtian Gloriation; or rather it is proper to the worſer ſort of Pagans; for the better ſort of them were ſo wiſe, and had Virtue in ſo high eſteem, that they deſpis'd and diſaffected External Mundane Glories (totam cum auro ſuo terram;) they ſuppos'd, that there is a wiſe and virtuous deſpiſing and diſaffecting Mundane Pomps in Religion as well as Life (wherein their great Virtue was εὐτέλεια, to abandon all Superfluities, and to be (i) πόῤῥω τῆς πλουσιακῆς διαγωγῆς, far from the rich and opulent way of living;) ſome of them were ſo far from adorning their Temples with Gold, (k) that they made it unlawful, to bring any Gold into their Temples, they that entred into them muſt lay aſide their Gold;) and ſome of them ſatyrically inveigh againſt offering to the Gods thoſe Mundane Pretioſities, for which they have neither eſteem nor uſe, and againſt ſuppoſing them to be delighted with a ſumptuous and delicate Worſhip. (l) Plato caſteth Gold and Silver out of Temples, as ἐπίφθονον κτῆμα, an invidious Poſſeſſion, Ivory he rejecteth as οὐκ εὐχερὲς ἀνάθημα, an inept Donative, Iron and Braſs he diſcardeth as πολέμων ὄργανα; the Inſtruments of Wars; he alloweth the Images of the Gods to be made only of Wood and Stone, and no other Oblations to be made to the Gods ſave only ἀναθήματα ἐμμελῆ, moderate Donatives. He alloweth not therefore the heights of Mundane Pomp, to be introduc'd into the Pagans publick God-ſervice; which is a good Rule and a juſt Meaſure fit to be obſerv'd in the Chriſtian's Religious Worſhip.

For they muſt be alien from the ſenſitive pleaſing and mundane pompous way of living (which carnal and mundane kind of Men eſteem and affect,) ſo far as it is alien from Chriſtian Sanctity; and in the ſame degree and meaſure they muſt be alien from a ſenſitive-pleaſing and mundane pompous way of God-ſervice, which carnal and mundane kind of Religioniſts affect and admire: For although nothing of this World's Pretioſities and Pomps is too much for God and his Service, nor is any of them too much for the Saints of God; yet as God hath not alloted to his Servants a ſenſitive pleaſing

and

(w) Genial. Dier. l. 4. c. 17.

(x) Selden. ſupr. S. 1.

(y) Spencer. ſupr. l. 2. c. 7. S. 1. in fine.

(z) Coſri, p. 186, 55, 267.

(a) Lactan. l. 2. c. 7.

(b) S. Chryſoſt. T. 5. p. 514.

(c) Herald. in Arnob. p. 232, 254.

(g) Ibid. n. 79.

(h) Mr. Smith Acc. of the Gr. Church, p. 58.

(i) M. Ant. l. 1. S. 3.

(k) Caſaub. in Perſ. Sat. 2. p. 219, 220.

(l) Spencer. Not. in Orig. p. 10. Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 3. c. 8.

Τὸ εἰκὸς ἡ φύσις ἐπιποθεῖ, ἀλλ᾽ οὐ τὸ πολυτελές. Nature affecteth what is fit, not what is fine. Myſt. Epiſt.

(d) Qui quidem error ad nos uſque tranſivit, ut religionem in divitiis arbitremur. S. Hieron. com. in Jer. 10. 4.

(e) Opus bonum & pium ex genere ſuo eſt, ingentibus ſumptibus Templa Dei ædificare aut ornare, probatur primò ex Teſtamento veteri: nam Deus voluit Tabernaculum ornatiſſimum eſſe, ita ut omnia ferè inſtrumenta ſanctuarii aurea eſſent, uſque ad emunctoria lampadum; cortinas autem Tabernaculi & veſtes ſacerdotis eſſe voluit pretioſiſſimas ex ſerico, byſſo, purpura, gemmis. Bellarm. de cult. ſanct. l. 3. c. 6.

(f) Ex quibus omnibus plane apparet, hac quoque ex parte noviſſimæ domus, nempe Eccleſiæ gentium, eſſe gloriam majorem quàm primæ, cum ſuperet numerus & pretium vaſorum Romanæ Eccleſiæ (ut prætermittam de cæteris ubique locorum in orbe diffuſis Eccleſiis) vaſa Templi à Solomone collata. Baron. ad an. 324. n. 71.

and mundane pompous Life, but he hath appointed a contrary kind of Life to be their Life: So he hath not allotted to them, or appointed for them ſuch a ſenſitive-pleaſing and mundane kind of God-ſervice, as the Old Temple-ſervice was (both Judaical and Paganical,) but a contrary kind of God-ſervice; for ſuch is the Holy Spiritual God-ſervice, which is the Chriſtian Sanctity. The Chriſtian Sanctity is ſo far alien from theſe ſenſitive pleaſing and mundane Pomps, that it admitteth not a Mundane Temple, of which they are the proper Ornaments and Furniture; it totally aboliſheth all the Pomps of the Judaical God-ſervice, ſlighteth and diſaffecteth them as mundane Pomps and looketh upon them as ἀλλότρια, things alien. So the Chriſtian Apologiſts vilifie and diſparage all the Pagans Mundane Pomps in Religion, (m) as Earth and of the Earth, & ex fæce ultima vilioris materiæ concreta, (n) their Temples refulgent with Gold, as ſenceleſs Temples admir'd by ſenceleſs Men; and teach that Virtue conſiſteth (o) in abſtaining from and contemning theſe Vanities, that are the proper Portion of the Wicked, & calcanda terrena ut cœleſtia conſequamur. Chriſtians muſt be alien from them, ſo far as their Sanctity is alien from them, which is in great degree; it eſſentially conſiſteth in deſpiſing and diſaffecting them, which cannot be without diſcarding the Heights of them out of their Lives and Religion. This they are oblig'd to by every Branch of their Character (as they are humbled Sinners, Chriſt's followers, the Religioniſts of the Croſs, regenerate and mortify'd Chriſtians, Aliens from the World and crucify'd to it, Spiritual and Divine Religioniſts;) for if they are humbled Sinners, a God-ſervice that is in great degree delicate and mundane Pompous is to them as incongruous, (p) as Oyl and Frankincenſe (which import Delicacy and Magnificence) were to the Sin-offering, Lev. 5. 11. (q) The Jews were not the Religioniſts of the Croſs and of a crucify'd Saviour, whoſe true admirers and lovers cannot be the World's admirers and lovers, the thoughts of his Croſs put them out of conceit with Mundane Pomp and Pleaſure; nor can they think highly of a mundane proſperous Condition as the moſt excellent and deſirable Condition and the way to Happineſs (theſe things being alien from him, and incongruous to him, who had nothing of them, but was in the quite contrary State, and only taſted of the World's Adverſities;) if the Church affecteth, to be very high and pompous in the World (even in her God-ſervice,) ſhe doth not affect Aſſimulation and conformity to Chriſt (nor a Chriſt-like Condition) which is her true Excellency and Felicity. Celſus reporteth, (r) That it was uſual with every one of the Chriſtians in his time, to ſay, The World is crucify'd unto me, and I unto the World. They have renounc'd the World and look upon it with Eſtrangement, in great degree they are alienated from it and out of love with it, (s) διαπτύοντες κόσμον. τὰ φαινόμενα κάλλη διαπτύοντες. ſpitting upon the World and theſe appearing Fineries (which Phraſes denote a very great Diſdain and Vilipendency,) deſiring it but little, and but little of it (and that little for God and Piety,) not making any great reckoning of this World, nor caring much for it (no more than Piety alloweth and requireth:) but do they renounce the Pomps and Vanities of the World at this Chriſtian rate, who at an high rate introduce them into Religion? into the Religion of renouncing and deſpiſing them? Do they underſtand their Buſineſs, their true Excellency and Glory (which is to contemn and overcome the World,) whoſe Glory is to ſhine in Mundane Pomp and Glory? Or do they believe the World, to be ſo vain, and vile, and bad as it is, who mix with it ſo intirely, that they will have the Church a Mundane Gallant, and count it her Excellency, to be like the World? So one of Apelles's Scholars that was to draw Helena's Picture, painted her πολύχρυσον, and made a Golden Helena; whereupon his Maſter told him, (t) O young Man, not being able to paint Helena beauteous, thou haſt made her rich: And in like manner the Church inſtead of ſhining in her native beauty hath been bedeck'd conformably to the World with the luſt of the eye and the pride of life.

The Church's native beauty is her Chriſt-like Sanctity (Innocence, Humility, Purity, Devotion, Heavenly-mindedneſs and Contempt of the World, due Severity and ſtrictneſs of Life, Self-denial, Patience and Charity that ſeeketh not her own;) and as a Chriſtian's habit ought to be ſuch (u) as ſheweth his Humility (the virtue of his Mind:) ſo the Church's exteriour Ornaments ought to be ſuch, that her Divine Virtues (not the contrary Vices) be reſplendent therein: elſe they will claſh with her Sanctity, as that gorgeous apparel did, and thoſe gariſh dreſſes wherewith Women profeſſing Chriſtianity in the primitive times adorn'd their Bodies, which made them ſo fine, that they were the worſe for it (ſo the Jews (w) ſpoil Letters by adorning them,) a faſtuous or voluptuous ornamental pompouſneſs is not the grace, but the diſgrace of a Chriſtian Church, like that of the feminine Gallants, who were (x) δι' εὐσχημοσύνην ἀσχήμονες, made vile by their pulchritude. So if Chriſt had been adorn'd with this World's pulchritudes and pretioſities, his Ornaments would have vilify'd him, not adorn'd him (for they would have made him a mundane and mundane pompous Prince:) So the Jews Temple-worſhip was a mundane pompous Sanctity, and therefore is not to Chriſtians venerable but contemptible. (y) So ſome ſlender Ornaments and Accompliſhments (ſinging and dancing) are to great Perſonages unornamental and uncomely, as puerile Ornaments are to grown Men according to the Arabick Proverb (z) Major eſt Amrus quàm ut torque induatur. The Chriſtian Sanctity refuſeth all faſtuous and voluptuous pompous Ornaments, (a) as Virtue and Philoſophy refuſeth all faſtuous pompous Rhetorick: So the Legend ſaith (b) that our Saviour's Footſteps remain'd upon Mount Olivet (whence he aſcended to Heaven,) and when a Temple was built upon it, that place was left without a pavement, becauſe the Ground threw off quicquid ad ornatum loci deſuper poneretur, whatever was laid upon the place, to adorn it. Sanctity in its native Simplicity is the Church's Ornament; the mundane Goods and Ornaments, (c) which are but ſordid ſecular trifles, theſe are not the valuable and deſirable Ornaments, nor the Churches proper Goods and Ornaments. But they that

Heb. 9. 1.

(m) Clem. Προτρεπ. p. m. 28. Arnob. l. 6. p. 191.

(n) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 8. p. 391.

(o) Lact. paſſim & l. 2. c. 19.

(p) Hottin. de Jur. Heb. Lex. 129. p. 171, 172.

(q) Neque vero mihi aliquis opponat dives in Judæa templum, menſam, lucernas, thuribula, patellas, ſcyphos, mortariola, & cætera, ex auro fabrifacta. hinc hæc probabantur à Domino, quando ſacerdotes hoſtias immolabant & ſanguis pecudum erat redemptio peccatorum. Nunc vero cum paupertatem domûs ſuæ pauper dominus conſecrârit, cogitemus crucem ejus & divitias lutum putabimus. S. Hieron. ad Nepotian. Ep. 2.

(r) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 5. p. 273.

(s) Nilus de cauſ. Diſſ. Eccl. l. 1. & de primat. Pap. l. 2.

(t) Ὦ μειράκιον, μὴ δυνάμενος γράψαι καλὴν, πλουσίαν πεποίηκας. Clem. pædag. l. 2. c. 12.

(u) S. Baſil. Reg. fuſ. diſp. interrog. 22.

(w) Simon. Hiſt. Crit. l. 1. c. 23.

(x) Gr. Naz. or. 19. p. 300.

(y) Tiraquell. de nobil. p. 502.

(z) Pocock. ſpec. p. 347.

(a) Plut. de profect. p. 78, 79.

(b) Baron. ad an. 326. n. 40.

(c) Res vulgares, rerum ſordes, mundanæ ſordes, indigna, plebeia, frivola, humilia, ſtultiſſima, caduca, prophana, ethnica, aliena, peſtifera. Eraſm. Adag. chil. 3. cent. 3. 1.

that reliſh not the Divine Goods and Ornaments, have Notions of the Church's Goods and Ornaments like thoſe Ideas, which are in the Church of Rome of Chriſt and the holy Apoſtles. Who are thought to have inſtituted, (d) that Biſhops in their ſacred Miniſtrations ſhould wear a rich and coſtly Mitre, (ſhining with Gold and precious Stones;) and it is thought, that the Apoſtles themſelves wore a Plate of pure Gold, like that which the Jews High Prieſt had on his Head (which is call'd a Crown, Exod. 29. 6.) in Token that they were Kings and Prieſts, and that they wore this Golden Plate or Crown, when they miniſtred Divine Service. So our Saviour's ſeamleſs Coat is thought to have been of precious Stuff and of a curious Texture; the Cup wherein he gave the Wine at his laſt Supper is thought, to have been a Silver Cup; and a rich Charger is thought to have been the Diſh wherein he had his Diet ſerved. (e) So the Church is thought to be adorn'd, not by the Sanctity of the People, the holy Doctrine and holy Life of the Prieſthood, but by their ſumptuous Houſes, high Living, pompous Equipage, and ſplendid Gallantry, and by Altars ſhining with Gold and precious Stones. O marvellous Luſtre of the Church! (f) But Solon ſeeing the Houſe of Crœſus richly adorn'd, did not preſently ſuppoſe, that the Maſter of it dwelt happily; for he deſir'd rather, to ſee Goods that were in him, than thoſe about him. He did not τὰ τεκτόνων ϗ λιθοξέων ἔργα περινοστεῖν, look about the Works of Artificers and Lapicidaries, but his Eye was upon the internal Ornaments. So the wiſer Pagans did not think, (g) that ſumptuous Buildings were Ornaments of a City comparable to virtuous Citizens. So the exteriour Ornaments of the Church are but a trifle in compariſon of the Holineſs and Happineſs of Souls, which is the buſineſs of the Chriſtian Prieſthood, and not their own external Glory, nor the Splendour and Glory of Churches. (h) If a Phyſician cometh into a Sick Man's Houſe (ſaith S. Chryſoſtom,) and inſtead of taking care of the Sick, falleth to whiten the Walls and incruſtate the Roof with Gold, would you not ſay to him, Man raiſe up the Sick, τί τὴν οἰκίαν καλλωπίζεις; what is your meaning to adorn the Houſe? Throughout the Chriſtian Religion and Diſpenſation of things God hath diſparag'd all mundane Splendour; a moderate degree of it may well ſuffice a Divine People (i) that are in another manner wiſe, rich and potent than the World is; this therefore ought to be the Church's Meaſure, and they are no Friends to God and the Intereſts of Religion, that will deny her ſuch a meaſure.

CHAP. XII.

1. An Idea of the Original Creation of God. The Firſt Notice thereof. 2. A Second Notice thereof. 3. A Third Notice thereof. Some unwiſe Conceits of Heaven rejected. 4. The Adumbrations of Heaven in Scripture. 5. The Heaven of Beatitude defin'd. 6. A Fourth Notice of God's Original Creation. 7. A Fifth Notice of the Original Creation, that it founded a City and Polity, with the Proofs of it. 8. A Sixth Notice of it, that it founded the Original Kingdom of God, which is an uſeful Name of the Church or City of God. 9. Of the Law of the Original Kingdom of God.

1. THE Original Creation of God is in the main of it a matter of great certainty, but as in other matters of remote Antiquity there are ſome things in it, that are only matter of probable Conjecture. There muſt be therefore a mixture of great Certainties with ſome little Uncertainties in our Idea thereof. The Summary of which we will compriſe in this following Theorem.

God's Original Creation
- Produc'd
  - The Starry and Planetary corporeal Univerſe.
  - An Univerſe of Intelligent Minds or Souls.
  - The Heaven of Beatitude and Immortality.
- Iſſued from Paternal Sanctity and from Parental Providence.
- Was Political (Theopolitical) as well as Phyſiological.
- Founded the Original Kingdom of God, which is an uſeful Name of the City or Church of God.
- Was Anti-Moſaical or disjunctively antecedent to the Formation of our Earth.
- Produc'd human Souls as well as the holy Angels.

Of this Original Creation the Firſt Notice is of great certainty; for the vaſt corporeal Univerſe which now is, and which in great part we behold with our Eyes, conſiſteth of an Heaven of fix'd Stars and of ſeveral Planetary Regions Primary and Secondary. Of which vaſt Univerſe there are ſome Inhabitants, that might be produc'd, and ſome parts of it that might be form'd and furniſh'd not till long time after the Original Creation of the Univerſe (the firſt Conſtitution of it:) But the Heaven of fix'd Stars mainly conſtituteth the corporeal Univerſe, and therefore neceſſarily belongeth to the Original Creation of it. So an ancient Writer obſerveth (k) that God's Works are not like ours, for we begin at the bottom, but God beginneth at the top; whereby he meaneth, that Heaven was made in the firſt place, which may be argu'd from the Excellency and (ſuppos'd) Divinity of it. For the Pagans ſtruck with Admiration of its amplitude, pulchritude, ſublimity, influence and regular Motion (real or apparent) attributed nothing leſs than Deity to it; the Excellency of it was the grand occaſion of their Idolatry. (l) Anaxagoras ſpent many Nights in the Contemplation of it, and thought it the principal good of Life θεωρῆσαι τὸν οὐρανὸν ϗ τὴν περὶ τὸν κόσμον τάξιν, to ſpeculate the Order of the World and Heaven eſpecially, which is aptly called by Philo (m) κόσμος ἐν κόσμῳ, an ornamental World in a World. (n) The Pythagoreans made it a Rule of their Life, every Morning to look up to (the Starry) Heaven, to mind thoſe things that are always the ſame, and are always doing their Work in the ſame manner, and to learn from them Order, Purity and Nudity, οὐδὲν γὰρ προκάλυμμα ἄστρου, for a Star hath no veil or covering. The Religious Philoſophers therefore as they attributed Divinity unto, ſo they learned much of their Divinity from the Starry Canopy of Heaven; and they that were no great Religioniſts, yet look'd upon the Starry Region of Heaven as σῶμά τι θεῖον, a certain Divine Body, (o) as Ariſtotle calleth it. Who alſo ſaith, (p) this was the Opinion of all the Ancients, that Heaven is a Divine thing and appertaining to the Divinity. Chriſtians do not ſymbolize with Ariſtotle and the ancient Pagans in their extravagant Aſcriptions of Divinity to the celeſtial Matter and the heavenly Bodies, yet they make uſe of the ſame Phraſes that the Pagans did, to expreſs a ſuperlative Nobleneſs and Excellency, Cœlo lapſum, è Cœlo deſcendit γνῶθι σεαυτόν. In Conſort with the Pagan Theologers they ſuppoſe the heavenly Bodies the moſt noble and excellent of all things ſenſible, that Heaven is the Seat of the Divinity of Beatitude and of the Bleſſed, (q) ὁ τῶν θείων θησαυρὸς ἀγαθῶν, the Treaſury of the Divine Goods, and that there is no compariſon between Earth and Heaven. Whence ordinary Reaſon will infer, that we ought to attribute (r) τῷ μὲν οὐρανῷ τὰ πρεσβεῖα τῆς γενέσεως, the Honourary Seniority of generation unto Heaven. Philo inferreth from Paganical Grounds (chiefly,) that Heaven was firſt created. (s) For it was reaſonable, it ſhould be firſt generated, as being the beſt of the things that were made, and conſiſting of the pureſt ſubſtance; whence it was deſtinated, to be the moſt ſacred Houſe of the Gods, both the inviſible and viſible. The Houſe of the viſible Gods is chiefly the Region of the fix'd Stars, of which none can reaſonably make doubt, but that it belongeth to the Original Conſtitution of the Univerſe: But ſome are prone, to think, that in this Original Conſtitution of the Univerſe there were only lucid Stars, no Planets (Primary or Secondary,) but that the dark Planetary Globes emerg'd by the extinction of ſome Stars, that were invelop'd by the Concretions of opacous Matter, and were abſorpt and drawn into our Vortex (or Syſtem) and ſo made the Sun's Satellites. But this Hypotheſis is not reconcileable with Providence; for it is not likely, that the immenſe Wiſdom and Goodneſs of Providence fram'd an Univerſe without providing an Habitation for the Brute-animals; nor could the Univerſe be a beauteous Syſtem without Planetary Earths; nor could the Sun (who may reaſonably be reckon'd amongſt the fix'd Stars) or his Light and Heat be to any purpoſe in the Original Univerſe, if there were no Planetary Earths in it. If the Planets had their Origin from the fortuitous Abſorption of incruſtated fix'd Stars, the Univerſe in reſpect of ſome principal parts of it was made by Chance. And ſhall it not be thought, that the principal parts of the Univerſe had their places aſſign'd them by the Laws of Prudence and Providence as well as the parts of Animals? (t) For the Eye was not by its Levity forc'd into its place in the Body, nor did the Heart ſliding fall into the Breaſt by its gravity, but becauſe it was for the beſt, that both theſe parts ſhould be ſo plac'd.

(d) Baron. ad an. 34. n. 293, 298. Mr. Hales Ser. on 1 Cor. 6. 13.

(e) Ornatam & cohoneſtatam vocant Eccleſiam, non cùm in populo gliſcit Pietas, vitia decreſcunt, boni mores augeſcunt, cum ſacra doctrina viget: Verum cùm auro gemmiſque lucent altaria, imò cùm his neglectis, prædiis, famulitio, luxu, mulis, equis, ſumptuoſis ædium, vel magis palatiorum ſubſtructionibus, ac reliquo vitæ ſtrepitu, ſatrapas æquant Sacerdotes. In ornamentum Eccleſiæ jubentur Epiſcopi, Sacerdotes & Clerici, purpurâ ſericiſque veſtiri. O miram Eccleſiæ dignitatem! Eraſm. ubi ſupr.

(f) Plutarch. 7. Sap. Conviv. p. 155.

(g) Simplic. in Epict. c. 31.

(h) S. Chryſoſt. ap. Phot. cod. 277. Col. 1557.

(i) Eraſm. de ratione ver. Theolog.

(k) Theophil. ad Autol.

(l) Gat. not. in Ant.

II. God's Original Creation (according to our Second Notice thereof) produc'd an Univerſe (of Rationals) of intelligent Minds and Souls. For as if the Univerſe of Rationals which now is, was deſtroy'd, it might juſtly be ſaid, the Univerſe is deſtroy'd: So it could not be ſaid, to have been originally conſtituted, till the Univerſe of intelligent inviſible Beings was exiſtent in the corporeal Univerſe. Nor could the immenſe Goodneſs of Providence do any great good by Original Creation, if an Univerſe of Minds and Souls was not produc'd by it. If Wiſdom buildeth an Houſe or City (locally underſtood,) it is built for the ſake of its intended Inhabitants, and thoſe Inhabitants are the only valuable and conſiderable Houſe or City: So the Univerſe of Minds and Souls is the only valuable and conſiderable Univerſe, for whoſe ſake the corporeal Univerſe was made, to whoſe utility and conveniency it manifeſtly referreth. And although ſome parts of it might be reſerv'd uninhabited for ſome time and for ſome ſpecial uſe, yet if the whole of it had not been made to be inhabited, it had been made in vain. For what the Prophet ſaith of the Earth, is applicable to the whole corporeal Univerſe. Iſa. 45. 18. God himſelf that formed the Earth and made it, he hath eſtabliſh'd it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited. (u) God Created the Univerſe, not to be a vacuum (according to the vain imaginations of ſome) nor to be deſtroyed, but to exiſt and be inhabited. So the Pagan Theology furniſheth Heaven with Inhabitants (ſuch as they are,) it ſuppoſeth a multitude of inviſible Gods (w) in ſublimibus palatiis cœli habitare, (x) in intimis penetralibus cœli, (y) deſcribuntur Dii veſtri in tricliniis cœleſtibus, atque in Chalcidicis aureis cœnitare, potare, & ad ultimum fidibus & vocum modulationibus mulceri. The Poets take care, that none of the vaſt ſupernal Regions be void and waſt, empty and deſolate without Inhabitant, (for ſuch they ſuppoſe worthleſs and uſeleſs;)

> (z) Neu Regio foret ulla ſuis animantibus Orba > Aſtra tenent cœleſte ſolum formæque Deorum.

Many of the Fathers ſuppoſe, that an intelligible World of holy Angels was produc'd not only long before the Formation of our Earth, but long before the Creation of the whole or any part of the viſible and corporeal Univerſe (of this Opinion are S. Baſil, Gr. Naz. S. Chryſoſtom, Joh. Damaſcen. Joh. Philoponus, Olympiodorus, S. Hilary, S. Hierom, S. Ambroſe, Iſidorus Hiſpalenſis, Bede, Caſſianus and others:) But doubtleſs it is a miſtake, to ſuppoſe, that God's Original Creation did not produce the Starry and Planetary corporeal Univerſe. Their Hypotheſis therefore muſt be thus rectified; that toge-

(m) Περὶ Ἀβρααμ.

(n) M. Ant. l. 11. S. 27.

(o) De Cœlo l. 2. c. 3 S. 17.

(p) Eam fuiſſe omnium Antiquorum opinionem, ut cœlum divinum quid ſit, & ad divinitatem pertinens, etiam ipſe Ariſtoteles teſtatur. Lud. Molinvill. Exam. Phil. Plat. p. 619.

(q) Philo Quis rer. divin. hæres ſit.

(r) S. Baſil. Hexaem. Hom. 1.

(s) Καὶ γὰρ εὔλογον τῷ ὄντι πρῶτον εἰς γένεσιν αὐτὸν ἐλθεῖν, ἄριστόν τε ὄντα τῶν γεγονότων, ἐκ τῆς καθαρωτάτης τῆς ὐσίας παγέντα· διότι θεῶν ἀφανῶν τε καὶ αἰσθητῶν ἔμελλεν οἶκος ἔσεσθαι ἱερώτατος. Περὶ κοσμοποι.

(t) Οὐδὲ γὰρ ὀφθαλμὸς ἐνταῦθα τῦ σώματός ἐστιν ὑπὸ κουφότητος ἐκπεσθεὶς, ὐδὲ ἡ καρδία τῷ βάρει ὀλισθοῦσα πέπτωκεν εἰς τὸ στῆθος, ἀλλ' ὅτι βέλτιον ἦν ὕτως ἑκάτερον τετάχθαι. Plutarch. de fac. in orbe Lun. p. 928.

(u) Ὄντως γὰρ ὐκ εἰς κενὸν, ὐδὲ εἰς μάτην πρὸς ἀπώλειαν ἔκτισε κατὰ τὺς φρονῦντας μάταια τὸ πᾶν ὁ θεός, ἀλλὰ τὸ εἶναί τε καὶ οἰκεῖσθαι. Method. ap. Epiphan. Hær. 64.

(w) Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 3. p. 125.

(x) Ibid. p. 123.

(y) Ibid. l. 4. p. 149.

(z) Ovid. Metam. l. 1. v. Plotin. En. 5. l. 8 c. 3.

ther with the corporeal Univerſe Original Creation produc'd its Inhabitants an Univerſe of intelligent Minds and Souls. This Univerſe is the Univerſe of Vitaliſts (that have perceptive Life, Cogitation and Underſtanding,) who alone are capable of the great vital Goods and Evils. This Univerſe (ſpeaking comparatively) is the only noble Univerſe, which alone is of Cognation with God, and of ineſtimable Value and Pretioſity; for the Soul of Man is thought by the Wiſe (a) a nobler and more valuable Being than the whole corporeal World. This Univerſe is the only holy and happy Univerſe, ὁ κοσμὸς ἀληθινὸς, the true World (as the Platoniſts call their intelligible World,) in which alone are τὰ θεῖα καὶ τιμιώτατα, the things Divine and of the moſt excellent and honourable Nature; and τὰ ὄντως ὄντα, the things that indeed are; for it is inviſible Minds and Souls and their proper Goods and Evils, that are the great ſubſtantial Realities, the things ſenſible and external are but umbratil Phænomena. This is the Univerſe, which Theology contemplateth, leaving to Naturaliſts the Contemplation of the Phænomena of the corporeal Univerſe.]

III. God's Original Creation (according to our Third Notice thereof) produc'd the Heaven of Beatitude and Immortality, which is the heavenly City locally underſtood. For Heaven is not meerly a State, but a place, (b) as the common Notices of Mankind in Conſort with the holy Scriptures repreſent it. There is a mixture therefore of Truth and Errour, of Wiſdom and Folly in the account which Chemnitius giveth of Heaven. (c) This obſervation is not to be deſpiſed, that the Angels which Miniſter to the little ones, guard them, carry them in their Hands and encamp about them, do all theſe Offices here on Earth, and yet are ſaid to ſee the Face of the Father in Heaven. Whence it is moſt evident, that Heaven in which God reſideth with his Majeſty, is not diſtant beyond this ſupreme viſible Heaven ſo many Myriads of Miles as the Calviniſts fondly talk of it. Elſe the Angels, becauſe they cannot be in ſeveral places at the ſame time, could not miniſter to the little ones on Earth and perform their Services to God in Heaven. Heaven therefore Earth and Hell are not diſtinguiſh'd by diſtance of places, but in reſpect of Beatitude and Infelicity. It is wiſely ſaid, that the Heaven of Beatitude is not ſo many Myriads of Miles diſtant beyond the ſupreme viſible Heaven, as ſome imagine: But to ſuppoſe, that the Angels perform their Offices of Miniſtery to Chriſt's Servants here on Earth, and at the ſame time behold the Face of God in Heaven, is a great Miſtake. And 'tis a like Miſtake, to ſuppoſe, that Heaven, Earth and Hell are not diſtinguiſh'd by diſtance of Places, but only in reſpect of Beatitude and Infelicity. A like Miſtake the Alexandrian Cyril ſeemeth to commit, when he ſaith of God, (d) the Nature of God is ſuperiour to all and above the meaſure of every thing created, not by ſublimity of place, but by tranſcendence of Glory and incomparable Power. For the many Notices that are in Scripture of our Saviour's Aſcenſion and Glorification imply, that God is above every thing created both by ſublimity of place and alſo by tranſcendence of Glory and Power. The Scripture Theology alſo that uſually celebrateth God as the Creator of Heaven and Earth and of all things that are therein, implieth, that the whole frame of things is divided into theſe two Syſtems, that they are diſtinct places, that both are habitable and inhabited, and that the one is an Earthly kind of World, the other a Divine and Heavenly.

The Hebrew Name שמים Heaven (e) is moſt probably deriv'd from the Arabick שמה which ſignifieth to be high and eminent; whence the Name Heaven in Scripture uſually ſignifieth the higher part of the World in reſpect of us, and the ſeveral parts of this higher part of the World (the Air, the Sky, the Region of the Stars) are often called in Scripture by that Name; ſo is God himſelf and the Region of the Bleſſed. Which happy Region was ſo far known to the Pagans, (f) they promis'd themſelves an happy Elyſium after Death, although they were extremely uncertain where to place it. (g) The beſt Souls are placed by ſome of them in the Company of their Gods in Heaven, by others in the Galaxias or Milky Circle, by others about the Moon, by others in the lower Air, by others beyond the Ocean, and by others under the Earth. Old Ennius placeth Romulus in Heaven in Company with the Gods.

Romulus in Cœlo cum Diis agit ævum.

So the vulgar Pagans (as a reward for their good Life) promis'd themſelves, (h) that they ſhould live in Jupiter's Hall, and in Conſortſhip with the Gods in Heaven, ſuppoſing it the Seat of the Deity and of Beatitude according to Homer's deſcription of Olympus.

> Οὐλυμπόνδ', ὅθι φασὶ θεῶν ἕδος ἀσφαλὲς αἰεὶ
> Ἔμμεναι, οὔτ' ἀνέμοισι τινάσσεται, οὔτε ποτ' ὄμβρῳ
> Δεύεται, οὔτε χιὼν ἐπιπίλναται· ἀλλὰ μάλ' αἴθρη
> Πέπταται ἀνέφελος, λευκὴ δ' ἀναδέδρομεν αἴγλη.
>
> Olympus is the Gods untroubled Seat,
> Which neither Winds moleſt, nor Showers wet;
> No ſleets of Snow fall there, there Air ſerene,
> Unclouded Sky, and conſtant Splendors ſhine.

The popular Pagans conceits of Heaven were rude and groſly carnal, but have not more of folly and abſurdity in them than thoſe of the Philoſophic Pagans; who not contenting themſelves with the common and general Notices of Heaven, but deſcending to a particular Chorography of it and determining the Place and Situation of it, fall into enormous Follies and Abſurdities. Such as the Platoniſts Fancy touching the Super-cœleſtial place (which Souls arrive at by their aſcent to the top of Heaven,) touching the return of Souls to their Social Star (i) their diſtributing Souls, ſome to have their Reſidence in the ſeveral Planets, others in the Firmament of the fix'd Stars (k) Plato's Fancy of a pure Earth (replete with all Goods) in the Starry Heaven (l) and Ariſtotle's Fancy of certain Beings beyond the primum mobile and the extreme circumference of the Univerſe, which are unchangeable and impaſſible living always the beſt Life and the moſt Self-ſufficient through all Eternity. It is probable that this Ariſtotelian Fancy (m) gave riſe to the conceit of a Cœlum Empyreum, which both the Hebrew Doctors and many Chriſtian Theologers have entertain'd.

(a) Mr. Boyle of the Excell. of Theol. p. 54, 55.

(b) Zanch. de oper. Dei, l. 1. c. 4. 2 King. 2. 11. 2 Chron. 6. 30. Pſal. 11. 4. Iſa. 63. 15. Matth. 5. 8, 12. and 6. 9, 20. Marc. 16. 19. Luc. 16. 22. and 23. 43. Joh. 3. 13. and 14. 2. and 17. 24. Act. 3. 21. Eph. 1. 20. Heb. 11. 10, 16. 1 Joh. 5. 7. Apoc. 2. 7.

(c) Harmon. Evang. c. 92. p. 1333.

(d) Θεοῦ φύσις τὸ πάντων ἐπέκεινα, καὶ οὐ τοπικοῖς ὑψώμασιν, ἀλλὰ ταῖς τῆς εὐκλείας ὑπεροχαῖς καὶ ἀσυγκρίτῳ δυνάμει παντὸς γεννητοῦ μέτρον ὑπερκείμενον. Com. in Amos. T. 3. p. 295.

(e) Pocock. Not. Mis. p. 35.

(f) Windet. de vit. funct. c. 7.

(g) Ainsw. to the Je. Chal. p. m. 25

(h) Arno. adv. Gent. l. 2. p. 86. Orig. c. Cels. l. 3. p. 157.

(i) Plotin. En. 3. l. 4. c. 6.

(k) Vid. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 21. c. 27. Orig. c. Cels. l. 7. p. 350.

(l) Eugubin. de Per. Phil. l. 4. c. 2.

(m) V. J. Magiri Physiolog. l. 2. c. 2. in Com.

The Heaven of Beatitude is ſuppos'd to be above, beyond and without the circumference of the Starry Heaven. For the Hebrew Doctors divide the whole frame of things (n) into three Worlds. The firſt is התחתון the lower World, which is this World. The ſecond is עולם התיכון the middle or inmoſt World, which is the World of the Sphears containing the Aerial Region and the Starry Heavens. The third is עולם העליון the higheſt or ſupreme World, which is the World of Angels, of God and of Souls, the Spiritual World, which is above the fix'd Stars. And ſo ſeveral of the Fathers have this Idea of Heaven. (o) They ſuppoſe a ſupreme inviſible Heaven beyond and above the viſible Starry Heaven, which is the dwelling place of Angels and bleſſed Souls, and that ἔξωθεν τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, above and without Heaven there is a Light which cannot be obſcured, incorruptible and eternal, in which the Angels live. This Light is the Empyreal Heaven, of which ſome ſay (p) that it was created a day before the inferiour Celeſtial Orbs, (q) that it is at leaſt 160 Millions of Miles from Earth to Heaven, and ſome that have calculated curiouſly have found it five Hundred Years Journey unto the Starry Heaven for an ordinary Traveller. Therefore certainly the Seat of Angels and bleſſed Souls is at an huge diſtance from us; for from the height of the Stars you may gueſs at the vaſt diſtance of Cœlum Empyræum, which is ſedes Beatorum. But doubtleſs it would be far better, to content our ſelves with general Notices of Heaven (without particularly determining any thing touching the Place and Situation of it,) than to introduce into Theology ſuch injudicious conceits of it, which in rudeneſs are not much inferiour to Anaxagoras's conceit touching the Origine of the Stars. (r) That the igneous Ether by the rapidity of its Circumgyration ſnatched away Stones from the Earth, and ſetting them on fire ſo turn'd them into Stars. If the Heaven of holy Angels and bleſſed Souls is Situate quite beyond the fix'd Stars, all the vaſt ſupernal Regions of the viſible Univerſe (except the Earths that are there) muſt neceſſarily be empty, and deſolate (without Inhabitant) they muſt be created in vain (or to little purpoſe) they muſt be uſeleſs and unfit to be inhabited (like the Lybian Sands;) all which Suppoſitions are againſt the Conſtitution of the Univerſe, for they are a depopulation of it. Natural Light knoweth no Heaven beyond the Starry Heaven, cujus circumflexu teguntur cuncta (as Pliny ſpeaketh,) ὁ πάντα περιέχων οὐρανός, the Heaven that encompaſſeth all things. The Book de Mundo in Ariſtotle's Works (s) defineth the World the Syſtem of Heaven and Earth and of the Natures contain'd in them. And we cannot doubt what this Author meaneth by Heaven; for he ſaith, it is τὸ ἀνώτατον, the higheſt and is full of σωμάτων θείων, Divine Bodies, which we are wont to call Stars. So when the Scripture denoteth the Univerſe or comprehenſion of all things by this Phraſe Heaven and Earth and the things that are therein, in all Reaſon Heaven in theſe places of Scripture muſt be underſtood, to ſignifie, as it doth in this Book De Mundo; becauſe it defineth the World or Univerſe in the very ſame manner, becauſe Heaven in theſe places muſt be underſtood, in the uſual Senſe, and it muſt be underſtood to ſignifie τὸν κατ᾽ ἐξοχὴν οὐρανόν, Heaven eminently ſo called (t) which is the Starry Heaven. And if in theſe places it ſignifieth the Starry Heaven, the Heaven of Beatitude muſt be in or within the Starry Heaven, or elſe it cannot be in the Univerſe of things, and conſequently there can be no Cœlum Empyræum. When the Scripture ſpeaketh of the higheſt Heaven, it plainly meaneth the Starry Heaven. Nehem. 9. 6. Thou haſt made Heaven, the Heaven of Heavens with all their Hoſt. It knoweth no higher created altitude than that of the Stars. Is not God in the height of Heaven? And behold the height of the Stars, how high they are. Job 22. 12. Though thou ſet thy Neſt among the Stars, thence will I bring thee down. Obad. 4. Lucifer indeed boaſteth, I will aſcend into Heaven, I will exalt my Throne above the Stars of God. But his meaning is not, that he would aſcend into an Heaven above and beyond the Stars, but that he would aſcend ſo high, as to be Dominator over the Stars, as God is. The Starry Heaven is the viſible Heaven, and if the viſible World every where containeth the inviſible (as it doth in our earthly Region) the Heaven of Beatitude muſt be in or within, not beyond or without the Starry Heaven. Nor is it likely, that the Heaven which was open'd to S. Stephen, was an Heaven beyond the fix'd Stars: Or that the Voices from Heaven which came to our Saviour, and the ſound from Heaven (as of a ruſhing mighty Wind) that came amongſt the Apoſtles, came from ſo immenſe a diſtance, as from an Heaven beyond the fix'd Stars. Nor is there any indication of ſuch an Heaven, but of the contrary, in that ſublimity of Phraſe, which the Scripture uſeth to ſet forth our Saviour's Exaltation to the Divine imperial celſitude of Condition (his Apotheoſis,) that he is aſcended ὑπεράνω πάντων τῶν οὐρανῶν, over above all the Heavens, and is become higher than the Heavens. For the holy Writers ſpeak of the viſible Heavens. Pro. 25. 3. The Heaven for height. Cœlum extreme altum. Mercer. The viſible Heavens are look'd upon by the holy Writers as the utmoſt height of created Nature; for our Saviour's Apotheoſis is deſcrib'd by tranſcending them. A Cœlum Empyræum therefore (which tranſcendeth all viſible Heavens) can be no part of created Nature. If the Saints and Angels were in a Cœlum Empyræum, they muſt have an Apotheoſis proper to the Son of God; for they muſt neceſſarily tranſcend all viſible Heavens. And if their Abode was in an Heaven ſo vaſtly remote and diſtant, it is not imaginable, that there could be any (much leſs a conſtant) intercourſe between Earth and Heaven, Us and the Angels of Heaven.

IV. The Adumbrations of Heaven that are in Scripture, do not infer an Empyreal Heaven, but the contrary; for no ſuch Heaven was repreſented by the Judaical Tabernacle and Temple, which was an Adumbration (umbratil Repreſentation) of Heaven, as Jews and Chriſtians agree. The Hebrew Doctors ſay (u) the lower Sanctuary mas made ad ſimilitudinem ſuperioris, a reſemblance of the upper or heavenly Sanctuary. Joſephus and Philo account it ſuch, and the Book of Wiſdom ſaith, Ch. 9. 8. Thou haſt commanded me to build a Temple upon thy holy Mount, and an Altar in the City wherein thou dwelleſt, a reſemblance of the holy Tabernacle, which thou haſt prepared from the beginning. So the holy Writers ſpeak of the Tabernacle and Temple of God in Heaven (w), agreeably to the ſenſe of the Hebrew Doctors; they look upon the holy Places made with Hands as Figures of the true, and call them Shadows,

---

(n) Buxt. Lex. Talm. Col. 1620.

(o) Petav. T. 3. de op. l. 1. c. 2. S. 7, 8. & T. 1. l. 3. c. 10.

(p) Ibid. T. 3. l. 1. c. 10. S. 5.

(q) Dingley of the Deput. Angels p. 147, 182.

(r) Plutarch. de placit. Phil. l. 2. c. 13.

(s) C. 2.

(t) Grot. Not. in Eph. 4. 10.

Iſa. 14. 13.

Eph. 4. 10. Heb. 7. 26.

(u) Grot. Not. in Heb. 9. 24. Lud. Capell. Not. in Heb. 9. 1. Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 1. c. 11. S. 2. Buxtorf. de Arca. c. 6.

(w) Apoc. 7. 15. and 11. 19. and 15. 5. and. Heb. 8. 2, 5. and 9. 8, 11, 12, 23, 24. and 10. 19.

Examples and Patterns (Delineations and Imitamens) of heavenly things; and Heaven they call the true, the greater and more perfect Tabernacle, where alſo they ſuppoſe, to be the true Sanctum Sanctorum, the Holieſt of all. Agreeably to the Jews and Chriſtians (x) the Pagans call Heaven —— templum magnum Jovis altitonantis, and the Heavens magna Templa Cœlitum. And as Heaven (y) is one of the Names of God in Scripture, (z) and is an uſual Name of God amongſt the Jews: So the Pagans ſometimes expreſs themſelves in the ſame manner; as in Petronius, Nemo Cœlum putat, no Man thinketh there is a God. So in the Poet Cœlum ſignifieth the Celeſtials. —— Cœlo gratiſſimus amnis.

The Origin of this ſort of Language is from that general Perſwaſion, which Mankind have, that Heaven (the ſupernal illuſtrious Region contradiſtinct to our Earth) is the Reſidence of God (his Regial Seat of Habitation,) as the Poet ſaith, (a) ——ὃς ὑπέρτατα δώματα ναίει, he that inhabiteth the moſt ſupernal Houſes. So the Deity is called by Galen, ὁ κατὰ τὸν οὐρανὸν νοῦς, the Mind that is in the Heavens, and Sophocles calleth the Ether οἴκησιν Διὸς, the Habitation of Jupiter. So the Book de Mundo in Ariſtotle's Works obſerveth, that all Mankind lift up their Hands to Heaven, when they pray, ſuppoſing it the Seat of the Deity. Agreeably to which natural Notion of God (as Simplicius calleth it) the holy Writers have called Heaven his Dwelling-place, his Houſe, his Seat and Throne (the Seat of his Majeſty) his Holy Heaven (ſanctify'd by the Sanctity of the Divine Majeſty, who is there as in his Seat and Temple,) and the Habitation of his Holineſs, which ſpeaketh it his Temple and Sanctuary, Pſal. 102. 19. and 2. 4. and 20. 6. 2 Chron. 6. 30. Iſa. 63. 15. and 66. 1. So Varro ſaith of Heaven, (b) it is naturâ templum cætera ſimilitudine, a Temple by Nature the reſt by Similitude. Accordingly there was a great ſimilitude and analogy between the Celeſtial and the Judaical Sanctuary. (c) The Supreme Heaven was repreſented by the Holieſt of all (which Abrabenel hath obſerv'd,) here was the Propitiatory as the Footſtool of God, here were the Cherubims as the Celeſtial Servitors, among whom God is ſaid to have dwelt, and hence to have given forth Oracles. (d) The Ark according to Cabala is a Repreſentation of the Throne of the Glory of the Lord, ſay the Hebrew Doctors. (e) The Colours of the Tabernacle (ſaith Joſephus) did ſhine, as if one had beheld Heaven. Theſe are wiſe and good Notices touching the Myſterious Symbolical Nature of the Judaical Sanctuary; but ſome Miſtakes there are amongſt Jews and Chriſtians in ſtating the Reſemblance between it and the Celeſtial Sanctuary.

(1.) One miſtake is a Branch of Criminal Philoſophic paganizing (of which Joſephus and Philo, and the Hebrew Doctors are generally guilty;) for Joſephus ſuppoſeth the Judaical Tabernacle and Temple (not purely and intirely a Repreſentation of the Heavenly Tabernacle and Temple, but) an Adumbration (f) τῆς τῶν ὅλων φύσεως, of univerſal Nature or the whole World; and that the two parts of it which were permitted to the Prieſts, ſignifie our Earth and Sea in a profane place, which all promiſcuouſly tread upon. But if our ſordid polluted Earth is a profane place, it cannot be thought the conſtitutive part of a Temple, much leſs of an Heavenly Temple. What worſe confounding of things can there be, than to jumble together Holy and Profane, Heaven and Earth, and paganically to make the Univerſe of one piece? Yet in this enormous miſſtating things Grotius ſymbolizeth with Joſephus, (g) for he affirmeth, that the Judaical Tabernacle and Temple was a Reſemblance and Adumbration of the whole World; and he ſuppoſeth, that the Judaical Sanctuary is call'd by the Apoſtle a Worldly Sanctuary, to ſignifie, that it was an Image and Reſemblance of the whole World. (h) So Philo maketh the High Prieſts Cloathing a Repreſentation of the whole World, and its parts of the ſeveral parts of the World, his Robe of Blue expreſſive of the Air, the Flowers of it expreſſive of the Earth, the Pomegranates of the Water, and the Bells of the Harmony of theſe Elements Earth and Water. (i) Joſephus thinketh, that Aaron's Bells denoted ſomewhat elſe than Harmony; for he maketh them the Repreſentation of Thunder and Lightning (which is agreeable to the Sky-colour of the Robe, to which they were annex'd, and to the Nature of the Legal Diſpenſation:) But if Aaron's Bells did denote Harmony, is it not far better to ſay, that they denoted Harmonicon Cœleſte than the Harmony of Earth and Water?

(2.) A ſecond miſtake is touching the three Heavens ſuppos'd to be repreſented by the three Partitions of the Judaical Sanctuary; (k) for the Jews diſtinguiſh three Heavens, Cœlum nubiferum (the Aerial Heaven,) Cœlum aſtriferum (the Starry Heaven,) Cœlum angeliferum (the Heaven of Heavens, above the Starry Heaven, where the Angels reſide;) and the three Partitions of the Judaical Sanctuary are ſuppos'd, to repreſent theſe three Heavens; The Court the Aerial, the Holy Place the Starry, and the Holieſt of all the Heaven of Angels (which is above the Starry Heaven;) by which account of things an Empyreal Heaven (called by ſome Supercœleſte, and by others Superæthereum) is introduc'd. But there is no reaſon to imagine, that the Holy Place in the Judaical Sanctuary did repreſent Cœlum Aſtriferum, the Starry Heaven (at large,) or the viſible World (as ſome (l) ſpeak,) unleſs either ſome ſuch thing be ſaid of it by the Holy Writers, or there appeareth in the thing it ſelf ſome ſemblance and ſimilitude of the fix'd Stars. But the Holy Writers are wholly ſilent concerning it; and if we examine the thing it ſelf, if we ſurvey the Holy Place, the Structure of it, the Veſſels, Utenſils and Furniture of it, there appeareth not any the leaſt ſimilitude and reſemblance of the fix'd Stars. This Hypotheſis therefore that the Holy Place repreſented the Region of the fix'd Stars, is wholly without Reaſon: But there is a worſe flaw in it; for it is againſt very plain Reaſon. For the Golden Candleſtick which was in the Holy Place (and an eminent part of the Furniture of it) plainly ſheweth, that the Holy Place was deſign'd to repreſent not Cœlum Aſtriferum, the Starry Heaven (at large,) but only Cœlum Planetiferum, the Planetary Heaven. (m) The ſeven Lamps and Lights (ſaith Philo) were Symbols of the Planets ſo called by Naturaliſts. (n) The holy Candleſtick with the ſeven Lamps upon it (ſaith he) is a reſemblance of the courſe of the ſeven Planets. So Joſephus obſerveth, (o) that in the Golden Candleſtick there were ſeven Branches and ſeven Lights according to the Number of the Planets. None of the Jewiſh Writers have been able to find in the Golden Candleſtick any reſemblance of the fix'd Stars; but Grotius attempteth, to ſupply what is wanting in them. (p) The ſeven Planets (ſaith he) were ſignify'd by the ſeven Lamps of the Temple, and the fix'd Stars by the other parts of the Candleſtick. But it had been worth the while, for this Learned Man to have ſhew'd, what other parts of the Candleſtick repreſented the fix'd Stars; was it the Bowls, or the Knops, or the Flowers, or all theſe together that repreſented thoſe inerratick Stars of Light? What affinity and reſemblance have thoſe leſſer Ornamental parts of the Candleſtick with thoſe vaſtly numerous and vaſtly great Globes of Light the fix'd Stars? And what are ſeven Planets for Number, Magnitude and Quality (if the Sun be reckon'd one of them, ſix of them are opacous Bodies) in compariſon of the illuſtrious Luminaries of the Starry Firmament? Is there any thing more incongruous and diſproportionate, than that ſeven Wanderers ſhould far outſhine in the Holy Place the immenſe and glorious Region of the fix'd Stars, if it was deſign'd to be repreſented there? That the ſeven Planets ſhould have all the Lamps and illuſtrious parts of the Candleſtick allotted to them, to repreſent their Glory, and the great, and glorious, and numerous Lights of the Univerſe ſhould have nothing glorious to repreſent them, but ſhould be made obſcure and inglorious, as if they were but Skypebbles and ſcarce worthy of any notice? Grotius is ſometimes in a wiſer mood, than to run upon theſe Rocks of Abſurdity; for ſometimes he expoundeth the Myſtery of the Golden Candleſtick as Philo and Joſephus had done before him. (q) It was an Image of the Planets; for it had ſix Branches and one Shaft in the midſt, as Philo and Joſephus explain it. The Region of the fix'd Stars therefore was totally omitted and not at all repreſented in the Judaical Sanctuary (which ſheweth that the Cœlum Angeliferum and conſequently the Heaven of Beatitude is not to be plac'd beyond it;) yet this Region of Stars is the Heaven, which the Jews ſware by, and which is ſo ſacred (r) that our Saviour calleth it God's Throne; and amongſt the Pagan Theologers by Heaven (s) pars ſiderea mundi is underſtood. With reſpect to the Corporeal Univerſe therefore the three Heavens are thus very well diſtinguiſh'd by an ancient Writer, (t) Cœlum Nubiferum, Cœlum Planetiferum, Cœlum Aſtriferum. In the Judaical Sanctuary they are thus diſtinguiſh'd; Cœlum Nubiferum, Cœlum Planetiferum, Cœlum Angeliferum. And this laſt is that third Heaven, into which S. Paul was caught up, and which he calleth Paradiſe, to denote it the Heaven of Beatitude, 2 Cor. 12. 2.

(x) Grot. Not. in Apoc. 11. 19.

(y) Dan. 4. 26. Matth. 21. 25. Luc. 15. 18.

(z) Homo timens cœli. mors per manus cœli. omnia ad cœlum. omnes actiones tuæ ſint in nomine cœli. Omnia ſunt in manu cœli præter timorem cœli. Cœli miſereantur tui, ſo he that viſiteth the Sick ſaith. Buxt. Lex. Talm. col. 2440. Beyer. Addit. ad Seld. p. 348, 349.

(a) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 2. c. 2. Grot. Not. in Matth. 5. 34.

(b) Outram de ſacrific. l. 1. c. 3. S. 8.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Buxt. exercit. de Arca. c. 6.

(e) Joſeph. Antiqu. l. 3. c. 5.

(f) Ibid. c. 8.

(g) Non minùs Tabernaculum illud quod pro Templo fuit, quàm ipſum Templum à Salomone ſtructum figuram gerebat Univerſi. Not. in Heb. 8. 2. Tentorium Moſis temporibus, Templum verò poſt Salomonem, nihil aliud erant quàm umbræ totius Univerſi, & gubernationis Dei in Univerſo, cujus pars præcipua eſt regio illa ſuperætherea. Ibid. Not. in v. 5. Habuit pactum illud ſanctuarium ſuum mundanum, i. e. mundi totius imaginem. Not. in Heb. 9. 2.

(h) De vit. Moſis, l. 3.

(i) Grot. Not. in Exod. 28. 34.

(k) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 1. c. 11. S. 2. Pool's Synopſ. in 2 Cor. 12. 2.

(l) Spencer. ſup.

(m) Philo de vit. Moſ. l. 3.

(n) De Hæred. rer. div. p. 347. ed. Gr. Paris.

(o) Antiqu. l. 3. c. 7.

V. The Fathers diſtinguiſh (u) a Celeſtial and Sub-celeſtial Paradiſe, which latter Paradiſe cannot reaſonably be thought higher than the higher Region of the Air; for our Saviour's Soul was in it before his aſcenſion into Heaven, Luc. 23. 43. Such a ſituated Paradiſe (w) the Pythagoric Verſes call αἰθὴρ ἐλεύθερον, the free Ether (confounding Air and Ether,) and here they promiſe the ſeparate Soul an happy Immortality; for the place next under the Moon (ſaith Hierocles) the Pythagoreans call the free Ether. (x) Virgil calleth the free Ether Aeris campos (the Fields of the Air,) and the Poet Lucan (y) deſcribeth this Elyſium as Sublunary, but as igneous rather than Aerial. (z) Such the Stoicks ſuppos'd the Regions properly Celeſtial and Ethereal (Superaerial;) in which Ethereal Regions it is reaſonable to look for the Superiour Paradiſe; for a ſublunary Manſion (Igneous or Aerial) is comparatively mean and inglorious, and ſubject to the Fates of the Earth; and therefore can be no ſuch Heaven of Glory and Immortality, as Chriſtianity promiſeth. The Veſt wherewith Holy Souls ſhall be cloath'd at the Reſurrection, is an Ethereal Body (which is their Houſe from Heaven, 2 Cor. 5. 2.) which demonſtrateth, that they are deſign'd to live in the Ethereal Regions, and that there is their Heaven of Beatitude and Immortality, as Origen diſcourſeth. (a) The Soul which in its own nature is incorporeal and inviſible, in whatever corporeal place it exiſteth, needeth a Body ſuitable to the nature of that place; which Body it ſometimes beareth, having put off that which before was neceſſary, but now is ſuperfluous for the following State; and ſometimes again putting on ſomething which before it had, having need of a better cloathing, to fit her for thoſe more pure ethereal and heavenly places. As they that are cloath'd with theſe animal terreſtrial Bodies, muſt be Inhabitants of this animal terreſtrial Region: So they that have put on their Heavenly Veſt, and are cloath'd with their Ethereal Body, muſt be Inhabitants of the ethereal and heavenly places, as Origen calleth the Heaven of Beatitude. The lapſe of Angels alſo into this lower caliginous Air and the change of their Bodies ſhew, that the Heaven of Beatitude is in the Ethereal Regions; (b) for thoſe Rebels before their Sin had Celeſtial Bodies, which by way of Puniſhment were chang'd into Aerial. Suppoſing therefore the Superiour Paradiſe, to be in the Ethereal Regions, we may connect this Judaical Notion with that other of Cœlum Angeliferum, and define the Heaven of Beatitude to be the Ethereal Regions as they are the vaſt Empire of the Holy Angels, or the vaſt Empire of thoſe that are in the Heavenly ſtate of Life. The Beatitude promis'd unto us is the Crown of Life Immortal (to be perfectly freed from all the Weakneſſes, Meanneſſes and Miſeries of this Mortal Life, and rais'd to that unſtain'd Pulchritude and Glory Immortality,) which is the Heavenly ſtate of Life. As God is in the Heavenly ſtate of Life, ſo are the perfected Saints of God, whoſe Bodies are Celeſtial, Luminous and Glorious, not Terreſtrial and Vile Bodies, Spiritual kind of Bodies not groſs and craſs, vegete and lively not dull Mortality, without Spot or Blemiſh, Weakneſs or Imperfection (no

(p) Septem quæ vaga dicuntur Sydera ſignificata per ſeptem Templi lampadas; & deinde τὰ ἀπλανῆ ſignificata per cæteras Lychni partes. Not. in ſap. Salom. c. 7. 19.

(q) Imago Planetarum. erant enim rami ſex & unus in medio ſcapus, ut Philo explicat, nec aliter Joſephus. Not. in Heb. 9. 1.

(r) Grot. Not. in Matth. 5. 34.

(s) Macrob. in ſom. ſcip. l. 1. c. 9.

(t) Hic aer primum cælum hiſtorialiter vocatur, ſicut habetis volucres cæli, quia in cælo, id eſt, in aere volare videntur. ſecundum cælum æther vocatur, ut habetis ſtellæ cæli, quia in eo planetæ vago curſu feruntur. Tertium cælum firmamentum appellatur, ſicut habetis, Aſtra Cæli, quia in eo ſidera fixa traduntur. Author de cogn. ver. vit. inter op. S. Aug. c. 43.

(u) Tertull. c. Marcion. l. 4. c. 34.

(w) In fine.

(x) Viv. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 21. c. 27.

(y) Quodque patet terras inter Lunæque meatus ſemidei Manes habitant, quos ignea virtus Innocuos vita patientes ætheris imi fecit.

(z) Lipſ. Phyſ. Stoic. l. 2. diſſ. 11.

(a) Ἡ τῇ ἑαυτῆς φύσει ἀσώματος καὶ ἀόρατος ψυχὴ, ἐν παντὶ σωματικῷ τόπῳ τυγχάνουσα, δεῖται σώματος οἰκείου τῇ φύσει τοῦ τόπου ἐκείνου. ὅπερ ὁτὲ μὲν φορεῖ ἀπεκδυσαμένη πρότερον ἀναγκαῖον μὲν, περισσὸν δὲ ὡς πρὸς τὰ δεύτερα· ὁτὲ δὲ ἐπενδυσαμένη ᾧ πρότερον εἶχε δεομένῃ κρείττονος ἐνδύματος εἰς τοὺς καθαρωτέρους καὶ αἰθερίους καὶ οὐρανίους τόπους, C. Celſ. l. 7. p. 353.

Supra lunam pura ſunt omnia ac diuturnæ lucis plena. Plin.

(b) Tranſgreſſores illi antequam tranſgrederentur, cæleſtia corpora gerebant, quæ converſa ſunt ex pæna in aeream qualitatem. S. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. l. 3. c. 10.

Matth. 25. 31.

Luc. 20. 36. 1 Cor. 15. 40, 42. Phil. 3. 21. 1 Joh. 3. 2. more ſubject to Hunger and Thirſt, Cold or Pains, or any of the Frailties and Infirmities that now adhere to us, but) they are Immortal, Incorruptible and Impaſſible (as to any Evil) live in a deiform condition and an affluence of never-dying Joys; and in this Heavenly ſtate of Life their Beatitude conſiſteth. It conſiſteth therefore in being ἰσάγγελοι, equal to the Angels, (c) when our Body ſhall be Celeſtial and Spiritual, an Angelical Body in the Society of Angels. This ſeemeth to be therefore the beſt Idea, that we can have of the place of Heaven (the Heaven of Beatitude) in our preſent ſtate; to ſuppoſe it the Ethereal Regions, as they are the vaſt Empire of the Holy Angels; which is agreeable to S. Hierom's Notion of the Creation. (d) He ſtretched out the Heavens, that the multitudes of Angels might dwell above, and Men might have their abode beneath, and ſo made as it were a great Houſe for Rational Creatures. If the Corporeal Univerſe was deſign'd to be an Houſe for Men and Angels, the Ethereal Regions of it cannot be uninhabited by the Holy Angels; which argueth, that the Heaven of Beatitude muſt be plac'd within the circumference of the fix'd Stars. But it muſt not be diſſembled, that there are ſome Phænomena amongſt the fix'd Stars, which ſhew, that there is Mutation and Corruption in thoſe Regions; which ſeemeth to infer, that the Heaven of Beatitude (exempt from all Mutation and Corruption) muſt be beyond and not within their Circumference. To which Objection it may be anſwer'd; that as the Mutations of Matter and Corruptions that are in the Univerſe, do not hinder the Sub-celeſtial Paradiſe from being ſuch: So they do not hinder the Celeſtial Paradiſe from being ſuch, there is the ſame reaſon for both.

(c) Cùm fuerit tale corpus noſtrum, corpus jam cœleſte, & ſpirituale, corpus angelicum in ſocietate Angelorum. S. Aug. in Pſal. 145.

(d) Qui extendit cœlos & expandit eos, ut vel ſupra habitarent angelorum multitudines, vel ſubter homines morarentur, & quaſi magnam rationalibus creaturis fecit domum. Com. in Iſa. c. 40.

VI. God's original Creation (according to our fourth Notice thereof) iſſu'd from Paternal Sanctity and from Parental Providence; for God muſt be conſider'd under this twofold Notion; both as the Father and Founder of the Divine Family (the Saints and Sons of God) and as a Parental Providence to the World of Animals: Both which Notions of God are compris'd in that honourary Attribute, which all Religioniſts give unto God, ſtiling him (as Plato doth in his Timæus) πατέρα τοῦδε τοῦ παντὸς, the Father of the Univerſe. For the Regenerate and Divine Family always was comprehended in the Univerſe, and always was the greateſt part of the Univerſe of Rationals; if God therefore was by Original Creation the Founder and Father of the Univerſe, he was neceſſarily by Original Creation the Founder and Father of the Regenerate and Divine Family. Which Divine Family ſtandeth oppos'd to the Diabolical, 1 Joh. 3. 10. And as it cannot but be Satan's Deſign, Intereſt and Buſineſs (becauſe of his Wickedneſs) to be a Father, and to raiſe up a Diabolical Family: So it cannot but be God's Deſign, Intereſt and Buſineſs (becauſe of his Holineſs and Goodneſs) to be a Father, and to raiſe up a Divine Family.
Rom 8. 29. Eph. 1. 4, 5. In his new Creation and his eternal Predeſtination of it his great deſign is the originating and raiſing a Divine Family; and if this is now and was from eternity his grand Deſign, it muſt be ſuppos'd his Deſign and Buſineſs in his Original Creation. That Creation produc'd into exiſtence the Divine and Heavenly both Things and Perſons; therefore it produc'd into Life the Family in Heaven; by which Name the Apoſtle denoteth the Holy Angels, which together with Regenerate Chriſtians conſtitute one Regenerate and Divine Family, Eph. 3. 15. Of the Holy Angels therefore we muſt affirm,

(1.) They are the Sons of God as of his Kind and Family. God is ſo far and in ſuch ſenſe the Father of all Creatures, as to produce them into Being, and therefore is πατὴρ τῶν ὅλων, the Father of all. So the Rain hath a Father. Job 38. 28. He is ſo far and in ſuch ſenſe the Father of all living Creatures, as to produce them into Life, (e) vitam, ſalutem, victum præſtat ut pater, To all Animals he giveth Life, Health and Suſtenance as a Father. To Mankind (the chief of Animals) God is ſo far and in ſuch ſenſe a Father, as to be productive of them into Humane Life, the Father of Spirits (peculiarly productive of them,) paternal in the courſe of his Providence towards Mankind, (f) τροφεὺς, a nurſing Father to them, and they muſt be conſider'd as in nature a reſembling Progeny of God. So Magiſtrates and Potentates are conſider'd as a ſort of reſembling Progeny of the moſt High (the Sons of his Highneſs and Majeſty, Eminence and Authority,) when they are denominated the Sons of God, 2 Sam. 7. 14. Pſal. 29. 1. 82. 6. 89. 6, 27. The Nation of old Iſrael had a ſort of Sonſhip unto God. Out of Egypt he called his Son, Hoſ. 11. 1. Exod. 4. 22. Thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer, Iſa. 63. 16. Deut. 32. 6. To them pertained the Adoption, Rom. 9. 4. Deut. 14. 1. God was eſpecially and eminently the Founder and Father of their Nation. He made and formed them, not only as Men, but as Iſrael, his redeeming them out of Thraldom and making them the Holy Nation, was a ſort of generating them or producing them into Life: They had a National Adoption, they were the Son, and God took upon him the Relation of their God and Father according to the Inſtitution of their Civil-religious and Secular-kind of Theocracy. But all this diverſity of Sonſhip unto God is extremely mutilate and partial and in the main is no Sonſhip, as being on this ſide Sonſhip unto God in the proper plenary ſenſe, the Divine kind of Sonſhip, which (according to Chriſtianity) conſiſteth in an Adoption into his Heavenly Family, and in having ſuch a Divine Generation from him, which is analogous to Natural Generation, whereby Children are ὁμογενεῖς, of the ſame kind with their Parents, Homo ex Homine, Bos ex Bove, propriiſſimum opus viventis eſt generare ſibi ſimile. So Fathers beget Children in their own likeneſs. So generous Animals procreate generous Animals. So the Holy Angels are the Sons of God as being θεῖον γένος, of the Divine Kind and Family, Job 1. 6. and 38. 7. Pſal. 29. 1. Dan. 3. 25. Luc. 20. 36. Eph. 3. 15. Heb. 12. 22.

(e) Lactant. l. 4. c. 3.

Luc. 3. 38. Jer. 2. 27. Malach. 2. 10. Zech. 12. 1. Heb. 12. 9. Act. 17. 28.

(f) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 4. c. 21.

Nec degenerem feroces progenerant aquilæ columbam.

(2.) They are the truly Noble, Royal and Illuſtrious Family, as appeareth from their Names, all which are expreſſive of Honour and Nobilitation. Such is the Angelical Family, Pſal. 78. 25. Man did eat Angel's Food. Such is the Heavenly Family, (g) for the Chineſe call their Emperour, Thien Zu, the Son of Heaven, to denote the higheſt Nobilitation; and in ſuch ſenſe we ſay, forma auguſta multum de cœlo trahit. Such is the Divine Family; for the Epithet Divine denoteth what is ſuperlatively Noble and Excellent. (h) Ariſtotle commonly calleth every

(g) [illegible]

(h) [illegible]

every thing eximious Divine, the Lacedæmonians call'd a perſon whom they much admir'd θεῖος ἀνὴρ. a Divine Man, (i) Heraclitus and Diogenes θεῖοι ἦσαν, were Divine (ſaith the Philoſopher,) and Democritus ſaid, that Homer could not have written ſo good Verſes ἄνευ θείας καὶ δαιμονίας φύσεως, without a Divine (more than Humane) Nature. The Divine Family of Angels are alſo entitul'd The Sons of God, which Name denoteth, (k) τὴν εὐγένειαν καὶ τιμὴν καὶ χαρακτῆρα τὸν βασιλικὸν, Birth-Nobility and Honour, and the Royal Character. (l) If Cæſar did adopt thee, thou wouldeſt be elated beyond meaſure; and if thou knoweſt thy ſelf, to be the Son of God, wilt thou not carry it high? To have the Dignity of the Sons of God, is the height of Honour and Dignity; to have it in the Heavenly State of Life, is to be God-like both in reſpect of Interiour Virtue and External Glory and Magnificence; their Deſcent and Parentage is the truly Noble and Royal, and they are of the truly Noble and Royal Spirit; their Rights and Priviledges are the truly Noble and Illuſtrious (being priviledg'd and exempted from all Spiritual and External Evils and Heirs of the Heavenly Royal Goods,) ſuch are alſo their Imployments and Enjoyments, their Company and Converſe and all their Circumſtances of Life truly Royal and Son of God-like. Their Divine Filial Relation and Condition implieth, that they are a Family perfectly unſerviliz'd and unenſlav'd, which is the higheſt Ennoblement. Jeruſalem which is above is free, which is the Mother of us all, Gal. 4. 26. They are the Family of God's Elect (ſo related, dignify'd and priviledg'd as God's Elect are, of eximious Quality and Condition, Eſteem and Worth,) and to all of them (in the larger ſenſe) the Name of Elect Angels belongeth, 1 Tim. 5. 21.

(i) Epiſt. Ench. c. 21.

(k) S. Chryſoſt. in Job. Hom. 1.

(l) Epiſt. diſſ. l. 1. c. 3. vid. etiam S. Chryſoſt. Hom. in Matth. 18. p. 137.

(3.) They are the Holy Family (and uſually intituled the Holy Angels;) for they are born into the Holy Life (Heaven-born,) live the Holy Life in ſinleſs Perfection, and in their Nature and Practice are of immaculate Sanctity and Purity, not having any Vice or Imperfection commix'd with their Virtue, any thing that ſullieth, diſcoloureth and defileth it. But this Holy Family are not intituled Holy meerly upon the account of their Interiour Sanctity and Virtue; but to denote in general, that (in ſeveral reſpects) they are of ſuch noble and illuſtrious Quality and Condition, which is of the Holy kind. So they that have part in the firſt Reſurrection (and therefore are the Sons of the Reſurrection) are denominated Holy, to ſignifie, that they are of Heavenly Sacerdotal Condition: They are ſo dignify'd, imploy'd and priviledg'd, as to be Prieſts unto God (Prieſts unto God are thoſe, that have the Holy Dignity and Office, to miniſter the Divine Service, to which they are conſecrate and ſet apart;) and becauſe they are Heavenly Prieſts, they are of Immortal Condition, exempt from and beyond whatever is Stain and Blemiſh, Pollution and Corruption, Apoc. 20. 6. Bleſſed and holy is he, that hath part in the firſt Reſurrection; on ſuch the ſecond Death hath no power, but they ſhall be Prieſts of God and of Chriſt. The Holy Angels are in this ſenſe Holy (for the Sons of the Reſurrection are not more than ἰσάγγελοι, equal to Angels;) they are alſo intituled The Holy Ones as Potentates, and to diſtinguiſh them from Humane Potentates; for ſo in the Book of Daniel this Name the Holy Ones, ſignifieth, Thoſe Potentates the God-kind of Noble and Illuſtrious Ones. And they are Holy in the ſame ſenſe, that the Saints of God on Earth are Holy, whoſe ſtate of Sanctity is an Eſtate of Nobilitation (or Unvileneſs;) they are therefore a Family of Saints, and are uſually called by that Name, Deut. 33. 2. He came with ten thouſand of Saints, which the Jeruſalem Targum and Jonathan render Myriads of Holy Angels. So Zech. 14. 5. Dan. 8. 13. Job 15. 15. compar'd with Job 4. 18.

Matth. 25. 31. Marc. 8. 38. Luc. 9. 26. Act. 10. 22. Apoc. 14. 10.

Dan. 4. 13, 23. and 4. 17.

(4.) They are the Holy Love-Family, and conſequently the lovely Family; for perfect Love is perfect Pulchritude and Lovelineſs of Soul and Deportment. And as the Infernal Tribe are therefore vile and ſordid, foul and ugly, malign and noxious Fiends, wretched and miſerable to extremity, becauſe they are wholly devoid of it: So the Perfection and Felicity of the Heavenly Saints conſiſteth in it, and their Life of Divine Charity is Life Eternal, 1 Cor. 13. Their love to God diſpoſeth them to live the Life of doing his Will (which is the Life of Heaven, the Heavenly Angelical kind of Life, and which is Heaven the height of Felicity;) they are the Family of Divine Lovers of God and of their Brother, the Commonwealth of everlaſting Friends, that have no ſuch corrupt Affections and Intereſts, which are the Make-bates and Incendiaries amongſt Men, but their Jeruſalem is (according to its Name) the Viſion of Peace. Their Government is the Love-government, all orderly do their duty in their place, by Love ſerve one another, and an Angel doth not envy an Archangel, becauſe he is in the higher place. They are not without their Conteſts indeed, as we read, Dan. 10. 13, 20. but theſe are only certain Diſputes in the Heavenly Court on behalf of thoſe ſeveral Nations, which the Holy Angels are imploy'd about, and amount not to any ſuch thing as breach of Unity, Love and Concord, which cannot fail to be Triumphant in the Church Triumphant (Eccleſia triumphans in patria,) where Love is Queen-regent, and where the Wills of all fully correſpond to the Divine Will, and they live in perfect conformity thereto (in their Sentiments and Affections, in their Motion and their Reſt, their Work and their Refreſhment;) they are therefore all one in God, and harmoniouſly ſerve and praiſe him for evermore.

Angelus non invidet Archangelo. S. Aug.

(5.) They are the happy (as well as the holy) Family; for the heavenly State which they are in, is the State of their Perfection (in all reſpects,) they are the Angels of Light interiourly and exteriourly, and their abode is in the Region of Light and Brightneſs unſully'd with any Cloud, of undiſturb'd Peace and Serenity. They are ſafe and exempt from all Evils, Evils of all kind (as the place of their abode is ὁ τῶν κακῶν καθαρὸς τόπος, a place pure from all Evils ſo called by Plato in his Theætetus,) an Heaven of Glory and Felicity is their Country, where there is nothing vile, ſordid and inglorious, nor any want of Goods, of the true and heavenly kind of Goods. The Inhabitants of Heaven are the Bleſſed, the Inheritance of Heaven is the Inheritance of Bleſſedneſs, the Joys of Heaven are not only the greateſt conceivable, but ſo great that to meer Men they are unconceivable. They live with God and conformably unto God (agreeably to the Heathens Notion of Bleſſedneſs (m) μετὰ θεῶν δίαιτα, to live with the Gods and as the Gods live,) and our Saviour ſaith of the Angels, which guard his Servants, that they enjoy the Viſion of God, wherein the Schools place Bleſſedneſs. Matth. 18. 10. But it is probable, that Heaven is deſcrib'd

2 Cor. 11. 14.

1 Cor. 2. 9.

(m) Clem. Str. l. 7. p. m. 526.

deſcrib'd by an Alluſion and Analogy to the Court of Perſia wherein there were ſeven Princes that ſaw the King's Face (the Officers of the Preſence, Preſidents and Princes, the principal Perſons at Court, Eſther 1. 14. Ezra 7. 14. Dan. 6. 3.) that our Saviour ſpeaketh of certain Angels of the higheſt Dignity, whoſe prerogative it is, to ſtand in the Preſence of God (Luc. 1. 19.) and (when they are in Heaven) always to behold the Face of his Father which is in Heaven. Matth. 18. 10. This may be the Prerogative of certain Angels of the higheſt Rank, yet the holy Angels in common muſt be ſuppoſed, to have ſuch a Viſion and Fruition of God, as belongeth in common to all that are holy, and is eſſential to their Beatitude. Bleſſed are the pure in Heart, for they ſhall ſee God. Matth. 5. 8. From this ſupernatural Beatitude of Angels the Schools have taken occaſion, to raiſe ſeveral Diſputes about their Original Condition. (n) Whether the Angels were created in Grace or meer Nature? Whether the evil Angels were created in the final Beatitude? Whether the good Angels were created in ſupernatural Beatitude? Touching theſe momentous Theories they are not wanting in Altercations and Argumentations; but their Argumentations are ſo trifling, that they deſerve not a ſerious conſideration, and the reaſons which they alledge for this their Dogma, that the holy Angels have their ſupernatural Beatitude by Merit (which they maintain with great Conſent,) are ſo extremely weak and frivolous, that we will not ſtick to affirm the contrary, that the holy Angels have their ſupernatural Beatitude by Inheritance (as Sons and Heirs,) and we will conſider them as by Original Creation (o) τῶν ἁγίων ἀγγέλων τὴν μακαρίαν πληθὺν, the bleſſed multitude of holy Angels.

(n) Utrum Angeli ſint creati in gratia? Utrum mali Angeli fuerint in beatitudine patriæ creati? Utrum boni Angeli fuerint in beatitudine patriæ vel beatitudine ſupernaturali creati? Eugubin. de per. Phil. l. 8. c. 38. Aquin. 1a Qu. 62. Vaſqu. in Th. T. 2. Diſp. 226. Petav. T. 3. de Angl. l. 1. c. 16. Viv. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 12. c. 9.

(o) S. Cyr. Com. in Amos p. 345.

(6.) They are the vaſtly great and numerous Family, which as far exceedeth in number the infernal Family of evil Angels, as the numerous Subjects of a mighty Kingdom exceed the Malefactors in a Gaol. The holy Writers intend not to define their number, but only to ſay, that they are vaſtly numerous, when they mention more than twelve Legions of Angels, when the Pſalmiſt reckoneth Thouſands of Angels (in the Margin it is many Thouſands Pſal. 68. 17.) Thouſand thouſands miniſtring to God, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtanding before him; the number of the Angels about the Throne was ten thouſand times ten thouſand and thouſands of thouſands; Myriads of Angels, which our Tranſlation rendreth an innumerable company, Heb. 12. 22. (p) There are ten thouſand Myriads of Angels above (ſaith S. Chryſoſtom,) and ten hundred thouſand of Archangels, Thrones alſo and Dominions, Principalities and Powers, and infinite People of the incorporeal Virtues and Nations innumerable. It is not for Man or any finite Underſtanding to define their number, but ſome eſtimate may be made of their vaſt numeroſity from what Æneas Gazæus ſaith (q) μεςὸς δὲ ὁ αἰθὴρ ἀγγέλων, the Ether is full of Angels.

Matth. 26. 53.

Dan. 7. 10. Apoc. 5. 11.

(p) Μύριαι μυριάδες εἰσὶν ἀγγέλων ἄνω, ϗ χίλιαι χιλιάδες εἰσὶν ἀρχαγγέλων, ϗ θρόνοι ϗ κυριότητες ϗ ἀρχαὶ, ϗ ἐξουσίαι, ϗ ἄπειροι δῆμοι ἀσωμάτων δυνάμεων, ϗ φῦλα ἀμύθητα. S. Chryſoſt. T. 6. de Incomprehenſib. Hom. 2. p. 399.

(q) Ap. Petav. ſupr. c. 14.

(7.) They are the ſtable durable immortal and eternal Family. Their Flouriſhing knoweth no Fading, their Glory no Sullying, their Age no Wrinkles, their Pleaſure no Pain, their Treaſure no Moth nor Ruſt, nor Thief; their Eſtate is liable to no Diſſeiſure, their Inheritance to no Ejection by fraud or force, their Health knoweth no Sickneſs, their Life (the fulleſt height of Life) no death or dying, no withering or decaying. The Sons of the Reſurrection cannot die any more, for they are equal unto the Angels. Luc. 20. 36. Though ſome Branches of this Angelical Family are broken off and are now ſpiritually Dead (which ſheweth, that it was not always in a confirm'd State in Goodneſs,) yet the main of it continuing in good are now in a confirm'd State, and are as Mount Sion (a Figure of this ſupernal Family, Heb. 12. 22.) which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever. This is the Family that iſſu'd from Paternal Sanctity and is named of God the Father. Eph. 3. 15. Whence Epiſcopius (r) might have learn'd, that God is call'd the Father of Angels.

(r) Inſtit. Theol. l. 4. c. 33.

(8.) They are the Family into which all muſt be incorporated, that claim the Alliance of God's Children, and Pray in the Stile of the Lord's Prayer (which importeth a Family-alliance and Kindred) calling God Father. (s) That this Prayer belongeth to the faithful, both the Laws of the Church teach, and the beginning of the Prayer; for he that is not initiated, cannot call God Father. (t) Nor any that hath not remiſſion of Sins; the taking away the Puniſhment, Righteouſneſs, Sanctification, Redemption, Adoption, the Inheritance, Fraternity with the only begotten, and the holy Spirit. For he that hath not obtain'd all theſe Goods, cannot call God Father. (u) We teach this Prayer to thoſe that are initiated, not to thoſe that are not initiated, for none of them dareth to ſay Our Father. (w)

(s) S. Chryſoſt. Hom. in Matth. 18. p. 133. (t) Ibid. p. 137.

(u) Theodoret. heret. fab 5 c. 28.

(w) Homo novus, renatus & Deo ſuo per ejus gratiam reſtitutus, Pater primo in loco dicit, quia filius eſſe jam cœpit.——— Pater noſter, id eſt eorum qui credunt, eorum qui per eum ſanctificati & gratiæ ſpiritalis nativitate reparati, filii Dei eſſe cœperunt.——— Nec peccator populus poteſt eſſe filius (Dominus eos confundit & redarguit, dicens vos de Diabolo patre nati eſtis, omnis qui facit peccatum ſervus eſt peccati,) ſed quibus remiſſa peccatorum datur, eis filiorum nomen adſcribitur ———Quanta autem Domini indulgentia, quanta circa nos dignationis ejus & bonitatis ubertas, qui ſic nos voluerit orationem celebrare in conſpectu Dei, ut Deum Patrem vocemus, & ut eſt Chriſtus Dei Filius, ſic & nos Dei Filios nuncupemus. S. Cypr. de Orat. Domin. Felices qui Patrem agnoſcunt. Tertull. de Orat. Pater noſter utatur populus [illegible] Teſtamenti voce; populus novus ad æternitatem vocatus, Pater Noſter. S. Aug. Ser. 182. de Tempore.

VII. God's Original Creation according to our Fifth Notice thereof was Political (Theopolitical) as well as Phyſiological. For it was not meerly a producing into Exiſtence an Univerſe of Creatures and of Rationals (which is a Phyſiological Creation,) but it was the making a vaſtly great Polity, the Catholic Church, which is the City of God. (x) The word Creation ſometimes ſignifieth in a Phyſiological Senſe, ſometimes in a Political Senſe, and as the place requireth, it may be expounded in either Senſe or in both. (y) In Latine Authors ordinarily (as in Livy, Cæſar, Cicero,) Conſuls, Captains, Magiſtrates are ſaid to be created, and in Nobility-Learning (z) we read of Letters of Creation (a) and Creatio in Imperatorem. A meer political Ordination or Conſtitution (b) is called by the Apoſtle ἀνθρωπίνη κτίσις, an human Creation, and in good Authors a meer Political Syſtem is called κόσμος, which is a word that that uſually ſignifieth the whole Creation. (c) for in Thucydides, M. Antoninus and Heſychius, κόσμος ſignifieth a Conſtitution or Polity, and the Name is hugely accommodate thereto. (d) For it ſignifieth an orderly ornamental diſpoſition of parts conſtitutive of one whole or Syſtem. Such a Syſtem every Polity is, and ſuch is that great Polity and Theopolity the Univerſal Church, which was made by the Orginal Creation of God, as will appear from theſe following Coſiderations.

(x) Κτίσις ſignificationem habet & Phyſicam & Politicam, ac perinde ut locus requirit, exponi poteſt alterutro ſenſu vel utroque. D. H. Mor. Script. Philoſ. T. 2. p. 643.

(y) Voſſ. Theſ. p. 2.

(z) Seld. Titles p. 262, 289. (a) Ibid. p. 15. (b) Grot. Not. in 1 Pet. 2. 13.

(1.) God's Original Creation was analogous to the Creation of the Commonwealth of Iſrael, of which Political Creation Interpreters uſually expound thoſe many Texts of Scripture (e) which ſpeak of the Creation of old Iſrael. Iſa. 45. 11. Thus ſaith the Lord, the holy one of Iſrael and his Maker, ask of me things to come concerning my Sons (f) and concerning the Work of my Hands. Iſa. 43. 1. Thus ſaith the Lord (g) that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Iſrael. Malach. 2. 10. Have we not all one Father? (h) hath not one God created us? Iſa. 43. 15. I am the Lord, your holy One, (i) the Creator of Iſrael, your King. To underſtand theſe Texts of the Political Creation of Iſrael, is a faultleſs Interpretation: But wholly to confine them to this Interpretation (in which reſpect (k) Calvin exceedeth) is not faultleſs and unexceptionable. For the People of Iſrael did acknowledge God their Creator by a Common and Special, a Phyſiological and Political Creation. Pſal. 95. 6, 7. and 102. 18. Iſa. 17. 7. and 27. 11. So Calvin ſometimes interpreteth the Scripture. (l) Fictorem ſe vocat Eccleſiæ ſuæ, non tantum quòd eam ut reliquos homines crearit, ſed quia eam adoptare dignatos eſt in peculium. God calleth himſelf the Maker of his Church, not only becauſe he created it as the reſt of Men, but becauſe he adopted it, to be his peculiar. So by adopting a people (angelorum populum as S. Auſtin calleth them) God was the Maker of his Church in his Original Creation.

(2.) God's Original Creation was of the ſame general Nature with his other magnificent Creations and not leſs magnificent than they; therefore it was the making a Political (Theopolitical) World, as his creation of the Commonwealth of Iſrael was. For the ancient Hebrews not having any one word in their Language properly ſignifying the World (or Univerſal frame of created things) did uſually expreſs it by a Collection of the chief parts of it Heaven and Earth. By Heaven and Earth therefore in Scripture is underſtood the World or Univerſe, but not always the Phyſiological Univerſe, but the Creation of a Political World is ſometimes called the Creation of Heaven and Earth. (m) So the Creation of the Jewiſh Polity is called Iſa. 51. 15. I am the Lord thy God, that divided the Sea whoſe Waves roared, the Lord of Hoſts is my Name. And I have put my words in thy Mouth (given thee my Law) and have cover'd thee in the ſhadow of my Hand, that I might plant the Heavens, and lay the foundations of the Earth, and ſay unto Sion, thou art my People. That is to ſay, that I might make you a Political World or Univerſe (Theopolitical,) who were but ſcatter'd Perſons and Slaves in Egypt. So new Heavens and a new Earth, uſually ſignifie in Scripture a new Political World (Polity or Republick,) as Iſa. 65. 17. For behold I create new Heavens and a new Earth, and the former ſhall not be remembred, nor come into my mind. But be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create: For behold I create Jeruſalem a rejoicing and her People a joy. Iſa. 66. 22. As the new Heavens and the new Earth which I will make, ſhall remain before me, ſaith the Lord, ſo ſhall your Seed and your Name remain. Apoc. 21. 1. And I ſaw a new Heaven, and a new Earth. Which Propheſies are generally underſtood to Predict, novum Mundum, novum Orbem Politicum, a new Political World, and of this Notion is the new Creation. God's Original Creation therefore was of the ſame Nature and Notion, the making a Political (Theopolitical) World. Which we may alſo infer from the Sayings of ſome ancient Writers, (n) who look upon no Work ſo worthy of a God as the conſtituting a well ordinated Polity, nothing more pleaſing to God than Societies which are called Cities. If the Inſtitution of Polity is ſo acceptable to God, ſo God-becoming, it could not be neglected in his Original Creation. If he was not in that Creation Fundator Imperii, the Founder of a mighty Empire, his Creation was not duly Honourary; nor could it be a κόσμος (an orderly ornamental Syſtem) unleſs Society and Polity was founded by it. And it muſt be an holy kind of Polity, which he founded in this Creation; for he had nothing leſs in deſign, and this is that which is deſign'd in his new Creation. Creating is Building, Heb. 3. 4. God's Church is his Building. 1 Cor. 3. 9. Eph. 2. 21. It is a City whoſe Builder and Maker is God. Heb. 11. 10. therefore when he built all things, he muſt be ſuppos'd, to have built this Divine City (the only choice and infinitely valuable building) nor could he then neglect the building his own Houſe and Family, as the Church is called 1 Tim. 3. 15. Eph. 2. 19. He that generateth a Family, createth a Polity; for creating and generating are in a large ſenſe terms ſynonymous. As in Cicero. (o) Patria antiquior eſt parens, quàm is qui, ut ajunt, creaverit. So in Virgil. —— quem Nympha crearat. If the Divine Family was generated in God's Original Creation, an holy Polity was founded thereby, and God did thereby κτίζειν πόλιν, create or make a City, as the Greeks uſually ſpeak.

(3.) The Pagan Theologers ſuppoſe, that the Univerſe is by its Original Conſtitution one mundane City conſiſting of the Gods and Men, that all Rationals are parts of this one whole, Members of this great Body Politick (cognate Fellow-members) and Citizens of this great City. They ſuppoſe therefore, that the making

---

(c) Gat. not. in M. Ant. p. 183.

(d) Κόσμος non tantum ornamentum ſignificat, ſed diſpoſitionem ordinem, θέσιν καὶ τάξιν, cùm res ſuo quæque ordine ac loco ponitur. Heſychius. Κόσμος τάξις. Inde & pro ornamento, quod tunc ſolet eſſe, cùm res aptè ſuis in locis poſitæ ſint & collocatæ. Hinc διακοσμος & διακόσμησις diſpoſitio & ordinatio. Inde & μετακόσμησις eodem modo tranſpoſitio. —— eodem modo & Egyptiis cùm verbum χω poſitionem & ſitum ſignificet, pro mundo etiam uſurpatum eſt. Salmaſ. Not. in Epict. p. 168, 169.

(e) Epiſcop. Inſtit. Theol. l. 4. c. 33.

(f) Opus manuum ejus proprium Eccleſiæ Elogium. Calvin. in Iſa. 19. 25.

(g) Creationem & peculiarem formationem quando videlicet gentem illam ſibi in peculiarem populum in patribus elegit, commemorat. Forer. formans te, legibus & ſanctis inſtitutis. Tanquam vas in honorem, ut eſſes mihi in remp. fidelem. Menoch. Sim. Tirin.

(h) Creavit, i. e. formavit in populum, educendo patres noſtros ex Egypto. Sic vox ברא ſumitur. Pſal. 102. 19. Eſa. 43. 1. & 45. 8. Grot. Creavit, nempe ut eſſent ſacer populus & peculium Dei. Calvin.

(i) Nomen Creatoris non eſt referendum ad univerſalem creationem. Calvin.

(k) V. Com. ejus in Iſa. 17. 7.

(l) Iſa. 54. 5.

(m) Mr. Mede Clav. Apoc. de Sigill. 6.

(n) Ουθὲν ὅτω κοσμοπρεπὲς καὶ θεῶν ἄξιον ἔργον ἀνθρώποις πέπρακται, ὡς πόλιος εὐνομουμένας συναρμογά, καὶ νόμων καὶ πολιτείας διακόσμησις. Eurypham. Pythagor. Nihil eſt illi principi Deo qui omnem hunc mundum regit, quod quidem in terris fiat acceptius, quàm conſilia cœtuſque hominum jure ſociati, quæ civitates appellantur. Cic. in Somn. Scip.

(o) Voſſ. Theſ. p. 2. Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 1.

Πρὸς κοινωνίαν γεγοναμεν. M. Ant. l. 5. S. 16.

the World was the making a vaſtly great Polity and their Theopolity; that Rationals are made to live in Society, in God-ſociety, and to live ſocietively (in ſocietive Virtue and Practice,) doing the Duties and enjoying the Benefits of Society, which are innumerable and invaluable. Δεινότατον ἡ ἐρημία, Solitude is a ghaſtly horrendous thing (Archytas Tarentinus would not live in Heaven, if he was to live there alone,) there is no living but in Society, nor is there any living in Society without ſuch Order and Government, as is in Cities and Polities. The City of God therefore muſt neceſſarily be founded in his Original Creation; for Rationals muſt live in the State of Citizenſhip and Society with God and with one another as God's People. Their Obligations are innumerable and infinitely great, to live in the State of Society with God (their rightful Sovereign, their natural Leige-Lord and their God) as his Subjects and Servants. And as the firſt Duty of a Child (when he cometh to Diſcretion) is to acknowledge his Father, and the prime fundamental Duty of a Subject (of Right and by Obligation ſuch) is, to acknowledge his Sovereign, and to conſent to his Sovereignty and his own Subjection: So the prime fundamental Duty of all Rationals in Heaven and Earth is, to conſent to be God's People. (p) Primum officium juſtitiæ eſt, conjungi cum Deo: Secundum cum homine. The firſt Duty of Juſtice is, to have Conjunction with God (to be join'd unto the Lord, 1 Cor. 6. 17. Jer. 50. 5.) The ſecond with Man.

(4.) God's original Creation was a ſettlement of rights and dues, upon which Political Societies are Founded, whereby (by the bonds of right and due) they are held together, and without which there could be no Families, no Cities, no Kingdoms, no Juſtice, no Government. In a Family there muſt be a Settlement of Rights and Dues; the Father and the Maſter hath right to Govern, and it belongeth to the Children and Servants, to be ſubject and obey; he oweth unto them Protection and Maintenance, and they owe unto him Obedience and Service. A City is not a rude Multitude, a Chaos, or unformed Maſs, not a rout or herd of People, but a body Politick (like the body Natural, which hath the beauty of a Man, Iſa. 44. 13.) is a regular and comely Structure, conſiſting of Head and Members, (orderly united into one whole) by a ſettlement of Rights and Dues, which determineth, who ſhall be the Party Imperant and the Party Subject, what ſhall be due from us, and what ſhall be due to us. Such a Settlement of Rights and Dues is the Religion of the City of God (which conſiſts of a Duty and of a Benefit-part) which foundeth that holy Polity, wherein the Subjects and Citizens have the Right and Priviledge of Subjects and Citizens, and owe the Duty of Subjects and Citizens. Such a Settlement was neceſſarily made by God's Original Creation, whereby an Univerſe of Rationals was produc'd; for God's Production of ſuch an Univerſe and of his Univerſe was neceſſarily a making this Settlement of Rights and Dues, that he ſhould be to them a God, and they ſhould be to him a People. In this State and Relation all of them were created, and therefore by their Creation the City of God was conſtituted: Nor is it imaginable, that an Univerſe of Rationals could be created but out of the ſocietive Deſign and for the State of Society and Citizenſhip with God and with one another, upon which account (and many other) the Creation of an Univerſe of Slaves that have no Rights, is as impoſſible as undeſirable.

(5.) The Philoſophers look'd upon Heaven as a City (and the popular Pagans had the ſame Notion of it;) for the Stoicks ſay, (q) that Heaven is properly a City, but that theſe on Earth are not Cities; they are called ſuch, but are not. (r) Earth and Heaven are by a Platoniſt reſembled to thoſe two Cities, which Vulcan in Homer is ſaid to have graven in a Golden Buckler, whereof the one was joyous and triumphant, in the other were Wars and Seditions, Rapines and Fightings, ὀλόλυγαι καὶ οἰμωγαὶ καὶ ϛόνοι, Howlings, Lamentations and Groans. When the Soul leaveth the Body (s) ſuch a Soul is now called a Demon, an Ethereal Nurſling, tranſlated thither from the Earth as from amongſt the Barbarians to the Grecians, and as out of a City that is lawleſs, under Tyranny and Seditions, into another that hath good Laws and a juſt King and is a City of Peace. Agreeably to theſe Notions of Pagan Religioniſts Chriſtianity diſtinguiſheth and deſcribeth two oppoſite Cities (t) unam Cœleſtem alteram terrenam, the one Heavenly the other Terrene (which is but improperly a City,) theſe are Civitas Dei & Civitas hujus Mundi, the City of God and the City of this World. The City of God is called Mount Sion the ſupernal Jeruſalem. Heb. 12. 22. (u) ἡ ἐκκλησία, ἡ ὑψουμένη, ἡ ὑπερνεφὴς, ἡ ἁπτομένη οὐρανῶν, τὸ ἅγιον ὄρος, the Church on high, above the Clouds, that toucheth the Heavens, the holy Mount, (w) οὐράνιος ἐκκλησία, the Heavenly Church, (x) ἡ ἀνωτάτω ἐκκλησία, the Church in the higheſt place (y) ἡ μὴ βλεπομένη νοουμένη δὲ πόλις, the City that is not viſible, but intelligible (z) Civitas æterna, ubi nullus oritur quia nullus moritur, the eternal City, in which none is born, becauſe none dieth. Heaven is repreſented as a City by our Saviour, when he telleth his Diſciples, that their Names are written in Heaven. Luc. 10. 20. For the Phraſe relateth to the cuſtom of well order'd Cities, which kept Rolls or Regiſters of the Citizens or Freemen (as diſtinct from the ſervile ſort of People,) every one who had jus Civitatis, the Right of a Freeman, had his Name enroll'd. So the Book of Life is (as it were) Heaven's Regiſter, thoſe that have their Names written therein, are naturaliz'd, endeniz'd, infranchis'd, and made Free-men of the heavenly Corporation, they are enroll'd Citizens of Heaven, are Heirs of Heaven and for them eternal Life is deſign'd. The Scripture repreſenteth the Book of Life as Heaven's Regiſter (the Regiſter of the holy City, Heb. 12. 23.) for to blot any ones Name out of the Book of Life, is to disfranchiſe him, and turn him out of Citizenſhip. Apoc. 22. 19. On the contrary, to have his Name written therein, is to be enroll'd a Citizen, as S. Chryſoſtom ſaith of ſome, that were converted to the Faith and baptiz'd, that they were that day πολιτογραφηθέντες, written Citizens of the Jeruſalem above. So a late Writer ſaith of ſome, (a) being imbu'd with the Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion and baptiz'd, of Strangers, Servants of Devils and Slaves of Men, they preſently became Fellow-citizens with An-

(p) Lactant. l. 6. c. 10.

Cœtus hominum jure ſociati. Cic.

(q) Clem. Str. l. 4. in fine.

(r) M. Tyr. d. 27.

(s) Καλεῖται ἡ τοιαύτη ψυχὴ δαίμων ἤδη, θρέμμα αἰθέριον, μετοικισθὲν ἐκ γῆς ἐκεῖ, ὥσπερ ἐκ βαρβάρων εἰς Ἕλληνας, καὶ ἐξ ἀνόμου καὶ τυραννουμένης καὶ ϛασιαϛικῆς πόλεως, εἰς εὐνομουμένην καὶ βασιλευομένην καὶ εἰρηνικὴν πόλιν. M. Tyr. Ibid.

(t) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 14. c. 15. & l. 15. c. 2.

(u) Clem. προλεγτ. p. m. 55.

(w) Idem Pædag. l. 2. c. 1.

(x) Idem. Str. l. 5. p. 481.

(y) Gr. Naz. or. 11 p. 179.

(z) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 5. c. 16.

(a) Myſteriis Chriſtianæ Religionis imbuti, & cæleſti lavacro expiati, è peregrinis dæmonum ſervis, hominumque mancipiis, Angelorum Cives, & Domeſtici Dei repente evadebant. Maffeius Indic. l. 1. p.

gels and Gods Domeſticks. Eph. 2. 19. The regenerate and divine Family muſt be look'd upon as (b) οὐρανοπολῖται, Heaven's Citizens; for as the Romans did donare Civitate, give the Right of Citizenſhip to many, who had not Domicilium in Urbe, and theſe were called Municipes, that had Right to bear Offices in the Commonwealth and the Freedom of Citizens, yet liv'd in the Provinces: So many that are in the State of Peregrination here on Earth, yet have the Freedom of Citizens of Heaven, which is Sanctorum Metropolis, the Mother-City of all Saints. Gal. 4. 26. Heb. 12. 22. The heavenly City therefore (Civitas Sancta Dei) admitteth of different acceptations. For in the large acceptation it comprehendeth all Saints, thoſe that are here on Earth as well as thoſe that are in ſuperna Patria, their ſupernal Country. In the ſtricter acceptation it denoteth only thoſe Saints, that have Domicilium in Urbe and are in the heavenly State of Life. In the ſtricteſt acceptation it denoteth only thoſe Saints, that were originally in the heavenly State of Life, and never were in a State of Peregrination. If the heavenly City be taken in any of theſe various Senſes, it is Theopolitical, (c) Civitas Regis magni, the City of the great King (the Church;) and if it be taken in the ſtricteſt Senſe, it muſt be ſuppos'd, that God was by original Creation (d) ſupernæ Hieruſalem fabricator atque regnator, the Maker of the ſupernal Jeruſalem and the imperial Eſtate thereof. Cœleſtis & ſempiternæ conditor Civitatis, the Builder of the heavenly and eternal City, as S. Auſtin celebrateth the Divine Majeſty. (e) Deus eſt qui condidit Civitatem. Pulchra & decora Civitas quàm pulchriorem habet conditorem!

VIII. God's Original Creation (according to our Sixth Notice thereof) founded the Original Kingdom of God, which is an uſeful Name of the City or Church of God. For

(1.) The Name of the Kingdom of God importeth, that his Divine City muſt be conſider'd as the Polity, which God is of as the true and proper intrinſic Imperial Eſtate and Regent Party thereof, whence it is denominated his Kingdom. God was not the true and proper, but a typical and adumbrative imperial Eſtate of the carnal Judaical Polity, their Theocracy was adumbrative only of the true and proper Theocracy, whence (f) the Kingdom of Heaven (the Kingdom of God) is not nam'd in the Old Teſtament. In the New Teſtament the Name is frequent, and God is there repreſented as the true and proper intrinſic imperial Head of a Polity, but of no other Polity ſave only his holy Catholic Church the Communion of Saints. The Head of every (Chriſtian) Man is Chriſt, and the Head of the Woman is the Man, and the Head of Chriſt is God. 1 Cor. 11. 3. and ch. 3. 23. As the Church is (g) Societas Sanctorum, the Society of the Saints (the holy People or the People of God,) ſo her King peculiarly is (h) Sanctus Sanctorum, the Holy of Holies, and his Kingdom is definitively (i) Reſpublica Sanctorum, the Commonwealth of the Saints, which is alſo a true and genuin definition of the Church. (k) Civitas magni Regis non eſt niſi Eccleſia. Hæc domus Dei, hoc Templum Dei, hoc Regnum Dei, regnumque Cælorum. It is the Church only, that is the City of the great King. This is the Houſe of God, this is the Temple of God, this is the Kingdom of God, and the Kingdom of Heaven. (l) Dei Eccleſia, nonne Dei eſt Regnum, Patrimonium, Deliciæque omnes? God's Church is it not his Kingdom, Patrimony, and all his Delights? Such is the State of things by the new Creation of Chriſtianity; from whence (and from the Nature of things) it appeareth, that God by his Original Creation was the true and proper intrinſic imperial Eſtate of the City of God; that when the Original City of God was founded, the Original Kingdom of God was founded; that theſe were then commenſurate and ſo they will be for ever.

(2.) The Name of the Kingdom of God denoteth the Unity of the Church or City of God; that as there can be but one Kingdom of God at one and the ſame time, ſo the Church of God on Earth and that in Heaven are one Body Politic, one Family, one City, one Church, one holy Empire. The Unity of the Church is the Unity of a Body Politic (an animated Body Politic,) the many Members of it are one (m) propter unitatem corporis, becauſe they are united into one Body. The Unity of the Church therefore may be clearly underſtood from the Pagan Theologers Notion of the Unity of the Univerſe of Rationals, which they ſuppos'd to be (n) one great City, one κόσμος, ordinate Syſtem, one animated whole and great Body, and that all individuals were τὰ μέρη τοῦ ὅλου, the parts of this great whole, τὰ μέλη τοῦ σώματος, membra corporis magni, mundi totius Cives, Citizens of this great City (the World,) all nearly ally'd, conjoin'd and link'd together into one City and one Body as Fellow-citizens and Fellow-members. In which account of the Univerſe of Rationals, if the Pagan Theologers had not been miſtaken in their Whole or Catholic Syſtem, their Theology had been unexceptionable; for the account which the Scripture-Theology giveth of the Univerſe of holy Rationals, perfectly correſpondeth to their account of the Univerſe of common Rationals, and is an exact Paralleliſm thereto. From whence it followeth, that the City and Church of God which the Chriſtian Theology contemplateth and treateth of, is not to be confin'd to the holy Rationals of our diminutive Syſtem (this Mole hill of the Earth,) that they extremely miſrepreſent it, who upon frivolous and trifling Reaſons diſpute (o) that the holy Angels are not parts of the Church (p) that Theology is to be defin'd the Doctrine of the Kingdom of God over Men, which pretendeth not to give an account of God's univerſal Kingdom. This mutilate and diminutive Mode of Theologizing bewrayeth a great narrowneſs of Mind and Thought, bereaveth Theology of a moſt noble and principal part, ſpoileth the Rational Frame and Contexture of it, bereaveth the City of God of far the greateſt and nobleſt part of it ſelf (the Metropolis,) it claſheth with the definitive Notion of the City of God (which is Civitas Cœleſtis) and with the definitive Notion of the Church in the large acceptation (which is omnium Sanctorum Congregatio, (q) Eccleſia Univerſa in Cœlo & Terra, Eccleſia Angelorum & noſtra) it manifeſtly claſheth with the New Teſtaments Senſe and Notion of things, and with the Senſe and Notion of the Fathers (who look upon the Angels as part of the Church (the object of Theology) although the Theology of them is imperfect in our imperfect State. (r) This Angelical Church will then be known to us, as it is, when we are conjoin'd therewith, to poſſeſs together eternal Beatitude. That which is in Peregrination on

(b) Iſidor. Peluſ. l. 2. Ep. 251.

(c) S. Hieron. T. 7. in Pſal. 47.

(d) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 15. c. 20.

(e) Idem Enar. in Pſal. 64.

(f) S. Aug. c. Fauſt. l. 15. in fine.

(g) Idem Ep. 23.

(h) Idem de prædeſt. Sanct. c. 15

(i) Bucer in Matth. 5. 19.

(k) S. Aug. de unit. Eccl. c 24. & in Johann. Tract. 68.

() Acontii Strateg. p. 162.

Rom. 12. 4, 5. 1. Cor. 12. 12, 13, 20. Eph. 4. 4.

(m) S. Aug. Enar. in Pſal. 102. Conc. 1.

(n) Gat. Not. in Ant. p. 264, 113.

(o) Curcell. Tr. de Eccleſ. c. 1. Bp. Pearſon on the Creed Art. 1.

(p) Mr. Baxter Meth. Theol. Par. 1. c. 1.

(q) S. Aug. Ench. ad Laurent. c. 56.

(r) Hæc quæ ex Sanctis Angelis & virtutibus Dei eſt Eccleſia, tunc nobis, ſicuti eſt, innoteſcet, cùm ei conjuncti fuerimus in unum ad ſimul habendam beatitudinem ſempiternam.

on Earth, is therefore more known to us, becauſe we are in it, and becauſe it conſiſteth of Men, which we are. Theology therefore conſidereth the Church as Angelical and as Humane, and giveth a much larger account of it as Humane than as Angelical; but it ſuppoſeth this Angelical-humane Church, to be one Divine Family, Eph. 3. 15. one Houſhold of God and Society of Saints, Eph. 2. 19. One holy Polity and Kingdom of Saints, Eph. 1. 10. Apoc. 15. 3. One City of God and therefore one Church conſiſting of Men and Angels, Heb. 12. 22, 23. (s) For we are together with them one City of God, to which it is ſaid in the Pſalm, glorious things are ſpoken of thee, O City of God; part of which in us ſojourneth, part in them ſuccoureth. They deſtroy the Unity of the Church therefore, that diſpute the holy Angels out of the Church; for thus they divide the one Kingdom of God into two Kingdoms. (t) As when two Kingdoms before inimical are ſubjected to the Rule of one Prince, and therefore are reconciled and made amical, this doth not infer, that they piece together into one Kingdom. So theſe Diſputants ſuppoſe, that although holy Men and Angels are both ſubjected unto Chriſt, yet they are not aſſociated into one City and Kingdom, nor into one Houſhold of God: Sed Chriſtus duas domos habet, but Chriſt hath two Houſes, one Celeſtial the other Terreſtrial, whoſe Laws and Government are very much different. No doubt the Laws and Government of the Church on Earth are in ſome ſort different from thoſe of the Holy Angels: So the Pagan Theologers underſtood very well, that there is a great diverſity between Heaven and Earth. But they did not ſuppoſe, that the Laws and Government of this World were ſo different from thoſe of Heaven, as that Heaven and this World were not incorporated into one City and Kingdom; for they affirm, that there is one Law of the Univerſe of Rationals and one King of Gods and Men. So the Chriſtian Theology doth not ſuppoſe, that there is ſuch a difference between the Laws and Government of the Church on Earth and thoſe of the Holy Angels, as that they are not incorporated into one City and Kingdom; for it ſuppoſeth, that the Law of both is for the main the ſame, that there is but one King of both without any ſubordinate Head of Government; and therefore they are one City and Kingdom. They that affirm the contrary, and diſpute the Holy Angels out of the Chriſtian Church, muſt ſuppoſe vaſt and numerous Abſurdities: That Regenerate Chriſtians are not Citizens of Heaven, nor of the Jeruſalem above, nor are their Names written in Heaven, nor are they Fellow-citizens and Fellow-ſubjects with all Saints but with ſome Saints only; that this one Name, The City or Kingdom of God doth not ſignifie one City or one Kingdom, but two Cities and Kingdoms; that Men may be of one Kingdom of God and not of another, in the Kingdom of God and not in the Kingdom of God at the ſame time; out of the Kingdom of God, yet not of the World or of the Kingdom of Satan; that there are two different Covenants or Settlements of God's Kingdom both in full force at the ſame time, two ſaving Religions, two Empires of Saints aliens and exoticks to each other, of both which God is the Imperial Eſtate; that there are two Kingdoms of Light and Grace, two Books of Life, two Spiritual Temples (two Houſes,) two holy Lives (and conſequently two holy Spirits,) that the Divine Family is not one whole Family (contrary to Eph. 3. 15.) and that the City and Kingdom of God is not one whole, of which all Saints are Parts and Fellow-members, wherein the Unity of the Church conſiſteth.

(3.) The Name of the Kingdom of God denoteth the Amplitude of the Church (for without due Amplitude, Grandure and Magnificence there can be no Kingdom,) which principally conſiſteth in the vaſt and immenſe Numeroſity of the Holy Angels. (u) An indefinite and a definite number of the Supernal Citizens is expreſs'd in Scripture, to ſhew, that they who are to God numerable, are unto Men innumerable. The Church on Earth is hugely diſproportionate to the Heavenly Jeruſalem, and at her riſe was of ſlender Dimenſions; but a Kingdom was then initially founded (though not plenarily formed,) and now ſhe wanteth not the Amplitude requiſite for a Kingdom; although her Dimenſions are ſtill too narrow by much, to anſwer the gracious Deſigns of God and the Needs of Men; and Cælius Secundus Curio had no very inviting Subject to write upon, when he wrote de Amplitudine regni Dei, of the Amplitude of the Kingdom of God.

(4.) The Name of the Kingdom of God denoteth the Holineſs of the Church or City of God; that it muſt be conſider'd as the Kingdom of God and his Saints, the Kingdom or Imperial comprehenſion of Sanctity (of the Learning of it, of the Law of it, of the State and Life of it, the Government of it, the Goods of it, the Duties and Benefits of it) and as the God-kind or Saint of God-kind of Kingdom. (w) This City of God is as a Land and Region of the Sanctiſy'd, (x) the Houſe and City of the moſt holy God, (y) the Sacred and Divine Sheepfold. The Celeſtial City and Kingdom is neceſſarily the Holy City (Hieruſalem Sancta) and to her King the ancient definition of a Kingdom cited and approv'd by S. Baſil peculiarly belongeth. (z) Some have defin'd a Kingdom to be a legitimate Prefecture or Rule over all not abnoxious to ſin. As the holy King is worthy of the Name of a King, ſo the Heavenly Jeruſalem is worthy of the Name of a City; (a) for ſome define a City to be a Syſtem ſettled and eſtabliſhed, adminiſtred according to Law: Which definition of a City agreeth to the Jeruſalem above, the Heavenly City; for there is the Syſtem of the Firſt-born, of thoſe that are written in Heaven; and this Syſtem is ſettled and eſtabliſhed becauſe of the immutable Life of the Saints; and it is govern'd according to the Law of Heaven.

(5.) The Name of the Kingdom of God (being the ſame with the Kingdom of Heaven) denoteth the Heavenlineſs of the Church and City of God; that as her Original and her Seat is in Heaven, ſo ſhe is of kind and quality and in all reſpects Divine and Heavenly, extremely diſſonant Iſta verò quæ ab illa peregrinatur in terris, eo nobis nobis notior eſt, quod in illa ſumus, & quia hominum eſt, quod & nos ſumus. S. Aug. ibid. c. 61.

(s) Cum ipſis enim ſumus una Civitas Dei, cui dicitur in Pſalmo, glorioſa dicta ſunt de te Civitas Dei: cujus pars in nobis peregrinatur, pars in illis opitulatur. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 10. c. 7.

(t) Curcell. ſupr.

(u) Supernorum Civium numerus infinitus & definitus exprimitur: ut qui Deo eſt numerabilis eſſe hominibus innumerabilis demonſtretur. Gregor. expoſ. in Job c. 25. l. 17. c. 7.

(w) Αὐτὴ δ' ἂν εἴη ἡ τοῦ Θεοῦ πόλις γῆ τις ὥσπερ ἐστὶ καὶ χώρα τῶν ἡγιασμένων. S. Cyr. com. in Mich. T. 3. p. 438.

(x) Οἶκος καὶ πόλις τοῦ παναγίου Θεοῦ. Ibid. p. 360.

(y) Ἱερὰ καὶ θεία αὐλή. Ibid. p. 124.

(z) Ὡρίσαντο δέ τινες βασιλείαν τὴν ἔννομον ἐπιστασίαν· τὴν ἐπὶ πᾶσιν ἀρχὴν ἀνυπεύθυνον ἁμαρτίᾳ. Homil. in Pſal. [illegible]

(a) Ὁρίζονται γάρ τινες πόλιν εἶναι σύστημα ἱδρυμένον, κατὰ νόμον διοικούμενον. ἐφαρμόζει δὲ καὶ τῇ ἄνω Ἱερουσαλὴμ τῇ ἐπουρανίῳ πόλει ὁ ἀποδοθεὶς ὅρος τῆς πόλεως. σύστημα γὰρ κἀκεῖ τῶν πρωτοτόκων, τῶν ἀπογεγραμμένων ἐν οὐρανοῖς· καὶ ἱδρυμένον τοῦτο, διὰ τὸ ἀμετακίνητον τῆς διαγωγῆς τῶν ἁγίων, καὶ κατὰ νόμον τὸν οὐράνιον διοικούμενον. Idem. Hom. in Pſal. 45.

nant from and tranſcendent to Mundane Cities and Kingdoms, wherein there is nothing higher or better than the Humane and Mundane kind of Goods and Excellencies. (b) That City in which we are promis'd to reign, is as far diſtant from this Mundane City, as Heaven is from Earth, Life Eternal from Temporary Joy, ſolid Glory from vain Praiſes, the Society of Angels from the Society of Mortals, and from the Light of the Sun and Moon his Light who made the Sun and Moon. But the Attribute Heavenly is not appropriate to the Church which is in Heaven; (c) for the (genuine) Church on Earth is an Image and Reſemblance of that which is in Heaven. One of the ancient Writers ſaith, ἐκκλησία ἐστὶν οὐρανὸς ἐπίγειος, the Church is an Heaven upon Earth; which is of great conſideration to her Governours, to excite them, to take care of her Purity; and to her Members, to deter them from defiling her Sanctity; (d) for the City of God is the Church. He ſinneth againſt Heaven, that contaminateth the Heavenly City, and violateth the Sanctity of this immaculate Body by the filth of his Vices.

(6.) The Name of the Kingdom of God denoteth, that the Church conſtituteth it, as it is the Kingdom of God perſonal; and is conſtituted by it, as it is the Kingdom of God real. The Kingdom of God is of various acceptations (which muſt be conſider'd hereafter,) we will here only obſerve, that it ſometimes ſignifieth in the perſonal acceptation That holy Polity which conſiſteth of God and his People, and ſo it ſignifieth the Church, and the Church conſtituteth it; for the holy People conſtitute it as the Subject-party thereof, Apoc. 15. 3. But the Kingdom of God ſignifieth alſo in the real acceptation, and muſt be conſider'd as it is the Kingdom of the real ſaving Goods, namely, of ſaving Grace and of Glory, of the State and Life of Sanctity and of Salvation, in which ſenſe we are commanded, to ſeek the Kingdom of God in the firſt place; and in this Senſe the Church is conſtituted by it; for it is by theſe ſaving Goods of the Kingdom that the Saints of God are conſtituted ſuch. In this Senſe the Kingdom of God (e) is the Kingdom of Righteouſneſs, the Kingdom of the Spirit and of ſolid Piety; for there is in it an heavenly and incomparably ſupra-terrene Power, whereby we are ſet at liberty from Sin and Death, enjoy Eternal Peace and an affluence of all Goods. In this Senſe this holy kind of Kingdom is not only a Kingdom to God (whoſe Laws and Government take place in it,) but to all its Citizens alſo it is a Kingdom (their Kingdom,) this height of Good accrueth to them (f) τὸ φυῆναι βασιλέας, to be made Kings; for it is to them the height of Honour and Happineſs, they are of reigning condition, of regial and unſervile condition, of royal and illuſtrious quality and condition in it; whence they are juſtly reputed a ſort of Kings, which the magnificent Names of a Kingdom, a Crown and Throne denote and ſignifie; regnare eos dicimus, qui bonis omnibus affluunt & beati ſunt, 1 Cor. 4. 8. We ſay, that they reign, who live in beatitude and affluence of all Goods, in Safety, Plenty and Proſperity (not in Beggary and Slavery and the Inconveniences of a mean Condition) not ſubjugated and held at an under in a weak and languiſhing Condition, but in high, magnificent and puiſſant Eſtate: So Grace reigneth, Righteouſneſs reigneth, Peace reigneth in God's Kingdom, and the Citizens of it reign in Life Eternal, which is a Kingdom-eſtate. (g) Nihil aliud eſt regnum quàm vita æterna. (h) This therefore is the Kingdom of God: Where Sin is vanquiſh'd, Death is deſtroy'd, the Enemy reigneth not; for Death reigned from Adam to Moſes; and the Apoſtle ſaith, Sin doth not now reign in you, the Kingdom of Sin being deſtroy'd, and we our ſelves being now Kings, the adverſe Kingdom being taken away, this Kingdom of God ſhall be, when all the Stings of our Vices being waſted, the blemiſh of Bodily Infirmity ſhall be ſwallow'd up.

In the whole computation of things the Kingdom of God appeareth to be no underling and undergraduate good, nor hath it any match, compeer or coequal, it ſtandeth ſingular and alone as the higheſt ſoveraign good, the boundleſs and immenſurable good (or rather abyſs of goods) the Height of Good to the fulleſt Height of Ennoblement; for as a Kingdom ſignifieth the Height of Good, (i) τὸ κάλλιστον τῶν ὄντων, it is of Pulchritude above all things (Lactantius miſtaketh (k) in diſputing, that a Kingdom is not the Supreme Good:) So in the Chriſtian Theology the height of Good (the chief Good and the comprehenſion of the chief Goods) is known by the Name of the Kingdom of God. (l) It anſwereth to the Elogies of Virtue in the School of the Stoicks, who ſtil'd it Summum bonum, Unicum bonum, ἓν τοῦτο πολλοῦ ἄξιον (this one thing that is of any great regard,) ineſtimabile bonum, ſibi ſufficiens, regnum, beata vita, εὔρους καὶ θεουδὴς βίος, the Proſperous and Divine Life, and (m) ἅπας ὁ ὑπὲρ γῆς καὶ ὑπὸ γῆς χρυσὸς οὐκ ἀντάξιος ἀρετῆς κατὰ Πλάτωνα, according to Plato all the Gold above the Earth and under the Earth is not comparable to Virtue. A Man muſt ſtick at nothing (no Loſſes, Labours, Prayers or Sufferings,) count nothing too much, nothing too good for the purchaſe of ſo tranſcendent a Good; he muſt gain it at any rate, part with it at no rate, but part with All that he hath, to buy it * (Tanti tibi valet quantum habere poteris,) all the common external Goods and humane Excellencies muſt be counted but as Traſh and Riff-raff Stuff in compariſon of it, whatever Fleſh and Blood admireth and doateth upon, this Mortal Life and all its Intereſts, this whole World and all its Accommodations muſt be depreciated, diſaffected, forſaken and caſt away (ſo far as they come in competition with it) for the Kingdom of God's ſake, which cannot be bought too dear; for if God is the abſolutely perfect Good, his Kingdom can be no leſs than ſo, which is the enjoyment of God to the Citizens thereof, to whom he is all friendly Relations, and to whom in his Teſtament he bequeatheth his whole Eſtate; all things are theirs ſo far as to be ſubſervient to their welfare; they are ſav'd from their deadly ghoſtly Enemies, exempted from the true and great Evils, entitled to (and initially at leaſt poſſeſs'd of)

(b) Illa Civitas in qua nobis regnare promiſſum eſt, tantum ab hac diſtat, quantum diſtat cœlum à terra, à temporaria lætitia vita æterna, ab inanibus gaudiis ſolida gloria, à ſocietate mortalium ſocietas angelorum, à lumine ſolis & lunæ lumen ejus qui fecit ſolem & lunam. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 5. c. 17.

(c) Εἰκὼν τῆς οὐρανίου ἐκκλησίας ἡ ἐπίγειος. Clem. Str. l. 4. p. m. 354.

(d) Civitas Dei Eccleſia eſt. peccat in cœlum, qui cœleſtis civitatis jura contaminat, & immaculati corporis violat ſanctitatem ſuorum colluvione vitiorum. S. Ambroſ. in Pſal. 118. Ser. 15.

Matth. 6. 33.

(e) Regnum eſt juſtitiæ, regnum ſpiritus atque ſolidæ pietatis —— Viget enim in eo cœleſtis & omni terrenæ incomparabiliter præſtans potentia, qua nimirum à peccato & morte vindicamur, æternâque pace ac omnium bonorum affluentiâ fruimur. Bucer. in Matth. 3. 2.

(f) Clem. Str. l. 6. p. m. 496.

1 Pet. 2. 9. Jam. 1. 12. and 2. 5. 2 Tim. 2. 12. Apoc. 1. 6. 3, 21. 20. 4, 6. Rom. 5. 17.

(g) S. Aug. de verb. Apoſt. Ser. 14.

(h) Hoc itaque regnum Dei eſt: ubi peccatum vincitur, ubi mors perimitur, ubi non regnat hoſtis. Mors enim regnavit ab Adam uſque ad Moyſem. & Apoſtolus ait: jam non regnat peccatum in vobis. per hoc regnum Dei regno peccati diſſoluto, ipſiſque jam nobis regibus, regno adverſante ſublato, hoc erit regnum Dei, cùm omnibus vitiorum noſtrorum aculeis contuſis, labes erit corporeæ mortalitatis abſorpta. S. Hilar. in Pſal. 2.

(i) Iſocrat. Evagor.

(k) L. 3. c. 11.

(l) Matth. 13. 43. and 19. 24. and 26. 19. Mark 9. 47. and 10. 15, 53. and 14. 25. Luk. 12. 28, 29. and 14. 15. and 22. 16. Act. 14. 22. 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. and 15. 50. Gal. 5. 21. Eph. 5. 5. 2 Theſſ. 1. 5. 2 Pet. 1. 11.

(m) Plut. de cap. ex In. util. p. 92.

* S. Aug. in Pſ. 102. Matth. 13. 44, 46. Mark 9. 47. Luc. 14. 26, 32.

Ἀκρότης τῶ καλῶ. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 6. p. 305.

of,) the true and great Goods, the State of Bleſſedneſs, the Life of Bleſſedneſs, the Inheritance of Bleſſedneſs, and the Society of the Bleſſed: They have right to all the Heavenly Royal Goods (the Goods of the Kingdom,) ſhall be ſtated and habited as the Sons of God, cloath'd with their Royal Apparel, and their Manſion ſhall be Divine and truly Royal, the ſame with that of the Holy Angels the Original Citizens of the Original Kingdom of God.

IX. The Original Kingdom of God is contradiſtinguiſh'd to the new Kingdom of God (the Kingdom of God that now is, which is of a new Foundation and Creation;) for as Plato in his Politicus diſtinguiſheth διττὰς κατακοσμήσεις, two Eſtates of the World, the one under Saturn, the other under Jupiter: So Theology muſt conſider a twofold Eſtate of God's Kingdom, the one under God as meer Creator, the other under God-Redeemer (or new Creator,) and the former of theſe muſt be called The Original Kingdom of God. A King, ſaith a Philoſopher, (n) is δημιουργὸς, the maker of his Kingdom: Such was God of his Original Kingdom, in which there was no Mediatory Saviour-King, no Expiation of Sin, no Settlement of the State of Remiſſion of Sins, no Diſpenſation of Sanctifying Grace, to make the dead alive, and to heal and cleanſe vitiated Nature; for (whatever there is now) when this Kingdom was founded, there was no poſitivity of Sin. Then there were no lapſed Rationals, and therefore this Church was truly and fully Catholic, as compriſing the whole Univerſe of Rationals. Then there were no Saints but Saints native; for as the Citizens of the Jews Commonwealth were diſtinguiſh'd into Jews native (who were Jews born) and Jews factive (which were Gentiles born, but ingraffed and incorporated into the Jews Commonwealth:) So the Citizens of the Kingdom of God muſt be diſtinguiſh'd into Saints Native and Factive: The former are Citizens of the Kingdom of God, that were never Aliens; the latter are Aliens naturaliz'd and endeniz'd. But of this latter ſort of Saints there were none in being, when the Original Kingdom of God was founded (then it conſiſted only of holy Souls natively and originally ſuch,) nor is it poſſible, that any of that ſort of Saints ſhould be afterwards introduc'd into it; for Saints Factive cannot be of Original Creation, but are neceſſarily of New Creation, and therefore cannot belong to the Kingdom of God, as it was of Original Creation. In this Original Kingdom there was no Law or Settlement, which maketh Saints Factive: On the contrary, the Law-Settlement of this Kingdom ſo far obſtructeth the making Saints Factive, that it excludeth from Citizenſhip lapſed Sinners (improbous ungodly Sinners,) and is the Settlement of their Condemnation, ſo as not to be the Settlement of their Liberation, as the Goſpel Settlement is. It is Law ſo as not to be Saving Grace the Settlement and Diſpenſation thereof. But it is the Settlement of the holy ſpiritual and divine Moral Law; for ſuch a Law muſt neceſſarily be in the Original Kingdom of God (the Law of unſinning Sanctity) with the Sanction thereof by Rewards and Puniſhments. As the Law of Chriſt is the Law of his Sovereignty, Government and Kingdom; ſo the Law of God is the Law which his Sovereignty and Government is. It is his Law, as he is the Imperial Eſtate of his Original Kingdom of Sanctity Imperial. And as the Chriſtian Sovereignty cannot but be the Chriſtian Law; ſo the Divine Sovereignty cannot but be the Divine Law to the Univerſe of Rationals. It is the Law of the Divine Juſtice in Sovereignty and Government, which cannot but require of the Subject-party unſinning Righteouſneſs, and alſo neceſſarily ſettleth upon them ſuch premiant and penal Goods and Evils as are right and due. The Divine Juſtice in Sovereignty and Government is in it ſelf (virtually and implicitly) the Settlement of Righteouſneſs and of Life upon them that fulfil the Law; and to Rebel-ſinners it is the Settlement of Condemnation, to deadly Sinners the Settlement of Death. This Settlement of things (of Soul-intereſts) muſt be in Juſtice, and things in Juſtice cannot be otherwiſe. So that Divine Juſtice (without Evangelical Grace) in Sovereignty and Government is the Settlement of the Original Law (the Law of the Original Kingdom of God) the Law-ſettlement of things. And as the Goſpel muſt be defin'd The Religion of Saving Grace (of Evangelical Grace) ſuch a Religion of Soul-Intereſts: So the Original Law muſt be defin'd The Religion of Law-juſtice (of Legal Juſtice) ſuch a Religion of Soul-intereſts. That this is a true definitive Notion of it will appear from theſe following Conſiderations.

(1.) From the Condition of Righteouſneſs and of Life, which it requireth. For the holy Spiritual Law muſt neceſſarily be the Law of the holy Spiritual Life, which the Apoſtle calleth the Righteouſneſs of the Law, because the Law requireth it. Rom. 8. 4. It condemneth therefore all ungodly Sinners, that are of the carnal kind and party, Aliens from the holy Spiritual Life, whoſe carnal mind is not ſubject to the Law of God, nor indeed can be. Rom. 8. 7. and 7. 14. All Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs it requireth in Sinleſs Perfection; for the holy Law is the perfect Rule of Righteouſneſs, that forbiddeth all Vice and Sin, commandeth all Virtue and Duty (alloweth no failure of it in any degree,) Sin is therefore Sin, because it is a violation of the Holy Law. Rom 4. 15. and 5. 13. 1 Joh. 3. 4. And this ſtrictneſs of Obligation is not any extraordinary Severity in it; for no Law alloweth Men to ſin againſt its own Precepts, the Law of Grace neceſſarily requireth perfect, exact, unſinning Obedience (and is a perfect Rule of Righteouſneſs,) but this is not the condition of it, as it is a Covenant, and containeth the terms of our acceptance with God: whereas the Original Law as it is a perfect rule of Righteouſneſs in the utmoſt extremity and rigour of it is ſuppos'd to be the Condition of Life and Salvation. The Condition of the firſt Covenant is ſaid to be (o) no leſs than a perfect, exact, unſinning Obedience, the never offending in any one point: The Obedience was to be ſo perfect, that there was no Mercy upon the leaſt tranſgreſſion; but the Offender became immediately liable to the threatned Puniſhment. (p) It is ſuppos'd, that no Sin is venial, but all is mortal according to this Covenant (or Settlement,) and that it doth not admit of any Repentance (total or partial,) but is ſo wonderfully ſtrict and ſevere (as one ſpeaketh,) that the Favour of God and all Bleſſings are unavoidably loſt, and all the contrary Penalties are unavoidably incurr'd by every the leaſt Tranſgreſſion. But if this is the tenour of it, it is not to me imaginable, how it can be matter of Juſtice and of Law; for Mr. Calvin (uſually noted for overmuch Rigour) ſaith of Adam's Sin, (q) Non leve delictum, ſed deteſtabile fuiſſe ſcelus oportet, quod tam

(n) Diotogen. de regno.

(o) Dr. Hamm. pract. cat. p. 3. Lect. upon the Church Cat. Lect. 23.

(p) Lex ob quodlibet unum vel leviſſimum peccatum morte afficit, & præmio vitæ non coronat niſi eum, qui omnibus numeris abſolutam obedientiam præſtiterit. Davenant. prælect. de Juſt. hab. & act. c. 30. Le Blanc. Theſ. p. 575. Fœdus operum ſeu legale, quo Deus homini vitam æternam promiſit ſub conditione perfectæ obedientiæ legi præſtitæ, cum annexa mortis æternæ comminatione, ſi obedientiam perfectam non præſtiterit. Wendeln. Theol. l. 1. c. 21.

(q) [illegible]

tam ſeverè ultus eſt Deus. (r) Several of the Ancients think, that the Angels which ſinned, might have had Pardon upon Repentance, but refus'd it. Whether they ſpeak without Book or not, it is certain, that God would not have doom'd the Angels to Hell, unleſs they had been nefarious Criminals; that he cannot juſtly puniſh any Sin beyond the demerit of it, or inflict Eternal Death upon an Holy Soul for every the leaſt Tranſgreſſion; nor can he hate, forſake or caſt into Hell a Soul that is a true lover of him (or for ever withdraw his Grace and Love from ſuch a Soul;) nor can he count ſuch a holy Soul unholy and ungodly, or account every failure of ſuch a Soul a total breach of Covenant. Such Severities are harſh Incongruities, Exorbitancies and Exceſſes, as remote from Law and Juſtice as Right is from Wrong. Regenerate Chriſtians that live the holy ſpiritual Life, fulfil not the Righteouſneſs which the Law requireth, in abſolutely ſinleſs Perfection, yet they ſo far fulfil it, that againſt them there is no Law. If they had been always ſuch, as now they are, they would be in the main ſinleſs, uncriminal and uncondemnable (and therefore juſtifiable and rewardable) in Law; for no juſt Law condemneth any otherwiſe than proportionably to their Criminality. According to Mr. Calvin (s) the holy Angels themſelves are not uncriminal and uncondemnable in Law; for he ſtileth them non ſatis juſti, not ſufficiently Righteous and Uncriminal: The Stars are not pure in his ſight, Job 25. 5. (t) Gr. Naz. looketh upon abſolute ſinleſſneſs as the Prerogative μόνου θεοῦ, of God only; and he ſaith, that he will add nothing concerning Angels, leſt he ſhould give occaſion to improbous Cogitations. So Tertullian ſaith, Our Lord knew himſelf only ſine delicto eſſe, to be without Sin. Diſcourſing againſt the Pelagians S. Hierom ſaith, (u) Hath God commanded me, to be as high as the Creator? higher than the height of Angels? that I ſhould have that which the Angels have not? If the holy Angels are not abſolutely without Sin, how is it, that they are not caſt down to Hell with the wicked Angels, if the Law doometh them to Eternal Death for the leaſt Tranſgreſſion or Imperfection in Sanctity? The Apoſtle intimateth indeed a great Severity in the Law of Moſes in general, and in the holy ſpiritual Law (which is part of it,) when he ſaith, Gal. 3. 10. As many as are of the Works of the Law, are under the Curſe; for it is written, curſed is every one, that continueth not in all things written in the Book of the Law to do them. But his Senſe is (the ſame with another Apoſtle, Jam. 2. 19.) Every one is curſed by the Law, who is a nefarious tranſgreſſour of it (as Civil-religious, or as Spiritual-religious) in any one point. None have right to Life by the Law, none are juſtifiable and rewardable by it, none of its Religioniſts can eſcape the curſe of it, unleſs they be thoſe that are Righteous, uncriminal and uncondemnable in Law; and therefore none but they that fulfil the Righteouſneſs of the Law, ſo far at leaſt as not to be nefarious tranſgreſſours of it in any one point; ſo far and in ſuch ſenſe it requireth unſinning Sanctity and perfect Obedience as the Condition of Life. All ſuch therefore are condemnable and condemned by the Law, that are nefarious tranſgreſſours of it (nefarious Sinners) in any reſpect; for this is the Condition of Life, which it requireth, that we be none of that Character. But of this Quality and Character are the Law-religioniſts, the nefarious tranſgreſſours of it, and ſuch as are in the ſtate of Condemnation by it: The Jews were under the curſe of it as Civil-religious; and as Spiritual-religious the Evil World is ſubjected to Condemnation by it.

(r) Petav. T. 3. de Ang. l. 3. c. 3. S. 11. &c.

Rom. 8. 4 and 13. 10. Gal. 5. 23.

(s) Inſtit. l. 3. c. 17. S. 9.

(t) Voſſ. Hiſt. pel. l. 5. par. 1. Antitheſ. 2.

(u) Nunquid præcepit mihi Deus, ut nihil inter me eſſet & Dominum Creatorem? ut major eſſem angelorum faſtigio? ut haberem quod angeli non habent? Voſſ. ibid.

(2.) From the Penal Dues therefore which it ſettleth upon us, it appeareth to be matter of Law-juſtice: For degenerate Mankind being in their now Original State a World of improbous, graceleſs and deadly Sinners, they are under all deadly penal Evils (the Evils of an unpardon'd and an unregenerate condition) by the Law; namely, to be depriv'd of the Favour of God, of the ſtate of Remiſſion of Sins, of Peace and Reconcilement with God, of Life and Bleſſedneſs, of Citizenſhip in the Kingdom of God, of all the Immunities, Rights and Priviledges of his Children, of the holy Spirit and the Heavenly Inheritance; and to be under the Divine Wrath, the Guilt of Sin, the Reign of Sin, the Domination of Satan, and in the State of Death, where there is nothing but all deadly things to the Soul. Such are the Dues that belong to ungodly Mankind in Law-juſtice, and which are ſettled upon them by the Law, which is to them the Law of Death and Condemnation, 2 Cor. 3. 6, 9. It is not a Law that giveth Life, but excludeth from Life, Gal. 3. 21.

(w) By the deeds of the Law ſhall no Fleſh be juſtify'd in his ſight; for by the Law is the knowledge of Sin, Rom. 3. 20.

(w) Claudit in ſe negationem gratiæ & hominem ſibiipſi in ſua carnalitate relictum. Cajetan. in Rom. 7. 5.

It is not the Religion of making them uncriminal, for the knowledge of their Criminal Evil, whereby they are guilty Sinners, is by the Law, which is the Religion of condemning, but not of ſaving Sinners; for through the Law Sin is imputed and they are under the Divine Wrath, Rom. 4. 15. The Law worketh Wrath through Mens non-performance of it and ſinning againſt it. The ſtrength of Sin is the Law; for Sin is ſtrong through the weakneſs of the Law to prevail againſt it; and it hath its condemning power and puiſſance by the Law, thereby bringing Men to Death everlaſting, 1 Cor. 15. 56.

(3.) The Name of it ſheweth, that it is matter of Law-juſtice; for this Name The Law denoteth The comprehenſion of what is right and due, not according to Grace, to which it is oppos'd (and which is free and gratuitous favour above and beyond Law) but in Juſtice, (x) agreeably to the Definitions which the Ancients make of an ordinary Law, which imply, that it is a Settlement of things, as in juſtice they ought to be ſettled, κανὼν δικαίων ϗ ἀδίκων, juſti injuſtique regula (y) juris atque injuriæ regula. In the Inſtitutes Juriſprudentia is defin'd The Science of what is juſt and unjuſt. The Lawyers ſay, (z) that Law and Juſtice are the ſame thing; and Laertius ſaith of Plato, (a) τὴν δικαιοσύνην θεοῦ νόμον ὑπελάμβανεν, he ſuppos'd Juſtice to be the Law of God. The Original Law therefore (which is Original Religion) muſt neceſſarily ſettle the concerns of Souls agreeably to theſe Maxims; All muſt have their due and be treated according to their deſert, Criminals muſt be dealt with as Criminals, The ſinleſs and the juſt muſt be juſtify'd, They that have done well according to Law, muſt fare well; They that have done ill, muſt fare ill; and they that have done the Work (what they ought) muſt have the Reward. Such are the Maxims of Law-Religion, which muſt be underſtood as Maxims of Law-Religion; for the like Maxims are in the Religion

(x) Martini Lex. in Voc. Lex.

(y) Cic. de Leg.

(z) Ferd. ABDvenſ. orat. pro jur. civ. p. 23.

(a) Eugub. de Per. Phil. l. 1. c. 5.

gion of Grace, but ſo as to be the Maxims of the Religion of Grace. In the Religion of Grace a State of Righteouſneſs is provided for degenerate Mankind: But there is not any way for them to obtain the State of Righteouſneſs (or to be juſtified) by the Law, ſave only by way of legal Juſtice. If they become the uncriminal and uncondemnable, the juſtifiable and rewardable by the Law, they muſt have this their Righteouſneſs as their legal Due (or in Law-juſtice) and as their Merit by their meritorious Worthineſs and Well deſervings; for the Law is the Religion of Law-juſtice. Which is no inconvenience to juſtified and ſanctified Chriſtians, nor is it any inconvenience to the holy Angels, that are natively in the State of Righteouſneſs: But the Law muſt be conſider'd as the Law-way of Mankind's obtaining the State of Righteouſneſs, which is no other than by way of Law-juſtice and meritorious Worthineſs.

(4.) It appeareth therefore, to be the Religion of Law-juſtice from another uſual Name of it the Law or Covenant of Works (of the Works of the Law;) for antecedently to Chriſtianity this Law (which is the Divine Moral Law (b) the ſame Law whereby the holy Angels are govern'd) was reveal'd in Nature and Scripture both to Jews and Gentiles, and was to all Mankind vivendi regula, regula agendorum, the Rule of Life and of Duties to be done. But the Duties which it requir'd, were nothing elſe but thoſe Works of Righteouſneſs which belong to the Law; it was ſo the Law of Works (of the Works of the Law) as not to be the Law of Grace and of the Faith thereof; for the Law is not of this Faith, nor is this Faith of the Law, Gal. 3. 11. This Faith ſignifieth nothing in Law, but it requireth the Works of Obedience to its Precepts, ſo as to be the Religion of Law-juſtice. The Righteouſneſs therefore which its Religioniſts follow after, is the Righteouſneſs of Works (to be juſt and righteous in an uncriminal and uncondemnable Condition by the Law and by their doing the Works thereof;) which Righteouſneſs of Works by the Law (becauſe the Law is the Religion of Law-juſtice) is meritoriouſly rewardable Work. He that hath them, hath whereof to boaſt and to glory as being a meritoriouſly rewardable Perſon, whoſe happy Eſtate is his Purchaſe, not an Alms. Having the Benefit by Work, he cannot have it by Grace, becauſe his Work is meritoriouſly rewardable, is Righteouſneſs to him by legal Juſtice, and the Reward is reckon'd to him, not of Grace, but of Debt (as due in Law-juſtice,) as the Apoſtle argueth, Rom. 4. 4. whence it is manifeſt, that the Law in the Apoſtle's Notion of it is the Religion of Law-juſtice, ſuch a Religion of Soul-intereſts; and that the working, work and works which he ſpeaketh of, are ſuch as are the Righteouſneſs of Works by the Law (the oppoſite to the Righteouſneſs which is by Faith,) which was the matter in diſpute with the Law-religioniſts.

(b) Ameſ. Medul. Theol. l. 1. c. 11.

Rom. 3. 27. and 9. 32. and 10. 3, 5, 6. Gal. 3. 12. Eph. 2. 9. Phil. 3. 9.

It is much more reaſonable, to ſuppoſe this Original Law, to be the Law of the Original Sovereignty and Kingdom of God, than to call it the Law of Innocency, ſuppoſing it to be the firſt Covenant (or Covenant of Works,) which was firſt made with Adam and Eve, when they were created; for theſe Notions have no Foundation in Reaſon or Scripture: Nor are they agreeable to the Nature of it, as will appear from an Explication of the Moſaic Hiſtory of Paradiſe, which muſt be premis'd, before we can give an account of our remaining Notices of God's Original Creation. For thoſe remaining Notices muſt be (in great degree) illuſtrated and proved from the Moſaic Hiſtory of Paradiſe, which cannot be made argumentative till it be explained.

CHAP. XIII.

1. The Firſt Article of our Explication of the Hiſtory of Paradiſe. Objecters againſt the Truth of the Hiſtory. 2. A Firſt Proof of the Truth of it. 3. A Second Proof of the Truth of it. 4. A Third Proof of the Truth of it. 5. A Fourth Proof of the Truth of it. The Second Article of our Explication, the Character of the Moſaic Paradiſe with the ſeveral ſorts of Paradiſes. The Third Article of our Explication, the Character of the Moſaic Creation. 1. The Firſt Proof of it. 2. The Second Proof of it. 3. The Third Proof of it. 4. The Fourth Proof of it. 5. The Fifth Proof of it. 6. The Sixth Proof of it. A diſtinct view of the ſeveral Parts of the Hiſtory. The Fourth Article of our Explication, the Character of our firſt Parents. 1. The magnificent Ideas of them amongſt the Jews. 2. The Chriſtians magnificent Ideas of them. 3. A Branch of them examin'd, and thoſe magnificent Ideas ſhew'd to be groundleſs. 4. A Difficulty that incumbreth our Character of their Uprightneſs, with an Enumeration of many Difficulties that incumber the contrary Character. The Difficulty that incumbreth our Character ſalv'd. The Fifth Article of our Explication, that the Moſaic Paradiſaical Oeconomy is in all the Branches of it reaſonable and accommodate according to our Hypotheſis, but not according to the common Hypotheſis. I. A Firſt Reaſon that recommendeth this Oeconomy according to our Hypotheſis and diſproveth the other. II. A Second Reaſon of the ſame Nature. III. A Third Reaſon ſhewing the end of this Oeconomy. IV. A Fourth Reaſon with a Vindication of the Hiſtory. V. A Fifth Reaſon. VI. A Sixth Reaſon. VII. A Seventh Reaſon containing the Jews Objections. The Sixth Article of our Explication, the Remarkables touching the Serpent. The Seventh Article of our Explication, that the Hiſtory ſpeaketh of the Brute-Serpent Specificativè and Comprehenſivè. The Eighth Article of our Explication touching a threefold Aſpect of the Doom of the Serpent. 1. As it relateth to the Brute-Serpent. A Solution of ſeveral Difficulties in it as it ſo relateth, and ſome matters of Natural Philoſophy remark'd in it. 2. As it relateth to the tempting Serpent, the ſeveral Branches of whoſe Doom are diſtinctly conſider'd. 3. As it relateth to Chriſt and Chriſtians and is a Prophecy, the Contents whereof are ſhewed. The Ninth Article of our Exlication touching the viſible appearance of God.

I. THAT our Explication of the Moſaic Hiſtory of Paradiſe may proceed clearly and orderly, as it ought (to make one of the moſt difficult parts of the Bible clearly intelligible) we will diſtinguiſh it into ſeveral Articles compriſing in them the whole of the Hiſtory.

ARTICLE I.

The Moſaic Text in the Literal Senſe is true Hiſtory, not meer Myſtery or Fable.

THE Literal Senſe of the Text may be exploded two ways; by expounding it as meer Myſtery, and by expoſing it as meer Fabuloſity. As if we ſuppoſe, that Philo's interpretation of Adam, Eve and the Serpent is the only true Interpretation; that the Serpent ſignifieth nothing but ſenſitive Pleaſure, Eve nothing but ſenſitive Nature, and Adam nothing elſe but the intelligent Mind, ſuch a Suppoſition would be a deſtroying the reality of the Hiſtory by a Myſtic Expoſition. So Origen counteth it Ideotical, to ſuppoſe, (c) that God like an Huſbandman planted Trees in Paradiſe Eaſtward in Eden, and planted the Tree of Life there, that is, a viſible and palpable Wood of ſuch a Nature, that one eating of it with his bodily Teeth gain'd the benefit of Life from it; and on the other hand eating the other Tree gain'd the knowledge of Good and Evil. As alſo that God walk'd in Paradiſe in the cool of the Day, and Adam hid himſelf under the Tree. I ſuppoſe (ſaith he) that none can doubt, but that theſe things are ſpoken by a figurative Trope, and to indicate certain myſterious things. A ſecond way of exploding the literal ſenſe of the Hiſtory is, not by expounding, but by expoſing it as (in whole or in part) meer Fabuloſity with Celſus (Origen's Adverſary,) who reproacheth the Jews for compoſing (d) theſe ἀπιθανώτατα ϗ ἀμουσότατα, moſt incredible and unlearned things, that a certain Man was form'd by the Hands of God, and was blown into, and a Woman was formed out of his Side; that they had Commandments from God and a Serpent withſtood them, and the Serpent was too hard for the Commands of God. Thus telling an old Wives Fable, and moſt impiouſly making God at the beginning of things weak and impotent, not of ſo much Authority as to be able to perſwade ſo much as one Man, whom himſelf form'd. So Simplicius thinketh (e) this Moſaic Hiſtory of Paradiſe no better than a Poetic Fable, and the Moſaic Coſmopœia is called by him μυθικὴ παράδοσις, a fabulous Tradition deriv'd from the Egyptian Fables. So the Apoſtate Julian ſaith of a part of the Moſaic Hiſtory of Paradiſe, (f) ταῦτα γάρ ἐστι μυθώδη παντελῶς, theſe things are altogether fabulous. And of the Serpent's ſpeaking to Eve he ſaith; τί διαφέρει τῶν παρὰ τοῖς Ἕλλησι πεπλασμένων μύθων τὰ τοιάδε; ſuch things as theſe how do they differ from the fictitious Fables of the Greeks? So of late ſome of the Philoſophic Family (without any ill deſign ſave only to introduce the golden Legend of an Ante-diluvian Paradiſaical Earth) have repreſented this Moſaic Hiſtory as one of thoſe Fables, that are not totally meer Figments, for they have a foundation of Truth; but by additaments thereto and aſcititious Ornaments they become Fables. Which Notion of it maketh it of the very ſame Nature with the Heathen Poetick Fables, which were built upon a foundation of a Truth, but by additaments and aſcititious Ornaments they became Fables. (g) So the Fables of Jupiter, Mars, Neptune, Minerva (and many more) are not without ſome Hiſtorical Truth, which is their foundation: The Fables of Saturn, Bacchus, Mercury, Prometheus (and ſuch more) are not without ſome Scripture-hiſtorical Truth, which is their foundation. Yet by ornamental Additaments they are become ſhameful Figments and putid Fables. But againſt them that thus parallel the holy Scripture with the Heathen Mythology the Chriſtians thus Apologize. (h) Μυθικὸν ἐν αὐτῇ παντελῶς οὐδέν. There is nothing at all fabulous in it, but all things are full of Truth. Of this Character is the Moſaic Hiſtory of Paradiſe although a great ſtumbling Block to Unbelievers. For

II. Firſt; The Profeſſion of Chriſtianity will not allow any Diſpute touching the literal and real Truth of it, which hath many Atteſtations from the holy Writers of the New Teſtament, Matth. 19. 5. Act. 17. 26. Rom. 5. 12—19. 1 Cor. 11. 8. and 15. 45—49. 2 Cor. 11. 3. Eph. 5. 29, 30. 1 Tim. 2. 14. Apoc. 2. 7. Beſides this external Teſtimony of infallible Witneſſes there are in the Hiſtory it ſelf many Characters of its Truth and Divinity, one of which is the Congruities that are in it. For it is agreeable to the Moſaic Coſmopœia and of one piece with it, and it is an agreeable part of the Old Teſtament, which is thus differenc'd from the Goſpel by P. Lombard (i) the Letter of the Law is different from the Letter of the Goſpel, becauſe the Promiſes are different: There things Terrene, here things Celeſtial are promiſed. So this Moſaic Hiſtory in the Letter of it is confin'd meerly to things Terrene (the Terrene things of our firſt Parents,) which like thoſe of old Iſrael are order'd and diſpens'd in a way agreeable to that Divine Wiſdom, which ſhineth in the Oeconomy of the New Teſtament. For it is hugely agreeable, to the Methods of Divine Wiſdom, that our Concerns as Terreſtrial Animals ſhould be ſettled by the Terreſtrial Adam, as our Spiritual Concerns are ſettled by the Heavenly Adam; that the Settlement of Nature ſhould be made by the doings of one, as the Settlement of Grace is made by the doings of the other; and that Mankind ſhould have their Evils in Nature from the firſt, their humane and their natural Head, as they have their Goods of Grace from their Divine and Supernatural Head. The Origin of Evil alſo is a remarkable Congruity in this Moſaic Hiſtory, and is in the general Nature of it unexceptionable. For it deriveth the Evil of Puniſhment from the Evil of Sin, and the Evil of Sin from the evil One, ὁ Ἀρχέκακος δαίμων, (as S. Chryſoſtom calleth him) the Devil the be-

(c) Περὶ ἀρχῶν l. 4. c. 2. V. Petav. T. 3. de op. 6. dier. l. 1. c. 7.

(d) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 4. p. 186.

(e) Curcell. Inſtit. l. 3. c. 13. & c. 6, 7.

(f) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 3. p. 75.

(g) Non res ipſas geſtas finxerunt poetæ: Sed rebus geſtis addiderunt quendam colorem. Lactant. In his ergo diſtinguere oportet quæ hiſtoricâ fide, quæ item poeticâ dicuntur. Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 14. & vid. Indicem in voce Fabulæ.

(h) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 3. p. 86.

(i) Voſſ. Reſp. ad judic. Ravenſp. c. 23.

ginner of Evil. Through Envy of the Devil (quem ſub Serpentis figura Moſes intelligi voluit, ſaith Grotius) came Death into the World. Wiſd. 2. 24. If from the Serpent in this Hiſtory Pherecydes Syrus deriv'd his ὀφιωνεὺς, Princeps mali (k) as Origen thinketh (although Philo giveth another account of the Origin of Ὀφιωνεὺς,) he did not ſuppoſe this Moſaic Hiſtory fabulous. (l) And if Plato deriv'd from it his Story of Jupiter's Garden and of Porus circumvented by Penia (as ſome have thought,) this was true Hiſtory turn'd into a Fable. This Hiſtory is all of one piece, and there is nothing heterogeneous in it, that may be thought to betray its Fabuloſity.

III. The Symbolical and Hieroglyphical Nature of it ſpeaketh it Hiſtory, and ſuch Hiſtory which is true and of God, for ſo good Interpreters ancient and modern agree, (m) that the Moſaic Narrative is of Hiſtorical Truth, and that Paradiſe was a moſt delicious place viſible and ſenſible, yet ſo as to contain the ſignification of arcane Spiritual and Myſtical things. The Hebrew Doctors ſay (n) that there are ſome things in this Hiſtory, that are abſurd and paradoxical according to the Letter: But they admire quanta Sapientia in illa lateat, how great recondite Wiſdom is in it. They ſuppoſe it therefore an Hiſtory, which repreſenteth great Myſteries, which (doubtleſs) was a principal deſign of inſtituting the Moſaic Paradiſe. For it cannot reaſonably be ſuppos'd, that God's principal deſign in erecting it was to provide an earthly Happineſs for Man: Nor can it reaſonably be ſuppos'd, to have been deſign'd for any long continuance; for it was deſign'd, to continue no longer than Man continu'd in Innocency, which the Divine Wiſdom foreſaw, would not be long, and therefore thought it ſufficient, to make one place in Eden Paradiſaical, and that one place was but a larger Garden of no very great extent. If therefore Adam in his Innocency had generated a vaſtly numerous Poſterity, where muſt they have dwelt? For the Terreſtrial Paradiſe could not have been the place of their abode, and how ſhould that numerous Poſterity have come by the Tree of Life, that grew no where but in the Garden of Eden? Some ſay (o) it had been as eaſie to have planted all parts of the World with the ſame Tree, as with the Poſterity of Adam, had he continu'd in Obedience. Who being not driven out of Eden, (as upon his Diſobedience,) but ſending his Poſterity, to do that in the reſt of the World, which he did there, had made all the World Eden, by placing the Paradiſe of God whereſoever Innocence dwelt. But as this is ſpoken without any good Authority, ſo it is not agreeable to ſound Reaſon. For it was always impoſſible in Nature, that ſeveral Climes of the Earth ſhould be Paradiſaical: Nor can there be many Terreſtrial Paradiſes and Trees of Life without ſpoiling the Analogy between things corporeal and thoſe ſpiritual things repreſented by them, the Tree of Life that is in the midſt of the Paradiſe of God. Apoc. 22. 2, 14. Paradiſe therefore muſt be confin'd to the Garden of Eden, in which our firſt Parents continu'd but for a little time. (p) The Schoolmen and the Hebrew Doctors think, that they fell the ſame day that they were created. (q) Some think it probable, that they continu'd in Innocency and in Paradiſe for ſome Years, but none think, that they ſo continu'd for any long time. The courſe of Nature alſo was in ſome degree under a ſuſpenſion during the Paradiſaical State, and therefore things do not look, as if it was deſign'd to be permanent and laſting. Oſtendunt terris hæc tantum Fata, nec ultra eſſe ſinunt. A principal deſign therefore of the Divine Wiſdom in erecting Paradiſe was, that (like Janus with two Faces looking πρόσω ϗ ὀπίσω, forward and backward) it might repreſent the great myſterious things of the Kingdom of God paſt and to come. Whence J. Mart. ſaith (r) it is not poſſible, to underſtand clearly any of the things ſpoken by Moſes ἐκτὸς μυστικῆς θεωρίας, without myſtick or arcane Theory. The Terreſtrial Paradiſe and the happy Eſtate of our firſt Parents there, their Sin in it and Expulſion out of it, may reaſonably be thought, to repreſent and ſignifie the heavenly Paradiſe and the Original happy State of Souls, their Sin and their Lapſe and their Exile from Heaven. And as the Tree of Life, the Brute Serpent, and the Enmity between Mankind and Brute Serpents are unqueſtionably Symbolical: So the Nakedneſs of our firſt Parents and their Shame, as alſo their Coats of Skins may (with great reaſon) be thought of the ſame Nature.

IV. The numerous Types of the matters of Chriſtianity which are in this Hiſtory, demonſtrate, that it is ſuch Hiſtory, which is true and of God. Theſe alſo are an uncontrollable Evidence both of the Truth of the Scriptures and of the Chriſtian Faith. For it is evident and palpable, that here in the beginning of the Old Teſtament there are many Types of the matters of the New Teſtament; which is a plain demonſtration, that one and the ſame God was Author both of the Old and New Teſtament, ſeeing the one exactly typifieth the other. They are alſo a demonſtration, that Chriſtianity is no fiction nor invention of Men; for it could not be Men that inſtituted the Terreſtrial Paradiſe, or that invented the Hiſtory of it, to prefigure the matters of Chriſtianity: But it muſt be the wonderful Wiſdom of God, that order'd all theſe things in the Old Teſtament-times and from the beginning of the World; therefore our Religion is from no other Original but from the wonderful Wiſdom of God, that conducted the Affairs of the moſt ancient times. So marvellous a Correſpondence and Agreement there is between the things of Moſes and of Chriſt, as plainly ſheweth, that his coming was deſign'd in the firſt times, that things were then order'd with regard to him, and there can be no fallacy, no counterfeiting in the caſe, no rational Anſwer can be deviſ'd to ſo plain and evident a proof. The Affairs of Adam and his Paradiſe were plainly Types of Chriſt and the Matters of Chriſtianity; none but God could inſtitute in thoſe ancient times illuſtrious Types of Chriſt; and if God inſtituted them, then Chriſt was fore-ordain'd of old time and is the Chriſt of God; if God inſtituted them (and none but God could do it,) then the Hiſtory of Adam and his Paradiſe is no Fable (as profane Unbelievers dream;) for no part of the Old Teſtament of ſo ſmall a bulk hath ſo many illuſtrious Types of Chriſt and Chriſtianity in it as this Hiſtory of Adam and his Paradiſe.

Adam himſelf was an eminent Type of Chriſt, a Figure of him that was to come. Rom. 5. 14. The firſt Adam was a Type of the ſecond, the earthly

---

(k) C. Celſ. l. 6. p. 304.

(l) Ibid. l. 4. p. 104. Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 12. c. 11.

(m) Petav. T. 3. de op. 6. dier. l. 2. c. 5.

(n) Maimon. Mor. Nev. Par. 2. c. 30.

(o) Mr. Thorndike Epil. B. 2. c. 10.

(p) Seld. de ſyn. l. 1. c. 11. Grot. Not. in Joh. 8. 44.

(q) Jurieu Theſ. de Cabal. Coral. 18. v. Petr. Mart. in Gen. 2. 18. Petav. ſupr. l. 2. c 10. Curcell. Inſt. l. 3. c. 13. Bp. Patrick on Gen. 3. initio.

(r) Paræn. p. 28.

earthly of the heavenly. 1 Cor. 15. 45. So it is written, the firſt Adam was made a living Soul, the laſt Adam a quickening Spirit. There is a Correſpondence between things Natural and Spiritual and the one is a Type of the other, Adam is the Head of old Mankind by Nature and carnal Propagation; and therein he is a Type of Chriſt the Head of new Mankind by Grace and Spiritual Regeneration. Adam had an earthly Life and Body and from him we derive an earthly Life and Body (a living Soul:) So Chriſt is to us a quickning Spirit raiſing us to an heavenly Life and from him 1 Cor. 15. 49. we derive an heavenly glorious Body. As we have born the Image of the earthly, ſo we ſhall alſo bear the Image of the heavenly, and the one is a Type of the other. The firſt Adam is called the Son of God becauſe of his immediate Creation from him, and becauſe he was made after his Image; and herein he was a Type of Chriſt, who is the only begotten Son of God the brightneſs of his Glory, and the expreſs Character of his Perſon. Adam by a Tree brought in Death, and Chriſt by a Tree deſtroy'd him that had the Power of Death. Adam naked brought in Death, and Chriſt hanging naked upon the Croſs deſtroy'd Death. In theſe reſpects there is ſo great a reſemblance between the two Adams, that no Man can reaſonably doubt, but the one was intended to be a Type of the other. But there are other Typical Reſemblances between them, as the holy Writers ſhew. For Adam had Dominion given him over the Creatures, and herein he was a fore-ſhadowing Type and Repreſentative of Chriſt. And therefore what the ancient Scripture ſaith of Adam and the ſubjecting to him this World of Creatures, the Apoſtle applieth to Chriſt's Exaltation and the ſubjecting the other World of Creatures unto him. One in a certain place teſtifieth, what is Man that thou art mindful of him? Or the Son Heb. 2. 6, 7, 8. of Man that thou viſiteſt him? Thou madeſt him a little lower than the Angels, thou crownedſt him with Glory and Honour, and didſt ſet him over the Works of thy Hands. Thou haſt put all things in Subjection under his Feet. As God gave unto the firſt Adam Dominion over this earthly World and the Creatures therein contain'd: So he hath given to the ſecond Adam Dominion over the heavenly World and the Creatures therein contain'd. Adam was made a little lower than the Angels, yet crown'd with Glory and Honour becauſe of his Dominion over this World: So Chriſt was made a little lower than the Angels, yet now is crown'd with Glory and Honour becauſe of his Dominion over the heavenly World. The Apoſtle hath diſcours'd another Similitude between the two Adams, which is ſuch a Similitude that is complicated with direct Oppoſition, and ſo the two Adams anſwer to one another, and the Goods of the one Rom. 5. 18, 19. anſwer to the Evils of the other. As by the Offence of one Judgment came upon all Men to Condemnation: Even ſo by the Righteouſneſs of one the free Gift came upon all Men unto Juſtification of Life. For as by one Man's Diſobedience many were made Sinners: So by the Obedience of one ſhall many be made Righteous. As by old Adam we have a Settlement of Condemnation: So by the ſecond Adam we have a Settlement of Juſtification. By the one we have a Settlement, whereby we are made Sinners, have the Reputation, State and Nature of Sinners (in a ſober Senſe:) By the other we have a Settlement, whereby we are made the Righteous, have the Reputation, State and Nature of the Righteous. Through the Offence of one many are Ibid. v. 15, 16. Dead. The Judgment was by one to Condemnation. As ruinous things came by one, ſo our reparation is by one. By Man came Death, by Man came alſo the Reſurrection of the Dead. As in Adam all die, even ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made alive. 1 Cor. 15. 21, 22.

Adam and Eve in conjunction are an illuſtrious Type of Chriſt and his Church. The V. Dr. Cudworths Diſc. of the Union of Chriſt and the Church. Apoſtle therefore would have the Wife to look upon the Husband as bearing the Image of Chriſt (of whom the Husband in Paradiſe was a Type and Shadow,) and the Husband to look upon the Wife as an Image of the Church, which the Wife in Paradiſe was inſtituted to typifie and reſemble. Eph. 5. 22, 25. He deriveth the Reaſon of all Marriage-duties of the Husband to the Wife and of the Wife to the Husband from the Relation and Union between Chriſt and the Church, of which Adam and Eve were typical Adumbrations, and there is a lively Reſemblance between them. For the Church of Regenerate Chriſtians hath its Original from Chriſt ſleeping upon the Croſs, and is contain'd in him, as Woman was taken out of Man ſleeping and was ſeminally and virtually contained in him. The Church is nothing Eva in Typo Eccleſie de coſtâ viri ædificata eſt. S. Hieron. elſe but Chriſtus explicatus (what we are and have as Chriſtians is ſomething of Chriſt,) as Eve was Adam's Subſtance dilated and expanded. The Woman was ſo of the Man, that ſhe was conſtitutively a part of his Body and a Participation of his Subſtance, of his Fleſh and of his Bone: So Regenerate Chriſtians are conſtitutively a Participation of Chriſt and ſomething of him; the ſame in reſpect of Chriſt that Eve was in reſpect of Adam, the members or parts of his Body, of his Fleſh and of his Bones. Eph. 5. 30. In the Marriage of Man and Woman there is a Coalition and Union of their Fleſh, upon which account they twain are ſaid to be one Fleſh (in ſuch Senſe and ſo far as the State of Marriage importeth:) So to ſignifie a Spiritual Union and Conjunction between Chriſt and Chriſtians, they are ſaid to be one Spirit. 1 Cor. 6. 17. Man and Wife are one Fleſh (acording to the Inſtitution of Marriage in Paradiſe) in opoſition to Divorce, to Type out the indiſſoluble and inſeparable Union between Chriſt and the Church. And they two are one Fleſh in oppoſition to Polygamy and Plurality of Wives (each muſt be join'd to one and no more:) So Chriſt hath but one only Church, and can no more have many Churches, than Man in Paradiſe might have many Wives. Theſe are marvellous Correſpondences, which clearly demonſtrate, that both the Inſtitution of Marriage in Paradiſe and the Chriſtian Religion were Effects of the wonderful Wiſdom of God; which alſo inſtituted the Tree of Life in Paradiſe (which had a Virtue to continue Adam's Life and to preſerve him from Death) to be a lively Type of the Chriſtians heavenly Immortality. Apoc. 2. 7. And in the Paradiſaical State a Sabbath was alſo inſtituted, which was a Type of the Chriſtians Reſt. Heb. 4. 4, 9, 10. He ſpake in a certain place of the ſeventh day on this wiſe, and God did reſt the ſeventh day from all his Works. There remaineth therefore a reſt to the people of God. For he that is entred into his reſt, he alſo hath ceaſed from his own works, as God did from his.

V. The ancient Prophecy which is in this Hiſtory, demonſtrateth, that it is ſuch Hiſtory, which is true and of God. For ancient Prophecy and the Chriſtian Religion compar'd together mutually illuſtrate and demonſtrate the Divinity of each other. Ancient Prophecy cannot but be from God, becauſe it ſo clearly predicteth the Chriſtian Religion many Ages before its appearance in the World : And the Chriſtian Religion cannot but be from God, becauſe it is ſo clearly predicted by ancient Prophecy, which clearly demonſtrateth, that Jeſus is the true Meſſiah. For which Reaſon Chriſtians have an high value for ancient Prophecy, and for this Reaſon they ought to have a great value for this Moſaic Hiſtory, becauſe an ancient Prophecy of the Meſſiah (the moſt ancient of Prophecies) is a part of it. For ſuch is the Serpent's Doom, Gen. 3. 14, 15. The Lord God ſaid unto the Serpent, becauſe thou haſt done this, thou art curſed above all Cattel and above every Beaſt of the Field : Upon thy Belly ſhalt thou go, and Duſt ſhalt thou eat all the days of thy life. And I will put enmity between thee and the Woman, and between thy Seed and her Seed : It ſhall bruiſe thy Head, and thou ſhalt bruiſe his Heel. In this moſt ancient Prophecy all the principal matters of the Moſaic Narrative of Paradiſe are involv'd (namely the Paradiſaical State of our firſt Parents, and their eating the forbidden Fruit through the Serpents Temptation ;) if therefore this ancient Prophecy is genuine and legitimate (which it is moſt certainly and demonſtratively,) then the Moſaic Narrative of Paradiſe is ſuch Hiſtory, which is true and of God, and there is nothing of Fabuloſity in it.

ARTICLE 2.

The Moſaic Paradiſe was of Kind and Quality Terreſtrial-animal, ſo as to be Symbolical.

THE word Paradiſe is of no known Etymology, (s) nor is it certain from what Language we have it, whether it be originally Perſic or Armenian : But the ſignification of it is very well known ; for in common acceptation it denoteth an eximiouſly and ſuperlatively delicious place. In which Notion of the word a threefold Paradiſe occurreth in the Writers of the Chriſtian Theology. A Terreſtrial, a Supernal, a Metaphorical Paradiſe.

(1.) By a Metaphor an ancient Writer calleth the Books of Scripture (t) παράδεισόν τινα νοητὸν, a certain mental Paradiſe. And another ſaith (u) The joy of a good Conſcience is a Paradiſe. The Church in the holy People that live temperately, juſtly and piouſly, is rightly called a Paradiſe, becauſe of its affluence of Graces and chaſt Delights. So the Chriſtians are ſtiled by a truly Divine Writer (w) παράδεισος τρυφῆς. a delicious Paradiſe that have made to grow in themſelves ſuch green Trees as bear all manner of Fruit, adorn'd with variety of Fruit. Agreeably to the Chriſtians Metaphorical Paradiſe Philo ſaith (x) Virtue is tropically called Paradiſe. The proper place of Paradiſe is Eden, that is, Delight or Pleaſure. To Virtue agreeth Peace, Pleaſure and Joy, in which is the true deliciating. (y) The ſacred Paradiſe of Piety we have in the Chalday Oracles.

(2.) The Supernal Paradiſe is called by Tertullian (z) the place of Divine Pleaſantneſs deſign'd for the reception of the Souls of the Saints. The Jews oppoſe Paradiſe and Hell and thus define it. (a) Paradiſe is a place, wherein the Souls of the Pious departed enjoy the Rewards of their good Works. Three Names they uſe, to expreſs the State and Place of thoſe happy Souls ; for they diſpoſe of them into Abraham's Boſom, under the Throne of Glory and into גן עדן the Garden of Eden or Paradiſe. Grotius ſaith, (b) they ſometimes call Paradiſe Paradiſus inferior in contradiſtinction to a ſuperiour Paradiſe : But their inferiour Paradiſe is Adam's corporeal Paradiſe. In the Paradiſe of Souls there are ſeven degrees of Felicity (or ſeven Palaces) as they ſuppoſe ; yet they ſeem not to concern themſelves, to make any diſtinction between the Happineſs of Paradiſe and that of the World to come after the Reſurrection, nor do the Muhammedans ; for all the Happineſs of the World to come they compriſe under this one Name Paradiſe. But in the Chriſtian Theology the Supernal Paradiſe is diſtinguiſh'd into the Celeſtial and the Sub-Celeſtial. For the Kingdom of Heaven (of Glory and Immortality) the Chriſtians call Paradiſe. (c) The Promiſe of Paradiſe is the Kingdom of the living God. Chriſt reſtoreth us to Paradiſe, he carrieth us to the heavenly Kingdom. So the Jews are ſaid to place Paradiſe (d) in the ſupreme Heaven. So Paradiſe ſignifieth in ſome places of the New Teſtament: But the Chriſtian Theology acknowledgeth alſo a Sub-celeſtial Paradiſe. (e) I call that Region the Boſom of Abraham, which, although not Celeſtial, yet is higher than thoſe that are called the infernal parts, and affordeth refreſhment to the Souls of the Juſt until the plenitude of Reward at the general Reſurrection. All the faithful, when they go out of the Body, ſhall be reſerved by the Lord's Cuſtody for that entry into the Kingdom of Heaven, being in the mean time plac'd in the Boſom of Abraham (whither the wicked cannot come becauſe of the Gulf interpos'd,) until the time of entring into the Kingdom doth come. The Boſom of Abraham in the Senſe of the Ancients is the ſame with Paradiſe (according to that of S. Baſil (f) do'ſt thou not ſee Lazarus, how he entred by faſting into Paradiſe?) They ſuppoſe therefore a Sub-celeſtial Paradiſe, wherein the generality of the Saints departed in the New Teſtament-times enjoy an inferiour State of Happineſs antecedently to the day of Judgment : As wicked Angels and the Souls of wicked Men departed are but in an initial State of Miſery until that day. And becauſe the generality of the Saints departed in the Old Teſtament-times cannot be ſuppos'd, to have been in a better State after their departure than the Saints of the New Teſtament-times, therefore they alſo muſt be ſuppos'd, to have been antecedently to our Saviour's coming in no higher State than that of a Sub-celeſtial Paradiſe, as the ancient Writers of the Church affirm with great conſent. (g) Yet not without a conſiderable diſſent and the intermixture of very ſtrange Conceits. For although uſually all of them affirm, that none of the Pious before Chriſt's coming entred the Kingdom of Heaven, yet ſome of them ſometimes ſay otherwiſe, and confound the Boſom of Abraham with the Kingdom of Heaven. Some of them ſuppoſe the Boſom of Abraham (the receptacle of the Saints of the Old Teſtament-times,) to have been no part of Hell, but an higher Region, yet a Sub-celeſtial Paradiſe: Others of them will have it a part of Hell, yet a Region of Bliſs and Happineſs: Others thought the Pious before Chriſt's coming were ſo in Hell, as to be in Griefs and under the Devil's Power; and (which is a marvellous conceit) ſome of them of good Note thought the Paradiſe which is the receptacle of the Saints departed, and into which Enoch and Elias were tranſlated, (h) to be the Adamical Paradiſe, where the firſt Man was plac'd. Not duly to diſtinguiſh theſe diſſonant kind of Paradiſes is a grand Incongruity in the ancient Writers: But it is a worſe confounding things that differ, not duly to ſeparate an heavenly kind of Paradiſe from the Hell of the damned, to ſhut up both the Souls of Sinners and of the Juſt in Hell, and to ſeat Paradiſe there. Which inexcuſable miſtake of ſome of the Fathers the learned Grotius hath choſen to Patronize in his Explications of the New Teſtament-hades, which comprehendeth, as he ſuppoſeth (i) both the Paradiſe of the Saints and the Hell of the damned. Whence he inferreth, that both Dives and Lazarus were in Hades diſterminatis ᾅδου regionibus in different Regions of Hades, and that S. Auſtin needleſly perplex'd himſelf in his inquiry, how Chriſt could be at the ſame time in Hell, that is, in Hades, and in Paradiſe, ſeeing the one is comprehended under the other. For both Paradiſe and Hell, or as the Greeks ſpeak, Elyſium and Tartarus are in Hades. To juſtifie this Interpretation of Hades in the New Teſtament (that it ſignifieth that whole inviſible Region, which is the Manſion of Souls in common) numerous Citations are produc'd from the Pagan Theologers and from Joſephus (a Paganizing Jew:) But nothing that looketh like a Teſtimony, is or can be produc'd from the holy Writers of the New Teſtament, wherein there are two Notions of Hades and no more. One is the Old Teſtament-notion of Hades, wherein it ſignifieth that Region which is the Region of Darkneſs and Deſtruction to viſibles. Hades was ſuppos'd to ſwallow up all; when viſibles diſappear'd, they were ſuppos'd to be in Darkneſs and Deſtruction and in the Region thereof, which is Hades, the ſame with the Hebrew Sheol; and this is the Notion of Hades in thoſe places of Scripture, wherein it is join'd with Death (the Gates of Hades are the ſame with the Gates of Death or Deſtruction,) as it is in ſeveral places both of the Old and New Teſtament and of the Apocrypha. But there is another Hades in the New Teſtament, which is not in the Old; for in one place (and no more) it ſignifieth the Place or Region of unhappy departed Souls. Luc. 16. 23. The reaſon why it ſo ſignifieth in the New Teſtament, is, becauſe the Jews in the later times of their Commonwealth borrow'd ſeveral Notions from the Pagans. Hades was us'd in their ſenſe amongſt the Jews in our Saviour's time (as appeareth from Joſephus;) and it was but reaſonable, that our Saviour and the Evangeliſts ſhould ſymbolize with the Jews in their Notion of Hades, ſo far as was not unfit and incommodious. But to uſe Hades, to ſignifie in the large ſenſe of Joſephus and the Pagan Theologers, was extremely unfit and incommodious, and therefore the holy Writers abſolutely decline it; inſomuch that S. Auſtin with all his diligence could not find, that Infernus (the ſame with Hades) was ever taken in Scripture in a good ſenſe or ever ſignified Paradiſe. And he argueth with great Reaſon from the Saying of Abraham to Dives, between us and you there is a great Gulf fix'd; (k) it may ſufficiently appear (as I ſuppoſe,) that the Boſom of Abraham, the place of ſo great Felicity, is not any part or member of Infernus. In the Nature of the thing it is a grand Incongruity, to ſuppoſe, that Paradiſe is a Region of the Infernal Parts (the Manſions below;) and if the holy Writers did comprehend Paradiſe in the Name of Hades, would they without any limitation of Senſe diſcourſe of caſting Hades into the Lake of Fire? If Hades in our Religion muſt ſignifie in the large Paganical Notion, we muſt jumble and confound things at an unholy Paganical rate; we muſt ſay with the Pagans; the Souls both of good and bad go to one Hades, Rewards and Puniſhments are in one Hades, Paradiſe and the Hell of the damned are but ſeveral Provinces of one Kingdom of Hades, and it is moſt agreeable to this Notion of Hades, to ſuppoſe the Divine Judicature, Rewards and Puniſhments and the Boſom of Abraham, to be all Subterraneous. The Seat and receptacle of the Souls of the Pious (l) Joſephus ſometimes calleth χῶρον οὐρανοῦ τὸν ἁγιώτατον, the moſt holy place of Heaven. Heaven therefore muſt be reckon'd a Region of Hades, and our Lord's Prayer may run thus in Greek (ſome ſay, that it hath run thus in vulgar Greek,) πάτερ ἡμῶν ὁ ἐν ᾅδῃ, Pater noſter qui es in Inferno.

(s) Lex. Heptaglot. in voce פרדס

(t) S. Cyr. in Johann. p. 2.

(u) S. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. l. 12. c. 34.

(w) J. Mart. Ep. ad Diognet. p. 502.

(x) Alleg. l. 1. p. 35. ed. Gr. Paris.

(y) Μέλλων εὐσεβίης ἱερὸν παράδεισον ἀνοίγειν.

(z) Locus divinæ amænitatis recipiendis ſanctorum ſpiritibus deſtinatus. Apol. c. 47.

(a) Hoornbeck c. Jud. l. 2. c. 7. Lightfoot Hor. in Luc. 16. 22. Buxt. Lex. Talm. col. 1802.

(b) Not. in Luc. 23. 43. v. Windet. de vit. ſanct. p. 133.

(c) Promiſſio Paradiſi viventis Dei regnum eſt. S. Hilar. de Trin. l. 10. Hic ad Paradiſum reduces facit, hic ad cœlorum regna perducit. S. Cypr. ad Demetr. Patriam noſtram Paradiſum computamus. Idem de mortal.

(d) Lightfoot Hor. in Luc. 23. 43.

(e) Eam regionem ſinum dico Abrahæ, etſi non cæleſtem, ſubliviorem tamen inferis interim refrigerium præbituram animabus juſtorum. Donec conſummatio rerum reſurrectionem omnium plenitudine mercedis expungat. Tertul. c. Marcion. l. 4. c. 34. Exeuntes de corpore, ad introitum illum regni cæleſtis, per cuſtodiam Domini fideles omnes reſervabuntur, in ſinu ſcilicet interim Abrahæ collocati: Quo adire impios interjectum Chaos inhibet, quouſque introeundi rurſum in regnum cælorum tempus adveniat. S. Hilar. in Pſal. 120.

(f) Hom. 1. de Jejun.

(3.) As ſome ancient Writers of the Church have placed the ſupernal Paradiſe in the infernal Region, ſo by a like untoward conceit others of them have placed the Moſaic Paradiſe in the ſupernal Parts, conceiving it to have been far higher than our Earth and raiſed near the Orb of the Moon. Even S. Baſil hath compoſed a moſt Romantic Elogy of Paradiſe ſtiling it ἀνεπισκότιστον διὰ τὸ ὕψος, not liable to any obſcuration becauſe of its altitude; and Gr. Naz. ſpeaketh of it, as if he knew not what to make of it, (m) ὅς τίς ποτε ἦν ὁ παράδεισος οὗτος, whatſoever this Paradiſe was. S. Chryſoſtom obſerveth (n) that Moſes nameth the place of the Situation of Paradiſe, that triflers might not vent their Fabuloſities and deceive the Simple, affirming μὴ εἶναι ἐν τῇ γῇ τὸν παράδεισον, ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, that not Earth but Heaven is the place of Paradiſe; for if notwithſtanding the holy Scripture hath us'd ſo much accuracy, yet ſome highly conceited of their Eloquence and ſecular Philoſophy have not forborn to contradict the Letter of Scripture, and to affirm, that Paradiſe was not upon Earth, where would they have ſtopp'd, if Moſes had not deſcrib'd it with accuracy and without all loftineſs of ſtyle? To raiſe the Moſaic Paradiſe to the Orb of the Moon, or to make it a penſile Garden hanging between Earth and Heaven, was an approach to Origen's extravagance, who raiſed it to the Third Heaven

---

(g) Grot. ...r. Mon... Ap... ...rat. 1. ... c3. ...c. Anſw. ...the Jeſ. Challenge ...Limb ... Per... ...v. T. 1. ...7 c. 14.

(h) Sixt. Amain. Antib. Bibl. p. 949. Bellarm de Grat. 1. hom. c. 12. Petav. T. 3. de op. l. 1. c. 5. & T. 1. l. 7. c. 14. Joh. Gregor. Not. & obſ. c. 18.

(i) Not. in Luc. 16. 23. & in c. 23. 43.

Pſ. 27. 20. Iſ. 5. 14. In the Chalday Oracles we have ζήτησον παράδεισον, i. e. τὸν ἀμφιφαῆ τῆς ψυχῆς χῶρον, the lucid receptacle of the Soul, ſaith Pletho.

(k) Satis, ut opinor, appareat, non eſſe quandam partem & quaſi membrum Inferorum tantæ illius felicitatis ſinum. De Gen. ad lit. l. 12. c. 33. & Ep. 99.

(l) Grot. Not. in Luc. 16. 23.

(m) Or. 38. p 618.

(n) In Gen. λογ. ιγ.

Orig. Periarch. l. 2. c. 12.

(which is called by S. Auſtin, Paradiſus Paradiſorum) to an immenſe diſtance from the Nature of our firſt Parents, (who having Terreſtrial Animal Bodies were incapable of inhabiting any other Paradiſe but a Terreſtrial-animal) from the ſenſe alſo and ſtyle of Moſes and the Nature of his Hiſtory. His Hiſtory is part of the Old Teſtament, which (o) directè ordinabat ad bonum ſenſile & terrenum, directly tended to the ſenſible and terrene good; and is ſuch a part of the Old Teſtament, which is ſymbolical and typical, and therefore conſiſteth of temporalia quidem, in figura tamen ſpiritualia, things Temporal that are Figures of things Spiritual. His Paradiſe was a Terreſtrial Garden, as the Name of it importeth, for גן which ſignifieth what we commonly call a Garden, is uſually rendred by the LXX παράδεισος, and παράδεισος ſignifieth a Garden in the Story of Suſanna and the Book of Eccleſiaſticus, and פרדס (Paradiſe) ſignifieth a Garden or Orchard in the Targum frequently and in holy Scripture. Neh. 2. 8. Cant. 2. 13. Eccl. 2. 5. His Paradiſe was the Garden of God, which in the Old Teſtament ſignifieth a Terreſtrial Animal kind of Paradiſe, a place on Earth furniſh'd with delicious accommodations for this Animal ſenſitive Life in a ſuperlative degree according to the Hebrew mode of expreſſing the ſuperlative degree by the Name of God. So the Prince of Tyre becauſe of his ſuperlative riches, affluence and delicioſneſs is ſaid, to have been in Eden the Garden of God. So the King of Aſſyria is called the higheſt Tree in the Garden of God (a Prince who over-topp'd all others that were in flouriſhing ſtate) to ſignifie his ſuperlative ſecular Sublimity and Proſperity. The Cedars in the Garden of God could not hide him. Not any Tree in the Garden of God was like unto him. Becauſe of the multitude of his Branches all the Trees of Eden, that were in the Garden of God envied him. The Plain of Jordan becauſe it was well watered, rich and fertile, is ſaid to have been as the Garden of the Lord. A rich and beauteous Country is by the Prophet Joel compar'd to the Garden of Eden. And to Iſrael God promiſeth, he will make her Wilderneſs like Eden, and her Deſart like the Garden of the Lord. Iſa. 51. 3. So it far'd with the Land of Canaan, when Iſrael was reſtor'd from their Captivity, the Land was reſtor'd from its Waſts and Deſolateneſs, and became like the Garden of Eden, Ezek. 36. 35. They muſt be very dull of apprehenſion, or blinded by prejudice, who underſtand not from theſe Scripture-notices of Paradiſe, that it was a Terreſtrial Garden (and that its Trees, Rivers, Gold, precious Stones were really what they are called,) or as Moſes deſcribeth it, that is was a Garden planted Eaſtward in Eden, which appeareth from other places of Scripture, to have been the Name of a Country and of a Country about Babylon, and it is join'd with other places that are very well known (Haran and Rezeph,) and appeareth to have retain'd its Name for many Ages. Gen. 4. 16. 2 King. 19. 12. Ezek. 27. 23. Eden in Hebrew is not only the proper Name of a Country, but an Appellative that ſignifieth Pleaſantneſs (the Greek ἡδονὴ is doubtleſs derived from it,) the Country of Eden was ſo denominated from its pleaſantneſs and delicacy, the Garden of Eden is tranſlated by the Greek and Latin Interpreters Paradiſus voluptatis, and every Tree that is pleaſant to the ſight and good for food is ſaid to have grown there, which ſpeaketh it to have been a Terreſtrial-animal kind of Paradiſe. The richneſs of Eden and its Garden was in great degree owing to the beauteous River that water'd it, which Moſes deſcribeth as a River that became into four heads, that were heads of diviſion, and conſequently the Rivers of Paradiſe were theſe four diviſions Piſon, Gihon, Hiddekel and Euphrates. Two of theſe diviſions (Hiddekel and Euphrates) are famouſly known; and in Paſitigris there is a remainder of Piſon, which is ſaid to compaſs or run along by the whole Land of Havilah (a Country well known,) and Gihon is ſaid to compaſs or run along by the whole Land of Cuſh, which in all probability is the ſame with Suſiana call'd by the Perſians Chuzeſtan or the Province of Chus. The Moſaic Paradiſe therefore ſeemeth to have been ſituated upon the Canal or great ſtream which Tigris and Euphrates join'd together make betwixt their coming together and ſeparating from one another; for this great Stream is the River that went out of Eden to water the Garden, and below the Garden was parted (into Piſon and Gihon) and became into four heads, there being but two (a great way above the Garden) antecedently to this Partition. In which account of the Situation of Paradiſe there is nothing that will ſeem to claſh with the ſenſe of Moſes, if we are acquainted with his way of repreſenting things: Nor is there any thing in his deſcription of Paradiſe, which importeth, that four Rivers iſſu'd from one Fountain in Eden, or that Piſon and Gihon were the primary Rivers of Paradiſe (which are only mention'd in the firſt place becauſe neareſt the Writer, and becauſe Euphrates needed no deſcriptive Notices,) ſo that theſe Objections againſt the Geographical part of the Moſaic deſcription of Paradiſe vaniſh into nothing. But from this part of his deſcription it appeareth, to have been ſituated in thoſe parts of the World, which were firſt inhabited, and which are renowned for their Beauty and luxuriant Fertility, (p) where pleaſant Fruits abound, and their Trees are always Green; where the Palm-tree (one great Wonder of Nature) groweth of its own accord, and affordeth the People Bread, Wine, Honey, Vinegar and Garments; where their Corn yieldeth two hundred fold, the Leaves of Wheat and Barly are almoſt four Fingers broad, Millet and Seſame are in height like unto Trees; where they are conſtrained twice to mow down their Corn-fields, and a third time to eat them up with Sheep, and the Seeds of Corn falling afford them a ſecond Year's Harveſt; and where they drive their Cattel from Paſture, leſt they ſhould deſtroy themſelves by ſatiety.

'Ου μὲν τοι κείνης γε νομεὺς ὀνόσαιτο βοώτης
'Ουδ' ὅστις σύριγγι κερώνυχα πᾶνα γεραίρων
Μήλοις ἀγραύλοισιν ἐφέσπεται. 'Ουδὲ μὲν ὕλην
Παντοίην φυτοεργὸς ἀνὴρ ἀθερίσσαιτο καρπῶν.
Τοίη ἐπὶ κείνης ἄροσις πέλει· 'Εν μὲν ἀέξειν
Ποίην, ἐν δὲ νομεὺς εὐανθέας· 'Εν δὲ ϗ ἀνδρῶν
Φύτλην καλλίστην τε ϗ ἀθανάτοισιν ὁμοίην.

The Cattel there have feeding opulent,
And Pan's brisk Piper's Flocks find full content.
All ſtore of Fruits the Planter's pains Rewards,
And ploughing there a vaſt increaſe affords.
There Paſtures flouriſh, Herbs grow great, and (Men
Surpaſſing fair and like the Gods are ſeen.

The Moſaic Paradiſe ſeemeth the more Paradiſaical, becauſe of the richneſs of the Neighbouring (o) Aquin. 1. 2. qu. 91. Art. 5. S. Aug. ſup. Johan. Tract. 25.

Ezek. 28. 13. and 31. 8, 9.

Gen. 13. 10.

Joel 2. 3.

See Hætius of Paradiſe and Bp. Patrick on Gen. 2.

(p) Sir W. Raleigh. Hiſt. B. 1. c. 3. S. 12, 15. Grot. Not. in Gen. 2. 10.

bouring Country, that border'd upon it; of Havilah Moſes ſaith, (q) there is Gold, and the Gold of that Land is good (eximious,) there is Bdellium (Pearls) and the Onyx Stone, which is a precious Stone. As the Richneſs of this neighbouring Country addeth to the Luſtre of the Garden of Eden, ſo being celebrated by Moſes in the Deſcription of his Paradiſe, it is thereby repreſented as a Terreſtrial Animal and Mundane kind of Paradiſe. The erecting ſuch a kind of Paradiſe was (as ſuch) an Inſtance of the Bounty of Providence; but the making it Symbolical and Typical was an effect of the wonderful Wiſdom of God. So the Wiſdom of ancient Times was (r) ἡ διὰ συμϐόλων φιλοσοφία, a Philoſophy by Symbols.

(q) Bochart. de Animal. par. 1. l. 1. c. 9.

(r) Philo de vit. Moſ. l. 1. p. 412. ed. Gr. Pariſ.

ARTICLE 3.

The Moſaic Creation was no higher than Terreſtrial-animal, but ſo as to be Symbolical.

FOR the Moſaic Hiſtory of the Creation in the whole of it is nothing elſe but an Hiſtory of the Production of a World of Terreſtrial Animals and of God's making proviſion for them as ſuch. All things that are in it are but Terreſtrial Animal things in the Nature or Deſign of them; for there can be nothing in it, that is an higher Good than its Paradiſe (the Summum Bonum,) which is meerly Terreſtrial-animal (it knoweth no heavenly kind of Paradiſe Celeſtial or Sub-celeſtial;) therefore it aſcendeth to nothing higher than what is Terreſtrial-animal. (s) The ancient Hebrews reckoned ſeven things, that were created before the World, and one of theſe was Paradiſe; they could not find therefore any Notice of their Supernal Paradiſe in the Moſaic Hiſtory of the Creation; of which no imaginable reaſon can be aſſign'd but this only, It aſcendeth not to things of that Nature; therefore it aſcendeth to nothing higher than what is Terreſtrial-animal. This aſſuredly is its genuine Character, as may be clearly demonſtrated from ſeveral other Heads of Argument.

(s) P. Fagius in Gen. 2. 8.

I. The Apoſtle contradiſtinguiſheth the two Adams and their two Conſtitutions of things: the one is the Heavenly and the Spiritual, the other is the Earthly and the Animal. The Earthly and the Animal is that which is ſuch contradiviſively and ſpecificative (of proper kind and quality;) therefore the firſt Adam's conſtitution of things is nothing higher than that which is of kind and quality the Terreſtrial Animal. This all Men will grant touching that conſtitution of things, which was conſequent upon the Fall of our firſt Parents; but the Apoſtle is not ſpeaking of that conſtitution of things, which was conſequent to their Fall, but of that which was antecedent to it, and which was the ſame with their Terreſtrial Creation, 1 Cor. 15. 45.—49. The firſt Man Adam was made a living Soul, which is the higheſt production in the Hiſtory of the Moſaic Creation; therefore it aſcendeth to nothing higher than what is Terreſtrial-animal. (t) נפש חיה aliud nihil eſt quàm חיה, ζῶον, vivens, per animam ſcilicet, uno ergo verbo reddi poteſt animal. A living Soul is in Hebrew the ſame with ζῶον in Greek or Animal in Latin, whence every Brute-animal is call'd a living Soul as living by a Soul, Gen. 1. 24. (u) We find both a living Soul and the Breath (or Spirit) of Life attributed to Brute-animals in Scripture. By the Breath of Life and a living Soul; the Phraſe of Scripture ſignifieth Animals, that is, animated Bodies. So the Text of Moſes muſt be underſtood, Gen. 2. 7. The Lord God formed Man of the Duſt of the Ground, and breathed into his Noſtrils the Breath of Life; and Man became a living Soul. For the Breath of Life breath'd into Man's Noſtrils can ſignifie nothing elſe but the Breath of Reſpiration. Mercerus acknowledgeth, that Job alludeth to this place of Moſes, when he thus expreſſeth his vital Breath of Reſpiration; while my Breath is in me, and the Spirit of God is in my Noſtrils. The Breath of Reſpiration therefore is the Spirit or Inſpiration of God. The Breath of Reſpiration is alſo the Breath of Life, and nothing elſe is ever called in Scripture by that Name, Gen. 6. 17. Job 12. 10. Pſal. 104. 29. and 135. 17. and 146. 4. and 150. 6. Iſa. 2. 22. Jer. 10. 14. Dan. 5. 23. Hab. 2. 19: Act. 17. 25. when God in the Prophet expreſſeth his Intention, to make the dry Bones live, he uſeth theſe Phraſes, I will cauſe Breath to enter into you, and put Breath in you, come, O Breath, and breath upon the ſlain: Therefore the making Adam alive conſiſted in cauſing Breath (the Breath of Reſpiration) to enter into him. A late Phyſician ſaith, (w) The Life of Man in this World runneth parallel with his Breath, Pſal. 104. 29. Job 27. 3. and the Death of Man is ſtill ſignify'd by the departure of his Breath. It is ſaid of the Widow's Child, his Sickneſs was ſo ſore, that there was no Breath left in him. Plainly throughout the whole word of God, Breath, and Life, and Soul, and Spirit are ſynonymous, and often made exegetical one of another. If an Intellectual Soul might be called Breath and the Breath of Life (although none will call it ſo unleſs the Stoicks and their Followers,) yet what Breath is that which is breath'd into Man's Noſtrils, and is the Breath of his Noſtrils, but the Breath of Reſpiration only? Gen. 7. 22. 2 Sam. 22. 16. Iſa. 2. 22. Lam. 4. 20. This Moſaic Phraſe therefore Niſchmath chajim, the Breath of Life doth not ſignifie an Intellectual Soul (although this was neceſſarily conjoyn'd with Adam's Body) but only his vital Breath (his Animal-vital Agitation,) which conſtituted him a living Soul. Other Animals have vital Breath in common with Man, but Moſes particularly remarketh it, to have been inſpir'd into Man becauſe of Man's Dignity: For although the Breath of Life implieth nothing of Man's precellency above other Animals, yet the Name of Man doth; who having the Breath of Life inſpir'd into him became animated as to the Life of an Animal, and conſequently became ſuch a noble Animal, as Man eſſentially is. (x) Nondum tamen ſpiritualem hominem debemus intelligere, qui factus eſt in animam viventem, ſed adhuc animalem: But we ought not to think, that as yet he was ſpiritual, who was made a living Soul, as yet he was but Animal. S. Auſtin thinketh, that afterwards he became Spiritual (when he was plac'd in Paradiſe:) but in the Moſaic Hiſtory there is no ground for his Imagination: Nor ought we to think, that he was made Spiritual, becauſe Moſes ſaith, God created Man in his own Image; for the Image of God muſt here ſignifie in the Old Teſtament Notion of it; but it cannot be ſhew'd, that the Image of God in the Old Teſtament ever ſignifieth the Divine Virtuous Image of God. No ſuch Notion of it appeareth in the Old Teſtament; but on the contrary, (t) Hotting. de Creatione. p. 228.

Job 27. 3.

Ezek. 37. 5, 6, 9.

(w) Mr. Smith King Sol. Picture of old age. p. 135.

Gat. Not. in Ant. p. 51.

(x) S. Aug. de Gen. c. Manich. l. 2. c. 8.

(u) Et animam viventem & ſpiritum vitæ etiam in pecoribus invenimus. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 13. c. 24. Intelligimus ſpiritum vitæ & animam viventem ſcripturam ſuo more dixiſſe, cùm animalia, id eſt corpora animata vellet intelligi. Ibid.

contrary, Mankind that are meerly Animal, are ſuppoſ'd to bear God's Image, Gen. 9. 6. Jam. 3. 9. 1 Cor. 11. 7.

II. As this Moſaic Hiſtory touching the Creation of Man aſcendeth to nothing higher than the making ſuch a Terreſtrial Animal (not aſcending to the Creation of his Intellectual Soul:) So the Hiſtory aſcendeth not to the Creation of any living Creatures higher than Terreſtrial Animals; for it ſaith not a Syllable touching the Creation of the Animalia Sanctitatis (as the Jews call them) the Holy Angels. In reſpect of Animals therefore the whole of it falleth within the comprehenſion of Terreſtrial Animals; for the Jews obſerve, that in Geneſi nulla mentio eſt creationis Angelorum; yet on the other hand the generality of them ſay, there is mention of the creation of thoſe noble Creatures though not expreſs: ſome of them ſay, that (becauſe of their ſwiftneſs) they are ſignify'd by the Fowl that fly in the midſt of Heaven, which were created the fifth Day. Others think, they are ſignify'd in the word Heaven; and ſome think, they are ſignify'd in the word Elohim, as if the Senſe was, He whoſe Eſſence is unknown created the Angels. Others ſay, the Spirit of God moving upon the Face of the Waters ſignifieth the Angels; and ſome ſay, they are ſignify'd by the Light created the firſt Day. But the more Judicious of them ſay, (y) In the Hiſtory of the Creation only viſibles (quæ viſu percipiuntur) are treated of, ſuch as Heaven, the Earth, Sun, Moon, Stars, Plants, Animals and ſuch more; not ſuch things which being immaterial are only diſcerned by the Mind. So Chriſtian Divines ſay, (z) Moſes did not propoſe to himſelf, to write of the Creation of all things, but only of the things viſible and corporeal, as Baſil affirmeth and Philoponus after him. He hath therefore treated of the Production of the Corporeal World only, touching the origin of Angels he is altogether ſilent. (a) We ought to remember, that Moſes in his ſix Days Creation-Work hath not meddled with the creation of any thing Spiritual and Incorporeal; but of ſuch things only which are Corporeal and fall under Senſe. No mention of Angels therefore is to be look'd for there. In this Creation Man is (b) creaturarum omnium coronis & ultima meta, the ſummity and the laſt end. Yet he hath not ſo much as a particular Day allotted him for his Creation; but he is created on the ſame ſixth Day with the reſt of the Terreſtrial Animals, having a like Generation with them, and dying as they, as Abarbinel diſcourſeth.

III. If the Moſaic Hiſtory of the Creation is totally ſilent touching the creation of Angels, it cannot be the Hiſtory of the creation of the Heaven of Angels (the Heaven of Beatitude,) nor of the City and Kingdom of God, the Commonwealth of Saints, the Catholick Church (which mainly conſiſteth of the Holy Angels, and conſequently it cannot be an Hiſtory of creating Men Saints (the Sons of the Divine Family and Citizens of the Kingdom of God:) but it muſt be nothing more than an Hiſtory of creating Men as ſuch a Species of Terreſtrial Animals in conſort with the reſt of the Terreſtrial Animals. Accordingly things are repreſented in the Moſaic Hiſtory; for after the Brute-animals were produc'd, Man (the Rational Animal) is immediately created, to have dominion over them, Gen. 1. 26. Such a Production we have elſewhere called Zoogony.

IV. The Deſign of the Moſaic Creation (as the Hiſtory repreſenteth it) was not to build an Habitation for the Holy Angels but meerly for Terreſtrial Animals, of which Man is the Chieftain; in ſuch Senſe therefore it is meerly a Terreſtrial Animal Creation. (c) If any one (ſaith Lactantius) conſidereth the Adminiſtration of the whole World, he will diſcern, how truly the Stoicks ſay, that the World was made for our ſake: for all things of which the World conſiſteth, and which it generateth out of it ſelf, are accommodated to the Utility of Man. Man uſeth Fire for Warmth and Light, for dreſſing Meat and making Iron Inſtruments. He uſeth Fountains for Drink and Waſhing: Rivers to water the Fields and terminate Countries: He uſeth the Earth for variety of Fruits, the hilly parts for Vineyards, the Mountains for Trees and Woods, the Plains for Corn: He uſeth the Sea not only for Commerce and to carry Riches out of far diſtant Regions, but for plenty of all manner of Fiſh. And if he maketh uſe of theſe Elements that are very near him, doubtleſs Heaven is of uſe to him; for the things Celeſtial have their Offices conducive to the Fertility of the Earth, whence we have our Suſtenance. The Sun by reſtleſs courſes and unequal ſpaces maketh his annual rounds, and either riſing openeth the Day for Labour, or ſetting bringeth the Night upon us for Reſt: and by his further departure to the South, and his nearer acceſs to the North maketh the Viciſſitudes of Winter and Summer, that by the Winter-moiſture and Froſt the Earth may be fatten'd, and by the Summer-heats the Graſs, and Corn, and Fruits may have their due Concoction, Maturation and Induration. The Moon alſo the Governeſs of the Night loſing and recovering her Light by turns thereby meaſureth the Monthly Spaces, and by her Brightneſs illuminateth the horrid Darkneſs of the Night, that Labours and Journeys may commodiouſly be done in that time. The other Stars alſo by their riſing or ſetting determine certain Seaſons and commodious Times, and conduce to Navigation (that Ships may not wander in the Ocean,) the Pilot rightly obſerving them arriveth at his deſigned Port. By the Winds the Clouds are gather'd, that ſo the Plants and the Seeds that are ſown may be water'd, and the Vineyards and Orchards may abound with Fruit. Theſe things are exhibited by turns and in a round, that ſo the Life of Man may never fail of Suſtenance. This World is deſign'd by Parental Providence, to be a commodious Habitation for Man, and the ſame bounteous Providence hath repleniſh'd the Air with Fowls, the Sea with Fiſhes, the Earth with fourfooted Beaſts. (d) It appeareth therefore, that the World was made for Animals, for they (having perceptive Life) enjoy thoſe things of which it conſiſteth; which that they might live and ſubſiſt, all things neceſſary are afforded them at certain times: The other Animals are made for Man. So the ancient Writers of the Church ſuppoſe (that the other Animals were made meerly for the uſe and ſervice of Man:) but they might better have ſuppos'd with Socrates, that the World was made by a wiſe Opificer and a Lover of Animals, who alone are capable of enjoying it.

V. As the Hiſtory of the Moſaic Creation aſcendeth to no Animals higher than Man, ſo (in the Letter of it) it maketh not any proviſion for Man, but what is meerly Terreſtrial-animal; which ſpeaketh it nothing more than a

---

(y) Men. ben Iſr. Qu. in Gen. p. 21.

(z) Petav. T. 3. de Ang. l. 1. c. 15. S. 1.

(a) Ibid. de op. l. 2. c. 3. S. 8.

(b) Hotting. de creat. p. 258, 263.

(c) Lactan. de ira Dei, c. 13.

(d) Apparet ergo Animantium cauſa Mundum eſſe conſtructum, quoniam rebus iis quibus conſtat, animantes fruuntur: qua ut vivere, ut conſtare poſſent, omnia his neceſſaria temporibus certis ſubminiſtrantur. cæteras autem animantes hominis cauſa eſſe fictas. Lactant. Inſtit. l. 7. c. 4.

Terreſtrial-animal kind of Creation. For if we ſurvey the Moſaic Hexaemeron, we ſhall find, that the Product of every day's work (as it is ſuch) is nothing more than an Utility and Conveniency provided and deſigned for this Terreſtrial Animal Life. The firſt Day's Work is a Creation of the Viciſſitude of our Day and Night, which is manifeſtly nothing more than a conveniency for Terreſtrial Animals. So the ſecond Day's Work meerly reſpecteth their Utility (as ſuch;) for it is the Creation of our Firmament for the diviſion of the upper from the lower Waters; without which diviſion of Waters the Earth could not be a frugiferous Region, nor could it be a luminous Region without a diaphanous Firmament. The third Day's Work is nothing elſe but a ſeparation of our Sea and dry Land, and a production of our Vegetables; as the fifth and ſixth Day's Work is nothing elſe but a production of our Terreſtrial Animals. The fourth Day's Work at the firſt ſight looketh great; but as it is ſuch (the fourth Day's Work) the Product of it is nothing more than an Utility and Conveniency provided and deſign'd for this Terreſtrial Animal Life, as is apparent from the Sacred Text. And God ſaid, let there
Gen. 1. 14—19. be Lights in the Firmament of the Heaven, to divide the Day from the Night: and let them be for Signs, and for Seaſons, and for Days, and Tears. And let them be for Lights in the Firmament of Heaven, to give Light upon the Earth; and it was ſo. And God made two great Lights; the greater Light to rule the Day, and the leſſer Light to rule the Night; he made the Stars alſo. And God ſet them in the Firmament of the Heaven, to give Light upon the Earth: And to rule over the Day and over the Night, and to divide the Light from the Darkneſs: and God ſaw that it was good. Throughout the whole of it the ſacred Text ſo apparently reſpecteth the Utility and Conveniency of this Terreſtrial Animal Life of Man, that S. Chry-
(e) In Gen. Hom. n. ſoſtom ſaith of him; (e) for him all theſe things were produc'd, the Heaven, the Earth, the Sea, the Sun, Moon, Stars, creeping things, Cattle, all Irrational Animals. Theſe are great things; but they are not a ſufficient enumeration of all the Utilities and Conveniences, which the Divine Beneficence provided for Man in the Moſaic Creation; for God provided a Wife for him (becauſe it is not good for Man to be alone;) And
Gen. 1. 28, 29, 30. God bleſſed our firſt Parents, and ſaid unto them, Be fruitful and multiply and repleniſh the Earth, and ſubdue it; and have Dominion over the Fiſh of the Sea, and over the Fowl of the Air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the Earth. And God ſaid, behold I have given you every Herb bearing Seed, which is upon the Face of all the Earth, and every Tree, in the which is the Fruit of a Tree yielding Seed: to you it ſhall be for Meat. And to every Beaſt of the Earth, and to every Fowl of the Air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the Earth, wherein there is Life. I have given you every green Herb for Meat: and it was ſo. But the Divine Beneficence to Man did not ſtop here; for not content to have aſſign'd him in general Plants and Fruits of the Earth for his Food, God moreover provided an Earthly Paradiſe for him repleniſh'd with Plants and Trees of the moſt excellent kinds, a Terreſtrial Garden garniſh'd with Fruits (delicious both to the Eye and Taſt) well water'd and beautify'd with a River and bordering upon a Land of Gold and Pearls and precious Stones. And this is all the Proviſion that is made for Man in this Moſaic Hiſtory of the Creation and of Paradiſe; the ſumm total whereof is nothing but Accommodations for this Terreſtrial Animal Life: But where is there any Proviſion made of Light and Life, of Food and Suſtenance, of Solace and ſuitable Society, of the Bread and Water of Life, of Gold and Treaſure, of Pretioſities and Felicities, and of an Inheritance for the Soul? Where is there the leaſt Syllable of notice or mention of any concern for the Soul and the Soul-goods throughout the Hiſtory of the Hexaemeron and of Paradiſe? was the ſtate of Life and Salvation provided for the Soul of the firſt Man, when he was made a living Soul? was the holy Spirit provided to guide and animate him? or was he made a Citizen of Heaven, of the Society of the Bleſſed, and an Heir of Life Eternal (as he muſt be, if he was a Saint of God,) when he was plac'd in his Terreſtrial Paradiſe? If this Moſaic Hiſtory aſcendeth not to ſuch things as theſe, it tranſcendeth not the line and level of a Terreſtrial Animal Creation.

VI. In the Books of Divines we have a Theologia primi hominis; it is ſuppos'd, that he was created in the Divine Virtuous Image of God, and that the Covenant of Works touching his Soul-Intereſts was made with him and in him with all Mankind; but we may pore out our Eyes, before we can find the leaſt Syllable of theſe matters in this whole Moſaic Hiſtory. Further than as an Hiſtoriographer of what concerneth Terreſtrial Animals Moſes in this Hiſtory ſaith nothing of the knowledge of God, nothing of his Eſſence and Attributes, nothing of his Divine Nature and Imperial Eſtate, nothing of his Rights, Dues aud Prerogatives, nothing of his Kingdom and Soul-ſovereignty, nothing touching his true Worſhip and Service, nor any thing touching his Worſhip and Service in general, not ſo much as any thing touching the Service of Sacrifice. Man is eſſentially (more or leſs) a Religious Animal, he is neceſſarily under the Law of Religion, and the Law of Nature is ſuppos'd to be written in the Heart of Man: Yet even of the Law of Nature and the multifarious Branches thereof here is no notice in this Moſaic Hiſtory, here is no Moral Philoſophy (as there is no Natural Philoſophy,) no Divine Morality, nor any thing of the Divine Moral Law, the great Rules and Precepts of Sobriety, Righteouſneſs and Godlineſs. Man muſt be ſuppos'd, to have an Heaven-born Soul and Soul-intereſts, yet in this Hiſtory (the Letter of it) there is as little notice of the Heaven-born Soul of Man, as there is of the Creation and Fall of Angels (that is, none at all;) here is nothing touching the Origin or Immortality of the Incorporeal Soul of Man, nothing touching care of the Soul, nothing touching Soul-concerns, nothing touching the End and Buſineſs, the Holineſs and true Happineſs of Man; nothing of Salvation and the way to it, nothing of an Heaven of Beatitude or an Heavenly Life, nothing of Hell and Damnation, nothing of another World, nothing of Spirituals and Eternals. This Moſaic Hiſtory therefore can be nothing elſe (in the Letter of it) but an Hiſtory of what belongeth to God's creating Terreſtrial Animals (as they are ſuch) and making proviſion for them. But the more to aſcertain this Article, we will not content our ſelves with a general view of this Moſaic Hiſtory, we will diſtinctly ſurvey the ſeveral parts of it.

(1.) The firſt part of it is the Summary of the Hexaemeron, which is thus repreſented by

(f) In Gen. λογ. 3.

S. Chryſoſtom; (f) That you may underſtand the Superlative Philanthropy, which the Lord of all ſheweth to our kind, he ſtretched out the Heaven, expanded the Earth, made the Firmament as a middle Wall dividing the Waters, then he commanded a collection of the Waters, which he called Seas, and the dry Land Earth, which he adorn'd with the productions of Seeds and Herbs, and then paſs'd to the making two great Lights and the variety of the Stars thereby making the Pulchritude of Heaven; then out of the Waters he produc'd live Creatures and Fowls that fly upon the Earth in the open Firmament of Heaven; and having fulfill'd the number of five Days, becauſe it was requiſite, that Land-animals ſhould be made, he commanded theſe alſo to be produc'd, both thoſe that are fit for Food and thoſe that are uſeful for Service, Beaſts and creeping things; then at laſt (having formed all things, having ſet Viſibles in due order, having prepar'd a ſumptuous Table repleniſh'd with all manner of Food in abundant Richneſs and Affluence, and as one may ſay, having made things all about of regial illuſtrious form, variouſly adorning things above and below and making them reſplendent, then at laſt he maketh him that was to enjoy all theſe, giving him the Dominion of all Viſibles, and ſhewing how far this Animal excell'd all things that were made, ſeeing he commanded them all to be under his Power and Adminiſtration. In this Summary of the Hexaemeron a mighty goodneſs and goodneſs towards Man is viſible; but the Products of it in the Creation and Furniture of the World are only ſuch Benefits which are common to our kind (as S. Chryſoſtom ſpeaketh;) for the Lights of Heaven are imparted to all Nations under Heaven, and the Earth God hath given to the Children of Men. The goodneſs of God to Man in this Moſaic Hexaemeron (abſtracting from what is Typical and Symbolical in it) is ſeen only in making proviſion for his Natural Life, not in providing the Goods of the Kingdom of God for his Soul, of which there is no notice in this Summary of the Hexaemeron, but all is Mundane and appertaining to this Terreſtrial Animal Life. *That was not firſt which is Spiritual, but that which is Natural (Animal;) and afterward that which is Spiritual*, 1 Cor 15. 46.

Deut. 4. 19. Pſal. 115. 16.

(2.) A ſecond part of the Hiſtory is an Appendix to the Summary of the Hexaemeron (part of which Appendix is mention'd by S. Chryſoſtom in his Summary) Gen. 1. 28, 29, 30. (g) The Matters of this part of the Hiſtory are contained under three Heads: One is, touching the Benediction of Marriage and the power of begetting Children, which God gave to the firſt married Couple, and in them to others ſucceſſively. Another Head is touching the ſubjecting the Earth to Men, and the Domination which God gave unto them over all Animals terreſtrial, volatile and aquatile. A third Head is touching the Food which they ought to eat, as alſo touching thoſe things which Brute Animals muſt feed upon. All theſe things belong to God's creating Terreſtrial Animals as they are ſuch; to take order for their Propagation and the conſervation of their Species; to appoint Man the Ruler over the Inferiour Animals; and to take care for the Food and Suſtenance both of Man and Beaſt. The Jews ſay, (h) Increaſe and multiply is מצוה גדולה the great Precept, for the ſake whereof all other Precepts in the World are conſtituted, and that the Deſign of it is, that the World may be inhabited (to repleniſh the Earth:) Accordingly they look upon themſelves as oblig'd by it at a great rate. It recommendeth Marriage and ſuiteth with their Animal Propenſions, which is the reaſon, why they magniſie ſuch a Precept.

(g) Zanch. T. 3. de Hom. creat. l. 1. c. 1. S. 22.

(h) Hottin. de Jur. Hebr. Lex. 1.

(3.) A third part of the Hiſtory is touching the impoſing Names upon the ſeveral Species of Animals; which ſheweth, that the Maker of the World concern'd himſelf at a great rate in ſettling the Affairs of the Animal-World, otherwiſe it might ſeem very ſtrange, that every Beaſt of the Field, and every Fowl of the Air ſhould be brought unto Adam, to ſee what he would call them (and as the Text ſaith, they were brought by the Lord God,) and that the firſt uſe which Adam was appointed to make of his Underſtanding, ſhould be the naming of Animals. Some have from thence inferr'd his profound skill in Nature and Philoſophy, and that he underſtood the Natures of thoſe Animals; but there is no reaſon for the making ſuch an Inference. (i) The inferring the boundleſs Skill of Adam from his impoſing upon all things Names ſo apt and ſignificative of their Nature, ſeemeth not to me at all a neceſſary conſequence. There is no need of any great skill or inſight into things, to give any a ſufficiently fitting Name; it may be done well enough from ſome Faculty or Property which is obvious at firſt ſight; as appeareth in thoſe Names of Animals and other things which are extant in Holy Writ. The Names of Animals in Scripture are not taken from their Inferiour Nature, but from ſome Exteriour Properties and Notes of difference, and therefore the impoſing Names on them is not ſo much an argument of Adam's profound knowledge in Nature, as δεσποτείας σύμβολον, a Sign of his Dominion (as S. Chryſoſtom ſpeaketh;) for it belongeth to a Lord and Maſter, to impoſe Names upon his Servants. And as in the new Creation when the ſecond Adam was inſtated in his Dominion, it was but reaſonable, that all the Creatures of the Heavenly World ſhould pay their Homage to him (all the Angels of God were bid to worſhip him, Heb. 1. 6.) So in this Terreſtrial Animal Creation it was but reaſonable, that the firſt Adam ſhould in this manner be inſtated in his Dominion; The ſeveral Species of Terreſtrial Animals were aſſembled, to pay (as it were) their Homage to him and to receive their Names from him. The one (in all reaſon) muſt be thought a Typical Adumbration of the other; but abſtracting from this Typical Adumbration, the aſſembling the Terreſtrial Animals, to receive their Names from the Terreſtrial Adam (probably by a Mandate and ſecret Inſtinct,) to difference and diſtinguiſh them one from another, is nothing more than what belongeth to God's creating Terreſtrial Animals as they are ſuch.

Gen. 2. 19, 20.

(i) Gatak. c. Pfocher. P. 43.

(4.) A fourth part of the Hiſtory is a diſtinct Account of the Formation of Woman (her being made of a Rib taken out of Adam's Side, when he was aſleep, the Fleſh being clos'd up in ſtead thereof) and the Inſtitution of Marriage; which Branch of the Hiſtory hath given occaſion to many little Inquiries (which S. Auſtin, the Jews, and the Schoolmen have made,) one of which was thought of great difficulty by Card. Cajetan; for he relinquiſh'd the literal truth of the Hiſtory, and betook himſelf to meer Allegory, becauſe of this difficulty; It ſeemeth not reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the Rib taken out of Adam's Side was ſuperfluous (for all things were at firſt made in Number, Weight and Meaſure,) and if it was one of thoſe that are natural and neceſſary, Adam muſt be mutilate ever after. But he ought to have conſider'd, that ſome natural parts of an Humane Body are not neceſſary (in any great degree,) as the ערלה which is taken away

Gen. 2. 20—25.

S. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. l. 9. c. 13.

in Circumciſion: So Anatomiſts find in ſome Humane Bodies (k) 13 pair of Ribs on a Side, in the generality of Men only 12 pair on a Side, and in ſome but 11. So trifling a difficulty is this that gravell'd Card. Cajetan. And alike trifling is that difficulty which another Objector urgeth, (l) how the whole Bulk of the Body of a Woman could be made (or built) of but one Rib? for one Rib doth not equalize the hundredth or thouſandth part of the whole Body. And if you ſay, the reſt of the Matter was taken from elſewhere, Eve may be more truly ſaid, to have been formed of that alien Matter than of a Rib of Adam. For in this difficulty there is no difficulty ſave only what ariſeth from the ambiguity of words. Moſes ſaith, The Rib which the Lord God had taken from Man made he (or built he) a Woman; which is a ſort of Architecture contradiſtinct to the forming her out of nothing, or out of the Duſt of the Ground or other alien Matter. Theſe are ſeveral contradiſtinct ways of producing an Humane Body: it may be a Rib formed into a Woman; it may be produc'd meerly ex nihilo, it may be form'd out of the Duſt of the Ground or other alien Matter. The firſt of theſe is the Woman's proper way of production; ſhe was a Rib form'd into a Woman, as Nature formeth an Acorn into an Oak, a Grain of Muſtard-ſeed into a Tree, an Egg into a Giant: Which is not done without the acceſſion of a great deal of alien matter; for it is by the acceſſion of a great deal of alien matter, that an Acorn is formed into an Oak; but as this acceſſion of alien matter doth not hinder, but that an Acorn may be properly ſaid to be formed into an Oak: So the acceſſion of alien matter doth not hinder, but that a Rib may be properly ſaid to be formed into a Woman. And it muſt not be ſaid, that ſhe was formed of alien matter; for that is not her proper way of production, but contradiſtinct thereto; nor had ſhe at all a formation out of it formally as ſuch, but only materially and conſiſtently with her proper way of formation, and ſo far as it was requiſite for the forming a Rib into a Woman.

In order to the taking out one of Adam's Ribs (or a pair of them) it was requiſite, that he ſhould be caſt into a deep Sleep, that he might not withſtand and be reluctant to the Operation. Expoſitors think, that the whole Operation was reveal'd to Adam in his Sleep; but it is more probable, that he was told of it, when Eve was brought unto him; and being told of it he impos'd upon her an agreeable Name (the impoſing Names belonging to him by Divine Appointment) expreſſing alſo the reaſon of it, Gen. 2. 23. And Adam ſaid, This is now Bone of my Bones and Fleſh of my Fleſh; ſhe ſhall be called Woman, becauſe ſhe was taken out of Man. The ſacred Hiſtorian informeth us, that theſe were the words of Adam; but he doth not inform us, who was the ſpeaker of the next words, which contain the Inſtitution of Marriage; only our Saviour informeth us, that they were God's words, Matt. 19. 4, 5. And becauſe there is no appearance, that Adam was a Divine Meſſenger imploy'd to ſpeak God's words, therefore an Ellipſis (uſual in Scripture) muſt be ſuppos'd in the Hiſtory, which muſt be thus ſupply'd; Therefore (ſaid God) ſhall a Man leave his Father and Mother and ſhall cleave to his Wife, and they twain ſhall be one Fleſh. As our Saviour informeth us, that theſe were God's words, ſo the nature of the thing requireth it; for it is certain, there was a Divine Inſtitution of Marriage at the beginning of the World; and we can hear of no other Divine Inſtitution of it but this alone, which is in the Moſaic Hiſtory; therefore this part of the Hiſtory is literally true and of Divine Original. All things in it are ſo well, that it is not imaginable, how they could be better, ſave only that (m) S. Chryſoſtom obſerveth in it (which indeed pervadeth this whole Hiſtory) τὴν παχύτητα τῶν λέξεων, a groſſneſs of ſpeaking. It giveth another-kins account of the origin of Women than Plato hath given in his Timæus. It repreſenteth Man and Wife as parts of one whole, to ingender mutual love and indearment; and as one Fleſh in oppoſition to Poligamy and Divorce, which are the Peſts and Bane of Marriage. If it recommendeth Marriage at a great rate, this is no more than it deſerveth in this Terreſtrial Animal State: For a Family (n) is the firſt of Societies, and without Marriage it is ἀτελὴς, mutilate in its upper parts: The Philoſopher therefore commendeth the Society of Man and Wife as κάλλος τῆς οἰκίας, the Ornament and Furniture of an Houſe (which looketh ſomewhat deſolately without it;) and according to him it compriſeth the Solaces and Aſſiſtances of Society and Friendſhip, and is founded in Nature, which hath not only made us συναγελαστικοὺς, ſuch as are inclin'd to live in Flocks, but συνδυαστικοὺς, ſuch as love to live together by Pairs. And this is the Summ total of this part of the Moſaic Hiſtory, which (in the Letter of it) is nothing elſe but an Inſtitution of Woman and of Marriage, (o) which are meer Accommodations of this Terreſtrial Animal Life.

(5.) The fifth (and great) part of this Moſaic Hiſtory is the Paradiſaical Oeconomy conſiſting of two large Branches: The one of which containeth the Topography of the Earthly Paradiſe, the Law of it, and the Sanction thereof: The other containeth the Temptation and the Sin of our firſt Parents in their Earthly Paradiſe with the penal conſequent effects thereof. The whole of this Paradiſaical Oeconomy was a Terreſtrial Animal kind of Buſineſs; for the purport of it was, to ſettle the Terreſtrial Animal concerns of our firſt Parents (and in them of Mankind,) eſpecially the chief of thoſe Terreſtrial Animal concerns which is Bodily Life and Death. This appeareth from the unſettled condition of our firſt Parents terreſtrial animal concerns before their Tranſgreſſion; for the immortality and mortality which they had, (p) was not the plenary, but mutilate and partial; they cannot be ſaid, either to have been immortal or mortal without diſtinction or limitation of Senſe. They were ſo far mortal, they had an Animal Body, which of its own nature is mortal; and they were ſo far immortal, that if they had not ſinned, they had not died. Antecedently therefore to the Paradiſaical Oeconomy neither the perpetual Life nor the neceſſary Death of our firſt Parents was determin'd, the matter was in ſuſpence, and they were in the ſtate of Probationers; but the Paradiſaical Oeconomy in the whole nature and tendency of it appeareth, to have been a method of determining this matter which was in ſuſpence. The Law of Paradiſe (againſt eating the Fruit of a Tree) containeth the Terms and Conditions of this Settlement, and the Sanction of that Law is the Settlement of our firſt Parents terreſtrial animal concerns eſpecially that chief of them Bodily Life and Death; for the generality of Expoſitors underſtand nothing more than Bodily Death to be ſignify'd by the Commination.

(k) Biſhop Patrick on Gen. 2. 21.

(l) Archæol. Phil. p. 286. V. S. Chryſoſt. in Gen. λογ. 12. Curcell. Inſtit. l. 3. c. 7.

Such an Ellipſis there is Mark 10. 6, 7.

(m) In Gen. λογ. 12.

(n) Hierocl. Fragment. p. 211.

(o) P. Fagius in Gen. 2. 18.

Gen. 2. 8—17.

Gen. 3.

(p) Petav. T. 3. de op. l. 2. c. 6, 7.

Comination, in the day that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die. (q) To me it ſeemeth more probable (ſaith Petavius,) that the Lord expreſs'd only the death of the Body; not that of the Soul. In that very day thou ſhalt begin to be Mortal, and ſubject to corruption, ſaith Clarius. Thy ſtrength before ſuſtain'd by the Tree of Life ſhall fail (ſo Grotius,) which is the way to death. The Syriac Interpreters here had it, thou ſhalt be Mortal: Which is noted by S. Ambroſe and S. Hierom. Symmachus rendreth the words θνητὸς ἔσῃ, thou ſhalt be Mortal; and to this ſenſe they are expounded in the ſequel of the Hiſtory, Duſt thou art and unto Duſt thou ſhalt return. The Death threatned in this Paradiſaical Oeconomy is only the oppoſite to that Life, which was the Fruit of the Tree of Life (literally underſtood,) and which was conſequent upon Adam's being debarr'd from eating of the Tree of Life; therefore it was nothing more than bodily death. The Settlement of things in the Old Teſtament is not literally and expreſly a Settlement of the Spiritual and Eternal Life and Death, but of what is figurative thereof. In the Style of the Old Teſtament this Phraſe thou ſhalt ſurely die, ſignifieth nothing more than bodily death. Gen. 26. 11. 1 Sam. 14. 39. Accordingly S. Paul muſt be underſtood, to ſpeak of bodily Death only, when he ſaith, by one Man Sin entred into the World and Death by Sin, Death reigned from Adam to Moſes, by one Man's Offence Death reigned by one. For ſo he expoundeth his ſenſe. In Adam all die, by Man came Death, by Man came alſo the Reſurrection of the Dead. 1 Cor. 15 21, 22. The Book of Wiſdom alſo and the Son of Sirach ſpeak his Senſe. Through Envy of the Devil came Death into the World Of the Woman came the beginning of Sin, and through her we all Die. The Sanction of the Law of Paradiſe was bodily Death only; therefore the Purport and Buſineſs of the Law of Paradiſe was, to ſettle our firſt Parents Terreſtrial Animal concerns, eſpecially the chief of them bodily Life and Death. Moreover, the Paradiſaical State of our firſt Parents depended upon their Obſervance of the Law of Paradiſe; the Purport of it was, to determine, whether they ſhould continue in their earthly Paradiſe or be ejected out of it, which was their great Terreſtrial Animal concern. All their Terreſtrial Animal concerns their ſubjection to bodily Death, Diſeaſes, Sickneſſes and Pains, the Womans Subjection and Pains of Child-bearing, the Shame of Nakedneſs, the Dwelling out of Paradiſe, the Sterility of the Earth and the Toils of this earthly State, are Parts of this Paradiſaical Oeconomy, and the ſettling of them was the effect of the Penal part of the Law of Paradiſe. And if all the concerns of our firſt Parents as they were Terreſtrial Animals, were actually and effectually ſettled by this Paradiſaical Oeconomy, it muſt be ſuppos'd, to have been introduc'd for this Reaſon, becauſe it was needful for ſettling their concerns, as they were Terreſtrial Animals.

(q) Idid. c. 10.

V. Curcell. Inſtit. l. 3. c. 13.

V. Grot. Not in Rom. 5. 14.

Wiſd. 2. 24. Eccluſ. 25. 24.

ARTICLE 4.

Our firſt Parents are repreſented in the Hiſtory as two Terreſtrial Animals of the Rational Species in the State of Natural Innocency not of Supernatural Grace.

I. THE Terreſtrial Adam was no more than the Terreſtrial Adam: But the Jews and the generality of Chriſtian Writers ſuppoſe him to have been (by his Terreſtrial Creation) rather a Spiritual and Celeſtial kind of Adam. (r) The Rabbins ſay, that his Body was lucid and of a very high ſtature, but that by his Sin both that light and ſtature was diminiſh'd or loſt. They argue, (s) that Adam was moſt perfect without all exception, becauſe immediately made by God. He was born חכם גדל a great wiſe Man or Philoſopher (as they ſuppoſe) having an underſtanding in perfection, underſtanding things without Inſtitution (by cogitation only,) having alſo the Sciences Divine and Humane in their perfection, he knew and underſtood all Worlds. (t) The firſt Adam was the light of the World. Agreeably to which extravagant Elogies and their prodigious Phantaſtry they ſay (u) the ſtature of Adam was from the Earth unto Heaven, and from one end of the World to the other. Calcaneus primi hominis obſcurabat Sphæram Solis, the Heel of the firſt Man darkned the Sphere of the Sun. Philo argueth, (w) that the firſt Man born of the Earth, the Prince of our kind, far excell'd all Men, that are or have been, both in the Ornaments of Soul and Body; becauſe other Men have their Generation from Men, but God made Adam, and ſo much better as the Workman is, ſo much better is the Work that is made. Both the Jews and Muhammedans account him a great Prophet, (x) the latter ſtile him נבי אללה the Prophet of God, and they ſay, that he receiv'd the firſt Books which were ſent down from Heaven. His Sanctity (as the Jews ſuppoſe) was that of the degree of Prophets (he adher'd to God and the things Spiritual,) and as they ſuppoſe his Sanctity to approach to the Angelical: So his Body (as they ſay) was not an ordinary Humane Body, but approach'd to the Angelical ſubtilty and Purity. Creatura fuit ſubtiliſſima & puriſſima, proxime accedens ad corpus Spirituale. Anciently the Jews began their Sabbatarian Faſts (as it is ſaid) by looking on their Nails and paring them; (y) the reaſon of which cuſtom R. Bechai conceiveth to be this; that a Man ſhould think of the excellency of the firſt Man Adam, whoſe Garment before his Fall was like a Man's Nail of a white and ruddy colour. But before his Fall Adam had no Garment ſave only his own Body, and this indeed might be ruddy if (as is commonly thought) he was formed of red Earth, and had his Name Adam from Adamah, which ſignifieth red Earth. But Muhammed deriveth his Pedigree from a worſe complexion'd Mould than that of red Earth; for in his Alcoran he telleth of him this incredible Story. God revealed to the Angels his formation of Man out of Clay or Dirt, and ſo ſoon as he had breathed into him a Portion of his Soul, all the Angels except Beelzebub (God ſo commanding) adored Man: But God demanded of the Devil, why he refus'd to Worſhip the Work of his Hands? Becauſe (ſaid he) thou haſt created him out of Dirt and black Mudd, but me out of Fire.

(r) Men. ben Iſr. ap. Hornbeck c. Jud. l. 4. c. 2.

(s) Coſri p. 49, 52.

(t) Buxt. Lex. Talm. col. 1321. V. S. Cyril. in Johan. p. 75.

(u) Maimon. de fund. Leg. ap. Voſſ. p. 35.

(w) Περὶ κοσμοπ. p. 21. ed. Gr. Paris.

(x) Hotting. Hiſt. or. p. 15. ed. 1.

(y) Gaf. far. Ep. before Leo Modena's Hiſt.

(z) V. Spencer. de Leg. Heb. l. 2. c. 5. & l. 3. diſſ. 7. c. 5. S. 3.

II. The Jews are not alone in their Sublimities touching the firſt Adam; for he is celebrated by Chriſtian Writers as a great Prophet, the greateſt of Schollars, the greateſt of Philoſophers, the greateſt of Divines, the greateſt of Saints, and as nothing leſs than Angelical and Celeſtial. (a) One of the principal Ornaments and Prerogatives of the ſtate of Innocency was the Science of Adam and his Underſtanding both Supernatural and Natural: And this Divines ſuppoſe, to have excell'd in three Reſpects. Firſt in the the extenſive amplitude of his Science : For ſo ſoon as he was created, he was imbu'd with the perfect knowledge of all natural things, a knowledge not acquir'd, but infus'd from above, which (Chriſt excepted) none ever had, nor could have, not Solomon, not the Sons of the Eaſt. Secondly, whereas our acquir'd Science for the moſt part proceedeth from the Effects and not the Cauſes of things, and therefore is, either not at all, or very rarely demonſtrative, but only founded upon probable Reaſon and Conjecture, Adam had the abſolute knowledge of every thing, and that à priori or from the Cauſes. Which Science infus'd from above could not be at all loſt or obſcur'd, ſo long as Adam remain'd in that State. (b) The firſt Man had all Science, knew the Cauſes of all things, not from any other Teacher but from God he received all wiſe Diſcipline of Life. (c) His knowledge extended to heavenly as well as earthly things, was not ſo fallible as ours is, and was not acquir'd by tedious diſcurſiveneſs or obſervation, but by Divine Illumination, which was not given him tranſiently, but by way of connatural Habit, and ſhould have paſs'd to his Poſterity. (d) He came into the World a Philoſopher, which ſufficiently appear'd by his writing the Nature of things upon their Names : He could view Eſſences in themſelves, and read Forms without the Comment of their reſpective Properties. In the Vatican Library (as it is ſaid) there is this Inſcription ; Adam divinitùs edoctus primus ſcientiarum & literarum Inventor. Adam taught of God the firſt Inventor of Sciences and Letters. Kircher thinketh it certain, that God wrote a Book and gave it to him. And Eugubinus thinketh, (e) that Adam and Eve were ſo great Divines, that all their diſcourſe was Theology, omnem magni genitoris illius & magnæ genitricis Sermonem, Theologiam fuiſſe credendum eſt, ut perpetuò de rebus ante caſum ſuis, de ortu, habitu, formis Angelorum & Dæmonum loquerentur. Baleus ſaith (as he is cited by the Author of the Court of the Gentiles,) that from Adam all good Arts and Human Wiſdom flow'd as from their Fountain. He was the firſt that diſcover'd the motions of the Celeſtial Bodies, the Natures of Plants, of living and of all other Creatures. He firſt publiſh'd the forms of Eccleſiaſtic, Politic and Oeconomic Government. From whoſe School proceeded whatever good Arts and Wiſdom were afterward propagated by our Fathers unto Mankind. So that whatever Aſtronomy, Geometry and other Arts contain in them, he knew the whole thereof. The like Elogies of our Father Adam are cited from Hornius by the ſame Author. Adam being conſtituted in this Theatre of the Univerſe, he was ignorant of nothing, that pertain'd to the Myſtery of Nature. He knew exactly and without Errour the Natures of all Animals, the Virtues of Herbs and the Cauſes of things. The light of Reaſon which we now call Logic, altogether unſpotted and without Cloud, overcame the obſcurity of things, and diſpell'd darkneſs, if there was any. Now there was the higheſt ἀκρίβεια, exactneſs of the Oeconomicks and Politicks ; for Man was never ſo much as then ζῶον πολιτικὸν, a ſociable Creature. The Seat of this moſt noble Philoſophy is in the ſacred Scriptures ſtiled the Garden of Eden. All Arts, as Mankind, had their beginning from Adam, who among the pleaſures of Paradiſe learned Philoſophy even from God himſelf. (f) The holy Scriptures ſay, that the firſt Man Adam had a free and unbaſhful Mind as to God, and liv'd with the Saints in the Contemplation of the Intelligibles.

(a) Montacut. orig. Eccl. T. 1. Par. 1. S. 88. p. 50.

Thus we father upon the Scriptures our own Conceits, and inſtead of naming Senſibles ſubſtitute the Contemplation of the Intelligibles. So Euſebius calleth the Goods of a Terreſtrial Animal Paradiſe (g) ἀθάνατα ϗ αἰώνια ἀγαθὰ, immortal and eternal Goods. So S. Ephram thinketh (h) that Adam's Paradiſe with its Wood and Trees is of eternal duration and continuance, that its Senſibles are an everlaſting enjoyment, and that God inveſted Heaven and Earth with the ſame Grace. Αἰσθητὸς ὁ παράδεισος, ἀλλ' οὐ πρόσκαιρος, Paradiſe was Senſible but not Temporary. Gr. Naz. calleth Adam in his Paradiſe (i) φυτῶν ἀθανάτων γεωργὸν, the Cultivator of immortal Plants : But theſe he interpreteth (allegorically) Divine Cogitations, as he alſo interpreteth the Tree of Knowledge, to ſignifie Contemplation. (k) Divine Contemplation was the only Food of Paradiſe according to Jo. Damaſcen ; and he ſuppoſeth it the only Occupation and Imployment that our firſt Parents had there. Gr. Nyſſen and Theodoret argue, that our firſt Parents in Paradiſe were of an immortal Nature, and therefore needed no bodily Food : Nor is eating bodily Food agreeable to any but mortal Creatures. (l) Some others argue, that their Life in Paradiſe was like the Life of Angels, that are above terrene and corruptible Food. And even S. Chryſoſtom (who diſputeth for the literal Senſe of the Hiſtory) attributeth to Man in Paradiſe (m) ἀγγελικὴν κατάστασιν, an Angelical Conſtitution, ἀγγελικὸν βίον, an Angelical Life, and ſaith, that God would have him to live on Earth without any bodily needs ὡς ἄγγελον ἐπίγειον, as an Angel upon Earth. Of our firſt Parents he ſaith, ἀνώτεροι ἦσαν τῶν σωματικῶν ἁπάντων (τῶν σωματικῶν ἀναγκῶν,) καθάπερ τὸν οὐρανὸν οὕτω τὴν γῆν ᾤκοον, ϗ ἐν σώματι τυγχάνοντες τὰ τῶν σωμάτων οὐχ ὑπέμενον. Οὔτε γὰρ στέγης, οὔτε ὀρόφου, οὔτε ἱματίου, οὔτε ἄλλου οὐδενὸς τῶν τοιούτων ἐδέοντο. They were above all bodily Neceſſities, they inhabited the Earth as if it was Heaven, and being in the Body they ſuſtain'd not the things of the Body. For they needed not either Houſe or covered Room or Garment or any ſuch thing as theſe. Which implieth, that they needed not Sleep, or any bodily Food. So great Angelical perfection ſpeaketh them of ſuperlative Sanctity, which Irenæus illuſtrateth by introducing Adam, (n) confeſſing habuiſſe ſe à Spiritu Sanctitatis Stolam, that he formerly had from the Spirit the Robe of Sanctity. (o) Luther gave this account, how Adam came to know, that Eve was Bone of his Bone, and Fleſh of his Fleſh, becauſe he was full of the Holy Ghoſt. And in ſuch ſenſe J. Mart. ſeemeth to call him (p) οἶκος τοῦ ἐμφυσήματος τοῦ παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ, the Houſe of Divine Inſpiration. (q) The Greek Fathers (S. Baſil, Gr. Naz. Cyrill. Alex. and Severianus) expound the breath of Life, which was breath'd into Adam (whereby he became a living Soul) to mean τὴν τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος μετουσίαν, the Participation of the holy Spirit. Procopius (ad Gen. 1.) ſaith ; from the beginning of the Creation the Virtue which affordeth Life entred into Man, ſimul cum Spiritu Sancto, together with the holy Spirit, that this Creature might be according to the Image of God. (r) The generality of the ancient Writers ſuppoſe, that Adam had natively that divine virtuous Image which conſtituteth Regenerate Chriſtians ; which Divine

(b) Oſor. de Nobil. Chriſt. l. 1. p. 394.

(c) Mr. Scrivener Body of Divin. p. 268.

(d) Dr. South Ser. on Gen. 1. 27.

(e) De Per. Phil. l. 1. c. 1.

Gale Court of the Gent. Par. 2. l. 1. c. 1.

(g) Pr. Ev. l. 7. c. 10.

(h) Ap. Petav. T. 3. de op. l. 2. c. 5.

(i) Or. 38.

(k) Petav. ſupr. c. 7.

(l) S. Ambroſ. de Paradiſ. c. 9.

(m) In Gen. λογ. 16, 15 & 18.

(n) Adv. Hær. l. 3. c. 17.

(o) Fuller's Lives p. 51.

(p) Dial. cum Tryph. p. 259.

(q) Petav. de Trin. l. 8. c. 5.

(r) Idem T. 3. de op. l. 2. c. 2.

(f) Τὸν πρῶτον τῶν ἀνθρώπων λέγουσιν αἱ ἱεραὶ γραφαὶ κατὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀνεπαισχύντῳ παῤῥησίᾳ τὸν νοῦν ἐσχηκέναι πρὸς τὸν θεὸν, καὶ συνδιαιτᾶσθαι τοῖς ἁγίοις, ἐν τῇ τῶν νοητῶν θεωρίᾳ ἣν εἶχεν ἐν ἐκείνῳ τῷ τόπῳ, ὃν ϗ ὁ ἅγιος Μωϋσῆς τροπικῶς παράδεισον ὠνόμασεν. S. Athanaſ. c. Gent. or. p. 3.

vine Image was refulgent in him, if as S. Ambroſe ſaith he had (s) virtutum gratiam renitentem, ſplendorem pietatis, ſplendorem gloriæ, & paternæ imaginem ſubſtantiæ, the pulchritude of Virtues ſhining, the ſplendor of Piety, the brightneſs of Glory, the Image of the paternal Subſtance. The ſame Father ſaith (t) Adam cum in Paradiſo eſſet, cœleſtis erat: Poſt lapſum autem terrenus eſt factus. Adam when he was in Paradiſe, was Celeſtial: But after his Lapſe he became Terrene. Again he ſaith; (u) ubi lapſus eſt depoſuit imaginem Cœleſtis, ſumpſit terreſtris effigiem. When he lapſed, he put off the Image of the Celeſtial Man, and took upon him the Image of the Terreſtrial. This Father hath tranſlated S. Baſil's ſaying of Adam. (w) Ἀποβαλὼν τὴν εἰκόνα τȣ̃ ἐπȣρανίȣ, ἀνέλαβε τὴν εἰκόνα τȣ̃ χοϊκȣ̃, having caſt away the Image of the heavenly Man, he put on the Image of the earthly. A Council of Carthage ſaith, (x) that Adam had Fleſh, but not ſuch as it is now, before his Sin it was not Craſs, nor by Nature Mortal.

III. Of theſe magnificent Ideas (which have been more or leſs entertain'd in the Church) it is eaſie for any, to make a Judgment, that will compare them with the Hiſtory. One Branch of them we may be allow'd to examine, becauſe it is matter of Debate amongſt Divines, whether Adam was created in an Eſtate of Supernatural Grace or of Natural Life only? (y) This the moſt rigid Adherents to the Senſe of the Fathers Debate with great freedom (not allowing either part of the Queſtion, to be an Article of Faith;) and they that ſuppoſe it the more probable Opinion, that Adam was created in the Eſtate of Supernatural Grace, yet acknowledge, that God might have created him in the State of meer and pure Nature, and that being ſo created he muſt have been devoid of inordinate Concupiſcence, which cannot be the Work of God as Author of Nature; for then Chriſtians would be oblig'd to mortifie the Work of God. Which good Conceſſion we may make uſe of, to anſwer a principal Argument, that is alledg'd on behalf of the magnificent Ideas of Adam. For as being firſt of his Kind he is ſuppos'd, to have been the Standard and Meaſure of all that follow'd, as having all the agreeable perfections of human Nature. But ſeeing none of the Saints of God did ever look upon the firſt Adam (as they look upon the ſecond) as the Pattern of their perfection, it is but reaſonable, that this Propoſition ſhould be thus limited; Adam was the Standard and Meaſure of all that follow'd as to meer and pure Nature. And ſuch he was as being the firſt of his Kind, if God (according to this Conceſſion) did create him in the State of meer and pure Nature without Supernatural Grace. And it is moſt reaſonable, to ſuppoſe, that he was ſo created; for the Indowments Supernatural (Supernatural Science, Grace, Glory) do not iſſue from the great Parent of Nature as he is ſuch; nor did the Terreſtrial Adam's Creation (like that of the holy Angels) iſſue from Paternal Sanctity: (z) He ſpake ſomething Prophetical (when he ſaid of Eve, this is Bone of my Bone, and Fleſh of my Fleſh: But there is no certainty, that he underſtood it, to be Prophetical; for he might ſpeak it as Caiaphas did, when he propheſied. The conceit of the ancient Writers, that God infus'd into Adam the holy Spirit and the Life of Grace (when he breath'd into him the Breath of Life) is well reproved and refuted (a) by S. Auſtin. Throughout this whole Hiſtory there is not the leaſt Indication, that God infus'd into the firſt Man the Life of Supernatural Grace: Nor is any ſuch thing imply'd in the Moſaic Phraſe of Man's being created after God's Image. For Man as Man is the Image and Reſemblance of God. 1 Cor. 11. 7. Man as ſuch beareth not the Supernatural Image of God in Grace or Glory: But as he is the Lordly Animal (the God-like Animal) he is the Natural Image of God, and he is ſuch in reſpect of his Mind or Soul and its Faculties, in reſpect of his Stature alſo and his Domination over the inferior Creation. The Poet is no contemptible Interpreter of the Senſe of Moſes, when he ſaith, Finxit in Effigiem moderantum cuncta Deorum.

Some ſay (b) that rectitude wherewith Man was created, as Solomon teacheth, was Natural, not Moral perfection. Which mode of expounding the words of Solomon is equivalent to an expunging them. For the word upright which Solomon uſeth (when he ſaith God made Man upright, Eccl. 7. 29.) in the general Notion of it ſignifieth right, ſtraight and without obliquity (Ezek. 1. 7.) and being oppos'd by Solomon to the bad Inventions of Men (God made Man upright, but they have ſought out many inventions) it neceſſarily denoteth ſome ſort of moral Rectitude, and muſt be underſtood to ſignifie in the uſual Scripture-notion of it, right, ſtraight and without iniquity. So it ſignifieth, when applied to God and to his Ways and Judgments (which are faultleſs and uncriminal) Pſal. 92. 15. and 119. 137. So it ſignifieth, when apply'd to Men and to their Ways and Practices (which are not Upright, if there be any thing of heinous Sin and Iniquity, Vice and Crime in them) Pſal. 37. 37. Gal. 2. 14. Uprightneſs is the ſame with Perfection, and accordingly the Hebrew word תם is by our Tranſlators ſometimes rendred Uprightneſs and ſometimes Perfection. So a Perfect Man and an Upright are terms ſynonymous in Scripture, and a perfect Weight and Meaſure is the ſame with an Upright. Gen. 6. 6. Job 1. 8. Deut. 25. 15. To be Upright therefore is to be right and ſtraight in matter of Morality, if not abſolutely and in all reſpects, yet ſo far as to be without heinous Criminality. Which is not to be underſtood without diſtinction and limitation of ſenſe; for there is a Civil-religious and a Spiritual-religious, a common and an holy, a partial and a plenary kind of Uprightneſs. Which plenary kind of Uprightneſs (the ſame with the Spiritual-religious) is that which conſtituteth the Righteous in the Religion of Soul-intereſts: But a common and a partial kind of Uprightneſs is competible to a bad Man; for ſuch an one may do and ſay with Abimelech (whether he was ſuch an one or not,) in the Integrity of my Heart and Innocency of my Hands have I done this. Gen. 20. 5. As Uprightneſs is not to be underſtood without due diſtinction of Senſe: So the Uprightneſs wherein Man was created, muſt be diſtinguiſh'd from the Uprightneſs, wherein the Saints of God are created, God made Man Upright, ſo far as belong'd to the making a Man: But not ſo far as appertain'd to the making an holy heavenly kind of Man. God made Man Upright (right without any pravity) as having innocent and ſinleſs Nature in Perfection, ſuch rectitude, innocence and ſinleſneſs,

(s) Hexaem. l. 6. c. 7.

(t) In Pſal. 118.

(u) Hexaem. ubi ſupr.

(w) Hom. in Pſal. 48. Macar. Hom. 12.

(x) Bevereg. Synodic. T. 1. p. 645.

(y) Mr. Thorndike Epil. B. 2. c. 20. Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 2. Par. 1. Theſ. 1.

(z) Tertull. de An. c. 11.

(a) De C. D. l. 13. c. 23, 24.

(b) Cur. cell. Inſtit. l. 3. c. 8.

neſs, ſimplicity and integrity. The firſt Man in his Nature and Conſtitution (wherein inordinate Concupiſcence had no place) was right and without any pravities, nor were there (at his Creation) any pravities in his Mind, Will and Meaning: But they have ſought out many Inventions (many pravities,) the many pravities that are in the World, are not the Work of God but the Inventions of Men. (c) Naked in Simplicity and a Life without Artifice and without any covering and defenſative, ſuch it was fit he ſhould be, that was firſt created. The Simplicity and Innocence of our firſt Parents was a Reſemblance of the Chriſtian Innocency and Simplicity. For they knew no Sin, 2 Cor. 5. 21. they were devoid of the guileful Skill and Wiſdom (as the Simplicity of the Dove is a ſingle mindedneſs, that is without any guileful Skill or Craft, ſuch Wiſdom as hath Guile in it,) they were ſimple concerning Evil, not knowing how to do Evil, or any arts or ways of doing it. Rom. 16. 19. S. Chryſoſtom ſaith of Chriſtians, they muſt not know how to remember ill Turns, they muſt not Skill to be vain, they muſt not have learn'd to Lye, they know not this wicked Skill and Craft, which is the Serpent's Politicks. A genuine Chriſtian is ſo far from doing Wrong to any, that he knoweth not how to do it. But this Simplicity and Innocency of Regenerate Chriſtians is Sanctity, that of our firſt Parents was innocent and ſinleſs Nature.

IV. A difficulty on both hands incumbreth this Theory; for if we ſuppoſe, that our firſt Parents did not live the Life of Sanctity and perfectly fulfil the Law thereof, it ſeemeth that they muſt be counted Sinners from the very day that they were created. But the difficulty is greater on the other hand. For (1.) If Man was created in the State of Supernatural Grace, he muſt be ſuppos'd to have been created not only holy and heavenly, but conſummate in the holy heavenly Life at the rate of ſinleſs Perfection, or elſe he muſt be unavoidably a Sinner the very firſt day that he was created. And if he was created perfect and conſummate in the holy heavenly Life, ſo peerleſs and tranſcendent a Saint ought (in Congruity) to have had his Formation, not amongſt the Terreſtrial Animals, nor of Limus Slime or Mud (the Duſt of the Ground mix'd with Water) but amongſt the Cherubim and Seraphim (the holy Angels of God) he muſt have had an higher kind of Inſpiration than that of vital Breath, and an higher kind of Life than that of a living Soul. An ethereal Body and the heavenly Manſions would be much more fit for the holy Soul of ſo Angelical and Celeſtial a Creature than a vile Animal Body and this gloomy Terreſtrial Region: Nor could ſo Divine a Soul have any Buſineſs to do in our World, unleſs to be a Saviour to the World. As the Platoniſts ſay, (d) that ſome Souls (which they call 'Αχράντους ψυχὰς, incontaminate Souls) deſcend hither, to declare the Gods, for the Welfare, Purification and Perfection of the things that are here.

(2.) If the Soul of the firſt Adam had been alike holy and heavenly as the incontaminate Soul of our Saviour, how little would an earthly Paradiſe have ſignified to his felicity, and all the accommodations of this Life, (e) Quæ contemnenda eſſe docuit filius Dei, which the Son of God hath taught us, are things to be contemned? An earthly Dominion and Inheritance was given to the Terreſtrial Adam, the conveniencies of this Terreſtrial Animal Life were provided for him, and Terreſtrial Animal Work (the Propagation of his Species) was appointed him: But if he was ſuperlatively an holy heavenly kind of Man, whence is it, that no holy heavenly kind of Goods were provided for him? No holy heavenly kind of Work was appointed him? Nothing holy and heavenly is in the Deſcription of him? If he was a ſuperlative Saint of God, whence is it, that throughout his whole Hiſtory there is not the leaſt mention of the Saint of God-kind of Goods, Excellencies and Felicities, nor (otherwiſe than ſymbolically) of any Soul-intereſts? That it aſcendeth to nothing higher than the formation of a Terreſtrial Man and his Wife, their Marriage and their Garden (or Orchard) and the Tranſactions that were there about their Terreſtrial Animal Concerns?

(3.) Moſes ſaith, that God made Heaven the ſecond day of the Hexaemeron, (f) but the Hebrew Doctors ſay, that God made Hell on that ſecond day. The darkneſs which according to Moſes was upon the face of the Deep (antecedent to his Coſmopœia) Maimonides thus interpreteth. (h) Per tenebras nihil aliud debes intelligere quàm ignem elementarem, by darkneſs you ought to underſtand nothing elſe but the elementary fire. At this rate of contradiction to the holy Scriptures we form our magnificent Ideas of the firſt Adam and his Perfections; for the Scripture calleth him Terreſtrial-animal, and we make him Angelical-celeſtial. If he was natively a Saint of God, and was poſſeſs'd of the holy heavenly Life, as the Regenerate Children of God are, he muſt have been an heavenly kind of Man as to his Soul, and he muſt have had a divine and heavenly Body within his exteriour earthly Body (as the Regenerate Children of God have:) And if in ſo great a degree he was divine and heavenly, the Apoſtle ought not to have contradiſtinguiſh'd the firſt Adam to the ſecond Adam as earthly to heavenly, he would not have ſaid, the firſt Man is of the Earth earthly, but rather the firſt Man is from Heaven heavenly. Natural and Spiritual were conjunct in Adam at a great rate, if he was created a ſpiritual and heavenly kind of Man as to his Soul and the Virtues of it, and alſo as to an interiour ſpiritual and heavenly Body: But the Apoſtle plainly ſuppoſeth, that Natural and Spiritual were not conjunct in the Terreſtrial Adam, when he ſaith, that was not firſt which is Spiritual, but that which is Natural.

(4.) If Adam was created with the endowment of Supernatural Grace, it muſt be ſuppoſed, that he receiv'd it for himſelf and his Poſterity: But as God cannot ſettle the Kingdom of Glory upon any meer Man and his Heirs requiring his perfect Obedience as the Condition of it; for it dependeth upon every ones perſonal Qualifications and muſt be matter of every one's Choice: So for the ſame Reaſons God cannot ſettle the Kingdom of Grace upon any meer Man and his Heirs requiring his perfect Obedience as the Condition of it. God could not therefore upon that Condition ſettle the State and Life of Grace or Original

(c) Γυμνὸν τῇ ἁπλότητι, καὶ ζωῇ τῇ ἀτέχνῳ καὶ δίχα παντὸς ἐπικαλύμματος καὶ προβλήματος, τοιοῦτον ἔπρεπεν εἶναι τὸν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς. Gr. Naz. or. 38. p. 619. Nudi erant propter morum ſimplicitatem & quod amictum fraudis natura neſciret. S. Ambroſ. de Paradiſ. c. 13.

(d) Gale in Jambl. p. 271.

(e) S. Aug. de Ag. Chriſt. c. 11.

(f) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 2. c. 67.

(g) Mor. Nev. Par. 2. c. 30.

nal Righteouſneſs in the Senſe of the Schools) upon Adam and his Poſterity.

(5.) As Adam is ſuppos'd, to have receiv'd Original Righteouſneſs for himſelf and his Poſterity; ſo he is ſuppos'd, by his Tranſgreſſion to have loſt it for himſelf and his Poſterity: and conſequently the Souls of all the Children of Adam have loſt their Spiritual Life, are deſpoiled of the Divine Nature, and are ſubjected to all the Evils of an unregenerate condition, not through any fault of their own, but meerly through the fault of another (to which they were no way acceſſory,) which ſeems not credible or poſſible: for it is not poſſible, that Adam by his Tranſgreſſion ſhould merit for the Souls of all his Poſterity the ſtate of Blindneſs, Pravity, Spiritual Death, to be depriv'd of the Holy Spirit and the Divine Image (with all the Honours and Felicities thereof) the Divine Favour, the Divine Sonſhip and Citizenſhip, and to be ſubjected to Eternal Puniſhment in the World to come: for it never was, nor can be in any Man's power, to kill Souls without their own conſent.

(6.) It is not credible, that the greateſt of Philoſophers and of Saints ſhould be ſo eaſily vanquiſh'd as Adam was, by ſuch a Temptation which was nothing more than the ſpecious Fruit of a Tree; and it is incredible, that he ſhould be the greateſt of Wiſe Men and of Saints (a fit Conſort for the Seraphim) and yet the great Duty that God impos'd upon him, the great trial of his Obedience, and the great Condition of his Happineſs, was only his abſtaining from the ſpecious Fruit of a Tree. Theophilus ad Autolycum aſſigning the Reaſom of this Law of Paradiſe ſaith, (h) ὁ Ἀδὰμ νήπιος ἦν Adam was yet an Infant. Agreeably whereto theſe Words of the Hiſtory They were both naked, the Man and his Wife and were not aſhamed, are thus expounded by a late learned Commentator, (i) they did not bluſh, no more than little Children do, when they behold one another naked, and embrace with an innocent affection. Our firſt Parents are rightly repreſented as in no higher condition than that of natural Innocency. For although we cannot infer from the Law of Paradiſe, that Adam was a meer Infant in Underſtanding; yet there is great reaſon to infer from it, that he was no ſuch great proficient in Wiſdom and Sanctity, as to be arriv'd at the height of ſinleſs Perfection in the Holy Life.

(7.) Agreeably to this Account of our firſt Parents Clemens ſaith of Adam, (k) He was not made perfect, but fit for the endowment of (Divine) Virtue. The Maſter of Controverſies ſaith, (l) that Pet. Lombard, Scotus, and ſome others ſeem to hold, that Adam had not originally gratiam illam gratum facientem, quæ filios & amicos Dei efficit, quæque ad vitam æternam promerendam neceſſaria eſt; that Grace called by the Schools gratia gratum faciens, which maketh Men the Sons and Friends of God, and is neceſſary for meriting Eternal Life. The learned Grotius is known to be of this Opinion, (m) that Man when he was firſt created, had no promiſes of a Celeſtial Life, but only of a Terreſtrial. To obtain the Celeſtial Life, God requireth an eximious Sanctity of Life, which far exceedeth, not only the ſtate of Adam after his fall, but that wherein he was created. Alia enim eſt imago Dei, ad quam Adamus eſt conditus, alia ad quam per Chriſtum renaſcimur: That Image of God after which Adam was created, is one thing, and that unto which we are regenerated by Chriſt is another. This Idea of our firſt Parents and their Condition I look upon as far more unexceptionable and recommendable than the commonly receiv'd Idea; not becauſe it is incumbred with no difficulty, but becauſe it is incumbred with the ſmalleſt difficulty, and the difficulty which incumbreth it, admitteth of a good ſolution. If our firſt Parents before their Tranſgreſſion were not truly holy, and ſo holy, that they liv'd the Life of Sanctity in ſinleſs perfection, they were neceſſarily Sinners and deadly Sinners. He that loveth God as God is truly holy; for this love of God is Sanctity it ſelf. But Adam lov'd God as God, otherwiſe he had mortally ſinned from his very Creation; for the Love of God is the Summary or Compendium of the Law of Nature. This is the difficulty; which we will conjoyn with another difficulty that the Ancient Writers urge: for they argue, that Adam muſt be ſuppos'd, to have been made after the ſimilitude of God in reſpect of Divine Virtue, becauſe without it Man is like the Beaſts in his Morals. And it muſt be acknowledg'd, that he is ſo now, becauſe Humane Nature is now fill'd with inordinate Concupiſcence; but this was not the caſe of our firſt Parents, and becauſe it was not their caſe, they might be devoid of the Divine Virtuous Image without being Beaſts in their Morals. So if Man liveth not the Holy Spiritual Life required by the Holy Spiritual Law (which is the Divine Love,) he is a deadly Sinner: but the caſe was otherwiſe with our Father Adam, when he was in the ſtate and liv'd the Life of innocent ſinleſs Nature in Paradiſe: for then although he did not perform certain ſupernatural Duties of that Holy Law, yet he did ſo non-perform them, as not to depart from his natural Innocency; and then he could be no deadly Sinner, ſimply ſo called, for this other plain demonſtrative Reaſon, ſo long as he liv'd the Life of innocent ſinleſs Nature, he had right to the Tree of Life, and could not be liable to be put to death. As his Intereſts in Paradiſe were not the Soul-intereſts, but the Terreſtrial-animal: So the Holy Spiritual Law (or the Law of Nature as it is that Law) was not the Law of God's proceedings with him, the Law of his Life and Death; theſe were determined by the Law of his Paradiſaical Oeconomy, which was a particular Oeconomy, and ſuch an one that is an exception from the general Rules of Theology: for Man is made for a ſupernatural Happineſs, but in the Paradiſaical Oeconomy of things he was made only for a Natural Felicity (that of the Earthly Paradiſaical State;) and Man is made to live the Life of Sanctity (which conſiſteth in the ſaving knowledge, love and ſervice of God;) but in the Paradiſaical Oeconomy he was deſign'd only to live a Life of natural Innocency towards God and in all other reſpects. Sanctity is in order to Salvation, and is inſeparably connex'd therewith; but neither Sanctity nor Salvation is (otherwiſe than Symbolically) of any Notice, Conſideration or Regard in the Paradiſaical Oeconomy. It did not require, that our firſt Parents ſhould be the Saints of God: but to retain their Natural Innocency, Sinleſſneſs and Uncriminality, was the only condition of their Happineſs; and ſo long as they retain'd it, they could not by any Law be ſo oblig'd to ſupernatural Virtue and Duty, as to be conſtituted deadly Sinners by the want of it. Their Life and State in Paradiſe exempted them from being Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 2. par.3. Theſ. 1.

Οὐδεὶς ἀλλοτρίου ἡγεμονικοῦ κυριεύει. Epict. Diſſ. l. 4. c. 5.

(h) P. 102.

(i) Biſhop Patrick on Gen. 2. 25.

(k) Ὅτι τέλειος κατὰ τὴν κατασκευὴν οὐκ ἐγένετο, πρὸς δὲ τὸ ἀναδέξασθαι τὴν ἀρετὴν ἐπιτήδειος. Strom. l. 6. p. m. 477.

(l) De Grat. prim. hom. c. 3.

(m) Annot. ad Conſult. Caſſandr. Art. 2.

ing ſuch; and if we will call them unholy, that muſt be underſtood, to ſignifie nothing worſe, than that they were in the ſtate of Natural Innocency. Their State therefore may without abſurdity be called Status medius inter ſanctum & culpabilem, a middle ſtate between that of Saints and of ungodly deadly Sinners.

ARTICLE 5.

The Moſaic Paradiſaical Oeconomy is therefore in all the Branches of it reaſonable and agreeable, fit and accommodate, becauſe (in the Letter of it) it is of kind Terreſtrial Animal and aſcendeth no higher than to Natural Innocency.

CElſus in Origen having cited ſome Paſſages of the Moſaic Hiſtory of the Creation and of Paradiſe ſaith, (n) the more moderate both Jews and Chriſtians endeavour to turn them into an allegorical ſenſe, ὅτι τούτοις αἰσχυνόμενοι, being aſham'd of theſe things in the literal ſenſe. But they ought rather to have been aſham'd of allegorizing away the plain and literal ſenſe of words and of turning real Hiſtory into Parable and Fable: (o) For they that admit not the Senſe of Scripture according to the common ſignification of words, τὸ ὕδωρ οὐχ ὕδωρ λέγουσιν, ſay, that Water is not Water but ſome other fluid nature, they interpret a Fiſh to what they fancy, and the generation of creeping things and of Beaſts they turn to their own Allegories, making their Interpretation of Scripture as the Interpreters of Dreams make their Interpretations of the appearances in Sleep, to their own purpoſe. But I, if I hear the word Hay or Graſs, underſtand Hay or Graſs, and a Plant, and a Fiſh, and a wild Beaſt, and Cattle. I take all things as they are ſpoken, καὶ γὰρ οὐκ ἐπαισχύνομαι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, for I am not aſham'd of the Goſpel. There is no cauſe to be aſham'd of the Moſaic Paradiſaical Oeconomy, if we ſuppoſe it a Terreſtrial Animal kind of Oeconomy, that aſcendeth no higher than to Natural Innocency; but there is too much cauſe, to be aſham'd of it, if it muſt be thought ſuch an Oeconomy of Sanctity and Soul-intereſts as is commonly ſuppos'd. For,

(n) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 4. p. 187.

(o) S. Baſil. in Hexaem. Hom. 9.

I. It is an Oeconomy fit and accommodate for two Terreſtrial Animals of the Humane Species in their ſtate of Natural Innocency. Much of this their Character appeareth in the ancient Writers deſcriptions of the firſt Men; (p) primum inter homines mali neſcia & adhuc aſtutiæ inexperta ſimplicitas: At firſt there was amongſt Men a ſimplicity that knew not Evil, and which was unacquainted with Craft and Cunning: They are ſaid to have been γυμνοὶ καὶ ἄστρωτοι, naked without Cloaths and Bed-cloaths; to have liv'd in incuria ſilveſtri, without care in Woods, and to have been nouriſh'd glande & baccis, with Acorns and Berries. If the Men of the firſt Times, living in this manner and in theſe circumſtances, had ſuch an Inſtitution as our firſt Parents had in their Earthly Paradiſe, an Inſtitution by Trees and their Fruits, every one would acknowledge it very reaſonable and agreeable; as alſo, that they ſhould have a Law given them, as our Parents had, injoyning them upon pain of death not to depart from their natural Innocency and Simplicity; for this is certainly the meaning of the Law of the Terreſtrial Paradiſe, Gen. 2. 16, 17. The Lord God commanded the Man ſaying, of every Tree of the Garden thou mayeſt freely eat; but of the Tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou ſhalt not eat of it; for in the Day that thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt ſurely die. Some think this Symbolical Tree had its Name, becauſe it was to prove our firſt Parents, and thereby it would be known, whether they would be good or bad. It is commonly thought, to have had its Name from what came to paſs afterwards; either becauſe the Tempter pretended to our firſt Parents, that it would make them ſo wiſe as to know all things; or from the Event, becauſe upon the eating this Fruit they did actually know by miſerable Experience the great difference between obeying and diſobeying God's Commandment, and how grievous a thing it was to incur his Diſpleaſure. Others think, the Tree had its Name as a Caveat to our firſt Parents, not to ſtudy Craft and Subtilty, but to content themſelves in a ſimple and plain way of Life (wherein God made them) without any curioſity to know more than was needful for them. That the Tree had its Name as a Caveat, is more than probable. (q) Lignum enim tale nomen accepit, ut eo ſecundum prohibitionem non tacto caveretur, quod eo contra prohibitionem tacto ſentiretur: For it was ſo called by way of Caveat, that the Prohibition being obey'd by not touching it, that might be avoided which was felt by touching it. This Symbolical Tree was a Tree of Inſtruction, and was inſtituted, to be a ſtanding document to our firſt Parents, to eſchew a departure from Innocency to the knowledge of Good and Evil, how ſpecious ſoever the Temptations were that allur'd them to it. The Law of Paradiſe was the Law of Innocency, it requir'd that our firſt Parents ſhould continue in the ſtate of Innocency without proceeding to the knowledge of Good and Evil: for they that are in their natural Innocency know not Sin or Evil (they know not any ſuch thing) nor the difference between Good and Evil. (b) Qui non cognoſcit bonum & malum, nihil à parvulo diſtat. Parvuli autem apud juſtum judicem nulla eſt culpa.— — Parvulus ſine ullo eſt crimine prævaricationis & culpæ: He that knoweth not Good and Evil, differeth not from a little Child. A little Child is guilty of no fault or crime, nor is reputed ſo to be by a juſt Judge, Deut. 1. 39. Your little ones, which ye ſaid, ſhould be a prey, and your Children which in that Day had no knowledge between Good and Evil, they ſhall go in thither, and unto them will I give the Land, Iſa. 7. 16. Before the Child ſhall know, to refuſe the Evil and chuſe the Good. Little Children are not come to that Diſcretion and underſtanding of things, as to be able to diſcern Good from Evil (and therefore cannot be guilty of doing any Sin or committing any Crime;) for the knowledge of Good and Evil is the oppoſite to the ſtate of Natural Innocency. Such was the ſtate of our firſt Parents before their Tranſgreſſion; they were ſuch Innocents as little Children are (but without the Ignorance and Indiſcretion of Children,) ſo far the Pelagians ſaid true: Quod Infantes nuper nati in illo ſtatu ſint, in quo fuit Adam ante prævaricationem; that Infants newly born are in that ſtate, in which Adam was before his prevarication. The ſtate of Adam before his Tranſgreſſion could not be the ſtate of Sanctity, the Paradiſaical Oeconomy could not be an Oeconomy of Sanctity and Soul-intereſts; for the knowledge of Good and Evil (which the Law of Paradiſe prohibiteth) is not the oppoſite to the ſtate of Sanctity, but to the ſtate of Natural Innocency. The knowledge of Good and Evil is a departure from Natural Innocency (it is incompetible to ſuch Innocents as little Children:) but this leaving our Natural Innocency and proceeding to the knowledge of Good and Evil may be only Notional and Intellectual, and it may be alſo Practical and Experimental, which is the only culpable knowledge of Good and Evil; and this culpable knowledge of Good and Evil is a figurative if not a literal eating of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. The Law of Paradiſe therefore was not (as is commonly thought) a meer poſitive Law touching a ſlight matter, a thing indifferent neither Good nor Evil (the meer abſtaining from eating the Fruit of a Tree:) but it was the wiſe and great Law of Innocency, comprehending the whole Duty of our firſt Parents, as Tertullian truly ſaith of it; (i) Quæ lex eis ſufficeret, ſi eſſet cuſtodita, which Law would have been ſufficient, had they kept it; for had they kept their Innocency, they had not loſt their Paradiſe. But it is one thing, to depart from Sanctity as ſuch to the doing Evil; and another thing, to depart from meer Innocency as ſuch to the knowledge of Good and Evil. If our firſt Parents had been in the ſtate of Sanctity, the Law of Paradiſe muſt have been the Law of Sanctity againſt doing Evil, and not this Law of Innocency, of the Tree of the knowledge of Good and Evil thou ſhalt not eat.

(p) V. Grot. de J. B. ac P. l. 2. c. 1. S. 2. & de V. R. C. l. 1. S. 16. in Annot. Macrob. ad Som. Scip. l. 2. c. 10.

(q) S. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. l. 8. c. 14.

(h) S. Ambroſ. de Paradiſ. c. 6.

II. The Paradiſaical Oeconomy was fit and accommodate for a Terreſtrial Animal Paradiſe, which with great reaſon and congruity was appointed to be the Manſion of our firſt Parents; for as the Saints of God by their Sanctity are entitled to an Heavenly Paradiſe: So our firſt Parents by their Natural Innocency (wherein they were created) were entitled to a Terreſtrial Animal Paradiſe: And as by Sanctity we are exempted and priviledg'd from Spiritual Calamities, Spiritual and Eternal Death: So our firſt Parents by their Natural Innocency were priviledg'd and exempted from External Calamities and from Bodily Death. A Terreſtrial Paradiſe therefore with a Tree of Life in it ought to be their Habitation. (k) That God which gave unto Meal and Oyl (Humane Food) ſuch an admirable Virtue, that they ſhould refreſh others without waſting, can we doubt, but that by the Food of a certain Tree he gave this higher Grace unto Man, that his Body by Infirmity or Age ſhould not be chang'd for the worſe or decline unto Death? The Tree of Life afforded an Immortality unto Man in his Innocency and Earthly Paradiſe; and it is not imaginable, how an Earthly Paradiſe could be without a Tree of Life; nor could it be without a Tree of Danger and of Death: for a Tree of Life was eſſential to it, as it was a Paradiſe; and a Tree of Danger and of Death was eſſential to it as it was a Paradiſe for Innocency, and not to be enjoy'd but upon condition of a non-departure from Innocency. The Paradiſaical Oeconomy therefore correſpondeth to the Oeconomy of Religion and Sanctity (and conſequently is a wiſe and rational Oeconomy;) for as Religion conſiſteth of a Benefit-part and a Duty-part, ſo doth the Paradiſaical Oeconomy. The Tree of Life is the Benefit-part of it, and the Tree of the knowledge of Good and Evil (under an Interdict with a Commination) is the Duty-part of it and the Law of Paradiſe. (l) In which there were three ſorts of Trees: Some were given unto Man ἵνα ζῇ that he might live, others ἵνα ἀεὶ ζῇ, that he might always live, εἶχε δὲ τὸ εὖ ζῆν ἐξ ὧν ἐκώλυσεν, but his living well was from thoſe which God prohibited, for he was to live well by not touching thoſe that were under an Interdict. The Paradiſaical Oeconomy therefore (like the Oeconomy of Religion) conſiſteth of איסור והתר ligatum & ſolutum vetitum & permiſſum. The Law of Paradiſe is a Law of great Licence and Liberty, Gen. 2. 16. The Lord God commanded the Man, ſaying, of every Tree of the Garden thou mayeſt freely eat. So in the Oeconomy of Religion God doth not deny unto Man the free uſe and enjoyment of any of his Creatures, nor the fitting uſe of all his Natural Faculties and Affections, nor the juſt ſatisfaction of any of his natural Appetites, nor any deſirable Liberty, nor any honeſt Pleaſure, nor any thing that is really good for him; for Religion deſigneth not his hurt and detriment, but to ſave him from every thing that is hurtful and detrimental to him. Yet Religion is a Law of great and ſevere Reſtraints (which are Boundaries to Liberty;) for Man is confin'd by it, to walk in the ſtrict and narrow Way, to live the holy ſinleſs Life (without any Exorbitancy or Expatiating,) to be duely alienated from the World, to eſchew the ſenſual fleſh-pleaſing courſe of Life, to mortifie Senſitive Nature, to have a reſtrict caſtigate and ſubdued Body and Spirit, to abandon inordinate Affection, Bodily Superfluities and Exceſſes, to make only a lawful uſe of lawful things, and not to touch with Sin and Iniquity upon pain of Death. So the Law of Paradiſe was to our firſt Parents a Law of ſevere Reſtraints; for they might not eat nor (in order to eating it) touch the Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; it reſtrain'd them from Concupiſcence and gratifying the ſenſitive Appetite, from affecting unlawful Knowledge, and from degenerating into the ſtate of lapſed Nature (which is the ſtate of knowing Good and Evil) Non licet, non licet impune, in the Day that thou eateſt of the Tree of the knowledge of Good and Evil, thou ſhalt ſurely die. The Oeconomy of Religion maketh a propoſal of Life and Death to Men's choice, and perſwadeth them, to make a wiſe choice: So in the Paradiſaical Oeconomy Man had Life ſet before him by the Tree of Life, and by the Tree of the knowledge of Good and Evil he had Death ſet before him, which he was ſtrictly injoyned to avoid. Of the Oeconomy of Religion one neceſſary Ingredient is that Branch of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, Excommunication, (m) of which Adam's ejection out of Paradiſe hath been thought an Example; for the Jewiſh Writers ſay, that for his offence he was under the Sentence of Excommunication 130 Years. But ſome diſpute, that his expulſion out of Paradiſe was not properly an Excommunication, but a Baniſhment. Suppoſing it ſuch, yet becauſe of the affinity and reſemblance which it hath with Excommunication, S. Hierom may be allow'd to ſay touching thoſe that were excommunicated in his time, Prævaricati ſunt pactum Dei in Eccleſia, ſicut Adam prævaricatus eſt in Paradiſo, & imitatores ſe antiqui parentis oſtendunt, ut quomodo ille de Paradiſo, ſic eſti ejiciantur de Eccleſia: They have tranſgreſſed the Covenant of God in the Church, as Adam tranſgreſſed it in Paradiſe, and they ſhew themſelves the followers of the old Father in being caſt out of the Church, as he was caſt out of Paradiſe.

As the Paradiſaical Oeconomy is part of the Old Teſtament; ſo it more eſpecially correſpondeth to the Oeconomy of Religion in the Old Teſtament-times, in two reſpects. For (firſt) agreeably to the Ceremonial Nature of the Old Teſtament which conſiſteth of Typical and

(i) C. Jud. c. 2.

(k) S. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. l. 8. c. 5.

(l) Severianus Gabalitanus Hom. 5. p. 625.

(m) Selden. de Synedr. l. 1. c. 11.

and Hieroglyphical Inſtitutes, the Law of Paradiſe was Symbolical, the Precept againſt eating the of Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil being a Prohibition of Man's departure from his natural Innocency. And for this Reaſon (as may reaſonably be ſuppos'd) the trial of Man's Obedience was made by this Symbolical Precept; both becauſe ſuch an Oeconomy of things was agreeable to the Paradiſaical Condition of our firſt Parents, and becauſe it was agreeable to the Oeconomy of Religion in the Old Teſtament-times. Unleſs Adam had been a Saint of God, his Obedience could not be congruouſly try'd by the Law of Sanctity (as the Obedience of the Angels in Heaven was,) his Eſtate was no higher than that of Natural Innocency; therefore his Obedience muſt by try'd by the Law of Innocency, and if that Law be a Symbolical Inſtitute, it is the more agreeable to the Moſaic Inſtitutes and Laws. In another reſpect the Paradiſaical Oeconomy more eſpecially correſpondeth with the Moſaic Oeconomy of Religion, one uſual Branch whereof is the Commination of כרת Exciſion or cutting off, whereby is meant (as the Hebrew Doctors ſay) Exciſion per manum Cœli (by the hand of Heaven) Mors θεήλατος, Death inflicted by God. Agreeably whereto it is reaſonable to underſtand the Penal Treatment of Adam, which concludeth the Paradiſaical Oeconomy. Gen. 3. 22, 23, 24. And the Lord God ſaid, behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil. And now leſt he put forth his hand, and take alſo of the Tree of Life, and eat and live for ever. Therefore the Lord God ſent him forth from the Garden of Eden, to Till the Ground, from whence he was taken. So he drove out the Man: and he placed at the Eaſt of the Garden of Eden Cherubims and a flaming Sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the Tree of Life. If Adam had been a lapſed Saint (an horrid total Apoſtate,) he had not been an object of Deriſion, but of fiery Indignation. If his Oeconomy had been an Oeconomy of Sanctity and Soul-intereſts, if his Offence had bereav'd himſelf and all the World of all their ſpiritual and eternal Goods, and plung'd them into Death temporal, ſpiritual and eternal, ſo amazingly tragical and tremendous a Diſaſter could not have been a proper buſineſs for ſuch an Irony, ſuch a Taunt and Sarcaſm as this, behold the Man is become as one of us! But ſuch a ſcornful Treatment was proper enough for a Man of very fooliſh Aſpires and Expectations; that aimed at Golden Mountains and caught nothing but a Fall; that came but the other day out of the Earth, and now was aſpiring after a Godhead, and who to pleaſe his Palate, would loſe his Paradiſe! Accordingly he is ſententially depriv'd of it, and not only ſo, but he is by force expelled out of Paradiſe, which expulſion is complicated with his Sentence of Condemnation to bodily Death. And becauſe he could not but have a great concern for his Life (as all Animals have,) and conſequently would not fail, to make an attempt upon the Tree of Life (to ſave his Life) therefore at the Eaſt of the Garden of Eden were placed Cherubims and a flaming Sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the Tree of Life. By Cherubims, S. Auſtin underſtandeth Angels (or Cæleſtes Poteſtates) ſome of which at the Eaſt of the Garden of Eden vibrated a fiery flaming Sword, and brandiſh'd it every way, thereby to deter Adam from re-entring into Paradiſe and attempting the Tree of Life; for an Angel brandiſhing a fiery flaming Sword is plainly a commination of Death or Exciſion per manum Cœli, by the hand of Heaven. Such was the literal ſignification of this frightful Phœnomenon: (n) But S. Auſtin ſaith undoubtedly ſignificat aliquid etiam de Paradiſo ſpiritali, it ſignifieth ſomething touching the ſpiritual Paradiſe. S. Baſil ſaith (o) doſt thou not know, that a fiery Sword keepeth the way of the Tree of Life, which to Unbelievers is terrible and flammeous? σὺ δὲ πῶς ἐπανέλθῃς εἰς τὸν παράδεισον, μὴ σφραγισθεὶς τῷ βαπτίσματι; how wilt thou return into Paradiſe, if not ſealed by Baptiſm? A Commination of Death per manum Cœli belongeth to all that belong to old Adam, they can have no admiſſion into Paradiſe, none can enter into it by the Original Law of Religion, that way is become utterly impervious and unpaſſable. Such myſterious Truths of Chriſtianity may reaſonably be thought, to be ſignified by the Cherubims with a flaming Sword placed at the entrance of the Garden of Eden. But it is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe that the Cherubims continu'd in that poſture (p) for I know not how many Ages, ſeeing it is not probable, that the Terreſtrial Paradiſe with its Symbolical Trees was of any long continuance.

(n) De Gen. ad lit. l. 11. c. 40.

(o) Exhort. ad Bapt. p. 478.

(p) Archæol. Philoſ. p. 293.

III. The Paradiſaical Oeconomy is an Oeconomy, that belongeth to a Terreſtrial Animal Creation, which ſpeaketh it a fit and reaſonable and agreeable Oeconomy. For becauſe it aſcendeth to nothing higher than what is Terreſtrial Animal, therefore it is agreeable to, and commenſurate with, a Terreſtrial Animal Creation. And it was requiſite and neceſſary for ſettling the Affairs of ſuch a Creation, and was accommodate for that purpoſe, which is the deſign and end of it. For although the Affairs of the great World were ſufficiently ſettled meerly by the Creation of it, yet it was otherwiſe with the Affairs of the little World of Man. If we conſider the Creation abſtractedly from the Paradiſaical Oeconomy (which belong'd to it, and was begun in the time of the Hexaemeron) it left the courſe of Nature under a Suſpenſion (as is before ſaid) and the concerns of Mankind in great degree unſettled and undetermin'd. The State of the natural World was ſettled, when God made an end of his Creation-work: But the State of the human moral World was not ſettled. As appeareth from the ſequel of the Hiſtory, and from thoſe inquiries which Divines make. (q) Whether Man muſt not have been tranſlated, whether there muſt not have been departures and ſucceſſions of Mankind, what muſt have been the courſe of Generation, and what ſort of Children Parents muſt have had, if our firſt Parents had not ſinned? A Settlement muſt be made of the Terreſtrial Animal concerns of our firſt Parents, and in them of the Terreſtrial Animal concerns of all Mankind; which that it may be a wiſe and juſt Settlement, it muſt depend upon their ſinning or not ſinning, and muſt be made according to their merits and demerits; ſo that by their Sin a Penal Settlement of things in Nature ſhould take place and continue to the Worlds end. But Penal Evils could not regularly be inflicted upon Man in his natural Innocency; ſuch a Penal Settlement of things could not regularly be introduc'd but upon account of the Sin of Man; God muſt not be thought, to have made Death nor the Kingdom of Death upon Earth. Beſides, the (q) Petav. T. 3. de op. l. 2. c. 8.

Wiſd. 1. 13, 14.

the Wiſdom of God deſign'd, that the Settlement of things introduc'd by the firſt Adam ſhould carry a Correſpondence to the Settlement of things, which was to be introduc'd by the ſecond Adam. Upon which accounts the Paradiſaical Oeconomy was neceſſary for ſettling the Affairs of this Terreſtrial Animal Creation. And as this was the end and deſign of it, ſo it was ſufficiently accommodate thereto; for the Mind and Senſe of the whole of it is compriſed in this juſt and reaſonable determination; ſo long as our firſt Parents continu'd in their State of Innocency, their Paradiſaical State and the Suſpenſion of the courſe of Nature ſhould be continu'd: But upon their Lapſe from the State of Innocency their Paradiſaical State ſhould become forfeited, the courſe of Nature ſhould take place, and themſelves and their Poſterity be ſubjected thereto. During their Paradiſaical State (r) nullis agitabantur perturbationibus animorum, nullis corporum lædebantur incommodis, they were agitated by no Perturbations of their Minds, nor hurt by any Incommodations of their Bodies. The courſe of Nature was then under a Suſpenſion in reſpect of bodily Pains, Diſeaſes and Death, and alſo in reſpect of inordinate Concupiſcence. Not as if our firſt Parents had that Frænum, which the Schools call Original Righteouſneſs, and which is the ſame thing with the Life of Grace and Holineſs (for as their Immortality was not the heavenly Immortality, ſo their Original Rectitude was not the holy heavenly Life:) But the Frænum which they had, was nothing greater or better, than what the Conſervation of the State of pure Nature and natural Innocency implieth. For whereas in the courſe of Nature, humane Nature is now by degrees filled with that inordinacy commonly called Concupiſcence, this courſe of Nature was ſuſpended during the Paradiſaical State of our firſt Parents. But upon their Tranſgreſſion this Frænum was taken away, that is, themſelves and their Poſterity were ſubjected to the courſe of Nature both in reſpect of Sin and in reſpect of bodily Death. The courſe of Nature (of Terreſtrial Animal Nature) took place by way of Settlement both in reſpect of a Criminal and Penal ſort of Evils. In reſpect of a Criminal ſort of Evils (which yet are in ſome reſpect Penal) the courſe of Nature took place by way of Settlement upon our firſt Parents relinquiſhing their State of natural Innocency; for now humane Nature in the courſe of Nature is filled with inordinate Concupiſcence, which is Hereditary to Mankind. But our firſt Parents had nothing of it in their State of Innocency. (s) Nudi erant & non confundebantur: Non quod eis ſua nuditas eſſet incognita, ſed turpis nuditas nondum erat. They were naked and were not aſhamed: Not becauſe they knew not their nakedneſs, but becauſe as yet there was no ſhameful nakedneſs. And what doth this denote and ſignifie? It doth not ſignifie, that our firſt Parents antecedently to their Tranſgreſſion were in the State of Sanctity, but that they were in the State of natural Innocency; and the ſight and ſenſe of bodily Nakedneſs which now cometh upon all Men in the courſe of Nature, plainly ſheweth, that their Lapſe was from the State of natural Innocency, the conſequence whereof was, the courſe of Nature took place by way of Settlement.

IV. In the Hiſtory of Paradiſe Moſes concerneth himſelf at a great rate, to relate to us the matters that concern the Nakedneſs of our firſt Parents; which is a demonſtration, that his deſign was to inform us, that antecedently to their Tranſgreſſion their Eſtate was (not the State of Sanctity, but) the State of natural Innocency. For elſe to what purpoſe doth he in ſo ſhort an Hiſtory harp upon this ſtring no leſs than three ſeveral times? Gen. 2. 25. They were both naked, the Man and his Wife, and were not aſhamed. After their Tranſgreſſion he ſaith Gen. 3. 7. And the Eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked: And they ſowed Fig-leaves together, and made themſelves Aprons. Gen. 3. 10, 11. I heard thy voice in the Garden: And I was afraid, becauſe I was naked; and I hid my ſelf. (Our firſt Parents, as other Animals do, hid themſelves in the Thickets (t) per nimium pudorem ac timorem, becauſe of a ſenſe of Shame upon account of their Nakedneſs, and fearfulneſs upon account of their Tranſgreſſion.) And he ſaid, who told thee, that thou waſt naked? That is, how cameſt thou to know bodily Nakedneſs in the ſenſe that we know it, who are aſham'd of it? Shame (u) eſt imaginatio de ignominia. It ariſeth from turpitude and deformity criminal or penal, moral or natural. Menelaus was aſham'd to appear in publick, becauſe of his ſordid ragged Garments.

Κρύπτων ὑπ' αἰδοῦς τὰς τυχάς. Euripid.

So Mankind are aſham'd of that natural Turpitude and Deformity commonly called our Nakedneſs, and cover it with Cloaths, leſt they walk naked and Men ſee their Shame. Apoc. 16. 15. But our firſt Parents wanted no bodily clothing having no ſhameful ſenſe of bodily Nakedneſs, no pudor circa genitalia & res venereas, which is now a marvellous Affection and property of humane Nature in general, and which immediately diſcover'd it ſelf in them upon their Tranſgreſſion. Which ſpeaketh them fallen by their Tranſgreſſion from the State of Innocency; But that their Fall was not from the State of Sanctity (a total falling from Grace or a total Apoſtacy from God,) appeareth from the kind Proviſion which was made for covering their Nakedneſs. For whereas they had made but a ſorry Proviſion for themſelves (in connecting together Fig-leaves to make themſelves Aprons) the Hiſtory ſaith; unto Adam alſo and his Wife did the Lord God make Coats of Skins, and clothed them, Gen. 3. 21. It may ſeem ſtrange, that the Lord God (ſo called in the Hiſtory) ſhould concern himſelf about making Cloaths for our firſt Parents, if in this Hiſtory there was nothing of Myſtery: But it will ſomewhat abate the ſeeming ſtrangeneſs of it, if we conſider, that the making their earthly Body was a ſort of making Cloaths for them, (w) nam hoc quoque Natura, ut quandam veſtem animo circumdedit, for Nature hath clothed the Soul with a Body as with a Garment. The Skin of an humane Body is alſo called by Tertullian Carnis tunica, the Coat of the Fleſh. The making an human Body therefore is near of kin to the making Coats and Cloaths for our firſt Parents, eſpecially ſuch Cloaths which were Coats of Skins. And as we may fitly call our own humane Body and the Skin thereof our Cloaths and ſuch Cloaths which are of God's making: So the Coats of Skins that have undergone no human Artifice or Elaboration (or are ſuch in the main at leaſt, as they were, when they were taken from the Backs of Animals) muſt be called Coats and Cloaths of God's making, in contradiſtinction to ſuch Coats and Cloaths which are of human Artifice and Elaboration. Such were the Coats and Cloaths of our firſt Parents; therefore the Lord God made their Coats and Cloaths. But it may reaſonably be ſuppos'd, that the Lord God (ſo called in the Hiſtory) did much more towards their clothing; that he directed and commanded them, to take off the Skins (wherewith they were clothed) from the Backs of Animals, to adapt them to their Bodies, or at leaſt to inwrap their Bodies in them. And if the Lord God did all this towards the clothing our firſt Parents, may not the Hiſtory juſtly ſay, unto them the Lord God made Coats, Coats of Skins and clothed them? The Animals that afforded theſe Skins, are commonly thought to have been killed in Sacrifice: But it may be thought, that they were killed in the Scuffles and Rencounters of Animals amongſt themſelves. Howſoever that be, if our firſt Parents were not unfurniſh'd with Means and Inſtruments for killing Sacrifices (as all agree) they may be ſuppos'd, to have taken off the Skins of Animals for their Clothing (according to Divine Command) and there is no need of ſuppoſing, that this was done by an Angel's hand. Setting aſide therefore a vulgar uncertain Conceit, (that but two of every kind of Animals were at firſt created) this following Objection hath nothing of force in it. (x) God or an Angel gave our firſt Parents Coats made of the Skins of Animals. He kill'd the Animals therefore and took off their Skins, or elſe flead them alive. But this is the part of a Butcher or an Executioner, not of an Angel. Beſides, by this Butchery whole Kinds of Animals muſt have periſh'd, there being but two created of every Kind, as is commonly ſuppoſed. A like Exception is made againſt our firſt Parents connecting Fig-leaves, to cover their Nakedneſs, which is all that is meant by ſewing them together. (y) Behold the Primordials of the Taylor's Art! but whence had they Needle and Thread (the Arts that furniſh theſe not being invented) in the firſt day of their Creation? At this rate of arguing if Moſes had ſaid, that our firſt Parents knit together Fig-leaves, we ſhould have ask'd, whence had they their Knitting-needles? But thus to Cavil at words in human Authors is not ingenuous; and to be thus bold with the holy Scriptures, is not Religious. There is no reaſon to think that the Primordials of the Taylor's Art are contain'd in this Hiſtory: But the Primordials of Clothing are certainly contain'd in it, and the account which it giveth of them is a conſiderable recommendation of this Moſaic Hiſtory. If the Author of it had ſaid; that the Lord God clothed our firſt Parents in Linen or Wollen Garments (ſuch as we wear,) this would have betray'd its Fabuloſity: But Skins were materia facilè parabilis, ſuch rude clothing ſerv'd well enough to teach them the way of clothing, Coats of Skins were ſuitable to Terreſtrial Animals, and agreeable to the way of clothing in ancient times (which was by the Skins of Animals Heb. 11. 37.) which in all probability had its Origine from our firſt Parents Tunicæ pelliceæ, Coats of Skins. Which might be deſign'd, to reproach them with brutiſhneſs (as is commonly ſuppoſed,) yet in ſome reſpect they might deſerve the Apoſtle's Name of Honour (1 Cor. 12. 23.) and accordingly they are ſtiled by Onkelos in his Paraphraſe Veſtes Honoris, Veſtments of Honour, whereby our firſt Parents might cover their Nakedneſs.

(r) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 14. c. 10.

(s) S. Aug. ibid. c. 17.

(t) Idem de Gen. ad lit. l. 11. c. 33.

(u) Ariſt. Rhet. l. 2. c. 6.

(w) V. Gat. Not. in Ant. p. 351

V. Touching the Penal Evils conſequent upon the Sin of our firſt Parents it is obſervable, that they are Nature, nothing but the courſe of corporeal Nature; and conſequently, if the Sin of our firſt Parents was a total falling from Sanctity and ſaving Grace, there was no proportion, no congruity between the Sin and the Puniſhment; which is a demonſtration, that their Sin was not a falling from Sanctity, but only from the State of natural Innocency. The firſt of theſe Penal Evils is the Woman's Penalty, Gen. 3. 16. Unto the Woman he ſaid, I will greatly multiply thy Sorrow and thy Conception: In Sorrow thou ſhalt bring forth Children: And thy Deſire ſhall be to thy Husband (or ſhall be ſubject to thy Husband) and he ſhall rule over thee. The Woman is here by Sentence ſubjected to two inconveniences of a married Woman's Condition: The one of which (Subjection to her Husband) is her natural condition as a Wife, the other (the Pains of Child-bearing) cometh upon her in the courſe of Nature. Both theſe inconveniences ſo inſeparably attend her Sex, that it is not imaginable, but that (more or leſs) they muſt have taken place in Paradiſe (ſuppoſing her married and to be Child-bearing) if the courſe of Nature took place there. But no Law of Settlement touching theſe matters was made till after her Tranſgreſſion, whence it is manifeſt, that the deſign and end of the Paradiſaical Oeconomy was the Settlement of the Affairs of a Terreſtrial Animal Creation. The Pains of Child-bearing are peculiarly the Woman's Portion, but ſhe is not unconcern'd in thoſe other Penal Evils, that are denounc'd upon Man, namely, the ſterility of the Earth, the toil of this Life, and the certainty of Death; Gen. 3. 17, 18, 19. In which Settlement of things (made after the Sin of Man) Man is doom'd to a certain Death (Duſt thou art and unto Duſt ſhalt thou return:) But thereby no mutation was made in Nature; for the Sentence only ſignifieth, that the Nature of an human Animal Body (the courſe of its Nature) ſhould take place by way of Settlement, and as the Puniſhment of Sin, and that Man ſhould be ſubjected thereto. So it is moſt reaſonable, to ſuppoſe, that by curſing the Ground no mutation was made in Terreſtrial mundane Nature (the Nature and Fertility of the Earth:) But the Sentence only meaneth, that the Earth ſhould be ſo Parental unto Man, as yet to be of the Nature of a Step-mother to him, and this courſe of Nature ſhould take place and that by way of Penal Settlement; ſo that by the Sentence (curſed is the Ground for thy ſake) the Earth was not firſt made, but only penally ſettled of the Nature of a Step-mother unto Man. The make and frame of the Earth ſheweth, that it was at firſt made with a meaſurable Fertility and Sterility, and that it was originally of a Nature that is productive of Thorns and Thiſtles, as well as better Plants: But the Earth was made of this Nature and natural Condition with deſign, to make it, (this Nature and natural Condition of it) the Puniſhment of Man in caſe of Sin and Tranſgreſſion.

(x) Deus vel Angelus dedit iis Tunicas, factas nempe ex pellibus animalium. Necuit igitur & excoriavit animalia, vel innocuis & vivis pelles detraxit. Sed hoc Lanii & Carnificis eſt, non Angeli. Prætereà ex hâc lanienâ periiſſent integra genera Animalium. Archæol. Phil. p. 293.

(y) En primordia artis ſutoriæ! ſed unde illis acus: Unde filum, in primo die ſuæ Creationis? Linificio vel Arte ferrariâ nondum inventis. Ibid.

Accordingly upon his Tranſgreſſion, becauſe of his Sin and for his Puniſhment a Settlement was made of this Nature and natural Condition of the Earth, that it ſhould be a Step-mother unto Man (it was curſed by way of Settlement, in a Settlement and as part of the Settlement) which was a ſettled Curſe upon the Ground. The dooming Man therefore to a life of Agriculture, of hard labour and toil to get his Bread, doth not neceſſarily import any mutation in Nature, but only a great mutation in Man's Condition, who before liv'd Paradiſaically, but muſt now live in wearifom Toil and Travail, and eat his Bread in the Sweat of his Brows becauſe of the Ground which the Lord (by way of Settlement) hath curſed. Gen. 5. 29. In this Settlement of things (which is unexceptionably Wiſe, Juſt and Good) the Paradiſaical Oeconomy iſſu'd, and this Iſſue of it ſheweth, what was the end and deſign of it.

VI. It appeareth, that the matters of this Oeconomy are hugely remote and alien from the matters of an Oeconomy of Sanctity and Soul-intereſts, that it is not at all accommodate for making a Settlement of Soul-goods and Evils; for there are no ſuch kind of things in this Oeconomy. The formation of Woman and Marriage, the bodily Nakedneſs of our firſt Parents (without and with Shame,) the buſineſs of eating or not eating of two Trees in an earthly Garden, the pains of Child-bearing, the toils of a Life of Agriculture and the certainty of bodily Death, are things as remote and diſtant from the great Concerns of Souls (their Light and Life, their State and Citizenſhip, their Priviledges and Puniſhments,) ———ὅσον ὐρανὸς ἐσ' ἀπὸ γαίης, as Earth is from Heaven. The Story of Jupiter's Garden in Plato and the Garden of Alcinous in Homer (z) are thought to be imitative derivatives from this Moſaic Hiſtory of Paradiſe (ſo Euſebius and J. Mart. have diſcours'd :) But in thoſe Paganical Fables there is nothing that looketh like an Oeconomy of Soul-concerns: Nor is it otherwiſe with this Moſaic Hiſtory. The Jews Religion (in the Letter of it) was but mundane and ſecular, yet it was God's Teſtament and the Inſtitution of a Religion (containing the Doctrines, Precepts, Promiſes, Conditions and Penalties of a Religion :) But this Moſaic Paradiſaical Oeconmy (although correſpondent to the Oeconomy of Religion) cannot be called the Inſtitution of a Supralapſarian Religion. The Jews call the Fundamentals of Religion (a) the Plants of Paradiſe (whence they ſay of one that is become an Heretick, abſcidit Plantas :) But if we had a Catalogue of the Plants of this Moſaic Paradiſe, it would not be found a Catalogue of the Fundamental Credenda and Agenda of Religion. They have a Conceit, that if Adam had perſever'd in his Innocency, a ſupernal Paradiſe was prepar'd for him; for thus ſometimes they define Paradiſe. The Garden of Eden is that degree, which was prepar'd for Adam, and in which he had remained for ever, if he had not ſinned. So in the Chriſtian Church it is ſuppoſed, (b) that our firſt Parents were deſign'd to continue in Beatitude ζῶντες τὸν ἀληθινὸν ϗ ὄντως τῶν ἁγίων ἐν παραδείσῳ βίον, living the true Life and that of Saints indeed in Paradiſe. (c) God introduc'd them into his Paradiſe and gave them a Law, that if they did not loſe, but keep the Grace that was given them, they might live in Paradiſe a life without Grief, Sorrow and Care, beſides that they had a Promiſe of the Immortality in Heaven. But it is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that nothing more ſhould be requir'd, to qualifie them for an heavenly than for an earthly Paradiſe; that the life of Grace was indiſpenſably requiſite, to qualifie them for a Paradiſe of ſenſitive Nature; or that they muſt not poſſeſs an earthly Paradiſe without being the real Saints of God (and that in ſinleſs Perfection,) whereas the Iſraelites might rightfully poſſeſs their earthly Canaan meerly by a Civil-religious obſervance of their Law. Procopius well illuſtrateth this Oeconomy from the Judaical Oeconomy, and rightly affirmeth concerning God, when he commanded Adam to abſtain from the Tree of Knowledge. (d) He did not ſhew unto him the Kingdom of Heaven: Seeing he did not promiſe it to the Jews a great while after : But as to Infants ſhew'd them a Land flowing with Milk and Honey. The Paradiſaical Oeconomy in the Letter of it, did not tranſcend an earthly Paradiſe, as the Judaical Oeconomy in the Letter of it did not tranſcend an earthly Canaan : And both are alike unſuited to the Heaven-born Nature of the Saints of God and alike below their Oeconomy. (e) If thou art Spiritual and mindeſt higher things than bodily Enjoyments, aſcend in thy Mind to the Pulchritudes of Angels; conſider their fruits of Righteouſneſs; contemplate the River of God that is full of Water, whoſe Streams make glad the Divine City, whoſe Builder and Maker is God. If the Terreſtrial Adam was a Saint of God, he muſt be ſuppos'd, to have had the Promiſe of an heavenly Immortality : And if he had the Promiſe of an heavenly Immortality, it is reaſonable, to ſuppoſe him, to have been a Saint of God.

VII. If according to the common Hypotheſis we ſuppoſe him a Saint of God and his Oeconomy an Oeconomy of Sanctity and of Soul-intereſts, it cannot be thought a wiſe and reaſonable and agreeable Oeconomy in reſpect of his Sin and Puniſhment and the Law which he violated : But the Jews Objections againſt this Hypotheſis (notwithſtanding ſome infirm parts that are in them) are in the main firm and unanſwerable. (f) How can you imagine, that the Lord came with ſuch ſeverity againſt the firſt Man, as for a ſmall matter (the biting one Apple) to deſtroy him both in this and the other World, and not only him, but all his Poſterity alſo? Who yet did this ignorantly, ſeeing he was without Knowledge, as it is ſaid, the Eyes of them both were opened, and they knew, that they were naked. Which opening was in the Eye of Wiſdom. Moreover,

the

(z) J. Mart. Paræn. p. 27.

(a) Coſri p. 245. & p. 72.

(b) S. Athanaſ. de Incarn. verb. non procul. ab initio.

(c) Εἰς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ παράδεισον αὐτοὺς εἰσαγαγὼν (ὁ θεὸς) ἔδωκεν αὐτοῖς νόμον· ἵνα εἰ μὲν φυλάξαιεν τὴν χάριν, ϗ μένοιεν καλοί, ἔχωσι τὴν ἐν παραδείσῳ ἄλυπον ϗ ἀνώδυνον ϗ ἀμέριμνον ζωὴν πρὸς τῷ ϗ τῆς ἐν οὐρανοῖς ἀφθαρσίας αὐτοὺς τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν ἔχειν. Idem ibid.

(d) Non ei Cælorum oſtendiſſe regnum.——— cùm nè Judæis quidem tanto poſt tempore illud promiſerit : Sed ſic tanquam infantibus terram melle ac lacte manantem oſtenderit. Ap. Petav. T. 3. de op. l. 2. c. 9.

(e) Εἰ πνευματικὸς εἶ καὶ ὑψηλότερα φρονεῖς τῶν σωματικῶν ἀπολαύσεων, ἀνάβα τῇ διανοίᾳ πρὸς τὰ κάλλη τῶν ἀγγέλων· Καταμάθε τοὺς ἐν αὐτοῖς τῆς δικαιοσύνης καρποὺς· Θεάσαι τὸν ποταμὸν τοῦ θεοῦ τὸν πεπληρωμένον ὑδάτων, Οὗ τὰ ὁρμήματα εὐφραίνουσι τὴν πόλιν τοῦ θεοῦ, ἧς τεχνίτης καὶ δημιουργὸς ὁ θεός. S. Baſil. de Paradiſ. ſub fin.

(f) Quomodo aſcendit ſuper cor veſtrum, quòd venerit Dominus cum tanta ſeveritate contra primum hominem, ut illum vinctum teneret, propter rem exiguam, nempe propter morſum pomi unius, illumque perderet in hoc ſeculo atque in futuro, & non ipſum tantum, ſed & omnes poſteros ejus? Qui tamen errans hoc fecit, cùm non fuerit adhuc in eo cognitio, ſicut dicitur. Et aperti ſunt oculi amborum & cognoverunt, quòd nudi eſſent. Hæc autem apertio fuit in oculo ſapientiæ. Quin in occiſione Habel fuit tranſ- ſſio illa mille partibus major àm iſta, & tamen non an- ctitur illi pœna tanta. Au- or Nizachon. ap. Hoornbeck Jud. l. 4. c. 2.

the Murder of Abel was a thouſand times a greater Tranſgreſſion, which yet had no ſuch great Puniſhment annex'd to it.

If the Law of Paradiſe be conſider'd as a Precept of Religion and Sanctity, it will not be thought one of the (magnalia Legis) great Commandments. The Violation of it will not ſeem one of the great Sins much leſs a Sin unto Death in the Apoſtle's Senſe. 1 Joh. 5. 16. Adam (a ſuppos'd Saint) will not ſeem by his Tranſgreſſion, to have fallen into worſe Eſtate than David fell into by his Murder and Adultery (whoſe State of Grace is commonly thought not to have been totally deſtroy'd by his foul Facts, but only ſuſpended;) and in this way of conſidering and eſtimating things the Puniſhment of Adam's Sin according to the common Hypotheſis will ſeem immenſly incongruous and diſproportionate, utterly irreconcileable with Wiſdom, Juſtice and Goodneſs. A Covenant may be ſuppos'd to have been made with Adam; for God's appointment and ſettlement of things of a preceptive, promiſſory and penal Nature may be called a Covenant: But ſuch a Covenant may not be ſuppos'd, to have been made with Adam touching ſpiritual Affairs, which is wholly alien from due, divine and reaſonable Methods of procedure in ſpiritual Affairs. Nor is there any conſideration of the ſpiritual Affairs of our firſt Parents and their Poſterity properly ſuch (otherwiſe than typically and ſymbolically) in the Paradiſaical Oeconomy; although our firſt Parents muſt be ſuppos'd, to have had their ſpiritual and eternal Intereſts as well as the reſt of Mankind. But if theſe had been the buſineſs of their Paradiſaical Oeconomy, the Divine Moral Law muſt have been the trial of their Obedience; and it ſeemeth ſtrange in the Eyes of all Men, that the Divine Law-giver did not make it ſuch. For the aſſoiling of which difficulty ſome ſay, the Moral Law was not made the trial of their Obedience, becauſe they were not capable of violating it. But if Adam was a Saint of God, he was capable of the ſame Sin and Temptation with the Angels in Heaven and of violating the holy Moral Law as well as they. And conſequently the Law of Paradiſe cannot be ſhew'd, to have been wiſe, reaſonable and requiſite, if we ſuppoſe Adam in Innocency, to have been a Saint of God.

ARTICLE 6.

That Species (or Kind) of Animal the Serpent is of great Remark in Scripture.

THEY that write of Animals and deſcribe their Natures and Properties (ſuch as the Lion, the Leopard, the Elephant, the Wolf and the Sheep) mean not only one individual Animal, but the ſeveral Species of Animals called by thoſe Names. So when we ſay, the Horſe is a War-like Animal, we mean that Species (or Kind) of Animal. When we ſay, the Tyger is a fierce Creature, the Lamb is a tame and innocent Creature, the Fox is a ſubtil Creature, we do not mean only one Lamb, or Fox or Tyger, but we ſpeak ſpecificativè, and mean the whole Kind, that all Lambs, Tygers and Foxes are of ſuch a Nature and Properties. So when we ſpeak of the Serpent, we diſtinguiſh Animals into ſeveral Kinds, and conſider this Animal as contradiſtinct to the other Kinds, and do not mean only one ſingular individual Serpent, but all Serpents; for this Name the Serpent denoteth the whole Kind and Family. There are many Kinds of Serpents, the Viper, the Aſp, the Baſilisk, the Dragon, the Hyæna, the Acontias (a leaping Serpent) the Ceraſtes (that hath Quaſi-horns,) many Kinds of Serpents there are, for ſome of which we have no particular Name in our Language: But all theſe various ſorts of Serpents are comprehended under this Name the Serpent; for thereby we mean all ſorts of Serpents. Only the fiery flying Serpent (the Saraph) is not comprehended under this Name, the Serpent (but muſt be excluded out of the number of Serpents) in the ſtrict acceptation. For a Serpent in the ordinary definitive Notion is (g) ζῶον ἑρπετὸν, Animal reptile, a creeping-crawling Animal. Wherewith the Etymology of the word agreeth; for Serpens is from Serpo to creep. This Species or Kind of Animal is of great remark in Scripture.

I. As being the crafty, ſubtil and politick kind of Animal. Gen. 3. 1. 2 Cor. 11. 3. There are ſeveral inſtances of the Serpents ſubtilty and policy; for when he layeth himſelf to ſleep, he wrappeth his whole Body about his Head (as a Bulwark to defend it,) and in all conflicts and dangers he will be ſure to have a care of his Head (to ſecure that part,) and will expoſe all the reſt of his Body, to ſecure it; which is great Prudence, to preſerve his Life. By putting out his Quaſi-horns, which are like the Grains of Corn, he catcheth the Birds, that flee to them for Food. His inſidious way of hurting is an inſtance of his Policy; the Ceraſtes lieth hid in Sands of the ſame colour with himſelf and biteth the Horſe-heels. Gen. 49. 17. When the Serpent feeleth himſelf grown old, he creepeth through the Crevices of a Rock, and ſo getteth off his old Skin, and when he findeth his Sight grown dim (as is generally reported of him) he anointeth his Eyes with the Leaves of Fennel, and recovereth his Sight; and if he findeth his Scales dull and in a bad poſture, he ſcratcheth himſelf with the Prickles of Juniper. Such prudential Inſtincts are in Serpents, which are ſo remarkable for their ſubtilty, that Ariſtotle calleth them μάλιστα ἐπιβούλους, the moſt inſidious Animals. And in Æſop's Fables the Crab-fiſh perſwadeth the Serpent μεταβάλλεσθαι τῆς πονηρίας, to change his craftineſs and ſubtilty, but he will not be perſwaded to it. He is watchful for his ſafety, and careful to obſerve the Feet of Men, that they may not tread on him; and is remarkable for his τὸ ὀξυδερκὲς, quickſightedneſs (a branch of Prudence) —— tam cernis acutum quam aut Aquila aut Serpens Epidaurius. Hence the Poets appoint Dragons to keep the golden Apples, as being moſt quick-ſighted, Serpents among the Heathen were ſacred to Æſculapius, becauſe a Phyſician muſt be Circumſpect; and the Romans had a Dragon for their Enſign (to ſignifie, that Soldiers muſt be quick-ſighted, they that carried it were called Draconarii, whence the Name Dragoons is deriv'd. To theſe prudential Faculties and Inſtincts of Serpents our Saviour hath reſpect, Matth. 10. 16. Be ye wiſe as Serpents. We ſhould learn of them, duly to love and look to our ſelves, to proſecute our own true good and decline our real evil; to take heed to our ſafety and preſervation vation (both of Soul and Body) and to keep out of harm's way; to walk circumſpectly and to have our Eyes in our Head; to be quick-ſighted in eſpying things and perſons that are dangerous, and careful to avoid them. And this our prudential care muſt extend to Bodily as well as Soul-dangers. For our Saviour would have us, not to be fooliſhly prodigal of our Eſtates and Lives, not to throw them away upon trivial and frivolous accounts: But to ſecure our temporal Intereſt, ſo far as is conſiſtent with our ſpiritual and eternal Intereſt. He would have us to be Martyrs, but not Hectors; Valiant, but not Fool-hardy; Faithful, but not Raſh and Precipitant, duly Circumſpect and Prudent to preſerve our ſelves, if we be alſo faithful to preſerve our Souls. Beware of Men. Matth. 10. 17. Men, who, if you be not aware of them, will circumvent, betray and ruin you. Behold, I ſend you forth as Sheep in the midſt of Wolves; therefore be wiſe as Serpents, be duly Circumſpect to look to your temporal Safety, and ſo far as honeſtly you may decline Danger. So the Apoſtle admoniſheth Timothy, to beware of a dangerous Man. 2 Tim. 4. 15. Himſelf was in danger by falſe Brethren (2 Cor. 11. 26.) and ſo are the upright and faithful in all times. They are concern'd therefore, to learn a Wiſdom of the Serpent: But there is alſo a Serpentine Wiſdom, which they are concern'd to eſchew and avoid; ſuch is the guileful Skill and Wiſdom repugnant to the ſimplicity and innocuouſneſs of the Dove, which is eſſential to a Chriſtian. Who muſt not be a proficient in the old Serpent's Politicks (whoſe ſubtilty is malign and was a beguiling Man) nor have acquaintance with the Wiles and Stratagems of the World, ſave only to avoid danger from the ſleight of Men and their cunning Eph. 4. 14. Craftineſs, whereby they lie in wait to deceive. They Jer. 4. 22. are wiſe to do Evil (wiſe to be diſhoneſt and unjuſt, and have many fetches and many wiles to ſupplant and circumvent the Innocent:) But a Chriſtian muſt be a ſtranger to their evil Arts, and to all the ways and methods of doing evil.

(g) Bochart. de Animal. P. 1. l. 1. c. 4. Voſſ. de Idol. l. 4. c. 52.

II. The Scripture remarketh the Serpent (that kind of Animal,) as the hurtful, venenate (h) Voſſ. ſupr. c. 58. and poyſonous kind of Animal. (h) For although in ſome places there are Serpents that are not hurtful and venenate, yet theſe being few and rare in compariſon, they muſt not alter our account of the Serpents Nature, which is noxious, poyſonous and venenate. Eccluſ. 25. 15. There is no head above the head of a Serpent. (i) Bochart. ſupr. & Par. 2. l. 3. c. 14. The words ſhould be rendred, (i) there is no poyſon above the poyſon of a Serpent; for Roſch ſignifieth both an Head and Poyſon. Deut. 32, 33. Their wine is the poyſon of Dragons and the cruel venom of Aſps. Pliny ſaith of the Dragons, that they have no poyſon in them; and it is true of the Dragons in Greece: But in Aſia and Africa the Dragons have in them a moſt deadly poyſon. And the venom of Aſps is ſo deadly and incurable, that the Bite of an Aſp is a Proverbial Phraſe, to ſignifie an incurable wound. (k) Ibid. c. 2. & 1. (k) A Serpent in general is called venenata Beſtia, a venomous Beaſt, and the Greek word θηρίον, ſo ſignifieth, whence oftentimes it ſignifieth a Serpent, and thence it is, that the Antidotes or Remedies againſt Poyſon are called in Phyſick θηριακὰ, Theriaca. The poyſon of Serpents is ſaid to lie partly in their Gall, partly in their Teeth, and partly in a Bag under their Tongue; whence in the Book of Job the deſtruction of the wicked is thus ſignified. He ſhall ſuck the poyſon of Aſps: The Viper's Tongue ſhall ſlay him. Job 20. 16. As if the Viper did ſlay with his Tongue; whereas he deſtroyeth with his Teeth, yet his Poyſon is under his Tongue, and he biteth with his Tongue put out. So the Son of Sirach amongſt the deadly deſtructive things of the World reckoneth Teeth of wild Beaſts and Scorpions, Serpents and the Sword. Eccluſ. 39. 30. The Bite of a Viper is ſo deadly, that it killeth the greateſt Beaſts in the World, and but for a Miracle it had been deadly to S. Paul, Act. 28. 3. When Paul had gather'd a bundle of ſticks and laid them on the fire, there came a Viper out of the heat, and faſtned on his hand. Out of Sticks and Fewel Serpents uſually come forth (there are many inſtances of it,) ſo did S. Paul's Viper, which is counted nequiſſimum genus beſtiæ, one of the moſt poyſonous of all Serpents, many of which are ſo deadly poyſonous, that no one can tread on them, but he is in danger of loſing his Life. Whence the Pſalmiſt ſaith of the Man, whom God will protect, he ſhall tread upon the Pſal. 91. 13. Adder without being hurt, which is a great and miraculous thing. No one can come near the Hole of an Aſp or a Baſiliſc, but he is in danger of loſing his Life. Whence the Prophet ſaith, The ſucking Child ſhall play on the Hole of Iſa. 11. the Aſp, and the weaned Child ſhall put his hand on the Cockatrice Den. Which implieth, that it is a dangerous and deadly thing, to come near their Holes and Caverns. (l) Voſſ. ſupr. c. 58. (l) If any one ſtriketh a Baſiliſc with a Staff (as good Authors report,) his Poyſon will propagate it ſelf by the Staff and kill the Man. The Venom of an Aſp is ſo quick and penetrative, and deadly to the Vitals, that his biting is ſaid to kill within four Hours; and therefore at Alexandria they were wont to kill with the biting of an Aſp thoſe Malefactors, whom they would have to die a quicker ſort of Death. Fearful Symptoms ariſe in an humane Body from the Poyſon of theſe venenate Animals (Convulſions, Vomitings, Blindneſs, grievous Inflammations and Death;) and the more fiery they are the more poyſonous. That therefore muſt neceſſarily be a grievous Plague, which God ſent Numb. 2 6. amongſt the rebellious Iſraelites fiery flying Serpents (which muſt be reckon'd amongſt Serpents in a large acceptation,) who by their biting excited very fiery Inflammations. Of theſe we read alſo, Iſa. 30. 6. The Viper and fiery flying Serpent, that hath a mighty Virulency.

The Scripture remarketh the venenate poyſonous Nature of Serpents not only in a general way, but to ſeveral particular purpoſes. As, (1.) To ſet before us the Nature of Sin. Iſa. 59. 5. He that eateth of their Eggs dieth, and that which is cruſh'd (touch'd) breaketh out into a Viper. Serpents propagate their Poyſon, their Eggs are poyſonous, as themſelves are, and ſuch are the evil works of ungodly Sinners, which the Prophet calleth their Eggs. Their Sins are firſt conceiv'd in their Thoughts, and then brought forth into Act, and theſe are the Eggs that they lay, which are deadly and mortiferous. We ſhould look upon Sin therefore with horror, as of a direful Serpent-like (Dragon-like) Nature, and not dare to touch or have any dealings with it. Flee from Sin as from the face of a Serpent. Eccluſ. 21. 2.

ſet before us the fruit of ſenſual Pleaſures, eſpecially the Pleaſures of high drinking the Drunkards Royal Repaſt. Prov. 23. 31. Look not thou upon the wine it is red, when it giveth his colour in the Cup, when it moveth it ſelf aright. At the laſt it biteth like a Serpent, and ſtingeth like an Adder. The wiſe Man diſtinguiſheth between the Serpents biting and ſtinging. There are Serpents in the Weſt-Indies that hurt both ways, they both bite with their Mouth and ſting with their Tail like a Scorpion. Such are the Fruits and Effects of ſtrong Drink, that is deadly and mortiferous both to Soul and Body, both to the Life of Grace and of Nature; like an Amphisbœna it biteth both ways and killeth both here and hereafter. When the Wine moveth in the Cup, it promiſeth well, but payeth not what it promiſeth. It promiſeth Health, and payeth Sickneſs; it promiſeth Joy, and payeth Sorrow; it cometh with a ſmiling Face, but carrieth a Sting in the Tail of it. It produceth all manner of Sin and bitterneſs to the Soul, and Evils innumerable to the Body, Pains, Gouts, Palſies, Apoplexies, Lethargies, Dropſies, Vertigo's, Convulſions and Death. Therefore look upon a drunken Cup as a Cup of Poiſon, and be afraid of it as of the Venom of a Serpent. (3.) To ſet before us the evil Nature of Mankind in their Graceleſneſs and Wickedneſs, that are deadly inimical to true Goodneſs, God-haters and Man-haters (in ſeveral degrees) a peſtilent Brood, of kin to the Toads and Serpents, and they are deſtroying others, as if they were deſtroying Toads and Serpents. The Prophet therefore compareth them to Aſps, Cockatrices, Adders. Iſa. 11. 8. Their poiſon is like the poiſon of the Serpent. Pſal. 58. 4. They are of the Serpents Brood, not of the ſalutary and kindly, the benign, the amical and helpful Love-nature, the innocent and beneficent Nature and Practice: But of the malign and malevolent, the noxious, and inimical, the pernicious hating and hurting Nature and Practice. But when they become Regenerate Chriſtians, they loſe their Poiſon, and ſo great a change is made in Nature, that a ſucking Child may play on the Hole of the Aſp, and the weaned Child may put his hand on the Cockatrice Den. They that were before hurtful, ferine and venenate, are now become innocuous, amical and beneficent. (4.) To ſet before us the deadly Poiſon of Wickedneſs, which eminently abounded in thoſe falſe Religioniſts the Phariſees; whence they are ſtiled Serpents and a Generation of Vipers (the moſt deadly ſort of Serpents;) of Kind and Quality they were a Viperine Generation, and like the Vipers they had a fine Skin, but were deadly poiſonous within, not of the Child of God-kind of Diſpoſition and Practice, but venenate Animals in their Qualities and Properties. (5.) To ſet before us the virulency of an evil Tongue, which is like the virulency of Serpents. Pſal. 140. 3. They have ſharpened their Tongues like a Serpent, Adders poiſon is under their Lips. The Serpent hath a ſharp tenuious kind of Tongue, and a very voluble one, and ſuch is an evil Speaker's Tongue. Generally it is a double Tongue alſo like a Serpent's; and the evil Speaker carrieth Poiſon under his Tongue, as the Serpent doth. The Poiſon of Aſps is under their Lips. Rom. 3. 13. One ſort of Aſps is called Ptyas, becauſe he ſpitteth Venom, and if he can come ſo near any Animal, as to ſpit upon it, he hath done his work (as 'tis ſaid) he hath poiſon'd the Animal. The evil Speaker reſembleth this ſort of Serpent; for he ſpitteth Poiſon with his villainous venenate Tongue (full of deadly Poiſon, Jam. 3. 8.) and as other Serpents give a deadly bite, ſo doth the evil Tongue. But it is more poiſonous than that of a Serpent; for a Serpent can Poiſon none, unleſs he cometh near him (to bite or ſtrike or ſpit upon him:) But an evil venenate Tongue hurteth in abſence as well as preſence, there is no fleeing from its Venom, nor any remedy againſt it. (6.) In one place (and no more) the Scripture remarketh the hurtful poiſonous Nature of the Serpent for good. Iſa. 14. 29. Rejoice not thou whole Paleſtina, becauſe the Rod of him that ſmote thee is broken: For out of the Serpents root ſhall come forth a Cockatrice, and his fruit ſhall be a fiery flying Serpent. Uzziah King of Judah warred againſt the Philiſtines and prevailed againſt them, brake down the Walls of their Cities and built Cities amongſt them. But he died and died a Leper, and Jotham and Ahaz ſucceeding him in their times the Philiſtines recover'd ſtrength; for they invaded the Cities of Judah and Judah was brought low. But Ahaz being dead (for whoſe impiety Judah was brought low) the Prophet foretelleth, that there ſhall be a great change of Affairs, and that the Philiſtines ſhould have no cauſe to rejoice, becauſe Uzziah was dead, who had bitten and ſtung them like a Serpent. Now ſaith the Prophet, rejoice no more; for you will have a worſe Serpent, to bite and ſting you, than King Uzziah was; one of his Race ſhall make heavier work with you than he did. Out of the Serpents Root ſhall come forth a Cockatrice, one that will be more deadly and deſtructive to you. And his fruit ſhall be a fiery flying Serpent, one that will ſwiftly and deadly afflict the Philiſtines. Such was Hezekiah, who ſprang from King Uzziah.

The Perſians in ancient times had a Feſtival day, wherein they were wont to go about and kill all the Serpents in the Country; and this day they called the death of Vices.

2 Chron. 26. 6. and ch. 28. 18, 19.

III. The Scripture remarketh the Serpent as an Animal obnoxious to Inchantment. (m) S. Auſtin thinketh, that God would have the Serpent of all Animals moſt ſubject to Inchantment, becauſe a Serpent ſeduc'd the firſt Man. But whether this was the cauſe or not, it is certain, that the Serpent is an Animal obnoxious to Inchantment, and that in ancient times amongſt the Heathen nothing was more uſual than the inchanting Serpents by magical Arts and Charms, of which they had many kinds. They had Inchantments, whereby they called Serpents out of their Holes and Caverns, and called them together into one place. They had Inchantments to drive away Serpents; Inchantments to ſtupifie them and lay them aſleep; Inchantments to take away their Venom, that they could not hurt; Inchantments to cure thoſe that were bitten or ſtung by a Serpent; Inchantments to make the Serpents burſt aſunder. Theſe Arts were uſed in the Heathen World, and it is probable, that God forbiddeth the uſe of them to the Iſraelites. Deut. 18. 11. There ſhall not be found among you a Charmer. For the word חיבר ſignifieth a Conſociator, one that calleth Serpents together by Charms. Such a Charmer there was of late Years at Saltzburg in Germany, who call'd together all the Serpents about the place, with deſign, to bring them all into one Ditch, to deſtroy them; but at length one great old Serpent leap'd upon him and kill'd him. So it was obſerv'd amongſt the Heathen, that many times the inchanting Serpents did not ſucceed, and then the Magician himſelf was in great danger, and commonly was killed by the Serpent. And who will pity a Charmer, that is bitten by a Serpent? Saith the Son of Sirach. Ch. 12, 13. Many times (I ſay) the Inchantment did not ſucceed, to which the Scripture alludeth, Jer. 8. 17. Behold, I will ſend Serpents, Cockatrices among you, which will not be charmed, and they ſhall bite you, ſaith the Lord. That is, cruel Enemies ſhall afflict you, that will by no means be appeas'd. To the charming Serpents the Preacher alludeth, Eccl. 10. 11. Surely the Serpent will bite without enchantment, and a Babbler is no better. For a Babbler (an evil Speaker) is not leſs pernicious, nor leſs virulent than a Serpent, who unleſs he be inchanted, will not fail to bite or ſting. To the unſucceſsful inchanting Serpents the Pſalmiſt alludeth, Pſal. 58. 4. They are like the deaf Adder, that ſtoppeth her Ear: Which will not hearken to the voice of Charmers charming never ſo wiſely. Some think, that the Adder called Deaf, is really deaf of one Ear, and uſeth to ſtop the other Ear with Duſt or with his Tail, to avoid the force of Charms or Inchantments, wherewith he is wont to be caught. Others think, that this is nothing better than vulgar Story, and that the Serpents called Deaf are not formally ſo, but only equivalently, the Inchantments can make no more impreſſion upon them, than if they were really and formally deaf. Which of theſe is the truer account of that ſort of Serpents called Deaf, is not neceſſary for an Expoſitor to inquire; for the Pſalmiſt only alludeth to the deaf Adder, thereby deſigning to ſignifie the unperſwadableneſs and irreclaimableneſs of the wicked, who will not be wrought upon by any Arts, by any methods of Perſwaſion, to forſake their ungodly Courſes, but fortifie themſelves, and are impregnable againſt all divine Artifices and Applications. They will not frame their ways and their doings, to turn unto their God, Hoſ. 5. 4. They will not give their minds to it.

(m) Bochart. de Anim. p. 2. l. 3. c. 6. Dr. Hammond Not. on Pſal. 58.

IV. The Scripture remarketh the Serpent (that kind of Animal) as the Animal that is inimical and deadly to Mankind, as our Saviour repreſenteth him. Luc. 10. 19. Mar. 16. 18. It is to Mankind chiefly, that Serpents are hurtful and poiſonous; only the Pſylli and Marſi could not be hurt by their Poiſon (being fortified againſt it either by natural Temperament, Medicines or Magick) of whom Hieron. Fracaſtorius ſaith, (n) cum Pſyllis & Marſis non ea Serpentium inimicitia eſt, quæ cum reliquo genere; with the Pſylli and Marſi there is not deadly Enmity of Serpents as with the reſt of Mankind. Mankind and Serpents are Hoſtile and Inimical at the rate of an inbred deadly Enmity and Antipathy; as between the Dolphin and the Crocodile (and ſeveral other Animals) there is an innate Antipathy, and by inſtinct they have an averſion from and ſpight againſt one another. (o) But between the Serpent and Man (ſaith Mr. Mede) is the moſt deadly Enmity, and the ſtrongeſt Antipathy that is amongſt the Beaſts of the Field: Such an one as diſcovereth it ſelf both in the natural and ſenſitive Faculties of them both. For the firſt, their Humours are Poiſon to each other; the Gall of a Serpent is Man's deadly Poiſon, and ſo is the Spittle of a Man affirm'd to Poiſon the Serpent. For the ſenſitive Antipathy, it appeareth, in that the one doth ſo much abhor the ſight and preſence of the other; Man's Nature is at nothing ſo much aſtoniſh'd as at the ſight of a Serpent; and like enough the Serpent is in like manner affected at the ſight of Man; and that more eſpecially, as the Naturaliſts affirm, of a naked Man than otherwiſe. (p) A Serpent ſeen in a dream (according to the Onirocriticks) ſignifieth an Enemy; and accordingly Mankind ſtand affected towards Serpents. For odiſſe æquè ac angues, is a proverbial Phraſe in Plautus, that denoteth vehement hatred. And Hyperides in his Oration pronounceth τοὺς ὄφεις μισητοὺς εἶναι πάντας, that all Serpents are odious. Ἵππον ϗ τὸν ψυχρὸν ὄφιν τὰ μάλιστα δέδοικα, ſaith a Woman in Theocritus. Ecce anguem cunctis maximè formidabilem eſſe ait, (q) as Cunæus underſtandeth her words.

V. The Serpent is of great remark in Scripture as being Satan's kind af Animal. For there is ſuch a Cognation between the Myſtical Serpent and the Brute-ſerpents, that he is of their Kind and Family, and they are of his Kind and Family. He is not of their narrower Kind and Family, which is that of Brute-ſerpents: But he is of their larger Kind and Family, which is that of Serpents, and he is the head of it. For his Name in Scripture is the Serpent. Apoc. 12. 15. The Serpent caſt out of his mouth water, to drown the Church. The Jews call him Nachaſh kadmoni, the old Serpent: So in the New Teſtament his Name is that old Serpent called the Devil and Satan. Apoc. 12. 9. and 20. 2. Sometimes he is called the Dragon that old Serpent. Apoc. 20. 2. The Dragon is a bigger ſort of Serpent, whence the Greeks had a Proverb amongſt them, unleſs a Serpent devoureth a Serpent, there will not be a Dragon. Satan is a Serpent grown to bigneſs and oldneſs, and therefore fitly called the Dragon, and the great Dragon ſurmounting in bigneſs other Dragons. Apoc. 12. 3, 9. And he is called the great red Dragon, to ſignifie, that he is truculent, perſecutive and bloody. Agreeably to his Names his Qualities and Properties ſpeak him of the Kind and Family of Serpents. For this Veterator and old Deceiver is of celebrated Craft and Subtilty, the grand Maſter of wicked Politicks and Deceits. As a Serpent he is ſubtil above other Creatures, and being an old Serpent he is ſubtil above other Serpents. S. Paul therefore thus intituleth Elymas the Sorcerer; O full of all Subtilty, thou Child of the Devil! Act. 13. 10. To ſignifie his hurtful venenate Nature and Diſpoſition, (which is ſeen in his Temptations that are impoiſon'd Darts,) that he is inimical and deadly to Mankind (as the Serpents are,) poiſonouſly malevolent, full of κακίας ἰὸς, the Poiſon of Wickedneſs and of all Malignity, the Chriſtian Writers call him (r) the Dragon and the Serpent. Black and crawling, that generateth the mortiferous Poiſon, the ferine Beaſt, and amongſt creeping things the Baſiliſc. He is the grand venenata Beſtia, whoſe Venom and Virulency (in his direful Nature and Practice) far tranſcendeth that of Toads and Serpents; yet it appeareth from his Character, that he is of their Kind and Family and the head of it, the Chieftain and the eldeſt of all the Serpentine Family.

As Satan is of the Serpents Kind and Family, ſo the Brute-ſerpents are of his Kindred, Kind

(n) Ap. Voſſ. ſupr. c. 61.

(o) Mr. Mede on Gen 3. 13, 14, 15.

(p) Bochart. ſupr. Par. 1. l. 1. c. 4.

(q) De Rep. Hebr. l. 3. c. 1.

(r) Τὸν δράκοντα ϗ ὄφιν μελανάτι ϗ ἑρπυστικὸν, ἰῶ θανατηφόρου γεννητικὸν, θῆρά τε ἄγριον ϗ τὸν ἐν ἑρπετοῖς βασιλίσκον. Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 7. c. 16.

Kind and Family (ſo great is the Affinity and Cognation between them,) and they may fitly be called Ophites and Satanians: for as Satan reſembleth the Serpents (the literal Brute-ſerpents,) ſo the Serpents reſemble Satan, as he is ὁ ἐχθρὸς, the Enemy, Abaddon and Apollyon (the Deſtroyer) the Man-hater and the Man-ſlayer (Joh. 8. 44.) being alike crafty and ſubtil, alike virulent and poyſonous, alike inimical and deadly to Man. Our Saviour therefore repreſenteth them as Satanians, Luc. 10. 19. Behold I give you power, to tread on Serpents and on Scorpions, and over all the power of the Enemy. By Serpents and Scorpions our Saviour doth not mean (s) as ſome ancient Writers of the Church miſtake, Devils or fallen Angels; but plain literal Serpents and Scorpions: as in a parallel place, Mark 16. 18. our Saviour ſaith of thoſe that believe in him, theſe Signs or Miracles they ſhall be able to do. They ſhall take up Serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing, it ſhall not hurt them; which is the ſame thing that the Pſalmiſt had ſaid before: Thou ſhalt tread upon the Lion and Adder, the young Lion and the Dragon ſhalt thou trample under Feet. Theſe Promiſes were fulfill'd in S. Paul, who ſhook off the Viper that ſeiz'd upon his Hand, without being at all prejudic'd by it. Our Saviour according to his promiſe had given him power, to tread on literal Serpents and Scorpions without being hurt by them; and theſe literal Serpents and Scorpions our Saviour calleth the power of the Enemy: which Name ſignifieth, that they are of Satan's Hoſt or Army; as the power of the Air (of which Satan is the Prince) ſignifieth the Aerial Hoſt or Army. The Serpents are the Power of the Enemy; therefore they belong to that Power (as part of his Hoſt or Army) which hath the power of Death. This Name alſo importeth, that they are of his Kind and Quality, of the inimical, hurting, deadly kind; for they belong to Satan, as he is the hurting deadly Power; they ſymbolize with him therefore, and are of his inimical noxious Kind and Quality, and of his Kindred and Family. Agreeably whereto Rabbi Bechai (on Gen. 3. 14.) ſaith of the literal Brute-ſerpents, they are Toledoth hannachaſh hakadmoni, the offspring of the old Serpent.

Satan therefore is the Serpent, but ſo as to be the Rational, not the Brute-ſerpent: yet ſuch is the Cognation between theſe, the Brute Serpent is of Satan's Species, Kind and Family (not as he is the Rational Serpent, but) as he is the Serpent; and Satan is of the Brute Serpent's Species, Kind and Family (not as he is the Brute-ſerpent, but) as he is the Serpent. There are Serpents, that are Men-ſerpents, and theſe are alſo Rational Serpents: but Satan is the Serpent, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, in a ſenſe of Eminency and the Chieftain of the Family. He is the Myſtical and Metaphorical Serpent (as he is uſually ſtyl'd,) which doth not hinder, but infer, his being of the Species, Kind and Family of the Brute-ſerpent, as he is a Serpent. That Species, Kind and Family the Serpent comprehendeth both Satan (who is Species individua) and the Brute-ſerpent; becauſe Satan is of that Species, Kind and Family. As this Name the Wolf is the Name of a Species, Kind and Family, which Satan is of as well as the brutal Wolf (for he is of the Kind and Family of the Wolf,) ſo is this Name the Serpent.

ARTICLE 7.

The Hiſtory of Paradiſe conſidereth the Serpent as a Species of Subtiliſt (the eminent Species) ſpeaketh of him ſpecificativè, and as conſider'd in his larger Specific Comprehenſion, in which Senſe it attributeth to him the tempting and deceiving our Firſt Parents.

I. THE firſt Branch of this Propoſition is plainly enough expreſs'd in the Hiſtory, Gen. 3. 1. Now the Serpent was more ſubtil than any Beaſt of the Field, which the Lord God had made. If Moſes had ſaid, The Wolf or the Fox was more ſubtil than any Beaſt of the Field, which the Lord God had made, every one would have underſtood him, to mean that Species or kind of Subtiliſt called the Wolf or the Fox: in like manner, by the Serpent he muſt be underſtood to mean, that Species or kind of Subtiliſt called The Serpent. Some think, that the Wolf tranſcendeth the Serpent in Subtility, whence Ariſtotle calleth the Wolves, (t) πανούργους καὶ κακούργους, Crafty and Maleficent; and it muſt be acknowledg'd, that ſeveral Brute-animals are more ingenious than the Serpent: but no Animal is ſo much of the Nature and Character of a wily inſiduous Subtiliſt as the Serpent; for the Wolf is rather of another Nature and Character, being more eminently a ravenous Devourer than a wily inſiduous Subtiliſt. The Moſaic Character of the Serpent ſheweth, under what Notion he is conſider'd in the Hiſtory, and ſo do the Operations that are aſcrib'd to him. The Serpent beguiled me, ſaith the Woman, Gen. 3. 13. The doom of the Serpent ſaith, Thou ſhalt bruiſe his Heel, (or bite him by the Heel,) which is an underly inſidious way of hurting, Gen. 3. 15. The Hiſtorian therefore conſidereth the Serpent, that Species or kind of Animal) under the Notion of an eminent Species of malign Subtiliſt, and when he deſcribeth the Serpent by his eximious Subtilty, it is as much, as if he had ſaid, The Serpent is the eminent Species of malign Subtiliſt. The Apoſtle hath the ſame Notion of the Serpent, when he ſaith, as the Serpent beguiled Eve through his Subtilty; for by the Serpent he meaneth that eminent Species of malign Subtiliſt. But this is alſo the Apoſtle's Senſe; The Serpent as to Species, Kind and Family beguiled Eve; and ſuch is alſo the Senſe of Moſes, Gen. 3. 1. Now the Serpent was more ſubtil than any Beaſt of the Field, which the Lord God had made: and he ſaid unto the Woman. For by the Serpent Moſes meaneth that eminent Subtiliſt (the Serpent,) and as he ſpeaketh of the Serpent ſpecificativè, when he deſcribeth his Subtilty, ſo he continueth to ſpeak of him ſpecificativè, when he ſaith of him, And he ſaid unto the Woman: for the Senſe is, The Serpent as to Species, Kind and Family ſuch ſaid unto the Woman. The Serpent as to Species, Kind and Family was the tempter and deceiver of the Woman; for if Satan beguiled her, it was the Serpent as to Species, Kind and Family that beguiled her; and if Satan ſaid unto the Woman, it was the Serpent as to Species, Kind and Family that ſpake unto her: which Interpretation of the Text of Moſes and of the Apoſtle is altogether unexceptionable, and rendreth the Hiſtory of Paradiſe ſo. But we may add, that both Moſes and the Apoſtle, ſpeaking of the Serpent do not only ſpeak

(s) Bochart. ſupr. par. 2. l. 4. c. 29.

Pſal. 91. 13.

Act. 28. 5.

(t) Hiſt. animal. l. 1. c. 1.

2 Cor. 11. 3.

ſpeak of him ſpecificative, but ſo as to conſider what he is comprehenſive in his larger ſpecific comprehenſion, or the larger comprehenſion of his Species, Kind and Family. So that their Senſe is; The Serpent as being in his (larger) ſpecific comprehenſion (the comprehenſion of his Species, Kind and Family) intelligent and diſcurſive, ſaid unto the Woman, beguiled Eve. To illuſtrate this Expoſition of the Hiſtory, let us ſuppoſe, that Satan is of kind and quality a Toad, and that the Moſaic Hiſtory runneth thus; Now the Toad was more poyſonous than any Animal, which the Lord God had made; and he by his Doctrine impoyſon'd the Woman. Every Expoſitor of ſuch an Hiſtory would at the firſt ſight imagine, that there is an Ellipſis in it, which is thus to be ſupply'd, and he, as being in his (larger) ſpecific comprehenſion rational and diſcurſive, impoyſon'd the Woman by his Doctrine. So that the Senſe is, It was the Toad as to Species, Kind and Family, that by his Doctrine impoyſon'd the Woman. If theſe things are rational and of agreeable apprehenſion, the Moſaic Hiſtory muſt be ſuppos'd, to ſpeak of the Brute-ſerpent ſpecificative and comprehenſive, and to mean his Species, Kind and Family as a Serpent.

II. This Moſaic mode of expreſſing and repreſenting things in the Hiſtory of Paradiſe is plainly a demonſtration, that in the Letter of it, it aſcendeth to nothing higher than the Terreſtrial-animal kind of things. For Satan was undoubtedly the Tempter of our firſt Parents, and to them that ask quo teſte, quo authore hoc dicitur? the anſwer is eaſie, that we have the Authority of the Book of Wiſdom, ch. 2. 24. the Authority of the holy Apoſtles, 1 Joh. 3. 8. Apoc. 12. 9. and we have our Saviour's Authority for it, who denominateth Satan the Man-ſlayer and Murderer from the beginning, Joh. 8. 44. But although amongſt Chriſtians it is paſt doubt, that Satan was the Tempter of our firſt Parents, yet no expreſs mention is made of him in this Moſaic Hiſtory, throughout the Cortex of it there is no ſuch appearance of him, but a ſmooth Story is told us of the Serpent that was more ſubtil than all the Beaſts of the Field, and that was curſed above all Cattle and above every Beaſt of the Field, and was doom'd to go upon his Belly and to eat Duſt all the Days of his Life. (u) Chriſtian Expoſitors ſay, that for this reaſon Moſes did not make expreſs mention of the Devil, becauſe in his Hiſtory of the Creation he had ſaid nothing of the Creation and Lapſe of Angels. The Moſaic Creation is meerly Terreſtrial-animal; the Hiſtory of Paradiſe therefore (which is an Appendix thereto) in the expreſs Letter of it ought to be of the ſame Character. (w) Moſes goeth on in his way; as before he made no mention of Spirits, ſo here he doth not call the Devil by his proper Name, but mentioneth only a Brute-animal. To keep a decorum, and becauſe the Hiſtory of Paradiſe muſt be of one piece with the Terreſtrial-animal Creation, and muſt not (in the expreſs Letter of it) tranſcend the Terreſtrial-animal kind of things, therefore the Devil muſt not be mention'd in it by his Proper Name, but muſt be vail'd under the Name of the Serpent. This was one reaſon of the Moſaic mode of expreſſing and repreſenting things. Another reaſon of it was, To complicate the Brute-ſerpent with Satan as the Symbol with the thing ſignify'd agreeably to the method of the Old Teſtament. (x) In ſerpentis figura Diabolus eſt; the Devil is vailed in the Figure of the Serpent. (y) A moſt apt Symbol, to expreſs his wilineſs, evil arts, envy and machination againſt us. A third reaſon of this Moſaic mode of expreſſing and repreſenting things is, becauſe Moſes writeth Hiſtory, not Philoſophy, nor any other Theology than Hiſtory, the Hiſtory of Paradiſe; in the Tranſactions whereof there was no known appearance of a fallen Angel, nor could our firſt Parents underſtand any thing of fallen Angels, or that there was ſuch a Being as the Prince of Apoſtate Angels (the Moſaic Hiſtory of the Creation having ſaid nothing of theſe matters,) nor is it likely, that Eve would have entertain'd a familiar Diſcourſe with the Tempter, if ſhe had ſuppos'd him to be the Devil in our Notion. Beſides, it is manifeſt from the Hiſtory, that ſhe took him to be the Serpent, and conſequently ſhe ſuppos'd him, either to be meerly a Brute-ſerpent, or a Rational of the larger Species, Kind and Family of the Brute-ſerpent. The Alexandrian Cyril is of Opinion, that our Mother Eve (z) ὑπ' ἁπλότητος τὸ ἄγαν, through an exceeding ſimplicity thought, that other Animals could ſpeak as well as Man with an Humane Voice; and conſequently that ſhe ſuppos'd the Tempter, to be meerly a Brute-ſerpent. A late Divine (D. Rivet) ſaith; Ignorantia hæc erat puræ negationis, & potuit eſſe in ſtatu innocentiæ, ſicut in pueris: This Ignorance was purely negative, and might be in the ſtate of Innocency as in Children. This is a fair acknowledgment, that our firſt Parents in Paradiſe were in no higher condition than the ſtate of natural Innocency, and that the uſual magnificent Ideas of their Perfections are Extravagances. But on the other hand it ſeemeth as great an Extravagance, to ſuppoſe either of them ſo bruitiſhly ſilly and devoid of common reaſon, as to ſuppoſe a Rational, to be a meer Brute, and to confound a Rational and Irrational Animal. This therefore muſt be ſuppos'd, to have been their Idea of the Tempter, A Rational of the Species, Kind and Family of the Brute-ſerpent as a Serpent, which is the Moſaic Notion of him.

III. The Brute-ſerpent and Satan (the old Serpent) may be complicated in a twofold Senſe; for they may be complicated notionally and ſymbolically, as literal and myſtical, as the Symbol with the things ſignify'd; and they may be underſtood to be complicated phyſically and organically, like Soul and Body, as the Agent and the Inſtrument. So the generality of Jews and Chriſtians are of Opinion, that the Tempter of our firſt Parents was Serpens à Diabolo agitatus, a Serpent acted by the Devil and us'd as an Organ to deceive. Some indeed have been of Opinion, that there was no Devil in the caſe, but that a meer irrational Brute-ſerpent was the only Tempter of our firſt Parents. So Joſephus ſaith, That in Paradiſe there was no diſcord amongſt Animals, a Serpent liv'd familiarly with Adam and Eve, and envying their Felicity perſwaded them to eat the forbidden Fruit. Joſephus is not alone in this Opinion; for Aben Ezra (a Learned Rabbi) is not only of the ſame Opinion, but he diſputeth, that it was not the Devil, but a Brute-ſerpent only, that ſpake to Eve and deceiv'd her; for the Curſe (ſaith he) is not competible to the Devil, who is a Spirit. The Brute-ſerpent only was puniſh'd (with the curſe of going upon his Belly and eating Duſt,) therefore he was the only Tempter and Deceiver. But is it poſſible, that a meer Brute-ſerpent ſhould have the Faculty of Speech, which amongſt Animals is proper to Man only? (whence the Jews commonly call Man Animal loquens, the ſpeaking Animal.) Is it poſſible, that a meer Brute Animal ſhould ſpeak ſuch Language as Eve underſtood? Some have thought, that Birds and Beaſts have ſomething like Speech amongſt themſelves, ſignifying their Mind one to another; but they did not think (as Mr. Mede ſaith,) that they ſpake the Language of a Man: Nor hath any Animal below Man the faculty of underſtanding and reaſoning; for to be an intelligent rational Animal, is to be a Man. Now, the Serpent that tempted our firſt Parents, was intelligent and rational, and not only ſo, but a great Sophiſter and a cunning Reaſoner, an Artiſt at tempting and ſeducing, and therefore was not meerly an irrational Brute-ſerpent, but one that had a great deal of Wit and Knowledge. Some of the Jews will ſay, (a) that God at firſt endow'd the Serpent with Underſtanding, Reaſon and Speech; but in ſo ſaying they ſpeak a Contradiction: For it is a Contradiction to ſuppoſe, that a Brute-animal ſhould have Underſtanding and Speech, and yet remain a Brute-animal: And how is it poſſible, that a Brute-animal ſhould underſtand the Commandment, that God had given to our firſt Parents? The Serpent that tempted them, ſheweth a great malignity againſt God, accuſeth him of Lying and of Envy; therefore it was ſome great Rebel againſt God, that tempted our firſt Parents, and not a meer Brute Serpent, as a Party of the Jews conceive. Nor are they alone in theſe Conceits; for S. Baſil (in his Diſcourſe of Paradiſe) thinketh, that there was in Paradiſe a Brute Serpent of erect ſtature, that had the faculty of Speech and Diſcourſe; and if one Brute Serpent had the faculty of Speech, it was not reaſonable, that all his Fellow-Serpents and Fellow-Brutes ſhould be deprived of it. He is of Opinion therefore, that all Animals in Paradiſe could ſpeak and underſtand one another, and that the Serpent was depriv'd of theſe Faculties for his foul fact. But if the Serpent was depriv'd of Underſtanding and Speech for his foul fact, Moſes would have mention'd the loſs of them as a principal part of his Puniſhment; and the other Brute Animals that had theſe Faculties, yet had perpetrated no foul fact, would not have ſuſtain'd the loſs of them.

(u) Addunt noſtri Interpretes hanc ob cauſam conſulto Moſem Diaboli nomen tacuiſſe, quia prius nihil de angelorum creatione & lapſu dixerat. Pareus in Gen. 3. 1.

(w) Antea ſpirituum nulla eſt habita mentio: hic quoque in ſuo perſeverans inſtituto Moſes, Diabolum non proprio appellat nomine, ſed tantum beſtiæ meminit. P. Martyr. Com. in Gen. 3. 1.

(x) S. Ambroſ. de Paradiſ. c. 2.

(y) Symbolum aptiſſimum ad ejus verſutiam, malas artes, invidiam & machinationem in nos exprimenda. P. Martyr. ſupr.

(z) C. Jul. l. 3. p. 86, 91.

IV. As for the common Opinion, that Satan in tempting Eve made uſe of a Brute Serpent as his Inſtrument, and ſpake by his Organ, there is no hurt in it; but there are ſeveral reaſons againſt it, that may incline us to think it not true or probable: for the Hiſtory ſaith no ſuch thing, it repreſenteth the Temptation as manag'd only by one Serpent, not by two Serpents (the one a Brute-ſerpent the other a Diabolical Serpent,) nor by one Serpent compounded of two Serpents of different kinds, which is a Monſter (like a Theſſalick Centaure,) and this frightful Monſter is introduc'd without any neceſſity or ground in Scripture. The meer appearance of a Serpent is to us frightful; a ſpeaking diſcourſing Brute Serpent is more frightful; and ſuch a Serpent acted by the Devil is ſtill more frightful. We read in the Roman Hiſtory of an Ox and a Dog ſpeaking; but we do not read of any Dog or Ox that manag'd a ſet Diſcourſe arguing and making anſwer, as the Serpent in Paradiſe did. A ſpeaking diſcourſing Brute is neceſſarily a great Miracle, and ſo great a Miracle muſt neceſſarily have made a great impreſſion upon the Minds of our firſt Parents; whereas Eve entertain'd a Diſcourſe and Colloquy with the Tempter, as if there was nothing miraculous, nothing monſtrous, nothing frightful in the caſe. This Opinion alſo repreſenteth God as curſing the Brute-ſerpent meerly for being a paſſive Inſtrument in the Temptation (which is a grand Incongruity;) and (as in the Lutherans Conſubſtantiation) it unskilfully jumbleth together the Symbol and the thing ſignify'd; for the Brute Serpent is the Symbol and Satan the thing ſignify'd. All theſe Objections lie againſt a late Conjecture of ſome Learned Men, who ſuppoſe, that the Serpent which Satan us'd as his Inſtrument in the Temptation, was a Saraph, a fiery flying Serpent, and that he choſe to make uſe of this ſort of Serpent, that thereby he might reſemble one of the Illuſtrious Angels, and might be taken for one of the Seraphims. But this Conjecture is ſo far from eaſing us of our Difficulties, that it increaſeth them: for beſides that it is liable to the ſame Objections with the common Opinion, it is incumbred with ſeveral other inſuperable Difficulties. If Moſes ſaith, that Satan made uſe of a Serpent in tempting our firſt Parents, or that he tempted them in form of a Serpent, this cannot be his meaning, that he transform'd himſelf into an Angel of Light. He that was wholly ſilent touching illuſtrious Angels and never mention'd them, (covertly or expreſly,) when he deſcrib'd the Creation, muſt not be thought to ſpeak of them now, when he only ſpeaketh of a Serpent, of a Serpent which is commonly defin'd Animal reptile, and that is no where in Scripture the Symbol of an Illuſtrious Angel. Is this reſemblance of one of the Heavenly Seraphims and the moſt Illuſtrious Angels, congruouſly reckon'd one of the Cattle and the Beaſts of the Field? Is he ſo harmleſs an Animal, that Eve had no cauſe to be afraid of him? Is that Species of Serpents degraded from their Sublimity, and doom'd to creep upon the Belly, or are they not fiery flying Serpents unto this day? Is a fiery flying Serpent of eminent and extraordinary Subtilty? and is this Species of Serpents or one of this Species of Serpents, the Head of the Generation of Serpents, and may they congruouſly be called his Seed? The Serpent which Moſes ſpeaketh of, was naturally a creeping crawling Serpent (as will appear preſently.) In his Account there is nothing that riſeth higher than a Terreſtrial Animal Serpent, there is nothing that ſoundeth towards Seraphims and the moſt Illuſtrious Angels, with whom (probably) our firſt Parents in Paradiſe had little acquaintance, ſeeing they had no acquaintance at all with fallen Angels: Upon which account they could not look upon the Tempter as an Angel, or as a fallen Angel; nor could they look upon him as a Man (for they knew that none of that Species was created but themſelves;) they muſt neceſſarily therefore look upon him as of the Kind and Family of Animals inferiour to Man, yet ſo as to ſuppoſe him a ſuperiour Species to the Irrational and Brute Animals. It was Satan's Intereſt, that Eve ſhould have this Notion of him (for the ſucceſs of his Temptation depended upon it;) therefore in making his appearance to her he could not fail, to repreſent himſelf as of the Kind and Family of ſome ſort of Animals, and rather of a Serpent than of any other, to ingender in her the greater Opinion of his ſagacity and diſcernment of things. And it is probable (as Mr. Mede thinketh,) that it was the Law of Spirits in their commerce with Men, to preſent themſelves under the ſhape of ſome ſuch viſible thing, as may more or leſs reſemble their Condition; and therefore Satan could not appear to Eve without ſome badge and cogniſance of a Serpent. Yet it is no more reaſonable, to ſuppoſe, that in his appearance he aſſum'd the ugly frightful ſhape of a Brute Serpent, than that he animated ſuch a Serpent. It ſeemeth more probable, that he appear'd in a form and ſhape approaching to the Humane, yet not without certain Marks and Characters of a Serpent; that his appearance was agreeable to S. Baſil's Notion of the Serpent in Paradiſe. (b) The Serpent then was not horrid and terrible, but mild and gentle: not of a frightful fluctuating motion and crawling on the Ground, but lofty and going erect upon his Feet. But if the Serpents in the time of Man's Innocency were of the ſame frightful ſhape and motion, which now they are of (which none can reaſonably doubt of,) a ſpeaking, reaſoning, diſcurſive Brute-ſerpent real or ſeeming was not a leſs frightful Monſter than the Serpent deſcrib'd by Maimonides: The Brute-ſerpent (ſaith he) which Satan rode upon, when he tempted Eve, was of the bigneſs of a Camel. It is not reaſonable therefore, to ſuppoſe, that Satan when he tempted Eve, aſſum'd the form and ſhape of a Serpent; although there might be ſo much of a Serpent in his appearance, as might notice to her, that he was of the Kind and Family of the Serpent: which ſhe might underſtand alſo from her own ſad Experience, when ſhe found her ſelf inveigled and circumvented by him; and the Hiſtory doth not ſay, that before that time ſhe underſtood him to be the Serpent. Then, as our Notion of Satan is the Prince of the fallen Angels, ſo the Notion of him in Paradiſe was The Prince of thoſe evil Animals the Serpents: With great reaſon therefore in the Moſaic Hiſtory, (c) Per Serpentem ſimul intelligitur Diabolus uno complexu, velut Bachai recte obſervavit: By the Serpent the Devil is underſtood together with the Serpent in one Comprehenſion (or Complication) as R. Bachai hath rightly obſerv'd, from whence we ſhould not infer, that the Devil animated a Brute-ſerpent in tempting our firſt Parents (which is a rude and groundleſs Conceit:) but that the Brute-ſerpent, that Species or Kind of Animal, is compar'd with, and diſtinguiſh'd from, the other Species of Animals, and that the tempting our firſt Parents is peculiarly imputed to the Serpent in contradiſtinction to the other Species of the Animal World, becauſe it was the Brute-ſerpent, that as to his Species, Kind and Family (his larger Species, Kind and Family) was the Tempter and Murderer of our firſt Parents. So far and in ſuch ſenſe the Hiſtory imputeth the tempting and deceiving our firſt Parents to (that Species or kind of Animal) the Brute Serpent. Now the Serpent was more ſubtil than any Beaſt of the Field, which the Lord God had made: and he ſaid unto the Woman, Gen. 3. 1 The Serpent beguiled me, and I did eat, Gen. 3. 13. In his (larger) ſpecific comprehenſion he comprehendeth the Tempter and Murderer of our firſt Parents.

(a) V. Helvic proteuangel. paradiſ.

ARTICLE 8.

The Doom of the Serpent is of a threefold Aſpect, and muſt be conſider'd, as it relateth to the Brute-Serpent, as it relateth to the myſtical tempting Serpent, and as it relateth to Chriſt and Chriſtians.

THE Doom of the Serpent is thus related by Moſes, Gen. 3. 14, 15. And the Lord God ſaid unto the Serpent, becauſe thou haſt done this, thou art curſed above all Cattle and above every Beaſt of the Field: upon thy Belly ſhalt thou go, and Duſt ſhalt thou eat all the days of thy Life. And I will put enmity between thee and the Woman, and between thy Seed and her Seed: it ſhall bruiſe thy Head, and thou ſhalt bruiſe his Heel. This Curſe muſt be ſuppos'd, to be pronounc'd upon the Brute-ſerpent, who is here compar'd with the other Cattle and Beaſts of the Field, and is counted to be of that number. The Matter of the Curſe alſo in the Letter of it (to go upon the Belly and to eat Duſt) is competible only to the Brute-ſerpent. But becauſe it is pronounc'd upon the Tempting Serpent, therefore it relateth to Satan, whoſe Name is the Tempter. And the Serpent and his Seed is here oppos'd to the Woman and her Seed, which denoteth Mankind in general, but more eſpecially the Meſſiah, who is the Woman's Seed in a ſenſe of Eminency. The Doom of the Serpent therefore is Protevangelium, the firſt Goſpel, for which reaſon it is one of the moſt illuſtrious parts of the Bible. Luther ſaid of it, (d) Continet quicquid tota Scriptura eximium habet. It containeth whatever is eximious in the Bible. He ſpake with reſpect to Theology only, but we ſhall find in it ſomething of eximious natural Philoſophy.

(1.)

Of the Doom of the Serpent as it relateth to the Brute-Serpent.

I. The Doom of the Serpent as it relateth to the Brute-animal Serpent, involveth in it ſeveral Matters of doubt and queſtion, that are not of eaſie Reſolution. One of theſe Difficulties is touching the congruity of pronouncing the Doom or Curſe upon a Brute-ſerpent; μεγάλη ϗ σφοδρὰ ἡ ἀγανάκτησις, great and vehement is the Indignation (ſaith S. Chryſoſtom,) that is expreſs'd in the Doom of the Serpent: but who can believe, that God ſhould have a great Wrath and Indignation, a great Judicial Wrath and Indignation againſt a Brute-animal, that can commit no Sin or Crime? that God ſhould ſpeak to and condemn in Judgment a Brute that hath no Reaſon or Underſtanding? becauſe thou haſt done this, ſaith the Text; that is, becauſe thou haſt done a nefarious thing, and haſt been a great Malefactor. But how could a Brute-ſerpent be a great Criminal and Malefactor? If Satan tempted our firſt Parents in a Brute-ſerpent, or in the form of a Brute-ſerpent, yet the Brute-ſerpent had no will to ſin, nor any knowledge of the Evil which the Devil did, and therefore could not be a Criminal. To this Difficulty Mr. Mede anſwereth, that the Earth was curſed for Adam's ſake, the Brute-animals were deſtroy'd in the Deluge which was cauſed by the Wickedneſs of Man; that if a Man committeth Abomination

(b) Ου φρικ]ὸς ὁ ὄφις τότε, ἀλλὰ προσηνὴς ϗ ἥμερος· ἐχὶ φοβερὸν ἐπικυμαίνων, τῇ γῇ, ϗ ἐφέρπων. ἀλλ' ὑψηλὸς ἐπὶ ποδῶν βεβηκώς. De Paradiſ. p. 627.

(c) Helvic. proteuang. parad. n. 26.

(d) Arro-ſmith Tactic. ſacr. l. 1. c. 1.

Omnis pœna propter culpam.

Abomination with a Beaſt, the Beaſt is commanded to be ſlain, as well as the Man, who only had ſinn'd. Bochart addeth, that if an Ox gored a Man or Woman, that they died, the Ox muſt be ſtoned. (e) Ita judex falſarium und cum calamo damnat, & ſicarium cum ſuo telo. So the Judge condemneth a Forger of Writings together with his Pen, and a Murtherer with his Weapon. So Men becomingly ſhew their deteſtation againſt horrid Wickedneſs, and ſo God may becomingly ſhew his deteſtation againſt Sin and Wickedneſs, by defacing or deſtroying the Inſtruments of it, the places wherein it is committed, and the Brute-animals alſo in a πανωλεθρία, or an univerſal deſtruction of Mankind. But when God thus deſtroyeth Brute-animals, he doth not ſit in Judgment on them, Arraign them, Charge them with an heinous Crime and paſs Sentence on them; yet ſuch is his method of Procedure in this Doom of the Serpent, to which therefore there is no parallel Inſtance in Scripture. Nor is there any thing ſo like it in Hiſtory, as the Law of the Athenians; that if a Wall by chance ſhould have fallen down and kill'd a Man, then the Judges ſhould ſit, and formally Arraign that Wall and condemn it, and caſt the Stones of it out of the Country. But neither is this Athenian ſeverity againſt the Man-killing Stones a parallel Inſtance for this Doom of the Serpent, becauſe of its different end and iſſue. For the end of the Athenians Proceſs and Judicature againſt the Man-killing Stones, was only to ſhew their deteſtation of the Crime of Murder, and to deter Men from committing it; and accordingly it iſſu'd in throwing the Stones out of the Country. But the end of this Doom of the Serpent was, not meerly to ſhew the Divine deteſtation of a Crime, and to deter others from committing it, nor did it iſſue in the deſtruction and extinction of Serpents (which had been the greateſt demonſtration of Divine deteſtation againſt them:) but the iſſue of it was meerly the Settlement of Nature (of the Serpents Nature and Condition) upon thy Belly ſhalt thou go, and Duſt ſhalt thou eat all the days of thy life. It might be juſt for God, to abaſe a Brute-ſerpent, and make him vile for the Service of Man, and in Mercy to our firſt Parents, that they might be ever mindful of the foulneſs of their Guilt, to move them to Repentance, and as an Emblem to know the Condition of their deadly Enemy the Devil (as Mr. Mede argueth:) But ſtill the grand difficulty remaineth. For if the Devil tempted our firſt Parents in a Brute-ſerpent (or in the form of a Serpent,) and if this abuſed Serpent was only inſtrumentum ἀπροαίρετον, and had neither Will to Sin, nor Knowledge of what the Devil had done, with what congruity can the Crime be charg'd upon this abus'd Serpent? And with what Wiſdom and Juſtice can this meer paſſive Inſtrument be condemned as an heinous Criminal and Malefactor? If we ſay, that this was done with the ſame Juſtice and Congruity, as the Athenians accus'd, criminated and condemned the Man-killing Stones, we parallel Caſes that are not parallel. Nor is it poſſible, that this difficulty can be otherwiſe aſſoil'd, than by conſidering the Serpent in his Doom or Sentence, in the ſame Notion as we have conſider'd him in tempting our firſt Parents. The Brute-ſerpent in his Doom (wherein he is criminated, condemned and curſed as an heinous Criminal and Malefactor) is conſider'd Specificative and Comprehenſive, in which notion and conſideration all things contain'd in his Doom are well and wiſely, juſtly and agreeably ſaid and done to him. They are alſo congruouſly ſaid and done to him upon this account, becauſe the Brute-ſerpent in his Doom is conſider'd as Satan's Symbol, and is complicated with him in the Doom and Sentence. A Settlement is penally made for him juſtly, congruouſly and agreeably to the Paſſion of hatred; for according to Ariſtotle hatred is πρὸς τὰ γένη, againſt the whole kind of its Object. The Serpents Curſe therefore ought to extend to the whole kind (and conſequently to the Brute-ſerpent) as Adam's Maledictions extend to all Mankind, according to that of S. Jarchi (f) In omnibus maledictionibus primi hominis omnes ejus generationes conveniunt, in all the Maledictions of the firſt Man all his Generations agree.

II. From hence we may reſolve another matter of doubt, which the Doom of the Serpent (as it relateth to the Brute-ſerpent) involveth, whether the Curſe was pronounced only upon one individual Serpent, or upon ſome one only Kind, or upon all Serpents in general? For ſeeing hatred is againſt the whole Kind, the Crime is imputed to the whole Kind, and the Curſe is denounced upon the Serpent as Satan's Symbol; therefore it is pronounc'd upon all Serpents in general, that is, upon that whole Species or Kind of Animal according to the ordinary definitive Notion of a Serpent. Mankind have an enmity, not only againſt one indivial Serpent, nor only againſt ſome one kind of Serpents, but againſt all Serpents in general the Serpentine kind of Animal; therefore all Kinds of Serpents are the Seed of the Serpent, and conſequently the Serpent upon whom the Curſe is denounc'd, comprehendeth all Kinds of Serpents. Satan is of the Species, Kind and Family of the Serpent in general, and the Serpent in general is of his Species, Kind and Family; and ſeeing the Curſe is pronounc'd upon the Serpent as that kind of Animal, it muſt be pronounced upon the Serpent in general. The Doom of the Serpent is the Serpent's Settlement, it ſettleth upon him the Nature and Condition of a Serpent in general (what he muſt be as the Serpent-kind of Animal,) the Serpents Lot and Portion in the Animal World, which belongeth to him and to his Kind and Family. He muſt be a curſed kind of Animal, of the moſt vile and abject and odious Condition, of the vileſt Poſture (without any nobleneſs of Stature,) and have the vileſt Food, and muſt be at enmity with the Woman and her Seed, and bite them by the Heels, and muſt be trodden on in the Head by them. And who ſeeth not, that this Doom or Sentence is exactly expreſſive of the Nature and Condition of the Serpent in general? If this Doom was pronounc'd upon the Swine, thou art foul above all Cattel, and ſhalt wallow in the Mire: Or if this Doom was pronounced upon the Toad, thou art ugly above all Animals, and ſhalt have thy abode in foul Holes and Caverns, and ſhalt be hateful and hurtful to Men, and they ſhall be hateful and hurtful to thee; every one would interpret ſuch a Doom or Sentence, to be meant of the Swine in general, and of the Toad in general; therefore the Serpents Doom muſt be underſtood, to be meant of the Serpent in general, that is commonly defin'd Animal

Lev. 20. Exod. 21. 28.

(e) De Animal. Par. 1. l. 1. c. 4.

(f) L'Emper. in Iſa. 53. p. 17.

nimal reptile, the crawling Animal. If the Doom was pronounced upon any one Brute-ſerpent in Paradiſe as a Serpent, it neceſſarily extendeth to all Serpents.

III. Another difficulty which this Doom of the Serpent (as it relateth to the Brute-ſerpent) involveth, is touching the effect of it, whether it made an alteration in the Nature, Gate and Poſture of the Serpent? S. Baſil, S. Ephrem, Bar. Cephas, and many others affirm, that the Serpent had Feet to go upon (and conſequently in his firſt Creation did not go crawling on the Ground,) and it is ſaid, that in the Iſle of Paphos a Serpent was ſeen with two Feet. But theſe things have no ſhew of probability. If the Serpents Body before his Doom or Sentence was of the ſame ſhape that now it is of, he could not go otherwiſe than upon the Belly. Ariſtotle argueth, that a Serpents Body is of ſo enormous a length, that neither two nor four Feet could be ſufficient for it, to go upon, and more it cannot have. From whence he concludeth, that a Serpent neceſſarily wanteth Feet, and conſequently is neceſſarily a crawling Animal. Grotius and ſome others are of Opinion, that the Serpent by his Doom loſt much of his briskneſs and agility, and became much more torpid, ſluggiſh and groveling. But as this is no probable Expoſition of the words of the Text, ſo this mutation in the Serpents Nature is not probable. For Serpents are ſtill an hugely agile Animal, and ſo full of briskneſs of Spirit and Motion, that (g) Taautus, the Phenicians and Egyptians for this reaſon thought them of a Divine Nature. They counted a Serpent πνευματικώτατον, the moſt ſpirituous of all creeping Animals, ϗ πυρῶδες, and of a fiery Nature, by reaſon of which ſpirituous and fiery Nature the Serpent hath τάχος ἀνυπέρϐλητον, a ſuperlative ſwiftneſs without Feet or Hands or any ſuch Organs. Some others (as Mr. Mede) are of Opinion, that the Serpent before his Doom did go upon his Belly or the lower part of his Body, but not upon his Breaſt; that he went with his Head and Breaſt ſomewhat raiſed, erect and advanced: But by the Curſe upon him he loſt this more elevated Poſture, and was doom'd to greater baſeneſs of Poſture, to go upon his Breaſt: For ſo they would have the words of the Text rendred, upon thy Breaſt thou ſhalt go. This Opinion implieth, that the Baſiliſc is exempted from the Serpents Doom; for he goeth with his Breaſt and fore-part of his Body advanced, (h) as Pliny and Solinus report. But ſeeing the Baſiliſc is the Chieftain amongſt Serpents, and is thought the moſt poiſonous of all other, it is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that he of all other is exempted from the Doom of the Serpent. Beſides, we have ſhew'd, that the Curſe is pronounced upon all Serpents in general (that are Serpents in the ſtricter notion,) and therefore upon the Baſiliſc, whom Nicander calleth ἑρπετῶν βασιλῆα, the King of the creeping Animals. Particular Objections (of great force) lie againſt all theſe ſuppoſed Mutations in the Nature of the Serpent: But beſides theſe particular Objections there are good Arguments in general againſt any Mutation in the Nature of the Serpent by his Doom. For ſeeing God doth not take away Naturals from wicked Men and Devils, it is not to be ſuppoſed, that upon the account of Sin he took away Naturals from the Brute-ſerpent. The Doom upon Adam and Eve did not change or deſtroy Nature; therefore it muſt not be ſuppos'd, that the Doom upon the Brute-ſerpent did change or deſtroy Nature. The Doom upon Adam and Eve did not change or deſtroy Nature, but ſettle and eſtabliſh it. For Sorrow in Child-bearing is as natural as Child-bearing is; and Earth to Earth, Aſhes to Aſhes, Duſt to Duſt is a natural Analyſis. So the Serpents going upon the Belly, feeding on Duſt, enmity to Mankind and biting them by the Heel, is Nature and the Serpent's natural Condition, as the learn'd Bochart conceiveth. (i) It ſeemeth not probable to me, that God for the Sin of Man made any change in the Nature of the Serpent. Only that which was of Nature afterwards became Puniſhment, as Nakedneſs in Man, and Child-birth in Woman. This learned Writer hath made a right Judgment touching the Serpent: But it is much that he did not conſider what a difficulty his Notion involveth in it, and that he did not attempt to aſſoil it. For if the Serpent did always go upon his Belly, what ſignifieth the dooming him to it? And is it not inept, to impoſe that upon him as a Puniſhment, which he always had by Nature? This difficulty may be ſalv'd from what is before diſcours'd of curſing the Ground. For as the Ground was at firſt made with a meaſurable Sterility, yet with deſign that this Sterility ſhould be made a Puniſhment, and ſettled as Penal in caſe of Sin and Tranſgreſſion: So the Woman's pains of Child-bearing and Subjection to her Husband, the Serpents crawling and abject Poſture, theſe are Nature and natural Condition, yet were ſo made with Deſign, that they ſhould be made Puniſhments and ſettled as Penal in caſe of Sin and Tranſgreſſion. When the Moſaic Creation was finiſh'd, yet a great Settlement of things remained ſtill to be made, and a Penal Settlement of things muſt be made in caſe of Sin and Tranſgreſſion; and that which is the Nature and natural Condition of the Earth, of Man, Woman and the Serpent, was fit matter for ſuch a Penal Settlement, and was deſign'd to be matter of a Penal Law of Settlement; and conſequently thoſe ſame things that were their Nature and natural Condition, were fitly ſettled upon them in a Penal Law of Settlement, and they were fitly ſubjected to them by way of Settlement. To illuſtrate the caſe of the Serpent, let us ſuppoſe, that our Father Adam was made a Therſites (and conſequently that this was his Nature and natural Condition,) but with deſign, that in caſe of Tranſgreſſion he ſhould be ſubjected to all his Deformities by way of Penal Settlement (by a Settlement made when things were only beginning, but which was to be perpetual;) if afterwards upon his Tranſgreſſion ſuch a Settlement was made, there was nothing of ineptitude and incongruity in it. For by ſuch a Settlement his Deformities would become Penal and matter of Settlement perpetual and unalterable (which they were not before) and he would be ſubjected to them both by Natural and Legal Neceſſity. There are many Inſtances, wherein there is a concurrence of Natural and Legal Neceſſity; for Virtue is productive

---

Bochart. de animal. P. 1. l. 1. c. 4.

(g) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 1. c. ult.

(h) Celſus & erectus à medio incedens, media corporis parte Serpit, mediâ arduus eſt & excelſus. Bochart. de Anim. Par. 2. l. 3. c. 10.

(i) Mihi non ſit veriſimile, propter peccatum hominis Deum in naturæ Serpentis quidquam mutaſſe. Tantum quod erat naturæ ceſſit in pœnam, ut in homine nuditas, in muliere partus. De Animal. Par. 1. l. 1. c. 4.

productive of Health and long Life, and the Wages of Sin is Death both by Natural and Legal Neceſſity: So Mankind are ſubjected to Death both by Natural and Legal Neceſſity. If Mankind were ſubjected to innumerable Calamities during their Life-time, and at length to the pains of Death, meerly by natural Neceſſity, this would be extremely harſh and incongruous (profectò grave jugum ſuper filios Adam, à die exitus de ventre matris eorum, nullo modo juſtum eſſet, as S. Auſtin argueth;) they ought therefore to be ſubjected thereto with reſpect to Sin and Demerit, and by Legal as well as Natural Neceſſity. And there is the ſame reaſon for the Woman's incommodious Subjection in her married Condition and her many Sorrows of Gravidation; ſhe ought to be ſubjected to them with reſpect to Sin and Demerit, and by a concurrence both of Natural and Legal Neceſſity. If therefore the Serpent was duly reputed a grand Criminal, he ought to be ſubjected to his vile and abject Condition of Poſture, Gate and Food, not meerly by natural Neceſſity, (but agreeably to the method of Procedure with our firſt Parents) with reſpect to Sin and Demerit, and by a Legal Neceſſity conjunct with a Natural. And there is nothing of ineptitude and incongruity in thus ſubjecting him to his vile and abject Condition, but it was done with the greateſt reaſon and congruity, becauſe in his Doom and Sentence he was conſider'd ſpecificativè and comprehenſivè, as Satan's kind of Animal, as a Symbol of him and complicated with him. The Brute-ſerpent thus conſider'd ought to be ſubjected to his baſe and abject Condition by Law-ſettlement and Legal Neceſſity, as is plain to any underſtanding.

IV. Having thus ſeen and ſalv'd the difficulties that are involv'd in the Doom of the Serpent, we will take a view of ſome matters of Nature and natural Philoſophy that are in it (as it relateth to the Brute-ſerpent,) which are of eaſie and delightful Contemplation. (1.) One Branch of the Doom of the Serpent is the bruſing his Head, which is a conſiderable Theory of natural Philoſophy. For it hath been the general Opinion of Phyſicians and Philoſophers, that the Heart is the principal Seat of Life (as being the firſt thing that liveth and the laſt that dieth:) But Moſes is of another Opinion, that the principal ſeat of Life in Animals is not the Heart, but the Head. It ſhall bruiſe thy Head, ſaith Moſes. Whereby he meaneth, it ſhall give thee the moſt deadly wound and mortal hurt, which is nothing leſs than deſtructive to the principal ſeat of Life. Such I found the Head to be, by a little obſervation which I made, when I was young and converſant in Anatomy; for having diſſected a Frog, and taken out the Heart and Bowels of it, the Frog notwithſtanding leap'd up and down vivaciouſly upon the Graſs for a conſiderable time, till I ſet my Foot upon the Head and cruſh'd it, and then the Frog immediately expir'd. Hence I made obſervation, that the principal ſeat of Life is (not in the Heart, but) in the Head of every Animal; which is matter of common obſervation touching the Serpent.
(k) Bochart. ſupr. (k) Caput in Serpente longè potiſſima pars, in a Serpent the Head is by far the moſt principal part. Therefore his principal care is to guard and ſecure his Head; and the Spider's way of killing the Serpent is, to bite him in the Head and then he dieth. But if his Head be unhurt, he will live, although very little of his Body be left him. Ἡ πᾶσα ζωὴ, all his Life is in his Head, ſaith Epiphanius. This Epaminondas repreſented to the Thebans, when he exhorted them to ſet upon a Band of the Lacedæmonians; he ſhew'd them the Head of a vaſt great Snake that he had cruſh'd; behold (ſaid he) the Body can do no hurt, now the Head is gone. Whereby he meant, that the Lacedæmonians were the Head of the Confederates, and if they were cruſh'd, the reſt could ſignifie nothing. (2.) Another Branch of the Doom of the Serpent is his feeding on Duſt. Duſt ſhalt thou eat all the days of thy life. Which is not ſo to be underſtood, as if the Serpents ate nothing but Duſt; for they eat Fleſh and Herbs, and are reckon'd amongſt the παμφάγα, that eat all ſorts of things. Ariſtotle ſaith, they are the moſt dainty in their Food of all Animals. But as dainty as they are, Duſt is aſſign'd them for their Food, and a ſort of Serpent in India is ſaid to feed upon Duſt only. The Water Serpent alſo when Water faileth him, eateth the Earth or Ground, and Serpents in general ſeeing they crawl on the Ground muſt neceſſarily eat much of Duſt with their Food. Duſt therefore is the celebrated Food of the Serpent. Duſt ſhall be the Serpents meat. Iſa. 65. 25. They ſhall lick the duſt like a Serpent. Mic. 7. 17. In the Prophet to bow down to the Church and Iſa. 49. 23.
lick up the Duſt of her Feet, denoteth extreme Pſal. 102.
Demiſſion and Self-abaſement (for can we go 9. and 72. lower than to the Duſt?) So the Pſalmiſt ex- 9.
preſſeth his own abject Condition by eating Aſhes, and the abject Condition to which the King's Enemies ſhall be reduc'd by their licking the Duſt. Duſt is the vileſt of Food, and the eating of it denoteth the extreme baſeneſs and abjectneſs of the Serpent's Condition: But this extreme baſeneſs of Condition is his natural Condition; for ſeveral other Animals naturally feed on Duſt, as Worms, the Moles, the hungry Wolves; and the Scorpions are ſaid to feed on Earth, and this according to Nature and natural Condition. (3.) Another Branch of the Serpent's Doom is his inſidious way of hurting Men, the biting them by the Heel. It ſhall bruiſe thy Head, and thou ſhalt bruiſe his Heel. The Serpent's proper way of hurting is not to combat with a Man, nor to ſet upon him like a Lion or a Bear to devour him: But it is an underly inſidious way, biting Men and Horſes by the Heel. Gen. 49. 17. Dan ſhall be a Serpent by the way, an Adder in the path, that biteth the Horſeheels, ſo that his rider ſhall fall backward. None can reaſonably doubt, that this is the Serpent's Nature and natural Condition: But if you bruiſe the Serpent's Head, and he biteth you by the Heel, this is more apparently his Nature and natural Condition; for it is natural for any Animal, to turn again, when he is trodden on. If therefore you tread on the Serpent, it is natural for the Serpent to bite you by the Heel, and to pour his Venom on that part of your Body that hurteth him. Which plainly demonſtrateth, that this Doom of the Serpent is a Settlement of his Nature and natural Condition. (4.) A fourth Branch of the Doom of the Serpent is the Enmity between the Serpent and Mankind. I will put (by way of Settlement) Enmity between thee and the Woman, and between thy Seed and her Seed. Several of the ancient Writers of the Church are of Opinion, that there was no Enmity or Antipa-thy between the Creatures before the Sin of Man, and that no venenate Animals were ſo made from the beginning, but whatever is poiſonous in Nature, is adventitious through the Sin of Man. But they might as well ſay, that no poiſonous Plants or Minerals were from the beginning, as no poiſonous Animals. And if there was no Enmity or Antipathy between the Creatures before the Sin of Man, there muſt be (before that time) no ſuch Animals as Wolves and Sheep, the Lion and the Leopard, the Dolphin and the Crocodile, the Horſe and the Bear, between whom there is a deadly Enmity and Antipathy, and the Locuſt will die at the ſight of the Polypus. Of the ſame Nature is that innate Antipathy, that is between Serpents and Mankind; which is another plain demonſtration, that the Doom of the Serpent did not make any mutation in his Nature, but was a Settlement of his Nature and natural Condition. It may be objected, that antecedently to the Sin of our firſt Parents there could be no innate Enmity or Antipathy between the Serpent and Mankind, becauſe the tempting Serpent found an eaſie acceſs unto Eve, and had a familiar Diſcourſe with her without any appearance of Horrour or Antipathy. Which is indeed a good Argument againſt the common Opinion, that Satan tempted our firſt Parents in the Organ of a Brute-ſerpent, or in the Form of ſuch a Serpent: But we (that have another Notion of things) may make anſwer, that the tempting Serpent was not of ſo groſly a frightful and Serpentine an appearance, as to excite Horrour and Antipathy in our Mother Eve, at moſt not in any great degree, whence he had ſo eaſie an acceſs to her and a familiar Diſcourſe with her.

(2.)

Of the Doom of the Serpent as it relateth to Satan.

The Doom being denounc'd upon the Serpent in general Satan is neceſſarily involv'd in it. In the whole of it therefore the literal is a Symbol of the Myſtical Serpent. It is literally expreſſive of the Brute-ſerpents Nature and Condition, that in this Glaſs we might contemplate the Nature and State, the Deſigns and Intereſt, the Practices and the Fate of the old Serpent. S. Chryſoſtom ſaith (l) that we might always have before our Eyes Memorials of his Puniſhment. But his Puniſhment is not any thing like the putting to Death a Malefactor: His Penalty (agreeably to the Doom of the Brute-ſerpent) is only a Settlement of his Nature and Condition. For the Summary of it is his being a Serpent criminally, and his being made a Serpent penally. As if a Judge ſhould ſay to a Man-ſwine, thou art a Swine (criminally,) I will make a Swine of thee (penally,) thou ſhalt be of the baſe and odious Nature and Condition, and have the Uſage, the Lot and Portion that belongeth to a Swine. So this divine Doom muſt be underſtood, to ſay touching the tempting Serpent; Thou art a Serpent in reſpect of the criminal Nature and maleficent Practice of a Serpent, I will penally make a Serpent of thee, thy Allotment and Settlement ſhall be the baſe and infamous Nature and Condition of a Serpent. Theſe things cohere with great congruity; if Satan hath criminally play'd the Serpent, it is hugely reaſonable and agreeable, that the infamous Nature and Condition of a Serpent ſhould be ſettled upon him, and that in the Doom of the Serpent he ſhould be complicated with the Brute-ſerpent. (m) Vide igitur quàm optimè Serpentis conditiones Diaboli naturam & pœnam exprimant, ſee therefore how mighty well the Conditions of a Serpent expreſs the Nature and Puniſhment of the Devil. For, (1.) In the firſt Branch of his Doom the literal Serpent (that wily inſidious and malign Subtiliſt) is a Symbol of him as criminally the Serpent, acting the part of the old Serpent that deceiveth the whole world. Apoc. 12. 9. The Lord God ſaid unto the Serpent, becauſe thou haſt done this. (n) In his verbis Tentator deſcribitur, the Crime of the Serpent was tempting others to Sin. Which is ſinning at the Devil's rate of ſinning, who is (as Tertullian calleth him) totius Erroris Artifex, the wily Artificer of all Sin. (2.) In the ſecond Branch of his Doom the literal Serpent is a Symbol of him as penally Curſed. Bleſſing implieth Favour and Kindneſs, Curſing implieth abominating and deteſting. Bleſſing implieth enjoying good, and Curſing implieth blaſting one's Condition, the deprivation of good and poſitive evil. So the literal Serpent is a curſed kind of Animal (curſed above all Cattel and every Beaſt of the Field as being odious and to be had in deteſtation; and he is depriv'd of thoſe goods and dignities and conveniences of Life, which other Animals enjoy. And the myſtical Serpent is the foul execrable Fiend, the worſt and moſt accurſed of all Creatures; curſed, as being utterly to be hated, abominated and had in higheſt deteſtation; and as being of blaſted Condition, depriv'd of all true worth and comfort, and of the moſt baſe and wretched Condition (notwithſtanding his Domination and Power;) for to be the vileſt of the Beaſts of the Field, is to be of better Rank, Quality and Condition, than to be a Devil. But it is worth our Obſervation by the way (although impertinent to the Expoſition of the Moſaic Text,) that as there is a literal and myſtical Serpent, ſo there are the literal and the myſtical Beaſts of the Field. For the unclean Spirits (of whom Satan is Chieftain) are repreſented by our Saviour as a ſort of Beaſts of the Field. Matth. 12. 45. When the unclean Spirit is gone out of a Man, he walketh through dry places. Evil Spirits have their Name in Hebrew שרים probably from שרה a Field, becauſe they have their Haunts and Habitations in Fields and Deſarts, in Solitudes and deſolate Places. They are the Satyrs that dance there, and there cry to their Fellows. So Babylon when it is deſolated and ruin'd, becometh the Habitation of Devils and the Hold of every foul Spirit. (3.) In the third Branch of his Doom the literal Serpent is a Symbol of the myſtical in reſpect of his abject and groveling gate and poſture and the vileneſs of his Food. His groveling and crawling on the Earth repreſenteth Satan, who ſince his Fall is become a groveling crawling Serpent (a Serpent groveling and crawling on the Ground as it were) being meerly circumterraneous. For the evil Demons may be called (as the Chalday Oracles ſpeak) θῆρες χθονὸς, the ferine Beaſts of the Earth. Origen ſaith of them (o) τῆς καθαρωτέρας οὐ δύνανται ἐφάψασθαι χώρας καὶ θειοτέρας, they cannot reach any purer and diviner Region. And Porphyry deſcribeth them as (p) νέμοντες τὸν περίγειον τόπον, poſſeſſing the circumterraneous place. (q) The Devil was by God created Upright, but abode not in the Truth, and therefore was caſt down into theſe loweſt places, and the dirt of Souls. Very agreeably therefore as a Serpent he creepeth by the Ground in his depreſſed Condition. His low and depreſſed Condition is ſymbolically ſignified by the Brute-Serpents going upon the Belly and eating Duſt according to that of the Pſalmiſt; our Soul is bowed down to the Duſt, our Belly cleaveth unto the Earth. The Brute-ſerpent's eating Duſt (which uſually in Scripture denoteth humiliation and abaſement) may be interpreted, to ſignifie one Branch of his abaſement, as the going upon the Belly may ſignifie another. Which yet can ſcarce be called another, becauſe his going upon the Belly involveth and includeth his eating Duſt. The intent therefore of theſe two Phraſes (going upon the Belly and eating Duſt) may reaſonably be ſuppos'd to be the very ſame; both appear, to be deſign'd, to ſignifie only this one thing, that the Brute-ſerpent ſhall be of abject groveling Condition. And ſeeing there is ſuch a Coincidence between them, the latter of them (the eating Duſt) needeth not any diſtinct application to the myſtical Serpent. But it is capable of a commodious diſtinct application; for the Brute-ſerpent's eating Duſt importeth, that he is moſt vilely terrene and ſordid in his Food; and conſequently it may ſignifie, that the myſtical Serpent ſhall be nothing better than moſt vilely terrene, baſe and ſordid in his Food, Solace and Enjoyments. So the evil Demons (as well as the Brute-ſerpents) terrenis paſcuntur ſordibus, and if the ancient Theologers (Chriſtian, Judaical and ſome Pagan) do not miſtake (r) they are fed by the Steams of Blood, the Nidours and Fumes of the Sacrifices, τῇ μυσαρᾷ ϗ ἀκαθάρτῳ ὕλῃ, by filthy and impure Matter, Food as vile as the Terreſtrial Duſt of the Brute-ſerpent. The Jews ſuppoſe, that the old Serpent eateth proper literal Duſt. (s) For when they cut off the Fore-skin of a Child, they throw it into a Veſſel filled with Duſt (that ſtandeth hard by,) and this they do, to ſignifie, that they give it for Meat to the old Serpent, for his Food is the Duſt of the Earth, as it is written, Duſt ſhall be the Serpent's Meat. (4.) In the fourth Branch of his Doom, namely, in reſpect of the mutual hatred and enmity between the Woman and her Seed (as that ſignifieth Mankind) and the Serpent and his Seed, the literal Serpent is a Symbol and Repreſentative of the myſtical Serpent. I will put Enmity between thee and the Woman, and between thy Seed and her Seed. (t) There is an inbred malevolence and activity of hurting in thoſe evil Spirits. They rejoice at our Evils and if they can put a Cheat upon us, it is as their Food and their Feaſt. (u) All or almoſt all Men have an Horrour at the Name of Devils. In Mankind naturally there is a fear and hatred of the Devil, (which is many ways prejudicial to the Intereſts of his Kingdom,) Nature is averſe from being reconcil'd to Satan, from eſpouſing his Intereſt, adhering to his Party, affecting his Service as ſuch, and from entertaining his known Temptations. What they hate and deteſt uſually they call the Devil, and pour all their Execrations upon it. Although they are commonly miſtaken in their application of the Name, yet from thoſe miſtakes this appeareth, to be their Senſe, that the Devil is to be had in greateſt Deteſtation and Execration, which inſtinct of Nature and general ſenſe of Mankind holy Men improve into an Enmity againſt Sin and Wickedneſs, which is that which the Devil is as his kind of thing, and which maketh him to be a Devil. (5.) In the fifth Branch of the Serpents Doom the literal Serpent is a Symbol of the myſtical in reſpect of the Antitheſis between Head and Heel, the Head of the Serpent and the Heel of the Woman's Seed. It ſhall bruiſe thy Head and thou ſhalt bruiſe his Heel. The myſtical Serpents way of hurting is like the Brute-ſerpents, a biting by the Heel, which is an underly guileful inſidious way. And as biting by the Heel, ſo to come behind one, and to take him by the Heel, is a deceitful and guileful way; (w) whence in the Hebrew Tongue to take one by the Heel, is to ſupplant and undermine him. Gen. 27. 36. Eſau ſaith, is he not rightly named Jacob? for he hath ſupplanted me theſe two times. Jacob had his Name from taking his Brother by the Heel, as he came out of the Womb. But becauſe to come behind one, to take him by the Heel, is the ſame thing, as to ſupplant him, therefore Eſau ſaith, is he not rightly named Jacob (that is, one that taketh by the Heel) for he hath ſupplanted me theſe two times. So the method of the old Sophiſter is a doing miſchief to Mankind deceitfully and inſidiouſly in a way of ſupplanting and undermining, ὑποσκελίζων, tripping up their Heels as it were. On the contrary Mankind (ſome of Mankind) ſhall bruiſe his Head for him, which will be beſt underſtood by conſidering the Doom of the Serpent under another Notion.

(l) Ἵνα διηνεκῶς πρὸ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν ἔχωμεν ὁρᾶν τῆς τιμωρίας αὐτοῦ τὰ ὑπομνήματα. In Gen. p. 113.

(m) P. Martyr. in Gen. 3. 14.

(n) S. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. l. 11. c. 36.

Grot. Not. in Joh. 8. 44. hath this conceit. Qui Adamum deceperat, non fuit ipſe ὁ ἄρχων, ſed aliquis ab eo ſubmiſſus, Angelus Satanæ.

Iſa. 13. 21. and 34. 14. Apoc. 18. 2.

(o) C. Cel. l. 3. p. 132.

(3.)

Of the Doom of the Serpent as it relateth to Chriſt and Chriſtians.

The Doom of the Serpent is an illuſtrious Prophecy of the Meſſiah. A Prophecy it is without all Controverſie; and it appeareth not to be any thing more than a Prophecy or Prophetic Commination; (x) for it hath not the Nature of a Promiſe. It is not a Tranſaction between God and our firſt Parents, but this whole Tranſaction is between God and the Serpent, who is threatned with a deadly vanquiſhment by the Woman's Seed. But the Seed of the Woman is only predicted (ſo far promis'd,) and the vanquiſhment of the Serpent is not promis'd to our firſt Parents, but only predicted and threatned. The ſame words may be both a threatning and a promiſe: But if this Doom of the Serpent had been a Promiſe, this Promiſe muſt have been made to our firſt Parents (as the Promiſe,) and muſt have been a giving them right to the benefit promis'd. Whereas the words appear not to have been at all directed to them, nor to have convey'd to them any Right or Claim: But they ſeem to have been ſpoken in their hearing, and it was requiſite, they ſhould be ſo, as being

(p) De Abſtin. p. 83.

(q) Diabolus fuit rectus à Deo conditus, ſed in veritate non ſtetit, unde uſque ad hæc infima dejectus eſt & loca & animarum ſordes. ——— bene ergo per terram ut Serpens repit dejectus. P. Mart. Com. in Gen. 3. 14.

Pſal. 44. 25.

(r) Petav. l. 3. de Angel. l. 3. c. 1.

(s) Buxtorf. Synag. c. 2.

(t) Eſt inſita malevolentia quædam & facultas nocendi iſtis malis Spiritibus: Guadent de malo hominum, & de fallacia noſtra, ſi nos fefellerint, paſcuntur. S. Aug. in Pſal. 96.

(u) Omnes vel penè omnes dæmonum nomen exhorrent. Idem de C. D. l. 8. c. 14.

(w) Mr. Mede on Gen. 3. 13, 14, 15.

(x) V. Dr. Bur t . Argument for Infants Bapt. p. 102, &c.

being a Prophecy of nothing leſs than Man's Redemption by the Woman's Seed, conſider'd as ſuch.

(1.) The Prophecy importeth, that wicked Men and Angels are the Seed of the old Serpent, (y) S. Cyr. com. in Joh. 8. 41, 44. his Progeny and reſembling Off-ſpring, (y) who is ἁπάσης πονηρίας ἀρχὴ, the beginning of all Wickedneſs; for as Jubal is the Father of them that handle the Harp and Organ, becauſe he was the firſt Inventor of thoſe Inſtruments, others that have the art of uſing them are originated from him, are his kind and party of Men: ſo the Devil is the Father of all Impietiſts, becauſe he was the firſt Inventor of the ſinning trade, all other Practitioners of it have it from him, and are of his Kind and Party, his Family and Cognation. Matt. 13. 38. Act. 13. 10. 1 Joh. 3. 10, 12. Joh. 8. 44. All wicked ones are from the grand wicked one originally, and they are of his Kind and Quality, his Genius and Foot-mark, they ſymbolize with him, and he is the Father of their Diſpoſition and Practice, and therefore they are his Children. So Cain was of that wicked one (originally and of kind and quality,) and the Jews were of their Father the Devil. They are Diaboliſts therefore, but in various degrees; for ſome of them (as like loveth like) proceed to ſuch height of Wickedneſs, that they depoſit their native Enmity againſt the Devil, they like and love him, will be on his ſide, plead his Cauſe, deſire to be of his Society and affect his Converſe. So the Euchites are ſaid, to have eradicated out of their Souls τὰ πάτεικὰ σύμβολα, all Principles of Moral Goodneſs, that they might have full converſe with the Devil, and might propheſie. There are no greater Diaboliſts than theſe ſave only the impure Demons, every one of which, (z) S. Cyr. ſupr. (z) ὡς διαβόλου τέκνον σατανᾶς καλεῖται, as being a Son of the Devil is called Satan, according to that of our Saviour, If Satan caſt out Satan.

(2.) The Prophecy importeth, that Chriſt and Chriſtians (all the Faithful) are the Woman's Seed, which is confronted and oppos'd to the Seed of the Serpent. Maimonides obſerveth, (a) Mor. Nev. par. 2. c. 30. (a) a marvellous confronting and conjoyning of things in this Doom of the Serpent, wherein the Serpent is joyn'd with Eve, that is, his Seed with her Seed, Head and Heel; that ſhe vanquiſheth him in the Head, and he vanquiſheth her in the Heel. It is marvellous indeed, that in this Conteſt between the two oppoſite Parties the hurting the Head and the victorious Powers and Puiſſance is on the Woman's ſide; and the oppoſite Party can be but inſidious and underly miſchievous, which is the Serpent's way of hurting. But the moſt marvellous thing in the Prophecy is, that the Seed of the Woman is only mention'd in it, and not the Seed of Man. This Maimonides taketh notice of, but putteth it off in this manner; It is not to be doubted, but that the Seed of Eve is the Seed of Adam. But he ought to have conſider'd, that there muſt be ſome myſterious reaſon for this ſtrange unuſual Appellation of Mankind, not the Seed of Man, but the Seed of the Woman; and that it is deſign'd, to ſignifie, that there is the Seed of the Woman in ſtrict and proper acceptation (which is ſo the Seed of the Woman, as not to be the Seed of Man) as well as in a large and common acceptation. And he ought to have conſider'd, whoſe Name or Denomination this is, the Seed of the Woman. For when the Prophecy ſaith, It ſhall bruiſe thy Head, the Relative It referreth to the Woman's Seed beforegoing; and conſequently the meaning of the Prophecy muſt be underſtood by conſidering, whoſe Name or Denomination this is, the Woman's Seed. And every one muſt grant, that it is eſpecially, eminently and peculiarly his Name or Denomination, who is meerly and purely the Seed of the Woman (in ſtrict and proper acceptation ſuch) ſo as not to be the Seed of Man. It denoteth therefore in a ſenſe of Eminence the Chriſtian Meſſiah; and ſeeing in the Prophecy the Seed of the Woman is the confronted oppoſite to the Head of the Serpent, the bruiſing whereof muſt ſignifie ſome great Atchievement: This inferreth, that the Seed of the Woman denoteth ſome great and eminent Perſonage deſtructive to the Serpentine Family, but of a ſaving nature to Mankind, and conſequently it denoteth the Chriſtian Meſſiah. It is his Name in the ſenſe of Eminence, but in the meer literal ſenſe it ſignifieth all Mankind, and in the myſtical ſenſe it ſignifieth the Seed of the true Church (that myſtical Woman) which Satan warreth againſt, Apoc. 12. 17. Although there are ſome, who will not allow, (b) that any other Woman is meant in the Prophecy ſave only our Mother Eve, (b) Arrowſmith Tact. Sacr. l. 1. c. 2. nor will they allow our Mother Eve, to be a Type of the Church, but they ſuppoſe, that by the Seed of the Woman is meant all the Faithful (taken collectively,) and that all the Faithful are the Seed of Eve, which is a moſt unskilful mode of Interpretation, a jumbling together the literal and the myſtical ſenſe; for that Adam was a Type of Chriſt, and Eve a Type of the Church, the Apoſtle teacheth expreſly. Rom. 5. 14. Eph. 5. 31, 32. Agreeably whereto Grotius judiciouſly interpreteth the Prophecy; Allegoricè mulier eſt Eccleſia, & illius ſemen qui ad Eccleſiam pertinent, Gal. 4. 26. The Woman allegorically is the Church, and her Seed is thoſe that belong to the Church. The Seed of the Woman is oppos'd to the Seed of the Serpent, which muſt be taken collectively (to ſignifie Wicked Men and Angels;) therefore the Seed of the Woman muſt be taken collectively, to ſignifie all the Faithful: yet not ſo as to ſignifie Chriſt Myſtical or Chriſt and his Members (as Mr. Mede will have it;) for Chriſt is not the Seed of the Church, but her Lord, Head and Husband. The Seed of the Woman ſignifieth in a threefold ſenſe: in the meer literal ſenſe, in the literal ſenſe which is the ſenſe of Eminence, and in the myſtical ſenſe.

(3.) The Prophecy importeth, that the Univerſe of Rationals is in the ſtate of War; as appeareth from the mortal feud, that (by Divine Appointment) is commenc'd between the Woman and her Seed on the one ſide, and the Satanical Brood of Men and Angels (the Serpentine kind) on the other ſide; and from bruiſing the Head and Heel by the oppoſite Parties. Theſe are hoſtile and inimical at the rate of an inbred deadly Enmity and Antipathy, according to that Saying of Luther, Cain will kill Abel to the World's end. (c) Abel (the righteous Abel and a Shepherd) (c) S. Cyr. com. in Joan. p. 552. was a Type and forerunner of Chriſt (the juſt one and the great Shepherd,) againſt whom the old Serpent with his inviſible Accomplices are deadly inimical and every way inimical. His Nature is, to hate Holineſs, and to love that which is Evil; he is as eager to deſtroy Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, as Chriſt is, to promote it; and to promote the abounding of Sin and Wickedneſs, as Chriſt is to deſtroy it. His Evil Nature and Inclination and the Intereſt of his Kingdom ingageth him in a continual War and Hoſtility againſt God and Chriſt, the Sanctity and Salvation of Souls. And in like manner his viſible Partiſans the World of the Ungodly (who are more or leſs a Satanical Brood are inimical to Chriſt and the myſtical Woman's Seed; for the World hateth them quâ mundus, as it is the World (the Syſtem of the Mundane and Carnal kind of People, of the Mundane and Carnal kind of Religioniſts, the Aliens from God and true Piety,) they are hated by the World becauſe repugnant to the Spirit of the World; for the City of God (d) mundi hujus dilectoribus odioſa eſt, is odious to the World's admirers and lovers. Nor is the City of God wanting in due and virtuous returns of Hatred and Enmity; for they have not only a natural, but a divine kind of Enmity againſt Satan, his Intereſt and Works; they are liſted Souldiers to fight againſt him, his Temptations and his Kingdom to the Death. Their great Maſter warneth them of the danger, that they are in by this ſubdolous malicious Enemy, chargeth them, to reſiſt him, not to give place to him, to ſtand againſt his Wiles, to be vigilant and careful, to manage an offenſive and defenſive War againſt him; to do their utmoſt againſt his Intereſt, and promiſeth them a Crown, if they be faithful and victorious in their Chriſtian Warfare: Conſider'd as under Chriſt (who is their Prince and General) they conſtitute an Army and Kingdom, which ſtands oppos'd to another Army and Kingdom (of wicked Men and Angels) of which Satan is the Prince and General. So that the Univerſe ſtandeth divided into two oppoſite Kingdoms and Armies, between which there is the moſt irreconcileable Feud imaginable and the moſt deadly War.

(4.) The Prophecy importeth, that Satan is and hath an Head, which muſt be cruſh'd, as a bloody Jewiſh Rabbi would have the Gentiles treated: (e)Optimus qui inter gentes eſt dignus eſt, ut caput illi conteratur tanquam ſerpenti; the beſt Man amongſt the Gentiles is worthy to have his Head bruis'd as a Serpent. The old Serpent is an Head (the Head of an Empire,) and hath an Head, which is his Headſhip or Sovereignty (for the Head of a Serpent is the principal part;) and in this principal part he muſt have a deadly hurt, which denoteth the deſpoiling him of his Headſhip and Sovereignty (in part, and by degrees totally) which ſometimes extended almoſt over the whole World. But this his Mundane Empire muſt fall by the Hands of the Woman's Seed in the ſenſe of Eminence; whoſe deſign in coming into the World was againſt Satan, his Sovereignty and Kingdom in the World, and to ſet up a Kingdom oppoſite unto Satan's, that the Prince of this World might be caſt out of his Rule, that Satan like Lightning might fall from Heaven (from his high Rule and Empire over Mankind,) that Mankind might be delivered from the power of Darkneſs and tranſlated into his Kingdom; to ſpoil Principalities and Powers and the ſtrong Man's Houſe, to deſtroy him that had the Power of Death and the Works of the Devil, the principal of which was the ſetting up his Sovereignty and Kingdom in the World.

(5.) The Prophecy importeth, that the Woman's Seed in ſeveral Senſes of it ſhall deſtroy Satan's Sovereignty. The Seed of the Woman in the ſenſe of Eminence is deſtructive of Satan's Sovereignty in all the Branches of it; but the myſtical Woman's Seed is alſo deſtructive of it in conjunction with him (the Meſſiah) and in ſubordination to him; for in all times Chriſtians vanquiſh Satan, and tread on the power of the Enemy; but moſt remarkably in the bloody War which Satan and his Army manag'd againſt the Chriſtian Church in the Roman Empire, his Sovereignty was deſtroy'd by the myſtical Woman's Seed; for the Man-child that was to rule all Nations (that is, the Roman Empire,) was the myſtical Woman's Seed, and it was by that Man-child's ruling that Satan loſt his Sovereignty in the Roman Empire, Apoc. 12. 5. Grotius in his Notes upon that Chapter maketh this Obſervation. (f) You ſee here, that the Seed of the Woman ſpoken of Gen. 3. 15. is myſtically underſtood of the Members of the Chriſtian Church: in which ſenſe S. Paul uſeth the words of the ſame place, Rom. 16. 20. Chriſt is the ſecond Adam, the ſecond Eve, that is, the Mother of the living, is the whole Church; her Seed is the Individuals that belong to the Church.

(f) Vides hic ſemen mulieris quod eſt Gen. 3. 15. μυστικῶς explicari de membris Eccleſiæ Chriſtianæ: quo ſenſu verba ejuſdem loci uſurpat Paulus Rom. 16.20. Adam ſecundus eſt Chriſtus; Eva ſecunda, i. e. mater viventium, Eccleſia tota; ſemen ejus ſinguli qui ad Eccleſiam pertinent.

(6.) The Prophecy importeth, that as Satan cauſed Man to fall by a Woman, ſo his own downfall ſhould come by a Woman; ſo far he ſhould be ſerv'd in his own kind, paid in his own Coin (which is called by the Rabbins menſura pro menſura,) his Puniſhment ſhould carry a wiſe correſpondence to his Sin. Not as if the bruiſing the Serpent's Head might be attributed to a Woman, (g) Ipſa conteret caput tuum is not the true reading, it would be Blaſphemy and Idolatry, to attribute to a Woman the proper work and prerogative of the Lord Meſſiah, the redeeming, reconciling and ſaving Mankind. But a Woman (the Bl. Virgin) muſt be ſaid, to have been the means of conveying theſe Benefits to us, and ſo far a cauſa adjuvans thereof.

(7.) The bruiſing the Heel of the Woman's Seed (mention'd in the Prophecy) underſtood in the myſtical and metaphorical ſenſe, muſt be interpreted by Analogy to the Brute-ſerpent's biting the Heels of Men; which is an hurting an underly part, and it is an hurting them in an underly way (inſidiouſly,) cauſing them to fall who ſtand upon their Feet, whereof the Heel is a part. So Satan and his Accomplices hurt the bodily and terrene part of the Woman's Seed by their venenate Perſecutions; and by their venenate Temptations they hurt them in an underly inſidious way; by theſe methods of Enmity cauſing ſome to fall into Sin and others into Sufferings. For in this War againſt Satan the Seed of the Woman doth not get the Victory without Wounds and Blood, Apoc. 12. 11. So the Seed of the Woman in the ſenſe of Eminence in bruiſing the Serpent's Head was himſelf eminently bruiſed, hurt and wounded; the Conqueſt coſt him a Fall, but by his Fall he overthrew the Adverſary and became Victorious. With this Expoſition of bruiſing the Heel S. Ambroſe's Interpretation of the Phraſe exactly agreeth, if ſome light change be made in his ſenſe. (h) Servatum eſt Serpenti, ut calcaneum mulieris & ſeminis ejus obſervet, quo noceat & venenum ſuum infundat. Non ergo ambulemus in terrenis, & ſerpens nobis nocere non poteſt. Sumamus Evangelicum calceamentum, quo venenum ſerpentis excluditur, morſus ejus hebetatur. If we had no terrene or bodily part the Serpent could not hurt the Woman's Seed by his venenate Perſecutions, which is one way of bruiſing the Heel: And if we are fenc'd with the Shooe of the Goſpel, he cannot hurt the Woman's Seed by his venenate Temptations (in an inſidious way) which is the other way of bruiſing the Heel.

We have now paſs'd through all the Branches of the Moſaic Hiſtory of the Serpent in Paradiſe, and as we have carefully conſider'd, ſo we ſeem to have clearly routed all that Army of Objections, which is muſtur'd up againſt it, Archæolog. Philoſoph. c. 7. p. 289.

(d) S. Aug. de C.D. l. 5. c. 16.

(e) Ap. P. Fagium in Exod. 23. 1.

Joh. 12. 31. Luc. 10. 18. Col. 1. 13. and 2. 15. Matth. 12. 29. Heb. 2. 14. 1 Joh. 3. 8.

(g) Sixt. Amama Antibarbar. Bibl. p. 324, &c.

(h) De fuga ſeculi c. 7.

ARTICLE 9.

The Lord God ſo called in this Hiſtory was the viſible appearance of God by the Angel of his Name and Preſence in an Humane Form.

I. THE Moſaic Creation (to which the Hiſtory of Paradiſe belongeth) was not meerly a Creation, but was ſo the Creation of Mankind, as to be withall a Prophetic manifeſtation of God to our firſt Parents; and this Prophetic Manifeſtation was of the ſame Nature with other Prophetic Manifeſtations of God in the Old Teſtament. S. Auſtin affirmeth, (i) that God ſpake to Man in Paradiſe, as afterwards he ſpake to the Fathers, to Abraham and to Moſes, in ſome bodily ſpecies: hence it is that they heard his Voice walking in the Garden of Eden and hid themſelves. (k) This was viſibly done (God exhibited a viſible appearance of himſelf) and by a Creature, as all ſuppoſe, that underſtand the Catholick Faith. The uſual appearance of God to our firſt Parents by a Creature fit for ſuch an Action in an humane form is ſufficiently probable. (l) In ſpecie hominis videtur Deus cum homine tunc locutus: God ſeemeth then to have talk'd with Man in the form of Man: for how ſuch an ambulation and collocution of God can be literally underſtood except in an humane form I do not ſee. Some Expoſitors ſuppoſe, that the ſenſe of the Hiſtory is, not that the Lord God did walk in the Garden, but that the Voice or Sound did walk: (m) Others reject and well refute this Conceit; and S. Auſtin ſaith, It cannot be ſaid, that only a Voice was made, ſeeing God is ſaid, to have walk'd; nor can it be ſaid, that he who walk'd was not viſible, ſeeing Adam ſaith, that he hid himſelf from the Face of God. A viſible appearance of God was in Paradiſe (God did exhibit a viſible appearance of himſelf, and exhibit himſelf as eſpecially preſent therein as in the Schecinah,) and this viſible appearance was in an Humane Form, as P. Martyr ſaith, (n) It is pobable, that God ſpake to Adam in an humane form; for he that had made him after his own Image, did not diſdain, to be frequently preſent with him ſub ſuæ imaginis nota, under the Character of his own Image. Piſcator and Oleaſter are of the ſame Opinion, and Lyra ſaith, that God walked in the Garden in ſome created likeneſs. Eſtius ſaith, It is probable, that both a Body and a Voice was formed by an Angelical Miniſtry. The Senſe of all theſe Expoſitors combin'd and put together amounteth to this Propoſition; God did exhibit a viſible appearance of himſelf in an Humane Form (as in many other caſes) by an Angelical Miniſtry.

(i) De Gen. ad lit. l. 8. c. 18.

(k) Ibid. c. 26. & l. 11. c. 33, 34.

(l) De Trinit. l. 2. c. 10.

(m) Fuller. Miſc. l. 3. c. 5.

(n) Com. in Gen. 3. 8.

II. In the times of the Old Teſtament an Angel did often appear, act and ſpeak in the Name and Perſon of God, (o) per diſpenſationem perſonam Domini ſui gerebat, by diſpenſation he ſuſtain'd the Perſon of his Lord. The inviſible God exhibited an appearance of himſelf (and exhibited himſelf as eſpecially preſent therein) by an Angel, would have that Angel to ſuſtain his Perſon and to bear his Authority, and ſuch an Angel did act and ſpeak as God, and had the Name of God attributed to him. Such an Angel was that which appear'd to Moſes in the Buſh, Act. 7. 35. The ſame (Moſes) did God ſend to be a Ruler and a Deliverer by the Hands of the Angel, which appear'd to him in the Buſh, Exod. 3. 2. The Angel of the Lord appear'd to him in a flame of Fire. It was an Angel that appear'd to Moſes; yet all along that Chapter the holy Hiſtorian ſpeaketh of him as God, and he ſpeaketh and acteth as God, v. 4. When the Lord ſaw, that he turned aſide to ſee, God called unto him out of the midſt of the Buſh, v. 6. He ſaid, I am the God of thy Father, the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moſes hid his Face, for he was afraid to look upon God. v. 7. And the Lord ſaid, I have ſurely ſeen the Affliction of my People which are in Egypt. v. 11. And Moſes ſaid unto God, who am I, that I ſhould go unto Pharaoh? All this was ſpoken by and to an Angel, but ſuch an one, which was the Angel of God's Name and Preſence. Gen. 18. 2. we read of three Men that appear'd to Abraham; one of them in all his Diſcourſe with Abraham ſpeaketh as God, and is often called The Lord, v. 13, 14. And the Lord ſaid unto Abraham, at the time appointed will I return unto thee, according to the time of Life, and Sarah ſhall have a Son. v. 17. And the Lord ſaid, ſhall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do. v. 22. And the Men turned their Faces from thence, and went toward Sodom; but Abraham ſtood yet before the Lord. v. 26. The Lord ſaid, if I find in Sodom fifty righteous within the City, then will I ſpare all the place for their ſakes. v. 33. And the Lord went his way, as ſoon as he had left communing with Abraham. It was an Angel that thus ſpeaketh and is ſpoken of as God, as S. Auſtin (p) proveth from the Author to the Hebrews, who in praiſe of Hoſpitality alledgeth, hereby ſome have entertain'd Angels unawares. But becauſe one of theſe Angels ſpeaketh, and is ſpoken of as God, hence ſome infer, that he was Chriſt, who was viſible before his Incarnation. Againſt which Opinion S. Auſtin alledgeth, that the Angel with whom Lot diſcours'd, ſpeaketh and is ſpoken to as God, as well as the Angel with whom Abraham diſcours'd, Gen. 19. 18—21. Lot ſaid, oh not ſo my Lord; behold now thy Servant hath found Grace in thy ſight, and thou haſt magnify'd thy Mercy, which thou haſt ſhewed unto me in ſaving my Life: and I cannot eſcape to the Mountain, leſt ſome evil take me, and I die. Behold now this City is near to flee unto, and it is a little one; oh let me eſcape thither. And he ſaid unto him, ſee I have accepted thee concerning this thing alſo, that I will not overthrow this City, for the which thou haſt ſpoken. The Carriage and Behaviour of this Angel that diſcours'd with Lot, is of the ſame nature with that other's, which diſcours'd with Abraham, both of them carry it at the rate of God; which inferreth, that both of them (as alſo the third that accompany'd them) belong'd to one Shecinah and were both of them Angels of God's Name and Preſence. Such was the Angel that appear'd to Gideon, Judg. 16. 12. The Angel of the Lord appear'd unto him, and ſaid unto him, The Lord is with thee, thou mighty Man of Valour. But v. 14. the Hiſtory ſaith, The Lord looked upon him and ſaid, Go in thy Might. V. 16. And the Lord ſaid unto him, ſurely I will be with thee. So it was an Angel that Jacob wreſtled with, Gen. 32. 24. Hoſ. 12. 4. yet Jacob at the end of his wreſtling calleth the name of the place Peniel: for I have ſeen God face to face, Gen. 32. 30. There are many Inſtances of this nature: but I will only mention the Angel that deliver'd the Law upon Mount Sinai; for that it was a Maje-

ſtick

(o) S. Aug. de Trin. l. 2. c. 13.

(p) De C. D. l. 16. c. 29. de Trinit. l. 2. c. 12.

ſtick Angel attended with other Angels which deliver'd the Law upon Mount Sinai, many places of Scripture aſſure us: Act. 7. 53. Who have received the Law by the diſpoſition of Angels. Gal. 3. 19. It was ordained by Angels in the Hand of a Mediator. Heb. 2. 2. The word ſpoken by Angels. (q) Our Mind ought not to deviate from the Authority of Scripture, nor ought we to leave that firm Ground and to fall into groundleſs Suſpitions of our own, which is (as it were) a falling down dangerous Precipices; for the Epiſtle to the Hebrews is moſt expreſs (when it diſtinguiſheth the Diſpenſation of the New Teſtament from the Old) that not only the Appearances to the Fathers, but the Speech of God was made by Angels. Then God ſpake by Angels, now by his Son. The Apoſtle ſetteth the Goſpel far above the Law by this Argument; the Law was given but by Angels, the Goſpel was publiſh'd by the Lord, who is far above Angels, Heb. 2. 2, 3. yet the Angel which deliver'd the Law ſpeaketh as God, is ſpoken of, and ſpoken to, as God, and thus he ſpeaketh in the beginning of the Ten Commandments, I am the Lord thy God. All theſe things were tranſacted by Angels (Miniſtris Angelis, as S. Auſtin ſpeaketh;) for no Man hath ſeen God at any time. The inviſible God no Man hath ſeen nor can ſee; and God did not ſpeak unto us by his Son until theſe laſt times.

Joh. 1. 18. 1 Tim. 6. 16. Heb. 1. 2.

III. We will not therefore entertain that Opinion, which many of ancient and modern times have entertain'd, that the Appearances of God in the Old Teſtament-times were Chriſt the Son of God, and that he was the Legiſlator that gave the Law upon Mount Sinai; which is an Imagination of the ſame nature with this Conceit of Zanchy; (r) who is very confident, that the Son of God in humane form took by the Hand that moſt beauteous Woman which he had formed, and led her to Adam, as the Parent of both, and the Match-maker (or Bride-leader,) that he eſpous'd her to him by expreſs words, and having requir'd the conſent of both Parties gave her in Marriage. For this Marriage between Adam and Eve was ſolemniz'd, and was not like that of other Animals, The Male's meer taking the Female without any Ceremony; but it was celebrated moſt religiouſly by the Son of God appearing in viſible form, all the Angels being Witneſſes, and before the whole Church of God. A like Conceit Eugubinus hath, (s) Acceſſit Filius ac Verbum Dei ad creationem humanam, in forma, imagine, habituque humano. He ſuppoſeth, that the Son of God was the Creator of Adam, and that when he created him, himſelf was in humane form and ſhape, and with reſpect thereunto ſpake thoſe words, Let us make Man in our image after our likeneſs; which remarkable words are commonly thought to ſignifie the Chriſtian Trinity: but God uſeth no ſuch mode of ſpeaking in Chriſtianity, nor did this Terreſtrial Animal Creation iſſue from Paternal Sanctity or from the Divine Perſons of the Chriſtian Trinity, nor was this Summary of the Chriſtian Religion taught by Moſes, nor is it of Old Teſtament-Revelation; they that look for it there, ſeek it, where it cannot be found. Nor is it probable, that the words denote a Conſultation, or that they are meant of God and his Houſe of Judgment (a Senate or Council of Angels without whom God doth nothing) as ſome of the Jews ſay; agreeably to whoſe Senſe Grotius interpreteth the words, Reges res magnas agunt de concilio primorum, ſic & Deus, 1 Reg. 22. 20. Kings act great things by the Council of their principal Men, and ſo doth God. But this Judaical Conceit of God's conſulting with his Sanhedrim above hath no Foundation in Scripture, is contrary to the Holy Scripture: for who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or being his Counſellour hath taught him? with whom took he Counſel? But if God did make uſe of the Holy Angels, as his Counſellours, yet this would not ſatisfie the Text of Moſes; for if the words are meant of the Angels, they are not only made uſe of as Counſellours, but are call'd to be Social Creators, Faciamus, let us make Man. It is God's peculiarity, to be the Creator, and more eſpecially the Creator of Man, Iſa. 42. 5. and 44. 19. and 45. 18. and 54. 5. Gen. 5. 1. and although the Image of God is really the ſame with the Image of the Angels, yet there is no appearance, that Man was made after the Image of the Angels as ſuch, but after the Image of God only; rejecting therefore this Judaical Conceit, that God conſulted with the Angels when he made Man, we will conſider another account, which ſome of the Jews give of the uſe of the Plural Number in this Moſaic Text Let us make Man.

Iſa. 40. 13, 14.

IV. For ſome ſay, that God ſpeaketh after the manner of Kings and great Perſonages, who upon account of their Honour ſpeak of themſelves in the Plural Number (inſtead of the Singular) as Nos Leopoldus jubemus, Nos Rudolfus mandamus. Great Perſonages ſpeak of themſelves (t) κατὰ τιμὴν πληθυντικῶς, plurally upon the account of Honour and Dignity (as the Scholiaſt upon Sophocles ſaith;) and it muſt be acknowledg'd, that in the extraordinary uſe of it by extraordinary great Perſonages it is Honourary, carrieth in it ſomewhat of Amplitude and Auguſtneſs, an Air of Grandure and Magnificence. But againſt this account of the uſe of it in Moſes it is objected, that there is not an Example in Scripture of any King or Prince, that ſpeaketh of himſelf in the Plural Number (as Aben-Ezra obſerveth) and that this Cuſtom is later than the Days of Moſes; for Pharaoh ſpeaketh of himſelf in the Singular Number, Gen. 41. 41, 44. I am Pharaoh; ſee I have ſet thee over the Land of Egypt. So the King of Perſia writeth, Ezra 6. 8. I Darius make a Decree. Theſe are ſuch material Objections, that it ſeemeth neceſſary, to abandon this Judaical Account of the uſe of the Plural Number in Moſes (inſtead of the Singular,) and to diſtinguiſh the vulgar and common uſage of ſpeaking in the Plural Number inſtead of the Singular from the extraordinary uſage of it by Kings and Emperours and extraordinary great Perſonages. For all Mankind do ſometimes ſpeak of themſelves (ſingular Perſons) in the Plural Number, all Writers of Books and Preachers uſually do ſo, and (u) notwithſtanding what Aben-Ezra hath diſcours'd to the contrary, there are ſeveral Inſtances of this form of ſpeaking both in the Old and New Teſtament; Job 18. 2, 3. Cant. 1. 4. 2 Sam. 16. 20.

(q) Extat auctoritas divinarum Scripturarum, unde mens noſtra deviare non debet, nec relicto ſolidamento divini eloquii, per ſuſpicionum ſuarum abrupta præcipitari. — Apertiſſimè quippe ſcriptum eſt in Epiſtola ad Hebræos, cùm diſpenſatio Novi Teſtamenti à diſpenſatione veteris Teſtamenti diſtingueretur, non tantum illa viſibilia, ſed ipſum etiam ſermonem per angelos factum — Tunc per angelos nunc autem per Filium ſermo factus eſt. S. Aug de Trin. l. 3. c. 11.

(r) Ego non dubito, quin Filius Dei, humani corporis ſpecie indutus, formatam à ſe formoſiſſimam fæminam manu apprehenſam, adduxerit in conſpectum Adæ tanquam utriuſque parens & νυμφαγωγός eamque illi diſertis verbis deſponſarit, & in matrimonium, exacto ab utroque, tam viro, quàm fæmina, conſenſu dederit. Fuit enim celebratum hoc connubium inter Adamum & Evam, non certè ut inter cætera animalia maſculum capiebat ſibi femellam, ſine ulla cærimonia; ſed celebratum fuit religioſiſſimè, per Filium Dei, viſibili forma apparentem, teſtibus omnibus Angelis, eoque coram tota Eccleſia Dei. T. 3. de Hom. creat. p. m. 518.

(s) Ap. Petav. T. 3. de op. l. 2. c. 2.

(t) Voſſ. Etymol. in voce Deus. Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 7. S. 3.

(u) Ap. Hoornbeek c. Jud. l. 5 c. 2.

Dan. 2. 36. Job. 3. 11. 2 Cor. 10. 7. Heb. 13. 18. (w) Arabes, Plebei etiam & Idiotæ, pluralem de ſe uſurpare ſolent, the Arabians, even the Plebians, are wont to ſpeak of their ſingular Perſons in the Plural number. This being the common and general uſage of Mankind, it muſt not be thought ſtrange or myſterious, if Moſes ſometimes introduceth God ſpeaking of himſelf in the Plural number. Gen. 11. 7. Let us go down. Gen. 1. 26. Let us make Man, and in our Image, after our Likeneſs. Man is made after the Image of God, and this is Scriptural Theology: But to ſuppoſe, that Man is made in the Image of the Trinity, this is no Scriptural, nor ſound Theology; yet ſo Man muſt be made, if God's ſpeaking of himſelf in the Plural number denoteth a Plurality of Perſons in the Godhead. But it is much more reaſonable, to ſay, that the words of God at the Creation of Man ought in congruity, to run in the Plural number. For throughout the Hiſtory of the Hexaemeron God ſpeaketh in a commanding way, as the Apoſtle ſaith; God commanded the light, to ſhine out of darkneſs. 2 Cor. 4 6. So Longinus obſerveth (x) that Moſes introduceth God ſpeaking in a ſtile becoming his Dignity and Power, γενέσθω φῶς, ϗ ἐγένετο· γενέσθω γῆ, ϗ ἐγένετο, Let there be light, and there was light; let the earth be made, and it was made. This ſtile of commanding is continu'd throughout the Hiſtory of the Hexaemeron to the Creation of Man, it conſiſteth of Mandates and authoritative words of command; therefore the form of Speech which God uſeth at the Creation of Man ought to be Self-authoritative and Self-commanding. But if the words had run thus in the Singular number, let me make Man, they would have ſounded like a Petition, and would have been nothing like a Self-authoritative, Self-commanding, Self-determining form of Speech, as now they are. S. Baſil objecteth (y) that no Artificer ſpeaketh ſo; which is a ſlender Objection; for it is not a meer Artificer that here ſpeaketh, but an Imperial Majeſty.

V. From the Moſaic Hiſtory it doth not appear, that the Son of God or the Chriſtian Trinity was concern'd in the Phœnomena of the Terreſtrial Paradiſe, otherwiſe than as the Chriſtian Religion was adumbrated and typified in it. It is moſt reaſonable, to ſuppoſe (interpreting this Moſaic Hiſtory agreeably to the reſt of the Old Teſtament and the Tranſactions of ancient times,) that the Lord God ſo called in the Hiſtory of Man's Creation and of Paradiſe was the viſible appearance of God by the Angel of his Name and Preſence in an human Form. For without this Notion of the Lord God the Moſaic account of the Creation of Man is not clearly intelligible. Gen. 2. 7. The Lord God formed Man of the Duſt of the Ground, and breathed into his Noſtrils the breath of Life. (z) Expoſitors obſerve, that God is here deſcribed as a Potter, who maketh his Veſſels, not of dry Earth, but of Clay: So the Body of Adam was formed, not of dry Earth, but moiſtned Duſt, χοῦς, Limus, Duſt mix'd with Water. Deus corporis Adami quaſi manu ſua formavit ex limo. God as it were by his hand formed the Body of Adam of a moiſtned Maſs. And breathed into his Noſtrils the Breath of Life (ſaith Moſes;) which ſome Expoſitors underſtand literally, (a) and illuſtrate it by our Saviour's breathing upon the Apoſtles. And if the Lord God that form'd Adam's Body, having mix'd Duſt with Water to temper it, did then work it into a Statue-like human Body, and breathe into the Noſtrils (or Face) of that human Body the breath of natural Life, this muſt be the Idea of ſuch a Lord God, the viſible appearance of God by the Angel of his Name and Preſence in an human Form. And this is the Lord God, that took the Man and put him into the Garden of Eden; that commanded the Man touching the two Trees; that brought all the Beaſts and Fowls to Adam, to ſee what he would call them; that cauſed a deep ſleep to fall upon him, took from him one of his Ribs (cloſing up the Fleſh inſtead thereof) made it into a Woman and brought her unto the Man; that made Coats of Skins for them and cloathed them; that walk'd in the Garden in the cool of the day (which is the time when Men walk abroad to take the Air;) that pronounced the Doom upon the Serpent and our firſt Parents, and drove the Man out of Paradiſe with this Irony or Sarcaſm; Behold the Man is become as one of us, to know Good and Evil. Gen. 3. 24. For the explaining which Ironical Speech it is not needful, or reaſonable, to have recourſe to ſo ſublime and divine a thing as the Chriſtian Trinity. Nor is it needful, to ſuppoſe, that the words were ſpoken to the Angels, ſo ſymbolizing with the Jews, (b) who interpret כאחד as one of us by כגבריאל as the Angel Gabriel. For the words unqueſtionably relate to the Promiſe, which the Serpent made to our firſt Parents; and the ſenſe of the Irony is, ſee that which the Serpent promis'd, is come to paſs. He promis'd the Man, that he ſhould become as one of us (i. e. as one of the Gods, ſo called by the Serpent,) and now behold the Man is become as one of us (i. e. as one of the Gods, ſo called by the Serpent.) This interpretation Muſculus maketh of the place. (c) When he ſaith, the Man is become as one of us, he meaneth nothing elſe, but that he is become as a God.

Thus we have ſurvey'd the whole Moſaic Hiſtory of Paradiſe (without overlooking any Branch of it,) and have found much of it inconſiſtent with our uſual Theology, but nothing of it abſurdly extravagant, romantick, fictitious and inconſiſtent with true Hiſtory. Metrodorus Lampſacenus (d) in his Book concerning Homer hath diſcours'd very fooliſhly (ſaith Tatianus) referring all things unto Allegory. So ſome have dealt with this Moſaic Hiſtory of Paradiſe: But we have ſalv'd the difficulties of it without at all diſtorting the Hiſtory or allegorizing away the literal Senſe of it. And if good Senſe may be made of this hardeſt part of the Bible (for ſuch is the Moſaic Hiſtory) we may confidently pronounce, that the whole ſacred Volume of the Scriptures and all the Theories that are in it, are of a Senſe rational and recommendable; and if to us any part of them ſeemeth otherwiſe, it ought to be imputed to the vicioſity or imperfection of our own Minds.

CHAP.

(w) Hotting. Hexaemer. p. 246.

(x) Περὶ ὕψους. p. 35.

(y) Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 7. S. 4, 5.

(z) P. Fagius. P. Martyr. Grot. Pareus, Bp. Patrick.

(a) Qui volunt Filium Dei externa ſpecie aſſumpta plaſmaſſe Adamum, propriè interpretantur, quod anhelitu oris corpori animam infuderit, ſicut poſtea afflatu externo diſcipulis dedit Spiritum Sanctum.

(b) Coſri p. 45.

(c) Cùm dicit Ecce Adam factus eſt quaſi unus ex nobis nihil dicit aliud, quàm factus eſt quaſi Deus quidam. Muſcul. in loc.

(d) Ἐν τῷ περὶ Ὁμήρ λίαν εὐήθως διείλεκται, πάντα εἰς ἀλληγορίαν μετάγων. Tatian. Or. c. Græc. p. 160.

CHAP. XIV.

1 Our Seventh Notice of God's Original Creation, that it was disjunctively antecedent to the Moſaic Creation, proved by a Firſt Argument. 2. The Second Argument. 3. The Third Argument. 4. The Fourth Argument. 5. The Fifth Argument. 6. The Sixth Argument. 7. The Seventh Argument. 8. The Eighth Argument. 9. The Ninth Argument. 10. The Tenth Argument. 11. The Eleventh Argument. 12. The Twelfth Argument. 13. The Thirteenth Argument. 14. The Fourteenth Argument.

I. THE Moſaic Paradiſe is of like Nature, and connex'd with the Moſaic Creation. If there is little reaſon, to ſuppoſe, that the Moſaic Paradiſe was the Original Paradiſe of God, there is as little reaſon, to ſuppoſe, that the Moſaic Creation was the Original Creation of God. Whence a Judgment may be made of the reaſonableneſs of our Seventh Notice of God's Original Creation, that it was Ante-moſaical, or disjunctively antecedent to the formation of our Earth. Some parts of the Creation might precede the Moſaical Formation of our Earth, and yet be only conjunctively antecedent thereto, as being only a prior part of the ſame Creation-work. (e) So ſome of the Ancients, who ſuppos'd, that the Angels were created before the firſt day of the Moſaical Hexaemeron, yet ſuppoſed that Creation of Angels to be only conjunctively antecedent to the Hexaemeron, as being the prior part of that Creation-work; they did not ſuppoſe it another Creation-work, which did not belong to the Hexaemeron, but was diſtinct from it and antecedent to it by a conſiderable tract of time. But we may conceive of a Creation disjunctively antecedent thereto, as being a diſtinct and ſeparate Creation-work, antecedent to it (at leaſt) a conſiderable tract of time, not belonging to the Moſaical Hexaemeron, nor any part thereof. In this Senſe I ſuppoſe, that the Original Creation was Ante-moſaical; which implieth, that the Moſaical Coſmopœia was not God's Original Creation, nor the Creation of the vaſt Univerſe, but a ſecondary Creation, a Creation of our Terreſtrial Syſtem only; and that our Planetary Globe, although in reſpect of the matter of it, It was part of God's Original Creation, yet as form'd and inhabited it did not belong to the Original Conſtitution of the Univerſe. The truth of this Hypotheſis appeareth, Firſt from the Senſe of the Learned. (f) For many of the Greek and Latin Fathers are of Opinion, that an intelligible World of holy Angels was produc'd long before the viſible corporeal Univerſe. S. Chryſoſtom ſaith, that the Angels are πολλῷ ταύτης πρεσβύτεροι, much more ancient than this Creation. S. Hierom ſaith (g) what Eternities, what Times (in which the Angels ſerv'd God) muſt we ſuppoſe, to have been made before our World, which hath not yet fulfilled the Age of ſix thouſand Years? They that ſuppoſe the Creation of Angels much more ancient than the Creation of our viſible World, muſt neceſſarily ſuppoſe it much more ancient than the Formation of our Terreſtrial Syſtem. Accordingly S. Hilary ſpeaketh of it as a thing generally acknowledg'd, (h) cùm angelorum origo terræ creatione reperiatur antiquior. Caſſian ſaith (i) ante illud Geneſeos temporale principium omnes illas poteſtates cœleſtes Deum creaſſe, non dubium eſt. The Hebrew Doctors ſay, (k) the Throne of Glory was created before the Creation of the World; which Throne of Glory may ſignifie the holy Angels. Some of them plainly ſuppoſe, (l) that the Angels were created before the corporeal World; and many Cabaliſts are of Opinion, (m) that this World is not the firſt but the ſecond, and that there was at leaſt one before it. Some modern Divines are of Opinion (n) that the holy Angels were Exiſtent a long time before the Formation of our Earth. And theſe alſo agree with our Hypotheſis, that the Earth in reſpect of the matter of it was created a great while before the Formation and Adornation of it in the Moſaic Coſmopœia. (o) After Heaven was created and the Angels, and after their long continued Rebellion (as I ſuppoſe) and their Detruſion from Heaven into Tartarus by the juſt Vengeance of God that followed it, it pleaſed God to Form the Earth, which had laid deſolate and empty all the time, that the World or Republick of Angels ſtood, and which becauſe it was invelop'd with moſt profound darkneſs, was fit to be made the Tartarus or Abyſs of the rebellious Angels. (p) That a great ſpace of time interven'd from that Creation unto this, the following words intimate; the Earth was without form and void, and Darkneſs was upon the face of the Deep. Which words the divine Penman would not have added, if the Creation of it had been preſently followed by the Exornation of it, the Production of Plants and Animals and other things that are contain'd in it. Des Cartes alſo is of this Opinion, that the Earth præ-exiſted a long time before it was inhabited. It præ-exiſted in a Chaotick State; for there being no uſe of it till the time of the Moſaic Creation, the exteriour Exornation and Furniture of it was deferr'd until that time.

II. On behalf of their Opinion (that the holy Angels were Exiſtent long before the viſible corporeal Univerſe) the Fathers uſually alledge a Text of Scripture, which according to the Tranſlation of the LXX. repreſenteth the holy Angels as Exiſtent before the Stars were created; according to our Tranſlation it repreſenteth them as Exiſtent, before our Terreſtrial Syſtem was founded. Job 38. 4, 6, 7. Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundation of the earth? Or who laid the corner-ſtone thereof? When the morning Stars ſang together and all the Sons of God ſhouted for joy. But from hence the Fathers

---

(e) Petav. T. 3. de Ang. l. 1. c. 15. S. 8. Lactant. l. 2. c. 9.

(f) Petav. ſupr. Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 7.

(g) Sex mille nec dum noſtri orbis implentur anni, & quantas prius æternitates, quanta tempora, quantas ſeculorum origines feciſſe arbitrandum eſt, in quibus Angeli, Throni, Dominationes, cæteraque virtutes ſervierint Deo?

(h) De Trin. l. 12.

(i) Collat. l. 8. c. 7.

(k) Maimon. Mor. Nev. Par. 2. c. 26.

(l) Coſri p. 314.

(m) Hoornbeek. c. Jud. p. 301.

(n) Epiſcop. Inſtit. Th. l. 4. S. 3. c. 3. Curcell. Rel. Chriſt. Inſtit. l. 3. c. 4.

(o) Poſt creatum Cœlum & Angelos, eorumque diutinam uti ego quidem arbitror, rebellionem, quæque eam deinde juſtâ Numinis vindictâ conſecuta eſt, eorum è Cœlo in Tartarum detruſionem, viſum fuit Deo Terram, quæ toto iſto tempore, quo Angelorum, ut ita loquar, mundus ſive Reſpublica duravit, deſolata & vacua jacuerat (& quia tenebris profundiſſimis obſita erat, idoneæ fuerat, quæ rebellium Angelorum Tartarus ſive Abyſſus fieret) elaborare. Epiſcop.

(p) Ab illa autem creatione ad hanc magnum temporis ſpacium interceſſiſſe, innuunt verba ſequentia; terra autem erat inanis & vacua, & tenebræ erant ſuper faciem Abyſſi. Quæ non fuiſſent a divino illo vate addita, ſi terræ aut materiæ creationem è veſtigio excepiſſet illius exornatio, ſive plantarum, animalium, aliorumque quæ ea continentur, productio. Curcell.

thers ought not to have inferr'd a Creation of Angels disjunctively Ante-moſaical; for notwithſtanding whatever this Text ſaith, the Angels might be created only as the prior part of the Moſaic Creation, to behold the admirable Spectacle of the riſing World, (q) As a Chriſtian Philoſopher ſuppoſeth. But another Chriſtian Philoſopher of the elder times argueth (r) that the holy Angels are of Ante-mundane Exiſtence, becauſe neither Moſes, nor any inſpired Writer that relateth the Creation of the World, ſaith any thing of the Production of Angels together with the World; becauſe they always behold the God-head, which no Being doth, that belongeth to this viſible corporeal World; becauſe they are neither Bodies, nor link'd with organical Bodies, as our Soul is; and becauſe even the human Soul is not Concreate with its proper Body; for this is from the Earth, but the Soul hath a diſtinct Diviner Production from God. If theſe reaſons ſeem to have no great ſtrength of reaſon in them, yet there is one reaſon alledg'd by many of the Learned, which is of invincible firmitude, and plainly demonſtrateth, that the intelligible World of Angels was Exiſtent a conſiderable time (at leaſt) before the Formation of this World. For the Lapſe of Angels is at leaſt as ancient as the Moſaical Formation of this World; and it is not likely, that a vaſt number of the Angels fell into Sin and Miſery immediately upon their Creation (ſome conſiderable time interven'd between their riſe and their ruin,) or that their Sin and Rebellion was but a ſingle Act (done in a moment,) or that ſo great a Conſpiracy and Revolt was made in a very little time. Therefore the Creation of an intelligible World of Angels (and of Heaven their proper Habitation, Jude 6.) was God's Original Creation disjunctively antecedent to the Moſaical Creation.

III. The Moſaic Hiſtory of the Creation muſt be thought to be well done, Moſes muſt be ſuppos'd, to have given a good Hiſtorical account of all things belonging to his Creation, which is the Subject-matter of his Hiſtory (for the Buſineſs of an Hiſtorian is narrare res geſtas:) But Moſes hath not given a tolerably good account of the Creation of the vaſt corporeal Univerſe, nor of the vaſt Univerſe of Rationals, nor of any thing more than our Terreſtrial Creation. His Creation therefore is not that which produc'd the vaſt Univerſe or the Original Creation of God. If he had given a tolerably good account of the Creation of the whole corporeal Univerſe, he muſt have particularly enumerated the vaſt number of the heavenly Globes, the vaſt Regions about them, the diſtributions of them into leſſer Regions, their Furniture and Inhabitants, in like manner as he hath deſcrib'd the Formation of the Earth. His account of the Creation of every Star and Planet muſt have been no leſs full and perfect than his account of the Creation of the Earth (that his Hiſtory might be regular and proportionate) he muſt have deſcrib'd the place of the heavenly City, and it muſt have made a greater figure in his Hiſtory than a Terreſtrial Paradiſe. And becauſe the heavenly Globes are parts of one whole, unavoidably he muſt have conſider'd them as ſuch, and conſequently he muſt have conſider'd and deſcrib'd the immenſity, magnificence and pulchritude of the viſible Univerſe, the true Syſtem of the World, as alſo the magnitude and decent Order of the heavenly Bodies, ſeveral Moons and ſeveral Earths muſt have had a place in his Narrative, he muſt have travell'd through the Univerſe, and we muſt have ſaid of him

Atque omne immenſum peragravit mente animoque.

But ſeeing his Hiſtorical account of the Creation is of a quite different Contexture, ſeeing it is wholly taken up with this lower World, and taketh no notice of Heaven or of the heavenly Bodies any further than they are of concern to this World, this is a manifeſt indication, that Heaven and the heavenly Bodies do not any further belong to his Creation-work, which is the Subject of his Hiſtory. Chriſtian Theologers (ancient and modern) obſerve, that he is wholly ſilent touching the Creation of Angels, and they give this reaſon of it, (s) becauſe he propos'd to himſelf, to relate the Production of things corporeal only. And if we inquire into the reaſon of this reaſon, if we ask, why did Moſes propoſe to himſelf, to relate the Production of things corporeal only? We are told, (t) Moſes hath ſo temper'd his Narrative, as to ſtoop to the underſtanding of the People, and would not meddle with things more abſtruſe and remote from common uſe and ſenſe. But are Angels ſo abſtruſe, that they are beyond the underſtanding of the People? Are incorporeal Angels of more difficult apprehenſion than an incorporeal Deity? Were the People in the time of Moſes unacquainted with Apparitions, Oracles, Magic Arts, Tutelar Genii and Demonolatry? Did he find or make the holy Angels eaſie and familiar to the apprehenſion of the People, when he made his Tabernacle, and were they not at all to be acquainted with them, when he made his Hiſtory? This Reaſon is no better than no Reaſon, meer irrational Will and Pleaſure, non placuit, (u) which ſome aſſign as the only Reaſon, why Moſes would not give us an Angelography. The only true Reaſon therefore why Moſes is totally ſilent touching the Creation of Angels, is, (as the Fathers have rightly judg'd,) becauſe they did not at all belong to his Creation. And becauſe he writeth no Hiſtory of the Creation or Fall of Angels, therefore (as Expoſitors ſay) he maketh no mention of fallen Angels in his Hiſtory of the Temptation of our firſt Parents, but of a Brute-ſerpent only.

IV. The Original Creation (which iſſu'd from Paternal Sanctity) is of a different kind from the Moſaic Creation, the Products whereof (abſtracting from their Typical and Symbolical Nature) are nothing higher than the Products of Parental Providence, as will appear from ſome excellent Diſcourſes of Socrates in Xenophon, which may paſs for a Commentary upon the Text of the Moſaic Creation. (w) Socrates asketh Ariſtodemus, who admir'd Poets and Painters for their Wiſdom, (x) whether they that make Images devoid of Mind and Motion, or they that make Animals which have both, ſeem to you more worthy to be admir'd? " He asketh him alſo touching thoſe
" things

(q) Mr. Boyle of Final Cauſes. p. 133.

(r) Jo. Philoponus ap. Photium Cod. 240.

(s) Petav. T. 3. de Angel. l. 1. c. 15. S. 1. de opif. l. 2. c. 3. S. 8.

(t) Moſes narrationem ſuam ita temperavit, ut ſe ad popularem intelligentiam demitteret, neque abſtruſiora & ab uſu ſenſuque communi ſecreta vellet attingere. Petav. ibid. de Angel. l. 1. c. 35. S. 1.

(u) Hottinger Hexaem. c. primi diei. Qu. 18.

(w) A-

(x) Πότερά σοι δοκοῦσιν οἱ ἀπεργαζόμενοι εἴδωλα ἄφ κ ἀκίνητα ἀξιοθαυμαστό εἶναι, ἢ οἱ ζῶα ἔμφρονά τε ἐργά.

“ things, that we cannot tell what they are, and thoſe things that are manifeſtly for Utility, which of theſe do you Judge, to be the Works of Chance and which the Works of Mind? πρέπει μὲν τὰ ἐπ᾽ ὠφελείᾳ γιγνόμενα γνώμης εἶναι ἔργα, thoſe things that are for Utility muſt in reaſon be thought the Works of Mind. And doth it not ſeem to you, that he who made Men at firſt, gave them all their Sences for Utility, Eyes to ſee things viſible, Ears to hear things audible; Smells or Odours had been of no Profit, if Noſtrils had not been added; nor could we have had any Senſation of Sweet and Sharp things, if a Tongue had not been fabricated, which hath the diſcernment of them. And ſeeing the Eye-ſight is weak and tender, doth it not ſeem to you a Work of Providence to fence it with Eye-lids (which we open, when there is need of uſing our Eyes and ſhut when we ſleep) with the Hairs that grow thereon and with the Eye-brows above the Eyes, that Sweat deſcending from the Head may not annoy them? The Hearing receiveth all Voices and yet is not filled. The Fore-teeth are Cutters, the Canini tear the Aliments, and the Broad-teeth are Grinders. The Mouth is plac’d near the Eyes and Noſtrils, and thereby all Animals let in what they deſire: But as to thoſe things that are troubleſome they ſhut the Channels and drive them away from the Sences. Theſe things being done ſo providentially, do you doubt, whether they be the Works of Chance or of Mind? No truly (ſaid Ariſtodemus,) it is altogether reaſonable, to ſuppoſe theſe things, to be the Workmanſhip of ſuch an Artificer that is wiſe and a lover of Animals. The innate deſire of procreating Children (ſaith Socrates) of Nurſing and Educating them, the great deſire in them to Live and a mighty fear of Death, are the contrivances of one ζῶα εἶναι βουλευσαμένου, that hath conſulted and taken care for the being of Animals. The Gods have made Men of upright Stature (whereby they can ſee things above, ſee before them and avoid what is injurious,) they have Hands (and thereby the moſt of thoſe things are done, whereby they are happy) and a Tongue of articulate ſounds, to ſignifie their Mind one to another. No other Animal diſcerneth, that there are Gods (that conſtitute the greateſt and moſt excellent things) or worſhippeth the Gods. Men have a Soul that can before-hand take care of Famine, and Cold and Thirſt, of Heat and Diſeaſes, and can Learn, and remember the things that are learned. (y) Men live as Gods above the other Animals tranſcending them in Nature, Soul and Body. Another Diſcourſe this Philoſopher hath with Euthydemus touching Parental Providence. He asketh Euthydemus (z) if he ever thought with himſelf ὡς ἐπιμελῶς οἱ θεοὶ ὧν οἱ ἄνθρωποι δέονται κατασκευάκασι, How careful the Gods have been, to furniſh thoſe things that Men have need of? “ He inſtanceth in Light, which we need in the firſt place, and without which we ſhould be like blind Men. We need reſt, and for this the Gods afford us the Night κάλλιστον ἀναπαυτήριον, a moſt fine Repoſe. And becauſe the Night is dark, they have given us the Stars (the Moon alſo) for the Night-time, and by this conveniency we do many things that we need. By the Moon alſo we have the Parts of the Month. Becauſe we need Food, they give us this out of the Earth, not only for neceſſity, but for delight, and agreeable ſeaſons ϗ ταῦτα φιλάνθρωπα, and theſe things are Love to Mankind and are worthy of Thanks. They afford us Water alſo, whereby Plants and Fruits grow, and all things that are profitable for us; we mix it with our Nutriment, whereby it becometh more profitable and more pleaſant. And becauſe we need Water in abundance, therefore they have given it ἀφθονέστατον, in greateſt Plenty, and this is the Work of Providence. They have given us Fire alſo, which is an help to us againſt Cold, and againſt Darkneſs, which is needful for all Mechanic Arts and all things that Men make for their uſe; for nothing that is profitable for the Life of Man is made without Fire. Ὑπερβάλλει ϗ τοῦτο φιλανθρωπία, and this is ſuperlative kindneſs to Mankind. The Sun alſo hath his turning, at ſome time of the Year he cometh nearer us, at another time he recedeth from us, that our heat and cold may not be too great, and as is moſt for our conveniency. And that we might not be hurt by an over ſudden change, therefore neither heat nor cold cometh upon us all at once, but leiſurely and by degrees. Men have Milk and Cheeſe and Fleſh from Animals, and making them tame they make uſe of them for their help in War and otherwiſe. We have Sences given us, whereby we enjoy all Goods. They have alſo ingendred Reaſon in us, whereby we ratiocinate about the things we diſcern by Sence, underſtand what they are good for, and contrive many things, furniſhing our ſelves with Goods and averting Evils. They have alſo given us the Power of Speech, whereby we impart our Goods, communicating and teaching one another, ϗ νόμους τιθέμεθα ϗ πολιτεύομεν, and we make Laws and live in Society. This vaſt variety of Goods Mankind have from Parental Providence, mundane Nature, Mater Natura, optima Parens Natura (as the Philoſophers ſpeak,) and theſe are ſuch Goods, as tranſcend not the Line and Level of Parental Providence. And ſuch are the Goods of the Moſaic Creation; which therefore ought to be intituled the Terreſtrial-animal and Human-kind of Creation, as being the Creation of the Terreſtrial-animal and Human kind of Goods only, not of the Goods of the Kingdom of God, as the Original Creation was, which therefore muſt be intituled the Divine and Saint of God-kind of Creation.

(y) Παρὰ τὰ ἄλλα ζῶα ὥσπερ θεοὶ ἄνθρωποι βιοτεύουσι φύσει ϗ τῷ σώματι ϗ τῇ ψυχῇ κρατιστεύοντες.

(z) Ἀπομν. δ.

V. That the Moſaic Creation was not the Original Creation of God, appeareth from the end and deſign of it; which was not to make and furniſh an habitable World for the holy Univerſe of inviſible Beings, but meerly for Terreſtrial Animals, of which Man is the Chief. So the ancient Writers of the Church having ſurvey’d all things that the World conſiſteth of, and all its Productions, Obſerve and Diſcourſe (a) that the World with all its Furniture was made for the Conveniency of Animals and of Man. The Earth (ſay they) is their Habitation, and Heaven is the Roof or Covering thereof. The World was created before Man, (b) ἔδει γὰρ ὥσπερ βασιλεῖ προϋποστῆναι τὰ βασίλεια, for the Palace ought to be built before him

and

(a) Lactant. l. 7. c. 4. de Ira. c. 13. Theodoret. Θεραπ. Ser. 6. S. Chryſoſt. in Gen. λογ. ς. & η.

(b) Gr. Naz. or. 43.

and for him as a King. (c) Hominem ſexto die conſtituit, ut in Domum jam factam habitatorem introduceret. The World is as an Alms-houſe, which God hath founded and richly furniſh'd for the Animal-Family, and eſpecially for the conveniency of Man; but this true Principle is a fond Conceit, if by the World we mean the immenſe Univerſe viſible and inviſible; for it cannot be imagin'd, that the Heaven of Glory and Felicity with the innumerable Citizens thereof was made for the conveniency of Terreſtrial Animals. (d) And it ſeems not very likely, that a moſt wiſe Agent ſhould have made ſuch vaſt Bodies, as the Sun and the fix'd Stars, only or chiefly to illuminate a little Globe, that without Hyperbole is but a Phyſical Point in compariſon of the immenſe Spaces compriz'd under the Name of Heaven, whoſe Lights might as well illuminate the Earth, if they were a thouſand times leſſer than they are, provided they were plac'd at a proportionably leſs diſtance from it. And 'twill be very hard to aſſign, what conſiderable uſe the Terreſtrial Globe or its Inhabitants derive from that multitude of Celeſtial Globes that make the milky way; ſince each of thoſe Stars is ſo far from being ſingly able, to inlighten the Earth, that Ariſtotle and the generality of Philoſophers for many Ages took the whole Aggregate of them for a Meteor. And what Light or other known advantage can the Earth or its Inhabitants derive from thoſe many fix'd Stars, that the Teleſcope only can diſcover among the ſix or ſeven conſpicuous ones of the Pleiades, or among thoſe that the naked Eye can ſee in the Belt or Girdle of Orion? which Conſtellations I ſcarce ever look upon through a good Teleſcope without wonder. The needs of Men are not proportionate to the vaſtneſs of the Celeſtial Globes and the Supernal Regions. (e) Conſidera entia iſta corporalia, quanta ſit illorum menſura, quantus item numerus? ſi Terra tota nullam habeat menſuram ad orbem ſtellarum, quamnam quæſo ad creaturas iſtas omnes Homo proportionem habebit? It is too much, to ſay of the Celeſtial Globes, that they were made only or chiefly for Man (although many of them were made with reſpect to the conveniency of Man;) but it is not too much, to ſay of our Terraqueous Globe, that it was made chiefly for the utility and conveniency of Man. And ſeeing the Moſaic Creation was ſuch a Creation, that was only or chiefly for the utility and conveniency of Man and other Animals; therefore this Creation muſt be limited to our Terreſtrial Syſtem with its Appurtenances.

The End and Deſign of the Moſaic Creation may be conſider'd under this Notion The conveniency of our Terreſtrial Syſtem: for all the Parts and Ingredients of the Moſaic Coſinopæia (ſo far as they are ſuch) are meerly and only for the conveniency of our Terreſtrial Syſtem (with reſpect whereto the Creator pronounc'd them Good;) therefore our Terreſtrial Syſtem is the Boundary of it. In the Hiſtory of the Hexaemeron the firſt, ſecond and third Days work hath manifeſtly reſpect to nothing but meerly the Conveniency of our Earth, to make it a well-adorn'd and commodious Habitation (this is written as in Capital Letters;) and the fifth and ſixth Days work is nothing elſe but a production of our Animals, the Inhabitants of our Terreſtrial Region, that are to enjoy the good things thereof. The fourth Day's work may ſeem to have been nothing leſs than a Production of all the vaſt ſuperiour Globes (and conſequently the Firmament of the ſecond Day muſt be all the immenſe ſupernal Regions:) but it is apparent from the Moſaic account of it, that it reſpecteth and deſigneth nothing more than the conveniency of our Earth and its Inhabitants, Gen. 1. 14---19. which Moſaic account of it directeth to a true Interpretation of the Moſaic Text by applying to it ſome diſtinctions touching the making the Celeſtial Luminaries. For,

(1.) Moſes teacheth the real making the Celeſtial Luminaries, as it is matter of Faith, but not as it is matter of Philoſophy. The great Celeſtial Luminaries are (doubtleſs) the conſtitutive central parts of certain vaſt ſupernal Orbs or Regions, and were certainly created ſuch in the original Conſtitution of the Univerſe, and Philoſophy conſidereth them as ſuch: but thus conſider'd they are no parts of the Moſaic Creation, nor do they belong to the Hiſtory of it, as is plain from this Perioche thereof, in which there is no mention or notice, not a Syllable of an account of them as ſuch. Moſes taketh not the leaſt notice of them, as they are the great conſtitutive parts of diſtinct Celeſtial Orbs or Regions (which is a plain demonſtration, that he never deſign'd an Hiſtorical Account of the great Univerſe as ſuch, or the Conſtitution thereof:) but he expreſly teacheth the real making of them by God, which is matter of Faith, Gen. 1. 16. God made two great Lights: He made the Stars alſo.

(2.) Moſes teacheth not only the real making the Celeſtial Luminaries (ſo far as it is matter of Faith,) but the relative making of them on the fourth Day, which is the making them, as they are the Luminaries of our Firmament, or ſo as to be the Luminaries of our Firmament. He doth not at all conſider the great Celeſtial Luminaries as the central parts of certain ſupernal Orbs or Regions, he only conſidereth them as the Luminaries of our Firmament, as the Hoſt of our Heaven (as the Conveniencies of our Earth) and it muſt be acknowledg'd, that in ſome ſort they are ſuch, in ſome ſort they are ſet in the Firmament of our Heaven. And this relative making the great Luminaries (the work of the fourth Day) is not privative of the real making them, but is accumulative thereto; and is in Moſes's Text complicated with the real making them, ſo far as it is matter of Faith. So that Moſes in this Perioche teacheth two things: Firſt, the real making the great Luminaries, as it is matter of Faith. Secondly, The relative making them as the Lights of our Firmament on the fourth Day. And God ſaid, let there be Lights in the Firmament of the Heaven, to divide the Day from the Night: and let them be for Signs, and for Seaſons, and for Days and Tears. And let them be for Lights in the Firmament of Heaven, to give Light upon the Earth; and it was ſo. And God made two great Lights; the greater Light to rule the Day, and the leſſer Light to rule the Night: he made the Stars alſo. And God ſet them in the Firmament of the Heaven, to give Light upon the Earth. And to rule over the Day and over the Night, and to divide the Light from the Darkneſs: and God ſaw that it was good. And the Evening and the Morning were the fourth Day, Gen. 1. 14---19.

(3.) The rigorous truth of the things of Nature and Philoſophy muſt be diſtinguiſh'd from the regular repreſentation of them (in the Diſcourſes of Holy Writers and Preachers; for the regular repreſentation of them is that which is according to vulgar apprehenſion, which is often diſſonant from the rigorous truth of them: for according to regular repreſentation the Heavens are an arched Roof (Tent or Tabernacle,) and the Earth is the Floor of the Mundane Edifice, of a Plane Figure, Pſal. 104. 2. Iſa. 40. 22. there are the Ends of the Earth and of Heaven, and the Earth is bounded by the Heavens touching it, Deut. 30. 4. the Sun was riſen upon the Earth, Gen. 19. 23. His going forth is from the End of the Heaven, and (without any motion under the Earth) his Circuit unto the Ends of it, Pſal. 19. 6. The Scripture ſpeaketh accommodately to vulgar Apprehenſion (rudiſſimis quibuſque ſe accommodans intra oculorum experientiam ſe continet, ſaith Calvin,) and accordingly ſome have laid down this Rule for the Interpretation of the Moſaic Hiſtory of the Creation. (f) In ſpeaking of natural and corporeal things Moſes hath attemper'd his Stile to the Capacity and Ingeny of a rude and dull People: which is a caution the more to be remark'd, becauſe ſome apply their Philoſophical and Theological accuracies to the Interpretation of the Hexaemeron. But it was always my Opinion, that almoſt all things which Moſes here treateth of, are no higher than popular Speech and Underſtanding. Moſes ought to repreſent the matters of the fourth Day's work agreeably to the Underſtanding of the People (for this is their regular Repreſentation;) and if he hath ſo repreſented them (which none can reaſonably doubt of) he hath not treated of the Creation of the vaſt Univerſe as ſuch. Nor can we ſuppoſe him, to have ſo treated of it, without making his Creation intolerably incongruous and diſproportionate: for in his account of the fourth Day's work he muſt be ſuppos'd, to ſpeak of making the fix'd Stars as well as the Planets, as appeareth from the end and uſe of the Stars then made, and becauſe the Vulgar do not diſtinguiſh them, and becauſe the purport of his Writing is, to repreſent God as the Creator of the one ſort of Stars as well as of the other. But what proportion hath the Partition of our Sea and dry Land and the Production of our Vegetables (which is the third Day's work) to the real Creation and Production of all the Planets and fix'd Stars? And how vaſtly doth one fix'd Star tranſcend in bigneſs our whole Terraqueous Globe? How mean and dark a Manſion is our habitable Earth? And ſhall we ſuppoſe it the only auguſt Body in the Univerſe, the Creation whereof muſt imploy ſeveral Days, whereas all the Starry and Planetary Globes were created in one Day?

(c) Script. Anon. de Qu. vet. & Novi Teſt. inter op. S. Aug. T. 4. Method. ap. Epiphan. Hær. 64. n. 18.

(d) Mr. Boyle of Final Cauſes, *p.*109, 110.

(e) *Maimon. Mor. Nev. par.*3. c. 14.

VI. That the Moſaical Creation was not the original Creation, appeareth from the ſmall extent of the Mundus Moſaicus, which conſiſteth only of the Earth and the ſublunary Heavens, which S. Auſtin ſpeaking of the Heavens reſerv'd for Fire (g) calleth, Cœlos Aerios, the Aerial Heavens. If the Heavens reſerv'd for Fire are only the Aerial Heavens, the Elements that ſhall melt with fervent heat can be nothing higher than the Regions of the Air (vulgarly at this Day called the Elements) and the Meteors therein contain'd; thoſe Elements cannot be the Celeſtial Luminaries, as a Learned Interpreter ſuppoſeth; (h) who yet ſuppoſeth (diſcourſing inconſiſtently with himſelf,) that the World which is to be deſtroy'd by Fire, is no other than that which periſh'd by Water, the Sublunary World, the Heaven whereof is that which we call the Air. The Aerial Heaven is in the Old Teſtament celebrated for its highneſs (as if it was the higheſt thing in nature,) which ſheweth, that the Mundus Moſaicus is of no greater extent than our Terreſtrial Syſtem, Pſal. 57. 10. Thy Mercy is great unto the Heavens, and thy Truth unto the Clouds. Pſal. 36. 5. Thy Mercy, O Lord, is in the Heavens, and thy Faithfulneſs reacheth unto the Clouds. The Clouds are counted ſo high, that they are repreſented as the Seat or Dwelling-place of his Highneſs, who is the moſt High: who layeth the Beams of his Chambers in the Waters, maketh the Clouds his Chariot, rideth upon the Heaven in his Excellency on the Sky. His Excellency is over Iſrael, and his Strength is in the Clouds (or the Heavens,) thence he doth ſend out his Voice (which is Thunder) and that a mighty Voice, Pſal. 68. 33, 34. This mighty Voice (according to the Pſalmiſt) he ſendeth out riding upon the Heaven of Heavens, which therefore ſignifieth the Superiour Region of the Aerial Heavens; ſo that the Pſalmiſt's Heaven and Heaven of Heavens is no higher than the Sublunary Heaven, which is the Heaven of our Terreſtrial Syſtem. In which Cloudy Aerial Heaven the Pſalmiſt alſo repreſenteth the Sun as plac'd, when he ſtileth him, Pſal. 89. 37. The faithful Witneſs בשחק in Heaven or in the Sky; (i) for the Hebrew word Shechakim, which the Interpreters hath rendred Heavens, properly ſignifieth the Clouds. Aben Ezra thinketh it the ſuperiour Air, which is interpos'd between the craſs cloudy Air and the Celeſtial Orbs; for it hath its Name, becauſe it is tenuious and ſubtil Air, whence the Verb Shachak ſignifieth to beat ſmall. The Hebrew word שחק certainly ſignifieth the Clouds or the Region of the Air: if therefore the Sun, Moon and Stars (for of all theſe Expoſitors underſtand the Pſalmiſts words a faithful Witneſs in Heaven) are plac'd בשחק, they are neceſſarily plac'd in the Region of the Air, and conſequently the extent of the Moſaic World and Creation is no higher than our Terreſtrial Syſtem, which is the Boundary thereof.

VII. That the Moſaic Creation was not the Original Creation, appeareth from the ſmall extent of the Moſaic Firmament or Expanſum; for the Moſaic Text knoweth no other Firmament, but that which divideth the upper from the lower Waters, which can be nothing elſe but our Cœlum Nubiferum, that may juſtly be reckoned a Production of our Earth or Chaos. Agreeably whereto a Pagan Theologer ſaith, (k) The Earth by Exhalations generated Heaven, the tenuious ſubſtance which is about it being commonly called Heaven. Such an Heaven which is generated by our Earth or produc'd out of our Water (the Chaos) the Pagan Theologers celebrate in their Coſmogony; and this their Coſmogony is ſo conſonant to the Moſaical, (l) that the former is generally thought a traduction from the latter: for this is the Account, which the generality of the Interpreters of Moſes give of the Moſaic Creation, (m) that God created at firſt a rude indigeſted heap of Matter (which the Pagan Theologers call Chaos) a deep miry Abyſs, out of which pre-exiſtent Matter Heaven,

Pſal. 104. 3.

Deut. 33. 26.

Nahum 1. 3.

(f) In naturalibus & corporeis exponendis rebus Moyſem rudis, hebetiſque populi ad captum & ingenium attemperaſſe ſtilum. Quæ cautio eo magis uſurpanda eſt, quòd nonnulli in hoc interpretando dierum ſex opificio, limatas & exquiſitas rationes adhibent, media ex Philoſophia Theologiâque depromptas. ſed hæc mea perpetuò ſententia fuit, omnia ferè, quæ hic Moſes attigit, Popularem ad uſum eſſe loquendi, intelligendique dimiſſa. Petav. T. 3. de op. in proœm.

(g) De C. D. l. 20. c. 18.

(h) Mr. Mede on 2 Pet. 3.

(i) Hebraica vox שחקים quam cœlos reddidit Interpres, propriè Nubes ſignificat. Aben Hezra ſuperiorem eſſe putat aerem, qui interjectus eſt inter cœleſtes orbes, & medium illum aerem craſſum & nubibus obſitum. Inde enim appellari ſic, quòd ſit aer tenuis & ſubtilis, unde & verbum שחק comminuere ſignificat. Petav. T. 3. de op. l. 1. c. 10. S. 9.

(k) Ἐγέννησε δ' ἡ γῆ ἐκ τῶν ἀναθυμιάσεων τὸν οὐρανόν· οὐρανοῦ νῦν λεγομένου κοινότερον παντὸς τοῦ περὶ αὐτὴν λεπτομεροῦς. Phornut. de nat. Deor. p. 42. Eugub. de Per. Phil. l. 7. c. 11.

(l) Grot. de V. R. C. l. 1. S. 16.

(m) Petav. ſupr. l. 1. c. 2, &c. Zanch. de oper. Dei, l. 1. c. 2. Eugubin. ſupr. c. 8. Grot. ſupr. B. Patrick, &c.

ven, the Sun and Stars, our Earth, and Sea, and Plants, and Animals, and all the Material World was made: that there was no new Creation of Matter in the Moſaic Hexaemeron, but the work of the ſix Days was only a forming and faſhioning out of the pre-exiſtent Matter a commodious and beautiful World. From which account of the Moſaical Coſmopæia and its ſymphony with the Paganical a Judgment may be made of the Extent and Boundary of the Moſaical Heaven. For the Heaven which Heſiod deſcribeth as produc'd by our Earth or Chaos, can be of no greater extent than the Heaven of our Terreſtrial Syſtem.

> Γαῖα δέ τοι πρῶτα μὲν ἐγείνατο ἶσον ἑαυτῇ
> Οὐρανὸν ἀστερόεντα, ἵνα μιν περὶ πάντα καλύπτῃ.
>
> The Earth at firſt produc'd an Equal to it ſelf
> The Starry Heaven, to involve or cover it every way.

The Pagan Theologers have not told us the Dimenſions of their Chaos: but the Water which made their Chaos could be nothing more than the Water of our Earth; (n) for ἀπὸ τοῦ ὕδατος ἰλὺς καθέστη, by the Water mix'd with Earth Mud was made, which was the Chaos. And as Thales ſuppos'd, that Water was the principle of all things: So Orpheus and Homer affirm, that the Coſmogony was from our Ocean; therefore it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that in the Pagan Theologers Chaos there was no more Water than that which belongeth to our Terraqueous Globe. So the Moſaical Chaos was certainly nothing more than our Terraqueous Globe in its rude, confuſed and muddy ſtate; for Moſes calleth it The Earth, and thus deſcribeth it. The Earth was tohu vabohu, Confuſion and Emptineſs (a Chaos) an Abyſs invelop'd with Darkneſs, Gen. 1. 2. Out of this dark, and miry, and muddy Abyſs ſhall we ſuppoſe, that all the Celeſtial Orbs and their Luminaries were produc'd and extracted? (o) Quis enim credat ignem factum ex aqua? Cœlum factum ex materia limoſa? Shall we believe, that the Celeſtial Globes of Fire were made of Water? That the pure, lucid, glorious Orbs and the bright and luminous Stars were produc'd out of Mud and Dirt? That the immenſe ſupernal Regions with all their vaſt innumerable central Luminaries were made out of a little heap of Dirt (comparatively) no bigger than a Phyſical Point? Immenſum aliquid ex nihilo? wherefore the only Heaven that could be produc'd out of the Moiſac Chaos, was the Heaven of our Terreſtrial Syſtem; and if nothing more was produc'd by the Moſaic Coſmopæia, but what was produc'd out of the Chaos, then our Terreſtrial Syſtem was the Extent and Boundary of it.

VIII. Between the Academy of Samai and Hillel (grounding themſelves upon the different order of the words of Moſes) there was a Controverſie (p) touching the priority of the Creation of Heaven and Earth. The Academy of Hillel held, that the Earth was created firſt, then the Heaven; but the Academy of Samai held, that the Heavens were created firſt. And of this Opinion were thoſe wiſe Men that liv'd in the time of Alexander the Great, to whoſe Queſtion, whether the Heaven or Earth was firſt in being, they made anſwer The Heavens. They had great reaſon to be of this Opinion; for it is againſt the natural order and origination of things, that the Earth ſhould be produc'd before the Heavenly Univerſe, or that the Heavenly Univerſe ſhould be the Production of the Chaos (which is the Earth in the large acceptation;) as in the Orphick Coſmogony (q) οὐρανὸς, Heaven, is firſt produc'd out of the Chaos, and the Gods alſo ariſe out of the Water. But ſuch an Order and Origination of things is unnatural and incongruous: (r) ἐπειδὴ ἐν τοῖς γινομένοις, οὐκ ἔστι πρὸς τὸ ἄνω, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὸ κάτω χωρεῖν· for in things generated the Proceſs is not upwards, but downwards. Vinegar is generated out of Wine; but for Wine to be generated out of Vinegar, is as unnatural, as for Nicepſus's Sheep to yean a Lion. To ſuppoſe the things Heavenly, to be generated out of things Earthly, is of kin to the Atheiſts Hypotheſis, who ſuppoſe Life, Sence and Mind, to have their origin from dead ſenſeleſs Matter. Of all this World's Pomps and Pretioſities it is reaſonable, to ſay, (s) Quid aliud ſunt niſi terra, ex qua nata ſunt, What are they but Earth, whence they are originated? but it is not reaſonable, to ſay the ſame of the things Heavenly. It ſuiteth not with the Honour and Dignity of the things Heavenly, to derive their Deſcent and Pedigree from the Dirt, or to make this ſordid Earth Seniour to the Heavenly Univerſe. If Men are to build a ſumptuous Houſe, they do not begin at the Kitchin and the Out-houſes. (t) The better things are, the more deſirable. The Fathers are of this Opinion, (u) oportuit ut terrenas cœleſtis creatura præcederet; In the Creation the Heavenly Creature ought to precede the Earthly. Although therefore we infer nothing from the order of the words of Moſes (as the School of Samai and Hillel did,) yet from the natural order and origination of things we may ſafely infer, that the Heavenly Univerſe was created before the Earth even in its large acceptation, and conſequently the Moſaic Coſmopæia (which was out of that Earth) was not the Original Creation.

Of this we have a great Indication in the Moſaic Text, which taketh no notice, giveth no account of the origin and production of the Chaos, of the creation of the Matter, of which corporeal things conſiſt: but it ſeemeth rather to repreſent it as increate and co-eternal with God, (w) as the Ancient and Modern Materiarii (who hold the Matter unmade and eternal) have obſerv'd. They obſerve alſo, that the Apoſtle to the Hebrews hath reſpect to the Text of Moſes, when he ſaith, The things which are ſeen, are made of things which do not appear (not out of nothing, but out of things non-apparent;) for by things non-apparent he meaneth the rude Earth and Water immers'd in profound Darkneſs, which upon that account in the Greek Verſion is ſtiled ἀόρατος, inviſible. And touching the Proem of the firſt of Geneſis (In the beginning God created the Heaven and the Earth) they rightly argue; that thoſe words ſignifie the Creation of the World, that they do not ſignifie a Creation before the Hexaemeron (the Creation of Heaven and Earth being the work of the ſecond and third Day,) that they are as it were (x) the Contents of the Chapter, and propoſe in ſhort the whole buſineſs of the Creation, which is afterwards diſtinctly explain'd by parts; and that Moſes in the concluſion of the Hexaemeron expoundeth his Proem; Thus the Heavens and the Earth were finiſh'd, Gen. 2. 1. Moſes therefore no where affirmeth, that the Earth in its chaotick ſtate was created; there is in him no mention, no account of the Creation of the Chaos (the Matter of which corporeal things conſiſt;) which ſheweth, that the Creation of the Chaos did not belong to the Moſaical Creation; and that they who will not be Materiarii, muſt ſuppoſe it a part of an antecedent Creation; and conſequently the Moſaic Coſmopæia muſt not be thought the Original Creation. If the Creation (n) Eugub. ſupr. c. 10. Grot. ſupr.

(o) Pareus in Gen. 1. 2.

(p) Meraſſ. ben Iſr. Qu. 1. in Gen.

(q) Eugub. ſupr. l. 7. c. 10.

(r) Plotin. En. 5. l. 3. c. 15.

(s) Lactan. l. 2. c. 2.

(t) Eugub. ſupr. l. 7. c. 2.

(u) Petav. T. 3. de Ang. l. 1. c. 15. S. 10.

(w) Volkel. l. 2. c. 5. vid. Tertull. adv. Hermog. c. 23, 24.

(x) SoVa tabl. Pareus and Petav. T. 3. de op. l. 1. c. 2, 3.

tion of the Chaos was part of the Moſaic Coſmopœia, there was great reaſon, that Moſes ſhould have given a clear and full and expreſs account of it, that he might eradicate out of the Minds of Men the perverſe and Irreligious Opinion of the Materiarii, which was not the Opinion of a few and thoſe mean and inconſiderable Perſons: but it was unanimouſly and without exception the Opinion of all the Philoſophers (the Wiſe Men) of the Heathen World in the elder times.

IX. Without the Hypotheſis of a Creation antecedent to the Moſaical no account can be given of that eminent part of it The Primigenial Light ſuppos'd to be created the firſt Day: for touching this Primigenial Light the many Learned Interpreters of Moſes have little to propoſe but unhappy Conjectures, that are as eaſily refuted as recited. S. Auſtin inclineth to interpret this Primigenial Light (y) of Light ſpiritual and metaphorical the Holy Angels; which is an allegoring away the literal ſenſe of Scripture, and a total receding from the Phraſe of it; for the Angels are never called Light. (z) Gr. Naz. (a) and S. Baſil call this Light ἀσώματον, ἄϋλον, Incorporeal, Immaterial, becauſe at firſt it was not combin'd and complicated with any Body, as it is now with the Body of the Sun: for they ſuppoſe, it was given to the Sun, to inlighten the World. But if this Primigenial Light was that ſame Light which is now imbodied in the Sun, it was always material and corporeal; and it muſt be ſuch, if it made a diſtinction between Day and Night. Some have ſuppos'd, (b) that this Primigenial Light was the Elementary Fire, and others have thought it the Splendor of the Cœlum Empyreum, both which are vain Imaginations, that have no exiſtence. Some ſuppoſe, (c) that it was a Light rais'd throughout all the Water of the Abyſs, which diſpell'd all the Darkneſs of it; but if all the Water of the Abyſs was the Seat of this Light, it could not make the diſtinction of Day and Night. Others therefore ſuppoſe, that this Light was ſeated only in a ſuperiour part of the Water of the Abyſs, which thereby became corpus lucidum, nubes lucida, fons lucis, and by its Circumvolution it made the Viciſſitude of Day and Night: and ſome ſay, that of this lucid Cloud (being condens'd) the Body of the Sun was afterwards formed. But it was meer Light, which made the firſt Day, which is a different thing from a lucid Body or lucid Cloud, as Burgenſis obſerveth. On the firſt Day no Clouds were yet made; if any lucid Body or lucid Cloud had been then made, it would have been a great and eminent and diſtinct part of the Creation, which the Hiſtorian would not have fail'd to have taken notice of. Such a lucid Body or lucid Cloud would have been a Luminary, of which Nature there was nothing till the fourth Day. To ſuppoſe the Body of the Sun form'd of a condens'd Cloud, is like the Conceit of forming the celeſtial fiery Globes out of Water. (d) Some are of Opinion, that the Sun was made at the beginning of the Moſaic Creation, but not perfectly form'd till the fourth Day; and that this Primigenial Light was the Light of the Sun not perfectly formed. But this Opinion (of Aquinas and others) implieth a grand Abſurdity, that the Sun was twice made in one and the ſame Creation. Gr. Nyſſen conceiveth, (e) that this Primigenial Light was Fire, which becauſe of its Vehemency and Agility ſuddenly brake forth out of the Chaos, ſo ſoon as the Maſs began to be digeſted, and made a great Illumination. Some of the Learned among our ſelves (f) have entertain'd this Conceit, and by this Light underſtood thoſe Particles of Matter which we call Fire, which were produc'd as the great Inſtrument for preparation and digeſtion of the Matter, for Rarefaction, Separation, and the reſt of the Operations, which were neceſſary to mould it into ſuch Creatures, as were afterwards made out of it. But againſt this account of the Primigenial Light Petavius well objecteth, lucem ab igne nihil differe, cui tandem probabitur? doubtleſs, there is ſome difference between Light and Fire: If it had been Fire, Moſes would have call'd it ſo; for he calleth every thing by its own Name. This Light was Day-light, and Day-light is not that which we call Fire. The Light of Fire muſt neceſſarily conſtitute a corpus lucidum, of which nature there was nothing produc'd the firſt Day. Fire for preparation and digeſtion of the Matter is a Philoſophical Notion, and therefore alien from the Senſe of Moſes. Such Fire ought to pervade and agitate the whole fluid Maſs of the Chaos; and if it did ſo, it could not make the diſtinction of Day from Night. Thus the Learned Interpreters of Moſes by their dark conjectures touching the Primigenial Light have involv'd us in Difficulties, out of which there is no way to extricate our ſelves but by entertaining this true and great Principle, that the Moſaic Creation was not God's original Creation. But that we may infer this great Principle from the Primigenial Light, we muſt lay down theſe three certainties concerning it.

(1.) The Primigenial Light was nothing elſe but that Phænomenon of Nature commonly called by the Name of Light: for all wiſe Men agree, that in the Cortex of the Moſaic Hiſtory there is nothing Unpopular, nothing but what is ſuitable to the common Apprehenſions of the People, and accordingly this is their rule of Interpreting Moſes, (g) that our account of things be moſt ſimple and moſt accommodate to the Capacity of the Vulgar, not far-fetch'd and recondite.

(2.) The Primigenial Light was Day or Day-light; for the Moſaic Text ſaith, God called the Light Day, Gen. 1. 5. (h) It is the Day, that Moſes calleth the Light (the lucid Space of Time contradiſtinct to the Darkneſs of the Night) this God would have. (i) What is Light but a certain Brightneſs illuminating Obſcurities and diſpelling Darkneſs? that Light is called Day. So Moſes ſpecifieth what Light he ſpeaketh of. (k) The Light is the Day, or the Day-light, and all Men know what the Day is.

(3.) The Primigenial Light was Sun-leſs Day, or Sun-leſs Day-light; for the Moſaic Firmament was not garniſh'd with the Celeſtial Luminaries till the fourth Day; this Light therefore is rightly called by Gr. Naz. (l) ἀνήλιον, Sun leſs Light, or Sun-leſs Day-light, which is very uſual in the World, eſpecially in our own Iſland becauſe of our caliginous Air. (m) Britannia ſole deficitur. To us therefore that have many Sun-leſs Days and abundance of Sun-leſs Day-light,

---

(y) De C. D. l. 11. c. 7, 9.

(z) Or. 43.

(a) In Hexaem. Hom. 6.

(b) Fuller. Miſc. l. 1. *c.*12. Hotting. Hexaem. op. primi Diei Qu. 38. Petav. ſupr. l. 1. c. 7.

(c) Petav. ibid. c. 7, 8. Hotting. ibid.

d) Petav. pr. & c. 8.

e) Petav. d. c. 7.

(f) Biſhop Patrick.

(g) Ut quam ſimpliciſſima & ad vulgi captum accommodatiſſima ratio quæratur, non arceſſita & recondita. Petav. ſupr. l. 2. c. 3. S. 8.

(h) Tutiſſimum eſt verbis Moſis illud appellare hoc loco lucem, quod diem ille vocat, ſpatium videlicet temporis lucidum, nocti ſive tenebris contradiſtinctum. Lucem ergo Deus eſſe voluit, i. e. diem. Hottinger, ſupr.

(i) Lux quid eſt aliud quàm claritas quædam, quæ obſcura ſunt illuminans & tenebras diſpellens? lux iſta dies dicta eſt. Sic enim ſpecificatum eſt à Moſe, de qua luce loquatur. Muſcul. ab Hotting. ibid.

(k) Lux ergo diem ſeu lucem diurnam hic propriè ſignificat, quid ſit dies ſatis notum eſt. Pareus in Gen. 1. 3.

(l) Orat. 43.

(m) Min. Fel. p. 135.

the Moſaic Sun-leſs Days and primigenial Light may be eaſily explain'd and made clearly intelligible. For the Moſaic Sun-leſs Days were of the ſame Nature and from the ſame Cauſe as ours, viz. From the caliginouſneſs of the Air and the circumvolution of the Sun (or Earth,) which alone can be the Cauſe of the viciſſitude of our Night and Day. Day-light is the Light of the Sun. The Moſaic Sun-leſs Day-light could be no other than the Light of the Sun. (n) For ſeeing it is moſt certain, that the Day Gen. 1. 5. was no other Light but that which had been created the firſt Day, and ſeeing that Light wherewith the Celeſtial Luminaries ſhone on the fourth Day is Day Gen. 1. 14. both this Light muſt neceſſarily be the ſame Light. But the Day-light of the fourth Day is Celeſtial and deriv'd from the Sun: Therefore ſo is that of the firſt Day. All Mankind by Day-light underſtand the Light of the Sun. (o) All the learned define Day-light by the Light of the Sun. Several of them (Aquinas, Eugubinus, Pererius and others) ſuppoſe and diſpute, that the Moſaical primigenial Light was no other than the Light of the Sun. But becauſe the grand abſurdity objected againſt their Opinion (namely, that it maketh the Sun to be twice made in the Moſaic Creation) muſt be avoided, therefore the Creation of the Sun and of the great Univerſe muſt be ſuppos'd disjunctively antecedent to the Moſaical formation of our Earth.

(n) Cùm certiſſimum ſit. Gen. 1. 5. diem non aliam eſſe lucem quàm eam quâ primo die condita fuerat, cùmque lux illa quâ die quarto corpora Cœleſtia mundum perfuderunt, dies ſit Gen. 1. 14. Profectò neceſſe eſt, ut lux utraque eadem omnino ſit. At diei quarti lux diurna Cœleſtis eſt & à ſole derivata: Ergo & primi. Fuller. Miſc. l. 1. c. 12.

(o) S. Baſil. Hexaem. Hom. 2. p. 26.

This Hypotheſis is every way acommodate to the Moſaical deſcription of the Creation, of which this is a Branch, darkneſs was upon the face of the deep. Gen. 1. 2. The Moſaic Abyſs therefore had a Face, Surface or Aſpect, and conſequently was bounded, and ſo bounded, as to be of eaſie Conception to the People. But who can frame any tolerable Conception of the Face, Surface or Aſpect of the immenſe Univerſe? And if the Water of the Abyſs was extended throughout the ſpace of the immmenſe Univerſe (as they conceive, who ſuppoſe the Moſaic Creation, to be the Creation of the great Univerſe) there could be no proportion between the Aqueous and Terreous parts of the Chaos. (p) Multò igitur plus Aquæ quàm Terræ partium habuit vaſta illa primæva Moles. There is no avoiding this abſurdity but by ſuppoſing the Moſaic Abyſs or Chaos (the Hebrew word Tehom which we tranſlate the Deep, ſignifieth tumult and turbid confuſion,) to be nothing more than the Elements or Ingredients of our Terreſtrial Syſtem invelop'd with Darkneſs, as the Pagan Theologers repreſent the Chaos. (q)

(p) Pareus in Gen. 1. 2.

Χάος ἦν ϗ νὺξ Ἔρεβός τε μέλαν πρῶτον ϗ τάρταρος εὐρύς.

At firſt there was only Chaos and Night and black Erebus and huge Tartarus.

(q) Grot. de V. R. C. l. 1. *S.*16. in Annot.

All that was then to be ſeen (r) ἄβυσσος ἦν ὑδάτων σκότῳ κεκαλυμμένος, was an Abyſs of Waters cover'd with darkneſs. So the words of Moſes import (darkneſs was upon the face of the Deep) which are deſign'd to ſignifie the horrid face of the Chaos, that it was like a black and wet and tempeſtuous Night, the darkneſs whereof is not a meer privation of Light, but it is oppoſitive Darkneſs as poſitively oppoſing and excluding the Light. Such is the Darkneſs, which is uſually cauſed by the eruption of ſulphurous Mountains, whence iſſue black and pitchy Vapours, ſoultry Miſts, and dark Clouds (which ſometimes ſo darken the neighbouring Regions that Men cannot ſee one another (s) as Cicero relateth,) ſuch was the Egyptian Darkneſs, and ſuch is the Darkneſs that will invelop the Earth at the laſt day, the miſt of Darkneſs, the blackneſs of Darkneſs, the Darkneſs of caliginons Erebus (t) ἔνθα τὸν ἄπειρον ἐρεύγονται σκότον βληχροὶ δνοφερᾶς νυκτὸς ποταμοί, there the mighty Rivers of dark Night eructate immenſe Darkneſs. From which account of the Chaotick Darkneſs it is not hard to make an intelligible explication both of the primigenial Light and the Sun-leſs Days of the Moſaical Hexameron. Of theſe Sun-leſs Days the ſecond muſt be remark'd in the firſt place; for three remarkable things were done on that Day. One was a ſeparation of the parts in the fluid Maſs of the Chaos, the groſſer and heavier ſubſided, to make the Earth and Sea, the lighter and more tenuious parts remain'd above ſeparate from the other. On this ſecond Day therefore there was an Attenuation of the matter in the ſuperiour Region of the Chaos, it was reduc'd to a thinner conſiſtence. A third thing was alſo done on this ſecond Day (the Product of the two former) namely, the Partition of the Matter of the Chaos into two diſtinct Regions: The one the Aerial-aqueous, the other the Terraqueous. For the making the Firmament and the Diviſion of the upper from the lower Waters implieth this Partition of the Matter of the Chaos into two diſtinct Regions, the Aerial-aqueous and the Terraqueous. This Partition was the chief Phœnomenon of the ſecond Day, and thus far the ſeparation of parts in the Chaos and the Attenuation of the Matter in the ſuperiour Region of it proceeded that Day. But theſe Alterations in the Chaos which proceeded thus far on that Day, may reaſonably be thought, to have commenc'd before that Day. The ſeparation of parts in the fluid Maſs of the Chaos (the groſſer and heavier ſubſiding) and the Attenuation of the matter in the ſuperiour Region of it was begun the firſt Day; whereupon the Sun-beams gain'd an admiſſion (in ſome degree) into the dark Region of the Chaos, and caus'd ſuch a dim illumination thereof, as we ſee at Day-break (to which S. Auſtin (u) compareth the primigenial Light,) which dim illumination was the Light of the firſt Sun-leſs Day. The Day-light of the ſecond and of the third Day was alſo Sun-leſs Day-light, becauſe the ſeparation of parts in the fluid Maſs of the Chaos and the Attenuation of the Matter in the ſuperiour Region of it proceeded gradually, and did not proceed ſo far, as was requiſite, to make a clear Sky till the fourth Day, and then the Sun and the other Celeſtial Luminaries (in their order) appear'd garniſhing our Firmament. Moſes relateth the Coſmopœia like an Hiſtorian, and as a Spectator would have related it, that had ſtood in the Chaos and had ſeen the Creation. And he relateth it as a Religious Hiſtorian muſt neceſſarily relate it, that would not ſpoil his Religious Narrative with intermixtures of Philoſophy.

(r) S. Chryſoſt. in Gen. λογ η.

(s) De N. D. l. 2.

(t) Plutarch. An latenter ſit vivend.

(u) Apud Petav. ſupr. l. 1. c. 7. in fine.

X. That the Moſaic Creation was not the Original Creation, appeareth from the Typical and Symbolical Nature of it. For the Writings and Inſtitutes of Moſes are ſo agreeable to the Hieroglyphical Letters which he was inur'd to in Egypt, and to the Symbolical way of Philoſophizing which he learned there, that he may juſtly be denominated a Symbolical and Hieroglyphical kind of Man. As his Judaical Law and other parts of his Hiſtory abound with fore-ſhadowing Types of Chriſt and the matters of Chriſtianity: So his Coſmopœia is embelliſh'd with a Conſtellation of them. Some Divines ſay (w) that the Moſaic Creation was Typical, and that the thing typified by it was Man's Liberation from Sin and Miſery, or (as others ſay) Eccleſia conſtituenda, the Church to be conſtituted in ſeven Periods. (x) Receptum apud Hebræos, opera creationis externa habere in ſe imaginem creationis interna. The Light ſhining out of Darkneſs into the Chaos ſeemeth clearly to be a Type of Man's Regeneration. 2 Cor. 4. 6. And the Moſaic Creation out of a Chaos doth it not lively typifie and repreſent a new Creation out of the Chaos of a corrupted World? As Adam and Eve were illuſtrious Types of Chriſt and his Church: So the Sabbath, which was the cloſe of the Moſaic Creation, was an illuſtrious Type of the Chriſtians reſt. Heb. 4. 4, 9, 10. A worthy Author ſaith of Paradiſe (y) in this there were as many Figures of Chriſt, as in all the Old Teſtament throughout. Another ſaith of the Tree of Life in Paradiſe (z) it ſerv'd to nouriſh the Soul by a lively repreſentation of that living Tree, whoſe Fruit is eternal Life, and whoſe Leaves ſerve to heal the Nations. O infinite Mercy! Man ſaw his Saviour before him, e're he had need of a Saviour; he ſaw in whom he ſhould recover an heavenly Life, e'er he loſt the earthly. Our firſt Parents had loſt the heavenly Life in their Innocency, if the recovery of it by a Saviour was then typically adumbrated before their Eyes. In their State of Innocency they were like the reſt of Mankind (lapſed Souls,) but with this difference; the Souls of the reſt of Mankind are ſubjected to the courſe of Nature, which was not the caſe of our firſt Parents. (a) Yet Adam (ſaith Parcus) had a Symbol of Life eternal, the Tree of Life, which was Chriſt. (b) Nobis allegoricè Chriſtum hac arbos refert, qui noſtra eſt vita. (c) Moſes Bar-Cepha citeth one Jacobus Sarugienſis, who ſuppos'd, that the Tree of Life had an occult Virtue in it ob Sacramentum Chriſti in arbore latens, becauſe of the Myſtery of Chriſt which was hidden in it. If there were Types of Chriſt in Paradiſe (as undoubtedly there were ſeveral) our firſt Parents in their State of Innocency were thereby inſtituted to be Chriſt's Believers, and by Divine Inſtitution they were to be of the Chriſtian Religion; the ſuppoſal whereof is a monſtrous incongruity, if in their State of Innocency they were no lapſed Souls, or if in that State they were the Saints of God in Sin-leſs Perfection (without Chriſt) and the Heirs of Life eternal. From the Types in Paradiſe it appeareth, that the Adamical Inſtitution was of the ſame general Nature with other Inſtitutions of Religion in the Old Teſtament-times; that the Religion to which our firſt Parents were inſtituted, was not meerly the Original Law or Religion (for the Religion of a Redeemer was not the Original Religion;) therefore their Terreſtrial Creation was not God's Original Creation. The Jews had no available Promiſe of Life eternal, nor any Title to it abſtracting from Chriſtianity, and without it they could be no real Saints of God, but Saints only in Type and Shadow: Nor was it otherwiſe with our firſt Parents, as their Inſtitution to Chriſtianity demonſtrateth; for it would be a grand impertience, to inſtitute them to Chriſtianity, if they might be the real Saints of God without it. And if they could not be the real Saints of God without it, then they were not the real Saints of God by their Terreſtrial Creation; which therefore was not God's Orignal Creation. Thoſe Types (whereby in ſome degree they were inſtituted to Chriſtianity) demonſtrate, that Chriſt was not altogether ſuperfluous and unneceſſary to our firſt Parents in Innocency; and that Oſiander's Opinion was no delirium, (d) that although our firſt Parents had not ſinned in their earthly Paradiſe, Chriſtus futurus erat Eccleſiæ ſponſus, Chriſt ſhould have been the Bridegroom of the Church. From the Types in Paradiſe and the typical Nature of the Old Teſtament in general Picus Mirandula thought, he had reaſon to maintain this Paradox, (e) ſi non peccaſſet Adam, Deus fuiſſet incarnatus, ſed non crucifixus. And the ancient Jews ſeem to have been of that Opinion, when amongſt five things which they ſay were created before the World, they make Meſſiah the Son of David to be one, meaning thereby, as a learned Scholiaſt of their own expounds it, that he was abſolutely and primarily intended in the Creation of the World. Paradoxes theſe are, but ſuch as (in the main) are not uncertain or incredible. For it is certain that God deſigning in his mind Chriſt and the matters of Chriſtianity did from the beginning of the World ſo contrive and order things, as to typifie, repreſent and adumbrate (by way of Skiagraphy before he came to Zoography) Chriſt and the matters of Chriſtianity, which were the things Primitive and Archetypal, and the matters of the Old Teſtament-times were the things Ectypal and derivative Tranſcripts fram'd according to thoſe Archetypal Copies. The coming of the Meſſiah therefore was abſolutely and primarily intended in the Creation of this World; the Oeconomy of our firſt Parents was Introductory to his Religion and the Knowledge of it; which muſt be thought a ſtrange unaccountable Oeconomy, if his Religion was to them altogether ſuperfluous and unneceſſary. Aquinas is ſo far from ſuppoſing it unneceſſary, that he ſaith of Adam before the State of Sin (f) Man had an explicit Faith touching the Incarnation of Chriſt, as it was ordain'd to the Conſummation of Glory: But not as it was ordained to our Liberation from Sin by his Paſſion and Reſurrection. We may not ſay ſo much as this great Schoolman doth touching Adam's explicit Faith; for we are not told, how far our firſt Parents underſtood the meaning of their Types. But from the early Types which they had in Paradiſe, we may ſafely determine the extent of the Hiſtory of the Bible, that it aſcendeth no higher than to the Introduction of Chriſtianity, nor to any other Creation than that which is connex'd with the Introduction of Chriſtianity, which cannot be the Original Creation.

(w) Jurieu accompliſhm. of Proph. p. 327. ed. 2.

(x) Grot. not. in Phil. 2. 15.

(y) S. W. Raleigh Hiſt. B. 1. c. 3. S. 3.

(z) Bp. Hall of Paradiſe p. 777.

(a) Pareus in Gen. 2. 7. V. S. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. l. 8. c. 4, 5.

(b) Pet. Mart. in Gen. 2. 9.

(c) Petav. T. 3. de op. l. 2. c. 5.

(d) Pareus in Gen. 2. 24.

(e) Dr. Cudw. of the Union of Chriſt and the Church.

(f) Ante ſtatum peccati homo habuit explicitam fidem de Chriſti incarnationè, ſecundum quod ordinabatur ad conſummationem gloriæ. Non autem ſecundum quod ordinabatur ad liberationem à peccato per paſſionem & reſurrectionem. 22æ Qu. 2. Art. 7. vid. Gonet. Clyp. T. 11. Diſp. 5. Art. 1. S. 4.

XI. The Moſaic Creation was not the Creation of human Souls; which inferreth, that it was not the Original Creation. If it was a meer Terreſtrial-animal Creation, it could not be the Creation of human Souls; for although ſupernatural Grace is not Eſſential to Man's Nature, or to human Souls, yet to affirm, that they may be created by God without ſupernatural Grace, is a falſe Propoſition. For as they cannot be created by Chriſt (who is Chriſtianity Imperial) without ſupernatural Grace, becauſe Chriſt cannot but make them the Subjects and Citizens of his Kingdom: So for the ſame reaſon they cannot be created without ſupernatural Grace by God, who is Sanctity Imperial. Upon the Original Creation of human Souls God is neceſſarily related to them as the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial. And they are of Right and by Obligation, and actually alſo in State and Relation, the Subject-party in Sanctity Imperial. They cannot therefore be originally devoid of ſupernatural Grace, without which none can be actually in the State and have the Rights of Citizens in God's Kingdom, or live the Life of holy Citizens. Human Souls were originally made, to live in the State and to live the Life of holy Citizens (and were under infinite Obligations ſo to live;) originally therefore they were not devoid of ſupernatural Grace; for without it they would have been inept for their end and uſe. They could not be made without it; for if they had been created without it, they would not have been made, but marr'd and deprav'd. For the Life of Grace and Holineſs is their Rectitude and Sanctity, their true Excellency and Felicity, Pulchritude and Precioſity, their true Light and Wiſdom, and their proper Life, their Greatneſs and Goodneſs, their Nobility and Liberty, their due Order and Amiableneſs, their Strength and Vigour, their Eaſe, their Peace and Reſt, their Joy and Satisfaction. The making of human Souls therefore is the creating them into the holy Life. Eph. 4. 24. The loſs of the holy State and the holy Life is the lapſe of Souls; and becauſe they have now loſt them, they are in a fallen Eſtate, which cannot be ſuppos'd their Original State without a contradiction. Their Criminal and Penal State (of Alienation from God and Hoſtility to him, of Darkneſs, Defilement and of Death, of Sin, Servitude and Condemnation) is neceſſarily introduc'd and emergeth upon their being out of the holy State and the holy Life; this therefore cannot be their Original State. Their Redemption and Regeneration demonſtrateth, that they may not be, nor can they tolerably be out of the holy State and the holy Life; it could not therefore be the Will of God in their Original Creation, that they ſhould be in ſo undue and wrong and tragical a State. The Creation of ſuch invaluably precious Souls was (ſurely) a Saint of God-kind of Creation (as their new Creation is,) they were created in the Divine Image according to Chriſtianity, as they are now regenerated into it. And accordingly they that are regenerated, do ſenſibly find that the holy Life (the Imployments and Enjoyments thereof) are to them kindly, congenial and connatural, and that their Regeneration is (as Ariſtotle defineth Pleaſure) ἀποκατάστασις εἰς τὸ κατὰ φύσιν, a reſtitution of their Souls from an Unnatural into their Original and Natural State. If therefore the Moſaical Creation was but the Terreſtrial-animal and Human-kind of Creation, if our firſt Parents in their Terreſtrial Creation were not made the real Saints of God, the Moſaical Creation was not the Creation of Human Souls.

If the Creation of Human Souls was part of the Moſaical Creation, in all Reaſon it ought to have been part of the Moſaic Hiſtory; whereas Moſes in his Hiſtory (g) did not deſign to write of the Creation of all things, but only of things viſible and corporeal, as Baſil affirmeth, and after him Philoponus. Moſes is wholly ſilent touching the Origin of human Souls; whence Divines of the Chriſtian Church are extremely at a loſs de Origine Animæ, not knowing which of theſe three Opinions to prefer (h) that of the Præ-exiſtence of Souls, or that of their Creation and Infuſion by the immediate hand of God in ſucceſſive Generations, or that which deriveth them from Propagation. His total ſilence touching the Origin of Souls is a plain Indication, that the Creation of them was no part of the Moſaical Creation. Human Souls are of far greater worth and importance than all the animal and material World; if therefore the Moſaic Coſmopœia had been the Creation of ſuch Souls, the main concern of it muſt have been about the Goods and Evils, the Intereſts and Concerns of the Soul: But of theſe no Notice is taken throughout the Hexaemeron and the Hiſtory thereof. Parental Nature hath been hugely kind to Man, in the Faculties and Inſtincts wherewith ſhe hath furniſh'd his Body and Mind, in giving him the conveniences of human Society, and the many accommodations of Life, which the Earth affordeth, as ſome Philoſophers obſerve: But theſe obſerve alſo, that ſhe hath failed to furniſh Man with the chief Good of the Soul. (i) Quod autem in homine præſtantiſſimum atque optimum eſt, id deſeruit. (k) Ut donum hoc divinum rationis & conſilii ad fraudem hominibus, non ad bonitatem, impertitum eſſe videatur.

XII. The Inhabitants of this World and the Conſtitution of it infer, that the Moſaic Coſmopœia was not the Original Creation, but that it was a Creation conſequent upon a lapſe of Angels and human Souls. For the Devil ſinneth and was a Murtherer from the beginning, and Cain was of that wicked One. From about the Moſaical beginning of this World the evil Angels have been playing their Pranks in it; they have been lapſed therefore (at leaſt) from that time, and lapſed into this World, and ever ſince it hath been the Range and the Habitation, the Priſon and the Kingdom, the Territory and the Tartarus of evil Demons. Such it hath been, not fortuitouſly and by chance, but by the wiſe and juſt diſpoſal and allotment of Providence, as well as by the choice of the evil Angels themſelves. In a wiſe and juſt compliance with their Self-choſen Lapſe this World was framed, wherein for a time they might enjoy what they had choſen, and an Aerial Region of it was allotted them for their Manſion (l) Providentiæ Lege, by the Law of Providence. As other Beings have their proper Regions, (m) ſo there is a Land and Country of Satan, where the Powers of Darkneſs and Spirits of Wickedneſs live and walk and have their reſting place. Their Region and Country which is allotted them by Providence is ἐπουράνιος, Aerial-heavenly (as the Apoſtle ſtileth it;) whence it appeareth, that this World

Joh. 8. 44. 1 Joh. 3. 8, 12.

(g) Non omnium rerum productionem, ſed aſpectabilium duntaxat & corporearum inſtituebat ſcribere, ut Baſilius aſſerit, & poſt eum Philoponus. Petav. T. 3. de Ang. l. 1. c. 15. S. 1.

(h) S. Aug. de lib. arbitr. l. 3. c. 21. & alibi paſſim. S. Hieron. Apol. adv. Ruffin. l. 2. c. 2. Vid. Annot. in Nemeſ. p. 20. Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 1. p. 16.

(i) Cic. de Fin. l. 5.

(k) Idem de N. D. l. 3. ſub. fin.

(l) S. Aug. de Doctr. Chriſt. l. 2. c. 23.

(m) Ὅυτως ἐστὶ γῆ καὶ πατρὶς Σατανικὴ, οὗ διάγουσι καὶ ἐμπεριπατοῦσι, καὶ ἐπαναπαύονται αἱ δυνάμεις τοῦ σκότους καὶ τὰ πνεύματα τῆς πονηρίας. S. Macar. Hom. 14.

World is ſo fram'd and conſtituted, as that Mankind are by the diſpoſal of Providence locally ſubjected to the evil Angels. (n) To whom our infimous part of the World, according to the moſt beauteous order of things, is ſubjected by the Law of Divine Providence.

Such is the Order aud Subordination of Beings in this World, and ſuch is the Conſtitution of it, as could not exiſt but upon a Lapſe of Angels; therefore the Moſaical Creation or Conſtitution of it could not be any part of the Original Creation. And from the Subordination of Beings in it we may infer further; that ſuch is the Conſtitution of it, as could not Exiſt but upon a Lapſe of human Souls; and therefore the Moſaical Creation could not be the Original Creation. For without ſuppoſing a Lapſe of human Souls it ſeemeth extremely harſh, that Mankind ſhould be ſituated as low as the Earth, and confin'd to creep as Shadows upon the Ground, while the Aerial Demons have their Seat aloft above them and (comparatively) their Dwelling on high. Such a Conſtitution of the World maketh them look like Princes (of eminent ruling Condition) Principalities (that have chief and principal Rule) Powers (Potentates) κοσμοκράτορες, the Rulers of the World, but Mankind as of underling and ſervient Condition. For theſe Luciferian Aſpirers after Empire and Greatneſs, that outragiouſly affect Domination over Mankind, and are diſpos'd to Domineer and Lord it over them, that far tranſcend them in Policy and Power (as alſo in reſpect of the Spirituality of their Nature,) for theſe to be plac'd near and about them, and in a Station above them, is a great ſtep towards ſubjecting Mankind to their Domination. Living by theſe bad Neighbours they are continually obnoxious to their Temptations, which Temptations are complicated with thoſe of the World and Fleſh. In this earthly Station Mankind muſt be ſurrounded and infeſted with theſe deadly ghoſtly Enemies, their Duty, Virtue, and the only way to their Felicity, is to reſiſt and vanquiſh them. But to this Warfare they are ſo great ſtrangers, this Victory is ſo hardly gained, theſe Temptations are ſo extremely dangerous and generally ruinous, that it cannot be thought reconcileable with the Goodneſs and Juſtice of Providence, to place the Souls of Men in ſuch ſad Circumſtances, if by ſome Fact or Fault of their own they had not ſubjected themſelves thereto. They that conſider what accompliſh'd Tempters Satan and his Aerial Accomplices are, how many and great their advantages are, to inveigle Souls, how many and great diſadvantages Mankind are under, and how great their Native Weakneſs and Wickedneſs is, cannot fail to pronounce, that it is morally impoſſible, that things ſhould be otherwiſe than they have been; but the World of Mankind are unavoidably the Subjects of Satan's Kingdom, and this is now their Original State.

XIII. That the Earth in the Moſaical Creation of it was created upon a Lapſe (which therefore was not the Original Creation) the multitude of noxious, ferine and poiſonous Animals that are in it, are an Indication. For who is not prone, to ask Cicero's Queſtion, fecerit? All things are well, as they ought to be (all things conſider'd) in the Natural and Brute-animal World; and things are, as they were made in the Moſaical Creation. Elſe it had not been the Conſtitution of Nature, nor had all things been made after their Kind, nor hath there been any thing like a Creation ſince, to alter and change Nature. Yet many Divines (Ancient and Modern) ſuppoſe, that noxious and venenate Animals and the Enmities amongſt Animals are not agreeable to the Original Creation and the firſt State. (p) No noxious or venenate Animals were ſo made from the beginning; for nothing Evil was made by God, but all things were good and very good. The Sin of Man made them degenerate into Evil. (q) If there is any thing poiſonous in Nature this is adventitious through the Sin of Man. Becauſe Adam gave Names to all Animals, thence S. Chryſoſtom argueth, (r) that they were not from the beginning terrible to Man. And there is another more manifeſt Sign of this (ſaith he,) the diſcourſe of the Woman with the Serpent, the ſight of which would have made her afraid, if thoſe Animals had been terrible to Man. S. Auſtin ſometime affirmed, that God is the Author of that Antipathy, which is amongſt Animals (as the Sheep and the Wolf) but afterwards retracted it. (s) This Father was alſo at a loſs for the Reaſon, why noxious Animals were created, which ſome of the ancient Writers have attempted, to give an account of: But from their account it appeareth, that although noxious, ferine and venenate Animals are commodious for Man, yet they are in far greater degree incommodious and dangerous, and therefore cannot be ſuppos'd, to have been made meerly for the uſe of Man, nor are they agreeable to Original Creation and the firſt State. Mankind have been always in no ſmall danger of their Lives from theſe their truculent Aſſociates and Fellow-inhabiters of the Earth; which as it was at firſt in great part Forreſt, ſo it was in great part a Wilderneſs of wild Beaſts. (t) And it is a ridiculous thing, to find fault, that many Animals are wild and ſavage, ſeeing Men are ſo. They may well be aſſociated with theſe ferine Animals, and they were made their Aſſociates in the Moſaic Creation, which ſpeaketh it a Creation upon a Lapſe.

XIV. That the Earth in the Moſaical Creation of it was created upon a Lapſe (which therefore was not the Original Creation) the final uſe and end of it is an Indication; for it was made with deſign, to be the great local Hell of lapſed Angels and their Aſſociates; to be the place of their confinement firſt, and then of their final puniſhment. As it is the place of their confinement, it is the leſſer Hell, which is now Exiſtent: As it is the place of their final puniſhment, it is the great local Hell, which will not be Exiſtent till the laſt Day. For the Fire of the Earth's conflagration is the ſame with Hell-fire, as appeareth from the Apoſtle's Text, 2 Pet. 3. 7. The Heavens and the Earth which are now, are

(n) Quibus iſta pars mundi infima ſecundum pulcherrimum ordinem rerum divinæ providentia lege ſubjecta eſt. S. Aug. ſupr.

(o) Lactant. l. 7. c. 4.

(s) Hottinger. ſupr.

(o) Cur Deus tantam vim natricum viperarumque

(p) Οὐχ ὡς κακὰ ἀρχῆθεν γεγεννημένα ζῶα ἢ ἰοβόλα· οὐ γάρ τι κακὸν γέγονεν ἀπὸ θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ τὰ πάντα καλὰ, ϗ καλὰ λίαν: Ἡ δὲ ἁμαρτία περὶ τὸν ἄνθρωπον κεκάκωκεν αὐτά. Theophil. ad Autol. l. 2. p. 96.

(q) Εἰ δὲ ἐστιν ἐν τοῖς φυομένοις δηλητήριον, τοῦτο διὰ τὸ ἐνάμαρτον ἡμῶν ἐπισυμβέβηκεν. Tatian. Or. c. Græc. p. 158. Certè pulices & ſimiles vermes qui jam in hominibus ſunt, tunc creari, contrarium fuiſſet feliciſſimo innocentiæ ſtatui, quanto longius abeſſe debuerunt lupi? Hotting. Hexaem. p. 229.

(r) In Gen. p. 53.

(t) Γελοῖον δὲ ϗ ὅτι ἄγρια πολλὰ αὐτῶν μέμφεσθαι γινομένων ϗ ἀνθρώπων ἀγρίων. Plotin. En. 3. l. 2. c. 9.

are reſerv'd unto Fire againſt the Day of Judgment and perdition of ungodly Men. The Fire of the Earth's Conflagration and the Fire of the Day of Judgment are one and the ſame Fire: The Fire of the Earth's Conflagration and the Fire of the Day of Judgment is the ſame with that Fire, which is the utter Perdition and final Puniſhment of the Ungodly; therefore the Fire of the Earth's Conflagration, the Fire of the Day of Judgment and Hell-fire are one and the ſame Fire. So Eſtius commenteth upon thoſe words of the Apoſtle, The Perdition of ungodly Men: Hoc addit, ut uſum illius ignis præcipuum oſtendat, qui eſt, iniquos in æternum cruciare: He addeth this to ſhew the principal uſe of that Fire (the Fire of the Conflagration) which is to torment the Wicked to Eternity. One and the ſame Fire as it is the utter Devaſtation of this Sublunary World, is the Fire of the Conflagration; and as it is the utter final perdition of the Ungodly, is Hell-fire. Gregor. M. ſaith, (u) The Fire of the Day of Judgment, the Fire of the Conflagration of the Aerial Heaven and the Earth (the ſame Fire) as it is the Fire of the Conflagration, it involveth Sinners; as it is the penal Fire of their Damnation, it breaketh them to pieces. So by the flaming Fire at the Day of Judgment, 2 Theſſ. 1. 8, 9. S. Chryſoſtom and Theophylact (upon the place) underſtand Hell-fire; and becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, that when the Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from Heaven in flaming Fire, the Wicked ſhall be puniſh'd with everlaſting Deſtruction, hence they prove the Eternity of Hell Torments. Everlaſting Deſtruction is the ſame mith Everlaſting Fire (Hell-fire) Eternal Damnation, ſaith Grotius. Agreeably whereto the Commentaries under S. Ambroſe's Name thus expound the place: Fire will be Chriſt's Miniſter in taking Vengeance on Jews and Pagans, the Majeſty of his Fire ſhall burn them, that they may ſuffer the due Puniſhments of Deſtruction to Eternity. An Engliſh Commentator upon the place ſaith of this flaming Fire of the Day of Judgment, (w) Generally it is reſolv'd to be material not metaphorical Fire, and the Ignis conflagrationis ſpoken of by S. Peter, whereby the Elements ſhall melt with fervent heat, and the Earth with all the Works therein ſhall be burnt up. So Vorſtius ſaith, (x) It is hugely probable, that this corruptible World will have a Conflagration by this very flaming Fire; and that this is the Fire which all the Wicked with the Devils will be caſt into. Tertullian thinketh, (y) that Hell-fire will be partly ſuch Fire as is from Heaven in Thunder and Lightning; and partly ſuih Fire as the ignivomous Mountains eructate: Which account of it implieth, that Hell-fire will be the very ſame with the Fire of the Earth's Conflagration. The Vengeance that Chriſt will inflict upon the Ungodly in his Day (z) is pœnale incendium, a penal burning; this penal burning will be by πῦρ φλογὸς, flaming Fire (which is much more terrible than dull Fire,) this flaming Fire will be πῦρ αἰώνιον, everlaſting Fire (which is Hell-fire;) for he will burn the Wicked with ſuch Fire as burneth the Chaff, which is flaming Fire and Fire unquenchable, Matth. 3. 12. Upon the Wicked (who muſt be ſalted with Fire) the mighty Judge will rain down Showers of flaming Fire as upon Sodom (whoſe Fire and Brimſtone was mix'd with Salt) and this inflicted Vengeance of flaming Fire will be the Vengeance of Eternal Fire, Jude 7. So the fiery Indignation which ſhall devour the Adverſaries at the Day of Judgment, is according to Junius (a) ignis æterni fervor, the hot Eternal Fire, as it is laſting and everlaſting, it will be the Fire of a Lake of Fire and Brimſtone analogous to the Sulphurous Lake of Sodom; which Lake of Fire and Brimſtone is the great local Hell, Apoc. 19. 20. and 20. 10.

Many Conjectures have been made touching the time when Hell was created, and touching the place where it is ſituated, (b) which S. Auſtin thinketh, no Man can know, unleſs the Spirit ſhew it unto him. (c) Some have plac'd it in the Air, where the Apoſtate Angels are kept in Priſon till the great Aſſizes. (d) Others and the moſt have ſuppoſed Hell to be Subterraneous (as the Pagans called it Subterranea regna, and ſome of the Jewiſh Writers have called it, (e) infima terræ, the loweſt parts of the Earth) both which Names are agreeable and accommodate to the leſſer Hell that is now exiſtent; for the Evil Angels are Aerial Inhabitants, and the Hell which is now exiſtent is ſometimes repreſented in Scripture as a Subterraneous Region that is hot and fiery, Apoc. 9. 1. Luc. 16. 24. Some have plac'd Hell in the center and midſt of the Earth, and others have thought it non intra ſed infra terram, not within but below the Earth; which irrational Conceits gave Lucretius occaſion to argue; that Hell cannot have a being; for what place can we ſay it hath, when under the Earth our Antipodes are ſaid to be? and that it ſhould be in the midſt of the Earth, the Solidity of it will not permit. The only rational account that can be given of the place and ſituation of the great local Hell, is this Sublunary World, that in its horrendous ſtate of Exuſtion and Conflagration will be a Furnace of Fire and yet a Region of Blackneſs and Darkneſs, which by a Circulation and Rotation of combuſtible Matter upwards and downwards may eaſily be conceiv'd, to burn for ever and ever. Such is the final uſe of the Earth; in the Moſaic Creation it was made to be an everlaſting Priſon for certain Malefactors, and therefore was created upon a lapſe.

(u) Ignis ille judicii qui cœlum aereum & terram concremat, peccatores jam in ſua ſuperbia non permittit erigi, ſed involvit, quos proculdubio in pœna ſuæ damnationis confringit. L. 1. ſup. Ezech. Hom. 2.

(w) Sclater.

(x) In loc.

(y) Apolog. c. 48.

(z) Min. Fel. p. 532.

(a) Parallel. l. 3. p. 517.

(b) De C. D. l. 20. c. 16.

(c) Vives in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 8. c. 22. Valentia T. 4. Diſp. 11. Qu. 1. punct. 1. S. 2.

(d) Anſw. to the Jeſ. chall. of Limb. Patrum.

(e) Petav. T. 4. par. 2. l. 13. c. 16.

Matth 13. 41. Jude 13.

CHAP. XV.

1. That the Ante-Moſaical pre-exiſtence of Humane Souls may be counted a Branch of the Chriſtians Theology. The firſt Reaſon. 2. A ſecond Reaſon. 3. A third Reaſon. 4. A fourth Reaſon. 5. A fifth Reaſon. 6. A ſixth Reaſon. 7. A ſeventh Reaſon. 8. An eighth Reaſon. 9. A ninth Reaſon. 10. A tenth Reaſon. 11. An eleventh Reaſon. 12. A twelfth Reaſon. 13. A thirteenth Reaſon. 14. Objections againſt Pre-exiſtence anſwer'd.

I. IF we ſuppoſe the Moſaic Creation conſequent upon a lapſe of Angels and Humane Souls (which ſeemeth to be prov'd by many great Arguments,) this inferreth, that Humane Souls are coeval with the Angels, that they were produc'd in God's Original Creation (when an Univerſe of Minds and Souls was produc'd,) and conſequently it inferreth an Ante-Moſaical præ-exiſtence of Humane Souls; which may be aſſerted without any of the Vanities of the Philoſophic Pagans, who yet muſt be acknowledg'd, to have diſcours'd touching Humane Souls, their original ſtate and their lapſe, great and noble things, which muſt be compar'd with the Chriſtians Vulgar-Hiſtorical Theology. And if we ſo compare them, the Pagan Theology in a principal part of it will ſeem great and noble, and the Chriſtians Theology in reſpect of an anſwerable principal part of it will ſeem very mean and ignoble: for touching thoſe great Theories in our vulgar Hiſtorical Theology we only ſay, (f) That the firſt Man Adam was convicted of the crime of Diſobedience, and unexpectedly intangled in the Snares of Death, and fell under Sin by the impious Counſels of the impure Serpent, the Prince of Evil, Satan (for he it was that laid the whole Snare for him,) the Evil ſpread through all Mankind and Death reigned. But if this is the ſumm total of the Chriſtians Theology, and all that we have to ſay touching thoſe great Theories (the firſt ſtate and the Introduction of Sin and Miſery,) who will not pronounce on the Philoſophic Pagans ſide, that touching thoſe ſublime Theories theirs is the ſublime Theology, and our Theology is comparatively very mean and ignoble? But this is an intolerable diſparagement to the Chriſtian Theology (to ſuppoſe, that the Pagan in ſo great a part of Theology far tranſcendeth it) from which therefore we will endeavour to vindicate it; not by ſhewing, that ſeveral of the Fathers have entertain'd the Theology of the Philoſophic Pagans touching the pre-exiſtence of Humane Souls (which hath been done by others;) but by ſhewing, that the Chriſtians in general have a ſublimer Theology than their Vulgar-Hiſtorical, and that they come not behind the Philoſophic Pagans in ſpeaking great and noble things touching Humane Souls, their original ſtate and their lapſe; whereby a Judgment may be made, how far Chriſtians acknowledge an Ante-Moſaical pre-exiſtence of Souls, which is our laſt Notice touching the original Creation of God. It is long ſince, that I made this Obſervation, that there is ſcarce a truly pious Book written touching Matters of the Chriſtian Theology, wherein the pre-exiſtence of Humane Souls is not either implicitly or in expreſs words acknowledg'd, although the Author is intentionally no Aſſertor of it. Of the truth of this Obſervation we will produce a competent number of Inſtances, which will be ſufficient to ſhew, That the Ante-Moſaical pre-exiſtence of Humane Souls may be counted a Branch of the Chriſtians Theology, which is not chargeable with Criminal Philoſophic-paganizing.

The ancient Writers of the Church attribute a Celeſtial and Divine Condition to Adam in his Innocency (as appeareth from their magnificent Ideas of him before repreſented;) they ſuppoſe therefore, that Mankind are laps'd from a Celeſtial and Divine Condition into a Terreſtrial Animal; which cannot be ſuppos'd, unleſs a Celeſtial and Divine Condition did belong to Humane Souls in their original ſtate. Many of them ſuppoſe the Adamical Paradiſe, to have been Supernal in reſpect of its Situation, and their Deſcriptions of the Goods and Delights of it are competible only to an Heavenly Region; which implieth, that Mankind are lapſed (not only from a Terreſtrial-Animal, but) from a Supernal Heavenly Paradiſe, and that the native place and ſtate of Humane Souls is Supernal-Paradiſaical. Such was our original ſtate, if Man in Paradiſe had an Angelical Conſtitution, and was above all Bodily Neceſſities, as ſome of the ancient Writers ſuppoſe; or if the Paradiſe, wherein Man was originally plac'd, is that Paradiſe, which is the Receptacle of the Saints departed, and into which Enoch and Elias were tranſlated, as others of the ancient Writers ſuppoſe. Their miſtaken Ideas of Adam and his Paradiſe ſhew, how prone holy Men are, to think, that the original ſtate of Man (of Humane Souls) was Supernal-Paradiſaical: they will turn a Terreſtrial Paradiſe into a kind of Heaven rather than not have Man Heavenly in his original ſtate.

II. Chriſtians ſuppoſe, that the Souls of Men are Heaven-born, ſaying the ſame thing with the Pagan Theologers, who thought ſcorn, to derive the Origin of their Souls from the Dirt: their maxim was, Noſtras animas deduci è cœlo, redire in cœlum: animorum nulla in terris origo inveniri poteſt, ſaith Cicero. So many of the Hebrew Doctors (g) will have נשמה (the Soul) deriv'd from שמים (Heaven,) becauſe the Soul deriveth its Origin from Heaven. So Chriſtian Divines ſay, (h) Corpus è terra & ſpiritum poſſidemus è cœlo, we have the Body from the Earth, our Soul (or Spirit) from Heaven. (i) Origo ejus de cœlo eſt, its Origin is from Heaven; for this reaſon Chriſtian Theologers call Man, (k) Cœleſte animal, a Celeſtial Animal, as Plato calleth him, οὐράνιον φυτόν, a Celeſtial Plant. Heaven is the place where Souls are produc'd, (l) ſay the Chriſtian Theologers. (m) The Soul is then moſt her ſelf and cometh nigheſt to her former eſtate, when forgetting the weight and hindrance of the Body, ſhe enjoyeth her ſelf, and taketh Wings, as it were, and ſoareth up in the Contemplation of God and his Goodneſs; cùm id ſe eſſe incipit, quod ſe eſſe credit, as Cyprian ſpeaketh, when ſhe beginneth to be that, which ſhe muſt needs believe her ſelf to be, of a Celeſtial and Heavenly beginning. This is the Voice of all, ſaith Tertullian, (n) God ſeeth, I commend it to God, God will recompenſe. O Teſtimony of the Soul naturally Chriſtian! pronouncing theſe things ſhe looketh not to the Capitol, but up to Heaven; for ſhe knoweth the Seat of the living God, from him and from thence ſhe deſcendeth. Thus the Chriſtian Theologers in conſort with the Pagan derive the Origin and Deſcent of Humane Souls from Heaven; therefore they ſuppoſe them, to deſcend from Heaven, (o) vel miſſi vel lapſi, as Arnobius ſpeaketh. But ſeeing all Chriſtians are bound to believe, that the Souls of Men are in a lapſed condition, therefore they muſt ſuppoſe them lapſed from Heaven.

III. Chriſtians ſuppoſe, that the Souls of Men are ſo Heaven-born, that their Cognation and Affinity is with the things Celeſtial: they attribute to the Soul (p) τὴν πρὸς τὰ ἄνω συγγένειαν, a Cognation to the things Supernal. So far a Chriſtian muſt aſſent to Achilles Statius's account of the

(f) Ἁλόντος δὲ τοῦ πρώτου, ὅς ἐστιν Ἀδὰμ, τῇ τῆς ἀπειθείας γραφῇ καὶ τοῖς τοῦ θανάτου βρόχοις ἀδοκήτως ἐνισχημένου, καὶ μὲν τοῦ πεσόντος ὑπὸ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν ἐξ ἀνοσίων σκεμμάτων τοῦ μιαροῦ καὶ ἀρχεκάκου δράκοντος, φημὶ δὴ τοῦ Σατανᾶ· ὁ γάρ τοι τὴν πάγην αὐτῷ συμπήξας ὅλην ἐκεῖνος ἦν. καταvεμηθέντος δὲ τοῦ κακοῦ τὸ Ἀδὰμ σύμπαν γένος, βασιλεύοντος δὲ τοῦ θανάτου. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 8. p. 278.

(g) P. Fagius in Gen. 2. 7.

(h) S. Cypr. de orat. dom.

(i) Lactan. l. 2. c. 19.

(k) Ibid. c. 2.

(l) Arrowſmith chain of princ. p. 23.

(m) Mr. Farindon Ser. 1. on Eph. 5. 1.

(n) Deus videt, & Deo commendo, & Deus mihi reddit, O teſtimonium animæ naturaliter Chriſtianæ! Denique pronuncians hæc, non ad capitolium, ſed ad Cœlum reſpicit. Novit enim ſedem Dei vivi, ab illo & inde deſcendit. Apol. c. 17.

(o) Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 1. p. 16.

(p) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 7. c. 19.

Invention of Aſtronomy, who having recited ſeveral Opinions concerning it thus concludeth, (q) It is not ſtrange, that ſuch a contemplative Science is found out by Men: for every immortal Soul being deſcended from Heaven, and looking back to her cognate Heaven, contemplateth all the things to which ſhe is accuſtom'd, and is drawn to that place, to which ſhe is urgent to be reduc'd. The great Cognation which the Soul hath to the things Celeſtial demonſtrateth, that in her primitive Nobleneſs and Excellency her Nature and State was the Celeſtial, that ſhe is here out of her Element (her connatural, kindly and agreeable State,) that ſhe hath left her Kindred above (to whom (r) ſhe ought to haſten a return;) and ſeeing the things that are here (the things terrene, of this Animal Senſitive Life) are not the things of her Cognation and Affinity, wherewith ſhe ought to be link'd and conjoyn'd, this earthly ſtate of Life (even in an earthly Paradiſe) cannot be her Original State. The Original Creation of Souls (as their New Creation) deſign'd them their Soul-goods and their Soul-happineſs: but it is impoſſible for them to have that Soul-happineſs and thoſe Soul-goods ſave only in a very ſlender degree in an Earthly Body (an Heavenly Body being neceſſary for the Happineſs of the Soul;) therefore they had not their Being in an Earthly Body by Original Creation. The Proviſion of a Soul-happineſs was no part of the Proviſion that was made for Man (ſave only ſymbolically and typically) in the Creation of this World. It belong'd to an antecedent Creation; for all the Furniture of this Sublunary World what is it to the Soul? (s) Conſider the Soul of it ſelf, and what relation or reference hath it to any earthly thing? care for Meats, and Drinks, and Apparel, for Poſterity, to heap up Riches, to be ambitious of Honours, all theſe rigid Publicans, which demand and exact ſo much of our Time and Labour, befell the Soul upon the putting on this cloathing of the Body.

IV. Chriſtians ſuppoſe, that the Souls of Men are ſo Heaven-born, that Heaven is their Country, their primitive Home and Habitation, which plainly and expreſly ſpeaketh their pre-exiſtence. (t) How is the love of our City reviv'd in us, which we had forgot by a long peregrination? but thence our Father ſent us Epiſtles, God hath miniſter'd to us the Scriptures, by which Epiſtles a deſire of returning might be rais'd in us; for by loving our Peregrination we had turned the Face to the Enemies and our Back to our Country. (u) There (in Heaven) is our Country, which perhaps by a long Peregrination we have forgot: for our Voice in that Pſalm is; Alas! becauſe my Peregrination is made long. (w) The Chriſtian People is invited to the delights of Paradiſe: and to all the Regenerate a return is opened to their loſt Country. (x) By Chriſt crucify'd two great things are done; for he both opened Paradiſe and introduc'd the Thief: he reſtor'd to him his ancient Country, he reduc'd him to his paternal City. (y) Thoſe perſons who for offences wide of malice were deteined in the Cities of Refuge and prohibited to return home until the death of the High-prieſt, were afterwards reſtor'd to the Land of their poſſeſſion: whereby was intimated, that until after our Saviour's death no Man could return into Paradiſe his primitive home, from which Man for his Sin had been excluded; but that thenceforth all perſons in an Evangelical Account, not malicious or wicked, had a right and liberty to return thither. So a Divine of our own repreſenteth the Senſe of the Fathers; who alſo citeth theſe words of Gregor. M. Humanum genus, quod peccando ſibi mortem intulit, poſt mortem veri ſacerdotis, id eſt Chriſti, peccatorum vinculis ſolvitur, & in paradiſi poſſeſſionem reparatur. Mankind that brought Death upon themſelves by ſinning, after the death of the true Prieſt (that is Chriſt) is looſ'd from the Bonds of their Sins, and reſtor'd to the poſſeſſion of Paradiſe. The ſame Divine ſpeaking of Chriſt's Nativity and ſpeaking his own Senſe ſaith, (z) Paradiſe is ſet open (from whence as he ſaith, we are Exiles) Immortality retriev'd. Divines that at this rate diſcourſe concerning Paradiſe, muſt be ask'd, what Paradiſe they mean? for the Terreſtrial Paradiſe of the Terreſtrial Adam is not opened by Chriſt, nor are we reſtor'd to the poſſeſſion of it. If therefore they ſpeak good Senſe, and mean as they ſpeak, they ſuppoſe, that we are Exiles from a Supernal Paradiſe, and are by Chriſt reſtor'd to ſuch a Paradiſe, of which we were ſometime the Poſſeſſors. This the words of another Divine of our own imply: (a) Let us diſdain all baſe and ſordid, all low and unworthy ends of action, as things beneath our illuſtrious Rank and Station in the World of Beings, and live in a continual tendency towards, and preparation for that Heavenly State, which is the proper Orb and Sphere of our Natures. Cicero ſpeaketh the ſame Senſe, Animis æterna cœli ſedes quærenda, eaque propria illorum patria.

V. Chriſtians ſuppoſe, that the Souls of Men being Heaven-born are now in a State of Baniſhment from Heaven. The ſecond Petition of our Lord's Prayer (thy Kingdom come) nos cogit propriâ fateri linguâ magnam exilii noſtri calamitatem, conſtraineth us to confeſs with our own Mouth, the great calamity of our Baniſhment, (b) ſaith Luther. We are totally exheredati à bonis paternis, diſinherited of our Father's Goods and the Eternal Inheritance, ſaith Raymond de Sabunde: (c) For the Sons of God ought to live upon their Father's Goods, which are the Spiritual and Inviſible: but we live as Brute-animals upon the Bodily and Viſible, and are extremely unlike the Sons of God, have loſt our Filiation, his Eternal Kingdom and the Conſortſhip of thoſe that ſerve him and attend upon him (the Holy Angels,) and are eternally

(q) Οὐδὲν δὲ παράδοξον, ὑπ' ἀνθρώπων τοιαύτην εὑρεθῆναι θεωρίαν. ψυχὴ γὰρ πᾶσα ἀθάνατος κατελθοῦσα ἐξ οὐρανοῦ ἀνανεύουσα εἰς συγγενῆ τὸν οὐρανόν, πάντα τὰ συνήθη θεωρεῖ, καὶ ἐπισπᾶται πρὸς ὃν ἀναχθῆναι ἐπείγεται. Ap. Bulliald. proleg. in Aſtron. Philol. vid. Clem. περὶ εὐπ. p. m. 47. Cic. 1. de Leg.

(r) Clem. Strom. l. 4. p. m. 348.

(s) Mr. Farindon Ser. 3. on Matt. 6. 33.

(t) Quomodo in nobis reformatur amor civitatis noſtræ, quam diuturna peregrinatione obliti fueramus? ſed miſit inde ad nos Epiſtolas pater noſter, miniſtravit nobis ſcripturas Deus, quibus Epiſtolis fieret in nobis redeundi deſiderium: quia peregrinationem noſtram diligendo, ad hoſtes faciem poſueramus, & dorſum ad patriam. S. Aug. in Pſal. 64.

(u) Ibi eſt patria noſtra, quam longa fortaſſe peregrinatione obliti ſumus. vox enim noſtra eſt in illo Pſalmo, Heu me quoniam peregrinatio mea longinqua facta eſt. Idem in Pſal. 32. Conc. 2.

(w) Invitatur ad paradiſi delicias populus Chriſtianus, & cunctis regeneratis ad amiſſam patriam patefactus eſt reditus. Leo M. de paſſion. Dom. Ser. 13.

(x) Δύο τὰ μέγιστα κατορθώματα· καὶ τὸν παράδεισον ἀνέῳξε, καὶ τὸν λῃστὴν εἰσήγαγεν. ἀπέδωκεν αὐτῷ τὴν ἀρχαίαν πατρίδα, ἐπανήγαγεν αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὴν πατρῴαν πόλιν. S. Chryſoſt. T. 5. p. 570. εἰς τὸν σταυρόν.

(y) Dr. Barrow Ser. 31. on Mark 16. 19.

(z) Ser. on Luc. 2. 10.

(a) Dr. Scott of the worth and excell. of the Soul. p. 38, 39.

(b) Ap. Hoornbeek Theol. practt. par. 1. l. 5. c. 16.

(c) Et hoc maximè manifeſtatur, quia cùm filii debeant vivere de bonis paternis, & cum bona patris noſtri ſint ſpiritualia & inviſibilia, & nullo modo corporalia, ideo debemus vivere de bonis ſpiritualibus & inviſibilibus, & tamen tota vita noſtra conſiſtit in bonis corporalibus, & ſolum vivimus ſicut animalia bruta de rebus corporalibus & viſibilibus, & ſic facimus vitam noſtram beſtialem & non ſicut filii Dei. & quia pater noſter non ſolum eſt pater, imò eſt rex etiam ſummus, & per conſequens habet regnum tantum & tale, ſicut pertinet ei, & palatium & aſtantes, & ſervientes ei juxta ſuam regiam majeſtatem, & ideo quia perdidimus formam ſuæ filiationis, quæ eſt ſummæ dignitatis & ſummi honoris, & acquiſivimus formam contrariam turpiſſimam & perverſam, ſequitur, quod perdidimus regnum ſuum æternum, & conſortium omnium eorum qui continuè cum eo aſſiſtunt & ſerviunt ei, & ſumus in æternum exules à regno ſuo & à domo ſuâ & à palatio ſuo. Raym. de Sabund. Theol. natural. p. 440, &c.

baniſh'd from his Kingdom, his Houſe and his Palace. A Divine of our own thus diſcourſeth touching the original and preſent ſtate of Man. (d) His being in the World is but a kind of being in a Wilderneſs, wherein he is eſtranged from the City of the living God.—— Now what it is, in this Senſe to be a Stranger, or baniſh'd Man, to be deny'd the priviledges and liberty of our natural Soil, and to go into Exile, flat Atheiſm and oppoſition to the true God, it may be ſomewhat diſcerned by the bitter and heavy Days that go over their Heads, who are but put out of their Earthly Country by Tyrants, and but for ſome ſhort time. The natural affection that every Man feeleth towards his own Country and proper Home, may ſufficiently teach us, what it is, to be Strangers from our Country of Heaven, and not for a ſhort time or life, but for ever. In other Baniſhments we may find ſome remedy, one place to us may be as good as another, and we are all Socrates's Country-men, that is (as he was wont to ſay) Citizens of the World, and therefore baniſh'd but out of one part of our Country into another; but he that is thruſt out of this City, is thruſt out of all, and though he dwell in the faireſt Cities of the World, yet doth he but live the life of one that wanders in a Wilderneſs, and hath no City to dwell in. Again, whereas in other Baniſhments we are denied but a temporal freedom, and ſuffer only the loſs of Goods and Livings, in this our Baniſhment from Heaven we are put from an everlaſting freedom, and loſe, not uncertain, but true Riches; nor ſome temporal, but an eternal Inheritance; nor living only, but life alſo; and not this ſhort life, but the life that endureth for ever, the life of Salvation, and the bleſſed life of the Saints in Glory. And whereas in other caſes our Baniſhment may be unjuſt, and our Exile for Righteouſneſs, and ſo we (the Baniſhed) may have, for the ſupply of our natural Soil, the pleaſant Paradiſe of our good Conſcience to walk in: In this caſe, to be caſt out of Heaven, is to be worthy to be caſt out; and in the Puniſhment it ſelf what good Conſcience can relieve us, when it is juſt and deſerved? And now, as the State of them, who are Strangers from the City of the Bleſſed is miſerable enough, ſeeing they are deny'd the Liberty that is ſo much worth: ſo is their Miſery doubled by this, that they have made themſelves worthy of it. One of the Marianolatriſts thus ſpeaketh to his Patroneſs; (e) I will in all my Spiritual Combats, Afflictions and Diſtreſſes have a confident recourſe unto thy Bowels of Mercy, as a Child to his Mother, as a Sinner to the Mother of Jeſus, and as an Outcaſt baniſh'd the Houſe of my Eternal Father. What the Commentaries under S. Ambroſe's Name ſay of one, that ſeparateth himſelf from Chriſt, is applicable to every Man, (f) Exul eſt patriæ, civis eſt mundi, he is an Exile from his Country and a Citizen of the World. Mankind are conſider'd as Exiles, when the benefit which they have by Chriſt, is thus repreſented; (g) Ruptis mortis vinculis aditum nobis patefecit ad patriam cœleſtem, à qua tot annorum millibus exulavit totum genus humanum: Having loos'd the Bonds of Death he opened the way to our Heavenly Country, from which all Mankind had been baniſh'd ſo many thouſand Tears.

VI. Chriſtians ſuppoſe, that Mankind are fallen by Sin from an happy ſupernal ſtate and place: for one of the Devotioniſts of the Bleſſed Virgin ſpeaketh this their Senſe, when he beſeecheth her, to regard her Suppliants, (h) in hanc mundi ſentinam de alto projectos, that are caſt from on high into the Sink of this World. S. Baſil ſaith, (i) διὰ τῆς ἁμαρτίας εἰς γῆν κατεῤῥύημεν, By Sin we are fallen to the Earth. So the religious Monk Nilus ſpeaking of Chriſt's coming admireth theſe fruits of it: (k) Being thrown down we were lifted up on high; being driven out we were reduc'd to Heaven. They are great things which Gregor. M. ſpeaketh of our Original State and Place; ſome of his words import nothing leſs, than that our Fall was from Heaven: When Man cometh to knowledge (l) he conſidereth whence and whither he is fallen, from the Joys of Paradiſe to the Troubles of this Life, from the Angelical Societies to the Cares of Neceſſities. He that was careleſs to ſtand without danger, conſidereth what danger he is now in, bewaileth the Baniſhment that he ſuffereth, being now condemn'd, and breaths after the State of Celeſtial Glory, which he might have ſecurely enjoy'd, if he would not have ſinned.

VII. Chriſtians ſuppoſe, that our gaining the poſſeſſion of Heaven is our regaining it, our return, reduction and reſtauration to our former ancient State and Place. This is that which by S. Baſil is attributed to the Holy Spirit, (m) our reſtauration to Paradiſe, our return to the Kingdom of Heaven. (n) How wilt thou return to Paradiſe (ſaith he) not being ſealed by Baptiſm? S. Cyprian ſaith of Chriſt, (o) Hic ad Paradiſum reduces facit, hic ad cœlorum regna perducit; he reduceth us to Paradiſe, he carrieth us to the Kingdom of Heaven. (p) He reduceth us (ſaith Nilus) to the Celeſtial Heavens, where Harbours are. (q) For the Soul ought to be reſtor'd to that place, whence ſhe departed, ſaith J. Martyr. So Tatianus expreſſeth our great Duty and Intereſt. (r) We ought to flee unto our ancient Condition, and to reject every thing that is an hindrance thereto. Our chief concern is, (s) to have always a deſire after that firſt and thrice happy Life and Abode, and to haſten a return thither; praying to attain our firſt and thrice happy Life and Dignity, and to make haſt to a return and reſtitution of our own things. The Paradiſaical Condition which we ought to deſire to be reſtor'd to, is no other than the Heavenly; this therefore is ſuppos'd to have been our original ſtate. So Modern Divines uſually call Heaven our own place. (t) We ſee every thing reſteth in its own place: This is moſt true of Heaven.—— as a Bone is at eaſe in its own place, if out, reſtleſs: Heaven is our Place, Country, Center; we never reſt till there. (u) The motion of immortal Souls is like that of celeſtial Bodies purely circular. They reſt not without returning back to the ſame point, from whence they iſſu'd.—— Fiſhes are ſaid to viſit the place of their ſpawning yearly, as finding it moſt commodious for them; and ſick Patients are uſually ſent by Phyſicians to their Native Soil, for the ſucking in that Air, from which their firſt Breath was received

(d) Dr. Eccles Ser. on Eph. 2. 19, 20. p. 7, 8.

(e) The Virgin Mary miſrepreſent. par. 1. p. 132.

(f) Com. in Luc. 15.

(g) Laurent. Surii Homil. p. 379. in die paſchæ.

(h) Ibid. in nativ. B. Mariæ Ser. 1.

(i) De Sp. Sanct. c. 27. p. 213.

(k) Κατενεχθέντες ἤρθημεν εἰς ὕψος· ὠθέντες εἰς οὐρανὸν ἀνηνέχθημεν. Phot. cod. 276. col. 1535.

(l) Conſiderat unde, quo lapſus eſt: quod à paradiſi gaudiis ad ærumnas vitæ præſentis, ab angelorum ſocietatibus venit ad curas neceſſitatum. Penſat in quot jam periculis jacet, qui prius ſine periculo ſtare contempſit; luget exilium, quod damnatus patitur, & ſuſpirat ad cœleſtis gloriæ ſtatum, quo perfrui ſecurus poſſet, ſi peccare noluiſſet. Expoſ. in Job 28. cap. 26.

(m) Ἡ εἰς Παράδεισον ἀποκατάστασις, ἡ εἰς βασιλείαν οὐρανῶν ἄνοδος. De Sp. Sanct. c. 15. p. 178.

(n) Πῶς ἐπανέλθῃς εἰς τὸν Παράδεισον. Hom. 13. exhort. ad Baptiſm. p. 478.

(o) Ad Demetrian. in fin.

(p) Πρὸς τοὺς οὐρανίους λιμένας ἀποκαθίστησιν. Supr.

(q) Δεῖ γὰρ ἀποκατασταθῆναι ὅθεν ἀπέστη. J. Mart. Paræn. 2. p. 40.

(r) Χρὴ λοιπὸν ἡμᾶς ἐπιποθήσαντας τὸ ἀρχαῖον Παραιτήσασθαι πᾶν τὸ ἐμποδὼν γινόμενον. Orat. c. Græc. p. 159.

(s) Φέρειν διαπαντὸς τὸν πρώτης καὶ τρισμακαρίας ἐκείνης διατριβῆς τε καὶ ζωῆς τὸν πόθον καὶ σπεύδειν παλινδρομεῖν. Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 7. c. 10. & 18. Εὐχὴν ποιούμενοι τῆς πρώτης καὶ τρισμακαρίου ζωῆς τε καὶ ἀξίας τυχεῖν. σπεύδειν τε ἐπὶ τὴν τῶν οἰκείων ἀναδρομήν τε καὶ ἀποκατάστασιν.

(t) Dr. Harris Ser. 1. on Matth. 5. 3.

(u) Dr. Arrowſmith Chain of Prin. p. 23.

received. Heaven is the place where Souls were produced. (w) In this World we are but Strangers, Heaven is our Native Country, where our Heart ſhould be, whilſt in Body we are kept here below. Would not an Engliſh Man by any Caſe exil'd much long to ſmell the Smoak of his own Native Country? —— All Creatures have an inclination to the place where they were bred. A Divine Poet of our own clearly and fully expreſſeth the Hypotheſis of Præ-exiſtence. (x)

If Souls be made of earthly Mold
Let them love Gold;
If born on high,
Let them unto their Kindred fly.
For they can never be at reſt,
Till they regain their ancient Neſt.

Chriſtian Divines ſpeak the Sence of Seneca. (y) Tunc Animus noſter habebit quod gratuletur ſibi, cum emiſſus his tenebris, in quibus volutatur, non tenui viſu clara proſpexerit, ſed totum diem admiſerit, & redditus Cœlo ſuo fuerit. Cum receperit locum, quem occupavit ſorte naſcendi. Surſum vocant illum initia ſua.

VIII. Chriſtians ſuppoſe, that the Souls of Men iſſu'd from Paternal Sanctity, were originally poſſeſs'd of the Divine Image (which now they have loſt,) and that their Regeneration is a Reduction and Reſtoration. Gr. Naz. ſaith of the Soul (z) ἡ ἐκ Θεοῦ καὶ θεία, καὶ τῆς ἄνωθεν εὐγενείας μετέχουσα, ſhe is from God and Divine, and partaketh of the ſupernal Nobility, which is alſo her (a) ἀρχαία εὐγένεια, ancient Nobility. She is of God, not only in a general way, as all Beings are of God their Creator; nor only as being of more than human Original (God being peculiarly (b) ὁ πατὴρ τῶν ψυχῶν, the Father of Souls or Spirits:) But if ſhe was originally poſſeſs'd of the Divine Image, ſhe was of God as iſſuing from Paternal Sanctity. She is Divine, as of a Nobleneſs and Execllency tranſcending the things Human, and as (c) τὰ ἄϋλα καὶ ἀσώματα, the things that tranſcend Body and Matter are ſtiled Divine. An Hebrew Doctor calleth the Iſraelites Souls (d) Divine as being incorruptible and eternal; and in ſuch Senſe (e) Socrates ſpeaking as a Metaphyſical Theologer affirm'd, Animos hominum eſſe Divinos, that the Souls of Men are Divine. They are Divine as of Kin to God in ſublime Metaphyſical Properties and Perfections (being immaterial, immortal, intelligent, free agent, &c.) in ſuch Senſe all human Souls are Divine: But ſome of them are peculiarly denominated Divine as being divinely virtuous according to that of Cicero. (f) Omnium quidem animos immortales eſſe, ſed fortium bonorumque Divinos, the Souls of all are immortal, but the Souls of the heroically Good are Divine. In ſuch Senſe (as being divinely virtuous) the Souls of all Men were in their Original Creation Divine. For they have not ſo totally loſt the Divine Image, but that there are in unregenerate Mankind (g) Reliquiæ imaginis Dei, the feeble Remains, the weak Relicks of the Image of God, the rudera or broken pieces of our firſt building. Every Soul of Man therefore was once poſſeſs'd of the Divine Image, and was originally of the Divine Family. They were created for the buſineſs of Sanctity and Religion, in the State of Sanctity and Religion (which is the State of Citizenſhip and Society with God) and they could not be originally created inept for their end and uſe. The Soul-goods and the Soul-happineſs were deſign'd them in their Original Creation (as the Terreſtrial-animal Goods are deſign'd for Men in their Terreſtrial-animal Creation;) therefore they were created in an holy and divinely happy Condition. A Soul devoid of the Divine-virtuous Image is neceſſarily a lapſed Soul (a Soul fallen from its Original Condition, its true Excellency and Felicity,) which inferreth, that ſhe was originally poſſeſs'd of it. The deſign and end of the Chriſtian Regeneration is, that the degenerate Soul of Man may recover the Divine Image, Chriſtian Divines look upon it as a Reduction and Reſtauration of what was before, as Paulinus ſpeaketh. (b) Ut mihi per Chriſtum Cœleſtis imago rediret.

(i) What there is in our Regeneration, we muſt be ſuppos'd to have been poſſeſs'd of in the more ancient State. The Souls of Men therefore exiſted antecedently to their now lapſed State. And this Inference may be made from Grotius's excellent Note upon the Parable of the Prodigal Son. (k) Homines omnes ortu Dei ſunt Filii, ut hæc Fabula declarat, ſed eo jure excidunt ſemet à Deo alienando. All Men originally are the Sons of God, as this Parable declareth, but they loſe that Priviledge by alienating themſelves from God. Hence when a Man is converted and regenerated, he is ſaid to be (l) Deo ſuo reſtitutus, reſtored to his God. Therefore he did ſometime before belong to God as one of his Divine Family. So the loſt Sheep and the loſt Groat that afterwards were found, were ſometime before in the Poſſeſſion of their Owner.

IX. The mighty Benefits which Chriſtianity bringeth to the Souls of Men, are the recovering and reſtoring what was, not the Introduction of what never was, as both ancient and modern Divines pronounce with great conſent. (m) We had not only blemiſh'd God's Image, but ſet the Devil's Face and Superſcription upon God's Coyn. For Righteouſneſs, there was Sin; for Purity, Pollution; for Beauty, Deformity; for Rectitude, Perverſeneſs; for the Man, a Beaſt; ſcarce any thing left, whereby God might know us. Venit Filius, ut iterum ſignet; the Son cometh, and with his Blood reviveth the firſt Character. (n) Cujus inſtaurandæ gratia miſſum à Patre eſſe Filium, plerique omnes antiqui prædicant. For the reſtoring whereof the Father ſent the Son, as the Ancients generally ſay. Chriſt deſcended to us, that we might aſcend to him, ſaith Paulinus (o) that we may be truly reformed to the Original Glory, if by the imitation of Chriſt we gain the Divine Similitude. Athanaſius ſaith, that Chriſt came (p) that being the Image of the Father, he might again create Man after his Image. The coming and Philanthropy of our Saviour (q) hath recalled us from the oppoſite Village into his heavenly City. (r) Chriſt ſendeth his Spirit into the Souls of Believers, transforming them εἰς εἶδος τὸ ἐν ἀρχαῖς, into the ancient and original form. (s) Ἀποδοὺς τῇ φύσει τὸ κατ' εἰκόνα, καὶ τὸ πρῶτον ἀξίωμα, reſtoring this to Nature, to be after the Divine Image, and to have its firſt Dignity, ſaith Andreas

(w) The Power of Godlin. by Mr. John Ball. p. 419.

(x) Mr. Herbert Poems. p. 104. Ed. 2. Vanity.

(y) Ep. 79. & 120.

(z) Orat. 1. p. 8.

(a) S. Chryſoſt. T. 8. p. 145.

(b) Simplic. in Epict. p. 179.

(c) Niceph. in Syneſ. p. 377.

(d) Jacchiad. in Dan. 8. 4.

(e) Cic. de Amicit.

(f) De Leg. l. 2.

(g) S. Aug. de Sp. & Lit. c. 28.

(h) In Panegyr. Celſ.

(i) Ὅπερ ἡ ἀνακαίνισις ἔχει, τοῦτο κεκλῆσθαι πάντως καὶ τὴν ἀρχαιότητα προσήκει νοεῖν. S. Cyr. 13. Theſ. p. 135.

(k) Not. in Luc. 15. 19.

(l) S. Cyprian. de orat. domin.

(m) Mr. Farindon. Ser. on Heb. 2. 17.

(n) Petav. T. 4. Par. 1. l. 2. c. 7.

(o) Ut verè ad originale gloriam reformemur, ſi divina ſimilitudinem Chriſti imitatio capiamus. Ep. 2. p. 24.

(p) Ἵν' ὡς εἰκὼν ὢν τοῦ πατρὸς, τὸν κατ' εἰκόνα ἄνθρω ἀνακτίσαι δυνηθῇ. De Incar verb. p. 47. Commel.

(q) Ἀνεκαλέσατο ἡμᾶς ἐ τῆς κατέναντι κώμης εἰς τ ἐπουράνιον αὐτοῦ πόλιν. In ill profect. in pag. p. 777.

(r) S. Cyr. Dial. 7. de Tri p. 638.

(s) Ap. P tav. p

Cretenſis. So Maximus the Martyr ſaith, (t) that the deſign of his Incarnation, was to make us partakers of a Divine Nature, ὡς ἐπ' ἀρχῆς, as in the beginning. Epiphanius compareth God to a Potter, who taketh care of the Veſſel (the Body) which he had made, (u) in the Regeneration (the Reſurrection) to form again the Veſſel into its ancient Splendor. They are ſplendid, radiant and celeſtial Bodies, which holy Souls ſhall wear at the Reſurrection; if their Bodies were anciently ſuch, they could be nothing leſs than heavenly Citizens, that had Domicilium in Urbe, their Manſion in the City. In their new Creation they are deſign'd for heavenly Bodies and for the heavenly Regions; therefore they were deſign'd for ſuch in their Original Creation. By their new Creation and the Settlement of Chriſtianity they have the State of Sanctity and of heavenly Citizenſhip; therefore they had it by their Original Creation and the Settlement of Original Sanctity. To reform is to reſtore, according to our Saviour's rule, from the beginning it was not ſo. So the uſual and natural courſe of things is, to return to their Original. (w) The deſign of Chriſtianity to Regenerate Souls into the holy Life and to raiſe them to the heavenly State of Life, implieth, that they are fallen from both, as the Fathers implicitly affirm, when they ſuppoſe, that the Renovation of Souls into the Divine Image is their Reſtauration. For if their Regeneration into that Branch of the Divine Image the Life Divine is their Reſtauration, common Reaſon will ſuggeſt, that their Regeneration into that other Branch of the Divine Image a Divine Body, muſt neceſſarily be their Reſtauration alſo. For Grace and Glory are two Branches of one and the ſame Divine Image inſeparably connex'd, that differ only gradually (the one is a degree and inchoation of the other;) and all that are regenerate into the holy Life, are (in ſome degree) regenerate into an Heavenly and Divine Body.

We applaud therefore theſe Sayings of the Fathers, which affirm, that the intent of Chriſt's coming was our Reſtauration: But not ſuch as ſeem, to affirm, that the intent of Chriſt's coming was nothing more than to repair the Fall of Adam in his Terreſtrial Paradiſe. (x) That we may regain in Chriſt Jeſus, that which we had loſt in Adam, the Image and Similitude of God. That by the Oeconomy of the Tree we might regain that, which we had negligently loſt by the Tree. That what was loſt of old in Adam by the Tree, might be reſtor'd by the Tree of Chriſt's Paſſion. In the Acts of the Nicene Council (y) Macarius Biſhop of Jeruſalem ſaith, that Chriſt came, ut inſtauraret quæ per primorum parentum lapſum fuerant ſoluta. In S. Chryſoſtom's Works there is an Homily upon this Subject, that the firſt Man caſt away the Divine Image, but Man who is now become Brute-like πάλιν αὐτὴν ἀπέλαβε, hath got it again by the new Adam. If theſe Sayings mean, that Chriſt came only to reſtore what we loſt by the Sin of Adam in his Terreſtrial Paradiſe, they are far from deſerving applauſe. For the State of Sanctity and of heavenly Citizenſhip which Chriſtianity bringeth us, was not the State of the Terreſtrial Adam in his Innocency. There is no appearance of the Divine Image according to Chriſtianity ſhining in his Soul, nor was his Body any thing more than an Animal-kind of Body. (z) O myſtic Miracle! the Lord was bowed down and Man roſe up: And he that fell but from Paradiſe, receiveth Heaven a greater reward of his Obedience. Heaven is much more than the Reſtauration of an earthly Paradiſe loſt. If it muſt be counted nothing more than the Reſtauration of what was before, an heavenly State and an heavenly World of Souls muſt be Præ-exiſtent, and this World of Rationals muſt be made out of the ruins of the heavenly World.

X. Againſt the Chriſtians vulgar Hiſtorical Theology as extravagant in its account of Original Sin the Jews make this Objection, (a) All Souls have their Origin, not from Adam, but from God the Creator. Hence this conſequence is certain and evident, the Souls of the Poſterity of Adam could not Sin in him. This Argument is (by them that pretend to anſwer it) called a vulgar Objection, which doth not argue the Weakneſs, but the mighty Strength of it, and that it is a plain and obvious Truth, which all Men eaſily underſtand. For all Men eaſily underſtand the difference between the Body and the rational Soul of Man; and that as to what Man is valuably, ſubſtantially, durably, moſt properly and in the main, the Soul and the Soul only is the Man. That the proper Nature of Man conſiſteth in that which ſurmounteth the Nature of Brute-animals, and ſo doth his proper Happineſs. That by their rational Soul only Men are conſtituted intelligent and free Agents, capable of Duty and Virtue and of Sin, of Well-doing and Evil-doing, deſerving of Commendation and Blame, Rewards and Puniſhments, and are qualified to live under Laws and moral Government. That in all Government Juſtice is adminiſtred, Rewards and Puniſhments are diſtributed according to the Mind and Wills of Men; they are reputed evil Men and evil Doers becauſe of their evil Mind and Will; and if they do that which is Evil to others, but altogether unwittingly and unwillingly, againſt their Mind and Will, it is not imputed to them (nor are they thanked or commended for doing that which is Good, if they had no Mind, Will or Intention to do it;) ſo that as to what he muſt be judged by, a Man is his Mind and Will, and the Mind and Will and nothing elſe is the Man. As his Soul is affected and addicted, ſuch is the Man; his Soul is the Seat of his Vices and Virtues, the Principle, Motive and end of his Actions (whence they are chiefly denominated Good or Evil) is in the Soul, therein is the truth and reality of Goodneſs and Wickedneſs, and therein is the true nobleneſs, excellency and accompliſhments of Man. The Soul is ſo noble (in reſpect of her Nature, Faculties, Operations, Capacities, Kindred, Deſcent and Duration,) and of ſo vaſt Importance, that there is no compariſon between the World and the Soul. The chief (and in compariſon) the only care

(t) Ibid. Pet. 2. l. 12. c. 1. §. 15.

(u) Ἵνα αὖθις ἐν τῇ παλιγγενεσίᾳ ἀνασκευάσῃ τὸ ἄγγος ἐν τῇ ἀναστάσει εἰς τὴν ἀρχαίαν φαιδρότητα. T. 3. l. 1. Hær. 37.

(w) Ortus cuncta ſuos repetunt. Maximian. Ita in fontem refluunt, & in ſemet omnia revolvuntur, nullo artifice, nec judice, nec auctore. Min. Fel. p. 38. Boeth. de Conſ. Phil. l. 4. p. 226. Semper enim ſimilis eſt finis initiis. Origen. περὶ ἀρχ. l. 1. c. 6.

(x) Ut quod perdideramus in Adam, id eſt ſecundum imaginem & ſimilitudinem eſſe Dei, hoc in Chriſto Jeſu reciperemus. Iren. adv. Hær. l. 3. c. 20. Ut quod per lignum negligenter amiſeramus, nec inveniebamus, recepturi eſſemus iterum per ligni diſpoſitionem. Ibid. l. 5. Ut quod perierat olim per lignum in Adam, id reſtitueretur per lignum Chriſti. Tertull. adv. Jud. c. 13.

(y) P. 340. ed. col. 1605.

(z) Ὦ θαύματος μυστικοῦ! κέκλιται μὲν ὁ κύριος ἀνέστη δὲ ἄνθρωπος· καὶ ὁ ἐκ τοῦ παραδείσου πεσὼν, μεῖζον ὑπακοῆς ἆθλον οὐρανοὺς ἀπολαμβάνει. Clem. προτρ. p. m. 51.

(a) Hoornbeek c. Jud. l. 4. c. 2.

of Mankind ought to be the Soul's Welfare (that ſhe be not deprav'd, loſt and caſt away;) the Work of Religion is Soul-work, and the buſineſs, end and deſign of it, is to ſave Souls, to make them holy and happy for ever. The main of the Lapſe of Mankind therefore is the Lapſe of the Soul from her Holineſs and Happineſs, and whether ſuch a lapſed Condition can accrue to the Souls of Men from the Fall of Adam in his Terreſtrial Paradiſe, was a grand Debate in the Pelagian Controverſie. (b) For the Catholicks found themſelves incumbred with this inſuperable Difficulty, and were not able to give a tolerably good account, how from Adam and his Fall the Souls of all his Poſterity deriv'd Original Sin? Some thought, that human Souls were by Traduction, and ſo the Souls of the Children received an Infection from the Souls of the Parents. But they might as well have ſaid, that there is no ſuch thing as a Soul properly ſo called, nor any thing in the World but Body and Matter variouſly modified; for the Soul muſt be ſuch, if one human Soul of a Parent can, Generate and Propagate Forty or Fifty human Souls of his Children. Others were of Opinion, that human Souls were immediately created by God in the Generation of Mankind. But S. Auſtin acknowledgeth, that this Opinion is irreconcileable with Original Sin. For thus he writeth to Optatus. Se neque legendo, neque orando, neque ratiocinando invenire potuiſſe, quomodo cum animarum creatione peccatum originis defendatur. That neither by reading, nor praying, nor reaſoning, he could find out how Original Sin can conſiſt with the Creation of Souls. But ſome think, that they have found out (what S. Auſtin could not) a method of reconciling Original Sin with the immediate Creation of Souls. (c) For they ſuppoſe, that Original Sin is propagated from Adam to his Poſterity, not in a way of Phyſical efficiency, but morally and by way of Merit. That by his Tranſgreſſion he merited this penal Evil for the Souls of all his Poſterity, that they ſhould be depriv'd of Original Righteouſneſs; accordingly, God in creating them depriveth them of it (imputing the Sin of Adam to all his Children,) which deprivation is on God's part Puniſhment, but on their part it is Sin (Sin Original) as being carentia juſtitiæ ineſſe debitæ, a want of that Righteouſneſs which ought to be in the Soul. Thus the State and Life of Grace (and conſequently the inheritance of the Kingdom of Heaven) is ſuppoſed to have been entailed upon the Terreſtrial-animal Adam and his Terreſtrial-animal Heirs, muſt have deſcended to his Terreſtrial-animal Family, if he had not ſinned; and the holy heavenly Life muſt have been of earthly, fleſhly and natural Generation. Thus all our Spiritual and Soul-concerns are ſuppos'd, to have been entruſted in the hands of a Terreſtrial-animal Man (to ſave or loſe them,) and he is impower'd to blaſt, kill and ruinate the Souls of all Men without any Conſent or Fault of their own. Thus Regeneration muſt be ſuppos'd, to be the Reſtauration of the Divine Image in the Souls of Men, that never had it; the Souls of Men muſt be ſuppoſed to be created by God horribly inept for their end and uſe; and if we ask, whence is it, that the Souls of all Infants are (more or leſs) graceleſs, ſinful and wicked in Diſpoſition (privatively and poſitively) this Hypotheſis anſwereth, God createth and maketh them ſuch. But is this an honourary Character of the Deity? Is not this ſuppos'd Creation a making him the Cauſe and Author of Sin and that by way of Phyſical Efficiency? Is it conſiſtent with the Divine Sanctity, Goodneſs and Juſtice, to inflict theſe dreadful Spiritual Plagues, Blindneſs, Pravity, Spiritual Death, a deprivation of the Divine Image and the Holy Spirit, the loſs of God and his Favour and of the Divine Sonſhip and Citizenſhip (with all other Spiritual Honours and Felicities) upon the Souls of all Infants, that never did any thing to deſerve them? Or becauſe through the Sin of Adam the Animal Nature of Mankind is juſtly ſubjected to the courſe of Nature (and therefore to many Evils,) is it reaſonable, to ſuppoſe, that for his Offence all Mankind may juſtly be depriv'd of all their Soul-goods, and be ſubjected to the contrary Evils? How much more agreeably both to Philoſophy and Religion doth the noble Frenchman affirm (d) humana natura ſeſe ipſa corrupit, quatenus in ſeſe & ex ſeſe evanida facta eſt, & quodammodo evappuit. The human Soul hath corrupted her ſelf, as having in and of her ſelf become degenerate. In anima culpa generis humani fuerit, oportet. The fault and crime of Mankind muſt have been in the Soul. S. Auſtin that was extremely heſitant touching the Origin of the Soul, yet was not heſitant touching the Origine of Evil. (e) Certùs ſum, animam nulla Dei culpa, nulla Dei neceſſitate vel ſua, ſed propria voluntate in peccatum eſſe collapſam. I am certain, that not by any fault of God, not by any neceſſity of his or her own, but by her own Will the Soul is lapſed into Sin. Lapſed Souls (devoid of the holy vital Nature) are ſubjected to the courſe of Nature (as well as our Terreſtrial-animal Nature,) their Lapſe in part conſiſteth in being ſubjected to the courſe of Nature: But to ſubject newly created Souls to the courſe of Nature, is to ſubject them to the Reign and Domination of Sin (that reigneth over all Mankind in the courſe of Nature,) which is extremely harſh and incongruous. And in Philoſophy it is incongruous, to ſuppoſe an immediate creative Agency and Operation of God in every Generation of a Child; as in Theology it is incongruous, to ſuppoſe, that God with his immediate creative Agency attendeth all the impure mixtures of Inceſt, Adultery (and ſuch more) ſo furniſhing them with human Souls.

XI. In the Lapſe of Mankind there is much more Penal Evil, than can be deriv'd from the Puniſhment of Adam in his Terreſtrial Paradiſe. For the Puniſhment which was laid upon Eve in Paradiſe (which the Jews call Ten Maledictions) and the Penalties which Adam was ſubjected to upon his Tranſgreſſion there (which as the Jews ſay, were Nine Puniſhments beſides Death) may not unfitly be called Pœna Temporaria, a Temporary kind of Puniſhment, (f) as P. Fagius calleth them. For as the beneficial part of his Paradiſaical Oeconomy was nothing elſe but the enjoyment of his earthly Paradiſe, a ſuſpenſion of the courſe of Nature as to inordinate Concupiſcence, the Evils of this Life and bodily Death: So the Penal part of it was nothing elſe but the loſs of his earthly Paradiſe, his being ſubjected to the courſe of Nature as to the inordinacy of Concupiſcence, the Evils of this Life and bodily Death. Theſe Evils reaſonably and agreeably to the holy Scriptures fairly interpreted may be deriv'd (either wholly or in great part) from the Fall of Adam: But there are other and greater Penal Evils in the Lapſe of Mankind, which are not at all derivable from

(b) Voſſ. Hiſt Pelag. l. 2. Par. 3. Theſ. 1.

(c) Voſſ. ſupr. Hoornbeek c. Jud. l. 4. c. 2 p. 357.

(d) Morn. Pleſſ. de V. R. C. c. 16, 17.

(e) Ep. 28.

(f) In Gen. 3. 19.

from it. For the Souls of all the Children of Adam in their now Original State have loſt their proper Life and their holy State (which is in an Ocean of deadly Evils) they have loſt their God and themſelves, which muſt be their own doing. (g) For as the Soul is the Life of the Body, ſo God is the Life of the Soul. God loſt is the Death of the Soul, as the Soul loſt is the Death of the Body. The Death of the Body is neceſſary, the Death of the Soul is voluntary.

(g) Sicut Anima eſt vita corporis, ſic vita Animæ eſt Deus. Deus amiſſus mors Animæ. Anima amiſſa mors corporis. Mors corporis neceſſaria, mors Animæ voluntaria. S. Aug. de verb. Dom Ser. 6.

The ſpiritual Death of the Soul cannot be involuntary, (h) for it is ἀρετῆς φθορὰ, her becoming vicious and the deſtruction of her Virtue, which nothing can deſtroy but her own Sin; therefore it was not the Sin of Adam in his Terreſtrial Paradiſe, that depriv'd the Souls of his Poſterity of Original Righteouſneſs in the Senſe of the Schools. (i) The Soul that ſinneth, it ſhall (ſpiritually) die. For it dieth as to the Lord, not by infirmity of Nature, but of Fault. No place of Scripture affirmeth, that the Death of the Soul is the Effect or Puniſhment of the Terreſtrial Adam's Tranſgreſſion. If S. Paul had ſuppoſed, that all Men in their now Original State are not only ſubjected to bodily Death, but dead as to Spirituals and Eternals by Adam's Tranſgreſſion, he would not have confin'd his Diſcourſes touching the State of Sin and Death which Adam introduc'd, to bodily Death, as he perpetually doth.

(h) Grot. not. in Luc. 15. 24.

(i) Anima quæ peccat ipſa morietur. Moritur enim Domino: Non Naturæ infirmitate, ſed culpa S. Ambroſ. de Fid. reſur. or. 2. & de Fide l. 3. c. 2. & de bono mort. c. 2.

XII. In the Lapſe of Mankind there is much more criminal Evil than the Sin of Adam in his Terreſtrial Paradiſe, which was neither more nor leſs than the eating of a Symbolical Tree, which cannot reaſonably be ſuppos'd introductive of all the criminal and penal Evils that are in the Lapſe of Mankind. They that freely uſe their Reaſon, can ſcarce abſtain from nauſeating this vulgar Dogma, that the Souls of all Men are blaſted and ruinated meerly for the Fault of their Progenitor after the Fleſh, and that in ſuch Senſe Adam primus Homo damnavit ſecula pomo.

His eating the forbidden Fruit is ſaid, to have been a direct and formal Rebellion, a publick renunciation of Obedience, an univerſal Apoſtacy from God and Change of the laſt end, that extinguiſh'd the habit of Original Righteouſneſs. Some ſay, (k) It was an open Profeſſion, that he would not be under God, and renouncing of him to be his Lord. Which Exaggeration of its Criminality will appear incredible, if we compare the Sin of Adam (who was a Rebel againſt his Soveraign Lord) with the many Rebellions of the ancient Iſraelites, particularly their Rebellion in worſhipping the Golden Calf. Of which the Book Coſri rightly ſaith (l) that Sin was not an univerſal Apoſtacy from his Worſhip that brought them out of Egypt, it was only a Rebellion againſt part of his Precepts. The Sin of Adam was a Rebel-kind of Sinning (as all the voluntary, choſen and deliberate kind of Sinning is,) but there is no appearance, that in eating the forbidden Fruit he became either an Atheiſt, or a Worſhipper of falſe Gods, or a Confederate with the Devil (as Witches are;) and he muſt become one of theſe, if his Sin was a renouncing God and an univerſal Apoſtacy from him. His Sin was a great Sin and involv'd in it many Sins (as all willfull and deliberate Sins do,) yet it cannot reaſonably be ſuppoſed any thing more than a particular Act of Sin (or Rebellion:) But the Fall of Angels was much more than ſo; for they betook themſelves to a courſe and State of Rebellion, and made a total Revolt from God, his Service, Society and Kingdom. Their Apoſtacy therefore was a much greater Criminal Evil than Adam's eating the forbidden Fruit, which was but a particular Act of Sin, done and paſt in a moment, and from which (m) if ſome miſtake not, he was reſtor'd the ſame day. Many Writers of Morality have diſcourſed, that the Phyſical good, (bonum Phyſicum,) of Mankind is the Reaſon, Root and Scope of the Moral Good (Bonum Morale,) which tendeth to the Phyſical Good (or the Happineſs and Advantage,) of Mankind in general, and is oppoſite to their Phyſical Evil. If this is a good account of Morality, ſuch a Sin, wherein there is a great Phyſical Evil, muſt be far greater cætera ſi ſint Paria, than ſuch an one, wherein there is nothing, or but little of Phyſical Evil; and conſequently the unlawful eating the forbidden Fruit muſt not be thought a Sin of ſuch a magnitude, as the crucifying the Son of God. The Sin of eating the forbidden Fruit had all its ſinfulneſs and all its aggravations from the Moral Evils, which it involv'd (Infidelity, Diſobedience, Pride, Contempt of God, Ingratitude, Senſuality;) and ſeeing all the choſen and deliberate, the rebel and preſumptuous kind of Sins do involve in them the ſame Moral Evils, it muſt not be thought (upon the account of thoſe Moral Evils) to tranſcend the ſize of other rebel and preſumptuous Sins. The literal eating the Fruit of a Tree in Paradiſe is generally thought the violation only of a poſitive Precept touching a thing in it ſelf wholly indifferent (that had no Phyſical or Moral Evil in it,) which therefore ſeemeth not the greateſt Sin that ever was committed. Chriſtians that have a lively ſenſe of Sin, and are affected with Horrour at the thoughts of it, (ſo far as I can diſcern) are affected with far greater Horrour at the thoughts of many other atrocious Sins than of this Adamical Tranſgreſſion, which even Tertullian ſtileth (n) unius arbuſculæ delibatio. Profane Perſons are apt, to have very ſlight thoughts of it, and uſually look upon it as a Peccadillo, as Pope Julius the Third did, when he thus excus'd his intemperate Anger. If God was ſo angry with our firſt Parents propter Pomum, he might well be allow'd to be angry propter Pavonem.

(k) Mr. Mede on Gen. 3. 13, 14, 15.

(l) P. 57. ed. Buxtorf.

(m) The Patriarchal Sabbath by J. S. p. 156.

(n) Adv. Marcion. l. 1.

XIII. The Old Teſtament-œconomy was deſign'd by Divine Wiſdom, to conſiſt of Symbolical and Typical Inſtitutes, of which many look both backward and forward, they are Adumbrations of Hiſtorical things paſt, and alſo Types and Adumbrations of Evangelical things to come. (o) The Iſraelites Paſſeover was (by ſignificative Rites) a lively Adumbration and Memorial of their Egyptian Thraldom and of their Deliverance out of it, which was paſt; and it was alſo a lively Adumbration and Type of the Chriſtians Paſſeover that was to come. The Judaical Sabbath was an Adumbration and Memorial of God's Creation-work, which was paſt; and alſo a Type and Adumbration of the Chriſtians reſt, which was to come, Heb. 4.4. So the Judaical Tabernacle and Temple as it looketh backward, was a Symbol and Adumbration of Heaven, the Courts of it of the ſeveral Regions of Heaven, the Lamps of its Golden Candleſtick of the ſeven Planets: And as it looketh forward (towards things to come) it was a typical Adumbration of Chriſt Jeſus (who was the Temple of the Godhead, Col. 2. 9. Heb. 10. 20.) and of the Church of Regenerate Chriſtians, who are God's Spiritual Temple and Holy Habitation, 1 Cor. 3. 16, 17. 2 Cor. 6. 16. Eph. 2. 21. The ſame account muſt be given of the Moſaical Paradiſe, the Inſtitutes whereof are σκιὰ τῶν μελλόντων, a ſhadow of good things to come, as they look forward. And as they look backward, they are an Adumbration of an antecedent lapſe of Mankind, which the Fall of our firſt Parents in their Terreſtrial Paradiſe was deſign'd to repreſent. For the Terreſtrial Paradiſe with its delectable things was plainly an Adumbration of the Heavenly Paradiſe; their State in the Terreſtrial Paradiſe (wherein the courſe of Nature was ſuſpended) adumbrateth the Heavenly State of Life; their natural Innocency adumbrateth our original Sanctity; their eating the forbidden Fruit by the ſuggeſtion of a Serpent adumbrateth our criminal lapſe through the temptation of Satan; their expulſion out of Paradiſe adumbrateth our Exile from Heaven; and the Cherubims plac'd at the entrance of the Garden of Eden with a flaming Sword, to keep the way of the Tree of Life, ſignifie, that we have loſt our right to Life and Immortality, our excluſion from it and an impoſſibility of our regaining it. So thoſe Beaſt-Skins wherewith our firſt Parents were cloath'd, are ſymbolical and ſignificative of thoſe animaliſh and bruitiſh Bodies, wherewith Parental Providence cloatheth lapſed Souls, and which now we wear in our fallen Eſtate. (p) So Origen allegorically interpreteth the Cloathing of Beaſts Skins, and it is reaſonable (in this Inſtance) to follow his Interpretation; for who can doubt of an Interpretation grounded upon ſo appoſite a Correſpondence of things, the Contexture of the Moſaic Hiſtory of Paradiſe, and the Hypotheſis of an Ante-moſaical pre-exiſtence and lapſe of Humane Souls? which is thus far a matter of great certainty; it is certain, that the Chriſtian Theology is a ſublimer ſort of Theology than meerly our Vulgar-hiſtorical Theology. And it is certain, plain and demonſtrable, that the Hiſtory of the Bible aſcendeth no higher than to an Introduction to Chriſtianity, that ſuppoſeth an antecedent lapſe of Souls; which lapſe of Souls is thus deſcribed by S. Athanaſius. (q) The Soul of Men did not continue ſuch, as ſhe was originally made; but ſuch as ſhe hath made her ſelf by defiling her ſelf, ſuch ſhe now is: for ſhe was made to ſee God and to be illuminated by him; but inſtead of God ſhe hath ſought out corruptible things and Darkneſs. Divines generally ſay, That Heaven is the place, where Souls were produc'd; and whether is it more reaſonable, to ſay, that they were immediately exil'd from thence without any fault of theirs, or that they ſtay'd there for ſome time, and their Exile from thence was their lapſe?

(o) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 1. c. 11. S. 3.

XIV. The Hypotheſis of Pre-exiſtence muſt be cleanſed from the Paganical Vanities, that adhere to it; ſuch as thoſe that Origen heedleſly entertain'd; (r) that Souls for want of Mind came into theſe groſs Bodies, and that their Happineſs lieth in returning to Mind; that they are from Eternity; and that there is an endleſs Circuit of Souls aſcending and deſcending, and of alternate Beatitude and Miſery. The lapſe of Souls which Pre-exiſtence implieth, muſt not be conſider'd as Solitary, but as complicate with the lapſe of our firſt Parents in their Paradiſe. Men's Bodies muſt not be thought the Priſons of their Souls; nor ought we to ſay, that the lapſed Souls of Men are thruſt down into theſe Terreſtrial Bodies, to be puniſh'd for their former Prevarications, as the Pagan Theologers ſuppos'd; for thus S. Hierom hath rightly expreſs'd their Dogma: (s) That the Souls of Men are lapſed from Heaven, and according to the diverſity of their Merits in ſuch and ſuch Bodies they ſuffer the Puniſhments of their ancient Sins. So Origen (as S. Auſtin ſaith of him) ſuppos'd, that the World was therefore made, that Souls for the Merit of their Sins might be penally inclos'd in Bodies as Priſons: Diſcarding theſe Unchriſtian Extravagancies the Hypotheſis of Pre-exiſtence ought to be thus repreſented; The Souls of Men by their lapſe complicated with the lapſe of our firſt Parents are now become ſubjected to the courſe of Nature and of Parental Providence the Author of Nature, whereby they are put to the beſt uſe that they are capable of, which is to conſtitute this World of civil Society (and withall they are deſign'd to be recover'd from their lapſe according to Chriſtianity,) which World of Civil Society was conſtituted by making our firſt Parents and deriving the reſt of Mankind from them. There is not any Hypotheſis touching the Origin of the Soul, that is ſo Rational and Religious as the Hypotheſis of Pre-exiſtence thus repreſented; nor is there any, that is incumbred with ſo few Difficulties: for although a little Army of Objections is muſter'd up againſt it, yet not any of them is of any great ſtrength ſave one, which I will fully propoſe, and as fully anſwer. (t) Juſtitiæ convenit, ut delictorum ob quæ ſontes plectuntur, non aboleatur memoria; cùm ut ad qualemcunque reſipiſcentiam ex reatûs conſcientia & pœnæ ſenſu perducantur, tùm ut Juſtitiæ ultricis majeſtatem agnoſcerent, diſcerentque juſtitiam moniti & non temnere Divos: quo ſpectat illud Tertulliani, Evacuabitur ratio judicii, ſi meritorum deerit ſenſus: igitur cùm olim peccatum eſſe non agnoſcimus, cur pœnam inde infligi cenſeamus? (u) It ſuppoſeth God, to inflict the Severities of his Juſtice without attaining any ends of Juſtice or of Puniſhment; for to what purpoſe is it, to inflict Penalties upon any Perſon for Offences, of which he is invincibly ignorant? as ignorant as if they had never been committed? If therefore the Calamities of this Life were inflicted upon us only as Puniſhments of Sins committed in another, Providence would have provided ſome effectual means, to preſerve thoſe Sins in our Memories. If they be not preſerv'd in our Memories, Mankind will have an invincible temptation to have hard thoughts of God's dealings with them; for if it will not conſiſt with his Righteouſneſs and Benignity, to place us in thoſe ſad Circumſtances which we are in, unleſs thereby to puniſh us for our former Prevarications (as the Patrons of Pre-exiſtence diſpute,) when we know our ſelves to be in this ſad plight, and yet are utterly deſtitute of all knowledge, how we deſerv'd it, what can we more reaſonably infer, than that God hath contrary to all the Laws of Juſtice and Equity made us wretched and miſerable?

(p) V. P. Fag. in Gen. 3. 21. Gataker. Cinn. p. 202. in Ant. p. 351. Gr. Naz. p. 619.

(q) Ἡ ψυχὴ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, οὐχ ὁποία γέγονε, τοιαύτη καὶ ἔμεινεν· ἀλλ᾽ ὁποίαν ἑαυτὴν ἐνέφυρε, τοιαύτη καὶ φαίνεται. γέγονε μὲν γὰρ, εἰς τὸ ὁρᾶν τὸν Θεὸν, καὶ ὑπ᾽ αὐτοῦ φωτίζεσθαι· αὕτη δὲ ἀντὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ τὰ φθαρτὰ καὶ τὸ σκότος ἐζήτησεν. Orat. c. Gentes p. 6. com.

(r) Περὶ ἀρχῶν, l. 3. c. 5.

(s) V. El. Cret. Com. in Gr. Naz. or. 31.

(t) Dr. Barrow opuſcul. p. 44.

(u) Sa. Parker of the Pre-exiſt. of Souls, p. 176, 177.

This Objection is levell'd againſt Pre-exiſtence miſrepreſented; for the Hypotheſis of Pre-exiſtence is not ſo much deſign'd, to give an account of the Puniſhments that are here inflicted upon Mankind, as of the ſinful degeneracy of Mankind (the cauſe of thoſe Puniſhments,) whence it is, that Mankind are become a Generation of Ungodly Sinners and under the Domination of their ghoſtly deadly Enemies. The lapſe of Souls which it implieth, correſpondeth to the lapſe of our firſt Parents; they that make this Objection againſt Pre-exiſtence, may as juſtly make it againſt the Puniſhment of Mankind for the Prevarication of Adam and Eve; and if they can give an Anſwer to it, as it is an Objection againſt that generally receiv'd Hypotheſis, the ſame Anſwer may be given to it, as it is an Objection againſt Pre-exiſtence. For as our uſual Theology will not ſay, that lapſed Mankind are thruſt into this World, to be puniſh'd for the former Prevarication of our firſt Parents, although they are puniſh'd for that former Prevarication: So the Aſſerters of Pre-exiſtence ought not to ſay, that the lapſed Souls of Men are thruſt down into theſe Terreſtrial Bodies, to be puniſh'd for their former Prevarications, although they are puniſh'd for their former Prevarications. As lapſed Mankind are no otherwiſe puniſh'd for the former Prevarication of our firſt Parents, than to be ſubjected to the courſe of Nature: So the lapſed Souls of Men are no otherwiſe puniſh'd for their former Prevarication, than to be ſubjected to the courſe of Nature. As all lapſed Mankind are ſubjected to the courſe of Nature for the former Prevarication of our firſt Parents, yet God is not oblig'd, to give them all notice of that former Prevarication as the cauſe of their Puniſhment (for how ſmall a part of Mankind ever heard of Adam and Eve?) So all the lapſed Souls of Men are ſubjected to the courſe of Nature for their former Prevarication, yet God is not oblig'd, to give them notice of their former Prevarication, as the cauſe of the Puniſhment which they ſuffer. For ſuch Puniſhment which is ſubjection to the courſe of Nature, muſt be diſtinguiſh'd from ſuch Puniſhment, which is ſubjection to courſe of Law (Law-proceedings:) The former of theſe is the Puniſhment of lapſed Angels, who are thruſt down into Priſon; for to condemn and commit Malefactors to Priſon, is not courſe of Nature, but of Law. Such Puniſhment which is ſubjection to courſe of Law (in the Senſe of this Diſtribution) falleth not within the courſe of Nature; what falleth within the courſe of Nature, (w) all People diſtinguiſh from their Law. By their Law (Civil or Natural, Humane or Divine) Children and Fools are not ſentenc'd to Death; but by the eſtabliſh'd courſe of Nature they are ordinarily put to Death: They that incur the higheſt Penalties in Law (as the lapſed Angels have done) may be nothing more than factive Criminals: but Mankind are under this Puniſhment to be ſubjected to the courſe of Nature, whence they are neceſſarily Native Criminals. In ſuch Puniſhment which is Subjection to courſe of Law, the Fact original of the Puniſhment muſt be notic'd (elſe it will ſeem unjuſt, and will not conduce to its End:) but in ſuch Puniſhment which is Subjection to the courſe of Nature, it is not neceſſary, that the Fact original of the Puniſhment be notic'd, if Guilt enough beſides be notic'd, ſufficient to juſtifie Providence, and for the End of Puniſhment. If it be fairly notic'd to Mankind (who are ſubjected to Death and innumerable other penal Evils,) that in this Earthly State they are grievous Sinners, this is ſufficient to juſtifie Providence and for the End of Puniſhment, although they know not how they came to be Sinners, nor how their penal Evils were at firſt introduc'd (any otherwiſe than in general, that they are for their Sins,) although they never heard either of Adam's tranſgreſſion, or of the original lapſe of Souls. Cannot God juſtly puniſh Mankind in the courſe of Nature, unleſs he giveth them an account of the cauſes of the Phænomena of Nature? or unleſs he reſolveth that Problem, πόθεν τὰ κακά; whence come Evils? The lapſe of Souls (which Pre-exiſtence implieth) was introductory of the penal Evils of this State, but ſo as to be withall introductory of the criminal Evils of it, which deſerve the penal Evils: and if Mankind are not unacquainted with thoſe Criminal Evils, they cannot be ſaid, to be invincibly ignorant of the Sins, for which they are puniſh'd, or to be under an invincible temptation to have hard thoughts of God, who puniſheth them leſs than their known Iniquities deſerve. Is it not notice ſufficient for their amendment (which is the End of Caſtigatory Puniſhments,) to know, that their Puniſhments in the courſe of Nature are for their Sins (which therefore they are concern'd to repent of and eſchew) without knowing any thing that paſs'd in a former State, or in the Moſaical Paradiſe, which cannot be amended? If this was their caſe therefore, to have no notice of their original lapſe, yet the Hypotheſis of Pre-exiſtence would not claſh with the Juſtice of Providence; but this is not their caſe: For it is the Senſe of the generality of Pagans, Jews and Chriſtians (in all Ages) that the Souls of Men are Heaven-born; and (in great degree) they agree in acknowledging their degeneracy. The eminent Philoſophers in all Ages (ſo far as any Memoirs inform us) whether Pagans, Jews or Chriſtians, have in ſome ſort held the Pre-exiſtence and Lapſe of Humane Souls. Mankind therefore cannot be ſaid, to have no notice of their original lapſe, although it falleth not within the compaſs of their Memory (nor is it poſſible it ſhould without a Miracle,) nor doth the Tranſgreſſion of our firſt Parents fall within the compaſs of our Memory, for which yet we are juſtly puniſh'd in the courſe of Nature. But againſt the Theory of Pre-exiſtence another Objection is rais'd from Rom. 9. 11. The Children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil. To which the Anſwer is; that the criminal lapſe of Souls in the State of Pre-exiſtence doth not conſtitute us thoſe that in this State are the factively Criminals, but only thoſe, that are the natively Criminals. The Children yet to be born, are not ſo much as meer Infants, and meer Infants are not either the factively well-doers, or the factively evil-doers, in regular conſideration they are only the natively evil-doers, or originally Sinners, (which original Sinnerſhip is not now to be deriv'd immediately from the original lapſe of Souls, but from the Fall of Adam in his Paradiſe.) As to this State therefore, as to any thing, that is to be enjoy'd or ſuffer'd in it, as to Law and Religion, as to the matter which the Apoſtle diſcourſeth of (Juſtification by Works) meer Infants and the Children yet to be born have done neither good nor evil.

(w) Coſri p. 255.

CHAP. XVI.

1. Of the great excellency of the Final Cauſe, with a general Account of the Final Cauſe of the Creation of the Univerſe of Rationals. 2. The Univerſe was not created out of any ſelfiſh deſign or for vain-glory. 3. The Platoniſts account of the Cauſe of the Creation, which is from meer communicative goodneſs. 4. This not fully legitimate, as appeareth from their bad kind of goodneſs. 5. From God's being the End of the Creation. 6. From his holy goodneſs of Will. 7. From the goodneſs of well-doing. 8. Of the Chriſtiano-Scholaſtic Account of the Cauſe of the Creation. 9. Of the Scholaſtic Rabbins account of it. 10. Of the Chriſtian account of the cauſe of God's creating Rationals, becauſe it was good, that they ſhould exiſt, and he was good. 11. His Goodneſs the holy imperial Goodneſs. 12. This requireth, that he ſhould be to them, the Sanctity Imperial, and what they are made for, as he is ſuch. 13. That he ſhould be to them a Parental Providence, and what they are made for, as he is ſuch. 14. An Inference touching the Preheminence of the Science of Sanctity above Scholaſticiſm. 15. Another Conſectary againſt abſolute Reprobation.

I. THE knowledge of Things is the knowledge of their Cauſes, of which the Principal is (cauſa cauſarum) the Final Cauſe. (x) From the Ignorance of the Final Cauſe of any thing ariſeth an Ignorance of the other Cauſes appertaining thereto; for this is the firſt Cauſe, the chief and moſt potent, for the ſake of which the efficient Cauſes do, and the things that are done are effected. Whoſe Cauſality is properly the Mental and Rational, and which is the cauſe of all the Artifice, Aptitude, Regularity and Utility that is in Nature. As things artificial cannot be underſtood, if the final cauſe be over-look'd; ſo neither can the Works of Nature, which are plainly made for End and Deſign, and are manifeſtly the effects of admirable Skill and Artifice. (y) In ordinary Animals there is a variety of ſtupendious Workmanſhip, which reacheth to the Fruits and Leaves of Plants. (z) Milk is generated of Graſs, and Cheeſe of Milk, and Wooll of the Skin; who is it that made and excogitated theſe things? No Body (ſaith the Epicurean) ὢ μεγάλης ἀναισχυντίας καὶ ἀναισθησίας, O great Impudence and Senceleſneſs! (a) Providence hath done nothing in the procreation of Animals; for neither were the Eyes made to ſee, nor the Ears to hear, nor the Tongue to ſpeak, nor the Feet to walk, ſaith Epicurus. So Democritus phyſiologiz'd, τὸ οὗ ἕνεκα ἀφεὶς λέγειν, altogether rejecting the final cauſe. The Atheiſts therefore cannot be ſaid, to philoſophize ſave only very mutilately and partially (for to philoſophize, is to render the cauſes of things,) their Recondite Wiſdom is a contradiction to common Senſe, they contemplate no Wiſdom, they deſtroy (in great degree) Wiſdom and the knowledge of things by exploding the Final Cauſe out of Philoſophy, (b) ſome principal Theories whereof (as that of the Circulation of the Blood) had never been found out, if Sagacious Naturaliſts had not ſuppos'd, that Parental Nature acteth for Ends and Good, and that thoſe Ends may be inveſtigated. But it is not the Atheiſts alone, that are injurious to the Final Cauſe. Anaxagoras affecting rather to be a good Naturaliſt than a good Religioniſt did not in his Phyſiology inſiſt ſo much as he ought upon the Final Cauſe; whence he is blam'd by ſome other Philoſophers, as if he took no notice of it, although he acknowledg'd Good as well as Mind, to be a Principle, and therefore did not wholly neglect the Final Cauſe. A late French Philoſopher is not ſo ſound a Religioniſt as Anaxagoras was; for his Philoſophy totally rejecteth the conſideration of the Final Cauſe out of a frivolous Modeſty (counting it preſumption in Man, to think, that he knoweth the Ends of God) whereas it is really Impudence and Immodeſty, not to acknowledge End and Deſign, ſuperlative Wiſdom and Goodneſs in the Works of Nature, which demonſtrate, that they have a wiſe Author, and that Mankind owe unto him upon the account of his Works the Tribute of Admiration, Praiſe and Gratitude, (c) which is a principal Branch of Religion. Plotinus alſo is not a little injurious to the Final Cauſe, to the Wiſdom of God in his Works and to Religion (which is founded upon the exiſtence of a final as well as an efficient cauſe of the Univerſe;) for he ſuppoſeth, (d) that the firſt Principle procreateth all things (the Intelligible World or the Platonic Intellect) without any Action, Intellection, Deſire or Precogitation (as Light floweth from the Sun,) and that the Platonic Intellect or Intelligible World did not produce the viſible World by that Wiſdom, which chooſeth the End and ſuiteth the Means thereto, but fatally and naturally, as plaſtick Principles operate; (e) and therefore he ſuppoſeth it an impertinent Queſtion, to ask why the World was created? But this is really a Queſtion of no ſmall importance and no ſmall difficulty, as will appear by a ſummary reſolution of it, which we will compriſe in this following Theorem.

The Univerſe of Rationals was created, becauſe
- The Exiſtence of Good,
- The Exiſtence of that Good the Volition whereof is neceſſarily Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will.
- Goodneſs Imperial
  - The communicative,
  - That of well-doing in general,
  - That of the holy kind did require it; And that God ſhould be unto them

- The Sanctity Imperial; ſo they are made
  - For God,
  - For the whole,
  - For their Holineſs and Happineſs.
- A Parental Providence alſo; and ſo they are made additionally to their other ends for Humane Society.

II. It

(x) Procl. de An. & Dæm. p. 236.

(y) Ἐν τοῖς τυχοῦσι ζώοις ἡ ποικίλη θαυμαστουργία· καὶ τὸ μέχρι τῶν ἐμφύτων καρποῖς, καὶ ἔτι φύλλοις. Plotin. En. 3. l. 2. c. 13.

(z) Epict. Diſſ. l. 1. c. 16.

(a) Lactan. l. 3. c. 17.

(b) Mr. Boyle of Final Cauſ. p. 157.

(c) Epictet. Diſſ. l. 1. c. 6, 16.

(d) En. l. 3. c. 12 & ibid. l. 8. c. 7. & En. 3. l. 2. c. 1, 2, 3.

(e) En. l. 9. c. 8.

II. It is ſcarce credible, that the Muhammedans ſhould ſuppoſe, (f) that God made the World παιδιᾶς χάριν, for Sport; which yet is as credible, as that the Univerſe was made only or chiefly for Man, or that Man is his own ultimate End, and was made only or chiefly for himſelf. The School of Epicurus hath not more immoral Maxims than theſe, (g) Finis ultimus cui Homins eſt Ipſe. Quilibet Homo reſpectu ſui omniumque ſuarum operationum eſt Finis ultimus Cui. If every Man is his own ultimate End, there muſt be ſo many ultimate Ends as there are Men. Every Man muſt love himſelf above all. He is in order to nothing beyond himſelf. Not God's Honour and Intereſt and the publick weal, but a Self-intereſt muſt be the chief in his Eſtimation and Affection, Deſire and Deſign. All his Actions muſt be ultimately for ſelf-regard and reſpect, oppoſite to that Charity, that ſeeketh nothing for ſelf as ſelf. Every Man is chiefly for his own uſe, and conſequently is chief owner of himſelf, and in ſuch Senſe his own Man: And he that maketh himſelf in ſuch Senſe his own Man, maketh himſelf his own God. How poor an ultimate End is Self? to be chiefly devoted to? to acquieſce in? and how baſe is it, to pretend, to love God, and Virtue, and the Publick, but as the Country-man loveth his Cart and Horſes, ultimately for ſelf? If the vicious ſelfiſhneſs is ſo vile and odious in Man, nothing of it muſt be aſcrib'd unto God, nor made the End of his Creation: For God could not create the World out of any ſelfiſh Principle and Deſign, both becauſe of his God-like Nature and Agency, and becauſe (h) God wanteth nothing. If we ſuppoſe therefore, that God made the World out of no better a Principle than ſelfiſh Nature, or ſuch a Principle of Honour and Glory whence Mundane Monarchs erect their ſtately Structures and do their Acts of Beneficence (inſtigated thereto by τὸ ἐπιδεικτικὸν, the oſtentatious and vain-glorious Principle) this would be a foul Imputation upon the Divine Majeſty: who although in ſome Senſe he made the World for his Honour and Glory, yet his ſo making it was not of like Nature with the ſelfiſh Vanity of Humane Magnificence. This Saying of Tertullian therefore, that God made the World, (i) in ornamentum majeſtatis ſuæ, ſeemeth injurious unto God. And it is alike injurious unto God, to parallel his Creation-work with the Works of covetous and vainglorious Artiſans. (k) The artificial Form is not the end of the Artiſt's Work, but rather inciteth the Spectator, to view and admire his Skill, from which his Gain or Fame may redound: And theſe (one or both) are the principal End of all his Labours; ſo is the Glory of the firſt and ſupreme efficient Cauſe the principal and utmoſt End of all the Works of Nature. Plotinus deſervedly rebuketh this Compariſon. (l) It is ridiculous to ſay, that he made the World, that he might be honour'd, this being to transfer the Affections of Humane Artificers and Statuaries upon him. For as Humane Artiſts and Statuaries frame their Works with the greateſt Skill and Artifice poſſible, principally out of a ſelfiſh deſire and deſign of their own Gain or Honour and Applauſe; not ſo much out of love to Goodneſs and Well-doing, nor out of love to others whoſe Benefit they ſeek; and therefore how much ſoever Men may admire their Skill, yet they do not admire their Beneficence, nor pay Gratitude to them as their great Benefactors, nor do they admire their virtuous Diſpoſition and Practice: So if God frameth the Works of Nature with the greateſt Skill and Power imaginable, yet if this be done principally out of a ſelfiſh deſire and deſign of his own Honour and Glory, not ſo much out of love to Goodneſs, nor out of love to others whoſe Benefit he ſeeketh; how much ſoever Men may admire his greatneſs of Skill and Power, yet no body will have cauſe to admire his Beneficence, his God-like Diſpoſition and Practice, nor to pay Gratitude to him as the great and only Benefactor. It muſt not be ſuppos'd therefore, that God made the World for his Honour and Glory in ſuch Senſe, as Humane Artiſts and Statuaries make their Works for their Glory.

(m) The Chriſtian Doctrine doth not ſay of God any thing that importeth Humane Ambition or deſire of Honour; for God doth not make Oſtentation of himſelf to us, when he would have us know and underſtand his Eminence. Plato ſaith, (n) It was not for any need that God made the World, that he might reap Honours from Men and other Gods and Demons. If we are therefore the Authors of theſe many Sayings, which affirm, that God's Glory is the final cauſe of his Works, we ought to take care, that their Senſe be diſſonant from a ſelfiſh deſign of Honour and Glory.

(o) God reſolv'd, to make the World for himſelf, that is, for his own Glory. (p) Generalis quidem operum omnium divinorum finis & fructus Dei ipſius gloria, nominiſque claritas. (q) God loveth his own Glory as his principal End, and the preſervation of his Creature for his Glory.——— There is properly but one Love in God, which is the Love of himſelf (an enormous miſtake) and God can love nothing but by that Love, ſince he can love nothing but in relation to himſelf. (r) All things are made for theſe two, God's Honour and his Creatures Profit. He is capable of nothing but the external good of Honour, therefore he ſeeketh his own Honour; more principally he acteth for his own Honour than the Creatures Profit; for as he is before the Creature (infinitely better,) he ought to look at thoſe things which belong to himſelf, before thoſe things which belong to his Creature. (s) God is as tender of his Honour, as any Man can be of his. Men will throw away Eſtates and Lives for their Honour, to defend it, to increaſe it; how much more will God do it, to whom Honour belongeth? A Man that loveth his own Honour, will not ſuffer his Honour to be diminiſh'd, much leſs will God. A Man hateth any Honour, that is againſt his own Honour: So doth God and will deſtroy it; and therefore God will make all things ſerve his own Honour and Glory. (t) God never made a Creature, but that himſelf might have Glory by its being.—— The end God's Glory is the utmoſt end of every Creature and Action in the World. A Party of Divines ſay, (u) That the End or Cauſe of God's Creation was the glorifying his Mercy and his Juſtice in the Salvation of the Elect and the Damnation of the Reprobate.

III. The School of Plato (in conſort with the ancient Writers of the Church and many others) is ſuppos'd, to derive the Creation meerly from communicative Goodneſs. (w) Plato plainly declareth, the reaſon of God's making the World at firſt, to have been no other than this, ἀγαθὸς ἦν, ἀγαθῷ δὲ οὐδεὶς περὶ οὐδενὸς οὐδέποτε ἐγγίνεται φθόνος, be- cauſe

(f) Betul. in Lactant. l. 2. c. 5.

(g) Stearn. Anim. Medel. l. 1. c. 11.

(h) Pocock. ſpec. p. 240. Erpen. Gram. Arab. par. 2. p. 189, 195.

(i) Apol. c. 17.

(k) Dr. Jackſon The etern. Truth of the Script. B. 1. c. 16.

(l) Γελοῖον γὰρ ἵνα τιμῶται, καὶ μεταφερόντων ἀπὸ τῶν ἀγαλματοποιῶν τῶν ἐνταῦθα. En. 2. l. 9. c. 4.

(m) Οὐδεμίαν θνητὴν φιλοτιμίαν ὁ χριστιανῶν λόγος καταμαρτυρεῖ τοῦ θεοῦ· οὐ γὰρ ἐπιδεικτιᾷ ὁ θεὸς πρὸς ἡμᾶς. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 4. p. 165.

(n) Ap. Clem. Strom. l. 5. p. m. 426.

(o) Mr. Thorndike Epil. B. 2. c. 26.

(p) Petav. T. 4. l. 2. c. 5.

(q) Malebranch Search after Truth, B. 4. c. 1.

(r) Raymund de Sabunde Theol. natur. p. 311.

(s) Ibid. p. 358.

(t) Larkham of the Attributes par. 2. p. 57, 58.

(u) Pareus in Gen. 1. 1. Dr. Twiſſ. vindic. Grat. p. 13.

(w) Dr. Cudw. Intell. Syſt. p. 659.

cauſe he was Good, and there is no manner of envy in that which is Good. (x) For all other Cauſes which are aſſign'd of making the Univerſe beſides (communicative) Goodneſs are rather agreeable to thoſe that are in human Circumſtances than unto God. (y) Why did he make the things that were not? Becauſe he was Good and Communicative. (z) Conſider the World and thou ſhalt find, that the Cauſe of it is God, τῆς δὲ κατασκευῆς αἰτίαν τὴν ἀγαθότητα τοῦ δημιουργοῦ, but the Cauſe of his making it was the (Communicative) Goodneſs of the Maker. The Hebrew Cabaliſts have aſſign'd this Cauſe and Reaſon, why God created the World (a) ad benefaciendum & bonitatem ſuam oſtendendam creaturis ſuis. The Fathers generally go this way, they ſymbolize with Philo, and conſider no other Goodneſs as concern'd in the Creation but only the Communicative Goodneſs. (b) It was not enough to Goodneſs, to be mov'd only by the Contemplation of it ſelf, but Good ought to be diffus'd and to go abroad, that ſo there may be many Beneficiaries. So the counterfeit Dionyſius deriveth the Creation from (c) *ad benefaciendum proclivis amor, a Propenſion to Beneficence. God loveth giving ſo much (*Beneficence) that for this reaſon he made all things (d) ſaith Guillelm. Pariſienſis. Having Goodneſs beyond meaſure he would give Being to Non-exiſtents (e) ſaith Theodoret. (f) So S. Auſtin, (g) ſo S. Hilary and Zacharias Mitylenæus, and ſuch is the Senſe of (h) Gr. Nyſſen, J. Damaſcen. Olympiodoras (i) and S. Chryſoſtom. He made all things, not for the ſake of any thing elſe, but Goodneſs only. (k) It is enough for a Chriſtian to believe, that the only Cauſe of the Creatures is the Goodneſs of the Creator. (l) God from the beginning created Man becauſe of his munificence, to have one, to beſtow his Benefits upon, ſaith Irenæus. Some modern Divines ſpeaking their own Senſe rightly, expreſs the Senſe of the Ancients. (m) We ſay that the reaſon, why God made the World, was from his overflowing and communicative Goodneſs, that there might be other Beings alſo happy beſides him, and enjoy themſelves. (n) His natural Benignity and Munificence was the pure Motive, that incited or invited him to this great action of communicating Exiſtence and ſuitable Perfection to his Creatures reſpectively: No benefit or emolument could hence accrue to him; he could receive no acceſſion of Beatitude; he did not need any profit or pleaſure from without, being full within, rich in all perfection, completely happy in the contemplation and enjoyment of himſelf. Can a Man, can any Creature be profitable to God? No, our Goodneſs doth not extend to him, we cannot any wiſe advance or amplifie him thereby; 'tis becauſe Goodneſs is freely diffuſive and communicative of it ſelf; becauſe Love is active and fruitful in Beneficence; becauſe higheſt Excellency is void of all Envy, Selfiſhneſs and Tenacity, that the World was produc'd. Agreeably to this account of the Cauſe of the Creation, Voſſius ſaith of the Angelical and human Nature. (o) Both which God created, not ſo much to have ſuch Exiſtent, that might praiſe and admire him (for God needeth not the praiſe of others) as becauſe it was agreeable to his Nature (who is Goodneſs it ſelf) that there ſhould be ſuch a Nature, which might be brought to Beatitude by Divine Grace, and therefore might know, love, worſhip, imitate the Author of the Univerſe, and ſo according to the meaſure of a Creature might be made like unto God. (p) Chriſtian Theologers agree with the Pagan, profeſſing with one Mouth, that God's (Communicative) Goodneſs is the cauſe of all things.

IV. This Platonic account of the Cauſe of the Creation is highly laudable, true and good, but in a limited Sence; for withall it is falſe and alſo criminally defective, and giveth not a juſt account of the Creation of Religion. For there are four things, that we ought to affirm concerning it. Firſt, that although the Creation iſſu'd from communicative Goodneſs, as the Platoniſts rightly ſuppoſe, yet they attributed (as is before obſerv'd touching them and the Stoicks) a bad kind of Goodneſs to the Deity. Cicero ſaith (q) that God is never angry, nor doth hurt; this is the common Sentiment of all the Philoſophers, not only of thoſe, who ſuppoſe, that God himſelf hath no buſineſs, nor giveth any trouble to others, but of thoſe alſo, who believe a Providence, and ſuppoſe, that God is always doing ſomething. So the Platoniſts ſay of their Deities (r) that they are good and replete with all Virtue and hurt no Body, Οὔτε τὸ ἀγαθὸν βλάπτει ποτὲ, That which is good never doth hurt. (s) It is the Nature of the Deity, to be beneficent but not to be angry and to do hurt. So Plato in his Second De Rep. (quarrelling with Homer) ſaith (t) We ought to contend by all means, that none ſay of God, who is Good, that he is the Cauſe of Evils to any. This Philoſopher therefore (together with his Followers) ſuppoſeth, that all the Evils which the Gods inflict upon any in the other World, are meerly Caſtigatory and Medicinal, and this muſt be accounted his Opinion, although it is not his conſtant Sentiment. For he ſuppoſeth, that the grand Criminals in the other World that are incurable (u) are puniſh'd to be Examples to others, and are caſt into Tartarus, whence they never come forth. There is a manifeſt inconſiſtency therefore in this Philoſophers Senſe, (as Euſebius obſerveth,) which is alſo manifeſtly inconſiſtent with the Notices and Laws of his own Religion. For the publick Laws ſay, Divorum iras providento. Perjurii Pœna Divina exitium. And they preſcribe Sacrifices and Supplications, to appeaſe the anger of the Gods. The popular Pagans therefore in ſome reſpects were better Religioniſts than the Philoſophers, that had as little inſight into Religion as Arnobius, who maketh this one requiſite Property of a Deity (w) non iraſci, calamitatem irrogare nulli, not to be angry, to inflict calamity upon none. Such a Deity is Marcion's Deity of the New Teſtament (x) who is Good not Juſt, not at all ſevere or punitive. Such is the ſupreme Deity of the Chalday Oracles (y) who is not the cauſe of Evil unto any, that he ſhould be formidable. And ſuch is Philo's God, of whom he ſaith (z) he is the cauſe of Goods only, not at all of any Evils, τὰς μέν τοι κατὰ πονηρῶν κολάσεις διὰ τῶν ὑπ' αὐτοῦ βεβαιοῦσθαι, the Puniſhments againſt the improbous are eſtabliſh'd by his Miniſters. Joſephus underſtood God and Religion as little as Philo; for he ſaith of Prayer (a) it muſt be made to God οὐχ ὅπως διδῷ τὰ ἀγαθὰ, not that he may give good things, for this he doth of his own accord (omnibus paſſim ingerit) but that we may be capable of receiving them and may conſerve them. The Hebrew Doctors ſay (b) Deus benedictus nihil eſt niſi Bonitas, Benignitas & Miſericordia, and hence they infer one of their Maxims, nihil mali supernè deſcendit, nothing of Evil deſcendeth from above. So far they Symbolize with the Philoſophic Pagans, whoſe Gods are Deities of fond and carnal Conceit.

(x) Αἱ γὰρ παρὰ τὴν ἀγαθότητα λεγόμεναι αἰτίαι τῆς δημιουργίας τοῦδε τοῦ παντὸς ἀνθρωπίναις μᾶλλον περιστάσεσιν ἢ τῷ θεῷ πρέπουσιν. Hierocl. in aur. Car. p. 21.

(y) Διὰ τί γοῦν ἐποίει τὰ μὴ ὄντα; ὅτι ἀγαθὸς καὶ φιλόδωρος ἦν. Philo opuſc. p. 14.

(z) Idem lib. de Cherub. v. Petav. T. 1. l. 6. c. 3.

(a) Rittangel. lib. Jeziv. p. 157, 186.

(b) Οὐκ ἤρκει τῇ ἀγαθότητι τὸ κινεῖσθαι μόνον τῇ ἑαυτῆς θεωρίᾳ, ἀλλ' ἔδει χυθῆναι τὸ ἀγαθὸν καὶ ὁδεῦσαι, ὡς πλείονα εἶναι τὰ εὐεργετούμενα. Gr. Naz. Or. 38.

(c) Petav. T. 1. l. 2. c. 8.

(d) Ibid. l. 6. c. 3.

(e) Ibid. l. 8. c. 2.

(f) Ibid. l. 5. c. 9.

(g) Ibid. l. 6. c. 3.

(h) Hæſchel. not. in Philon. opuſc. p. 220. Lipſ. Phyſiol. l. 1. Diſſ. 20.

(i) Ἐποίησε δὲ δι' ἕτερον μὲν οὐδὲν, δι' ἀγαθότητα δὲ μόνην. T. 6. p. 86.

(k) Satis eſt Chriſtiano rerum creatarum cauſam nonniſi bonitatem credere creatoris. S. Aug. Enchirid. c. 9.

(l) Deus ab initio hominem plaſmavit propter ſuam munificentiam, ut haberet in quem collocaret ſua beneficia. Iren. adv. Hær. l. 4. c. 28.

(m) Dr. Cudw. ſupr. p. 886.

(n) Dr. Barrow on the Creed Ser. 12. So Mr. Smith Select Diſc. p. 141, 142.

(o) Quas ambas Deus creavit, non tàm ne deeſſent, qui eum laudarent & admirarentur, cùm Deus non ſit indigus laudationis alienæ, quàm quia Naturæ ejus qui optimus ipsaque bonitas foret, conveniret, ut Natura etiam foret, quæ Divinâ ad beatitudinem gratiâ perduceretur. Eoque cognoſceret Univerſi auctorem, eundem amaret, coleret, imitaretur; atque ita pro modo Creaturæ ſimilis redderetur Deo. De Idol. l. 1. c. 10.

(p) Petav. T. 1. l. 6. c. 3. S. 4.

(q) Hoc quidem commune eſt omnium Philoſophorum, non eorum modo, qui Deum nihil habere ipſum negotii dicunt, & nihil exhibere alteri, ſed eorum etiam, qui Deum ſemper agere aliquid & moliri volunt. Nunquam nec iraſci Deum nec nocere. De Off. l. 3.

(r) Viv. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 8. c. 13. Porphyr. de Abſt. l. 2. S. 41. Hierocl. de Fato p. 209.

(s) Τὸ θεῖον ὅτι μὲν χαρίζεσθαι καὶ βοηθεῖν πέφυκεν, ὀργίζεσθαι δὲ καὶ κακῶς ποιεῖν οὐ πέφυκεν. Plutarch. ap. Eugub. de Per. Phil. l. 6. c. 9.

(t) Κακῶν δὲ αἴτιον φάναι θεόν τινι γίγνεσθαι ἀγαθὸν ὄντα, διαμαχητέον παντὶ τρόπῳ.

(u) Euſeb. pr. ev. l. 13. c. 17.

V. A Second thing we ought to affirm, that the Creation could not ſo iſſue from communicative Goodneſs, but that God is neceſſarily Lord of the Creatures, our Sovereign Liege-Lord, the Imperial Eſtate of God to us, and the End of the Creation. For the Intereſt and Felicity of the Creatures muſt not be ſuppoſed his End (the End of his Being and his Operations) in the ſtrict ſubordinative Notion thereof. As there can be no Efficient, ſo there can be no final Cauſe of God. (c) In Fine extremitatis conditio requiritur, ut reliqua ita propter eum ſint, ut ſuâ dignitate & præſtantiâ ipſa ſibi ſubordinet. (d) That God may have an end of his Being or of his Operation, it is requiſite, that himſelf or his Operation ſhould be in order thereto (ſubordinate and ſubſervient thereto) for there cannot be an end, unleſs one thing be in order to another. But God and his Operation cannot be in order to any thing; therefore they cannot have an end. The Virtue and Duty of ſubſerving an End properly belongeth to Creatures, that are of ſubordinate and ſubject Condition (e) Deus Dominator eſt non alterius Gratiâ. In his Domination he could not be abſolutely free and diſoblig'd from any, nor could his Excellency be abſolutely the Supreme, unleſs he be abſolutely unſubordinate. For Ariſtotle thus compareth the Science of Metaphyſicks and a Free-man. As he is a Free-man, ὁ αὐτοῦ ἕνεκα, καὶ μὴ ἄλλου, that is for his own ſake, not anothers: So this only is the free Science; for this only is for its own ſake. The Pythagoreans ſay, τὸ χεῖρον ἕνεκα τοῦ βελτίονος, the worſer is for the ſake of the better. And the Stoicks uſually ſay (g) τὰ χείρω τῶν κρειττόνων ἕνεκεν, the worſe are made for the better. Agreeably to which Maxims the Fathers argu'd againſt the Arrians (h) who ſuppos'd, that God intending to make the Univerſe of Creatures firſt procreated one, to be an Inſtrument, to make the reſt, which one he called his Son and his Word. If this was ſo (ſay they) if the Son was procreated for this end and purpoſe, that he might make the reſt, then he was produc'd by the Father chiefly for our ſake and upon our account, and we are not ſo much made for him as he for us. We are therefore of more honourable Condition than he, and the Name of Son rather belongeth to us than unto him. Chriſtians ſubordinate themſelves to their Saviour, and ſo intelligent Theiſts ſubordinate the Univerſe of Beings unto God. For Ariſtotle having compar'd the ſupreme Deity to the General of an Army, and the order of the Univerſe to the order of an Army, he ſubordinateth that order to the ſupreme Deity and maketh him the end thereof. (i) Οὐ γὰρ οὗτος διὰ τὴν τάξιν, ἀλλ' ἐκείνη διὰ τοῦτόν ἐστιν. For he is not for the Order, but the Order is for him. So Plato ſaith of his ſupreme Deity (k) about the King of all Beings all Beings are, καὶ ἐκείνου ἕνεκα πάντα, and for his ſake are all things. Which Platonic Maxim (not conſiſtent with the Platonic Origination of the Univerſe from meer communicative Goodneſs) ſuppoſeth, that the firſt Cauſe is alſo the laſt End. And as Simplicius diſcourſeth (l) that which is abſolutely perfect and hath attain'd its own End, is τέλος τῶν πάντων ὡς ἀρχὴ, the end of all things as it is the beginning. Of ſome Affinity with this Branch of Platonic Theology is an ancient Saying cited by Plato in his Fourth of Laws. (m) God going about according to Nature ſtraightway diſpatcheth, having the beginning, middle and end of all things. And of ſome Affinity with this ancient Pagan Saying is the Apoſtle's Divine Saying, which attributeth to God a threefold Cauſality in Affairs Original, Mediate and Final, Rom. 11. 36. Of him and through him and to him are all things. His intent in this high and rais'd Aſcription to God (as appeareth from the Context,) is, to attribute unto him the Sovereignty and Supremacy, the ſole intire Sovereignty in the Cauſality of Affairs; which Sovereign Cauſality is threefold. Ordinative, Executive, Subordinative. His Sovereign Ordinative Cauſality is neceſſarily the Original Cauſality; for all things are of him as of his ſole proper Motion, Volition and Ordination (without any Inſtructor, Counſellour and Perſwader) and of his Sovereign Ordination, who is of abſolutely independent Condition (the Firſt Cauſe of all himſelf being uncauſed both as to what he is and what he doth) and who ordereth all Affairs in the ſupreme Sovereign way unaccountably and as diſoblig'd from all and Debtor to none. His executive Cauſality is neceſſarily his mediate Cauſality (being intermediate between the Intention and the End) and this Sovereign Cauſality the Apoſtle's Phraſe δι' αὐτὸν, by or through him, properly ſignifieth; for the ſame Apoſtle ſaith of Chriſt as Mediator, we are δι' αὐτοῦ, by him. 1 Cor. 8. 6. God's final Cauſality which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, may not unfitly be ſtiled the Subordinative; for all things are to him in the way of agreeable Subordination and Subſerviency. The Creatures and their Goods are not the End which he is for, or which he is to be Subſervient to: But he is the End, which the Creatures and their Goods are for, and which they are to be Servient and Subſervient to. They were made by him, and they were made for him, for him to have the Poſſeſſion, Uſe and Diſpoſal of them, to be every way Servient and Subſervient to him, to give him the Rights and Dues of his God-head, and to do the Duties conſtitutive of Religion and Godlineſs (if they are Rationaliſts,) to be pleaſing to his holy Will and to honour and glorifie his holy Name. Thus all things and perſons are duly ſubordinated unto God (the Sanctity Imperial,

1 Cor. 8. 6. Col. 1. 16. Heb. 2. 10.

(w) Adv. Gent. l. 1. p. 10. & l. 6. p. 190.

(x) Petav. T. 1. l. 2. c. 1.

(y) P. 50.

(z) Περὶ συγχύσ. Διαλ. p. 224. ed. Gr. Paris.

(a) Ap. Euſeb. pr. ev. l. 8. c. 8.

(b) Hotting. de jur. Hebr. Lex. 169. p. 241.

(c) Ritchel. Metaph. Par. 2. c. 6.

(d) Valent. T. 1. Diſp. 3. Qu. 1. Punct. 3.

(e) Lex. Heptaglot. in rad. [illegible] Sam.

(f) Metaph. l. 1. c. 2.

(g) M. Ant. l. 5. S. 16, & 30.

(h) Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 5. S. 16.

(i) Metaph. l. 14. c. 10.

(k) Procl. Plat. Theol. p. 104.

(l) Intell. Syſt. p. 389.

(m) Ὁ μὲν δὴ θεὸς ἀρχήν τε καὶ τελευτὴν καὶ μέσα τῶν ὄντων ἁπάντων ἔχων, εὐθείαν περαίνει κατὰ φύσιν περιπορευόμενος.

the Lord of all Creatures, who is infinitely better than they) and this due Subordination of all Creatures unto God is doubtleſs the meaning of the wiſe Man's words, the Lord hath made all things for himſelf: Yea even the wicked for the day of evil. Pro. 16. 4. For the words propter ſe and propter ipſum are of the ſame meaning; and as when the Scripture ſaith, that all things were created propter ipſum, it doth not mean, that all things were created for his communicative Goodneſs: So when the wiſe Man ſaith, that God made all things propter ſe, he muſt not be thought to mean (n) as ſome ſuppoſe, that all things were created for his communicative Goodneſs. If the wiſe Man had ſaid, that God did his Works propter ſe, he might be thought to mean, that God made them for his communicative Goodneſs: But when he ſaith, that God made his Works propter ſe, his words muſt be thought to denote the Uſe and End of the Works of God, the Finis cui, for whom they are made. Nor is the making them for his communicative Goodneſs of any Affinity with making the wicked for the day of evil. If therefore the Hebrew word lammagnanehu doth ſignifie propter ſe ſive ſeipſum (which is moſt probable, although there are ſome Grammatical Difficulties in it) the wiſe Man muſt be underſtood, to ſay of God, that all things were made (for him) to be Servient and Subſervient to him (o) ut ſibi Servirent, as Menaſſ. ben Iſr. interpreteth the place.

(n) Annot. upon Lux Orient. p. 49.

(o) De vit. term. p. 206.

VI. A Third thing we ought to affirm, that the Creation could not ſo iſſue from God's communicative Goodneſs, but that it muſt neceſſarily iſſue from his holy Goodneſs (or Holineſs and Godlineſs) of Will For Goodneſs in the moral Notion and the larger Acceptation is the ſame with Virtue (whence Clemens ſaith of God (p) ὀ τῷ τὴν ἀρετὴν ἔχειν ἀγαθὸν εἶναι λέγεται, he is not ſaid, to be Good, becauſe he hath Virtue, but becauſe he is it,) as Chriſtians know no other genuine kind of Virtue but the Holy (which is Holineſs and Godlineſs,) ſo they know no other genuine kind of Goodneſs. The Writers of Chriſtian Ethicks obſerve (q) that Holineſs is called Goodneſs in Scripture, and the Hebrew word חסיר ſignifieth both one that is Good and one that is Holy, both ſignifications concurring in a Saint (which alſo the word ſignifieth, (r) the Judaical Haſidæi were thoſe whom Joſephus calleth ὁσίους τοῦ ἔθνους, the Saints of the Nation;) for a Saint is an holy kind of good Man, as Holineſs and Godlineſs is the holy kind of Goodneſs. Our Tranſlation therefore following the LXX. rightly rendreth חסיר Holy, Pſal. 145. 17. The Lord is righteous in all his ways and holy in all his works. If the Lord is holy in all his works, then all his works (and conſequently his Creation-works) are the holy kind of good works, and ſo many Branches of his Holineſs of Life (of which alſo his communicative Goodneſs is neceſſarily a Branch:) As the good works of holy Men are the holy kind of good works, and ſo many conſtituent parts of their holy Life. Goodneſs of Nature and of Will (s) is to God Eſſential (Creatures are good ἐξ ἐπιγεννήματος, adventitiouſly, ſaith Origen) and this Eſſential Goodneſs, becauſe it is the God-kind (the Saint of God-kind) of Goodneſs, is neceſſarily the ſame with his Eſſential Holineſs of Nature and of Will. (t) Deus natura ſua ſanctitas. ——id a voluntatis & τῆς προαιρέσεως, bonitate non diſcrepat. The Divine Nature is Sanctity, which is not different from the Goodneſs of his Will. The Divine Will therefore is Holineſs and Godlineſs (the holy and godly Goodneſs) of Will. We are oblig'd to all Holineſs and Godlineſs of Nature, Will and exteriour Practice, ex ſtudio imitandi, that we may be God-like. And as the Divine Practice of our Redeemer (in doing the Will of God, doing good, laying down his Life) was his Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will: So the Divine Practice of God the Creator ought to be conſider'd under this Notion as his Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will. Such is his wondrous Love and Kindneſs, his abundant Mercy, his rich Grace, and free Beneficence, to which the Scripture attributeth our new Creation. And ſuch is his good Pleaſure, the good Pleaſure of his Will, his own Will, the Counſel of his own Will, to which the holy Writers attribute the Origin of all things. Apoc. 4. 11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour and power; for thou haſt created all things, and διὰ τὸ θέλημά σου, by thy Will or for thy Will they are and were created. The Creation of Rationals had its Origin from the Holineſs and Godlineſs of his Will; for it was a Creation of Religion, and they were made for Holineſs and Godlineſs; their Creation therefore neceſſarily iſſu'd from a volition in God, that cannot be called his meer communicative Goodneſs, but muſt be called his Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will, an holy and godly kind of Goodneſs of Will. Learned Men ſay of the World (u) The whole was not properly made for any part, but the parts for the whole, and the whole for the Maker thereof. But what ſenſe can they make of ſuch a Saying, ſuppoſing the Creation to have iſſu'd meerly from communicative Goodneſs? Was the World made for the Maker of it, becauſe God made it from his overflowing communicative Goodneſs, that there might be other Beings alſo happy beſides him, and enjoy themſelves? But if we ſay, that the Rational World was made, not only to be Happy, but to be Holy, and for the buſineſs of Religion towards God; this is a good intelligible account, why the Rational World may be ſaid to be made for the Maker of it.

(p) Pædagog. l. 1. c. 8. p. m. 85.

(q) Crell. l. 2. c. 4.

(r) Druſ. de 3. Sect. l. 4. c. 12.

(s) Petav. T. 1. l. 5. c 4. l. 6. c. 2.

(t) Ibid. l. 6 c. 6. S. 4.

Eph. 2. 4, 7. 1 Pet. 1. 3. 1 Joh. 5. 11. Eph. 1. 5, 9, 11. Jam. 1. 18.

(u) Intell. Syſt. p. 875.

VII. A Fourth thing we ought to affirm, that the Creation could not ſo iſſue from communicative Goodneſs, but that it muſt neceſſarily iſſue from the Goodneſs of Well-doing (εὐπραξία, or Virtue) of which communicative Goodneſs is a Branch. For communicative Goodneſs as ſuch meerly reſpecteth the benefit and advantage of the Creatures as ſuch, whence it is called propenſa voluntas benefaciendi aliis, ad benefaciendum proclivis amor, his Munificence, fruitful Beneficence (contrary to Tenacity) his love of giving (or communicating) a diffuſing his Goods, that there might be many Beneficiaries, and that there might be other Beings alſo happy beſides him. If this communicative Goodneſs is a Branch of the Goodneſs of Well-doing (as certainly it is both in the All-good God and in truly good Men) then in the Creation reſpect was not had meerly to the Creatures intereſt and benefit as ſuch; for an atheous Goodneſs that hath no reſpect for God, cannot be the Goodneſs of Well-doing, nor can it do any holy good Work. If God was not the final Cauſe of the Creation, if all things were not made for him and to him, the Goodneſs of Well-doing was wanting in the Creation, and the Creation could not be well done. For let us ſuppoſe, that a good natured Man willeth the vaſt good of a vaſt number

Heb. 13. 16.

ber of Children, and deſireth, to procreate them meerly from a benign Volition of their benefit and advantage for their ſake, without deſigning or deſiring any thing on his own part, only to ſeek and ſerve their benefit and advantage (as ſuch) purely for their ſake: It is manifeſt, that this good natur'd Man by this benign Volition debaſeth himſelf into the rank of their Officer and Servitor, he diſcardeth the State, Rights and Dues of their Father-King, rejecteth his Ownerſhip of them, muſt connive at all their Undutifulneſs, ſave only ſo far as it is prejudicial to themſelves, and as ſuch, he muſt not puniſh them but medicinally, and he muſt not be averſe from all manner of injuries done to the perſon of a Father as ſuch. But ſuch an irregular beneficent Goodneſs is manifeſtly maleficent and inconſiſtent with the Goodneſs of Well-doing. And as it is a criminal abſurdity and a contradiction in ſuch a Man, to deſign the Procreation of a vaſt number of Children, without deſigning to be in all reſpects their Father-king: So it would be a criminal abſurdity and a contradiction, if God ſhould deſign, to create an Univerſe of Creatures without deſigning to be in all reſpects their God; and conſequently the Univerſe of Rationals muſt neceſſarily be made, to give unto him the Rights and Dues of his Godhead (for his ſake and not only upon account of their own Intereſt) and another ſort of Goodneſs muſt neceſſarily be concern'd in the Creation beſides communicative Goodneſs. Religioniſts ſuppoſe, that Rationals were made to ſerve God: But if their Creation was meerly and wholly from communicative Goodneſs, then they were created, to ſerve God meerly with reſpect to their own Intereſt and Advantage, and the thing deſign'd in their Creation was not (w) that God ſhould be magnified, but only that they ſhould be magnify'd and beatify'd, ut ipſis, non ſibi benè ſit. (x) Service to God affordeth him nothing, nor doth he need the Obedience of Man. But for this Reaſon he requireth Service from Men, that being good and merciful he may beſtow Benefits on them that perſevere in his Service. (y) To the praiſe of his Glory, what is this? That ſome Body may praiſe him, that ſome Body may glorifie him, we, Angels, Archangels, the whole Creation? And what is this? Nothing. For the Deity wanteth nothing. He deſireth nothing of us, not Service, not Glory, nor any thing elſe but our Salvation, and for this he doth all things. In this ſtrain ancient Writers (and others) nullifie Piety, and it is as reaſonable at the ſame rate to nullifie Sin and Impiety, to make nothing of it, as it is againſt God, whoſe communicative Goodneſs hath reſpect only to the Creatures advantage.

But it is not poſſible, that God can be God without the Rights and Dues of his Godhead. God hath reſpect to the Creatures Goodneſs as well as their Good. (z) So much as any one is better, ſo much the more he loveth Goodneſs, and hateth Iniquity. Seeing God therefore is good, and not only good, but infinitely good, it followeth, that he loveth Goodneſs with an infinite love, and hateth Iniquity with an infinite hatred. He that is ſo great a lover of Goodneſs, neceſſarily created us for doing as well as enjoying good. For enjoying the Felicity, but ſo as that withall he created us for doing the Virtue and Duty of his Servants, Subjects and holy Societiſts. But meer communicative Goodneſs foundeth no Society, maketh no Family, City or Kingdom of God: Nor are Societies created meerly for the advantage of the Subject-party. The ſtrict Right of Property or Ownerſhip is not founded by meer (Beneficence or) communicative Goodneſs. For ſuppoſe a great Architect, to build an Houſe meerly and wholly for his Friend (his behoof and advantage,) for him to have wholly and ſolely the Poſſeſſion, Uſe and full Diſpoſal of it; it is manifeſt, that this great Architect doth not ſo much as pretend to any Right of Property in the Houſe, which he hath built, or Claim any Title to it, but his Friend is the ſole Proprietor of it. The Caſe is the ſame, if this great Architect in the ſame manner buildeth a Perſon for his Friend. And the Caſe is the ſame, if that Friend himſelf is the Perſon ſo built by that great Architect; for if he is made meerly and wholly for his own behoof and advantage, to have wholly and ſolely the Poſſeſſion, Uſe and Diſpoſal of himſelf, he is manifeſtly thereby manumis'd (as it were) and ſet at Liberty; he is no Servant to any, but is ſui Juris, notwithſtanding the mighty Gratitude that he oweth to his creative Benefactor, and although his creative Benefactor did create him for the ſake of his communicative Goodneſs. (a) The ultimate end giveth the greateſt Authority and Power. For the Authority of the end is greater than the Authority of the Efficient. As Men uſe Money and Meat and Cloaths as they will, which are made for their uſe. Communicative Goodneſs (that obligeth to nothing more than Gratitude) cannot found the ſtrict Right of Property; the obedience of the Subject to the Sovereign as it is ſtricti Juris, is not founded upon it; unleſs his Godhead of Eſtate and all his Rights and Intereſts are meerly Subſervient to the Creatures Intereſt, ſomewhat elſe was intended in the Creation of God's Subjects than meerly ut ipſis benè ſit; ſomewhat elſe muſt be uppermoſt in their Eſteem and Affection; and the principal thing that maketh Sin horrendous in their Eyes, is ſomewhat elſe than its contrariety to their own Intereſt and Advantage. They are not their own, they are his that made them, and made them that they might be his; they are his as of Right and by Obligation his Servants, and the Servants are for their Lord's Uſe and Advantage, ſo far as he is capable of any.

To him indeed our Goodneſs (Beneficence) extendeth not, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith (which the LXX. the vulgar Latin, the Arabick and Æthiopick render thou haſt no need of my good things) can a Man be profitable unto God, as he that is wiſe may be profitable unto himſelf? Is it any Pleaſure to the Almighty, that thou art Righteous?

(w) Manifeſtum eſt, quòd Deus æquè perfectus erat ante ullorum mundorum creationem, quàm erat poſtea. Quodque proinde ex nulla ſuiipſius ratione habita, quatenus ſuiipſius, factum ſit, quòd ullos mundos unquam crearet: ſed ex mera benignitate propensâque voluntate benefaciendi aliis, non autem magnificandi ſeipſum, quatenus ſeipſum, ſed ut creatio intellectualis magna fieri poſſit ac beata in contemplanda magnitudine bonitatis, ſapientiæ ac potentiæ divinæ, quæ ex operibus illius eluceſcunt. D. H. Mori Oper. Phil. Vol. 1. p. 455.

(x) Servitus erga Deum Deo quidem nihil præſtat, nec opus eſt Deo humano obſequio. ——— Propter hoc autem exquirit ab hominibus ſervitutem, ut quoniam bonus eſt, miſericors, benefaciat eis, qui perſeverant in ſervitute ejus. Iren adv. Hær. l. 4. c. 28.

(y) Εἰς ἔπαινον δόξης. Τί ἐστι τοῦτο; ἵνα τις αὐτὸν ἐπαινέσῃ; ἵνα τις αὐτὸν δοξάσῃ; ἡμεῖς, ἄγγελοι, ἀρχάγγελοι; ἀλλὰ πᾶσα ἡ κτίσις; καὶ τί τοῦτο; οὐδέν. Ἀνενδεὲς γὰρ τὸ θεῖον. Οὐδενὸς γὰρ ἐφίεται τῶν παρ᾽ ἡμῶν ἀλλ᾽ ἢ τῆς σωτηρίας μόνης, οὐ διακονίας, οὐ δόξης, οὐκ ἄλλου οὐδενὸς, καὶ πάντα διὰ τοῦτο ποιεῖ. S. Chryſoſt. in Epheſ. Hom. α.

(z) Quanto quis melior eſt, tanto magis bonitatem diligit, oditque malitiam ſeu iniquitatem. Cùm itaque Deus bonus ſit, nec tantum bonus, ſed infinitè bonus, ſequitur, ut infinito amore bonitatem diligat, odioque infinito malitiam proſequatur. Granatenſ. ap. Baron. de peccat. mort. & venial. Par. 3. S. 2.

(a) Larkham on the Attributes. Par. 2. p. 57.

teous? or is it gain to him, that thou makeſt thy way perfect? Job 22. 2, 3. If thou ſinneſt, what doſt thou againſt him? or if thy Tranſgreſſions be multiply'd, what doſt thou unto him? If thou be Righteous, what giveſt thou him, or what receiveth he of thine Hand? Job 35. 6, 7. It is with God as with an All-ſufficient Father, that procreateth a numerous Family of Children, with deſign, that they ſhould be happy, but withall that they ſhould be holy and virtuous towards himſelf and towards one another. Such a Father they can neither help nor hurt, benefit or damnifie in reſpect of Inſufficiency and Indigence (as they may benefit and damnifie one another) nor with the real perfective kind of benefiting or the real deſtructive kind of damnifying. But although the Almighty is above the being thus benefited or damnify'd by Men or Angels, yet it is not good or legitimate Reaſoning, to infer from thence, that it was indifferent as to God, whether the World was created or not; and that the ultimate End which God intendeth in the Creation is only the Creatures good. For as our well or evil-doing; ſo his own well or evil-doing is not matter of indifferency with God. Not to create the Univerſe at all, is contrary to all that God is, inconſiſtent with the Godlike Nature, Diſpoſition and Practice, (b) and oppoſite to what is worthy and laudable. The End alſo for which and unto which God created the Univerſe, could be no matter of indifferency with God: For the goodneſs of well-doing is wanting in the Creation, if all things are not for him and to him. This is an eſſential condition of the Creation, becauſe this is the eſſential condition of the Godhead, to be the ultimate final cauſe of all things. There is other Cauſe and Reaſon than Need therefore, why God ſhould intend and deſign his Intereſt in the Creation; and we have other Cauſe to ſerve and honour him, than to furniſh his Needs. Nor would he deſerve ſuch Honour as he hath, if he was one that needed it. Ariſtodemus to excuſe his neglect of Religion, told Socrates, (c) I do not contemn the Deity, but I think it more magnificent, than to need my Worſhip. To which Socrates made anſwer, (d) How much the more magnificent that is, which vouchſafeth to take care of you, ſo much the more it ought to be honour'd by you.

VIII. The Schools debate this Theory of the Final Cauſe, but they rather incumber it than rightly explicate it. (d) God's proper ultimate End is Himſelf, he made all things for himſelf, and can have no lower End than himſelf; but how himſelf is his End, is hard to open: If we ſay, his Being as ſuch is his End, or that his Eſſential Glory is his End; we do but darken the matter and loſe our ſelves; for neither Redemption nor any other Work, can either cauſe, conſerve or add to that Being and Glory. If we ſay, his Being in the eſteem of the Creatures is his utmoſt End, we ſuppoſe him, to have an End infinitely below himſelf. If you ſay, that the communication of himſelf to his Creatures is his End, either you ſpeak of the Act of Communication as in God, and ſo it is himſelf efficiently and not finally conſider'd: or elſe you ſpeak of the Form produc'd by it, or as receiv'd by the Creature, and ſo it is quid creatum & extra naturam divinam, and too low to be his End. I conclude therefore, that Man is uncapable of a clear and full conceiving of the nature of God's End or Intending; but the Conception and Expreſſion which I judge to be moſt favour'd by Scripture and Reaſon, is, that God's Will is the beginning and end of all things: Whatſoever pleaſed him that did he, and when he hath done it, the pleaſing him is his End; and therefore he reſted after the Work of Creation, and expreſſeth himſelf well pleaſed by and in his Son in the Work of Redemption, as ſeeing his Work in both to be very good; and therefore inſtituted a Day of reſt in commemoration of both. The term Reſt expreſſeth the End; and his well-pleaſedneſs, Content or Will (the fulfilling his Will) is his Reſt and ſo his End. Meer arbitrary Will is (in this Scholaſticiſm) ſuppos'd to be the beginning and end of all, agreeably to that great Scholaſtick Maxim, Deus vult hoc eſſe propter hoc, ſed non propter hoc vult hoc: God willeth one thing to be for another, but he doth not will any one thing for the other. (e) The Will of God is reaſonable, not becauſe any thing is the Cauſe (or Reaſon) of his Volition, but becauſe he willeth one thing to be for another. (f) A Cauſe may be aſſign'd of the Divine Volitions in reſpect of the thing willed, in as much as God will have one thing to be for another; but not in reſpect of the Act of willing. To make a Judgment of this great Maxim, we may conſider, that ſome great Aſſertors of it have yet expreſly contradicted it. (g) For who doubteth (ſaith one,) but that God could have conferr'd upon Men the Heavenly Glory without the Merits of Chriſt? but why he would take this courſe in conferring Glory upon Men, the reaſon is eaſie; becauſe he would confer Glory upon Men ſo as to manifeſt his Mercy temper'd with Juſtice. Scholaſtick Divines aſſign Cauſes or Reaſons of the Divine Will in reſpect of the actus volendi; for of his Will to create the World ſome ſay, (h) Duæ hujus voluntatis docentur cauſæ, there are two cauſes of this Volition taught in Scripture; one the proximate, the Goodneſs of God; the other more remote and ultimate the Glory of God. The Fathers agree, that God created the World out of a Principle of Goodneſs (in the moral Notion of it) they ſuppoſe therefore an Impulſive Reaſon moving the Divine Will (ex parte actus volendi) to create the World. And as the Fathers, ſo Religion and the Bible contradict this Scholaſtick Maxim, which affirmeth, That no created thing is or can be a motive of the Divine Volitions in reſpect of the Act of willing; which implieth, that God doth not do us good at all for our ſake, and therefore is not at all a Benefactor to us. God did will the Exiſtence of Food and Phyſick for the ſervice of Man, but not for Man's ſake (as this Maxim affirmeth;) and if this was ſo, Man is not oblig'd to God for his Food and Phyſick, nor hath God any real kindneſs for Man, according to that other Scholaſtick Maxim, (i) Amor Dei erga Creaturas non eſt affectivus, ſed effectivus: The love of God towards the Creatures is not a loving them, but only a doing them good. The Piety, Prayers and Interceſſions of Noah, Daniel and Job, and of the Son of God himſelf, the Merits of a Saviour, the Merits and Demerits of Men and Angels, no reaſon of Juſtice, no object of Mercy or of eſpecial Favour,

(b) V. Epictet. Diſſ. l. 1. c. 19.

(c) Οὐχ ὑπερορῶ τὸ δαιμόνιον, ἀλλ' ἐκεῖνον μεγαλοπρεπέστερον ἡγοῦμαι ἢ ὡς τῆς ἐμῆς θεραπείας προσδεῖσθαι.

(d) Ὅσῳ μεγαλοπρεπέστερον ἀξιοῖ σε θεραπεύειν, τοσούτῳ μᾶλλον τιμητέον αὐτό. Xenoph. ἀπομν. α.

(d) Mr. Baxter of Univerſ. Redemption, p. 8.

(e) Voluntas Dei rationabilis eſt, non quod aliquid ſit Deo cauſa volendi; ſed in quantum vult unum eſſe propter aliud. Aquin. 1a. Qu. 19. Art. 5.

(f) Non eſt aſſignare cauſam divinæ voluntatis ex parte actus volendi, ſed poteſt aſſignari ratio ex parte volitorum, in quantum ſcilicet Deus vult eſſe aliquid propter aliud. Ibid. Qu. 23. Art. 5.

(g) Quis enim dubitat potuiſſe Deum conferre hominibus gloriam cæleſtem ſine meritis Chriſti? quare verò hoc conſilium ceperit Deus, ut in conferenda hominibus gloria hanc viam ingredi voluerit, ratio in promptu eſt; quia ſcilicet conferre hominibus gloriam ipſi collibitum fuerit, ad manifeſtandam ſuipſius miſericordiam cum juſtitia temperatam. Dr. Twiſſ. vindic. Grat. l. 1. par. 2. Digr. 3. S. 1. p. 161.

(h) Pareus in Gen. 1. 1.

(i) Gonet. Clyp. T. 3. Diſp. 2. Art. 1.

Favour, can move one Divine Volition, if no created thing can be a motive reaſon of the Divine Volitions. The Scripture throughout the whole of it aſſigneth Reaſons of the Divine Volitions (ex parte actus volendi) from created things. For the Jews were belov'd for the Father's ſake. Chriſtians are belov'd, becauſe they believe in Chriſt and for Chriſt's ſake: Therefore doth my Father love me (ſaith our Saviour) becauſe I lay down my life. God will'd the defence and ſafety of Jeruſalem for David's ſake. To Jeruſalem he ſaith, Thou haſt forſaken me, therefore I will ſtretch out my Hand againſt thee. To Iſaac he ſaith, I will bleſs thee and multiply thy Seed for my Servant Abraham's ſake. To Iſrael he ſaith, I will not go up in the midſt of thee, for thou art a ſtiff-necked People; and of the pious Man he ſaith, Becauſe he hath ſet his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him. But although the generality of the Scholaſtick Divines will not acknowledge, that the Will of God is mov'd by any created thing, yet one would think, they ſhould not ſtick to acknowledge, that it is mov'd by ſomething uncreated, as all Religioniſts ſuppoſe, when they beg Bleſſings of him for his Name's ſake, for his Mercy's ſake, for Chriſt's ſake, the Schoolmen themſelves ſay, (k) Deus vult cætera omnia propter ſuam bonitatem, God willeth all other things for his Goodneſs (the Good that He is, or his eſſential Perfection;) and they affirm alſo, (l) that this Goodneſs is unto God Objectum motivum & ratio volendi per modum finis, the Motive, Object and the Reaſon of his Willing by way of the End. They affirm therefore, that in a large ſenſe it is the cauſe of the Divine Volition (for in theſe Maſters ratio and cauſa (m) are terms ſynonimous) which is, to be inconſiſtent with themſelves (notwithſtanding an inſufficient Salvo (n) which they have excogiated, to ſave themſelves from Inconſiſtence) and to contradict their own Maxim, that one thing is not the cauſe why God willeth another. One part of this Maxim affirmeth, that what God willeth is Rational, Wiſe and Good (vult hoc eſſe propter hoc) God will have Cauſes and Effects, Means and Ends, due Order and Uſefulneſs amongſt the parts of the Univerſe; but the other part of it will not allow, that God willeth it, becauſe it is rational, wiſe and good, Non propter hoc vult hoc. The Divine Will therefore in creating the Univerſe was but half-rational; for in all rational procedure the Means are willed for the ſake of the End, to which they are ſubſervient (ratio mediorum ſumitur à fine,) whence ſome rigid Adherers to the School-Divinity ſay, (o) Actus volendi finem in Deo dici poteſt cauſa actus volendi media ad finem; The act of willing the End in God may be ſaid to be the Cauſe of the act of willing the Means to the End. If there is nothing of this rational procedure in God, what meaneth his working all things after the Counſel (which is wiſe and rational procedure) of his own Will? (p) Nec ratio ſine bonitate ratio eſt, nec bonitas ſine ratione bonitas: Reaſon without Goodneſs is not Reaſon, nor is Goodneſs without Reaſon Goodneſs. The true God is not Marcion's Deity, irrationaliter bonus. Although he acteth in the God-like arbitrary way of Self-will, yet not in the irrational arbitrary way of Self-will, regarding nothing but the fulfilling of meer Will and Pleaſure, and willing becauſe he willeth. His Will and Pleaſure is Good-will, Eph. 1. 9. His moſt unaccountable doings he would not do, if they did not ſeem good in his ſight (and therefore they are really good, Matth. 11. 26.) And as his Creation-work was wiſe and good ex parte volitorum, in reſpect of the things willed and the Finis operis: So alſo ex parte actus volendi, in reſpect of the act of willing and the Finis operantis; for ſuch is all truly Virtuous and God-like Agency. To rational Beings in common good as good is the Object of the Will and the reaſon of willing. So the Philoſopher ſaith of good, (q) ἔνθεν ὥρμηται πᾶσα κίνησις ϗ ἀνθρώπου ϗ θεοῦ, all motion of Man and of God is with reſpect to it.

Hitherto the Scholaſtick Theology appeareth, to incumber the Theory of the Final Cauſe with inextricable difficulties touching the Divine Will, and the further we look into it the worſe it appeareth: For this Theology ſuppoſeth, that the Acts of the Will of God are all one with his Subſtance and therefore Eternal, yet ſome paſt, others preſent, and others to come; one (as being the ſame with his Subſtance) and yet many; neceſſary yet free; the Divine Volition of producing the future Creatures is free, but it is free only, as it is a free relation or habitude of the Divine Eſſence to the future Creatures, and yet their being future Creatures is a conſequent of that free Relation or Habitude; for the Divine Volition is the cauſe, the only cauſe, why they are future Creatures. By ſuch a Theology we are not likely to advance very far in the knowledge of the Final Cauſe, of which yet the Schoolmen have a right Notion in general, obſcurely and in Confuſò; for they rightly affirm, that ſummè amatum, ſummum bonum and Finis ultimus are the ſame, and that whatever God doeth ad extra, propter ſe agit tanquam finem ultimum. And if we ask, what propter ſe meaneth? they explain themſelves propter bonitatem ſuam, whereby they mean, the Good that God is or his Eſſential Perfections. (r) Deus alia à ſe non vult niſi propter Finem qui eſt ſua Bonitas: God doth not will other things beſides himſelf, unleſs it be for the End, which is his Goodneſs. But how the Creatures can be Means to ſuch an End as thoſe Eſſential Perfections of God which they treat of, this they cannot ſay; nor can they ſay, how there can be any Means to ſuch an End; nor can they ſhew, what motive force there is in God's Eſſential Perfections, to cauſe him to communicate them; and they fall into impertinent Diſcourſes, when they come to ſhew, how or in what Senſe God is the End of all. (s) To the firſt Agent it is not agreeable, to act for the acquiſition of an End, but he intendeth only to communicate his Perfection, which is his Goodneſs; and every Creature intendeth, to gain its Perfection, which is a ſimilitude of the Perfection and Goodneſs Divine. So the Divine Goodneſs is the End of all things. This account how God is the final cauſe of all things, is not pertinent to the Inquiry; for they that inquire touching the final cauſe of the Creation, underſtand very well, that God's Creation is the ſame thing with the Communication of his Perfection; but their Inquiry is touching the moving Reaſon and End of that Communication. Cajetan ſaith, The End of this Action or Operation is the Divine Perfection (or Goodneſs:) but this is moſt falſe, ſaith another Schoolman, (t) for this Action or Operation and the Divine Perfection (or Goodneſs) are all one.

Rom. 11. 28.

Joh. 14. 23. and 15 27. and 10. 17.

1 King. 11. 34.

2 King. 19. 34.

Jer. 15. 6.

Gen. 26. 24.

Exod. 33. 3.

Pſ. 91. 14.

(k) Vaſqu. in Thom. T. 1. Diſp. 80. c. 1, 2.

(l) Ibid. & Gonet. ſupr.

(m) Dr. Twiſſ. ſupr. p. 152.

(n) Valentia T. 1. Diſp. 3. Qu. 1. punct. 3.

(o) Dr. Twiſſ. ſupr. p. 153.

(p) Tertull. c. Marcion. l. 2. c. 6.

(q) Epict. Diſſ. l. 3. c. 3.

(r) Aquin. 1a. Qu. 19. Art. 1, 2.

(s) Primo Agenti non convenit agere propter acquiſitionem alicujus finis, ſed intendit ſolum communicare ſuam perfectionem, quæ eſt ejus bonitas, & unaquæque creatura intendit conſequi ſuam perfectionem, quæ eſt ſimilitudo perfectionis & bonitatis divinæ. Sic ergo divina bonitas eſt finis omnium rerum. Aquin. ſupr. Qu. 44. Art. 4.

(t) Valentia T. 1. Diſp. 3. Qu. 1. punct. 3.

IX. The Hebrew Doctors (that are grand Scholaſticks) make very large Attributions of (moral) Goodneſs to the Deity, but in their Account of the cauſe of the Creation they overlook it: (u) yet they ſuppoſe, that the Works of God are good and for a propoſed End, and they manage a Diſpute againſt certain Maſters of Speculation, who derive them from Will without Wiſdom, and will not allow us to ask, cur hoc fecerit? The ſame Controverſie they have with thoſe Maſters of Speculation touching the Precepts of their Law. (w) For ſome do not inquire into any cauſe of them, but they ſay, that all the Precepts are from his meer Will. Others ſay, that every Precept and Prohibition is from his Wiſdom and reſpecteth a certain End; all the Precepts have their Cauſes and Reaſons and are commanded for the ſake of ſome Utility, and this is the common Opinion of all the Wiſe Men. (x) Thoſe unwiſe perſons make Man more perfect than his Creator; for according to them whatever a Man ſaith or doth, he doth it for a certain End; but God doth otherwiſe, he commandeth us that which bringeth us no Utility, if we do it, nor detriment, if we neglect it. But far be this from the Creator. If his Precepts were of no utility, how could it be ſaid of thoſe that believe and do them, that they are wiſe, intelligent, great, and a wonder to all Nations? The Hebrew Doctors therefore in their Account of the Final Cauſe conjoyn Will and Wiſdom. (y) If we ſay, that all things were made for Man, and Man for the worſhip of his Creator, yet the Queſtion remaineth, What is the End of that worſhip? Seeing nothing accrueth to the Perfection of God, although all Creatures ſhould worſhip him, nothing goeth from him, although nothing beſides himſelf ſhould exiſt. If you anſwer, that this is not done for his Perfection, but for our Perfection; becauſe this is our chief Good and our higheſt Perfection: In like manner it may be ask'd, to what End is that Perfection of us? This End therefore muſt neceſſarily be aſſign'd at length; Ita voluit Deus, vel ita decrevit ſapientia illius, ſo is the Will of God, or ſo his Wiſdom hath determin'd. (z) The Throne is made for the King to ſit upon, and the End of his ſitting on it is, that he may be plac'd on high, and he is plac'd on high for this End, for Magnificence and Authority, and his Magnificence and Authority is for this End, that Men may fear and revere him, and Men muſt fear and revere him for this End, that they may obſerve his Commands; and his Commands muſt be obſerv'd for this End, that Men may live ſafe, free from Injuries, and that the Order and Society of Men may be conſerv'd. In like manner we are to carry on our Inquiry touching all Ends, till we come to the ultimate End, which is the Will or Wiſdom of the Creator (ſic voluit Deus, ſic fuit decretum ſapientiæ Dei,) which in our Opinion are nothing elſe but his Eſſence: Wherefore we conclude, that the bleſſed God is the ultimate end of every thing, and conſequently, that this is alſo the End of all things, to become like unto him in Perfection, ſo far as may be; for this is his Will, which is nothing elſe but his Eſſence: and in this reſpect it is ſaid of God, quòd ſit Finis Finium, that he is the End of Ends. But the making God the End in this Rabbinical Senſe only, is really a making him the Beginning of things only, not the End. The reſolving all things into his meer Will (or Wiſdom in general) is a ſignifying, that the Reaſon and End of things is unknown. (a) To ſuch Queſtions and Inquiries as theſe, Why God made one a Prophet and not another? Why he gave his Law to one Nation, not to another? Why he gave it at ſuch a time, not ſooner or later? Why he gave ſuch Precepts and Prohibitions? the ready Anſwer is this, Ita voluit, vel ita decrevit ſapientia ejus. So Abarbenel ſaith, (b) that חפץ voluit is not us'd abſolutely, but touching a thing whoſe final cauſe is unknown. But if inquiry be made touching the Reaſon or Final Cauſe of things, and if it be apparent, or may be eaſily known, the uſual way of the Jews is to anſwer, Ita voluit; and they had better ſay ſo at the firſt than at the laſt, for thereby they ſave themſelves the labour of any further Inquiry. (c) Mundum conditum quia Deo ita viſum fuit, dicunt Hebræi: The Hebrews ſay, the World was made, becauſe it pleaſed God. Maimonides maketh God the ultimate End only in ſuch a Senſe, as doth not import the tendency of any thing to him, or that any thing is in order to him, or made for his ſake, or that he is in ſuch Senſe the End, as that all things are for him and to him. Men. ben Iſr. hath ſaid better in his forecited Interpretation of the words of Solomon, The Lord hath made all things for himſelf.

X. Nothing of Goodneſs appeareth in the Rabbinical Account of the Final Cauſe of the Creation, and nothing but Goodneſs appeareth in the Chriſtian. (d) Three things (ſaith S. Auſtin) ought principally to be known touching every Creature; quis eam fecerit, per quid fecerit, quare fecerit. If we ask therefore concerning Light, quis fecerit? Deus eſt: Si per quid fecerit? dixit fiat & facta eſt. Si quare fecerit? quia bona eſt: nec cauſa melior, quam ut bonum crearetur à bono Deo. Hanc etiam Plato cauſam condendi mundum juſtiſſimam dicit, ut à bono Deo bona opera fierent. God made Light, becauſe it was good and he was good, becauſe it was good, that the Light ſhould exiſt: And it was Goodneſs in God (not only the Platonic Communicative Goodneſs, but the Goodneſs of well-doing) to give it exiſtence, and this Goodneſs requir'd the giving it exiſtence; from which Conjunction of objective and ſubjective Goodneſs all created Beings derive their Exiſtence. All things were created for the ſake of Good, and conſequently for the ſake of that Goodneſs which requir'd it. If the created Univerſe was not an immenſity of Goods, if it had not been ſo repreſented before its Exiſtence in Archetypâ Mente (in the Archetypal Mind,) if the Exiſtence of it had not been thought good, it could not have been an Object of the Divine Volition. As it was (in its Ideal Exiſtence) an immenſity of Goods: So it was immenſe Goodneſs in God, to give it Exiſtence, and Goodneſs requir'd, that Exiſtence ſhould be given it: (e) For what profit is there of good (or what ſignifieth it) that is not operative and doth no good? As they that are rich in this World are charg'd to be communicatively good, and to be rich in good Works, ſo God (f) is unceſſant in Beneficences being truly God and a good Father. But Goodneſs muſt not be devoid of Juſtice. (g) How much Injuſtice is an Evil, ſo much Juſtice is a Good. Nor is it only to be reputed a Species of Goodneſs, but the Defenſative thereof; for if Goodneſs is not govern'd by Juſtice, ſo that it is juſt, it is not Goodneſs, if it be unjuſt; for nothing is good that is unjuſt, and whatever is juſt

(u) Maimon. Mor. Nev. par. 3. c. 25.

(w) Ibid. c. 26.

(x) Ibid. c. 31.

(y) Ibid. c. 13.

(z) Ibid. par. 1. c. 69.

(a) Ibid. par. 2. c. 25.

(b) Com. in Iſa. 30. p. 38. & 205. Ed. L'Emper.

(c) Grot. Not. in Eph. 1. 5.

(d) De C. D. l. 11. c. 21.

(e) Τί γαρ ὄφελος ἀγαθοῦ μὴ ἐνεργοῦντος μηδὲ ἀγαθοποιοῦντος; Clem. Strom. l. 6. p. m. 480.

(f) Θεὸς ὄντως ϗ πατὴρ ἀγαθὸς ὤντε ϗ γινόμενος ἐν ἀδιαλείπτοις εὐποιΐαις. Ibid.

(g) Quanto malum injuſtitia, tanto bonum juſtitia. Nec ſpecies ſolummodo, ſed tutela reputanda bonitatis; quia bonitas niſi juſtitia regatur, ut juſta ſit, non erit bonitas, ſi injuſta ſit. Nihil enim bonum quod injuſtum, bonum autem omne quod juſtum. ita ſi ſocietas & conſpiratio bonitatis atque juſtitiæ, ſeparatione earum non potes non carere —— A primordio creator tam bonus quam & juſtus : Pariter utrumque proceſſit. Bonitas ejus operata eſt mundum, juſtitia modulata eſt. Tercull. c. Marcion. l. 2. c. 11, 12.

juſt is good. So if there be a Society and Conſpiration of Goodneſs and Juſtice, Marcion muſt want the Separation of them, to make his two Gods. From the beginning the Creator was ſo Good as Juſt : There was a like Proceſs of both. His Goodneſs made the World, Juſtice order'd it. The Creator practiſed (in his Creation-work) immenſe Beneficence, but ſo as to practiſe univerſal Juſtice. And it was but Juſtice, that all things ſhould be made for him and to him, and that all Rationals ſhould be made for the good of Holineſs and Godlineſs. (b) Quid enim tam bonum quàm notitia & fructus Dei? For what is ſo good as the knowledge of God and the Fruit thereof?

(b) Tertull. ibid. c. 3.

XI. His holy or divine kind of Goodneſs whence the Creation iſſu'd, muſt be conſider'd under the Notion of Imperial; for God is an Imperial Eſtate (the holy Empire's Imperial Eſtate) and his creative Goodneſs muſt be denominated his holy Imperial Goodneſs of Will, to diſtinguiſh it from meer univerſal Benevolence. For his univerſal Benevolence is not meer univerſal Benevolence, but Benevolence with the addition and limitation of the holy Imperial. We may ſuppoſe Prometheus a good natur'd Rational, as one of the aggregate of Rationals, to produce a world of Rationals from meer Univerſal Benevolence, and for the common good of the whole aggregate of Rationals, that every one of them by univerſal Benevolence (Benevolence towards all) may endeavour and promote the common good of all, wherein every one's Happineſs is included : But it is manifeſt, that this Promethean Creation is not like God's Creation. For in this Promethean Creation the created Rationals are not made by the Creator proximately and immediately to be his, his Subjects and Servants, to be Servient and Subſervient to him, and for him to have the Poſſeſſion, Uſe and Diſpoſal of them: But they are proximately and immediately and meerly made for the publick good of all Rationals, to endeavour and promote it by a concurring univerſal Benevolence and the joint Endeavours of all. In this Promethean Creation the Creator doth not claim any Propriety in, nor Dominion and Sovereignty over the created Rationals as the Right and Due of his Honour and Dignity of Eſtate, and which belongeth to him upon his own account : He can aſſume to himſelf a ſupreme Power of governing all, only and meerly becauſe it is neceſſary for the publick good of all Rationals and in order thereto; and the created Rationals are not oblig'd to be his Subjects and Servants, but only in order to the publick good, and becauſe the publick good requireth it, which is their Intereſt to endeavour and promote. The truly Religious ſerve the publick out of reſpect to God and for his ſake: But this Scheme of the Creation inferreth, that they muſt ſerve God meerly out of reſpect to the publick and for its ſake. In this Promethean Creation the Creator (whoſe Principle is meer univerſal Benevolence and the publick good) is not ſupreme Lord of all, but only becauſe the publick good requireth it; and ſo far as the publick good requireth it, his Dominion and Sovereignty is deriv'd from it and limited by it (and conſequently he hath it derivatively and dependently:) Nor is he properly ſupreme Lord of all, but the publick is the Lord and Owner of all. The publick is alſo the ultimate final Cauſe of all; for the Creator (as every other Rational) is ſuppos'd, to be of underling Condition, a ſubordinate and ſubſervient means (and therefore a Servitor) to the common good, which is above him, the beſt and greateſt good and end, and which muſt be uppermoſt in the Eſteem and Affection of all. But (i) Quis dixerit Deum ad fines officiorum certos actionum ſuarum decreta dirigentem? Who will allot unto God the meer Office of Governing with an obſervance of the limits thereof? Such a Promethean Creation would be an undeifying God, who is not a meer Rational, nor are his Liege-people ſuch, nor can a City of God conſiſt of meer Rationals; for it neceſſarily conſiſteth of holy Rationals, that are ſet apart for God to have the Poſſeſſion, Uſe and Injoyment of them, and that prefer his Honour and Service before all things. If God doth create an Univerſe of Rationals, he is neceſſarily unto them a God immediately and in his own Right (and they are of Right and by Obligation his Liege-people;) he cannot therefore create an Univerſe of Rationals from meer univerſal Benevolence for the common good of the aggregate of Rationals, ſo as to be unto them a God, and to have Dominion and Sovereignty over them, only becauſe the common good requireth it. His Original Creation iſſu'd from an univerſal Benevolence, but the Benevolence which it iſſu'd from, was the Benevolence of his holy Imperial Good-will, which is ſo good as to be juſt, and which reſerveth unto God intirely the Rights and Dues of his Godhead. It deſigneth the common good by its deſigning our Holineſs and Godlineſs; for this is that which is every way good, the common good of the holy Empire. Which is a plain Reaſon, why God muſt be the End of Ends unſubordinated to any End, our Holineſs and Godlineſs requireth, that it ſhould be ſo.

(i) Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 3. p. 111.

XII. His holy Imperial Good will requireth, that he be to the Univerſe of Rationals the Sanctity Imperial (the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial) which is the ſame thing with the Volition of the holy Empire and the Intereſts thereof : As Chriſt is deſign'd, to be unto us the Chriſtianity Imperial (the Imperial Eſtate of Chriſtianity Imperial,) which is the ſame thing with the Volition of the Chriſtian Empire and the Intereſts thereof. Some of the Maſters of the Metaphyſical and Cabaliſtical Theoſophy ſay (k) that God therefore created the World, ut ſit quod conveniret nominibus Jehovah atque Adonai : And thus much of truth there is in their Saying, His Original Creation was the Volition of the holy Empire, which is the thing, that agreeth to his Names Jehovah and Adonai. His Original Creation therefore iſſu'd from his Holineſs and Godlineſs (holy Imperial Goodneſs) of Will; for the Volition of the holy Empire is neceſſarily Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will : As the Volition of the Chriſtian Empire is neceſſarily Chriſtian Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will. It is the Volition of all the matters of Holineſs and Godlineſs (of the holy Sovereignty and Government, the holy City, the holy Law, the State and Life of Holineſs, the Duty-part and Benefit-part of Religion) of all the God-kind (the Saint of God-kind) of Good and

(k) Ap. D. H. More op. Phil. Vol. 1. p. 455.

As a Parent's Goodneſs is Parental Good-will, and therefore is a Volition of his own Parental Eſtate, the Rights and Dues thereof : So the holy Imperial Goodneſs of God is his Imperial Good-will, and is a Volition of his own Imperial Eſtate the Rights and Dues thereof.

Excellency: As the Volition of the Chriſtian Empire is the Volition of all the Chriſtian and Divine kind of Good and Excellency. And as Chriſt cannot be Chriſt, ſo God cannot be God without the Volition of this Divine kind of Good, nor without a deadly hatred, a punitive and vindictive diſpleaſure againſt the contrary evil. Which deadly hatred of the contrary evil of Sin and Wickedneſs is the ſame thing with his love to Holineſs; he cannot therefore be ſuppos'd, to love Holineſs meerly with reſpect to us and our Welfare, and conſequently his Volition of the holy Empire muſt not be ſuppos'd, mera benignitas propenſaque voluntas benefaciendi aliis, a meer Benignity and ready Will to benefit others. When our Bleſſed Saviour founded the Chriſtian Empire, he was not wanting in Benignity of Will to us and our Benefit: But this Benignity of Will to us was neceſſarily connex'd with the Volition of his own Imperial Eſtate (of Chriſtianity) for his own ſake; and this whole Volition was his Chriſtian Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will, and without this Volition Chriſtian Holineſs and Godlineſs (holy Goodneſs) of Will would be wanting in Chriſt: In like manner, Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will would be wanting in God, if his beneficent Volition of the Exiſtence of the Subject-party of the holy Empire (the Univerſe of Rationals) was not connex'd with the Volition of his own Imperial Eſtate (of Sanctity Imperial) for its own ſake; for this whole Volition is his Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will. God in his Original Creation muſt be conſider'd as Fundator Imperii, the Founder of the holy Empire, in the Religion whereof he is repreſented as the Final (as well as the Efficient) Cauſe of all things; and he is ſo chiefly for theſe three Reaſons, which may commodiouſly be mentioned in this place.

(1.) All things had Exiſtence given them for the ſake of Good, and conſequently for the ſake of Goodneſs, his Goodneſs (his being Good and doing Good) that requir'd it. In ſuch ſenſe all things are for God.

(2.) The Subject-party of the holy Empire is for the Exiſtence of that Good, the Volition whereof is Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will, and the Exiſtence whereof is for his Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will, which requireth it, and is the final Reaſon thereof.

(3.) Although all things are made for this Reaſon the Exiſtence of Good, this doth not hinder, but that God's Creation is ſo made, as that all things are for him and to him, as Religion and Godlineſs requireth.

The Nature of the Original Creation (wherein God was Fundator Imperii) inferreth, that Rationals were originally created, to be Citizens of the holy Empire. They could not be originally created for the atheous State and Life and the Kingdom of Darkneſs: But were made, to be and live in the State of Religion and Sanctity, which is the State of Citizenſhip in the Kingdom of God. To this holy and happy Eſtate Chriſtianity deſigneth to reſtore extraneous and lapſed Rationals; therefore they were made for it in their Original Creation. They were made for God, to be his Subjects and Servants (and for the buſineſs of his Subjects and Servants, the ſerving, pleaſing and glorifying God) to be holy and happy, and each one of them was made, to be apart of the whole and for the whole. Our ultimate End is thus well expreſs'd. (l) Ut ſummo Patri ac Domino in perpetuum ſerviamus, & ſimus æternum Deo regnum, to ſerve for ever the ſupreme Father and Lord, and to be unto God an eternal Kingdom.

XIII. His holy Imperial Goodneſs of Will requireth, that God be a Parental Providence to this World of Terreſtrial Animals, and to Mankind eſpecially, who are made (additionally to the other Ends of their Creation) to live in Human and Civil Society, agreeably to their natural Inclination and Intereſt; for Man is (m) ζῶον νοερὸν ϗ κοινωνικὸν, a Rational and Social Animal, and without Society the Life of Man would be life-leſs, the World would be a Wilderneſs and a ghaſtly Scene, nothing but darkneſs and dimneſs of Anguiſh. Mankind being made for Society, it is manifeſtly the Will and Intention of Nature (Parental Providence) that the mundus humanus ſhould conſiſt of Families, Cities and Commonwealths with their ſeveral Governours (for things are ſo ordered in Nature, that it cannot be otherwiſe,) every one of which leſſer Syſtems is (n) κόσμος, an ordinate Conſtitution and Polity. But the aggregate of theſe leſſer Syſtems is not properly a Polity (as the leſſer Syſtems are,) yet in a large Senſe it may be called (o) una omnium Reſpublica, one Commonwealth of all. Mankind therefore are made, to be Citizens of this World (to do the Duties and enjoy the Felicities of Citizens) to do to one another (agreeably to the Bonds and Alliances that are in Nature) the Duties of Fellow-Citizens, to practice the Societive Virtue and Duty (which is their Excellency,) to ſeek their own good in their Social Capacity, to love themſelves in common with Mankind, to take care of one another's Welfare, to be mutually helpful and beneficent, and to ſeek and promote the Commonweal, the good of every one and of all. Which Scheme of excellent Virtue and Duty to the publick is not to be exploded upon a pretence, that a Man in all his Actions ought to ſeek the Acquiſition of his own ſupreme Good. Whence a Philoſophick Writer inferreth (p) that the celebrated Saying of Plato touching Man, that he is not only born to himſelf, but partly to his Country, Parents, Friends and to all Mankind, is not only a falſe, but a deadly pernicious Dogma; and that in very Deed Man is deſtin'd by Nature to himſelf and his own good only. But this is to Philoſophize at the old unpopular and paradoxical rate, and in contradiction to common Senſe. For what can be more plain and certain, than that Men are made for Civil Society, to be the Parts of an Whole, to ſubſerve the Intereſt thereof, and that a virtuous and dutiful promoting the good of Mankind in this World is one way of ſeeking the Acquiſition of our ſupreme Good in another World? If Mankind are made for civil Society, they are neceſſarily made for ſome degree of Religion (without which civil Society and Government cannot ſubſiſt:) But they are made for Religion at another-kins rate than may ſerve the turn of civil Society. For in general they have a knowledge of God, of his Law and their Duty; and God is notic'd to them as a Deity of true Religion and Godlineſs. And ſeeing they have

(l) Lactant. l. 7. c. 6.

(m) M. Ant. l. 8. S. 2.

(n) Gat. Not. in Ant. p. 183.

(o) Tertull. Apol. c. 38.

(p) Eximium illud Platonis edictum tanto plauſu uſque ad nos reboans, Hominem non ſibi ſolummodò natum, ſed partim Patriæ, parentibus & amicis partim, imò toti Hominum genere, non falſum ſolùm ſed & exitiale dogma eſſe; & reipſe Hominem ſibi & ſuo duntaxat bono eſſe à Natura addictum & deſtinatum. Tho. White Sutera Morum p. 60.

Hæc enim conditione gignimur, ut generanti nos Deo juſta & debita obſequia præbeamus, hunc ſolum noverimus, hunc ſequamur. Lactant. l. 4. c. 28.

have immortal Souls, which are deſign'd for endleſs Happineſs or Miſery in the World to come, thence it appeareth, that to take care of the Soul, to make Proviſion for a future State, to be ſavingly Religious, to do the work and buſineſs of Godlineſs, is every Man's work (which he hath to do in the World) the general calling of Mankind, of univerſal Concernment and infinite Neceſſity, and therefore every Man ought to look upon it as the main work and buſineſs for which he is made an Inhabitant of this World. Act. 17. 27.

XIV. The due Explication of the final Cauſe is peculiar to the Science of Sanctity which ſheweth the preheminence of it above the Philoſophic-pagan, the Rabbinical and the Chriſtian Scholaſticiſm. (q) Nemo fuit Philoſophorum, quin confiteretur omnium rerum finem eſſe Deum. All the Philoſophers acknowledge, that God is the end of all things. Which will be clear by this reaſon. All things viſible ſerve the life and conveniences of Men, which ſheweth, that Man is their End. But it is clear, that Man hath ſome end, which can be none but God. Therefore Man is for God, and ſo are Human things, and all things are for the King of all. We applaud this Platonic Maxim, but do not underſtand (and therefore muſt inquire) in what ſenſe and for what reaſon all things are for the King of all? Are they to ſupply his Needs, and to afford him Conveniences which he wanteth, as the lower Creation is for the Needs and Conveniences of Man? Who knoweth not, that ἀνενδεὲς τὸ θεῖον, God hath no need, and (as a Philoſopher ſaid) οὐδὲν ὠφέλιμον τῷ θεῷ, nothing is profitable unto God? Accordingly our Author ſaith of the King of all (r) he is the End of the (Platonic) Mind, the Mind is the End of Men and Angels, and Man the End of the corporeal World: And all things tend to the Father (rightfully ſo) the firſt it ſelf, and the Head of Mind it ſelf. And this term ἕνεκα, for, doth not relate to the needs of God, but the neceſſity of things. The Platoniſts therefore ſuppoſe, that all things are for the firſt King in this Senſe and for this Reaſon (s) he is to them the chief Appetible, drawing all to him, all Beings are ultimately to look towards him, to tend to him as the chief Good unto indigent Beings, to participate of him and enjoy him. Whence he is ſtiled ὁ πάντων τελῶν τέλος, the End of all Ends, τὸ τῶν ἐφετῶν ὅλων κέντρον, the Centre of all deſirables. . But if in this Senſe only they are ſaid, to be for him, they are not made to ſerve him, but only to ſerve themſelves of him. And if they only ſerve themſelves of him, they do but ſerve their own Ends, as the Brute-animals in a Family do, when they look to the Maſter of it as to their chief Benefactor, to ſupply them with Victuals. All Beings indeed (according to the Platoniſts) are produc'd for the ſake of the communicative Goodneſs of this firſt King: But if they are ſo produc'd, and yet are no way ſervient to him, this is not enough to Conſtitute him the final Cauſe of all. Our Author therefore ſubjoineth other Reaſons, why all things are ſaid to be for the firſt King. (t) All things were produc'd for him, becauſe all things are ſervient to his Rule, and he is celebrated and prais'd by all things animate and inanimate. All things were alſo made, that his Majeſty might be manifeſted. All muſt come and bow to him, all whether they will or not, do acknowledge him. But theſe Reaſons are no good account, why all things are ſaid to be for the Platonic firſt King. For in the main they are taken from the Chriſtian Writers, and are only applicable to the Chriſtians God (the Deity of true Religion) and are not agreeable to the Platoniſts ſupreme Deity, who is incapable of a Religion and Godſervice. Nor is it enough, to ſay of the true God, that all things are ſervient to his Rule, that he is celebrated and praiſed by all, that they are made for the manifeſtation of his Majeſty, and all muſt acknowledge him, whether they will or not: But a good Reaſon ought to be aſſign'd, why all are made to be Servient to his Rule, to celebrate his Praiſe, for the manifeſtation of his Majeſty and to pay him honourary Acknowledgments. This Reaſon is not aſſignable but from the Science of Sanctity; from whence we learn, that he is the End or final Cauſe, as Religion and Godlineſs requireth, and becauſe Holineſs and Godlineſs and requireth it. His being the End or final Cauſe is Holineſs and Godlineſs, and the ſame thing with his being God as to Holineſs and Godlineſs. Our making him the End or final Cauſe (living to pleaſe him and to honour him) is our Holineſs and Godlineſs. He will be the End or final Cauſe, of all, not for any need or want, but becauſe it is Holineſs and Godlineſs, the Volition of his being ſo is the Volition of what is Holineſs and Godlineſs, and is Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will. And as Chriſt's being the final Cauſe is eaſily intelligible, if we conſider him as the Imperial Eſtate of Chriſtianity Imperial (for in this comprehenſion all things are manifeſtly for him and to him, Col. 1. 16.) So God's being the End or final Cauſe is eaſily intelligible, if we conſider him as the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial. Des Cartes ſaith, that Men talk of God's Ends, as if they look'd upon God as a proud Man, who deſign'd his Works only to be prais'd for them. That no occaſion may be given for ſuch Criminations, the Diſcourſes of Divines touching the final Cauſe ought to have (what they need) a due Explication. (u) The choiceſt and laſt End which God propoſeth to himſelf in the Work of our Salvation, is the manifeſtation of his Perfection, that is, his Glory; which conſiſteth in the unfolding and diſplaying his eſſential Properties by Acts proper to them. And here they all meet and are concentred, his Juſtice, Wiſdom, Power, Mercy; his Juſtice ſatisfied, his Wiſdom manifeſted, his Power raiſeth us from the Dead, and his Mercy ſaveth us; and in all God is glorified. (w) He made them (the Creatures,) he preſerveth them, he forgiveth them, he deſtroyeth them, he puniſheth them, he rewardeth them, every other way he ordereth them, and diſpoſeth of them according to the good pleaſure of his Will, for his own Name's ſake, and for his own Glory's ſake. That ſo his Wiſdom and Power, and Truth and Juſtice and Mercy, and all thoſe other his divine Excellencies, which we are to believe and admire (but may not ſeek to comprehend,) might be acknowledg'd, reverenc'd and magnify'd. Thoſe two great Acts of his moſt ſecret and unſearchable Counſel, then the one whereof there is not any one Act more gracious, the Deſtination of thoſe that perſevere in Faith and Godlineſs to eternal Happineſs; nor any one Act more full of terrour and aſtoniſhment then the other, the deſignation of

(q) Eugubin. de Per. Phil. l. 2. c. 4.

(r) Ipſe finis mentis, Mens finis hominum & angelorum, Homo finis mundi corporei: Tenduntque omnia in Patrem (jure Patrem) & τὸ πρῶτον ipſum primum, ipſum caput, ſi quidem etiam mentis. Atque ἕνεκα propter ſive cauſa non Dei, ſed rerum neceſſitatem reſpicit. Eugubin. ſupr.

(s) Procl. Plat Theol. p. 102, 104, 105. Dionyſ. de divin. nom. c. 4.

(t) Illius cauſa omnia extiterunt, quia Sceptris ejus ſerviunt univerſa, & ab omnibus animatis exanimiſque rebus prædicatur, collaudatur. Factáque ſunt omnia, ut fieret Majeſtas ejus manifeſta. Venire ac flecti ad illum cuncta neceſſe eſt; omnes velint, nolint, eum confitentur. Eugubin. ſupr.

(u) Mr. Farindon Ser. 1. on 1 Cor. 6. 20.

(w) Bp. Sanderſon Ser. on Rom. 15. 6.

ſuch as live and die in ſin and infidelity without Repentance, to eternal Deſtruction: The Scriptures in the laſt Reſolution refer them wholly to his Glory as the laſt End. Diſcourſes of this Nature touching God's Glory ought to be underſtood with this additional Explication, as Religion and Godlineſs requireth and which is Holineſs and Godlineſs, that ſo they may not ſeem to impute to the Deity any thing of human Vanity. His zealous regard for his Glory is manifeſtly nothing elſe, but what Holineſs and Godlineſs requireth (as againſt Idolatry; my Glory will I not give to another, neither my Praiſe to graven Images, Iſa. 42. 8.) and his Glory as coming from himſelf and from us (from himſelf by way of Manifeſtation, and from us by way of Aſcription) is juſtly reckon'd the ultimate End of things, as being ulteriour to our Salvation; for his Goodneſs to us is with Intention and Deſign, that we ſhould be good, and we are ſaved, that we might be to the Praiſe of his Glory, as Religion and Godlineſs requireth, Eph. 1. 6, 12, 14. In this Senſe and for this Reaſon all things are for the pleaſing and fulfilling his Will as their ultimate End, becauſe they are intirely for ſuch End and Good, ſuch Work and Uſe, as Holineſs and Godlineſs, his Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will requireth. His being the End or final Cauſe is the buſineſs of Holineſs and Godlineſs, which requireth, that all things ſhould be for the ſerving, pleaſing and glorifying God.

XV. Another Conſectary we may infer from the Premiſes. For ſeeing all things were made for the Exiſtence of Good, and the Creation intirely iſſu'd from God's holy Imperial Goodneſs of Will, it is impoſſible, that Myriads of Rationals ſhould be originally created out of the higheſt Malevolence, the moſt ſpightful and malicious Deſign imaginable, in purſuance of an abſolute irreſpective Decree, which hath irreſiſtibly deſtin'd them to Damnation. The Philoſophers had better Sentiments. (x) Τὰ πάντα πρὸς τὸ εὖ εἶναι παράγει, God produceth all things for their well being. But if Men will be bad, God (for whoſe Uſe and Service they are made) will put them to a good uſe, whether they will or not. (y) Ἐκεῖνος μὲν πάντως σοι καλῶς χρήσεται ὁ τὰ ὅλα διοικῶν. The Governour of the Univerſe will not fail, to uſe thee to good purpoſe.

(x) Hierocl.

(y) M. Ant. l. c. S. 44.

BOOK IV.

An Idea of the Holy Spirit, and of the Holy Scriptures.

CHAP. I.

I. The Introduction, and of the difficulty of contemplating the Holy Spirit. Sect. 1 Of the various ſignifications of the word Spirit. 1. The ſubtil and active Subſtances are called Spirits. 2. The operative unbodily Virtues are called Spirits. 3. What is vital Energy is called Spirit. 4. The operative unbodily kind of (perſonal) Beings are called Spirits. 5. Inſpirations are called Spirits. 6. Temper and Frame of Mind is called Spirit. 7. Spirit is of a peculiar Notion in the Science of Sanctity. Sect. 2. Of the various ſignifications of the Spirit of God and the definitive Notion of the Holy Spirit. 1. Of the ſignification of it in the Moſaic Coſmopœia. 2. Of the Spirit of God as of various ſorts and kinds. 3. In what Senſe the Holy Ghoſt may be called the Shecinah. 4. Of the larger and ſtricter Acceptation of it amongſt the Jews. 5. The Holy Spirit properly belongeth to Sanctity Imperial. Sect. 3. Of the various ſignifications of the Holy Spirit in the New Teſtament and chiefly of the Perſonal Acceptation. 1. The Holy Spirit in the New Teſtament ſignifieth in three Acceptations. 2. The Perſonality of the Holy Spirit not notic'd in the Old Teſtament. 3. External Miracles aſcribed to the Holy Spirit in the New Teſtament. 4. Objections againſt the Perſonality of the Holy Spirit from the New Teſtament. 5, 6, 7. The Perſonality of the Holy Spirit prov'd from the New Teſtament. Sect. 4. Of the Holy Spirit as it is vital Sanctity in it ſelf and to us. 1. The Spirit is ſuch in the plenary Senſe. 2. The Spirit is oppoſed to the Letter. 3. The Spirit is the Efficient of the Chriſtians Regeneration. 4. The Spirit is conſtitutive of the Regenerate Eſtate. 5. The Spirit as Holy appeareth to be vital Sanctity. 6. The Holy Spirit as it is animative appeareth to be vital Sanctity. 7. The Virtues, Duties and Comforts of Regenerate Chriſtians ſhew, that the Holy Spirit is vital Sanctity. 8. The ſuper-eminent Good which the Holy Spirit is, ſheweth it to be vital Sanctity.

I. THE Pagan Syſtem of the Univerſe hath been conſider'd Politically, as having a Political Imperial Head preſiding over it; and alſo Phyſiologically, as being animated by a mundane Soul. Agreeably whereto the Antipagan Syſtem (the holy Catholick Church) muſt be conſider'd Politically as being the Kingdom of God, which the Imperial Eſtate of God preſideth over; and alſo Phyſiologically (z) as being (ſaith a Divine of our own) a Body Politique that hath the eternal Spirit of God for the Soul of it. Of this Divine animative Spirit we are now to repreſent an Idea cleared of the mighty difficulties that incumber it. For that there is great difficulty and obſcurity in the Theory

(z) Dr. Arrowſmith Θεανθρωπο p. 143.

Theory of the Holy Ghoſt appeareth from the many Debates, that were about it in the elder times of the Church; for thoſe Debates plainly ſhew, that they knew not what to think of it. (a) Some ſaying, that the Holy Ghoſt is a meer Energy, others that he is a Creature, and others that he is God: And ſome would not affirm, that he is any of theſe, revering the Scriptures, which (as they ſay) do not clearly ſhew, which of theſe he is. And therefore ἔτε σέβȣσιν, ἔτε ἀτιμάζȣσι, μέσως πως περὶ ἀυτȣ̃ διακείμενοι. they neither do him Honour nor Diſhonour, but are indifferently diſpoſed towards him. Some acknowledg'd, that a Ternary muſt be underſtood in our Religion, but they ſo far differenc'd the Perſons from one another, as to make one of them infinite in Subſtance and in Power; the other infinite in Power not in Subſtance; and the third circumſcrib'd in both. (b) Some held, that the Holy Ghoſt is neither Lord nor Servant, ἀλλ' ἐλεύθερον, but they would have him called Free. (c) Some that in acknowledging the Deity of the Son were of the Catholick Faith, yet oppos'd the Deity of the Holy Ghoſt, and would not allow him to be annumerated with the Father and the Son in pronouncing the Trinity, but reproached the Catholicks with the Name of Tritheites. And not a few of the Catholicks themſelves, (d) who believ'd the Deity of the holy Spirit, yet would not admit of the Name, nor of certain forms of Speech uſed by other Catholicks. They would not have him called by the Name of God (as ſuppoſing that he is never ſo called in Scripture) whence S. Baſil for peace ſake and for fear of giving them Offence abſtain'd from calling him ſo openly and expreſly, as Gr. Naz. reporteth. Who alſo obſerveth (e) that the Old Teſtament manifeſtly preach'd the Father, but the Son more obſcurely: The New Teſtament hath manifeſted the Son, but ὑπέδειξε τȣ̃ πνεύματος τὴν θεότητα, hath ſomewhat obſcurely ſhew'd the Deity of the Spirit. His Theory being thus ſhaded with obſcurity and difficulty is not to be underſtood or illuſtrated by a ſlight view, a ſuperficial glance, it requireth a ſedulous Inveſtigation, a deep Reach, an holy Sentiment, and that we carefully conſult all the Notices of it, which the holy Scripture affordeth, and orderly repreſent them with all poſſible clearneſs and diſtinctneſs.

(a) Gr. Naz. or. 37. p. 595.

(b) S. Baſil. de Sp. Sanct. c. 20.

(c) Gr. Naz. ſupr. p. 600.

(d) Petav. de Trin. l. 1. c. 14. S. 15, 16, 19. & l. 2. c. 7. S. 2.

(e) Supr. p. 608.

SECTION I.

Of the various ſignifications of the word Spirit.

I. In vulgar ſenſe the ſubtil or tenuious and active Subſtances (although bodily) are called Spirits. For ſo we ordinarily read in Phyſicians Writings of Spiritus Salis Armoniaci, C. Cervi, Fuliginis (and ſuch more) and in their Chymical Philoſophy they diſtinguiſh in Bodies the Terreſtrial parts, the Water, the Sulphur, the fix'd Salt, the volatile Salt and the Spirit. So in human Bodies there are the Vital and Animal Spirits, and the Air and the Wind are called Ruach, Spirit (f) ſaith Maimonides; and we uſually ſay of Wind and Thunder, that there is a ſwift Spirit in them. Gen. 3. 8. They heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the Garden in the cool of the day. In the Hebrew it is in the Spirit of the day, that is, in the Evening, when the cool Wind bloweth. The Eaſt-wind is in the Hebrew called Spiritus Orientalis, and the Weſt-wind Spiritus Occidentalis, Exod. 10. 13, 19. So uſually in Hebrew Spirit ſignifieth the Wind, and Latin Authors ſometimes ſpeak agreeably to the Hebrew. For Columella ſaith (g) præſtat eligere ſationi ſilentis vel certè placidi Spiritus diem. For ſowing it is beſt to chuſe a day of a ſilent or at leaſt a placid Spirit. Uſually alſo Spirit ſignifieth our Breath, which is a Wind or Vapor, Job 34. 14. If he gather unto himſelf his Spirit and his Breath. Πνεῦμα, and Spiritus primarily and properly ſignifie the Breath (as their Etymology ſheweth,) and as Πνεῦμα, (Spirit,) is the ſame with ψυχὴ, (Soul,) ſo ψυχὴ, in like manner as πνεῦμα, properly ſignifieth the Breath. (h) For Pſyche is properly that Spirit which is reciprocated by the Lungs (the vital Breath is the vital Soul) that is ſo called from Refrigeration, as Anima is from an ancient Greek word ἀνέμη, and Animus from ἄνεμος, Wind or Breath. And as Pſyche is derived from Refrigeration, and is the vital Air or Breath: So θυμὸς, which is the ſame with Pſyche, is in the Æolick Dialect φυμὸς, whence the Latin Fumus is deriv'd, hence θυμιᾶν, and θυμίαμα, to Vaporate and Vapor. Θυμὸς, therefore became a Name for the vital Soul of Man, becauſe it properly and primarily denoteth our Life which is a Vapor. So Homer's Greek Phraſe (i) θυμὸν ἀποπνεύων, is anſwerable to the Latin Phraſes, efflare animam, efflare extremum halitum, and to this Greek Phraſe in Scripture ἀφιέναι τὸ πνεῦμα, to give up the Ghoſt or Spirit. Agreeably whereto the Philoſophic Emperor ſaith, that Man conſiſteth of three parts, (k) the fleſhy part, the Spirit and the Hegemonic (or leading) part. Καὶ τὸ πνεῦμα ὁ ποιόν τι ἐστίν; ἄνεμος. And the Spirit what is it? Wind or Air (that of Reſpiration, which refrigerateth our innate heat) which is every Hour expired and taken in again. (l) The Soul (ſaith Varro) is the Air received in at the Mouth, cooled in the Lungs, warmed in the Heart, diffus'd into the Body. Such was the Senſe of the Stoicks touching the Life and Soul of Man; they ſuppos'd the Soul to be Air, or (as Galen ſaith of them) a contemperation of aerial and igneous Subſtance, or as moſt Authors ſay, they ſuppos'd it to be Fire, yet ſo as to be Aerial (Air being the Vehicle of the Fire;) and becauſe they ſuppos'd Air to be the Soul, thence it is, that in Cicero Anima ſignifieth the Air. For he ſaith (m) inter ignem & terram aquam Deus animamque poſuit. Between Fire and Earth God hath placed Water and Soul, that is, the Air. The Stoicks Soul therefore is Corporeal, and they prove it ſuch by an Argument that ſeemeth very ſtrange, ψυχὴν πνεῦμα εἶναι, διὸ ϗ σῶμα εἶναι, the Soul is a Spirit, (Air, Wind or Breath) therefore it is a Body. But they ſuppoſe it ſuch a Body, which in vulgar Senſe is a Spirit, σῶμα ἀεριότερον ϗ λεπτομερέστερον, one of the tenuious and active Subſtances, which are commonly called Spirits. It is Eſſential to a Spirit, to be without courſeneſs, craſsneſs, bulkineſs, not to be palpable * or tangible, to be interiour and remote from the groſs ſenſibles and viſibles. The Apoſtle therefore contradiſtinguiſheth Spirits to Fleſh and Blood. Eph. 6. 12. We wreſtle not againſt Fleſh and Blood, but againſt ſpiritual Wickedneſs, or wicked Spirits as it is in the Syriac, and our Saviour ſaith, Luc. 24. 39. A Spirit hath not Fleſh and Bones, as ye ſee me have.

Multis modis atque in diverſis ſignificationibus Scripturæ divinæ ſpiritum nominant. S. Aug. de Anim. & ejus Orig. l. 4. c. 22.

(f) Mor. Nev. Par. 1. c. 40.

(g) L'Emper. Not. in Jacchiad. in Dan. p. 116.

(h) Salmaſ. in Epict. p. 124, 125.

(i) Gat. Not. in Ant. p. 185.

(k) Τὰ σαρκία, ϗ πνευμάτιον ϗ τὸ ἡγεμονικόν. L. 2. S. 2.

(l) Anima eſt Aer conceptus ore, defervefactus in pulmone, tepefactus in corde, diffuſus in corpus. Lipſ. Phyſ. l. 3. diſſ. 9. Gat. ſupr. p. 51, 140, 186, 227, 323.

(m) De Univerſit.

* The Hebrew Philoſophers call every true Eſſence Corpus palpabile. Kimchi ὁ Δοιπορία. p. 42.

II. The operative unbodily Virtues therefore (whether they be ſtrictly and philoſophically unbodily, or only unbodily in a vulgar Senſe) are called Spirits. Such are the Seminales Virtutes (Seminales Rationes) the formative or plaſtic Principles of things, which Naturaliſts have in great admiration (for the Plaſtic is called by one, (n) Vis enthea, principium divinum, vegetativæ animæ numen: Another ſaith, (o) nothing more wonderful can be thought of,) who alſo have intituled the Plaſtic, (p) Spiritus Architectonicus, and diſcourſe of Spiritus aurificus, ſpiritus & ſuccus lapideſcens; for the δύναμις δραστικὴ, Operative Virtue is look'd upon as a Spirit. Of kin to theſe Plaſtic Virtues is the Stoicks Deity, which they define (q) πνεῦμα πυροειδὲς ϗ τεχνοειδὲς, A Spirit igneous and artificial, πνεῦμα νοερὸν ϗ πυρῶδες, A Spirit intelligent and igneous. Their dull Philoſophy went no further than (Philoſophically) Corporeal Subſtance; but the Pythagoreans and Platoniſts acknowledge Subſtance ſtrictly and properly Incorporeal, and in their Senſe the Poet calleth the Soul of the World (the Stoicks Deity) A Spirit. (r) So the Egyptians defined God, τοῦ παντὸς κόσμου τὸ διῆκον πνεῦμα, A Spirit that pervadeth the whole World. A Spirit in the Senſe of the Egyptians, Pythagoreans and Platoniſts is that Species of Subſtance, which in their Philoſophy and Metaphyſicks is the oppoſite to Body or Matter; ſo that there are two kinds of Subſtances in the Univerſe, The Corporeal and the Incorporeal, which may be thus contradiſtinguiſh'd and defin'd. The one is the Quantitative and not the Vital, The other is the Vital and not the Quantitative kind of Subſtance. So S. Auſtin from the Platoniſts calleth the Incorporeal Subſtance(Vital)Life. (s) Quicquid eſt vel corpus eſt, vel vita; whatever exiſteth, is either Body or Life. So Alcinous (t) explaineth the Senſe of Plato: He calleth the Soul αὐτοκίνητον, ſelf moving, ὅτι σύμφυτον ἔχει τὴν ζωὴν, becauſe Life is innate to it. The Vital Subſtance is oppoſite to the Quantitative Subſtance, and therefore doth not conſiſt of a juxta-poſition of parts with ſelf-impenetrability or ſelf-excluſiveneſs, diviſibility or diſcerpibility and ſelf-alterity (whereas every material Subſtance is another thing to it ſelf being a congeries of material Subſtance;) for theſe are the eſſential differencing Properties of the Quantitative Subſtance. But (poſitively) it is the Vital Subſtance, and therefore is φύσις δραστήριος, the Energetic Nature, ſelf-active or ſelf-moving, ſelf-penetrable with ſelf-unity and indiſcerpibility, the Subſtance to which Life, Perception and Cogitation are peculiar. Thus by confronting two oppoſite kinds of Subſtance Incorporeal Subſtance (philoſophically ſuch) appeareth to be of a very intelligible Idea, and nothing can perplex it but the Impoſtures of Imagination.

III. What is Vital Energy is called Spirit, as being (becauſe Vital) operative unbodily kind of Virtue; for even the Vivacity and Vigour of Bodily Life as well as Mental Vivacity and Vigour (Quickneſs of Parts, Fortitude, Animoſity) is the operative unbodily kind of Virtue, and therefore is Spirit. Of the former a great Naturaliſt ſpeaketh, when he ſaith, (u) Gallus noſter ſemine ſpirituque plenus, (w) viribus, ſpiritu & generativâ potentiâ. Of Vigour of Mind a late Divine ſpeaketh, when commending two of his Acquaintance he giveth this Character of the latter of them, (x) What he wanteth of the other in Time and Years, he maketh up in Courage and Spirit. Spirit the oppoſite to dead ſenſeleſs Matter or Body is Life, and Life is Spirit. (Life is uſually ſaid to be actus animæ,) whence one ſaith of God, (y) He is called Spirit, not as Wind, but as being an incorporeal and vivific Subſtance. (z) Ζωτικώτατον τὸ πνεῦμα, that which we uſually call Spirit, hath much of Life in it. To which uſual Notions of Life and Spirit our Saviour's words are agreeable, Joh. 6. 63. It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the Fleſh profiteth nothing: The words that I ſpeak unto you, they are Spirit and they are Life. As in Nature, ſo in Chriſtianity it is the Spirit that giveth Life, 2 Cor. 3. 6. Accordingly our Saviour ſaith, It is the Spirit that quickeneth, which is to ſignifie, that his Diſcourſe was not meant of the literal eating his Corporeal Fleſh and Blood (that is of no avail,) but his words were meant of the eating and drinking which is Spiritual-vital (a Spiritual-vital Buſineſs both in reſpect of the Duty-part and the Benefit-part) in ſenſe and meaning they are Spirit and they are Life, and therefore Spiritual-vital. Himſelf is denominated a Spirit, becauſe he is that which is Spiritual-vital and that which is Vital Energy, 1 Cor. 15. 45. The firſt Adam was made a living Soul (as an Animal is) the laſt Adam was made a quickning Spirit. In his Heavenly and Divine Condition (becauſe of his Spiritual, Heavenly and Divine Body) He is externally that which is Spiritual-vital and that which is Vital Energy. This he is in himſelf, and he is alſo vivificative unto us, for being the Lord of Immortality he raiſeth his People to Life Immortal. And becauſe he raiſeth them to Immortality by communicating a Divine Spirit to them, whereby their Bodies are quickened (Rom. 8. 11.) therefore he is a Spirit both conſtitutively and communicatively; which duplicity of Senſe is involv'd in another deſcription, which the Apoſtle maketh of our Saviour, 2 Cor. 3. 16, 17. When it ſhall turn to the Lord, the Vail ſhall be done away; now the Lord τὸ πνεῦμά ἐστιν, is the Spirit. The Lord is the Majeſtatick Glory, (ſee v. 18.) and therefore is conſtitutively the Spirit; and (a) ex converſione ad Spiritum qui Dominus eſt, Spiritus Domini emanat in converſos, quo fiant ſpirituales: By their converſion to the Spirit which is the Lord, the Spirit of the Lord floweth forth upon the converted, whereby they are made Spiritual. The Chriſtian Majeſtatick Glory in this reſpect reſembleth the Judaical. The Jews Ruach Hakkodeſh (Holy Spirit) was the Spirit of the Majeſtatick Glory, and their Majeſtatick Glory was communicatively the Holy Spirit: So the Chriſtian Majeſtatick Glory is communicatively and originally Ruach Hakkodeſh (the Holy Spirit) whereby we are ſpiritualiz'd and ſav'd from Carnality of Religion.

IV. The unbodily kind of (Perſonal) Beings both good and bad, as alſo the Souls of Men and the ſeparated Souls both of good and bad are called Spirits. The Sadducees are ſaid by Gr. Naz. and Epiphanius, to have deny'd the Exiſtence of the Holy Spirit, and this they prove from a Text which ſaith nothing of it, Act. 23. 8. The Sadducees ſay, that there is no Reſurrection, neither Angel nor Spirit. The Reſurrection, Angel and Spirit which the Sadducees did not acknowledge,

---

(n) Dr. Harvey.

(o) Sennert.

(p) Sennert. T. 1. p. 208, 95.

(q) Lipſ. phyſ. l. 1. diſſ. 6, 7.

(r) —Cœlum & Terram camposque liquentes
Lucentemque globum Lunæ, Titaniaque aſtra
Spiritus intus alit, totamque infuſa per artus
Mens agitat molem.

(s) De C. D. l. 8. c. 6.

(t) De Doctr. Plat. c. 25.

(u) Harvey de Gen. p. 87.

(w) Ibid p. 96.

(x) Dr. Martin Lett.

(y) Πνεῦμα ὁ Θεὸς καλεῖται, οὐχ ὡς ἄνεμος, ἀλλ' ὡς ἀσώματος ϗ ζωοποιὸς οὐσία. Anon. ap. Maldonat. in Joh. 4. 24.

(z) Philo ap. Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 11. c. 23.

(a) Caietan. in loc.

knowledge, are the two Particulars of their Infidelity; for S. Luke addeth, that the Phariſees confeſs both. This therefore is that which the Sadducees (who probably never heard of the Perſonality of the Holy Spirit) are ſaid, to have disbeliev'd, the Exiſtence of the Souls of Men and of Angels, which were commonly believ'd to exiſt, and to be created Spirits. The Holy Angels (thoſe Celeſtial and Incorporeal Virtues, as the Fathers call them) are Spirits both in reſpect of their Exteriour and Interiour Subſtance; for in reſpect of their Exteriour Subſtance they are of Tenuity and Subtilty indiſcernible by us, of mighty force and velocity and of an igneous nature, whence the Pſalmiſt and the Apoſtle ſay of them; Who maketh his Angels Spirits and his Miniſters a flame of Fire. So the Demons or Genii amongſt the Pagans were counted Spirits, and they look'd upon Man as conſiſting of Body and Spirit: (b) Vita corpore & ſpiritu continetur, our Life is compris'd in Body and Spirit. Eodem tempore ſuſcipimur in lucem, & hoc cæleſti ſpiritu augemur: At the ſame time that we are receiv'd into the Light, we are augmented by this Heavenly Spirit. So the Scriptures conſider Man as compounded of Body and Spirit, Matth. 26. 41. Luk. 23. 46. Act. 7. 59. 1 Cor. 5. 5. Jam. 2. 26. The Souls of the Dead are an unbodily kind of Beings, and therefore are called Spirits, which is the uſual Name for Ghoſts or Apparitions, Matth. 14. 26. Mar. 6. 49. Luk. 24. 39. for Evil Angels as well as the Holy Angels, Matth. 12. 43, 45. 1 King. 22. 21. Heb. 1. 14. Apoc. 1. 4. and for the Spirits in Priſon as well as the Souls of the Juſt, 1 Pet. 3. 19. Heb. 12. 23. The reaſon of this their Appellation (which is becauſe they are unbodily kind of Beings) inferreth, that the intelligent Mind of Man is in a Senſe of Eminence his Spirit. (c) Non eſt idem Mens & Anima. (d) Anima eſt quâ vivimus, Animus quo ſapimus; ſuperior ſcil. pars animæ: The Mind and Soul are diſtinct. The Soul is that whereby we live, the Mind is that whereby we are intelligent, namely, the upper part of the Soul. So the Apoſtle ſuppoſeth, τὸ ὁλόκληρον ἡμῶν, our whole Man, to conſiſt of Body, Soul and Spirit; which is ὁ νοῦς, τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν, the ſuperiour part of the Soul, that is diſtinguiſh'd from the Soul, 1 Theſſ. 5. 23. And this the Apoſtle (principally at leaſt) muſt be ſuppos'd, to mean, when he ſaith, What Man knoweth the things of a Man, ſave the Spirit of Man which is in him? 1 Cor. 2. 11. So Col. 2. 5. Though I be abſent in Body, yet I am with you in Spirit, that is, in cognitive Mind, as the following words interpret the Apoſtle's Senſe, joying and beholding your Order, 1 Cor. 5. 5. When ye are gathered together and my Spirit, that is, my cognitive Mind (who am of Apoſtolical Authority) approving and injoyning what you do. (e) The intelligent Mind is eminently Spirit and our Spirit, becauſe the animative Soul (which yet is in a lower degree Spirit and our Spirit) is animative of the Body and complicated therewith, which ſpeaketh the intelligent Mind more eminently our Souls operative unbodily Virtue; which reaſon of its being called our Spirit demonſtrateth, that this is a genuine definitive Notion of Spirits (according to the Scriptures) they are the operative unbodily Virtues.

Pſal. 104. 4.
Heb. 1. 7.
(b) Cic. or. pro Mar. & de Haruſp. reſp.
(c) Lactan l. 7. c. 12.
(d) Holiday on Juvenal. p. 275.
(e) Grot. Not. in Matth. 26. 41.

V. Inſpirations both in the real and perſonal acceptation (as they ſignifie the perſons inſpir'd) are called Spirits, 1 Joh. 4. 1, 2, 3. Believe not every Spirit, but try the Spirits, whether they be of God; becauſe many falſe Prophets are gone out into the World. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God. Every Spirit that confeſſeth, that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the Fleſh, is of God. And every Spirt that confeſſeth not, that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the Fleſh, is not of God. Becauſe in the Apoſtle's Days there were many falſly inſpir'd Teachers, the Chriſtians are exhorted to try the Inſpirations, and they may be try'd by this mark of Diſcrimination; as in the Old Teſtament-times thoſe pretending Prophets that withdrew Men from the true God, were thereby known to be falſe Prophets; ſo in the New Teſtament-times the falſly inſpir'd Teachers are known to be ſuch, if they withdraw Men from the true Meſſiah, 1 Cor. 12. 3. I give you to underſtand, that no Man ſpeaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jeſus accurſed; and that no Man (that hath an Inſpiration) can ſay, that Jeſus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghoſt. In the Apoſtolical times ſome had an extraordinary faculty of diſcriminating falſly inſpir'd Teachers from the truly inſpir'd; and this faculty the Apoſtle calleth diſcerning of Spirits, 1 Cor. 12. 10. where Spirits ſignifie Inſpirations both in the real and perſonal acceptation. So the Spirits which S. John exhorteth the Chriſtians to try and reject, are deſcrib'd as Teachers that are of the World, 1 Joh. 4. 5, 6. They are of the World, therefore ſpeak they of the World, and the World heareth them. We are of God; he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God, heareth not us; hereby know we the Spirit of Truth and the Spirit of Error. The Spirit of Error is the ſame with thoſe Deceivers and Impoſtors that are entred into the World, 2 Joh. 7. and ſignifieth in the perſonal as well as the real Acceptation. But the πνεύματα πλάνα, ſeducing Spirits, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, 1 Tim. 4. 1. are moſt probably the Evil Angels the grand ſeducers of Mankind; for the Apoſtle conjoyneth ſeducing Spirits and Doctrines of Devils. Of which ſort were the Magical Inſtitutes of the Pythagoric Pagans and the paganizing Gnoſticks that ſymboliz'd with them, the Pagan Demonolatry and (the Tranſcript thereof) the Church-Demonolatry; all which were introduc'd by Diabolical Illuſions and Afflations, that carry'd a ſhew of Divine Revelations and Inſpirations, which the Holy Writers call the Spirit. For the Prohibition of quenching the Spirit concerneth immediate Inſpirations (although not them alone) 1 Theſſ. 5. 19. So when the Apoſtle ſaith, 2 Theſſ. 2. 1. That ye be not ſoon ſhaken in Mind, or be troubled, neither by Spirit, nor by Word; Spirit ſignifieth pretended or miſunderſtood Inſpirations, 1 Cor. 14. 12. Ye are zealous of Spirits, that is, of Inſpirations and thoſe Gifts that are Inſpirations, 1 Cor. 14. 32. The Spirits of the Prophets are ſubject to the Prophets. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of Inſpirations which he calleth the Spirits of the Prophets: but when he ſaith, theſe are ſubject to the Prophets, his meaning is not (as I ſuppoſe,) that the Inſpirations of the Prophets were ſubject to the Judgment of other Prophets, but that thoſe Inſpirations were not Pythonic, ungovernly rapturous and ecſtatical, but ſo far they were ſubject to the inſpir'd Prophets themſelves, that they might avoid tumultuouſneſs and confuſion in their Aſſemblies, and orderly propheſy one after another. For ye may all propheſy one by one: For God is not the Author of Confuſion, v. 31, 33. In ſome places of S. Paul's Epiſtles (variouſly interpreted by Expoſitors) the word Spirit ſeemeth ſomewhat hard to be underſtood; but it certainly ſignifieth the Inſpiration of Languages, 1 Cor. 14. 14, 15, 16. If I pray in an unknown Tongue, my Spirit prayeth, but my Underſtanding is unfruitful. What is it then? I will pray with the Spirit and I will pray with the Underſtanding alſo (intelligibly:) I will ſing with the Spirit, and I will ſing with the Underſtanding alſo. Elſe when thou ſhalt bleſs with the Spirit, how ſhall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned, ſay Amen? v. 2. He that ſpeaketh in an unknown Tongue, ſpeaketh not unto Men, but unto God: for no Man underſtandeth him; howbeit in the Spirit (the Spirit of Languages) he ſpeaketh Myſteries. As when our Saviour ſaith touching the Meſſiah, How doth David in Spirit call him Lord? he meaneth the Spirit or Inſpiration of Prophecy: So when the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of praying and ſinging with the Spirit and ſpeaking in the Spirit, he meaneth, the Spirit or Inſpiration of Languages and other ſupernatural Gifts. Peter knew Moſes and Elias that appear'd in the Mount by Inſpiration, and therefore Tertullian ſaith, (f) How ſhould he have known Moſes and Elias but in Spirit? So in the Old Teſtament the Spirit of Wiſdom ſignifieth that Inſpiration, Exod. 28. 3. Deut. 34. 9. and the Spirit of Life that was in the Wheels, Ezek. 1. 20. and that which ſet the Prophet upon his Feet, Ezek. 2. 30. may be interpreted, to ſignifie either that Inſpiration or that unbodily operative Virtue.

VI. Temper, Genius and Frame of Mind is uſually called Spirit (this being the Mind or Spirit as to the Frame and Temper of it;) for in this Notion the Scripture ſpeaketh of the Spirit of Meekneſs, the Spirit of Jealouſie (that animi affectus) and of mixing a perverſe Spirit in the midſt of Egypt: So we uſually ſpeak of the Goſpel-Spirit, the Judaical Legal Spirit, the Old Teſtament Spirit. (g) Famine and Peſtilence (a ſort of operative unbodily Virtues) are called Spirits by the Son of Sirach (as Grotius ſuppoſeth,) Wiſdom, an operative unbodily Virtue is called a loving Spirit by the Book of Wiſdom; a Lawyer ſaith, that a Statue is contain'd under one Spirit, meaning thereby either one ſubſtantial form, or one frame and habit, as the frame and habit of the Mind is uſually called Spirit. So the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the Spirit of Slumber, and our Saviour thus rebuk'd his two Diſciples, that would have called down Fire from Heaven upon the Samaritans, Luk. 9. 55. Ye know not what manner of Spirit ye are of. Ye miſtake your Zeal (ſaith our Saviour,) as if it was a Divine Motion, which is a ſinful humane Paſſion: Ye are ignorant Zealots and know not what a deadly criminal Spirit ye are of (a Judaical Legal Spirit,) repugnant to the Evangelical Gracious Spirit, which ye ought to be of. The burning Zeal of Elias (which theſe fiery Zealots pretended to imitate) is no Pattern for Goſpel-times, yet his ardor of Zeal is in part agreeable and imitable in all times; whence John the Baptiſt is ſaid to go before the Meſſias in the Spirit and Power of Elias, Luc. 1. 17. The words denote a mighty Power of the Spirit, and alſo a Similitude between John the Baptiſt and Elias in Zeal, and Courage, and temper of Mind, which is an Elias-like Spirit. So the Spirit of Bondage is the ſervile diſpoſition in Religion (the diſpoſition of the vile Serviliſts or ſervile kind of Religioniſts) and the Spirit of Adoption is the Child of God-kind of diſpoſition, the diſpoſition of (the Filialiſts) the unſervile or filial kind of Religioniſts, Rom. 8. 15. God hath not given us the Spirit of Fear; but of Power, and of Love, and of a ſound Mind. The Spirit of Fear in this place (as the Context ſheweth) denoteth the diſpoſition of Timidity and Cowardice; to which the Apoſtle oppoſeth the Spirit of Power (Fortitude) and of Love (which caſteth out cowardly Fear) and of a ſound Mind, which is oppoſite to a weak and timid Soul. To this uſual Notion of Spirit as it ſignifieth Temper and Diſpoſition, we may reduce another Scripture-notion of it near of kin to this; for ſometimes Spirit ſignifieth Interiour Propenſion, Impetus and Inclination, Hoſ. 4. 12. The Spirit of Whoredom hath cauſed them to err. And this (probably) is that which another Prophet calleth, The unclean Spirit, Zech. 13. 2. So a Spirit of Contradiction is a diſpoſition to contradict.

VII. Spirit is of a peculiar Notion in the Science of Sanctity (which in its Notion of Spirit tranſcendeth common Philoſophy;) for it denoteth that Spirituality and Spirituality of Religion, which is the oppoſite to Carnality and to Carnality of Religion, which ſignification of it is peculiar to the Science of Sanctity, Joh. 4. 24. Gal. 3. 3. Phil. 3. 3. Theſe various ſignifications of it we will conclude with a brief Illuſtration of that place of the Apoſtle, 1 Pet. 3. 18. Being put to death in the Fleſh, but quickned τῷ πνεύματι, in Spirit. Expoſitors debate, whether by Spirit the Apoſtle meaneth the Soul or the Deity of our Saviour. But there will be no place for theſe Debates, if we conſider, that our Saviour is ſaid, to have been quickened (to have had Vivification) in Spirit (the Principle of his Vivification) as having within him the Spirit of Holineſs, wherein he had Life, the cauſe of his regained Life. His Fleſh was quickned, and therefore ſubjectively he was quickned in Fleſh (for that which was dead was raiſed to life) but not cauſally. In Spirit only (the oppoſite to Fleſh) he had Life, was quickened or had Vivification cauſally, thence his Fleſh regained Life.

SECTION II.

Of the various Significations of the Spirit of God, and the definitive Notion of the Holy Spirit.

I. THE firſt Scriptural Notice of a Spirit of God is in the Moſaic Coſmopœia, Gen. 1. 2. Darkneſs was upon the Face of the Deep, and the Spirit of God moved upon the Face of the Waters. The Abyſs or Chaos was in agitation, and this Agitation was from the Spirit of God (as Moſes affirmeth:) but this Moſaic Spirit of God whoſe Motion or Agitation was one of the Phænomena of the Chaos (if Motion in Darkneſs may be called a Phænomenon) is of very dubious uncertain Interpretation. (h) Expoſitors have various Opinions concerning it.

(1.) Several of the beſt Learned both Jews and Chriſtians think it a mighty Wind, (i) which is called the Wind or Spirit of God after the Hebrew

(f) Quomodo Moyſen & Heliam cognoviſſet, niſi in ſpiritu? C. Marc. l. 4. c. 22.

(g) Sciunt qui in Hebræis literis verſati ſunt, quàm latè pateat ſpiritûs nomen. Origine ſua ventum ſignificat; ob cujus ſubtilitatem quæ viſum fugit, ad alia transfertur. primùm ad ſubſtantias: nam Deus, Angeli boni malique, deinde ipſe hominis animus eo vocabulo nuncupantur. Deinde ad Accidentia: nam Fames & Peſtis πνεύματα vocantur, Ecclus. 39. 33, 34. Ita & Paulus Juriſconſultus dixit, ſtatua uno ſpiritu continetur, quod Conon Mathematicus dixerat ὑπὸ μιᾶς ἕξεως. Sed maximè uſitatum eſt, ut pro affectibus animi ea vox ponatur: quomodo πνεῦμα κατανύξεως dixit poſt Eſaiam Paulus Apoſtolus. ita uſurpatur רוח. ſcriptor libri ſapientiæ σοφίαν ait eſſe φιλάνθρωπον πνεῦμα. Sic Clemens libro de prophetia πνεύματα vocat τὰς ποιότητας τῆς ψυχῆς. Grot. Not. in Luc. 9. 55.

2 Tim. 1. 7.

(h) Holting. Hexaem. c. 1. Qu. 31. & 40.

(i) P. Fag. in loc.

Hebrew cuſtom of ſpeaking, which is, to expreſs things ſuperlative by the Name of God; as the Cedars of God, the Mountains of God, the Lions of God, the Trembling of God: Or the Spirit of God may ſignifie a Wind excited by God (ſaith Vatablus) agreeably to that, Pſal. 147. 18. Flavit ſpiritus ejus & fluent aquæ. Πνεῦμα καλεῖ τὸν ἄνεμον, He calleth the Wind the Spirit, (k) ſaith Severianus Gabalitanus. And this Interpretation will appear hugely probable, if we conſider the ſtate of the Chaos, and that the words of Moſes are deſign'd to deſcribe and repreſent it; for the Chaos is called Tehom, (l) which is Abyſſus jam commota (the Abyſs in commotion,) and the word properly ſignifieth Tumult and turbid Confuſion. The Phœnicians Chaos in Sanchoniathon is Ἀὴρ ζοφώδης καὶ πνευματώδης, Air caliginous and ſtormy. This ſtate of the Chaos Moſes deſigneth to repreſent and deſcribe, when he ſaith, The Spirit of God moved upon the Face of the Waters; therefore he meaneth thereby, that a great Wind did blow upon the Face of the Waters. Againſt this Interpretation it is objected, that in the time of the Chaos there was no Air, and therefore then there could be no Wind: But this is a weak Objection; for the thinner parts of the watery Chaos might ſupply the place of Air, ſo far as was requiſite, to make a vehement Wind, that agitated the Chaos. Water and Air are of ſo near a kin, that Cicero ſaith, (m) Air is Vapour from the Waters. The Spirit of God therefore in the Moſaic Text and Coſmopœia may reaſonably be interpreted agreeably to the uſual Language of the Old Teſtament, wherein his Spirit ſignifieth Wind, Exod. 15. 10. Thou didſt blow Spiritu tuo. Iſa. 40. 7. The Graſs withereth, the Flower fadeth, becauſe the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it. So Pſal. 147. 18. (n) In Sanchoniathon's Coſmogony the Wind is called κολπία, which is well interpreted קל־פי־יה vox oris Dei.

(2.) Some think, that this Moſaic Spirit of God is a Mundane Soul or Plaſtic Nature, which is S. Chryſoſtom's Senſe, who thus expoundeth the Senſe of Moſes, ἐνέργειά τις ζωτικὴ προσῆν τοῖς ὕδασι, the Waters had a vivific Energy, they did not ſtagnate, but were in motion, having ζωτικήν τινα δύναμιν, a certain vital or vivific Power. The Egyptians alſo (as Simplicius ſaith) called the firſt Life ſymbolically ὕδωρ, Water, (o) whence ſome think, that what Moſes calleth Spirit they called Ζωήν, Life; for they ſuppoſe, that there is an affinity between the Egyptian Theology and the Moſaic Coſmopæia, becauſe Simplicius calleth this Moſaic Hiſtory an Egyptian Fable. Doubtleſs it is of affinity with the Pagan Coſmogoniſts Fables touching Night, Chaos, Ὠὸν ὀρφικόν, the Orphic Egg, and may ſeem to be of affinity with their Love-Deity (which they make the active Principle in the Coſmogony;) for if the Moſaic word Merachepheth be render'd brooded upon the Waters (as an Hen doth upon her Eggs) there is the Notion of Love in it. And if by the Pagan Theologers Love-Deity we underſtand their Celeſtial Venus, (p) this is their Mundane Soul, or that univerſal Spirit, which is an ἐνέργεια ζωτική, vivific Energy (of which S. Chryſoſtom interpreteth the Text,) and which they ſuppos'd, to infuſe Life into all. The Moſaic Spirit of God may moſt reaſonably be thought, to ſignifie this Mundane Soul (or a Plaſtic Nature) if the Pagan Coſmogoniſts Love-Deity was originally Moſaical, and that it was originally Moſaical, may as reaſonably be ſuppos'd, as that this other Conceit of the Pagan Theologers was ſuch, that the Waters are divinely inſpir'd, for which ſome later Platoniſts (q) cite the Text of Moſes. There is an appearance therefore that the Moſaic Spirit of God ſignifieth a Plaſtick Nature or a Soul of the World, ſuch as ſome Writers of the Church ſeem to ſuppoſe, when they affirm, (r) That a Divine Spirit containing all things is every where diffus'd, that the Earth of it ſelf doth not generate Animals, nothing is generated without the Spirit of God. (s) Foſſils and other things inanimate are ſuppos'd by Voſſius, to have a Plaſtic Spirit in them, and of ſuch a created Spirit he interpreteth the Moſaic Spirit of God. But although ſuch an Interpretation hath ſome little probabilities, yet on the other hand it muſt be conſider'd, that a Plaſtic Nature and a Mundane Soul is an Opinion of Philoſophy; that it is altogether alien from Moſes, to teach matters of Philoſophy; that his Hiſtory is purely popular and in great part craſly vulgar and plebeious: His Hebrew word Merachepheth may ſignifie brooding, and it may ſignifie nothing more than the motion and agitation of the Waters. The Pagans had broken Traditions of the Chaos originally Moſaical, but theſe were mix'd with a great deal of Phantaſtry of their own, one Branch whereof was their Amor γενεσιουργός, generative Love, which was but a Poetical Phancy, nor did it ſignifie the Celeſtial Venus or Mundane Soul of the Philoſophic Pagans. Their Conceit of the Waters being divinely inſpir'd was originally Idolatrous-paganical, not likely to be a deſcendent from Moſes, although he was in repute with the later Platoniſts, after that Philo by his Philoſophic allegorizing the Scriptures had recommended him to them.

